This generation: Permit me to observe that ἡ αὐτῆς γενεᾶς, and not ἡ γενεὰ αὐτῆς means "the same generation;" unless, as often occurs in our authorised version, "the same" is used as equivalent to "this," when of course nothing would be gained by the change. "Generation" is often used in Scripture for a class marked by a given moral character. (Christian Annotator 2:93)

24:36 heavens: [See note to Mat. 16:2]

24:42 day: Ἡμέρα, day (instead of the common reading ὥρα, "hour"), has excellent authority. Besides the external evidence, consider the chain of verses 42-44, day, watch, hour. As to verse 44, the authorities for "day" in verse 42 agree with the rest in reading "hour." (Lect. on Mat., p.500, and Bible Treasury 4:308)

24:35 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 24:32]

24:45 [whole verse]: [Or:] "Who then is the faithful and wise bondman, whom the lord set over his household to give them food in season? Blessed [is] that bondman whom his lord on coming shall find thus doing. Verily I say to you, that he will set him over all that he hath. But if the evil bondman say in his heart, My lord delayeth [to come], and begin to beat his fellow bondman, and eat and drink with the drunken, the lord of the bondman shall come in a day which he expecteth not, and in an hour which he knoweth not, and shall cut him in two, and appoint his portion with the hypocrites: there shall be the weeping and the gnashing of teeth" (Bible Treasury N1:149-150)

24:46 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 24:45]

24:47 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 24:45]

24:48 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 24:45]

24:49 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 24:45]

24:50 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 24:45]

24:51 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 24:45]

25:1 [whole verse]: [Or:] "Then shall the kingdom of the heavens be made like to ten virgins, such as, having taken their torches, went forth to meet the bridegroom. And five of them were foolish and five prudent. For the foolish, when they took their torches, took no oil with them; but the prudent took oil in their vessels with their torches. Now while the bridegroom tarried, they all fell heavy and were sleeping. But at midnight a cry is made, Behold, the bridegroom: come ye forth to meet him. Then arose all those virgins and trimmed their lamps. And the foolish said to the prudent, Give us of your oil, for our torches are going out. But the prudent replied, saying, Nay, lest there be not enough for us and you: go rather unto those that sell, and buy for yourselves. And while they went away to buy, the bridegroom came; and those that were ready went with him unto the marriage feast; and the door was shut. But afterwards came also the rest of the virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us. But he answered and said, Verily I say unto you, I know you not. Watch therefore, for ye know not the day nor the hour" (Bible Treasury N1:166) bridegroom _Λ: Matt. 25:1-11. E.J.H. asks, whether the virgins, in Matt. 25, went to meet the bridegroom on his way to the bride's dwelling, or whether they met him on his return home with the bride? He inclines to the latter view, especially as the Syriac, Arabic, and Vulgate add "and the bride" to the close of verse 1, which at least indicates the custom that prevailed when these versions were made, even if the addition were unwarranted. . . .

Though the Arabic is erroneously included, the external evidence is a good deal stronger than E.J.H. supposes. The famous Codex Bezae Cantab. (D) with eight cursive manuscripts, the Peschito and Philoxenian Syriac, the Itala, the Vulgate, the Persian, the Armenian, the Francic and the Saxon versions, with three or four fathers, add "and the bride." Notwithstanding, the vast mass of the best MSS. is adverse, (including the uncials, technically known as B, C, E, F, G, H, K, L, M, S, U, V, X, Δ,) not to speak of the Coptic and Slavonic versions, &c. The internal evidence is so decidedly opposed to the words as to leave no doubt that the usual text is correct, and the addition a mere but not unnatural gloss. This, understood by some, was expressed by others, and thus it probably crept into a few manuscripts and many versions. As to the sense, it seems plain that the bridegroom is represented as coming to the home of his bride. Not, however, she, but the marriage retinue is the object of the Spirit here. (Bible Treasury 1:165) bridegroom _Λ: The natural thing would have been to speak of the bride as well; and so natural is it that in some ancient copies — one of the most ancient copies — made of this very parable, the writer slipped into this mistake, for he represented the kingdom of heaven as likened unto ten virgins which took their lamps and went forth to meet the bridegroom and the bride. They have added the words "and the bride." I need not tell you that there is not the slightest authority for it. (Bible Treasury N10:72) bridegroom _Λ: It is a strange fact, however, that two uncial MSS. (DX), eight cursives, several ancient versions including the Itala and the Vulgate and fathers Greek and Latin endorse this addition, and represent the virgins as going to meet the "Bridegroom and the bride." Of course, it is a mere gloss. Had a bride been named, it would have detracted from the perfect finish of the parable and brought in confusion, as Christians real or in name are meant by the ten who go forth to meet the Lord. (Bible Treasury N4:198, Bible Treasury N10:295, Three Prophetic Gems, first article, p.46)

25:2 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:1]

25:3 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:1]

25:4 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:1]

25:5 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:1]

25:6 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:1]

25:7 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:1]

25:8 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:1]

are going out: I agree that "are going out" is a more correct rendering than the ordinary version; but it in no way shows that the virgins had oil, or that they were more than professors without the Holy Ghost (Bible Witness & Review 1:307 and Christian Annotator 3:174)

25:9 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:1]

25:10 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:1]

25:11 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:1]

25:12 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:1]

25:13 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:1]

hour _A : Here "the Son of man" disappears according to the overwhelming testimony of the best MSS, Vv., and early citations for 25:13. (Bible Treasury N4:215) hour _A : There is no authority for what follows ("wherein the Son of man cometh"). You have heard the names of Griesbach, Scholz, Lachmann, and Tischendorf; of Dean Alford, T. S. Green, Scrivener, Drs. Tregelles, Westcott and Hort in this country. It is no peculiar thought in the least; for all biblical critics worthy of the name agree in this omission as required by the best authorities. Copyists added the clause from chap. 24:42 and bring in the sense of the coming Judge. But this is quite incongruous with what He here urges, which is the delight of meeting, yea, the going forth to meet, Him the Bridegroom. ("The Lord's Prophecy on Olivet," Three Prophetic Gems, p.57-58, Bible Treasury N4:202, N10:311) hour _A : Let me observe, however, that there is a clause in chap. 25:13 which has a little falsified the application. But the truth is, as is well known, that men, in copying the Greek New Testament, added the words, "Wherein the Son of man cometh," to this verse, which is complete without them. The Spirit really wrote, "Watch therefore; for ye know not the day nor the hour." To those versed in the text as it stands in the best copies, this is a fact too familiar to demand many words said about it. No critic of weight considers that these words have any just claim to be in the text that is founded on ancient authority. Others may defend the clause who accept what is commonly received, and what can only be defended by modern or uncertain manuscripts. Surely those I now address are the last men who ought to contend for a mere traditional or vulgar basis in anything which pertains to God. If we accept the traditional text of the printers, we are on this ground; if, on the contrary, we reject human meddling as a principle, assuredly we ought not to accredit such clauses as this, which we have the strongest grounds to pronounce a mere interpolation, and not truly the word of God. (Lect. Intro. to the Gospels, p.118-119) hour _A : The words "wherein the Son of man cometh" are an unauthorized addition to the parable. The words were no doubt put in because they occurred elsewhere in the discourse; but it is perfectly well known to those acquainted with these matters that the clause has no sufficient title to be there. Be it noted that there is not a word about the Son of man in the parable unless there. A spiritual mind would see that "Son of man" does not agree with the tone of the parable. The Lord is presented not as Son of man, in which capacity judgment is given to Him, but as Bridegroom. What has a bridegroom to do with judgment? (Pamphlets, p.461) hour _A : The words "wherein the Son of man cometh" have no sufficient claim to follow in the verse. This is no particular view of mine, but the judgment of every competent person who has examined the original testimonies to the word of God. (Lect. on Mat., p.514) [see note to Mat. 1:25]

25:14 [whole verse]: [Or:] "For [it is] as a man, going abroad, called his bondmen and delivered to them his goods [or, substance]. And to one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one, to each according to his own ability, and went abroad immediately. And he that received the five talents went and traded with them, and made other five talents. Likewise he also that [received] the two gained other two. But he that received the one went away and dug in the earth and hid the money of his lord. Now after a long while the lord of those bondmen cometh and reckoneth with them. And he that received the five talents came up and brought other five talents, saying, Lord, thou deliveredst me five talents: see, I gained other five talents [besides them]. His lord said to him, Well done, good and faithful bondman; thou wast faithful over a few things, I will set thee over many things: enter into the joy of thy lord. And he also that [received] the two talents came up and said, Lord, thou deliveredst me two talents: see, I gained other two talents. His Lord said to him, Well done, good and faithful bondman, thou wast faithful over a few things, I will set thee over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord. And he also that had received the one talent came up and said, Lord, I knew thee that thou art a hard man, reaping where thou didst not sow, and gathering from where thou didst not scatter; and being afraid I went away and hid thy talent in the earth: see, thou hast thine own. And his lord in answer said to him, Wicked and slothful bondman, thou knewest that I reap where I sowed not, and gather from where I scattered not; thou oughtest then to have put my money to the bankers, and I on coming should have received mine own with interest. Take then from him the talent and give [it] to him that hath the ten talents. For to everyone that hath shall be given, and he shall abound; but from him that hath not, even what he hath shall be taken. And cast out the useless bondman into the outer darkness: there shall be the weeping and the gnashing of teeth" (Bible Treasury N1:180)

25:15 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:14]

25:16 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:14]

25:17 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:14]

25:18 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:14]

25:19 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:14]

25:20 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:14]

25:21 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:14]

25:22 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:14]

25:23 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:14]

25:24 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:14]

25:25 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:14]

25:26 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:14]

25:27 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:14]

25:28 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:14]

25:29 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:14]

25:30 [whole verse]: [See note to Mat. 25:14]

25:46 everlasting . . . everlasting: [Q. Does the word of God really mean "eternal" or "everlasting" in Matt. 25:46? or only "age-lasting"? T.H.T.]

A. The word is used in Rom. 16:26 of God, in Heb. 9:14 of the Spirit, and in 1 John 1:2 of that life which Christ was and is. Are They merely age-lasting? In 2 Cor. 4:18 the same is contrasted with "temporal," instead of being similar in force, as these false teachers aver. Nay, the verse itself refutes their desire; for even they own that the life of the saints is "everlasting," and the same word in the same sentence is applied to the punishment of the wicked. Hebrew, Greek, English, or any other tongue, makes no difference. The N. T. differs from the Old in the utmost clearness as to this, now that Christ is come; as the O. T. had dwelt chiefly on the present government of God, while pointing here and there to the eternal things which are now unveiled under the gospel. (Bible Treasury 20:112)

26:24 goes: Ὑπάγω and πορεύομαι. The difference, so far as there is any, between these words in the texts cited (Matt. 26:24, Mk. 14:21, Jn. 7:33, 13:33, 16:10, 16, 17, compared with Jn. 14:2, 5:12 [sic], 28 [sic], seems to me, that while both may be rendered "go" or "depart," the former chiefly regards the terminus a quo, and the latter the terminus ad

quem. In the New Testament there are not less than sixteen different Greek forms of expressing this idea, including those modified by prepositions, and about seven or eight which are independent of a composite force. The distinction is often so minute as to defy transfusion into a translation, without an awkward paraphrase; but these shades of expression may claim, in their place, the consideration of such as confide in the unerring certainty of inspiration. (Christian Annotator 2:288)

26:26 ^Δ bread: "The" bread in Matt. 26:26, if rightly read, would have meant what was there on the table; but the best edd. with the best MSS. have it not, which then conveys simply that the Lord took "bread." (Bible Treasury 20:262)

26:29 will: 26:29 (Mk. 14:25, Luke 22:16, 18) is "will," not "shall." (Bible Treasury 14:335)

26:52 by: There need be no hesitation in accepting the common version, and in rejecting Mr. Read's quasi-emendation [shall perish with the laying down of the sword], for which there is absolutely no reason. Thus, if we try a somewhat similar Scripture (Rev. 13:10), by Mr. R.'s mode of translation, the result would be "he that killeth with the laying down of the sword, must be killed when the sword shall be taken from them:" which is evidently absurd. The true sense both here and in Matt. is "by or with the sword." It is a common and correct translation of such phrases, as may be seen in Rev. 2:16,23,27; 6:8; 9:19,20; 12:5; 14:10; 16:8; 17:16; 19:15,21; to quote from but one book of the New Testament. (Christian Annotator 2:334)

26:58 court: It will be noticed in this corrected version of the various accounts that it is a question of the high priest's "court," not palace, which more properly applies to the governor's residence or prætorium (Matt. 27; John 18), which no doubt had its court also intimated in Mark 15:16. (Bible Treasury 15:36)

27:5 temple: [Dear Mr. Editor, Allow me to draw your attention to Matthew 27:5. The word employed is ναός, not ιερόν. What brought Judas in there? We can hardly suppose him to have been a priest. If not, his association and connection with the priests must have been very intimate to have him admitted there where only priests might come. There must have been an arranging of the wickedness sought to be accomplished which gave this intimacy and access to a place appropriated to the priests. I do not find ναός used for the general buildings of the temple. It may be found in a dictionary on account of this passage; but though I have no opportunity of consulting books where I write this, I do not think such a use of ναός is warranted. Can you throw any light upon it? The importance to me is as throwing light on the dealings between Judas Iscariot and the priests. J. N. D.]

The reading seems by no means certain ἐν τῷ ναῷ though supported by the main body of uncials and cursives, Itala, Vulg. Syrr. &c.; but ἐς τὸν ναόν has the grave testimony of κ, Β, Λ, a few good cursives and versions, with some of the early Greek fathers. If this last be not a change to evade the difficulty, it would less than the former imply that Judas entered the house or sanctuary. He may have only thrown the money into it. But if he himself went in, does it teach us more than the desperation of the betrayer, now feeling the bitterest remorse as he thought of his condemned Master, with the surest forebodings of divine wrath? In such a state one can understand Satan pushing a man blindly to dare aught else, conscious that the worst had been done irreparably. Possibly no doubt the priests may have connived at the entrance of the chief instrument of their wickedness where he ought not; but beyond controversy we see elsewhere (John 19:28), how punctilious in ceremonials were those that took Jesus. I incline to think therefore that the point is the recklessness of one impelled by Satan, now that his part was over, with a maddened conscience, rather than the fruit of Judas' intimacy with the plotting priests. (Bible Treasury 9:240)

27:16,17 Barabbas ^Δ: Olshausen's statement, as quoted by J. H., is seriously incorrect; for, though it be true that not three only but five cursive manuscripts add the name of Ἰησοῦς to that of Barabbas, it is not the fact that Origen endorses this blunder, much less does he intimate that the greater number of MSS. had it. The ordinary text rests on the fullest and most satisfactory authority (A B D E F G H K L M S U T Δ, and the great mass of cursives, the Itala, Vulgate, Coptic, Sahidic, the Syriac, save that of Jerusalem, and in fact all other ancient versions except the Armenian). In the face of all this, Tischendorf in 1849 was hardy enough to follow the reading mentioned, not by Origen, but by his Latin interpreter in the words of Pilate, whereas Origen himself quotes the words, omitting the addition. It is well to say that Tischendorf no longer justifies, but excludes it from his new (7th) edition, and endeavours to account for its importation through a work of Jerome. It is possible that Olshausen may have confounded with Origen a scholium generally attributed to Anastasius, Bishop of Antioch, to the following effect: Παλαιοὶς πανν αντιγραφῶν ἐντυχῶν εἶρον καὶ αὐτὸν τὸν βαρὰββαν ἱησοῦν λεγομένον. The addition is discarded as spurious by the editors in general, including Lachmann, who refers to some of his German friends, and affirms of this very statement, "Origenem agnoscere, mendacium est." Your Correspondent therefore may be assured that he has now before him almost all the evidence which is extant, and that the opinion in question has no solid grounds. (Christian Annotator 3:445)

27:17 [See note to 27:16]

27:27 prætorium: the prætorium, or governor's palace: so elsewhere. (Bible Treasury 14:335)

28:1 dusk: In 28:1 the old and common error reappears [in the RV], which has created immense confusion in arranging the order of the facts of the resurrection. The word ἐπιφώσκειν applies equally to the dusk as to the dawn, the context alone deciding. The Jewish day began with the evening. Here it is assuredly the dusk, for the dawn of the first day could not be ὁψὲ σαββάτων. The women came to the tomb on Saturday evening as here, as well as on Sunday morning early to which no doubt the earthquake in verse 2 belongs, when they were there again. (Bible Treasury 13:288)

28:20 [end of verse]: Most consistently, therefore, in this Gospel, we have no ascension scene at all. If we had only the Gospel of Matthew, we should possess no record of this wonderful fact: so striking is the omission, that a well-known commentary, Mr. Alford's first edition, broached the rash and irreverent hypothesis founded upon it, that our Matthew is an incomplete Greek version of the Hebrew original, because there was no such record; for it was impossible, in the opinion of that writer, that an apostle could have omitted a description of that event. The fact is, if you add the ascension to Matthew, you would overload and mar his Gospel. (Lect. Intro. to the Gospels, p.137) [see note to Mat. 4:12]

age: [See note to Mat. 12:32]

age. ^Δ: . . . probably owing to ecclesiastical influence, like the doxology at the end of the prayer for the disciples (6:13), the "Amen" [is found] at the end of the Gospel, and indeed of all the Gospels. (Bible Treasury 13:288)

Notes for Mark

1:1 the Son of God: B. Weiss, with κ^{cor} and most uncials (ABDL, etc.), besides versions, retains “the Son of God,” which Nestle, after Tischendorf, etc., omits with κ^{pm} and cursives. See Westcott and Hort, Appendix, p.23. (EEW’s notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 14)

1:2 Isaiah the prophet: In chapter 1:2 the Revisers have rightly abandoned “in the prophets” though given in the Alex. and most other MSS, because it is an evident correction made to ease the difficulty. The Sinai, Vatican, Cambridge of Beza, Parisian (L), and St. Gall uncials, with some twenty-five cursives, the most ancient versions and express early citations, preserve the true text, “in Isaiah the prophet.” Even on human ground it is absurd to suppose that the writer did not know that the first words quoted were from Mal. 3:1, and if inspiration be allowed, the only question is as to the principle of thus merging a secondary in a primary quotation. Cf. the somewhat different use of Jeremiah [rather than Zechariah (Bible Treasury), from that of Isa. 40:3 (Exp. of Mark)] in Matt. 27:9,10. There is purpose in both, which cursory readers have not seen, and so they have been as quick to impute a slip as the later copyists were to eliminate it. But it is as irreverent as unwise and evil to obscure or deny the truth even in such points as these, because the modes of Scripture application differ from those of ordinary men, and we may not at a first glance be able to appreciate or clear up the profound wisdom of inspiration. Kuster’s conjecture that the reading was originally “in the prophet” seems a mere effort to get rid of what he did not understand, which really, like such attempts generally, leaves the chief point where it was. (Bible Treasury 13:300, Exp. of Mark, p. 30)

Isaiah the prophet: So the best copies . . . read (not in the prophets, but) “in the prophet Isaiah,” though two passages are cited, the latter of which only is Isaiah’s, the former from Malachi. This may show how differently from us the Jews quoted. But ignorance or error is out of the question: they really attach to translators and copyists who tried to amend the true reading in some Greek copies and ancient versions of both these scriptures [i.e., Matt. 27:9 and Mark 1:2]. It is the best wisdom and the simplest faith to accept scripture in its most accurate form in spite of difficulties, which the Spirit of God will enable us to solve if for His glory. But were the difficulties more and greater, could we not trust Him? (Bible Treasury 9:80)

Isaiah the prophet: In chapter 1:2 the Revisers [of 1881] have rightly abandoned “in the prophets” though given in the Alex. and most other MSS, because it is an evident correction made to ease the difficulty. The Sinai, Vatican, Cambridge of Beza, Parisian (L) and St. Gall uncials, with some twenty-five cursives, the most ancient versions and express early citations, preserve the true text, “in Isaiah the prophet.” Even on human ground it is absurd to suppose that the writer did not know that the first words quoted were from Malachi 3:1; and if inspiration be allowed, the only question is as to the principle of thus merging a secondary in a primary quotation. Compare the somewhat different use of “Jeremiah” rather than Zechariah in Matthew 27:9, 10. There is purpose in both, which cursory readers have not seen; and so they have been quick to impute a slip, as the later copyists were to eliminate. But it is as irreverent as unwise and evil to obscure or deny the truth even in such points as these, because the modes of scripture application differ from those of ordinary men, and we may not at a first glance be able to appreciate or clear up the profound wisdom of inspiration. Kuster’s conjecture that the reading was originally “in the prophet” seems a mere effort to get rid of what he did not understand; which really, like such attempts generally, leaves the chief point where it was. (Bible Treasury 13:300-301) way Λ : $\Lambda\Gamma\Delta$, etc., syr^{hcl} arm. goth., Origen here add “before thee.” Edd. omit, as κBDL , etc. (EEW’s notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 14)

1:4 baptizing in the wilderness, and: [Dean Alford] inserts the article and omits the conjunction, contrary to the judgment of Griesbach, Scholz, and even Lachmann. Bengel does not even notice the various readings. Tischendorf in his second and third editions of Leipsic (1849) reads as Alford now does; but in his seventh he went back to his first impressions, though now in his eighth edition, which is excessively modified by the Sinai MS., he adopts the article, but retains $\kappa\alpha\iota$ which is wanting only in the Vatican and three cursives. It seems rash indeed to present this at least doubtful question as one of the more remarkable places where our present text in this gospel is not that of the more eminent authorities. (Bible Treasury 7:255)

1:11 in thee: so Edd. with κBDL , etc., best cursives (33, 69), Old Latin, Syr., etc. “In whom” is the reading of A and later uncials with most cursives. (EEW’s notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 17)

1:14 of the kingdom: [this] disappears with good reason [κBL , etc., 1,33,69, Syr^{sin} Vulg.], though most uncials [AD, etc.] and cursives insert the words, the old versions being pretty evenly divided. It is an addition borrowed from Matthew, whose Gospel it suits perfectly. (Bible Treasury 13:301, EEW’s notes in brackets, Exp. of Mark, p. 19)

1:18 nets: [See note to Mat. 4:18]

1:23 and there was: so ACD and later uncials, Lat. Syrr. (including sin.), Arm. Go. $\text{\AA} \text{eth}$. Edd. with κBL , 1, 33 insert “immediately” after “and.” (EEW’s notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 21)

1:24 Let us alone (Ah!): Edd. omit, as BD, Lat. $\text{Syr}^{\text{syrr pesch}}$, but the words are in A C L, etc., Syr^{hcl} , etc. (EEW’s notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 22)

1:41 Jesus: so $\text{AC}\Gamma\Delta$, etc. Edd. (“Workers’ New Testament” not following Nestle) omit, as κBD . (EEW’s notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 28)

1:42 as soon as He had spoken: $\text{AC}\Gamma\Delta$, most cursives, Vulg. Syr^{hcl} . Edd. omit, as κBDL , a few cursives (including 69), Old Latin, Memph., etc. (EEW’s notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 28)

2:1 at home: . . . an article is needlessly inserted [in the RV]. Translate “at home” in contrast with being abroad or elsewhere. (Bible Treasury 13:301)

2:4 couch: 2:4, 9, 11, 12, no doubt a “pallet bed” or “couch,” as elsewhere. (Bible Treasury 14:335)

2:5 thee: so A^{cor} , with later uncials and most cursives. Edd. omit, with κBD , etc. (EEW’s notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 32)

2:7 thus speak? he blasphemes: so Edd. with κBDL , Amiatine of Vulg., Memph.; whilst ACT , etc., $\text{Syr}^{\text{pesch hcl}}$ Arm. Goth. $\text{\AA} \text{eth}$. have “Why does he thus speak blasphemies?” (EEW’s notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 32)

2:9 couch: [See note to Mark 2:4]

2:11 couch: [See note to Mark 2:4]

2:12 couch: [See note to Mark 2:4]

thus: The end of verse 12 is simply “thus,” “on this fashion” being antiquated. (Bible Treasury 13:301)

2:17 sinners. Λ : [see note to Mat. 1:25]

2:20 Λ days . . . in that day: . . . an article is needlessly inserted [in the RV]. Translate . . . “days will come.” . . . “in that day” has the best authority, not “in those days,” which came in from the corresponding passage in Luke 5. (Bible Treasury 13:301)

in that day: “in that day” has the best authority, not “in those days,” which came in from the corresponding passage in Luke 5. (Bible Treasury 13:301)

2:26 [The]: Edd. omit with BLΓ, etc. It is inserted in CA, etc., and in cursives 1,33,69. ⲁ is neutral. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 42)

3:5 restored ⲕ : C^{corr} LΓ, Syr^{sin hcl} add "sound as the other." Edd. omit, with ⲁBC^{pm}D, 33, Amiatine and the rest of Syrr. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 48)

3:13 the: In chapter 3:13, as in Matthew 5:1, the indefinite article appears wrongly in the Authorised Version, the Revised gives "the" correctly, not meaning any particular mountain, but the high land as contrasted with the low or plain, as on board ship or on the sea is in contrast with on the shore. (Bible Treasury 13:301)

3:14 appointed: In verse 14 the Revisers [of 1881] rightly give "appointed" instead of the equivocal "ordained." They are no less fair in striking out the "ordained to be" of Acts 1:22, and in changing "ordain" to appoint" in Titus 1:5. They would have done better in giving "chosen" in Acts 14:23 and 2 Corinthians 8:19, as they do in Acts 10:41, though "appoint" is no doubt a legitimate rendering of χειροτονέω. (Bible Treasury 13:301)

3:15 to heal diseases and: so AC^{corr}D, etc., nearly all cursives, Latt. Syrr. Arm. Goth. Edd. omit, with ⲁBC^{pm}L, etc., Memph. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 60)

3:27 but: so recent Edd., with ⲁBLΔ, etc., 1,33,69, Memph. It is omitted by T.R. with ADΓ, etc., Amiat. Syrr. Goth. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 61)

3:29 sin: (ἁμαρτήματος) so Edd., with ⲁBLD, 33, almost all Latt. Syr^{sin}, Memph. Goth. A few cursives have it in the form ἁμαρτίας. "Judgment" is the reading of AC^{corr} and the later uncials, and almost all cursives Syr^{pesch hcl} Æth. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 62) sin: The chief change of text [in Mk. 3 of the RV] is in verse 29, "guilty of an eternal sin," instead of "in danger of," or "subject to eternal judgment." "Damnation," as is well known, is not the true force of κρίσεως, though its effect. But the true reading on excellent authority appears to be ἁμαρτήματος, "sin" or "guilt," which might naturally be toned down into judgment. It is more forcible and absolutely expressed than even in Matthew, where blaspheming against the Spirit is said to be irremissible, either in this age, that is, of the law, or in that which is to come, that is, of Messiah reigning over the earth, when all other iniquities are forgiven, and all diseases are healed. (Bible Treasury 13:301)

3:32 brethren ⲕ : After "brethren" AD, etc. Syr^{hcl(mg)}Goth. add "and thy sisters," but the omission is sustained by ⲁBCLΔ, etc., 1,33,69, Syr^{pesch}Arm. Memph. Æth. The "Workers' New Testament" has the words without the brackets used by Nestle (after Treg. W.H.). B. Weiss supposes that the omission was due to similarity of ending (ὁμοιοτέλετον). (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 62)

4:4 the birds (simply): so ⲁABCL, 1,33,69, Amiat. Syrr. Memph. "Of the sky" is added by DCM and some cursives. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 63)

4:10 parables: so Edd., with ⲁBCLΔ, Amiat. Memph. The reading of AEIE Syr^{pesch} Goth. Æth. is "parable." (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 67)

4:11 [to know]: so C^{corr} DΔ, etc., Old Latin Syr^{pesch hier} have the word, but Edd. omit, as ⲁABC^{pm} KLII Syr^{sin}. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 67)

4:12 they should be forgiven: so Edd., with ⲁBCL, etc. "Their sins," etc., is found in AD, etc., Syr^{sin pesch}, Old Latin, Memph. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 67)

4:15 in them: so ACLΔ, Syr^{hcl(mg)}, Edd. read "into them," with B, 1, 69, etc. "In their hearts" appears in D, the later uncials, 33, Amiat. Syr^{sin pesch hcl(t)}. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 64)

4:24 [that hear]: as A and later copies, 1,33,69, Syr. Arm. Edd. omit, with ⲁBCDLΔ, Old Latin, Memph. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 68)

4:28 ⲕ Of: "[for]": so later uncials, Old Latin, Amiat. Goth. Edd. omit, with ⲁABCL. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 69)

4:34 without: [See note to Mat. 10:29]

his: so AD and later uncials, almost all cursives (1,33,69); whilst Edd. adopt "his own," with ⲁBCLΔ and Origen. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 69)

4:38 in the stern sleeping on the cushion: There are many minute changes in chapter 4 [in the RV], but the only correction of version one would notice is the unquestionably right one of "in the stern sleeping on the cushion," instead of "in the hinder part of the ship, asleep on a pillow" in verse 38. (Bible Treasury 13:301)

5:5 in the tombs and in the mountains: so Edd., with ⲁABCHL, etc., 1,33,69, and versions. DE, etc., have "in the mountains and in the tombs." (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.72)

5:7 says: so Edd., with ⲁABCKL, etc., 1,33, Cod. Amiat. "Said" is the reading of DE, etc., 69, Memph. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.73)

5:10 them: as D, etc. Edd. read "him," with ⲁL, etc., Syr^{pesch} Æth. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.73)

5:13 [immediately]: as AΠΣ, etc., 33,69, Amiat. Edd. omit, as ⲁBCLΔ, 1, Memph. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.73)

Jesus: so AΠΣ, etc., 33,69, Amiat. Edd. omit, as ⲁBCELΔ, 1, Memph. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.73) they were (before "about, etc."): as AC^{corr}Π, etc., 33,69, Syr^{hcl} Goth. Edd. omit, with ⲁBC^{pm}DLΔ, 1, Amiat. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.73)

5:14 went out: as ⲁ^{pm}CD and later uncials, Syr^{sin pesch} Arm. Æth. "Went" (Edd.) is the reading of ⲁ^{corr}ABKLMUI^{corr}, etc., 1,33, Syr^{hcl} Memph. Goth. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.74)

5:15 [and]: so ACII, etc., Syr^{sin hcl} Arm. Goth. Edd. omit, with ⲁBDLΔΣ, 1,33,69, Amiat. Memph. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.74)

5:18 he went: so Edd., with ⲁABCDKLMΔΠΣ, 1,33, Old Latin. "He had gone" appears in later uncials and most cursives. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.74)

5:19 and He: so Edd., with ⲁABC, etc., 1,33, Syr^{pesch hcl} Memph. Goth. "And (but) Jesus": as DE, etc., 69, with most cursives, Old Lat., Æth. Arm. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.75)

5:36 ⲕ over-hearing: . . . it is well to remark the παρακούσας of the critical editors instead of the [εὐθέως] ἄκ. of the common text. But it is doubtful whether the [RV] marginal "over-hearing" should not rather have taken the place of the Revisers' text "not heeding," which would have suited if the Lord had said nothing. But He heeds the word spoken enough to bid the synagogue-ruler, "Fear not, only believe." (Bible Treasury 13:301)

6:10 whatsoever place: Edd., with ⲁBL, 69, etc. "Whosoever" has the support of AD, later uncials, almost all cursives, Old Lat. Syr^{sin pesch}. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 79)

6:11 them ⲕ : The latter part of this verse [in T.R.] seems an accommodation from Matt. 11 and Luke 10, with changes. Yet the ancient testimony is so ample (eleven uncials, nearly all the cursives, and some of the best versions) that it surprises one to see no remark on such a difference in the margin of the Revisers. In the footnotes of the corresponding Greek text M. E. Palmer of course gives the words. (Bible Treasury 13:301) The authorities supporting the words "Verily, I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for Sodom or Gomorrah in [the] day of judgment than for that city" are AEIIE, etc., 1,69, most Syrr. Memph. Edd. follow $\alpha\text{BCDL}\Delta$, Syr^{sin} Old Lat. and Jerome's Vulgate. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 79-80)

6:20 did many things: so ACD, etc., all cursives, Old Lat. Syr^{sin} hcl, etc. Edd. follow ABL, Memph. for "was perplexed." (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.80)

did many things: The rendering of a phrase in verse 20 [in the RV] as well as the reading after it is questionable. Does συνετήρει αὐτόν mean "kept him safe," or "paid close attention to him"? and is the true reading "was perplexed," ἠπόρει (8 B L Cop.) or the far more largely supported ἐποίει which their margin renders? (Bible Treasury 13:301)

6:22 the daughter of the same Herodias: so Nestle, etc., with AC, later uncials, most cursives, all vv. (including Syr^{sin}). Hort: "His daughter Herodias," which is the reading of $\alpha\text{BDL}\Delta$. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 81)

6:33 recognized them: so Edd., after αAKL , etc., many cursives, including 33, Syr. Memph. \mathcal{A} th. EFT, etc., 69, have "him"; whilst BD and Amiat. have neither "him" nor "them." This is an illustration of W.H.'s "conflate" readings (Introduction, p. 95 ff). (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 86)

6:36 bread: Edd: "buy themselves something" (α , fragments) "to eat," with B(D)L Δ Syr^{sin} Memph. Text (the "received") is that of AE, etc., and other Syrr. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 87)

6:44 Λ five: α , 1 and some other copies with Arm. have "about 5000 men." (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 92)

7:3 diligently (or "frequently," "with vigour," or "with nicety"): The mass of authority [ABD, etc., followed by Edd.] sustains πυγμῇ (D: πυκμῇ). Lit. "with the fist," or "up to the elbow." Tischendorf adopted πυκνά from the Sinaitic copy, confirmed, perhaps, by the Latin (verse 9) and some other versions. St Gall [as the Syr^{sin}] has neither. (cf. Bible Treasury 13:301). . . . [The usage explaining the word πυγμῇ may be found in Edersheim, "The Temple, its Ministry," etc., p. 239.] (EEW's notes in brackets, Exp. of Mark, p. 103,256)

7:4 are washed: "dip" is more literal than "bathe" or "wash" (Bible Treasury 14:335)

7:5 defiled: so Edd., after $\alpha^m\text{BD}$, 1,33, Memph. Arm. "Unwashed" is found in $\alpha^{\text{corr}}\text{AL}$, etc., Syr. Goth. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 103)

7:11 by . . . Λ : The addition in italics at the end of verse 11 is rightly omitted by the Revisers [of 1881], as in Mat. 15:5 also. (Bible Treasury 13:301)

7:19 purging (καθαρίζων): A serious italic supplement by the Revisers appears in verse 19, "This He said." Here is the preliminary question of καθαρίζων and καθαρίζον, the former undoubtedly carrying much the most weight externally (αAB , etc., 1,69, and some other cursives [followed by Edd.]; καθαρίζον, KM and most cursives), if one did not bear in mind how carelessly the best MSS. interchange ω and \circ , which almost nullifies their suffrages on the point. The strange version of the Revised Version, "Making all meats clean," seems due to Origen (Comm. in Matt. 15:10). — K. usually is regarded, if in the neut., as in apposition with the sentence; if in the masculine, as appended in an independent construction, with the gender conformed to τὸν ἀφεδρώνα, the departure from formal grammar giving the more force to the participle (cf. Moulton's "Winer," p. 778, and Blass, § 70, 10, on the anacoluthon). Indeed, καθαρίζει and καὶ καθαρίζει are found in some copies, all indicative of the difficulty presented by the construction. (Bible Treasury 13:301, EEW's notes in brackets, Exp. of Mark, p. 116)

7:31 of Tyre and Sidon he came to: so A with later uncials, almost all cursives (including 1,69), Syr^{sin} pesh hcl. Revised Version with Edd. have "of Tyre. He came through Sidon," after $\alpha\text{BDL}\Delta$, 33, etc., Old Latin, the Syriac of Jerusalem, Memph. \mathcal{A} th. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 115)

8:1 again great: so Edd., following $\alpha\text{BDCLMN}\Delta$, etc., 1,33,69, Old Lat., Syr^{sin} Arm. Goth. \mathcal{A} th. Memph. "Very great" has the support of AEFHK, later uncials, and most cursives, Syr. (exc. sin.). (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 122)

8:3 for: as A, etc., Amiat., Syr^{pesh} hcl. "And": so Edd., with $\alpha\text{ABL}\Delta$, 1,33, Memph. Syr^{sin}. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 123)

8:9 [they that had eaten]: as ACN and later uncials, 1,69 Latt. Syr. Arm. Goth. Edd. omit, with αBL , 33, Memph. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 123)

8:12 this generation . . . this generation: [See note to Mat. 24:34]

8:13 [the ship]: as AE, etc., 33 Syr^{sin} pesh hcl Arm. Memph. Goth. Edd. omit, with $\alpha\text{BCL}\Delta$ and best copies of Vulgate. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 125)

8:16 [saying]: as ACLN and later copies, nearly all cursives, Syr. Arm. Memph. Goth. \mathcal{A} th. Edd. omit, after αBD . (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 126)

8:17 [yet]: as AX, etc., 69, Amiat. Syr. Edd. omit, with αBCDL , etc., 1,33, Memph. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 127)

8:23 if he beheld (lit. beholds): as $\alpha\text{AD}^{\text{corr}}\text{LN}$, etc., nearly all cursives (1,69), Amiat. Syr. Goth. Arm. Memph. Edd. "Dost thou behold?" with $\text{BCD}^m\Delta$, Memph. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 128)

8:24-25 [whole passage]: In chapter 8:24, 25, of the Revised Version, we have the healing of the blind man more graphically than in the common text and version. "I see men; for I behold them as trees, walking." Then again he laid his hands upon his eyes, and he looked stedfastly (διέβλεψε) and was restored and saw all things clearly (ἐνέβλεπε τηλαυγῶς [Tisch. δηλ] ἄπαντα). (Bible Treasury 13:301)

[whole passage]: [In the RV] we have the healing of the blind man more graphically than in the common text and version. "I see men; for I behold them as trees, walking." Then again he laid his hands upon his eyes, and he looked stedfastly (διέβλεψε) and was restored and saw all things clearly (ἐνέβλεπε τηλαυγῶς [Tisch. δηλ.] ἄπαντα). (Bible Treasury 13:301)

8:25 [whole verse]: [See note to Mark 8:24]

he looked stedfastly: as Edd., after $\alpha\text{BC}^{\text{corr}}\Delta$ and a few cursives. "Made him look up": so AN and later uncials, Syr^{sin}. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 131) [see note to Mk. 8:24]

8:28 answered: as AD, etc., all cursives, Lat. Syr^{hcl} Arm. Goth. "Spoke": so Edd., following αBC , etc., Syr^{pesh} Memph. \mathcal{A} th. "Him, saying": these words T.R. omits, as AN, etc., 1, Syr. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 131)

8:29 asked them: so Edd., with $\alpha\text{BC}^m\text{DL}\Delta$. "Saith to them": as $\text{AC}^{\text{corr}}\text{N}$, etc., 1,33,69, Amiat. Goth. Arm. \mathcal{A} th. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 132)

8:33 saying: as ADXΠ, etc., 1,33,69, Old Lat., Syr^{hcl} Goth. Arm. "And says": Edd., with \aleph BCLΔ, Memph. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 135)

8:37 should: so Edd., with \aleph BL, Memph. "Shall" is in ACD, all cursives, and Lat. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p. 137)

9:3 [snow]: as AD and some later uncials, with 33,69, Amiat. Syr^{sin} pesch Memph. Goth. Edd. omit, after \aleph BCLΔ, etc. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.138)

9:22 couldst: So Edd., with \aleph BD, etc., 1. "Canst" is in AC, etc., 33,69. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.142)

9:23 to believe: The oldest and best authorities [\aleph B, etc., Memph. Arm. \mathcal{A} th., followed by Edd.] omit "to believe," though it has large uncial support [ADN and later uncials, most cursives, Old Lat., Chrys.]. Perhaps the difficulty may have led to the omission. The question of power turns on faith. (cf. Bible Treasury 13:301) After "believe" C^{corr}, 1,33,69 and most other cursives, Syr^{sin}, Chrys., add "Lord," which Edd. omit, after \aleph ABC^{pm}D, etc. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.142) to believe: The first thing to be settled is the right reading. The received text, Griesbach, Knappe, and Scholz have Τὸ (or τὸ) εἰ δύνασαι πιστεῦσαι πάντα δυνατὰ τῷ πιστεύοντι. If this reading be preferred, how is the presence of the article to be accounted for? Mr. Green (Grammar of the New Test. Dialect, p. 205) supposes that our Lord was in the habit of putting this condition to those who applied to him for relief; a knowledge of which circumstance would lead a writer to prefix the article. The meaning would then be: Jesus addressed to him his ordinary and well known saying, "If thou canst believe." I am disposed, however, to think that the true reference is not to any such customary saying, but to the man's own, used just before, εἰ τι δύνη; and that our Lord meant, The if you can is to believe (that is to say, the question of power, (or, if you can,) turns on believing); "all things are possible to him that believeth." The text of Lachmann is susceptible of the same translation, if you give it the same punctuation as the older editors; but he himself points thus: Τὸ εἰ δύνη πιστεῦσαι πάντα δυνατὰ τῷ πιστεύοντι, which he would translate, I presume, "If you can believe, all things are possible to him that believeth." But this evidently leaves the use of the article unexplained, if not inexplicable. The conjecture of τὶ for τὸ, like all conjectures which have no MS. authority, must be summarily rejected, and the Lausanne translation must be admitted to be here a mistake. (Christian Annotator 1:132)

9:24 said \wedge : The evidence [\aleph BLΔ, etc., Syr^{sin} Memph. Arm. \mathcal{A} th., followed by Edd.] is strong against "with tears." (cf. Bible Treasury 13:301) The words are inserted in DN and later uncials, most cursives, Old Lat., Syr^{pesch hcl} Goth. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.142-3)

9:26 [him]: so \aleph ^{pm}AC^{corr}EN, etc., 1,33,69, Amiat. Syrr. Memph. Edd. omit, after \aleph ^{corr}BC^{pm}DLΔ. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.143)

9:29 and fasting: The evidence is weak [\aleph B^{pm}] against "and fasting". (cf. Bible Treasury 13:301) The T.R. has the support of ACDLN, etc., most cursives, Old Lat., Syr. (including Sinai palimpsest), and Memph. Lachmann retained the words. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.143) and fasting: It is well to note that the two most ancient copies ignore "and fasting," (Bible Treasury N5:70)

9:31 after three days: so Edd., after \aleph BC^{pm}DLΔ, Syr^{hcl mg} Memph. — AC^{corr}EN, etc., 1,69, Syr^{sin pesch}, have "on the third day." (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.143)

9:33 reasoning: ANXΓΔ, etc., 1,13,69, Syr. Arm. Goth. \mathcal{A} th. here add "among yourselves" (with one another), which Edd. omit, after \aleph BCDL, Amiat. Memph. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.144)

9:38 who does not follow: so Nestle, with A(D)N, most cursives, Syr^{hcl} Goth. Arm. Swete and others omit, as \aleph BCLΔ, Syr^{sin pesch}, Memph. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.144)

forbad: The T.R. is ἐκωλύσαμεν ("forbad"), supported by ACNXTΠ, etc. Edd. adopt ἐκωλύμεν ("were forbidding"), with \aleph BDΓΔ. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.144)

because he: omitted by DX, 1,69, Lat. Arm. On the "conflation" here see W.H., "Introduction," p. 150 ff. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.144)

9:42 [in me]: In verse 42 the words "in Me" are supported by ABC^{corr}ELNXTΠEΦΨ, Syr^{sin pesch hcl}, Arm. Goth., but Edd. omit them on the slender basis of \aleph Δ, which, presumably, would not have availed for their admission under reversed conditions. It will be observed that the last-found treasure in the convent at Sinai upholds the "received text." (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.145)

9:43 into hell: attested by most and the best copies and versions, but are not in the Sinai palimpsest. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.145)

9:44, 46 [where their worm dies not, and the fire is not quenched]: The clause bracketed in verses 44, 46 is in ADN, 69, Old Latin, Syr^{pesch hcl} Goth. \mathcal{A} th., but Edd. omit, following \aleph BCLΔ, etc., and Syr^{sin}. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.146)

9:46 [See note to 9:44]

9:48 [whole verse]: none omitting verse 48 (Bible Treasury 13:301)

9:49 salt \wedge : Some witnesses [\aleph BLD, 1, and several other cursives, with Syr^{sin}] followed by the Revisers leave out the latter half of verse 49. [It is supported by ACNS and most later uncials, and by cursives, with Syr^{pesch} and other versions.] The substance of the truth abides, no doubt, but the solemnity of the warning appears to be enfeebled in the curtailed form; and the distinction between the wicked and righteous as tested by God's judgment, moral in grace, or final in verse 49. (cf. Bible Treasury 13:301, EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.146)

10:1 and the other side of (beyond): so Edd., with ABC, Memph. D, etc., 1,13,69, with Amiat., omit "and"; whilst AE, etc., and 33 have "by the other side," which is T.R. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.147, cf. Bible Treasury 13:301) and: The Revisers, on few but first-rate authorities, read in 10:1 "and" beyond Jordan, for the A.V. "by." (Bible Treasury 13:301)

10:2 \wedge Pharisees: \aleph C, etc., 1,33, have "the" before "Pharisees," which Edd. omit, with ABLΓ, etc., 69, Memph. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.148)

10:6 God: so AD, etc., 1,69, Jerome's Vulg. Syr. Arm. Goth. \mathcal{A} th. Edd. adopt "He," with \aleph BCLΔ, Memph. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.148)

10:7 and shall be united to his wife: so (AC)D, etc., nearly all cursives, Lat. Syr^{pesch hcl} Memph. \mathcal{A} th. Edd. omit, with \aleph B, etc., Syr^{sin} Goth. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.148)

10:13 brought . . . rebuked: if we say "were bringing" we should also say "were rebuking," a cumbrous form indeed, were it uniformly carried out. (Bible Treasury 14:335)

10:21 [taking up the cross]: The words bracketed are found in A(G)N, etc., 1,13,69, and Syr^{sin pesch} \mathcal{A} th., Iren. Edd. omit, after \aleph BCDΔ and Old Latin. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.152)

10:24 for those who trust in riches: so ACDN, later uncials, all cursives, most Old Latin, Syr. (including sin.), Arm. Edd. omit, as \aleph BA. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.153)

10:29 answered (answering): so A, etc., Syr^{sin} pesch, Arm. Goth. Edd. omit, with \aleph BD, Memph. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.154)

[or wife]: as AC and later uncials, 69, most Syrr. Goth. \aleph th., but omitted by Edd., after \aleph BD Δ , 1, Syr^{sin} Memph. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.154)

10:32 and they: 10:32 is a question of reading, and the marg. [of the RV] uncalled for. (Bible Treasury 14:335)

10:34 after three days: so Edd., following \aleph BCDL Δ , Syr^{hcl} mg, Memph. "The third day" is the reading of AN, etc., all cursives, Jerome's Vulg., Syr^{sin} pesch hcl (t) Arm. \aleph th., Origen. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.155)

10:35 [to him]: so Edd., as \aleph BCL Δ , Memph. The words are not found in AE, etc., 1,69, and Amiatine. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.156) thee: so Edd., with ABC, etc., 1,69, Memph.; whilst \aleph and others omit. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.156)

10:43 is: so Edd., after \aleph BC^{pm}D, etc., Old Latin. The T.R. "shall be" is in AC^{corr}N, later uncials, most cursives, Arm. Memph. Goth. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.157)

10:45 also: "also" suffices (Bible Treasury 14:335)

10:46 blind Δ : Some manuscripts give "the son of Timæus, Bartimæus, a blind beggar, sat," etc. The Sinai copy has "blind and a beggar." (Exp. of Mark, p. 159) BDL Δ and \aleph , as stated above; the T.R. follows A, etc. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.159)

10:47 Nazarean: so \aleph AC, etc. Edd. adopt "Nazarene," after BL Δ , 1, with most Old Latin and Amiatine. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.159)

10:49 that he should be called: This is, I doubt not, the true reading (\aleph BCL Δ , a few cursives, Memph.; followed by Edd.), which bears the graphic stamp of Mark's style. The vulgar text (\aleph D, etc., most cursives, Syr^{pesch} \aleph th., etc.) is here, as elsewhere, due to that love of assimilating the Gospels which in the copyists answers to the love of harmonies among divines, both to the no small marring of the Divine perfection of the Gospels. Compare Luke 18:40, where "He commanded," etc., is right. (Bible Treasury 6:4 and EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.160)

10:50 started [sprang] up: so Edd., after \aleph BDL, etc., Memph. Goth.; whilst "rose up" is supported by AC, etc., most cursives, Syr.(including sin.), and other versions. The word ἀναπηδᾶν is used only here in the New Testament. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.160)

11:3 it; . . . sends: If Lachmann meant by his punctuation or non-punctuation of the two last clauses (for he reads 'Ο κύριος αὐτοῦ χρεῖαν ἔχει καὶ εὐθὺς αὐτὸν ἀποστέλλει ὧδε) that it is the Lord who was also straightway to send the colt, it seems strange that he did not adopt the addition of πάλιν, which occurs in the Sinai, Cambridge (Beza's), Vatican and Paris (L) Manuscripts, and more than ten cursives. But, in my opinion, ὧδε is quite inconsistent with such an interpretation, which would, on the contrary, require ἐκεῖ (there, or thither). (Bible Treasury 6:24) The text followed above is the critical. "Sends": so Edd., after \aleph ABCD, etc., Goth. "Will send" is in GUI Φ Ψ , 1, and some versions. "Again" is without the support of vv. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.162-3)

11:8 others beds of twigs, having cut them from the fields: It appears to me that the best readings here are as I have given above [so Edd. below]. The common text is owing to the usual habit of assimilating the Gospel to the corresponding passages in Matthew and Luke. The frequency of the present tense in Mark is a feature of his style which gives vividness to what he depicts. The chief departure from the common text is in the last clause, where we have the shorter phrase, κόψαντες ἐκ τῶν ἀγρῶν in the Sinai, Vatican, Rescript of Ephrem S. and L. of Paris, Græco-Lat.

of St. Gall (Δ), besides versions. (Bible Treasury 6:24) The Sinaitic Syriac goes so far as to omit the words "others . . . fields." "Strewed them on the way" is supported by AD, etc., Old Latin, Syr^{pesch} hcl Goth. Arm. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.163-164) fields: [The RV] read[s] "fields" (ἀγρῶν) instead of "branches" (δένδρων), with other small changes. (Bible Treasury 13:301)

11:10 the coming kingdom Δ : so Edd., after \aleph BCL, 1, etc.; whilst A, etc., have "in the name of the Lord." (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.164)

11:11 and: "And" (T.R.) before "into" is in AD, etc., Syr^{sin} hcl Goth., but is omitted in the "neutral text" followed by Edd. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.164)

11:23 For verily . . . but believe that what he speaks comes to pass, he shall have [it]: The Received Text is far from correct. The Sinai and other manuscripts [D, 33^{corr}, with 69, etc., Syr^{sin} Arm.] give "If ye have faith in God, verily," etc. But apart from this, the close of verse 23, I think, should be, "but believe that what he speaks comes to pass, he shall have [it]" [as \aleph B, etc.]. "For" at the beginning of the verse appears in ACL and later uncials, most cursives, Syr^{pesch} hcl Memph. Goth.]. (Bible Treasury 6:38, and EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.167)

11:24 [whole verse]: So in verse 24 [\aleph BCL Memph.], "For this reason I say unto you, All things, whatsoever ye shall pray and beg, believe that ye have received, and ye shall have [them]." (Bible Treasury 6:38, and EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.167)

have received: "have received" scarcely accords with the aorist, and is not idiomatic. (Bible Treasury 14:335)

12:4 threw stones, and: as AC, etc., Syr^{pesch} hcl Goth. \aleph th. Edd. omit, after \aleph BD, etc., 1,33, Old Latin, Memph. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.170) with insult: so AC, etc., Syr^{pesch} hcl Arm. Goth. \aleph th. \aleph B[D], etc., 1,33, Old Latin, etc., have "and insulted [him]," as Edd. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.170)

12:5 again: so AN, etc., Syr^{pesch} hcl Arm. Goth. Edd. omit, with \aleph BCD, etc., 33, Memph. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.170)

12:6 having: so ACD^{pm}, etc., 69, Jerome's Vulg., Memph. Edd. adopt "he had," after \aleph BC^{corr}L, etc., 33, Syr. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.171) therefore: so ACD, etc., Syr^{hcl}. Edd. follow \aleph BL, etc., 33,69, Memph., in omitting the word. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.171)

therefore: The Revisers omit . . . "therefore" on firm grounds. (Bible Treasury 13:302) one beloved son: so Edd., after \aleph BCD, etc., Amiat. Memph. A, etc., 1,33,69, have "one son, his beloved." (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.171)

one beloved son: the Revisers omit "his" . . . on firm grounds (Bible Treasury 13:302) also: so ACD, etc., Syr^{hcl} Goth. Edd. omit, after \aleph BL Δ , etc. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.171)

12:9 therefore: as \aleph ACD, all cursives, Syr^{pesch} hcl Arm. Swete, as Edd., omits, following BL, Memph. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.172)

12:22 [took her and]: so AD (virtually), most later uncials, almost all cursives, Syr, Jerome's Vulg., and other versions. Edd. omit, with \aleph BCL, etc., 33. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.175)

12:23 resurrection Δ : AC^{corr}, etc., 1, Amiat. Syr^{sin} pesch hcl. Arm. \aleph th. add "therefore" after "resurrection." Edd. omit, after \aleph BC^{pm}, etc. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.175)

12:30 this is the first commandment: so AD, etc., all cursives, Syr^{sin pesch} hcl, most Lat., Arm. Goth. Edd. omit, as \aleph B, Memph. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.176)

12:32 he: so \aleph ABKLM and later uncials, 1,33, Amiat. "God" is in (D)EF(G)H, 69, Syr^{sin hcl(corr)} Arm., etc. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.177)

The Revisers . . . for "God" give "He". (Bible Treasury 13:302)

13:8 and troubles: as A, etc., all cursives, Syr. Edd. omit, as BDL, Amiat. Memph. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.182)

13:11 [nor prepare your discourse]: as A and later uncials, most cursives, Syr^{pesch hcl}. Edd. omit, as \aleph BL Ψ , 1,33,69, Syr^{sin}. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.183)

13:14 standing where it: There is an interesting dubious reading, "standing where [he] ought not": $\epsilon\sigma\tau\eta\kappa\acute{o}\tau\alpha$ (\aleph BL and so Tisch., Tregelles, Alford) [followed by Edd.], instead of $\epsilon\sigma\tau\acute{o}\varsigma$ (Steph.), $\epsilon\sigma\tau\acute{o}\varsigma$ (Elz., Griesbach, Scholz), $\epsilon\sigma\tau\eta\kappa\acute{o}\varsigma$ (Lachmann and Green), $\sigma\tau\eta\kappa\acute{o}\nu$ (seven cursives, [including 1,69]). If the masculine be well founded, it points to the Antichrist, the lawless one of 2 Thess. 2:4. (Bible Treasury 13:302) [Cf. Swete in loc.] (EEW's notes in brackets, Exp. of Mark, p.183)

13:18 it: so Edd., after \aleph^m BDL, 69, Jerome's Vulg. "Your flight" has the support of \aleph^{corr} A, etc., 1, Syr^{pesch hcl} Memph. Goth. \mathcal{A} th. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.184)

13:28 its . . . its: But why should the Revisers perpetuate "her parable," "her branch with its leaves" here, verse 28, as in Matthew 24:32? Why not "its," especially as in Revelation 22:2 they correct "her" into "its fruit"? (Bible Treasury 13:302)

13:30 This generation: [See note to Mat. 24:34]

13:33 and pray: so \aleph ACL, etc., almost all cursives, the Syrr. (sin omitting "take heed"). Edd. omit, with BD. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.186)

14:9 these: so AC and later uncials, 1, Cod. Amiat. Edd. omit, as \aleph BDL, 69. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.190)

14:19 [and another said, Is it I?]: so AD, etc., 1,69, Orig. Edd. omit, after \aleph BCL, etc., Amiat. Syr^{sin pesch hcl(i)}. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.192)

14:21 goes: [See note to Mat. 26:24]

14:22 Take Λ : [In the RV is] the omission of "eat" (Bible Treasury 13:302)

14:24 [new]: so Lachmann, with A, etc., 1,69, Amiat. Syr. Edd. omit, after \aleph BCDL, Memph. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.193)

[new]: [In the RV is] the omission of . . . "new" (Bible Treasury 13:302)

14:25 will: [See Mat. 26:29]

14:27 offended Λ : After "offended" A, etc., 1,69, Syr^{pesch hcl sin} add "because of Me"; the same authorities, with the exception of Syr^{sin}, having also "this night." Edd. omit all these words, following \aleph BC^{corr}D, etc. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.193)

14:30 thou: [In the RV is] the insertion of "thou" emphatically (Bible Treasury 13:302)

14:31 [the more]: as A, etc., 1,69. Edd. omit, as \aleph BCDL, Old Latin, Memph. Syr^{hcl}. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.195)

14:43 great: so ACDL, etc., Syr^{sin pesch}. Edd. omit, with \aleph BL, 69, and some vv. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.199)

14:45 Rabbi Λ : The best copies omit the second "Rabbi." (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.199)

14:51 [the young man]: so AC^{corr}, etc., 1,(69), Syr^{hcl}, and other vv; but Edd. omit, after \aleph BC^{fm}DL Δ , Amiat. and Memph. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.199)

14:65 the officers received: The best manuscripts (\aleph ABC, etc., with Syr^{hcl}, Memph., followed by Edd.) substitute $\epsilon\lambda\alpha\beta\omicron\nu$, "received," for $\epsilon\beta\alpha\lambda\lambda\omicron\nu$ ($\epsilon\beta\alpha\lambda\omicron\nu$), "did strike". (cf. Bible Treasury 13:302) "Did strike" is in EHM, etc., Lat. Syr^{pesch}. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.201)

14:68 and the [a] cock crew: so ACD, etc., and later uncials, nearly all cursives, Syr^{pesch hcl}, and other vv. Edd. omit, with \aleph BL. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.201)

14:69 the maid: The only natural if not necessary reference is to the same maid as before, though we know from Matthew of another maid also, who joined in the same second charge. Prof. Michaelis is represented in Bowyer's Conjectures on the New Testament (Ed. iv.176) as asking, "Is there no MS. where the article η is wanting?" To this Dr. H. Owen answers, "No MS. yet known omits the article, nor is it necessary that any should. It is apparent, from their own mode of expression compared with that of St. John's, that the three first Evangelists never attended to the order; their point being only to assure us, that Peter denies our Saviour thrice. Hence it appears to me that the maid here meant is not the same with her that is mentioned in ver. 67, but the principal maid;" &c. No statement can be more rash and baseless as to the neglect of order here in any one of the Gospels, nor had John any superiority over the rest. And as to MSS. the fact is, that out of the vast sum of N.T. Gr. copies, Lambeth 1179, a cursive of the tenth century, is the only manuscript known to omit the article here. (It was a MS. brought to England by Prof. J. D. Carlyle at the beginning of this century, who died less than three years after. As Dr. H. Owen died nearly six months before the Cambridge Professor of Arabic got back from abroad, he could not have known of this peculiar reading, which is curious rather than important.) But the object is as plain as the misrendering in the Memphitic of Wilkins and the Diez cod. as well as in some of the old Latin copies. The omission therefore must be regarded as a mere slip or, if intended, a fraud; for no sane mind of competent knowledge can question that it is inserted in the genuine readings of the Gospel. Dr. Owen's alternative is even less sound; for there is not the smallest reason to doubt that every one of the Synoptists tallies in the order, and that the points of difference do not clash with the perfect accuracy of each. Fresh facts are in no way an inconsistency. (Bible Treasury 15:37)

14:70 Galilean Λ : After "Galilean" A, etc., most cursives, Syr^{pesch hcl}, add "and thy speech agreeth." Edd. omit, with \aleph BCDL, some cursives, and Amiat. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.202)

Galilean Λ : the best MSS . . . omitting the last clause of verse 70 (Bible Treasury 13:302)

14:72 immediately: "and the second time": so AC, later uncials, almost all cursives Syr^{sin hcl}, etc. Edd. insert "immediately" after "and," with \aleph BLC, Syr^{pesch}, and Old Latin. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.202)

15:4 witness against thee: so A, etc., 33,69 Syr. Arm., etc. Edd.: "accuse thee of," as \aleph BCD, 1, Ital. Memph. \mathcal{A} th. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.206)

15:8 crying aloud: so \aleph^{corr} ACN, later uncials, Syr. Arm. Edd. adopt "coming up," with \aleph^{m} BD, Amiat. Memph. Goth. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.207)

15:12 whom ye call [the]: so Edd., after \aleph AB (without "whom") CA, 1,33,69. AD, 1,69, Ital. Vulg., omit "whom ye call," whilst some of the later uncials do not show "the." (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.207)

15:23 [to drink] is in AC^{corr}D, etc., all cursives, Jerome's Vulg., Syr. Goth. Æth, but is omitted by Edd., with \aleph BC^mLA Memph. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.208)

15:28 [whole verse]: As the best uncials (Alexandrian, Vatican, Sinai, Rescript of Paris, Beza's Cambridge, and one now in Munich), with more than forty cursive manuscripts (Syr^{sin}), etc., omit verse 28, I do not think any cautious mind can urge its genuineness here. It was probably borrowed from the citation of Isa. 53:12 in Luke 22:37 (Rev. as Edd. have rejected the verse which is found in the later uncials, 69, Syr^{pesch} ^{hel} hier Arm. Goth. Æth., and was retained by Lachmann). (Bible Treasury 6:168, EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.210)

15:34 [saying]: so AC, etc., 1,33,69, Syr^{pesch} ^{hel} hier Arm. Goth. Edd. omit, after \aleph BDL, Syr^{sin} Memph. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.213)

16:4 rolled away: so AC, with later uncials, all cursives, Syr^(sin) ^{hel}, but Edd. "rolled back," after \aleph BL. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.219)

16:8 quickly: (T.R.) after "went out" is feebly supported and is rejected by Edd., after \aleph ABCD and most of the later uncials and the cursives, Old Latin, etc. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.221)

16:9ff [whole passage]: Having long since protested against those who treat this passage and the beginning of John 8 with suspicion, I proceed to state my reasons, passing over the disputed place in John, which has been already well defended in another place.

Even Dean Alford, who certainly does not err on the side of credulity, admits that the authority of the close of Mark is hardly to be doubted. Eusebius, and the Vat. and Sin. MSS., omit it; and several others note its absence in certain copies, but generally add, that it appears in the oldest and best. All of the Greek MSS., all the Evangelistaria, all the Versions (except the Roman edition of the Arabic), and a large proportion of the earliest and most trustworthy Fathers, are allowed to be in its favour. Lachmann, in spite of his notorious tendency to follow the very slips of the most ancient copies, edits the entire section without hesitation.

In his notes the Dean urges that the passage is irreconcilable with the other Gospels, and is disconnected with what goes before; that no less than seventeen words and expressions occur in it (some of them repeatedly), which are never elsewhere used by Mark, whose adherence to his own phrases is very weighty against his authorship; that is, he believes it to be an authentic addition by another hand.

Before examining these criticisms, I must object to a reasoning which affirms or allows that to be scripture which is irreconcilable with other scriptures. If its authority be clear, every believer will feel that, with or without difficulties, all must be really harmonious.

But, it is said, the diction and construction differ from the rest of the Gospel. Did the Dean or those who think with him adequately weigh the new and extraordinary circumstances which had to be recorded? In such a case strange words and phrases would be natural if Mark wrote (nor does he by any means want $\acute{\alpha}\pi\alpha\chi$ λεγόμενα elsewhere); whereas, another hand, adding to Mark, would as probably have copied the language and manner of the Evangelist.

Πρώτη σαβ. (ver. 9) is alleged to be unusual. Doubtless; yet, of the two, it is less Hebraistic than τῆς μᾶς σ. (ver. 2), and each might help the other to a Gentile or a Roman ear. And, so far from being stumbled by the way Mary Magdalene is mentioned here, there seems to me much force in Jesus appearing first to her out of whom He had cast seven devils. Who so suitable first to see Him and hear from Himself the tidings of His resurrection, who through death annuls him who had the power of death, that is, the devil? As to the absolute use of the pronoun in 10, 11, is it not enough that the occasion, here required what was needless elsewhere? — If πορευ. is found only in 10, 12, and 15, it is because the simple word best expressed what the Holy Ghost designed to say, whereas elsewhere the evangelist employed its compounds in order to convey the more graphically what was there wanted. Thus, he uses εἰσπορ. eight times, while Matthew, in his much larger account, has it but once. Is this the least ground for questioning Matt. 15:17? So, again, Mark has παραπορ. in four different chapters, Matthew once only (27:39), Luke and John not at all. — Leaving these trivial points, the phrase τοῖς μετ' αὐτοῦ is to me an argument for rather than against Mark's authorship. Compare with it chap. 1:36; 3:14; and 5:40. As to ἐθεάθη ὑπ' αὐτῆς and its difference from τοῖς θ. αὐτόν, the answer is, that the word is most appropriate here and uncalled for in other places, and if the difference prove anything it would show two hands instead of one supplementing Mark's narrative! Thus, for instance, the same verb occurs but once in all the epistles of Paul: are we, therefore, to suspect Rom. 15? Matthew has θεωρέω only twice; are we for a score of such reasons as these to speculate that "another hand" added Matt. 27 and 28?

As reiterated mention of unbelief, and the Lord's upbraiding the eleven with it, what more instructive, or in better keeping with the scope of the context and of the Gospel? It was wholesome for those who were about to preach to others to learn what their own hearts were, and the Lord in His own ministry sets them right before announcing their great commission. Even if we only look at the word ἀπιστία, it occurs in Mark 6:6; 9:24. If the verb is found only in ch. 16:11,16, what more marvelous than Luke's having it only in his last chapter (ver. 11, 41), and never once using the substantive either in the Gospel or in the Acts of the Apostles? — It is true that μετὰ τ. and ὑστερον are found in no other passage of Mark, but his customary precision may be one reason why the former is not more common; and the latter occurs once only in Luke and John. — It is confessed that τὸ εὐαγ. π. τῇ κτίσει is in Mark's style. The fact is, neither of the later Gospels contains the noun εὐαγ. and Matthew always qualifies it as "the gospel of the kingdom," or "this gospel;" whereas, whether or not Mark has the qualified phrases in 1:14 and 14:9 (for MSS. etc. differ), he repeatedly has "the Gospel" elsewhere, as chap. 1:15; 8:35; 10:29; 13:10. This, then, affords no slight presumption that the passage is the genuine production of Mark, as well as authentic.

Παρακολ. in 17, and ἐπακολ. in 20, occur nowhere else in Mark, and that for the best of reasons; the accuracy which the compounded forms impart was demanded here, and not before, where the simple form sufficed. And this is the less surprising, inasmuch as the former appears only in Luke's preface, the latter nowhere else as far as the four evangelists are concerned.

As to the singularity of καλῶς ἐξουσιν, what simpler, seeing that this promise (as well as that about the new tongues, serpents, etc.) is revealed here only, and was unquestionably verified in the subsequent history? It is the natural converse of a common Scriptural designation for the sick, οἱ κακῶς ἐχοντες, and if the occurrence of δῆρρωστος should be here objected to, the reader may find it twice already in Mark 6, while Matthew and Paul use it each only once.

Only one further objection remains worth noticing, the use of κύριος in 19, 20. In Mark 11:3, I suppose it is equivalent to Jehovah, and at any rate I would not press this as in point. But the absence of such a title before seems to me a beauty, not a blemish, in Mark, whose business was to exhibit the service of Jesus. But now that God had vindicated His rejected Servant by the resurrection, now that He had made Him both

"Lord" and Christ, what more natural, or even necessary, than that the same Gospel which had hitherto traced Him as the Servant, Son of God, should make Him now known as "the Lord"? But this is not all. The Lord had uttered His charge to those who were, at His bidding, to replace Him as servants, and in a world-wide sphere; He was received up to heaven, and sat on the right hand of God. Now it was Mark's place, and only Mark's, to add that, while they went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord was working with them. Jesus, even as the Lord, is, if I may so say, servant still. Glorious truth! And whose hand so suited to record it as his who proved by sad experience how hard it is to be a faithful servant; but who proved also that the grace of the Lord is sufficient to restore and strengthen the feeblest? (Compare Acts 13:13; 15:38; Col. 4:10; 2 Tim. 4:11.) (Bible Witness & Review 1:264-268, and Christian Annotator 2:146,147, Bible Treasury 16:335-336)

[whole passage]: I am aware that men have tampered with the closing verses (9-20) of chap. 16, as they have sullied with their unholy doubts the beginning of John 8. In speaking of John, it will be my happy task to defend that passage from the rude insults of men. Assured they are wrong, I care not who they may be nor what their excuses. God has given the amplest array of external vouchers; but there are reasons far weightier, internal grounds of conviction, which will be appreciated just in proportion to a person's understanding of God and His word. Impossible for man to coin a single thought, or even a word fit to pass. So it is in this scene.

I also admit that there are certain differences between this portion and the previous part of chap. 16. But, in my judgment, the Spirit purposely put them in a different light. Here, you will observe, it is a question of forming the servants according to that rising from the dead for which He had prepared them. Had the Gospel terminated without this, we must have had a real gap, which ought to have been felt. The Lord had Himself, before His resurrection, indicated its important bearing. When the fact occurred, had there been no use made of it with the servants and for the service of Christ, there had been, indeed, a grievous lack, and this wonderful Gospel of His ministry would have left off with as impotent a conclusion as we could possibly imagine. Chapter 16 would have closed with the silence of the women and its source, "for they were afraid." What conclusion less worthy of the Son of God! What must have been the impression left, if the doubts of some learned men had the slightest substance in them? Can any one, who knows the character of the Lord and of His ministry, conceive for an instant that we should be left with nothing but a message baulked through the alarm of women? Of course, I assume what is indeed the fact, that the outward evidence is enormously preponderant for the concluding verses. But, internally also, it seems to me impossible for one who compares the earlier close with the Gospel's aim and character throughout, to accept such an ending after weighing that which is afforded by the verses from 9 to 20. Certainly these seem to me to furnish a most fitting conclusion to that which otherwise would be a picture of total and hopeless weakness in testimony. Again, the very freedom of the style, the use of words not elsewhere used, or so used by Mark, and the difficulties of some of the circumstances narrated, tell to my mind in favour of its genuineness; for a forger would have adhered to the letter, if he could not so easily catch the spirit of Mark.

... there remains a striking part of the conclusion, which I venture to think none but Mark could have written. No doubt the Holy Ghost was the true author of all that Mark wrote ... Would a forger have kept up the bold thought of "the Lord working with them," while every other word intimates that He was then at least quiescent?

... To allow that verses 9 to the end are authentic Scripture, but not Mark's own writing, seems to me the lamest supposition possible. ... I am not aware that in all the second Gospel there is a section more characteristic of this Evangelist than the very one that man's temerity has not feared to seize upon, endeavouring to root it from the soil where God planted it. These words are not of man. Every plant that the heavenly Father has not planted shall be rooted up. This shall never be rooted up, but abides for ever, let human learning, great or small, say what it will. (Lect. Intro. to the Gospels, p. 233-240)

[whole passage]: I utterly reject the criticism which makes the gospel of Mark end with verse 8, because the Vatican and Sinai MSS. agree with some other slight confirmation, more particularly as there appears to be a space left at the end of the Vatican MS. The motive of the scribes for stopping there may be a question; but there is no sufficient reason to conclude that the gospel really terminated so abruptly. Nor does the difference of style, or rather the employment here of words and expressions not used elsewhere in the gospel, justify the inference that it was not written by Mark. Possibly it may have been added later by the same hand; for certainly the last verse indicates a date considerably later than that which is usually assigned to the publication of this gospel. Language can be easily imitated in so short a fragment; whereas writers would freely describe new facts with new expressions, while underneath the surface lie, in my opinion, the most indelible traces of connection with the character and aim stamped on this evangelist by the Holy Spirit. Would this organic link have been kept up, had apostolic men, during apostolic times, added the general compendium of events of the resurrection with which the present gospel concludes? (Bible Treasury 7:255-256)

[whole passage]: ... As regards the passages at the close of Mark 16 (9 et seq.), ... I agree ... that Professor Tischendorf had no sufficient grounds for bracketing them as suspicious. But he states his reasons, such as they are, and this intelligibly enough, in the foot-notes. ... even Griesbach indicated a probable omission ... I mention this, not as approving of such rashness, but to show that Tischendorf is not alone in conceiving that he had authority for his course. (Christian Annotator 1:181, see also Bible Treasury N7:158 and 15:38)

[whole passage]: The Revisers put, most undeservedly, a certain stigma on chapter 16:9-20, because κ B omit these verses, L, with a break, adding a miserable compendium (see Nestle's "Greek Text" [British and Foreign Bible Society], and Bagster's "Worker's New Testament," p. 108), and many cursives giving them with more or less doubt. No good version of antiquity omits. But a few Fathers, on harmonistic grounds, talk of the accurate copies ending with $\epsilon\phi\omicron\beta\omicron\upsilon\nu\tau\omicron\gamma\acute{\alpha}\rho$. The positive external proofs and the internal prove not only that it is inspired Scripture, but from none other than Mark himself. (Bible Treasury 13:302) (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.228)

[whole passage]: [Verses 9-20] appear in AC and fifteen other uncials, all cursives, and versions except Syr^{sin}. D has as far as v. 15, whilst Syr^{cm} shows vv. 17-20. Hippolytus quotes verse 19, Irenæus verse 20. ... Since the appearance of the Revised Version, it has been discovered that they are included in Tatian's "Diatessaron," of the early part of the second century. ... W. Kelly to the end of his life shared Burgon's conviction as to the inordinate respect in which the most ancient copies have in general been held, whilst feeling, perhaps yet more strongly than the late Dean of Chichester, that the text was really tampered with here, as was always the lecturer's belief with regard to another dozen verses in the fourth Gospel (7:53 - 8:11). (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.276)

[whole passage]: ... the dishonour done to the entire closing section of St. Mark [by Mr. Thomas Sheldon Green, A Course of developed Criticism on passages of the New Testament, materially affected by various readings. London: Samuel Bagster & Sons.]. Lachmann, presumptuous as he was, did not dare even to bracket a concluding scene worthy of and inseparable from the gospel to which it belongs. Alas! Mr. Green is not afraid to sum up his judgment in these words: — "Thus does the hypothesis of very early interpolation satisfy the body of facts in evidence" (p. 53). Nor is Mr. G. alone. Not to speak of foreigners, Mr. Alford and Dr. Tregelles will have it that the veritable Mark ends with ἐφοβούντο γάρ, the rest being authentic, but not Mark's. Now we agree with Mr. G.'s admission, that "it cannot be imagined that the evangelist formally brought his narrative to a close at the end of the eighth verse," save only remarking that this is just what Mr. A. and Dr. Tregelles seem to have imagined. But what does Mr. G. imagine? As bad, we fear. Does Mr. G. conceive that the inspired conclusion of St. Mark is lost? or that the surviving sections were inspired and so preserved, and the close of the same evangelist not inspired and so lost? Does Mr. G. fancy that Mark never finished his brief gospel, but left a most important part to be added by another and unknown hand? To what a land of shadows and morass these gentlemen invite us, with the vain inducement of new light! Their inconsistency, too, is as egregious as their doctrine is deplorable. Thus, Mr. Alford admits that the authority of Mark 16:9-20, is hardly to be doubted, and withal maintains that it is irreconcilable with the other gospels, as well as disconnected with what goes before. Singular marks, they would seem to us, of authentic scripture! But they are no difficulty to the Dean of C., who holds that the occurrence of demonstrable mistakes in the gospels (as in the Acts of the Apostles) "does not in any way affect the inspiration or the veracity of the evangelists." Assuredly, that cannot be inspired of God wherein Mr. A. can point out demonstrable error.

But we must have done with this shameless Anglo-Germanism, and have only to add that the external evidence is decidedly in favour of this disputed passage. Is the omission of B and of some copies of the Armenian and Arabic versions with a single Latin MS. — is the silence of the Eusebian and Ammonian sections, with the marks in L, &c., to overthrow the vast mass of positive testimony? It seems probable that much of this, if not all, may be accounted for by the difficulty found in harmonizing the passage with others; and so the knot was cut, instead of leaving it as it was for the Lord to untie by more patient hands. As to the alleged internal difficulties, we have examined them with care, and believe that the characteristics of the passage confirm and require its reception. (Bible Treasury 1:296)

16:16-17 [whole passage]: [If ὁ πιστεύσας καὶ βαπτισθεὶς σωθήσεται means "He who believeth and is baptised shall be saved," that is, as all commentators say, "He who shall believe and shall be baptised shall be saved," must not σημεῖα τοῖς πιστεύουσι ταῦτα παρακολουθήσει "these signs shall follow them that believe," mean "these signs shall follow them that shall believe," πιστεύσας, βαπτισθεὶς and πιστεύουσι being the same tense participle? Would not this justify the Mormonite in his false statement that all believers can work miracles? Must there not then be something wrong in translating ὁ πιστεύσας, βαπτισθεὶς, and τοῖς πιστεύουσι, "who believeth," "is baptised," and "them that believe?" H.S.] (Christian Annotator 2:227)

I am not aware to what commentators H.S. alludes, but I hope he is mistaken in thinking that all give a future sense to the aorist participle. It is difficult to convey the force of the Greek better than is done in the authorised version without a paraphrase, though I admit the English wants the precision of the original, and hence is open, perhaps, to such a misconception as is here alleged. But I do not see how the meaning of these participles, however fully given, excludes Mormon pretensions, nor how the supposed misconstruction supports their delusion. Whether those signs follow believers or not is a question of fact which ought not to be long debated if they be real. I deny that one word is here said about their permanence. (Christian Annotator 2:286)

16:10-16 [whole passage]: [See note to 16:9]

16:17 New: so Edd., after AC^{corr}D, etc., Syr^{psch}. It is omitted in C^mLD, etc. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.226) [See note to 16:9]

16:18-19 [See note to 16:9]

16:20 "Amen" has the support of C^m, etc., and some vv., but is rejected by Edd., following AC^{corr}, 1,33, Syrr. Arm. (EEW's notes, Exp. of Mark, p.226) [See notes to Mark 16:9 and Mat. 28:20]

Notes for Luke

1:3 method: [Does the term καθεξής in Luke 1 imply historic sequence as is the groundwork of several harmonies of the gospels? T.]

A. The term is used only but frequently by Luke. It signifies properly, in a regular series, one after another, and hence sometimes simply following, or next, in order. Liddell and Scott say that the more usual word is ἐφεξής; and on this word they remark that it is less usually employed of time than of regular order of arrangement. On the whole, I see no sign whatever that Luke uses it for chronological order; nor has the word in itself this meaning, save as chronological order is one sort of order. The passages in Luke, beside the one in question are chapter 8:1; Acts 3:24; 11:4; 18:23. He too alone uses ἐφής, chapter 7:11; 9:37; Acts 21:1; 25:17; 18:18. (Bible Treasury 7:271)

1:15 [the] Lord: In this Gospel the authorities show considerable variation with regard to use of the definite article before "LORD." Here it is contained in BDA, etc., but not in ACLF 33. Κύριος without the article stands regularly for Jehovah (Yahveh) of the Old Testament, as in the LXX. So in verse 16. Cf. again in verse 28. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.23)

1:17 to: . . . the first change of version to be weighed [in the RV]: ἐν φ. δ. can hardly bear "to" the wisdom of the just, as in the Authorised Version. The Revisers are obliged to intercalate "to walk" in the wisdom, &c., in order to give the force. Some suggest "by" or "according to;" but the sense fails in this connection, if the preposition could bear it. (Bible Treasury 13:302)

1:28 angel . . . Blessed art thou amongst women: there are two changes of text [in the RV] — the exclusion of "the angel," though supported by much and good authority, and of "blessed art thou among women," which incontestably appears in verse 42 (Bible Treasury 13:302)

Blessed art thou amongst women: So Treg. (text) after ACD and most later uncials, with cursives (33,69), Syrr^{pesch hcl}. Old Latin, Gothic, Aeth. The words (as anticipating those in verse 42) are omitted here by Edd. in general with BL, Memph. Arm. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.25)

Blessed art thou amongst women: "Hail, favoured one!" said Gabriel to Mary; who in her turn said to her cousin Elizabeth, "Blessed art thou among women." So the R.V. admits in accordance with the best authority. The Vulgate leaned to the heaping of honour on Mary; and many followed it. (Bible Treasury N3:31)

1:29 [seeing] [the angel]: "when she saw him" was probably suggested by verse 12. (Bible Treasury 13:302)

1:35 shall be born [of thee]: [The American correction to the RV] recurs substantially to the Authorised Version, save "is begotten" for "shall be born"; "of thee" being generally given up here. The Revised Version is awkward and improbable. (Bible Treasury 14:335)

[of thee]: "Of thee", after "born" is supported only by C and a few minuscules. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.26)

[of thee]: I bracket these words, not because they do not affirm a precious and essential truth (expressly taught in Matt. 1:16), but because the testimony of the best MSS. (Alex. Vat. Sinait. Bezae Cant. and in fact all of the first class, save the Rescript of Paris) excludes their title to a place in this text. (Bible Treasury 20:160)

1:35 [of thee]: . . . the rendering of the last clause of verse 35 [in the RV] is strange and objectionable, that of the margin (which is in the main the Authorised Version), or the American suggestion, being better. (Bible Treasury 13:302)

1:37 with God: In verse 37 [of the RV] is a bold change of reading (τοῦ θ. for τῷ θ.) which necessitates the rendering "no word from God shall be void of power." (Bible Treasury 13:302)

1:50 generations and generations: so Edd. after BC^{pm}LZ Amiat. Syrr^{pesch} Memph. with nine other uncials has "generations and generations." Syrr^{sin} pesch: "generation and tribe." — AC^{corr} D, etc., 33, have "generations of generations." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.28)

1:70 since the world began: "of old" is weak. (Bible Treasury 14:335)

1:74 our: so ACD, etc., Amiat. Syrr. Memph.; but Edd. omit, after BL 1, 69, etc. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.29)

1:75 all our days: so Edd. after ABCDL, etc., Old Lat. Vulg. Syrr. (exc. sin) Memph. — E and some other copies, with cursives 1, 69 Syrr^{sin} have "all the days of our life." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.29)

1:78 has visited: so T.R., retained by Tisch., Treg. (text) and Blass, after AC and some cursives with Old Lat. — Other Edd. (W.H., followed by Revv., Weiss) adopt "will visit," as BL, Syrr. Arm. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.30)

2:2 the census itself (αὐτή): so ACLΔ and later uncials, with most cursives. — Edd.: "This (αὐτή) was the first census," after BD. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.32)

the census itself: [The RV gives] "This was the first enrolment when Quirinius," &c. It would seem really to be a parenthetic statement to guard from confusion. (Bible Treasury 13:302)

2:5 wife: so AΔ and later uncials, nearly all cursives (including 33, 69) and Amiat. — Edd. omit, after BC^{pm}DL, etc. Syrr^{sin} simply "wife" (Mrs. Lewis in Expositor: "under full legal protection of Joseph"). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.32)

2:7 the: so Δ and later uncials. Edd. omit, after ABDLZ. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.33)

2:9 lo: so AD and the later uncials, all cursives, Old Lat. Vulg. Memph. Syrr.; but omitted by Edd., following BLZ. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.33)

2:10 (which shall be) to all the people: The true way of understanding this clause is " (which shall be) to all the people," meaning the people of Israel. (Exp. of Luke, p.34) the people: not to all people, but "to all the people." This passage does not go beyond Israel. Manifestly this is entirely confirmed by the context . . . (Lect. Intro. to the Gospels, p. 250)

the people: Of course they (the RV) have in verse 10 "all the people," that is, the Jews. (Bible Treasury 13:302)

2:12 and lying in a manger: so most Edd., after BLZ, 1, 33. Tisch.. with BD, omits "and lying." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.34)

2:14 good pleasure in men: so AC^{corr}LA and all later uncials, cursives. Syrr^{pesch hcl} (sin: "good will to"), Copt. Arm. Aeth., with Basil, Gregory, Naz., etc.; but Revv. with Edd. adopt "peace to men of good pleasure" after AC^{pm}B^{pm}AD, Old Lat. Vulg. Goth., with Iren. Origen (Jer.), Hill, etc. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.35) good pleasure in men: . . . in Luke 2:14 very ancient copies read "in men of good will," a class hard to find in this world; and a strange gospel that peace on earth is for men of good will, glad tidings for such as He has nothing to find fault with. Where are these to be found? Surely this is a prodigious reading, hanging on one added letter, and accepted, not by Rome only, but by Alford, Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles, Westcott and Hort, and others. (Exposition of the Epistles of John the Apostle, p. 171) good pleasure in men: It is not exactly good will toward men, which is here the point. The word expresses God's good will and complacency in men; it does not say exactly in man, as if it were only in Christ, though surely this was true in the very highest sense. (Lect. Intro. to the Gospels, p. 250) good pleasure in men: Verse 14 [in the RV] follows the later editors, or their few but first-rate authorities, ἐν ἀνθρώποις ἐνδοκίας "among men in whom he is well pleased." But Luke was given to magnify the grace of God, not to seal human righteousness. There is good and ample authority for the common text, only rendered "good-will in men," which incarnation proved. (Bible Treasury 13:302)

2:17 made known about the country: Edd. read simply "made known," after \aleph BDL \bar{Z} , etc. AE, etc., have "made known about the country (διεγνώρισαν)." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.36)

2:21 him: so Edd. with \aleph ABL, etc., about 100 cursives (as 1), Old Lat. Amiat. Goth. Memph. "The child" is found in DE, etc., Syrr. Aeth. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.37)

2:22 their: so Edd. after \aleph ABL and later uncials, most cursives, Syrr (except sin.) and versions in general, with Orig. "Her" (Lev. 12:4) of T.R., with Syr^{sin}, has scarcely any MS. support. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.37)

2:31,32 all peoples . . . [the] Gentiles . . . people Israel: [Q: And to which [Old Testament words] would the different Greek words in Luke 2:31,32 correspond? A.B.]

A. We have three times in Luke 2 before the face of all peoples. Were the λαοι expressed in Hebrew, it would be לְעַמִּים a general word (not I think here לְעַמִּים אֲנִי) but viewed as brought into relationship with God. Then the nations ἔθνη, (עַמִּים גִּוִּים) were viewed as wholly invisible, unseen and ignored. The light of Christ was to reveal them, bring them out into visible existence, so that they became לְעַמִּים so to speak. Then "people Israel" is plain enough. (Bible Treasury 8:207)

all peoples . . . [the] Gentiles . . . people Israel: "All the peoples" is better than "all peoples," and "revelation of Gentiles" is the true meaning, not "to all the Gentiles." (Bible Treasury 13:302)

2:32 [the] Gentiles . . . people Israel: [see note to 2:31]

2:33 his father: so Edd., with \aleph BDL Syr^{sin} Amiat. Memph. Aeth. Arm. "Joseph" is in AE, etc., 33, 69, the other Syrr. most Old Lat. Goth. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.41)

2:34 \wedge rising: 2:34, as there is an article in the Greek, cannot claim it in idiomatic English for one more than the other. (Bible Treasury 14:335)

2:37 up to: so Edd., following \aleph ABL \bar{Z} , 33, Amiat. Memph. "About" has the support of later uncials (EX Δ , etc.), as of most cursives, and Syrr(sin.: simply 84). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.42)

"for" or "unto" is a slender question. (Bible Treasury 14:335)

2:38 the Lord: so A and later uncials, with most cursives, nearly all Old Lat. Amiat. Syrr. Aeth. Arm. Edd. adopt "God," from \aleph BDL, etc., Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.42) in: so AD, etc.; but Edd. omit, after \aleph B \bar{Z} , 1, Syr^{sin} ("of"). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.42) in: The Revisers [of 1881] prefer, in verse 38, "redemption of Jerusalem" to "redemption in it," though the witnesses are very few. (Bible Treasury 13:302)

2:40 [in spirit]: so A and later uncials, most cursives (1, 33, 69) and Syrr. Aeth. Edd. omit, as \aleph BDL Syr^{sin}, most Old Lat., Amiat., etc. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.44)

2:42 to Jerusalem: in AC and later uncials, most cursives, Old Lat., Amiat. Goth. Arm. Aeth. Edd. omit, after \aleph BDL, Syrr. Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.44) to Jerusalem: "To Jerusalem" in verse 42 is probably a repetition from the verse preceding. (Bible Treasury 13:302)

2:43 his parents: Edd. adopt "His parents," following \aleph BDL, 1, 33, Syr^{sin}, Memph., etc. AC and later uncials, most cursives and Old Lat., the other Syrr. and Goth. have "Joseph and His mother." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.45)

2:45 seeking Him: so \aleph A, later uncials, and the cursives. Edd. adopt "seeking Him diligently," after BCDL. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.45)

2:51 these sayings: So Weiss, with \aleph corr ACL, etc., Syr^{corr}, but Revv., as W.H., follow \aleph mm: "the." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.47)

3:2 in the high priesthood of Annas and Caiaphas: so Edd. after \aleph ABCDEFGHIKL, etc., and most cursives. The plural "A. and C. being high priests" is confined to minuscules. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.49)

in the high priesthood of Annas and Caiaphas: the true text being singular, not plural. (Bible Treasury 13:302)

3:9 is applied: [See note to Mat. 3:10]

3:11 says: the reading of AD., etc., whilst \aleph BC^{mm} LX, 1, 33, 69, have "said," which Edd. (Revv.) adopt. Blass, however, retains λέγει. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.52)

3:14 Oppress no one, nor accuse falsely: 3:14 seems as little happy in the American [correctors of the RV] suggestion as in the Revised Version. "Harrass none, nor accuse falsely" leaves the sense less restrained than either. (Bible Treasury 14:335)

3:17 and he will thoroughly purge: so ACDL, all later uncials, every cursive, and Amiat. — Edd. adopt "thoroughly to purge," after \aleph mm B, Memph. Arm. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.55)

will gather: so ACDL, later uncials, cursives, etc.; but Edd. "to gather," with AB, Old Lat., Arm. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.55)

3:19 his brother: so Edd., after \aleph BDEL \bar{Z} and Old Lat. — ACK and later uncials, with 33, Syrr. Memph. add "Philip." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.55)

3:20 to: the question of "to" or "above" is not much. (Bible Treasury 14:335)

3:23 (being, as was supposed, the son of Joseph): [what explains the apparent discrepancy between Matt. 1:16 and Luke 3:23? O.P.]

A. The solution of the difficulty turns on the true marking of the parenthesis in Luke 3:23 "(being, as was supposed, son of Joseph)". The Revisers are no more right than was the A.V. in limiting it to "(as was supposed)." Christ's being considered son of Joseph is thus intimated to be outside the proper genealogical line which is here traced from Heli or Eli, Mary's father, up to Adam and God Himself. Jesus, reputedly son of Joseph, was really of Heli, &c. Even the unbelieving Jews did not question that Mary, the virgin mother of our Lord, was Heli's daughter; for the Talmud speaks of her thus, and as tormented in the unseen world. The fact is that there is a choice of ways which all remove the apparent discrepancy. On these we need not dwell here, but simply state the one which we believe to be the truth.

The internal evidence entirely sustains this view as intended of God. For as υἱός was expressed in the parenthetical clause as the reputed relationship, so by a purposely different construction the real natural succession through Mary is traced from her father up to the father of all

(τοῦ Ἠλὶ, τοῦ Ματθαῖ, κ. τ. λ.), a grand fact characteristic of our Evangelist. In Matthew, on the other hand, where it was essential to trace the Messianic title of our Lord legally, we have "Jacob begot Joseph the husband of Mary." Again both Evangelists are equally careful to repudiate the actual fatherhood of Joseph, and to affirm the divine generation of our Saviour, as well as His eternal being in the Godhead before the Incarnation. (Bible Treasury N1:351-352)

(being, as was supposed, the son of Joseph): It is surprising that few as yet see that the true parenthesis, marked or not, in verse 23 is not merely "as was supposed" but "being the son as was supposed of Joseph," so as to connect the genealogy that follows directly with the Lord through Mary. . . . But the proof is enfeebled by not seeing the connection in Luke 3:23, and this in the Revised Version as much as in that of 1611, the only expressed υἱός being in the parenthesis, and the proper genealogical line uniformly elliptic, as is often the case in such statements. (Bible Treasury 13:302) [see also Bible Treasury 14:335]

(being, as was supposed, the son of Joseph): it seems strange that both the English Committee [of Revisers of 1881] and the Americans have failed to observe that the true arrangement in 23 is to treat not as Wieseler ὥς ἐν. τ. 'Ι., but the two preceding words ὡν ὥσος. also, as parenthetical and not part of the genealogy but a collateral remark before it begins. In the proper genealogical line "son" is not expressed; here it is, with the qualification in the strictest accordance with truth. The Lord was legally Joseph's son, and only so; He was really of Mary, whom even the Talmud attests as daughter of Heli. . . . this text, rightly divided and understood, helps to clear the truth in an important way. (Bible Treasury 14:335-336)

4:1 by: 4:1 is not "in" simply, but "by" from connexion with "led." (Bible Treasury 14:336)

4:2 ^Λ hungered: Before "hungered," AE, etc., 1, 33, 69, Syrr., etc., put "afterwards," which Edd. omit, with ABDL and Old Lat. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.61)

4:4 but by every word of God: so AD, etc., and all later uncials with cursives, Goth., most Syrr. Rejected by Edd. following ABL, Syr^{sin}, Amiat., Sahid., Memph. (from Matthew). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.61)

4:5 [the devil]: so AE, etc., Amiat., Syrr. (sin.: "Satan"); but omitted by Edd., after ABDL, 1. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.62)

into a high mountain: as AD and later uncials, all cursives, Syrr. Goth.; but Edd. omit, following ABL, Amiat., etc. (from Matthew). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.62)

4:7 all: so Edd. after ABDLΔΞ, most cursives (1, 33, 69), Syrr. Memph. "All things" is found in only a few minuscules, and in Amiat. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.62)

4:8 get thee behind me, Satan: for: [This] disappears in the best authorities. The change of order necessitates the omission. The copyists as often added to Luke what is really the language of Matthew; and even some critics have been so undiscerning as not to detect the imposition. As it stands in the received Greek text and the English version, Satan is told to go, and seems to stand his ground and again tempt the Lord, stultifying His command. But the clause I have named (and not merely the word "for," as Bloomfield imagines) is well known to have no claim to stand, as being destitute of adequate authority. There are good manuscripts that contain the clause, but the weight, for antiquity and character of MSS., and for variety of the old versions, is on the other side, not to speak of the internal evidence, which would be decisive with much inferior external evidence. (Lect. Intro. to the Gospels, p. 265, see also Exp. of Mark, p. 136.)

get thee behind me, Satan; for: The best authenticated text leaves out of the Lord's answer to the devil "Get thee behind me, Satan; for." And a little reflection shows that, as the external authority demands this omission, so it seems necessarily to follow from the change of order in which Luke was, I doubt not, guided of God. For the vulgarly received text would give the strange appearance that the Lord told the adversary to get behind or go away, while Satan is represented as staying where he was and tempting the Lord after a new sort. Omit these words, and all flows on in exact connection with the context. Internal evidence is thus in harmony with the external. . . . "Get thee behind me, Satan," in T.R. after "him" is supported only by A with later uncials, most cursives. Edd. follow ABDLΞ, 1, 33, etc.; and the same authorities with Amiat. omit "for." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p. 62)

Get thee behind me, Satan: for: . . . the common text and all versions founded on it have ὑπάγε ὀπίσω μου, Σατανᾶ, taken from Matthew 16:23, and confounded with Matthew 4:10, where it is rightly ὑπάγε, Σ. Here however these were left out in the wisdom of the Spirit, who inspired Luke to place second what was in fact the third temptation. This made the omission necessary; as otherwise we should have had in Luke the Lord bidding the enemy depart, and instead of it the enemy making another assault immediately after. Perhaps not one of the critical editors saw the impossibility of the words of Matthew re-appearing in Luke, though they rightly left them out on grounds purely diplomatic. (Bible Treasury 13:302-303)

4:18 [to heal the brokenhearted]: Before "to preach deliverance," A, with all later uncials and most cursives, Goth. Syrr^{pesch hcl hier} has the words bracketed, which Edd. reject, after ABDLΞ, 33, 69, Syr^{sin} Old Lat. and Amiat., Origen, etc. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.65)

4:23 in: T.R. for "in" has ἐν, with AE, etc., and most cursives. Edd. adopt εἰς, which may be "to" or "for" (R.V. "at"), but is probably a colloquial substitute for ἐν, as in verse 44. The critical text is that of ABDL, 69. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.66)

4:26 of Sidonia: so ABCDL, etc., 1, 69, Old Lat., Memph. "Sidon" appears in EA, etc., Syrr. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.67)

4:29 so that they might: as Edd. after ABDL, etc., 1, 33, 69. Memph., in place of "in order to," the reading of AC, etc. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.67)

4:41 the Son: so Edd., after ABCDLΞ, 33, Old Lat., Amiat., Memph., Arm. A and later uncials, as most cursives, Syrr. Aeth. Goth. add "the Christ" before "the Son." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.70)

4:42 sought after: so Edd., following ABCD, etc., 1, 33, 69. EG and some later uncials have simply "sought." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.71)

4:43 I have been [I was]: so ABCDLX, 1, 33, 69. AE and some later uncials have "I am." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.71)

4:44 Galilee: (cf. Mark 1:39) so Blass, with ADXTAPI, etc., Old Lat., Goth., Syrr^{pesch hcl}. Other Edd. adopt "Judæa," after ABCLQR, a few cursives, Syr^{sin}, Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.71)

5:2 two ships: so ABD and nearly all later uncials, with most cursives and Old Latin. Tisch, "little ships," after ACL, 33, and some other cursives. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.74)

5:6 net: so ACXTAPI, etc., most Syrr. — Edd., "Nets (were)", as ABDL, etc., Syr^{sin}. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.75)

5:7 companions: The Revisers [of 1881] in chapter 5 do not distinguish more than the Authorised Version μέτοχοι, verse 7, and κοινωνοί, verse

10, though the latter is the more formal “partners,” the former rather “companions.” (Bible Treasury 13:303)

5:10 partners: [see note to Lk. 5:7]

5:17 them: so Blass, with ACDXΓΔΑΠ, Syrr., Old Lat., etc. Others (as Revv.) “with Him to heal,” according to \aleph BL Ξ , Aeth., and Cyril. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.79)

5:33 Why . . . drink?: “Why” (Διὰ τί) is in \aleph^m CD, etc., Old Lat., Syrr., etc., but Edd. omit, as \aleph^{com} BL Ξ . (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.84)

5:34 he: so A, etc. Edd., “Jesus” after \aleph BCDL Ξ , 33. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.84)

5:36 No one putteth a piece, etc.: so AC, later uncials, most cursives, Old Lat., and some other versions. Edd. adopt “No one cutteth a piece out of a new garment and putteth it upon an old one; else he will both rend the new and the piece,” etc., after \aleph BDL Ξ , 1, 33, Syrr. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.85) will . . . rend: “Will rend,” so Edd. with \aleph BCDLX, 33. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.85)

will . . . rend: T.R. “rends” is found in AE, etc., Amiat., Syrr., Memph. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.85)

will not match: so Edd. after \aleph ABCDL, 33, etc. “Doth not match” is in E, etc., Amiat., Syrr., Memph. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.85)

5:38 and both are preserved: so ACD and later uncials, most cursives (69), Old Latin, Syrr., etc. Edd. omit, following \aleph BL, 1, 33, Memph. (from Matthew). (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.85)

5:39 [straightway]: so AC^{cor}E, etc., most cursives (33, 69), Syrr. Edd. omit, after \aleph BC^mL, 1, Aeth., Arm., Memph. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.86)

better: so ADA, etc. Edd. adopt “good,” following \aleph BL, Syrr^{pesch}, Memph. The verse is left out by D and some Western copies of Old Latin. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.87)

6:1 second-first: . . . the omission of the “second first” (or “second after the first”) in chapter 6:1, though not given by some of the most ancient copies, is due to the difficulty of the phrase. The Dean thinks it has never been satisfactorily explained. It really means the first sabbath after the first sheaf was waved before the Lord; not the first sabbath of the paschal week, which was a high day, and followed by the day of waving the first-fruits. The next sabbath was this “second-first,” the earliest sabbath when a pious Israelite would venture to eat from a cornfield. (Bible Treasury 7:285) second-first: Some have had recourse to a very harsh way of getting out of the difficulty, and that is cutting out the word (for in Greek it is only a single word) δευτεροπρώτῳ: a very dangerous principle where the Bible is concerned. One celebrated critic thus guilty repented, virtually confessing the fault by replacing it. But it is no bad moral lesson for us to have to say, “I do not know.” This at least is true and lowly; and if one looks up for light, it is well, for then God can give what is lacking. . . . The first sabbath of the paschal feast was emphatically said to be a high or great day (John 19:31). And no wonder when we take in what God foresaw. But so it was in Jewish estimate. Alas for man! It was the very day in which Christ lay in the grave, the only day, sabbath as it was, marked by that awful crime throughout its entire evening and morning. There was only a part of the other two days, out of the three, which was reckoned day and night. On that first sabbath, immediately before the wave-sheaf, as it was, no Jew would have partaken of the corn. The day after it was the first day of the week, when the wave-sheaf was offered. The following sabbath was “the second-first” immediately after the wave-sheaf. The one was the first, the next the second-first, because associated with it.

But why do I mention all this? Just to show how precious is scripture to explain scripture. Nothing else, as a general rule, can; but we need the Holy Spirit to give us it aright. The word “second-first” occurs nowhere but in this verse of Luke. (Bible Treasury 16:67-68) second-first: Now the witnesses which omit the word are few, though high, and the difficulty of understanding a word nowhere else occur, and in itself hard to explain without an exact knowledge of Jewish scripture and usage, accounts readily for the tampering hand of copyists prone to cut knots instead of untying them. . . . Nobody would or could create a needless difficulty by inserting this [word in sixteen uncial MSS.]; but we can easily account for a few omitting what was hard in their eyes, as it is to most readers still. (Bible Treasury N8:215) second-first: In this chapter we are told, “It came to pass” that not on the second Sabbath after the first, but “on the second-first Sabbath” — a very peculiar phrase, which has perplexed the commentators and critics immensely. It is found in no place or author but here. The only thing which really explains it seems to be a reference to Jewish customs and their feasts. (Exp. of Luke, p.88)

second-first: . . . The word δευτεροπρώτῳ (or δευτέρῳ πρώτῳ, as in some copies) is, in my judgment, part of the inspired text, as exhibited in the vast majority of manuscripts, uncial and cursive [ACDEHKM(R)SUVX(L)ΔΑΠ, almost all cursives], as well as the Amiatine of Vulg. and other Latin copies, the Gothic, the later Syriac [^m], etc., not to speak of ample citation and comment in Greek and Latin fathers. The Sinai and Vatican, with L of Paris, omit the word, as do seven cursives [including 1,33,69] and several versions [Syrr^{sin} pesch hier, Memph., Aeth.]. For this we may easily account by the difficulty of the phrase and its absence, not only in the corresponding passages of Matthew and Mark, but everywhere else. All attempt to show how so singular a word could have slipped in and have spread, so generally and soon, is a failure; though it may be fair to state that Schultz conjectures that it arose out of insertions, by some of πρώτῳ, by others of δευτέρῳ, which were in the next stage joined together (Bible Treasury). It was retained by Tischendorf in his last (eighth) edition, as it is by Blass. See further in Scrivener, ii., p. 347ff. W.H. App., p. 58f, and note 47. (EEW’s Notes in Exp. of Luke, p.88)

second-first: [The RV omits] save in their margin, the word “second-first.” Now the witnesses (\aleph B L) which omit the word are few, though high; and the difficulty of understanding a word nowhere else occur, and in itself hard to explain without an exact knowledge of Jewish scripture and usage, accounts readily for the tampering hand of copyists prone to cut knots instead of untying them. The sabbath before the wave-sheaf was offered the Jews ever regarded as great (John 19:31); the sabbath after the wave-sheaf was also in high esteem, but not equal to the former. It was δευτεροπρώτον. Nobody would or could create a needless difficulty by inserting this into A C D E H K M R S U V X Γ Δ Α Π; but we can easily account for a few omitting what was hard in their eyes, as it is to most readers still. (Bible Treasury 13:303)

6:2 to them: so AE, etc., 33, 69, Amiat., Syrr. Edd. omit, after \aleph BC^mL, etc., Old Lat., Memph., etc. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.89)

to do: so \aleph ACEL, with later uncials, Syrr., Memph.; but Edd. omit, as BDR, 69, and Amiat. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.89)

6:5 [whole verse]: Codex Bezae Cantab. transposes verse 5 to the end of verse 10. But this licence is small compared with the singular addition which it exhibits in place of that transposed verse 5: — Τῇ αὐτῇ ἡμέρᾳ θαλασάμενος τινὰ ἐργαζόμενον τῷ σαββάτῳ εἶπεν αὐτῷ Ἄνθρωπε, εἰ μὲν οἶδας τί ποιεῖς, μακάριος εἶ, εἰ δὲ μὴ οἶδας, ἐπικατάρατος καὶ παραβιάτης εἶ τοῦ νόμου. “On the same day having beheld one working on the sabbath, he said to him: Man, if thou knowest what thou art doing, thou art happy; but if thou knowest not, thou art cursed and a transgressor of the law." It is surprising that any thoughtful Christian should be rash enough to regard this insertion as authentic; for while the Lord always met the faith of the Gentiles or Samaritans to whom grace gave a deeper perception of His personal glory above law, He does not anticipate, in His dealings in the Gospels, that deliverance of the believer from law which is based on His own death and resurrection as now revealed (Bible Treasury). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.90)

6:9 I will ask: so AD, later uncials, most cursives, Syrr., Arm., Aeth.; but Edd. adopt "I ask," from \aleph BL., Amiat., Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.91)

if it is: so Edd., after \aleph BDL, Syrr., Amiat., Memph. A and many cursives, "what is." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.91)

sabbath: so \aleph BDL; for "sabbaths" (T.R.). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.91)

6:10 him: so Edd., following ABEA, etc., Syrr. "The man" is found in \aleph DL, 1, 33, 69, Amiat., Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.91)

as the other: so AD, etc., 1, 69, Syrr. After "restored" some later uncials with 69 insert "whole," which Edd. reject, after \aleph ABDKL, many cursives (1, 33), Old Lat., Vulg., Syrr. Memph. (from Matthew), whilst \aleph BL and some cursives (33) leave out also "as the other" (so Edd.). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.91)

6:15 Zelotes: . . . answering to the Hebrew word translated "Cananean," as it should be, not meaning either of Canaan or of Cana, but "zealot," one of that well-known fierce party of Jews. (Bible Treasury 20:380) [See note to Acts 1:13]

6:16 was: "became a" is literal, as in Mr. Green's Twofold New Testament. (Bible Treasury 14:336)

6:17 a level place: Quite aware that pious men have argued from "the plain" in Luke 6:17, opposed to the "mountain" in Matt. 5:1, one is constrained from the clear evidence of both to reject such a solution of the difficulty felt as to the identity of the discourse at the same place and time. For Luke's language does not mean "a plain," but rather a level place or plateau on the mountain, up to which the Lord went to pray all night, before calling the chosen twelve, and then coming down with them, so far as to meet a crowd of His disciples and a great multitude of the people out of all Judæa and Jerusalem. It was clearly the same discourse; but the Spirit acted, not as a mere reporter (which is not the manner of inspiration) but as an infallible editor, as it were, for the distinctive design of each Gospel. (Bible Treasury N5:7) a level place: [The RV] rightly translate[s] "a level place," not a plain, as in the Authorised Version. It was a plateau. (Bible Treasury 13:303) crowd: so AD and later uncials, most cursives, Old Lat. and Vulg. \aleph BL 1, and Syrr. insert "a great." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.93)

6:25 filled: so AD, etc., Old Lat., etc. Edd. add "now," following \aleph BL and later uncials, 1, 33, 69, Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.95)

woe unto you: so A, etc. \aleph BL, etc., 1, 13, 69, have "Woe ye." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.95)

6:26 woe: so Edd. with \aleph AB and later uncials, 1, 33.— DA, 69, Memph. add "to you." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.95)

6:30 hoping for nothing (μηδέν) in return: so W.H., etc., after ABLA, Latt., etc. Tischendorf adopted μηδένα (Rev. marg. "despairing of no man"), following \aleph ΖΠ^{mm}. Syrr. (sin.: "do not cease hope of men"). We cannot reason on the use of the word [ἀπελπίζειν] elsewhere in the N.T., for this is its only occurrence. What influenced the Rev. is the fact that the word occurs in Polybius in the sense of despairing or giving up in despair. . . But even Liddell and Scott furnish from Diog. L. i.1-59, an instance of the modification, hoping that a thing will not happen. . . . Verbs compounded with ἀπό admit of flexibility enough in sense to cover the meaning attached to the word in our old and other versions. The question then mainly turns on the requirement of the context. And when one weighs verses 30-34 with care, it seems surprising that a sense so unnatural here should be attached to the word in verse 35. Especially consider the immediately preceding verse: what can be simpler than the converse call of grace, love, do good, lend, "hoping for nothing again"? (Cf. 14:12.) What worthy sense in such a connection is there in "never despairing"? Does it mean that, whatever we may give thus unselfishly in faith, we are to have no fears of coming short for ourselves? If so, it seems needless, mean, and out of character with all the rest. Never despair because of giving or lending to others! Even a generous man might be beyond such fears, not to speak of a son of the Highest exhorted by the Only-begotten of the Father. And what here is the force of the margin "despairing of no man"? If the Rev. understand despairing of no man's honesty or gratitude in repayment, it seems quite contrary to the spirit of verse 30, not to mention that the sequel of verse 35 casts the believer wholly on God's great recompense [Bible Treasury]. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.98-99)

6:35 hoping: Verse 35 is the most remarkable innovation, as far as translation is concerned, which as yet occurs in the Revision [of 1881]. "But love your enemies . . . and lend, never despairing," with the still stranger marginal alternation, "despairing of no man," μηδέν (or, -α) ἀπελπίζοντες. The Authorised Version is "hoping for nothing again." Now we cannot reason on the usage of the word elsewhere in the New Testament, for this is its only occurrence. What influenced the Revisers is the fact that the word occurs in Polybius and the like in the sense of despairing or giving up in despair, and in the Authol P. ii. 114 of driving to despair. But even Liddell and Scott furnish, from Diog. L. i. 1-59, an instance of the modification, hoping that a thing will not happen. The fact is, that words thus compounded admit of meanings so widely different as to include senses nearly opposed. Thus ἀπάγειν means to take away, or to bring home; ἀπαλλάσσειν to release, to destroy, to escape; ἀπαυρᾶν to take away from, or receive; ἀπειπεῖν to speak out, deny, forbid, disown, or fail; ἀπελαύνειν to drive away, or to march; ἀπέρχεσθαι to go away, or to come back; ἀπεσθίειν to eat off or up, and to leave off eating; ἀπέχειν to keep off or hinder, or to receive in full; ἀποβαίνειν to throw away, and to throw back; ἀποβλέπειν to look on, or at, or away; αποδακρύνειν to weep much, or to cease weeping; ἀποδορβάειν to sleep a little, or to wake up; ἀπόκεισθαι to be laid up in store, or aside; αποκλαίεσθαι to bewail oneself, or to cease wailing, &c. This induction suffices to shew that verbs compounded with ἀπό admit of flexibility enough in sense to cover the meaning attached to the word in our old and other Versions. The question then mainly turns on the requirement of the context. And when one weighs verses 30-34 with care, it seems surprising that a sense so unnatural here should be attached to the word in verse 35. Especially consider the immediately preceding verse: "and if ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thank yave ye? even sinners lend to sinners, to receive again as much." What can be simpler than the converse call of grace, love, do good, lend, "hoping for nothing again." (Cf. Luke 14:12.) What worthy sense in such a connection is there in "never despairing"? Does it mean that, whatever we may give thus unselfishly in faith, we are to have no fears of coming short for ourselves? If so, it seems needless, mean, and out of character with all the rest. Never despair because of giving or lending to others! Even a generous man might be beyond such fears, not to speak of a son of the Highest exhorted by the Only-begotten of the Father. And what here is the force of the margin "despairing of no man"? If the Revisers understand despairing of no man's honesty or gratitude in repayment, it seems quite contrary to the spirit of verse 30, not to mention that the sequel of verse 35 casts the believer wholly on God's great recompense. (Bible Treasury 13:303)

6:36 therefore: so AEPXΔ, etc., Amiat., Syrr. (exc. sin.). Edd. omit after BD LΞ 1, 33, Syr^{sin} Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.99)

6:38 with the same measure: so AC, later uncials, most cursives, Old Lat. Syrr. BDLΞ, 1, 33, Aeth. Memph. read "with what measure ye mete." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.100) shall be given: [See notes to Lk. 16:9.]

6:43 nor Λ: Edd. after "nor" add "again," following BΞ 1, 69, Memph. — ACΔΔ Syrr. Goth. Aeth. omit. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.103)

6:44 [whole verse]: [see note to Lk. 16:9]

6:45 treasure of his heart: so AC and later uncials, most cursives (33), Syrr. Aeth. Memph. Goth. Edd. omit after BDLΞ, 1, 69, Amiat. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.103)

6:48 for it had been founded on the rock: so ACDXTΔΔΠ, etc., most cursives, Syrr^{pesch} bcl Old Lat. Goth. Arm. Edd. adopt "on account of its having been well built," after BBLΞ, 33, Memph. (from Matt.). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.104)

7:4 is worthy . . . thou shouldest g: so Edd. after ABCD, etc., with twenty-one cursives. "Was worthy . . . he should g" (T.R.) follows ΓΔ and most cursives. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.107)

7:7 my servant shall be: so ACD, etc., with cursives and Syr^{sin}. Edd. adopt "let m. s. be," after BL (T.R. regarded as correction from Matt.). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.108)

7:11 afterwards: so W.H., Blass, as AB, Syr^{sin}. "The day after": so Tisch. after ACDKM. Nearly all cursives, most Syrr. and other versions. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.110) him Λ: "many of": so Tisch. with ACXΔ, most cursives, Goth. Other Edd. omit, after BDLΞ and some versions, as Syr^{sin} and Old Lat. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.110)

7:12 [was]: so Edd. after BBLΞ, 33, 69, Syr^{sin} Memph. AE, etc., Latt., other Syrr., and Goth. omit. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.110)

7:16 arisen: "has been raised up": so Edd. after ABCIΞ, 1, 33. ERXΔ, 69, Syr^{sin} have "is risen up." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.111)

7:19 Jesus: so AD, later uncials, most cursives, Syrr. Old Lat. Memph. Edd. adopt "the Lord," after BRLΞ 33, 69, Amiat., etc. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.112)

7:21 in that: so Edd. after BBL 1, 69, Memph. AD, 33, Syrr. Amiat. Goth. Arm. have "in the same." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.112) hour: so Edd. following B^{corr}BL, 1, 69, Memph. B^mL, 69, have "day." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.112)

7:27 I: (ἐγώ) is found in AEXΔ, 33, Syrr.; but Edd. omit after BDLΞ, 1, Old Lat. Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.115)

7:28 [prophet]: inserted in AEGH, later uncials, most cursives, Syrr. Goth. Edd. omit, after BKLM and most Old Lat. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.115)

[the Baptist]: ADΔ, etc., most cursives (33), Syrr. and Old Lat. insert. Edd. reject, after BBLΞ, 1, Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.115)

7:31 Λ To: In chapter 7:31 the Revisers properly drop, among lesser additions without due warrant, the spurious words which begin the verse, which were inserted by copyists who did not perceive that verses 29, 30 are a parenthesis of the evangelist, and that the Lord continues from the end of verse 28. (Bible Treasury 13:303)

7:32 to you (second time): so AP, Syrr. (including sin.), Aeth.; but omitted by Edd. after BDLΞ, Amiat. Memph. Arm. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.116)

7:37 unguent: It is better to say unguent (for when men speak of "ointment," not a few think of provision for a wound or sore). (Bible Treasury 20:86)

7:44 tresses: "her hair": so Edd. after BBDLΞ, Syrr^{pesch} bcl. Old Lat. Memph. "The hair of her head" is in EΔ, etc., most cursives (33, 69), Syrr^{sin} cu. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.120)

8:3 Chuza: [The American correctors of the RV] strain out "Chuza," instead of the more proper "Chuzas" (see Smith's Dictionary) (Bible Treasury 14:336) to him: so Wellhausen, with AAL, etc., 1, 33, Memph. Arm., Aeth. Edd. (so Harnack) adopt "to them," after BDE and later uncials, 69, Amiat. Syrr^{pesch} cu sin. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.123)

8:8 into: so Edd., following ABLΞ. D Syr^{sin} have "upon." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.125)

8:21 [it]: EX, etc., 69, Memph., express this; but Edd. omit, after BBDLΔ. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.129)

8:24 rising up: so AD and later uncials with cursives, and Syr^{sin}; but Edd. adopt "awaking," after BBL, 33. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.130)

8:27 had demons a long time: so A, later uncials and most cursives, Syrr. etc.; but Tisch. and W.H. (Rev.) adopt the order of BBL, 33, etc., Memph. "For a long time he put on, etc." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.130)

8:28 he cried out: so Edd., with BDL, etc., 33. — AEA, etc., 1, 69, have "and crying out." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.130)

8:29 had commanded: [The American correctors of the RV] strain out . . . "commanded" for "was commanding" or "charging" (see Green). (Bible Treasury 14:336)

8:31 they besought (παρεκάλουν): so Edd., after BCD, etc., 1, 33, 69, Memph. Arm. — A, etc., have παρεκάλει (Stephens and Beza), as if "he besought," which is treated as a correction from Mark 5:10. The classical conjunction of neut. plur. with sing. verb, the Hellenistic Greek of the N.T. does not always follow. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.131)

Gadarenes (cf. v.26): so Blass, after B^{corr}, AD, etc., Syrr^{cu} sin. — "Gergesenes" is the reading (followed by Tisch.) of B^m, C^{corr}, L, etc., 1, 33, Memph.; "Gerasenes" (W.H., Weiss) of BC^m, D, Old Lat. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.132)

8:33 choked: [The American correctors of the RV] prefer the more figurative "drowned" to the more literal "choked." (Bible Treasury 14:336)

8:34 Λ told: Before "told" some minuscules have "departing," which Edd. reject after ABCDLΞ, 1, 33, 69, Syrr. etc. (from Matthew). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.131)

8:43 having spent all her living on physicians: so Tisch., from ACDL and later uncials, cursives. — W.H., Weiss and Blass omit, after BD,

Syr^{sin}, Arm. (reminiscence of Mark 5:25). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.134)

8:45 and sayest thou, Who has touched me?: so ACD and later uncials, cursives, Old Lat. and Syrr. Edd. omit, after \aleph BL, Sahid. Memph. Arm. (from Mark). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.134)

8:47 declared λ : After "declared," C^{pm}, E, and some later uncials have "to him," which Edd. omit, after \aleph ABC^{corr}, DL, 1, 33, 69, Syrr^{pesch cu sin}, Old Lat. Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.134)

8:48 [be of good courage]: so AC, etc., most cursives (33, 69), Syrr^{pesch hcl}, Goth. Aeth. Arm. Edd. omit, after \aleph BDL Ξ , 1, Syrr^{cu sin}, most Old Lat. Sah. Memph. (from Matthew). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.135)

8:50 saying: so ACD, etc., Syr^{sin}, Memph. Goth. Arm. — Edd. omit, after \aleph BL, etc., 1, 33, Syr^{cu}. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.135)

8:51 came to: so most texts (Edd.); D has "entered into." — After "to go in," Edd. add "with him," as in BC^{pm}D, etc., 33, 69, Memph. Aeth. which AC^{corr}R, Syr^{cu}, Goth. Arm. omit. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.136)

John and James: so Edd., after BCDER Δ , etc., 1, 69, Old Lat. — \aleph AL, etc., 33, Amiat., Syrr^{pesch cu sin}, Memph. have "James and John." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.136)

8:52 for: so Edd., following \aleph BCDFL, etc., 1, 33, 69, Syrr. Memph. — AER, etc., and Amiat. omit. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.136)

8:54 having turned them all out, and: so A and most later uncials, etc., 33, 69, Syrr^{pesch hcl}. — Edd. omit, following \aleph ABDLX, and cursives, with Syrr^{cu sin}, most Old Lat. Aeth. (regarded as from Mark). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.136)

having turned them all out, and: In chapter 8 one of the most weighty corrections is in verse 54, where "put them all out and" should not be, though rightly in Mark 10:40. (Bible Treasury 13:303)

9:3 staff: so Edd., after \aleph BC^{pm}DL Ξ , 1, 33, 69 Old Lat. Syr^{cu}, Sah. Aeth. Arm. — "Staves" (Meyer) is found in AC^{corr} Δ , and other later uncials, many cursives, Syr^{sin}, Goth. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.137)

9:5 even (the very): so Tisch., after AC^{corr}EA Δ , etc., Syrr (including sin.), Amiat.; but other Edd. omit, following \aleph BC^{pm}DLX Ξ . 1, 33. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.137)

9:7 [by him]: so AE and most later uncials, nearly all cursives (1, 33), Syrr^{pesch}, Amiat. Edd. reject, after \aleph BCL, 69, Syrr^{sin cu}, Vulg. Sah. Memph. Aeth. Goth. Arm. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.138)

9:10 [a desert place of]: so AC Δ and other uncials, most cursives, Goth. Aeth. Arm. Edd. adopt "(into) a city called Bethsaida," with BD ("village") L Ξ X, 33, Sah. Memph. — Amiat. and Old Latin have "a d. p. which is B." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.138)

9:12 go: so Edd., after \aleph ABCDL, etc., Syr^{sin}, 33, 69, — Δ , etc., "go away" (which is in Mark). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.139)

9:12 victuals: [The American correctors of the RV] like "provisions" (12) rather than "victuals," "apart" (18) rather than "alone," "was" for "should be" in 46: small points verily, even if correct, which may well be doubted. (Bible Treasury 14:336)

9:18 alone: [See note to Luke 9:12]

9:20 of God: Syr^{sin} omits "of God," as also the Curetonian, and Old Latin Codex Vercellensis. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.140)

9:23 daily: so Edd., following \aleph ABKL, and later uncials, 1, 33, 69, Syrr^{pesch cu}, Amiat. Goth. Memph. Arm., CDEX Δ , etc., many cursives, Syr^{sin} and most Old Latin omit. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.142)

9:31 departure: [What authorities have $\xi\zeta\omicron\delta\omicron\nu$ and $\delta\acute{o}\xi\alpha\nu$ in Luke 9:31 respectively? Which is to be preferred? . . . C]

A . . . Only a few cursive manuscripts give $\delta\acute{o}\xi\alpha\nu$, evidently through $\delta\acute{o}\xi\eta$ just before and $\delta\acute{o}\xi\alpha\nu$ shortly after. Lachmann and Tischendorf do not so much as notice it as a various reading; but Griesbach and Scholz enumerate the juniors that so read, though of course following $\xi\zeta\omicron\delta\omicron\nu$, with all the best and most ancient authorities. Matthaei conjectures that this other may have crept in from Chrysostom. (Bible Treasury 7:271)

9:34 they ($\alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\upsilon\varsigma$): so Edd., with \aleph BCL, Memph. Blass, "those" ($\epsilon\kappa\epsilon\iota\tau\omicron\upsilon\varsigma$), as AD Δ , 1, 33, 69, Sah. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.146)

9:35 beloved: so AC Δ and most later uncials, all cursives, Syrr^{cu pesch}, most Old Lat. and Amiat. Edd. adopt "chosen," after \aleph BL Ξ , Syr^{sin}, Sah. Memph. Arm. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.146) beloved: "chosen" takes the place of "beloved Son" [in the RV] as in Matthew and Mark. (Bible Treasury 13:303-304)

9:43 [Jesus]: so AC, etc., Syrr^{pesch hcl}. Edd. omit, after \aleph BDL Ξ , 1, Syrr^{sin cu}, Amiat. Memph. Arm. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.148)

did: so Edd., after \aleph ABCDL, etc., 1, 33, 69, Syrr. Old Lat. "Had done," EX Δ , etc. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.148)

9:46 should be: [See note to Luke 9:12]

9:47 seeing: so AC Δ L Δ Ξ , etc. Edd. adopt "knowing," as in \aleph B, etc. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.150)

9:48 is: so Edd., with \aleph BCL, etc., 1, 33, Syrr^{cu sin}, most Old Lat., Amiat., Memph. "Shall be" (Blass); AD, etc., nearly all cursives (69), Syrr. Arm. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.150)

9:50 against you is for you: so Edd., following BCDL Ξ , 33, Old Lat., Syrr^{cu sin}, Memph. Goth. Aeth. Arm. "Against you is for us," \aleph ^{pm}AD. E(T.R.), etc., have "against us is for us" (Mark). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.150-151)

9:54 as also Elias did: so Blass, with ACD, all later uncials, 1, 33, 69, Syrr^{pesch hcl}, Memph. Aeth. Other Edd. omit, after \aleph BL Ξ , and Syrr^{cu sin}, Amiat. and Arm. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.152)

[end of 54, end of 55, start of 56]: Verses 55, 56 are simply thus: "But he turned and rebuked them. And they went to another village." But the end of verse 55 in the vulgar text has more authority than the beginning of verse 56. The Revisers even omit the last words of verse 54. (Bible Treasury 13:303-304)

9:55 [and said, Ye know not of what spirit ye are]: so Blass, after D (in part) F, and later uncials, most cursives (1, 69), Syrr, Amiat., etc. Other Edd. reject, following \aleph ABCL, etc., 33, Syr^{sin}. See W.H., App., p.59f. After "are," FKM, more than sixty cursives (1, 69), Syrr^{cu sin}, several Old Lat., and Amiat. have "For the Son of man has not come to destroy men's lives, but to save [them]." Edd. omit, in accordance with \aleph ABCDL, etc., many cursives (33). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.153) [see note to Lk. 9:54]

9:56 [first part of verse]: [see note to Lk. 9:54]

9:57 it came to pass: so AD Δ , etc., Syrr^{pesch}, Goth. Edd. omit, after \aleph BCL, etc., 33, 69, Syrr^{cu sin}, Memph. Aeth. Arm. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.154)

Lord: so AC Δ and later uncials, nearly all cursives, Goth. Edd. omit, after \aleph BDL Ξ , 1, Syr^{sin}, Amiat. Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.154)

9:59 Lord: so \aleph ACL, later uncials, nearly all cursives, Old Lat, Goth. Memph. Edd. omit, after $B^{m}DV$, Syrr^{sin}. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.155)

10:1 seventy: so Tisch. Treg. and Revv., as \aleph ACL, later uncials, nearly all cursives, Goth. Aeth. W.H., Blass, and Weiss read "seventy-two," after BD, etc., several Old Lat., Syrr^{cu sin}. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.159)

10:3 I ($\epsilon\gamma\omega$): "It is I who": so CDL Δ . Edd. omit, as \aleph AB (from Matthew). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.159)

10:6 If: so Edd., after the uncials. Only minuscules have "if indeed." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.160)

10:8 may have entered: so Edd. with \aleph BCDL Ξ , 1, 33, Amiat. "May enter" is the reading of A Δ , etc. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.161)

10:11 cleaves to us on the feet: so Edd. after \aleph BD, Old Lat. Syrr^{cu}. Other uncial copies, besides many cursives, omit "on the feet." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.161)

nigh Λ : After "come nigh," AC, etc., and most cursives (69), add "unto you," which Edd. reject, following \aleph BDL, 1, 33, Amiat. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.161)

10:12 Λ I say: Before "I say," Tisch. adds "But," with \aleph E Ξ , etc., Memph., which W.H. and others omit, after BCL. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.161)

10:15 who hast been raised up: so Weiss and Blass ($\psi\psi\theta\eta\varsigma$), after A, most later uncials, and most cursives (33, 69), all having $\psi\psi\theta\epsilon\iota\sigma\alpha$, with Amiat. Other recent Edd. adopt "shalt thou indeed be exalted ($\psi\psi\theta\eta\sigma\eta$)," after \aleph BDL Ξ , Syrr^{cu}, Old Lat. Memph.; of these, BD give $\kappa\alpha\tau\alpha\beta\eta\sigma\eta$ (Treg. Marg., W.H., text, and Weiss), instead of $\kappa\alpha\tau\alpha\beta\iota\beta\alpha\sigma\theta\eta\sigma\eta$ (Revv. and Blass). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.162)

10:17 the seventy: BD, etc., read "seventy-two," as above (verse 1). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.163)

10:19 give: so Blass, following A Δ , etc., most cursives (33, 69), Syrr.—Tisch., W.H., etc., adopt "have given," after \aleph BC^mLX, 1, Old Lat. Amiat. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.164)

10:20 rejoice not: A few copies have "rejoice rather"; but the additional word is not in \aleph ABCD, etc., 1, 33, 69, Old Lat. Syrr. (Edd.). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.164)

10:21 Jesus: so ACE, etc., 33; but Edd. omit, after \aleph BD Ξ , Amiat., Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.165)

in (the, or His) spirit: so Blass, after AEG Δ , etc., nearly all cursives, Syrr^{sin}. Other Edd. adopt "the Holy Spirit," after \aleph BCD, etc., 1, 33, Syrr^{cu pesch}, Old Lat. Memph., which was the text followed in the Vulg., Wycliffe's, and the Rhemish versions. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.165)

10:27 with: The reading generally approved the first time is $\epsilon\zeta$ ("from"): afterwards, $\epsilon\nu$, which Blass has throughout, as D; but this editor, after D and Γ , omits "with all thine understanding." The last words are vouched for by the other copies. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.169)

10:29 of justifying: \aleph BC^mDL Ξ have $\delta\iota\kappa\alpha\iota\omega\sigma\alpha\iota$, adopted by Edd.; whilst $\delta\iota\kappa\alpha\iota\acute{\upsilon}\nu$ is the form in AC^{corr}T Δ API, 1, 33, 69. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.170)

10:32,35 place Λ : In the parable of the good Samaritan the Revisers, on good authority, strike out additions of the common text, in verse 32 and 35 especially. (Bible Treasury 13:304)

10:33 [him]: so ACDE, etc., 69, Syrr. Edd. omit, as \aleph BL Ξ , 1, 33, Old Lat. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.171)

10:35 [as he left]: so ACE, etc., 69, Syrr. Edd. omit, after \aleph BDL, etc., 1, 33, Old Lat. Syrr^{cu sin pesch}, Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.172)

[as he left]: [see note to Lk. 10:32]

to him: so ACE, etc., most Syrr. Edd. omit, after BDL Ξ , 1, 33, Syrr^{sin}, Amiat. Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.172)

10:36 [now]: so A Δ , etc., 33, 69, most Syrr. Edd. omit, as \aleph BL Ξ , 1, Syrr^{sin}, Amiat. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.172)

10:39 Jesus: so AC^{corr}, later uncials, almost all cursives, with Syrr^{sin}, but Revv., as Edd., adopt "the Lord," after \aleph DL Ξ Syrr^{cu}, most Old Lat. Memph. Aeth. Arm. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.175)

10:41 Jesus: In verse 41, "Jesus" has the support of ACDE and all later uncials, most cursives (1, 69), Syrr. including sin., with Old Lat. and Memph.; but Revv., as Edd., have adopted "the Lord," following \aleph B^m L, Old Lat. and Amiat. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.176)

10:41-42 [last part of verse 41, all of 42]: Blass omits all after second "Martha" as far as "and" (Revv. "for"), after Syrr^{sin} and some copies of Old Latin. D contains "thou art troubled." The words reproduced are sustained by the mass of authority recognized by other Edd.; but there is a question as to "There is need of one," which is the reading of AC^m, most later uncials with cursives, Syrr^{cu pesch}, and some Old Lat. (Tisch. Treg.). W.H. and Weiss adopt "Few things are needful or one," as in \aleph BC^{corr} L, 1, 33, Memph. Aeth. and Origen. But see Scrivener, ii., p. 349f. The "and" (Treg.) is in AC, etc. Revv., as most Edd., "for," after \aleph BL, 1, 69. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.177)

10:42 [See note to 10:41]

11:2 Father: so Edd., after \aleph BL, 1, Syrr^{sin} Amiat., Arm., Origen, Tertullian. ACDE, etc., most cursives (69), Syrr^{cu pesch hcl}; most Old Latin, Memph. Aeth. add "Our . . . who art in the heavens" (from Matthew). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.178-9)

Father . . . come Λ : But chapter 11 affords more cases [of changes in the RV], especially in Luke's form of the prayer, where "Father" alone is read, not "Our Father which art in heaven," an importation from Matthew, as is "Thy will be done as in heaven so in earth," and "but deliver us from evil:" all of which petitions had special interest and value for Jewish disciples. (Bible Treasury 13:304) come Λ : Hence He adds elsewhere, "Thy will be done, as in heaven, so in earth." Though left out of Luke by excellent authority, it is undoubtedly read in the Gospel of Matthew, because the future kingdom will bring in the earth as well as heaven. (Exp. of Luke, p. 181) come Λ : Here \aleph ACD, etc., nearly all cursives, Syrr^{cu pesch hcl}. Old Latin, Memph. Aeth. insert "Thy will be done as in heaven, also on the earth." Edd. omit, as BL, 1, Syrr^{cu sin}, Amiat. Arm. Orig., etc. (from Matthew). Instead of "Thy kingdom come," Blass, after Gregory of Nyssa, Maximus the Confessor, and Marcion (Tert.), reads "May thy Holy Spirit come upon us and cleanse us," as to which see W.H., App., p.60. Such a reading is absolutely unknown to any but the Western text. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.179)

11:3 sufficient: It takes up the pure and simple need of the body. The word "daily" is a very imperfect expression in English of the original term. $\epsilon\pi\iota\theta\upsilon\sigma\iota\omicron\varsigma$ really means our "sufficient" bread (seemingly a word expressly formed for this idea in contrast with superfluity). (Exp. of Luke, p.182) [see note to Mat. 6:11]

11:4 temptation Λ : . . . left out in the most ancient copies. The only right and true way of understanding the mind of God, and the best

homage to Scripture, is always and only to cleave to that which is undoubtedly of Himself. This is not to take away anything from Scripture; it is to lay aside what is not Scripture. We have these words quite rightly in Matthew besides: we gain by their omission here instead of losing. The question arises, Why should it be given in Matthew and omitted here? "Deliver us from evil" refers, I believe, to the evil one and the exhibition of his power, which a Jew ought always to have before him, that tremendous hour which will be allowed as a final retribution on the nation, before they are delivered for the reign of Christ. As Luke had the Gentiles in view, this was naturally and wisely left out. Deliverance from this scourge would have been less felt by them, and hardly intelligible, as the earthly millennial portion disappears for a similar reason. What is general and moral abides here. (Exp. of Luke, p. 183-4) temptation Λ : At the end of verse 4, ACD, etc., most cursives, Syrr^{cu} pesch hel Old Lat. Memph. Aeth. add "but deliver us from the evil one." Edd. omit, after \aleph^m BL, 1, Syrr^{sin} Arm. Origen, etc. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.179)

temptation Λ : [see note to Lk. 11:2]

11:11 bread . . . or also: These words, read by Tischendorf, are questioned by Treg., relegated to marg. by W.H., and rejected by Weiss and Blass, after B Sah. Arm. Origen (from Matthew). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.185)

11:13 who [is] of heaven: Ought there not to have been a more distinctive version of $\delta \xi \theta \epsilon \acute{o} \upsilon \rho \alpha \nu \acute{o} \upsilon$ in verse 13 than the "heavenly" of the Authorised Version here followed [in the RV]? (Compare Matt. 5:16, 44, 48; 6:1, 9.) (Bible Treasury 13:304)

11:19 I: Weiss retains the emphatic I ($\epsilon \gamma \acute{\omega}$) of D here also. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.188)

11:29 This generation: [See note to Mat. 24:34]

Jonas: here AC and later uncials, most cursives, etc., add "the prophet," which Edd. reject, following \aleph BDL, Amiat., etc. (from Matthew). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.194)

11:30 this generation: [See note to Mat. 24:34]

11:31, 32 A . . . Men: No doubt cases are not infrequent where an anarthrous form in Greek requires the definite article in our idiom. But the tendency even in the Revised Version is to introduce it needlessly. Thus in chapter 11:31, 32 (as in Matt. 12:41, 42) it is enough and even more exact to say "a queen" and "men of Nineveh." The article might have been used in Greek if the intention had been to refer to them as those well-known in Old Testament history or prophecy. But as it is not, "the queen" and "the men" seems uncalled for. On the other hand, why should we have "mint and rue," &c. (and in Matt. 23: 23, "mint and anise and cummin") when the Greek article is so expressly introduced to mark the minutious exactitude of Jewish legalism. (Bible Treasury 13:304)

11:32 Men: [see note to Lk. 11:31]

11:33 in secret: "a cellar," [in the RV is] an improvement on "a secret place"; (Bible Treasury 13:304)

11:34 the body: so most authorities. D, with most Old Lat., has "thy b." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.196) thine eye: so \aleph^m ABCD, etc., Old Lat. (Edd.). EG, etc., most cursives, Syrr^{cu} sin Arm. have "the eye." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.196) when Λ : AC and later uncials, nearly all cursives, Syrr^{cu} sin, read "therefore" besides "when," which Edd. omit, after \aleph BDL, Old Lat. Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.196)

11:36 [whole verse]: Blass, but here again alone, follows D with some copies of Old Latin, in omitting this verse. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.197)

11:41 what ye have: for "such things as ye have" or "your property," an unquestionably sound rendering of $\tau \acute{\alpha} \epsilon \nu \acute{o} \nu \tau \alpha$, [the RV has] "those things which are within" and in the margin "ye can," neither of which seems at all so suitable to the context. Of course those who advocate the revised textual rendering might point to the preceding verses in its justification; but to give for alms those things which are written is really a paradox, instead of the simple dealing with the Pharisee's conscience, which to plain minds is the thing intended. (Bible Treasury 13:304)

11:38 washed: In 11 [in the American corrections of the RV] the only point is "bathed himself" for "washed" in 38, as in Mark 7:6. (Bible Treasury 14:336)

11:42 mint and rue: [see note to Lk. 11:31-32]

11:44 you Λ : After "you," AD (but without "hypocrites"), E, etc., most cursives (69), some Syrr. add "scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites." Edd. omit, as \aleph BCL, etc., 1, 33, Syrr^{cu} sin, Amiat. Memph. Arm. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.199)

11:48 [their sepulchres]: ACE, etc., 33, Syrr. Amiat. Memph., have these words, which Edd. omit, after \aleph BDL. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.200)

11:53 as he said these things to them: so Lachm., followed by Blass, after AD, etc., 1, Syrr. Amiat.; Blass adding "before the people," which is in DX, Old Lat. Syrr^{cu} sin. Treg., W.H., and Weiss adopt, "And as he went out thence," after \aleph BCL, 33, Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.202)

11:54 [and seeking]: these words are in ACD, later uncials, most cursives, Old Lat., etc.; but Edd. reject them, after \aleph BL, Memph. Aeth. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.202)

[that they might accuse him]: as ACD, Syrr^{cu} sin; but Edd. omit, as \aleph BL, Memph. Aeth. This affords instance of "conflation". (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.202)

12:7 therefore: so \aleph ADE, etc., 1, 33, 69, Syrr. Amiat. Edd. omit after BLR, some Latt. Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.205)

12:15 from Λ all: so Edd., following \aleph ABD, etc., 1, 33, 69, Syrr. Old Lat. Memph. EFG, etc., and most cursives omit. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.208)

12:18 produce: so Tisch. after \aleph AD and most later uncials. Other Edd. (W.H.: "conflation") adopt "corn," following BLX, Sah. Memph. Aeth. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.209)

12:20 is required: [see note to Lk. 16:9]

12:22 for life: so Edd. after \aleph ABD, etc., 1, Amiat. EA, etc., 33, 69, Syrr^{cu} pesch sin Memph. add "your." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.210)

12:25 stature: [See Mat. 6:27]

one: \aleph^m BD, Memph. omit (Edd.); \aleph^{corr} AL, etc., with Syrr^{sin} insert. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.210)

12:28 the grass, which to-day is in the f.: so AE and most of the later uncials, besides cursives and Syrr^{sin}. Edd. (Revv.) adopt "If God so clothe the grass in [the] field," after \aleph BL, etc. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.211)

12:31 his: so Edd. following \aleph BDL, Memph. AE, etc., 1, 33, 69, Syrr. Amiat. have "kingdom of God." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.212)

[all]: so AD, etc., 1, 33, 69, Amiat. Memph.; but Edd. reject after \aleph BQ Δ , etc. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.212)

his: it is "his [your Father's] kingdom" [in the RV] rather than "the kingdom of God," though the authorities are not numerous. (Bible Treasury 13:304)

12:38 Λ in the third Λ : Edd. (Revv.) follow \aleph BL, etc., 33, "And if in the second and in the third watch, he come": the "come" and "watch" each occur only once in these texts. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.215) those [bondmen]: so AE, etc., 1, 33, 69, Syrr. and Amiat. Tisch. after \aleph^m omits both words; other Edd. follow BDL, Syr^{sin}, which have "those" but not "bondmen." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.215)

12:39 would have watched: Edd. questioning the words as from Matthew. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.215)

12:40 therefore: so AE, etc., 1, 33, 69. Edd. omit, after \aleph BLQT, Old Lat. Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.215)

12:41 Λ Lord: "to him": so Tisch. with \aleph APQT, Syrr^{sin cu}. Other Edd. omit following BDLRX 33, Old Lat. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.216)

12:49 what will I: [The American correctors of the RV read "what do I desire" (with the marg. Or, how I would that it were already kindled!):] the suggested change is strange, still more the margin. (Bible Treasury 14:336)

12:54 a cloud: so Edd. after \aleph ABL, etc., 1, 33, 69. DE, etc., have "the c." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.221)

12:56 ye do not discern: so AD Γ Δ II, later uncials, most cursives and Old Lat. Syrr. Edd. (Revv.) adopt "ye do not know how to discern," according to \aleph BL, 33, Sahid. Memph. Aeth. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.222)

12:58 shall deliver: so Edd. after \aleph ABDT 69. ELX Δ , etc., 1, 33, Syr^{sin} Old Lat. have "(lest the j.) deliver." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.222)

13:2 he: so Edd. after \aleph BLT, Amiat. ADE, etc., 1, 33, 69, Syrr. have "Jesus." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.224)

13:4 they ($\alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\iota$): so Edd. after \aleph AB, etc., 33, 69, Syr^{sin} Amiat. E Γ Δ , etc., 1, Memph., have "these" ($\omicron\upsilon\tau\omicron\iota$). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.225)

the men: so Edd. after \aleph ABDL, etc., 69. E, etc., 33, omit. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.225)

13:9 thenceforth —; but if not, Λ : Such is the order of words in AD and later uncials, most cursives, Old Lat. Syrr.; but Edd. (as Revv.) read "and if it bear fruit after that (thenceforth) ...," as it is in \aleph BL, 33, 69, Sah. Memph., etc. Syr^{sin} has "next year thou shalt cut it down." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.226)

13:11 Λ a: "[there was]": so AE, etc., 1, 69, Syrr^{cu pesch sin}, but Edd. omit, as \aleph BL, etc., 33 Old Lat. Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.227)

13:14 these: so D, etc., Latt. Syrr.; but Edd. adopt "them," according to \aleph ABL, 1, 69. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.228)

13:15 Hypocrites!: so most Edd. with \aleph ABEL, etc., later uncials, numerous cursives (69), Old Lat. Amiat., Sah. Memph. Blass upholds T.R., "thou hypocrite," which is in DVX, many cursives (1), and Syrr. So all English versions before R.V. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.228)

Hypocrites!: Hypocrites, not "hypocrite;" (Bible Treasury 13:304)

13:19 great: so A and later uncials, most cursives, Syr^{pesch} Memph. Aeth., but Edd. reject, following \aleph BDLT, Syrr^{cu hier} Arm. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.230)

13:24 door: so Edd. after \aleph BDL, 1, Arm.; whilst AE and later uncials 33, 69, have "gate." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.232)

13:25 Lord Λ : so Edd. after \aleph BL, Amiat., Memph. ADE, etc., 1, 33, 69, most Syrr. repeat "Lord" (from Matthew). Syr^{sin} has "our Lord." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.233)

13:27 you . . . whence ye are: so \aleph AD, Syr^{sin}; but Edd. omit, after BLRT and cursives. Blass reads "you," but omits "whence ye are," as D. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.233)

13:31 the same hour: so Edd. following \aleph ABDLX Δ and some other later uncials, most cursives, Old Lat. Sah. Memph. Arm. Aeth. have "the same day." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.236)

13:32 I am perfected: [The American correctors of the RV in the margin] is essentially Green's rendering. (Bible Treasury 14:336)

13:35 you Λ : After "you," DX Δ , etc., 33, Syrr. Aeth. add "desolate" (Syr^{sin} "forsaken"). Edd. omit, after \aleph ABKL, etc., Amiat., 1, 69, Sah. Arm. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.239)

you Λ : omit desolate in verse 35, brought in from Matthew 23. (Bible Treasury 13:304)

14:3 or not: Edd. here add "or not," following \aleph BDL, 1, 69, Syr^{cu} Memph. The words are not in AEX Δ , etc., cursives in general (33), Syr^{sin} Amiat. Arm., etc. They are attested by some Old Lat. and not by others. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.240)

14:5 an ass: so \aleph KLXII, etc., 1, 33, Syrr^{sin hier} (sin.: "ox or ass"), Memph. Arm. Aeth. D: $\pi\rho\acute{o}\beta\alpha\tau\omicron\nu$ (as Matthew). Edd. adopt "a son," after ABEGH and later uncials, many cursives, Syrr^{cu pesch hel} Sah. Cyril. Alex. The balance of Latt. favours "ass."—D has "sheep." See W.H., App., p.62. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.241) an ass: Another notable piece of recent editorship appears in Luke 14:5. The common and true reading $\delta\nu\omicron\varsigma$ (ass), has good ancient support, but undoubtedly $\nu\acute{\iota}\omicron\varsigma$ has far more valuable extant MSS in its favour. It will hardly be credited by the uncritical reader that Scholz, Lachmann, Tischendorf, with an admiring herd, have renounced not only spirituality but even common sense, and have consecrated the obvious blunder of these early copies. They represent our Lord as saying, "Which of you shall have a son or an ox," &c. But this, as Mr. [Thomas Sheldon Green] remarks, quite destroys the reasoning a fortiori — nay, throws the stress on the wrong side of the argument. But why, then, does not Mr. G. deal summarily with such a monster of criticism? (Bible Treasury 1:296) an ass: the Revisers have resisted the temptation of following the mass of ancient authority and of modern critics, and retain "ass," giving "son" in the margin. (Bible Treasury 13:304)

14:10 all: so most Edd., as \aleph ABLX, 1, 33, 69, Syr^{cu} Sah. Memph. Aeth. Blass, after D Γ Δ , etc., most cursives, Syr^{sin} Old Lat. Goth. Arm. omits. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.242)

14:21 the: so Edd. following \aleph ABD, etc., 1, 69, Old Lat. Memph. Aeth. Arm. EX Γ Δ , etc., Syrr. have "that." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.246)

14:34 [then]: so Tisch. following \aleph BLX, 69, Memph. Treg. brackets. Other Edd. omit, as ADER Δ , etc., 1, 33, Syrr. Amiat. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.249) also: so \aleph BDLX Syrr^{cu pesch}. It is omitted in AER Γ Δ , etc., 1, 33, 69, Syr^{sin} Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.249)

14:35 it is cast out: [see note to Lk. 16:9]

15:16 to fill: can one doubt that the reading of \aleph B D L R, some cursives and very ancient versions, is a softening of the phrase which is certainly not found in the Authorised Version or its American revival? (Bible Treasury 14:336)

15:17 here: so Edd., after \aleph BDL, some cursives (1), Syrr. Old Lat. Vulg. Memph. The word is not in APX, etc., nor in most cursives (as 33, 69). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.258)

15:19 Δ I am: Before "I am no longer," EG, etc., most cursives, Syrr. have "and," which Edd. omit, after \aleph ABDK, etc., 1, Old Lat. Sah. Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.258)

15:21 Δ I am no more: E, etc., 33, 69, Syrr. have "and I am n. l.," which Edd. reject, after \aleph ABD, etc., Old Lat. Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.259) son Δ : W.H. add these words ["Make me as one of thy hired servants"] in brackets: after \aleph BD, etc., Syr^{hcl} Aeth., which Tisch. and Treg., both of whom cite Augustine, followed by Weiss and Blass, reject as interpolation from verse 19. They are supported by AL Δ , etc., Latt. Syrr^{sin pesch hier}. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.259)

15:22 bring out: so APQ and other later uncials, all cursives, Sah. Syrr. Recent Edd. adopt "Quickly b. o.," as \aleph BDLX, Syr^{sin} Old Lat. Goth. Memph. Arm. Aeth. This addition Treg. brackets. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.260)

Δ bring out: [The RV adds] "quickly" on good, but not large, authority. (Bible Treasury 13:304)

15:28 And his father: so Edd., after \aleph ABDL, etc., 1, 33, Old Lat. Goth. Memph. Arm. E and most of the later uncials, nearly all cursives (69), Syrr. Amiat. and Vulg. have "therefore." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.261)

15:29 his father: so Treg., W.H., after ABDG, etc., 69, Syr^{sin}. Tisch.: "the," after \aleph Q, Goth. Memph. Arm. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.262)

15:32 again: [The RV omits] "again" in verse 32. (Bible Treasury 13:304)

16:4 may be received: [see note to Lk. 16:9]

16:7 Δ He saith: Before "he says," ADP and some versions have "and." Edd. omit, after BLR, 13, 69, Amiat., Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.266)

16:9 it: so Edd. after \aleph^m AB^m DL, etc., Syrr^{sin pesch} Memph. Arm. Aeth. Cyr. Alex. It has beyond doubt preponderant authority over "ye fail" [T.R. after \aleph^{corr} EP, etc., Vulg. Clem. Alex. — EEW]; but it is difficult to see its superior force or even propriety (cf. Bible Treasury 13:304). (Exp. of Luke, p.267-8)

it: "It fails" in chapter 16:9 has beyond doubt preponderant authority over "ye fail;" but it is difficult to see its superior force or even propriety. (Bible Treasury 13:304)

ye may be received: The meaning of the words "that they may receive you" is simply "that ye may be received into everlasting habitations."...There is no stress to be laid on the form of the phrase "they may receive you." This has misled not a few. Literally this might hold good on earth, as we see in verse 4, but spiritually it simply means "that ye may be received." Compare Luke 6:38, 12:20; the first wrongly rendered in the Authorised Version, the last rightly. God alone receives into heaven: no one else has a title to receive there. The expression alludes to the parable, but is used with the utmost vagueness. It is a virtual impersonal—"that reception may be given you into the everlasting tabernacles." (Exp. of Luke, p.268-9) ye may be received: [May I ask your mind on Luke 16:9? T.A.J.]

A. I believe that the solution of the last clause, which is probably the one chiefly enquired after, depends on the simple fact that St. Luke frequently uses the third person plural of the active verb, in a sort of indefinite way, to express that which would be best rendered by the English passive voice. It is thus that our translators have rightly given Luke 12:20, "thy soul shall be required," though literally it runs, "do they require thy soul." Clearly, if any one is meant, it is God, not men or angels. So in chap. 16:9, the version should have been "you may be received," instead of a literal rendering which leaves the door open to human and popish fancies. Here, again, if any person is particularly meant, it is not the poor or angels, as some have fondly imagined, but God Himself; but the general form is perhaps best. (Compare also chap. 6:38,) $\delta\omega\sigma\sigma\upsilon\sigma\iota\nu\ \epsilon\iota\varsigma\ \tau\omicron\nu\ \kappa\omicron\lambda\pi\omicron\nu\ \upsilon\mu\acute{\omega}\nu$ which, like our text, is given literally, but erroneously in the authorized version. "Shall men give" misleads. It ought to be, shall be given. (Bible Treasury 2:192) ye may be received: Have the Revisers caught the idiom in [6:38, 44; 14:35; 16:4, 9; 23:31? The Authorised Version followed by [the RV] . . . takes [the idiom] . . . rightly in chapter 12:20. To give the plural literally misleads the English reader. It is meant to be general, and for us an impersonal or passive turn best expresses the thought. In several cases God is really meant without saying so. (Bible Treasury 13:303)

16:12 another's: in that which is another's [I leave out the word "man's," it is really God who is meant by it] (Lect. Intro. to the Gospels, p. 347) your own: so Blass, with \aleph AD, etc., all cursives, the Latt. Syrr^{pesch hcl hier} Memph. Goth. Arm. Aeth. Hort, followed by Weiss, favours "our own," the reading of B and L. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.270)

16:21 the things: "with the crumbs which fell": so \aleph^{corr} APXT Δ , etc., nearly all cursives (1, 33, 69), Syrr. Amiat., Memph. Goth. Aeth. Edd. follow \aleph^m BL, Sah.: "with what fell." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.275)

16:25 thou: so EX Δ , etc., 1, 33, have the emphatic $\sigma\acute{\upsilon}$, which Edd. omit, after \aleph BDL, etc. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.277)

here: so Edd., following \aleph ABD, etc., Syrr. Memph. Sah. Arm. Aeth. The omission in T.R. is supported by a few minuscules (1) only. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.277)

16:26 so that: Dean Alford here as elsewhere renders $\delta\pi\omega\varsigma$ as if it were exactly like $\iota\nu\alpha$, "in order that." I believe this to be a mistake in fact; and philologically it is a false principle that two words radically distinct in the same tongue ever mean precisely the same thing. (Bible Treasury 8:278) (Exp. of Luke, p.278)

16:29 but: so Edd., after \aleph ABDF, etc., Amiat. Memph. It is omitted by E and 69. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.278) to him: so Blass, with AD, Latt. Syrr. Memph. Other Edd. reject, as \aleph BL. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.278)

17:2 millstone: so Edd. after \aleph BDL, 1, 69, Old Lat. Memph. Arm. In Matt. 18:6, and Mark 9:42, it is "millstone turned by an ass," as here in A, etc., Syrr. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.280)

17:3 sin Δ : "Against thee," in chapter 17:3, came in probably from Matthew 17:15, though even there \aleph B omit, as here also with A L. (Bible Treasury 13:304)

17:4 sin: DXTΔ, etc., most cursives (33, 69), add “against thee,” which Edd. omit, following \aleph ABL, 1, Syrr. Amiat. Memph. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.281)

seven times (second time): AΓΔ, etc., most cursives, Syrr. Amiat. Aeth. add “in the day”; rejected by Edd. after \aleph BDLX, most Old Lat. Memph. Arm. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.281)

17:6 have: so Edd. as \aleph ABFL, etc., 1, 33, 69. DEGH, Old Lat. “had.” (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.282) have: the authority is preponderant for “have” rather than “had”; as “would have” is also right. (Bible Treasury 14:336)

17:7 will say: Edd. (Rev.) add “unto him,” following \aleph BDLX, 1, 69, Syrr. Old Lat. Memph. Blass, with A, etc., Goth. omits. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.282)

17:9 the: so Edd. after κ^{corr} ABDLX, Memph. EA, etc., have “that.” (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.282)

ordered: DX, 69, Amiat. Memph. add “him,” which Edd. reject, after ABELΔ, etc., 1. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.282)

I judge not: so Weiss, after Meyer, with AΓ, etc., most cursives, most Old Lat. (33, 69), Syrr. Amiat. Goth. Other Edd., with Alford and Milligan, omit, following BLX, 1, Memph. Arm. Aeth. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.282)

17:10 Λ we have done: EXΔ, etc., have “for w. h. d.” Text, as Edd., after \aleph ABDL, 1, Old Lat. Memph. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.282)

17:11 through the midst: Dean Alford pointed out that the phrase may mean on the frontiers of both. (Bible Treasury 14:336)

17:17 but: so \aleph BLX, etc.; AD omit, as Nestle after Tisch., W.H., who questioned it. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.285)

17:21 lo: (Treg. text) is attested by AD and all later uncials and cursives (1, 33, 69), Amiat.; but other Edd. omit, as \aleph BL. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.287)

17:24 thus: D, with some minuscules, adds “also,” which Edd. reject, after \aleph ABL, etc., 1, 69, Syrr. Amiat. Memph. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.289) in his day: so \aleph AL, later uncials, most cursives and versions (Syrr^{cu} sin: “the day of the S. of m.”). Blass omits, following BD, Old Lat. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.289)

17:33 to save (σώσαι): so \aleph ARXTΔΔΠ and yet later uncials, most cursives, Vulg. Blass reads “to preserve” (ζωογονῆσαι) with D. Other Edd.: “to acquire,” as BL and some Old Lat. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.291)

17:34 one bed: so most copies. BC omit “one.” “One” (Treg.); Blass retains “the one” of T.R., with \aleph B, 1, 69. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.292)

17:35 the one: so Elzevir (1624) with κ^{corr} BDR, 1, 69 (Edd.). (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.292)

17:36 [whole verse]: Cf. the uncials DU alone, the Syrr. (including sin.) and most Old Lat. have this verse (Elzevir), Edd. in general reject (from Matthew). (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.292)

[whole verse]: Judged by the witnesses, verse 36 would appear to have no sufficient authority in our Gospel, but seems plainly to have been imported from the Gospel of Matthew, where it finds its just place. (Exp. of Luke, p. 292)

[whole verse]: Omit verse 36, borrowed from Matthew 24:40. (Bible Treasury 13:304)

[whole verse]: [See also Bible Treasury 13:304]

17:37 there Λ : After “there,” Edd. add “also,” after \aleph BL, etc., 69, Memph. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.292)

18:1 also: The $\kappa\alpha\iota$ “also” [in AD, etc.] is omitted by some of the best authorities [\aleph BLM, some cursive manuscripts (13, 69, etc.), besides Old Lat.]. But without it the reference or address is certainly to the disciples ($\alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\iota\varsigma$ and $\alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\upsilon\varsigma$) not about other men, as in the A.V. (Bible Treasury 8:356, brackets added by EEW, Exp. of Luke, p.296) they: so Edd., following \aleph ABKL, etc., 69, Memph. Arm. It is omitted in DEG, etc., and many cursives (as 1). (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.296)

they: the Revisers rightly translate “that they ought” &c., not “men.” (Bible Treasury 13:304)

18:5 that she by forever coming may not worry me: the suggestion [of the American correctors of the RV] for the margin is at least not so odd as Meyer’s rendering, offered in all gravity, “lest at last she — in desperation — should come and strike me in the face”! But the Authorised and Revised Versions seem more accurate in construing $\epsilon\iota\varsigma$ τ . with $\epsilon\rho\chi$ “continually coming.” (Bible Treasury 14:336)

18:7 Λ he is long suffering: “and he bears”: so Edd., after \aleph ABDL, etc., 1, Syrr^{cu} sin Arm., although “bearing” (T.R.) is found in ΓΔΔΡ, 69. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.296)

Λ he is long suffering: The query “and is he slow” &c., seems untenable, no less than “and yet.” (Bible Treasury 14:336)

18:12 gain: “Possess” is the force of the perfect. Here it is rather “to come into possession of” ($\kappa\tau\omega\mu\alpha\iota$). (Bible Treasury 8:370) (Exp. of Luke, p.298)

18:13 merciful: [What is to be understood by “be merciful?” Is the English Version faulty here? Is propitiation or reconciliation expressed by the Greek? . . . T.]

I believe that the English Bible quite rightly renders $\iota\lambda\acute{\alpha}\sigma\theta\eta\gamma\acute{\iota}$ μοι “be merciful to me.” No doubt, it differs from the expression $\epsilon\lambda\acute{\epsilon}\eta\sigma\acute{o}\nu$ με, in verses 38, 39, as the special differs from the general phrase. But there is nothing in the Greek, any more than in the English, which implies that the publican was here pleading propitiation, still less reconciliation. Undoubtedly, in God’s mind, mercy could only be shown to a sinful man in virtue of the foreseen atonement of the Saviour; but the phrase itself, in the mouth and supposed condition of the publican, does not go beyond his heart’s appeal for God’s pardoning mercy to the sinner before Him, if ever there was one. ($\tau\hat{\omega}$ ἀμαρτωλῷ.) So in Psalm 25:11, David cries, “For thy name’s sake, O Lord, pardon ($\iota\lambda\acute{\alpha}\sigma\eta$ in the LXX.) my iniquity, for it is great.” A doctrinal reference is not the point in either, though we know, of course, that there was only one way whereby the cry could be answered. The mere word no more necessarily teaches “propitiation,” than the Englishman does who talks of “propitious weather.” Compare the use of the kindred word $\iota\lambda\epsilon\omega\varsigma$ in Matt. 16:22. (Bible Treasury 5:63-4)

18:14 to his house: so most Edd. with mass of authority. Blass omits, as D and Sah. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.298)

justified: [. . . What is meant by the word “justified?” Is “rather” introduced without warrant? Is the sense, justified perfectly, or comparatively? Are we taught here that the publican went down to his house “justified” in the doctrinal sense of Romans 3, 4, 5, 8? T.]

. . . There is no ground to infer that “justification,” as taught in Romans and elsewhere, is meant in the expression, . . . because our Lord does not say that he “went down to his house justified.” We must beware of taking from Scripture no less than of adding to it. Now the sense here is not absolute but comparative justification, just as in that expression of Judah in the Septuagint Version of Genesis 38:26, $\delta\epsilon\delta\iota\kappa\alpha\iota\omega\tau\alpha\iota$ Θάμαρ

ἡ ἐγώ. "Thamar is justified rather than I," (i.e., more righteous.) "Rather," or "more," is decidedly implied by the commonly received reading, ἡ ἐκείνος. For my own part, however, I cannot but prefer παρ' ἐκείνον, the reading of the Vatican, Sinai, and Paris (No. 62) Uncials, supported by some good cursives and other authorities. This probably gave rise to ἡ γὰρ ἐκείνος, by a blunder of the scribes, which found its way into the great majority of copies. Beza's MS.(D) is almost a paraphrase as to this, μάλλον παρ αἰσκακείνον τον φαρισαιοον. But every variation proves that the sense intended is that the publican was justified in comparison with the Pharisee, and therefore that the doctrinal allusion is out of the question. (Bible Treasury 5:63-64) justified: There are no degrees in the justification of which Paul speaks; the Lord implies that there are in what He speaks of. Besides the form of the word differs. He is said to have gone down, not δικαιωθείς absolutely, but δεδικαιωμένος . . . παρ' ἐκείνον. (The perfect is used as to the state of the Christian viewed as dead with Christ to sin—discharged or cleared from it in God's sight (Rom. 6:7).) I do not doubt that this is the true text.

The common English version seems quite correct, though founded, no doubt, on the vulgarly received text, ἡ ἐκείνος. The great mass of uncials and cursives join in giving the strange reading ἡ γὰρ ἐκείνος, followed even in his eighth edition by Tischendorf, spite of the Sinai MS. which casts its weight into the scale of the Vatican (B) and Parisian 62 (L), not to speak of D with its not infrequent additions, and some few other authorities.

Dean Alford shows us the danger of misapplying the case to justification, which is his own view, by the remark he adds: "Therefore, he who would seek justification before God must seek it by humility and not by self-righteousness." It is the more to be regretted that this glaring error should have been made by one who had just confessed that we are not to find any doctrinal meanings in ἰλάσθητι. It would have been more consistent not to have pressed δεδικαιωμένος similarly. (Exp. of Luke, p. 299-300) rather than (ἡ): so A and all the later uncials. W.H., after Treg., adopt the neutral text παρ' ἐκείνον, above or beside that (other), in α BL, Old Lat. Sah. Memph. Blass adds μάλλον, as D. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.299-300)

18:19 one, God: so most authorities (versions and MSS.), as AD, etc., Syrr., etc., followed by Edd. in text. κ and B^{pm} omit "ο," and thus read "one God." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.301)

18:21 my: so κ A, etc., Syr^{sin} Latt., etc. Recent Edd. omit, as BD Syr^{cu}. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.301)

18:22 [this]: so A, etc.; but Edd. omit, following α BDL, 1, 33, 69, Syr^{cu} sin pesh Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.301)

the heavens: so Edd. after BD, Memph. (κ ALR having "heavens" without the article: so Tisch.). "Heaven" is the reading of PX, etc., Old Lat. Amiat. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.301)

18:24 Having seen him [become very sorrowful]: so AD Γ Δ , etc., most cursives, Syrr. Old Lat. Edd. adopt "Seeing him, said," following α BL, 1, Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.301) shall . . . enter: so κ ADR, and later uncials in general, most cursives, Syrr. Old Lat. Edd. "do . . . enter," after BL. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.301)

18:28 all (πάντα) and: so Treg. (text) following κ APRX Δ API, etc., most minuscules (33), Goth. Some excellent authorities [BDL, 1, etc., most Old Lat. Amiat. Memph.] have τὰ ἴδια, "our own" (so most Edd. and the Revv.). (cf. Bible Treasury 13:304 with EEW's notes, Exp. of Luke, p.363)

18:35 near: Luke, on the other hand, has been generally supposed to say that the miracle was performed on entering Jericho. So all the old English translations, Wickliff, Tyndale, Geneva, Cranmer, the Rhemish, as well as the Authorised: so the Latin, Syriac, and other ancient versions, with most moderns.

But it appears to me that the Greek phrase is so constructed as to avoid any such conclusion, and that the genuine, unforced meaning is "while he was near to Jericho." According to the usage of the New Testament there might have been ground for the objection raised, if Luke had employed the genitive absolute. In strict grammatical nicety there is nothing to tie the sense to the entry into Jericho; it means equally well, as far as language is concerned, while the Lord was in the neighbourhood.

I cannot doubt that what weighed with translators in general is the fact that chapter 19 opens with the Lord's entering and passing through Jericho. Hence it was assumed that the previously mentioned circumstance must have preceded this in time. And it must be owned if Luke, as a rule, adhered to the order of occurrence in his account, it would be most natural to translate chapter 18:35 as in the Authorised Version. But it has been shown throughout our Gospel that he adopts another and deeper order that the mere sequence of events, and habitually groups the words, works, and ways of our Lord in moral connection, whenever it is needful to this end, putting together what may have been far apart in time.

In the present case it seems to have been in the mind of the Spirit that all three who dwell on the Galilean ministry of Christ should mark Jericho and the healing of the blind there as a common starting-point before His formal appearance in Jerusalem. We can understand, therefore, why Luke, even if the incident of Zacchaeus occurred after the miracle, should, according to his manner, postpone his account of it till he had told us of the blind man healed. But there seems to have been a yet stronger reason of a similar character in the fact that, if the healing had been introduced after Zacchaeus, when (I have no doubt) it really took place, adherence to the mere chronology of the facts would have spoilt the very impressive order actually adopted, in which we see the tale of Zacchaeus, with salvation brought to his house through a chief tax-gatherer, followed at once by the parable of the pounds, which together beautifully set forth the general character and differing objects of the two advents of the Lord, who was about to suffer as the Ground of righteousness and salvation for the lost, instead of at once establishing His throne in Zion as others fondly thought. If this were the design of the inspiring Spirit, as I conceive it certainly to be, gathered from the special character traceable throughout its course, it does not seem possible to suggest any other order so admirably calculated to convey it as that which is pursued. Hence the point in verse 35 was to choose a phrase which, while not breaking the thread of the narrative, and, of course, in words thoroughly consistent with the exact truth, should nevertheless convey the thought of a time or state during which the particular act related took place. This, in my opinion, has been done perfectly in the language of Luke: so much so that, granting the aim to be as I suppose, no man can desire better words to combine what is intimated, or to avoid a false inference for all aware of that design. If, on the contrary, men, however learned, assume a bare order of fact, this naturally would influence their translation; and so I think we may fairly account for the common mistake. (Exp. of Luke, p.304-6) near: The truth is, that our English version, excellent as it is, goes a little beyond the word of Luke; for our evangelist does not say "When he was come nigh unto Jericho," but "when he was nigh." It is not necessarily a question of coming near, but simply of being in the neighbourhood. The utmost which can or ought to be allowed is, that if the context so required, it might bear the translation (a paraphrase rather) of coming nigh; but this case demands the very reverse. It is evident, whether you go into a place or whether you come out of it, you are equally nigh on one side of the town or on the other. The truth is, that Luke merely states the fact of vicinity here. . . . leaving it open to other Scriptures to define the time with more precision. . . . The other Gospels positively tell us it was as He went out. (Lect. Intro. to the Gospels, p. 361-2. See also Exp. of Mark, p. 158, Bible Treasury 4:234, 6:3) near: I am surprised ἐν τῷ ἐγγίζειν αὐτόν is not represented [in the RV] in its vagueness, "while he was nigh," so as to suit going out of Jericho as truly as coming in. (Cf. Matt. 20:29; Mark 10:46.) Perhaps they and the Authorised Version were deterred by the story of Zacchæus afterwards as the Lord passed through Jericho; but this is no sufficient obstacle. To my mind the aim of the Spirit appears to be the bringing together this story and the parable of the Pounds (chap. 19) to illustrate the moral ways of God in the two advents of Christ, which would have been marred by the interposition of the blind man healed in its actual historic place. (Bible Treasury 13:304)

18:40 commanded: [see note to Mk. 10:49]

19:13 while I am coming: so Edd. after \aleph ABD, etc. The T.R. "till I come" is the reading of $\Gamma\Delta\Lambda$, and most of the later uncials, with nearly all minuscules (69). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.312)

19:22 Λ He saith: Before "He says," $\text{A}\Delta$, etc., 33, add "And." Blass, as D: $\delta\ \delta\epsilon\ \epsilon\acute{\iota}\pi\epsilon\nu$, "And He said." Other Edd. omit, as \aleph BG, etc., 1, 69, Syrr. Amiat. Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.313)

19:23 a bank: K and a considerable number of cursives, Syrr^{sin} have "the." Edd. omit, after \aleph ABD, etc., 1, 33, 69. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.313)

19:25 [whole verse]: Blass omits verse 25, as D, 69, Syrr^{cu} sin. Other Edd. accept it. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.313)

19:29 [the mount] of Olives: It may be well to read uniformly "Olivet" as in Acts 1:12, rather than "the mount of Olives," (Bible Treasury 14:336)

19:31 because: so Edd. with \aleph ABD, etc., 69, Syrr. Amiat. Memph. ERA, etc., 1, 33, Syrr^{sin} omit. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.314)

19:38 blessed the King that cometh in Jehovah's name: so \aleph corr ALR $\Gamma\Delta$ and later uncials, with nearly all cursives, Syrr^{cu} sin Vulg. Goth. B: "the coming One, the King." D and Old Lat.: "He that comes." \aleph mm and Origen omit "that comes": so Tisch. followed by Blass, who also rejects "in the name of [the] LORD," but this capriciously. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.315)

19:42 at least: so Tisch. and Blass, after AR, etc., Syrr^{cu} sin Vulg. Arm. Other Edd. omit, as \aleph BDL, Memph. Goth. Aeth. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.317)

this thy day: so Lachm. and Tisch. after Δ M, etc., Syrr^{sin}. Other Edd. (as Revv.) omit "thy," with \aleph ABDL Syrr^{cu} Old Lat. Origen, etc. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.317) thy: so Tisch. with $\text{A}\Delta$ M, etc., Syrr^{cu} sin Vulg. Cyril. Other Edd. omit, following \aleph BL, Memph. Aeth. Arm. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.317) thy . . . thy: I should be disposed to go farther [than the American correctors to the RV], and keep "thy" day and "thy" peace in the text. The Americans may well speak of "some ancient authorities" reading the pronoun twice, for the omission of which one may easily account, not so for its insertion. (Bible Treasury 14:336)

19:45 sold: There is great difference in the readings here, some adding "in the temple" or "in it" [$\text{A}\Delta$, etc., most minuscules, Syrr. Old Lat.]: some adding "and those that bought," and some both. So it was in the days of Origen (ed. de la Rue IV.193), who notices all three forms. It seems probable that the addition grew from the parallel passages in Matthew and Mark. [Edd. have simply "sold," as \aleph BCL 1, 69, Syrr^{sin} Memph. Arm.] (Bible Treasury 9:40, EEW's Notes in brackets, Exp. of Luke, p.318)

19:46 shall be: so Edd. after \aleph corr BLR, Arm. Origen. ACDA, etc., most minuscules, Syrr^{cu} Old Lat. have "is." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.318)

20:1 the Λ days: The common addition of ἐκείνων, "those" [ACE, etc., 33, 69], seems to be a correction from not seeing the connection with 19:47. \aleph BD and Q, at least ten cursives and most of the more ancient versions [Old Lat. Syrr^{cu} pesch Memph.] give the shorter reading. (Bible Treasury 9:54, Exp. of Luke, p.319)

chief: so most Edd., following \aleph BCDLMQR, 1, 33, 69. Tisch. reads "priests" with AEFG, etc. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.319)

20:3 [one] word: \aleph BLR, a few cursives [1, 33, 69] and versions [e.g., Memph.] omit ἐνα [ACDE, etc.], which may be imported from Mark. (Bible Treasury 9:54). [Revv.: "something" (λογον).] (EEW's Notes in brackets, Exp. of Luke, p.320)

20:5 Why Λ : The weight of evidence [\aleph BEL, etc., 69, Memph.] seems clearly against "then" [ACD, etc., 1, 33, Amiat.]. (Bible Treasury 9:54, EEW's Notes in brackets, Exp. of Luke, p.320)

20:9 a Λ man: so Edd. with \aleph BCDEL, etc., 1, 33, Old Lat. Memph. A, 69, Syrr. have "a certain." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.321)

20:13 perhaps Λ : "when they see", so $\text{A}\Gamma\Delta\Delta\text{II}$, later uncials, most cursives, Syrr^{pesch}. Edd. omit, following \aleph CDLQ, 1, 33, Syrr^{cu} Memph. Arm. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.322)

perhaps Λ : there is good authority for omitting "when they see him," with lesser points before and after; also "why tempt ye me?" from Mark, with other omissions. (Bible Treasury 13:304)

20:14 come: \aleph CDLR, most cursives (33, 69), Syrr^{cu} pesch Memph. add "come". Edd. omit, as $\text{A}\text{B}\text{K}\text{M}\text{Q}\text{II}$, 1, most Old Lat. Amiat., Goth. Arm. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.322)

20:20 governor: "ruling power" says Green (Bible Treasury 14:336)

20:23 Why do ye tempt me?: ACD, etc., most cursives, Old Lat. add "Why do ye tempt me?" which Edd. reject, after \aleph BL, 1, Syrr. Memph. Goth. Arm. (from Mark). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.323)

20:24 denarius Λ : After "denarius," \aleph CL, 1, 33, 69, Memph., etc., add "and they shewed it to Him and He said." Syrr^{sin} has "and they shewed it to Him" after the question. Edd., however, adhere to ABD, etc., most cursives and Old Lat., Syrr^{cu} and Goth. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.323)

20:28 be (ἦ): so most Edd., according to \aleph BLP, 1, 33, Syrr^{cu}, most Old Lat. Memph. Arm. Aeth. Blass: "die" (ἀποθάνῃ) after $\text{A}\Gamma\Delta\Delta\text{II}$, later uncials, nearly all cursives, Syrr^{sin} and Goth. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.323)

20:30 [took the woman and he died childless]: Blass retains here "took the woman and he died childless," after $\text{A}\text{P}\Delta\Delta\text{II}$, etc., most cursives (1, 33, 69), Syrr^{cu} sin Old Lat. Amiat. Other Edd. omit the words, as \aleph BDL. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.323)

20:34 Λ said: Before "said," $\text{A}\text{E}\Delta$, etc., have "answering," which is rejected by Edd. with \aleph BDL, Old Lat. Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.324)

20:40 for: The "and" of T.R. is in ADE, etc., 1, 69, Old Lat. Syrr., and is retained by Blass (as by Hahn and Godet in their expositions).

Very ancient authorities (ⲁBLR) and a few cursives (1, 33) support γάρ, “for.” [So W.H.] (EEW’s Notes in brackets, Exp. of Luke, p.325, see also Bible Treasury 9:55)

20:42 and . . . himself: so Blass, after Lachmann, with ADP, Syrr. Vulg. Goth. Others read “for,” with ⲁBLR, 33, etc. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.325)

20:45 the: so Edd. with BD. “His” is read in ⲁAL, etc., Syr^{sin}. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.328)

20:47 sentence: It seems singular that κρίμα should be confounded in verse 47 with κατάκριμα: “sentence” (often included in “charge” also) is the true thought. (Cf. chap. 23:40.) (Bible Treasury 13:304)

21:4 [of God]: After “gifts,” ADΓΔΔΠ, nearly all cursives (33, 69), Syr^{pesch} Old Lat. add “of God,” which Edd. omit, as ⲁBLX, 1, Syrr^{cu sin hier} Memph. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.329)

21:8 [therefore]: ΑΓΔΔΠ, etc., most cursives (1, 33, 69), Amiat., here add “therefore.” Edd. omit, according to BDLX, Syrr^{cu sin} Old Lat. Aeth. Arm. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.330)

21:10 then said he to them: These words, omitted by Blass (as in D with some Lat. Syrr^{cu sin}), are retained by other Edd. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.331)

21:11 in different places: The critical text connects “in different places” with “famines” — “and in different places famines.” (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.331)

21:15 to resist or reply unto: such is the order of the verbs in ⲁBL, 69 (Edd.), instead of “gainsay or resist.” (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.331)

21:19 gain: [κτήσασθε, after Tisch., from ⲁDLRXΓ, etc. Other Edd. (Rev.) adopt κτήσεσθε, “ye shall gain,” as in AB, Syrr^{cu pesch hel} Lat. Aeth. Arm. Tertullian, Origen.] a reading at least questionable. AB are but slender authority for κτήσεσθε, as against κτήσασθε differing only by one letter; and their own rendering of 1 Thessalonians 4:5 sustains the Authorised Version, “possess,” against their own “win” here. (Bible Treasury 13:304) (EEW’s Notes in brackets, Exp. of Luke, p.331)

21:23 But: “But” before this “woe,” is in ⲁAC, etc., 1, 33, 69, Syrr^{cu sin} Memph. It is not in BDL or most Old Latin and is rejected by Edd. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.332)

21:25 in perplexity . . . roar: so Tisch., W.H., etc., with ⲁABCLM, etc., 1, 33, 69, Syrr^{cu pesch hel} Old Lat. Memph. Arm. (Edd.). The text underlying A.V. has the support of ΔΓΔΔΠ, etc., most cursives, Old Lat. Blass reads: “in perplexity, roar (ἦχος) as (ὡς) of, etc.” So Syrr^{cu sin}, the latter without “as” (i.e. “the voice of the sea and shaking”). (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.333)

21:32 this generation: [See note to Mat. 24:34]

21:35 that day come upon you suddenly; for as a snare: so Blass, as Wordsworth, Milligan, McClellan, after AC, later uncials and most cursives, Syrr^{cu pesch hel hier} Arm. (Euseb. Basil). Other Edd. (Alford and Rev.) follow ⲁBDL, Old Lat. Memph.: “come upon you suddenly as a snare; for it shall come.” (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.334)

21:36 But watch: as Edd. with ⲁBD. “Watch therefore” of T.R. is as ACRL, etc., Syr^{cu} Amiat., Aeth. Memph. Arm. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.334)

may be deemed worthy: so Blass, with ACDR and all later uncials, most cursives, Syrr. Old Lat. Arm. Tertullian. Tisch., W.H., etc., adopt “may have strength” (R.V. “prevail”), following ⲁBLX, 1, 33, Memph. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.334)

21:37 [the mount] of Olives: [See note to Luke 19:29]

22:3 And: It may be well here to note that the English Version misleads if it be inferred from verse 3 that it was at this time Satan entered into Judas; for we know from John 13:27 that it was only after the sop, the latter Gospel also distinguishing this full action of the enemy from the earlier occasion when he had put it into the betrayer’s heart. The truth is that Luke has no expression of time here, using only a particle of transition, and therefore contents himself with the broad fact without entering into the detail of its successive stages, which found their fitting place with him whose task of love was to linger on the person of the Lord. (Exp. of Luke, p.336-7)

And: It is quite general here in verse 3: “And [not Then] Satan entered into Judas.” The precise time is shewn in John 13:27, where then is expressed; here the statement is general, as often in the third Evangelist. So in 24:12 it should be And or But, not Then. (God’s Inspiration of the Scriptures, p. 343) called: so ⲁBDLX, 69, Memph. Arm. “Surnamed” is found in ACPR, etc., Syr^{sin}. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.336)

22:14 [twelve]: Before “apostles” T.R. has “twelve,” from ACEPRA, etc., Amiat. Memph. Edd. omit, after ⲁBD, Syr^{sin} Old Lat. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.337)

22:16 will: [See note to Mat. 26:29]

not . . . any more (οὐκέτι): so Weiss and Blass, after C^{corr} DP, etc., Syrr^{cu sin} Aeth. Arm. W.H. omit οὐκέτι after ⲁABC^{pm} HL. It can scarcely, however, have been added from Mark (Meyer, Weiss). (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.338)

22:17 a: so Edd. with ⲁBCEGH, etc., most cursives. AD, etc., have “the.” (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.338)

22:18 will: [See note to Mat. 26:29]

henceforth: so Edd. after ⲁBDGKLMII, 1, Syrr^{cu} Egyptians, Arm. Omitted in AC, etc., most cursives, and Old Lat. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.338)

22:19-20 which is given for you . . . poured out for you: These words, accepted by Lachm. Tisch. Treg. and Alford, no less than by Wordsworth, as being in all uncials except D, the whole of the cursives and versions except Old Lat. and Syrr^{cu}, which last omits verse 20 (in Syrr^{sin} it is merely a question of arrangement), are on the “one cup” theory, discredited by W.H. (preceded by Dean Blakesley), Weiss and Blass. The English critics’ case against this alleged “interpolation” (from 1 Cor. 11:24f.) would be found stated in W.H., Vol II., App., p. 63f. In defence of the title of the words to a place in Luke’s text, see Scrivener, Vol.II., p. 351ff., and Expositor, March-April, 1908. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.338)

22:20 covenant: “Testament” is wrong here, and, indeed, everywhere else in the New Testament, save in the parenthesis of Heb. 9:16,17. (Lect. Intro. to the Gospels, p. 377)

22:22 and: so A, etc., Syrr^{cu sin} and Vulg. Edd. follow ⲁBDLT, Memph. “for.” (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.339)

22:24 should be: perhaps “should be,” or [sic] is more idiomatic here than “is” or “was” (Bible Treasury 14:336)

22:31 And the Lord said: The words “And the Lord said,” are in ⲁADQ. Edd. omit, following BLT, Syrr^{sin} and Egyptian versions. A precarious omission with no more than three uncials. (Exp. of Luke, p.340)

And the Lord said . . . has begged for: There is in chapter 22:31 [of the RV] the precarious omission of the opening words “And the Lord said" with no more than three uncials (B L T). Thus they render, "Simon, Simon, behold, Satan asked to have you that he might sift you as wheat; but I made supplication for thee, that thy faith fail not: and do thou, when once thou hast turned again, stablish thy brethren," consigning to the margin the notion of Alford, &c., that ἐξαίτεσθαι should here convey the sense of "obtained you by asking;" which is clean contrary to the context and indeed to the truth generally. (Bible Treasury 13:304) has begged for: It is a mistake that ἐξαίτεσθαι means always "to have prevailed," though it sometimes bears this force. But it is often no more than begging off, or to have in one's power, as here. "Obtain by asking" (Alford) is clean contrary to the context, and, indeed, to the truth generally. (Exp. of Luke, p.340)

22:32 turned again: The verb ἐπιστρέφω is used both for the first turning to the Lord, and for turning back if one have wandered, as here. (Exp. of Luke, p.340) turned again: The word rendered "converted" means the turning to God, whether it be conversion originally, or the turning back when one has departed from Him. The latter is of course what is meant here. It is what we commonly call "restoration" of soul rather than what people in general understand by "conversion." The word is suitable to either. "Thou, when once thou hast turned again, strengthen thy brethren." (Bible Treasury N11:375)

22:37 yet: so Blass (omitting ὅτι, that), with ΔΑΙ, Syr^{cu} Vulg. Arm. Other Edd. omit, after ἈΒΔΗΛ, etc., 1, Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.341)

22:39 the: so Edd., following ἈΒΔΛ, etc., Amiat. "His" (T.R.) is the reading of ΕΩΔ^{mm}, etc., 69, Syrr^{cu sin pesch}. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.342)

22:43-44 [whole verses]: It is well known that many Fathers, Greek and Latin, have cast a doubt upon verses 43 and 44 . . . Several of the more ancient MSS. indeed also omit them, as the Alexandrian, Vatican, and others, beside ancient versions; but they are amply verified by external witnesses, and the truth taught has the closest affinity to the line which Luke was given to take up. (Exp. of Luke, p. 343)

[whole verses]: Besides AB, ^{cor}RT, and Akhmim MS., the Sinaitic Syriac omits these verses; whilst ^{mm}DFGHKLM, etc., most cursives, Syrr^{cu pesch} ^{hcl hier}, and ancient Armenian attest them, as do Old Lat. also Irenaeus, Hippolytus, Gregory Nazianzen, Jerome, Augustine, etc. After Lachmann, W.H. (see their App., p. 64ff.) and Weiss question; but Blass, after Treg. Tisch. Meyer, Alford, etc., upholds them. Cf. Scrivener, Vol.II., p. 353ff. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.343)

[whole verses]: So difficult is the path of faith for men in one direction or another, that (in earlier days when, in the midst of adversaries and full of superstition, men yet clung to the stainless honour of the Son of God) the timid orthodox ventured on the bold step of expunging verses 44, 45 [sic]; for what, after all, is so adventurous as this Uziah-like anxiety for the ark of God? They thought it impossible that the Lord Jesus could suffer thus. Little did they estimate the depth unfathomable of the cross, when God hid His face from Him. Had they discerned this better, and been simple in the faith of His real manhood, and held to the written word about His sufferings on and before the cross, they had not been so easily stumbled. But they were not simple, understood ill the Scriptures, and accordingly dared, some to stigmatize these verses, others to strike them out. In modern days they manage things both more prudently and more effectually. They may not obelize or obliterate; but they do not believe them. (Lect. Intro. to the Gospels, p. 383-4)

[whole verses]: As to . . . Luke 22:43,44 and 23:34, Mr. [Thomas Sheldon] Green, we regret to say, seems to be more sceptical than

Tischendorf, who prints them without hesitation. The Christian has only to refer to his Bible in order to feel what is endangered. (Bible Treasury 1:296)

22:45 the: so Edd. after ἈΒΔΩΡΤ, Arm. The "his" of T.R. (Elzevir) came from 1, Latt. Syrr^{cu sin} Memph. Aeth. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.344)

22:47 as, etc.: DE, etc., have "But as." Edd., however, reject the δέ, following ἈΒΛΡΤΧ, etc., 1, 69, Amiat. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.344)

22:49 said: ΑΕΡΔ, etc., 1, 69, Syrr. Amiat. add "to him," which Edd. omit, according to ἈΒΛΤΧ, Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.344)

22:51 [last half of verse]: Blass follows D: "And stretching forth his hand, he touched him, and his ear was restored." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.345)

22:52 against: so most Edd., with ἈΒΔΛ, etc. Tisch.: "to," as ἈΓΗ, etc. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.345)

22:54 introduced: so most of the authorities. Blass follows DT, Syrr^{cu sin}, and some Old Lat. with Aeth. in the omission of εἰσάγαγον. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.345)

[him]: after "introduced": so ΕΧΔ, etc., 69, Memph. Edd. omit, as ἈΒΔΚΛΜ, etc., Old Lat. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.345)

22:57 denied _Λ: [him]: so ΑΔ^{mm} ΕΓΗ, etc., most cursives (69), Amiat. Edd. omit, as ἈΒΚΛΜ, etc., Syrr^{cu sin pesch}, most Old Lat. and the Egyptian versions. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.345)

22:60 a: so all authorities, except a few of the minuscules, Syr^{sin} and Sah., which have "the." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.346)

22:61 to-day: so most Edd., after ἈΒΚΛΜΤ, Syr^{sin} Aeth. Blass omits, as ΑΔΓΔΔ, nearly all cursives, and copies of Old Lat. Syr^{cu} Arm. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.346) to-day: [The RV gives] the addition, on better evidence [than merely B L T], of "to-day" (Bible Treasury 13:304)

22:62 [whole verse]: Verse 62, which W.H. bracket, Blass omits entirely because the verse is absent from some copies of the Old Lat. and he supposes was inserted from Matthew. It is in Syr^{sin}, as in all Greek MS., "Peter": so A, etc., Syrr. Vulg. Aeth. Edd. omit, as ἈΒΔΚΛΜ, etc., Syrr^{cu sin} Memph. Arm. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.346)

22:63 him: so Edd., with ἈΒΔΛΜ, etc., Syr^{sin} Old Lat. Memph. "Jesus" is the reading of ΑΕΧΔ, etc., 1, 69, the other Syrr. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.346)

22:64 up _Λ: After "covering him up," ΑΧΓΔΔ, etc., most cursives, Amiat., add "smote his face and," which Edd. omit, after ἈΒΚΛΜ, Syrr^{cu sin} and Egyptians. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.347)

up _Λ: all but the same manuscripts [B L T] omit "struck him on the face and" in verse 64 (Bible Treasury 13:304)

22:66 their _Λ: After "their," ΔΔ, 1, 69, add "own," which is omitted by Edd. as not in ἈΒΔΛΤ, etc. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.347)

22:68 nor let me go: AD, all later uncials, most cursives. Syrr.(including sin.) Old Lat. here add "nor let me go," which Edd. omit, as ἈΒΛΤ, Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.347)

22:69 but: so Edd. with ἈΒΔΛΤΧ, Old Lat. ΕΔ, etc., omit. Syrr^{cu sin} have "for." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.347)

22:70 [whole verse]: [The American correctors of the RV reflect] Mr. Green again. (Bible Treasury 14:336)

23:2 our: so Edd. after \aleph BDH, etc., 69, Syrr. Old Lat. Memph. Sah. Aeth. Blass, with AEG, etc., and most cursives, adheres to "the." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.348)

Christ, a king: [The American correctors of the RV, "Christ a king," are] right. (Bible Treasury 14:336)

23:6 of Galilee: so \aleph DRXT $\Delta\Delta\Delta\Delta\Delta\Delta$, later uncials, all cursives, Syrr. Old Lat. Sah. Edd. omit, as \aleph BLT, Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.349)

23:8 [much]: so \aleph ARXT $\Delta\Delta\Delta$, later uncials, most minuscules, Syrr. Old Lat. Edd. omit, following \aleph BDKLMII, 1, Syrr^{cu sin} Sah. Memph. The word is in \aleph ERT $\Delta\Delta\Delta$, etc., 13, 69, other Syrr. Old Lat. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.349)

23:15 I remitted ($\alpha\nu\epsilon\pi\epsilon\mu\psi\alpha$) you to him: so Lachm., Treg., Meyer, Alford, etc., with \aleph DXT $\Delta\Delta\Delta\Delta\Delta\Delta$, later uncials, nearly all cursives, Syr^{hcl} (^{tsl}), most Old Lat. (Cf. verse 10.) Most Syrr. (including sin.) have "I sent him to him." Tisch., W.H. (Rev.), Blass and Weiss adopt "He sent him back ($\alpha\nu\epsilon\pi\epsilon\mu\psi\epsilon$) to us," following \aleph BKLM, etc., the Egyptians and Aeth. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.350)

I remitted you to him: [The American correctors of the RV, who add marg. Many ancient authorities read I sent you to him, are] right again. The Revisers were not entitled to ignore so many and good ancient authorities for "I remitted you to him." (Bible Treasury 14:336)

23:17 [whole verse]: Whether the 17th verse be genuine or not, there can be no doubt from what follows that it was the custom to release a prisoner at this time. Several excellent authorities omit the verse, as the Alexandrian, the Vatican, the Parisian uncials (62 and 63), with several very ancient versions, whilst others change its position. Nevertheless the Sinai, with the mass of MSS. and some of the best versions, contains it. On the whole the balance seems in its favour, as it also would be harsh to act upon an unexplained custom. (Exp. of Luke, p. 350)

[whole verse]: The versions omitting are the Egyptians and one copy of Old Lat. The uncials containing it, besides \aleph , are XT $\Delta\Delta\Delta\Delta\Delta\Delta$, etc.; all the cursives show it, besides several copies of Old Lat., with Amiat. of Vulg. The Syrr. have it, only that Cureton's and the Sinaitic, as Cod. D., place it after verse 19. Treg., Tisch., Meyer, W.H., Weiss (as from Matthew or Mark) discredit, but Blass (as Wordsworth and Milligan) retains the verse; this critic being of opinion that the omission arose from confusion of the two initial $\alpha\nu\acute{\alpha}\gamma\gamma\eta\nu$ $\delta\acute{\epsilon}$ and $\alpha\nu\acute{\epsilon}\kappa\rho\alpha\lambda\alpha\nu$ (verse 18) $\delta\acute{\epsilon}$, and he observed that $\alpha\nu\acute{\alpha}\gamma\gamma\eta\nu$ $\epsilon\lambda\chi\epsilon$ is Lucan (14:18). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.350)

23:17 [whole verse]: Chapter 23:17 is rejected [in the RV] with the best authorities and critics; it was founded probably on Matthew and Mark, with a good many changes of words here and there. (Bible Treasury 13:304)

23:20 again therefore: so X, etc. Edd. read "and ($\delta\epsilon$) again," as \aleph ABDLT, Syr^{sin} Latt. Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.351)

23:23 urgent: "urgent" is less ambiguous than "instant." (Bible Treasury 14:336)

and of the high priests: so \aleph ADTX $\Delta\Delta\Delta\Delta\Delta\Delta$, later uncials, all cursives, Syrr. (including sin.). Blass brackets. Other Edd. omit, as \aleph BL, most Old Lat., Amiat., Sah. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.351)

23:25 released λ : After "released," KMII, 1, 69, Syrr. Amiat., add "to them." Edd. omit, with \aleph ABD, etc. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.351)

23:27 who λ : After "who," C^{corr}EP Δ , etc., 1, add "also," which Edd. reject, after ABC^{pm}DEX, 33, Old Lat. Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.352)

23:31 are done: [see note to Lk. 16:9]

23:33 came: so most Edd., after \aleph BCDLQ, 33, 69, Syrr^{cu sin pesch} Old Lat. Tisch.: "Had gone," as T.R., from AEX Δ , etc. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.353)

23:34 [first part of verse]: After Lachm. W.H. (see their App. p.67f.) and Weiss discredit this verse as far as "do," on the strength of \aleph ^{corr} BD^{pm} and Akhmim MS., three cursives, Syrr^{sin} and the Coptic versions. The words are attested by \aleph ^{pm} ACD^{corr} QXT $\Delta\Delta\Delta\Delta\Delta\Delta$, etc., nearly all cursives, including 1, 33, 69, Syrr^{cu pesch hcl hier}, several Old Lat., Arm. Aeth., and are accepted by Blass, following Tisch. Treg. Alford, etc. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.353)

[first part of verse]: [See note to Luke 22:43-44.]

23:35 also: as ABC, with all other uncials and the mass of cursives. The word is omitted by Tisch., after \aleph D and five minuscules. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.354) with them: so AT $\Delta\Delta\Delta\Delta\Delta\Delta$, all later uncials, and most cursives, Syrr^{cu sin} hcl. Edd. omit, as \aleph BCDL, etc., 33, 69, several Old Lat. Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.354) chosen one of God: Influenced by W.H., the revisers have taken $\tau\omicron\upsilon$ $\theta\epsilon\omicron\upsilon$ as preceding "chosen," and so "God" with a comma after it. Syr^{sin}, however, sustains the earlier punctuation. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.354)

23:36 up λ : The "and" of T.R. after "coming up," which is in C^{corr} EQX Δ , etc., 1, 33, 69, most Syrr. Amiat. Edd. omit, following \aleph ABC^{pm} L, etc. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.354)

23:38 in Greek, and Roman, and Hebrew letters: Between "inscription" and "the king," Lachm., with \aleph ^{pm}AC^{corr} DX $\Delta\Delta\Delta\Delta$, etc., all cursives, Syrr^{pesch hcl}, most Old Lat. Arm. Aeth., reads "in Greek and Roman and Hebrew letters." (Cf. John 19:20.) All later Edd. omit these words, after \aleph ^{corr} BC^{pm} L, Syrr^{cu sin} and Egyptian versions. Syr^{sin} has "And an inscription was written and placed over him, This is the king of the Jews." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.354-5)

23:39 saying, Art not: added by \aleph ACQR, etc. Edd. omit, as BDL. Most Edd. reproduce as above the reading of \aleph BC^{pm} L, etc., Syrr^{cu sin} Sah. Memph. Arm. Aeth. Blass follows D in omission of all after "him." The T.R. has, "If thou art," etc., from AC^{corr} and all later uncials, all cursives, the other Syrr. and Amiat. The Old Lat. copies are divided. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.355)

23:42 [Lord]: Here \aleph ^{corr} AC^{corr}, all the later uncials and the minuscules, Syrr^{cu sin} Old Lat. Aeth. add "Lord." Some few, but of the highest authority (\aleph BCL, the Sahidic and Coptic versions and Origen sometimes) read, "Jesus, remember me," etc. (see Bible Treasury 9:150, Exp. of Luke, p. 356) So W.H. and Weiss. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.356)

in: "In" before "thy kingdom" is the reading of \aleph AC $\Delta\Delta\Delta\Delta$, for which BL, Syr^{sin} have "into": so W.H., Treg. and Rev. in marg. and Weiss. Blass, after D, reads the verse thus: "And turning to the Lord, he said to him, Remember me in the day of thy coming ($\epsilon\lambda\epsilon\upsilon\sigma\epsilon\omega\varsigma$)." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.356)

23:43 he: so Edd., as \aleph BL, Sah. "Jesus" is read in ACEQRX Δ , etc., Syrr (including sin.). (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.356)

λ to-day: Before "to-day," Blass introduces "Take courage ($\theta\acute{\alpha}\rho\sigma\epsilon\iota$)," as D. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.356) to-day shalt: [In "Things to Come" for May, which I send, you will find a very dangerous paper on this text, practically undoing, as far as it goes, its testimony to Christ's work. If the robber's spirit did not go that day to Paradise, where did it go? The error opens the door to Purgatory or anything but the truth. O.P.]

A. — It is a bold man who ventures to set aside on this text, not only the Authorised and Revised Versions, but every translation, ancient or modern, hitherto regarded as reliable; and for this to set aside the conviction of the great mass of the godly orthodox, not only in other churches so-called, but in his own English Establishment. For it is mere claptrap and party spirit to attack in particular those he calls Plymouth Brethren, because the O.B. Witness rejected his own “strange doctrine. His notion is that Paradise “is never used in any other sense than that of an earthly place of beauty and delight.” Never but an earthly place! and this in full view of Rev. 21, 22! And he dares to say that for “the intermediate state,” and Paradise as a part of it, “they have not a shred of scripture warrant! nothing but a mixture of Heathen and Jewish Tradition handed down and further corrupted by Pagans and Papists!”

Let us weigh his two arguments. 1. If the Lord had intended to separate “to-day” from the introductory clause, either the particle $\delta\tau\iota$ would have been prefixed, as in Mark 14:30, or the passage would have been differently constructed, as in Luke 9:21,22; 19:9. But this is decisively overthrown by the fact that, with the formula of our verse, in the Gospels of Matthew, Mark, and Luke there is nearly an equal number where $\delta\tau\iota$ is omitted as inserted, various readings causing a slight uncertainty. In that of John who uses the twofold “verily,” the $\delta\tau\iota$ occurs for about half the cases which omit it. Clearly therefore there is no such rule as is alleged, and the deduction as to its absence in Luke 23 is unfounded. There is a similar usage in Hebrew and our own tongue, where “that” is often dropped, instead of being formally expressed.

2. Thirty-eight examples are pointed out in the book of Deuteronomy to justify taking “to-day” with “Verily I say unto thee.” Now not one of these has the smallest analogy with our verse. They are all due to the exceptional nature of Moses’ pathetic charge “this day,” and of Israel about to cross the Jordan which was forbidden him. What has that to do with the case before us? The resemblance is only in the word, not the least in the sense or context. It is not “a common Hebrew idiom used to emphasize and mark the solemnity of what was said,” &c. It is the peculiarity of Deuteronomy and owing to the then circumstances. On the contrary the Lord is replying to the earnest prayer of the robber, then repentant and believing: Remember me, when Thou comest in Thy kingdom. The testimony of His enemies in derision had through our Lord’s words and bearing penetrated; but he knew that he would have to wait for the coming in His kingdom. The whole force of the answer of grace and truth is that “To-day thou shalt be with Me in Paradise”; and putting “to-day” in the first place gave it marked emphasis. What case in Deuteronomy ever approaches even a parallel? To talk of such dictionary or concordance work as this settling the question is more than ordinary illusion.

The aim of the enemy is to defraud the departing saint of his joy in looking for immediate entrance into heavenly blessedness with Christ, as the fruit of redemption. The very gospel of God is thus enfeebled and darkened. (Bible Treasury N4:110)

today shalt: . . . the authorised version gives the true sense. The rendering which connects “today” with “I say” is absurd. It was utterly needless to mention when the Lord was speaking, which could only be at that moment. (Christian Annotator 2:375)

23:44 now: so BC^m L, Memph., followed by most Edd. Blass omits, as \aleph AC^{corr} DQRXT Δ AM Π , all later uncials, all cursives, Syrr. Old Latt. Sah. Arm. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.362)

23:45 and the sun was darkened: so Lachm., Treg., Meyer, and Blass after A^{corr} DQRXT Δ AM Π , all later uncials, most cursives, all Syrr. Tisch., W.H. have “the sun being eclipsed” (Rev. “the sun’s light failing”), τοῦ ἡλίου ἐκλείποντος (Weiss, Nestle: ἐκλείποντος), as in \aleph BC^m L and Egyptians. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.363)

23:46 And Jesus, having cried with a loud voice, said: the remark [of the American correctors of the RV, “Let margin and text change places,”] is well-founded (Bible Treasury 14:336) commend: so Edd., following \aleph ABCKM, etc., 33, Syrr^{cu sin}. T.R. “will commend” is the reading of ELA, etc. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.363)

23:48 having beheld: so Edd. with \aleph BCDL, etc., 33, Syrr. EPQ Δ , etc., 69, read “beholding.” (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.363)

23:53 him: so Edd., following \aleph BCD and most Old Lat. “It” is the reading of AELPX Γ Δ AM Π , all later uncials, and most cursives (33). (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.363)

24:1 prepared λ : After “prepared,” in the rest of the verse, Blass, with A^{corr} DX Γ IIA and all later uncials, nearly all minuscules, Syrr. Sah. Arm. and Eusebius, adds “and some others with them.” Other Edd. omit, as \aleph BC^m L, 33, most Old Lat. Memph. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.365)

24:3 of the Lord Jesus: so Weiss, with some earlier Edd., after \aleph ABCL, all other uncials but one, all cursives, Syrr. other than Cureton’s and Sinai, Memph. Arm. Aeth. Blass omits the words, which W.H., exceptionally following D and Old Latt., discredits. Cf. R.V. marg. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.365)

24:6 He is not here, but is risen: so all authorities except D and Itala. Nevertheless, W.H., Blass, and Weiss agree in treating the words as no part of the primitive text. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.365)

24:9 from the sepulchre: retained by Weiss, as in all authorities but those mentioned in last note, [i.e., D and Itala] with Memph. and Arm. W.H. brackets; Blass omits. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.366)

24:10 who: so \aleph corrX, etc., Syrr. Memph. Arm. Edd. (Rev.) reject, as \aleph ^m ABDEFGH, etc., Old Lat. Sah. Aeth., according to which there would be two sentences in the verse; the first ending either with “James” (W.H.) or with “them” (Weiss). Blass omits all after “them.” (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.366)

24:12 [whole verse]: This verse is retained by Lachm. and Treg., but rejected by Tisch. and Blass, and discredited by W.H. and Weiss, who suppose that it was drawn from John 20:4. It is, however, attested by \aleph AB, 1, Syrr^{cu sin}. The Syrr., with \aleph corr and B, omit (as Rev.) κείμενα, “lying (laid),” whilst \aleph ^m AK Π have not μόνα, “alone (by themselves).” (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.367)

[whole verse]: It is strange that any critics should have been moved by an erratic uncial to doubt chapter 24:12 and 40. (Bible Treasury 13:304)

but: [See note on Luke 22:3.]

went away home: Such is the true connection and rendering of $\pi\rho\delta\varsigma\ \epsilon\alpha\upsilon\tau\acute{o}\nu$ with ἀπῆλθε, not with θανατόζων, as in the Authorised Version and many others. (Exp. of Luke, p.367)

24:13 sixty: so Edd., after ABDL, etc. “One hundred and sixty” is in \aleph [I?]K^mN^m Π , etc., and Old Lat. (EEW’s Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.368)

24:17 as ye walk? And they stood downcast: The reading of the Sinaitic, Alexandrian (first hand it would seem), Vatican, Parisian (L. ἑστησαν), confirmed by some excellent ancient versions [Egyptian], is ἐστάθησαν [R.V. “stood still”], the effect of which would be to close the Lord’s question with “as ye walk,” and to present the words “and they stood downcast” as the consequence before Cleopas answers. This appears to me as remarkably graphic as it is according to the manner of Luke. (Exp. of Luke, p. 369) as ye walk? And they stood downcast: So Tisch., Treg., W.H., and Weiss. Blass, following D, omits περιπατούντες καὶ ἔστε, and also rejects ἐστράθη αὐ. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.369)

24:19 Nazarean: so Blass, after ADN, etc. Edd.: "Nazarene," with ⲁBL. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.369)

24:21 also: so Edd. with ⲁBDL, 1, 33, and Arm. It is not in ANP, etc. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.369)

24:28 made: Blass reads, as T.R., the imperfect (προσεποιετο, "he was for m.") with PX, etc.; other Edd., the aorist (προσεποίησατο), as ⲁABDL, 1. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.371)

24:30 gave: perhaps the imperfect at the close should be marked (Bible Treasury 14:336)

24:32 [and] as: AEPXΔ, etc., 1, 69, Amiat. put "and" before the second "as." This the Edd. omit, with ⲁBDL, 33, Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.372)

24:36 he himself: so Edd., as ⲁBDL, Syrr^{cu sin} Sah. "Jesus himself" is the reading of AEG, with later uncials and most minuscules (1, 33, 69) and Memph. The words, "and says to them, Peace to you," although accepted by Lachm. and Treg., are questioned by most of the Edd., because of absence from D and copies of Old Lat. See John 20:19. They are in all other MSS. and versions. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.372)

24:38 thoughts: "thoughts" might suffice, rather than "debatings" or "questionings." (Bible Treasury 14:336)

24:40 [whole verse]: Verse 40 (cf. verse 12) is doubted by most Edd. from its omission in D, the Syrr^{cu sin} and Old Lat., also because of likeness to John 20:20. It is in ⲁAB, all later uncials but Beza's, in the cursives, the other Syrr. and the Egyptians, and is upheld by Lachm. and Treg. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.372)

[whole verse]: [see note to Lk. 24:12]

24:42 [and a honeycomb]: so EHKM and the other later uncials, the cursives 1, 33, 69, most Syrr. and Old Lat., Memph. Aeth. Arm. Edd. omit, following ⲁABDLII, Syr^{sin}. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.372)

24:44 the: so Blass, as T.R., from ⲁ, etc., Syrr. and Latt. Other Edd. follow ABDKL, etc., 33, and Aeth., which have "my." (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.373)

24:46 thus it is written, etc.: so Edd. after ⲁBC^{pm} DL, Memph. Aeth. "Thus it behoved" is the reading of AC^{corr} N, etc., most cursives (1, 33, 69), Syrr. and Vulg. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.373)

24:49 city ^Λ: After "city," AC^{corr} ΧΓΔΔΠ, all later uncials, all cursives, Syrr. Arm. Aeth., add "of Jerusalem," which Edd. omit, following ⲁBC^{pm} DL, most Old Lat. and Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.373)

24:51 and was carried up into heaven: so Lachm., after ABCLXMAII, etc., later uncials, all minuscules, most Syrr. Vulg. Memph., Cyril and Augustine. Other Edd. discredit it, following ⲁ^{pm} D, Syr^{sin}, some Old Lat. See W.H., App., p. 73. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.375)

24:52 having done him homage: so Lachm. and Treg., after all MSS. except Beza's, and versions except most of Old Lat., which other Edd. follow for the bracketing or omission (Tisch.) of these words. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.375)

24:53 praising and blessing ^Λ: so Lachm. and Treg. (text), after ⲁ^{corr}XΔM, etc., all cursives, some Old Lat., Amiat., etc. W.H. and Weiss omit "praising and," with ⲁBC^{pm} L, Syrr^{sin hier}, Tisch. and Blass omit "and blessing," with D and some Latt. Memph. and Augustine. It may be a "conflation." At end, ABC^{corr}XΔ, etc., 69, Syrr. Amiat. add "Amen," which Edd. omit, as ⲁC^{pm} DLII, 1, 33, Syr^{sin}, several Old Lat. Memph. (EEW's Notes, Exp. of Luke, p.375) [see note to Mat. 28:20]

Notes for John

1:3 by: [The American correctors of the RV] prefer "through" to "by" in 3, 10, 17; and perhaps it might be well thus to discriminate διὰ from ἐν which is often better rendered "by" than "in." (Bible Treasury 14:336)

without: [See note to Mat. 10:29]

made₂: The arrangement of verses 3,4, which Lachmann, Tregelles, and Westcott and Hort prefer (partly because of the absence of interpunction in some very ancient MSS., partly because some copies, versions, and fathers, expressly so take it), is δ γέγονεν ἐν αὐτῷ ζῶν ἦν. But with Tischendorf and others I unqualifiedly decide for a colon or full stop after γέγονεν, and begin a new sentence with ἐν αὐτῷ ζῶν ἦν. There is an intended contradistinction between what was made or brought into being through the Word with life in Him, which is lost when the new sentence begins with δ γέγ. Is it not false doctrine so to reduce life in the Word? Further, it is not Johannine, if grammatical, to take γέγονεν ἐν αὐτῷ as "made by him." Again, this life, which would mean the living universe (in itself a strange, unscriptural, and senseless phrase), must then be the light of men, contrary to the express teaching, just after, that the Word exclusively was the light. On the other hand the phrase, as it usually stands, is in the fullest harmony with the style of the evangelist elsewhere, as Dean Alford has pointed out. (Exp. of John, p.14)

1:9 [whole verse]: The corrected rendering of chapter 1:9 [in the RV] seems not only clumsy, but so ambiguous that many readers will doubt or misunderstand what the Revisers really mean by it. "There was the true light, even the light which lighteth every man, coming into the world." If the comma after "man" is intended to sever "coming into the world" from "man," and to connect the phrase as a predicate with the true light or the relative that follows, it is all well; but is not so slight an intimation likely to be misapprehended? This at any rate, if so meant, aims at the true sense. John was not the light in question. The true light was that which lightens every man, not absolutely nor always, but on coming into the world. It is the character or effect of the Incarnation. The Authorised Version is unquestionably incorrect, besides giving a tautological meaning if the article could be dispensed with. Further to be a man, and to come into the world, are said to be equivalent in Rabbinical usage. But does any Rabbi add מְבָרָךְ אֵלֶיךָ אֵלֶיךָ? It is not correct. They may employ "those that come into the world" to express "all men;" but where do they employ both phrases "every man coming into the world," as John is presumed to say here? The truth is that in one form or another δ ἐρχόμενος regularly applies to the Lord Jesus, as in chapter 1:15, 27; 3:31 (bis), as also in Matthew 11:3; Luke 7:19, 20; yet more fully and definitely δ ἐρχ. εἰς τὸν κ., John 6:14, where it would be idle to take it for any man as such, and not as appropriated to the Messiah. (Cf. 11:27.) It would be well also to note chapter 3:19; 9:39; 12:46; 16:28; 18:37. These instances ought to leave no doubt in any careful mind that our evangelist habitually uses the phrase of Christ to the exclusion of every other, it must be connected here not with π. ἀνθρώπων, but with τὸ φῶς τὸ ἀλ. The nearest approach is chapter 16:21, which is pointedly different, not to speak of any ulterior mystery in its figure.

It is surprising under such circumstances that the Five Clergymen should say it is impossible to determine with certainty whether the particle ἐρχόμενος is to be taken with φῶς or with ἦν in the nominative case neuter, or with ἀνθρώπων in the masculine accusative. They, too, while adopting the same sense as the Authorised Version, strive not to exclude a quite different reference, the converse of the Revisers.

But if the Revisers intended in their text to convey that Christ is the true light which coming into the world lighteth every man, they give in the margin, "The true light, which lighteth every man, was coming" into the world: a rendering grammatically possible, though not probable, but contextually excluded by the verse following which speaks of the Lord in immediate connection as in the world, and not to come, or in mere process of coming. Next, the margin adds another alternative, indicative of the uncertainty of the Revisers, "every man as he cometh." But is this serious? It is no question of a reasonable soul or conscience, but of Christ the true light. Is it orthodox that Christ enlightens "every man as he cometh," &c.? What do they suggest by it? What can any one infer but that, if this be true, Christ gives His own light to every man on his coming into the world? A doctrine less defensible and more unworthy than the delusion of every man's being born again by baptism. Here a signal spiritual blessing is bound up with every man's birth of nature. Would it not be nearer the truth of God to say that no man as he comes into the world is enlightened by Christ?

In result, then, we see that the Revisers reject apparently the Authorised Version, and give us in the text the right sense so obscurely that most readers will confound it with the only meaning meant to be shut out, while the margin gives the choice between a version possible and harmless, but quite unsuitable to the context, and another directly opposed to any creed in Christendom, unless it be that of Quakers. It is probably due to their adherence to the order of the Greek words that they have in the revised text left Greek words that they have in the revised text left their meaning anything but clear and express. They have thus sacrificed their own principle not to leave any translation or arrangement of words which could adapt itself to one or other of two interpretations, but rather to express as plainly as possible that interpretation which seemed best to deserve a place. (Bible Treasury 13:318-319) coming: There seems to be no force in taking ἦν with ἐρχόμενος as equivalent to an imperfect "came," even if an independent clause such as δ φ. π. ἀνθρ. might legitimately come between the verb and the participle; which, as far as I know, has not yet been produced, Mark 2:18 (which Lücke advances and Alford approves) being in no way parallel. But were it so, where is the propriety of telling us in this wondrous prologue, where each brief clause, yea word, is brimful of the profoundest truth, that the true Light which lights every man was in process of coming (not of manifesting Himself, which is quite another thought) into the world? On the other hand, the construction given in the Authorized Version, though vouched by ancient translations, western and eastern, and even by Greek fathers, seems not really admissible. It would require the article with ἐρχόμενος. The anarthrous participle does not mean "that cometh" but "as" or "on coming," which could have no proper meaning in connection with ἀνθρώπων. For how strange the doctrine resulting, that every man on coming into the world of darkness has or receives the light of Christ! With δ it teaches a momentous truth, and this extinguishing, not suggesting, the Quaker idea. For it is the Word in His own nature, not an inward light, Who pours it on every man. He alone coming here is the true Light for man, and sheds it on all, high or low, Jew or Greek. It is like the sun's light for all mankind, but in a spiritual way. (Exp. of John, p.16,17) coming: I cannot but think that this is the true version, and exhibits the intended aim of the clause. Most of the early writers took it as the authorized version, save Theodore of Mopsuestia, who understood it as here given: Εἰπὼν τὸ ἐρχόμενον εἰς τὸν κόσμον, περὶ τοῦ δεσπότου Χριστοῦ καλῶς ἐπήγαγεν τὸ ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ ἦν, ὥστε δεῖξαι, ὅτι τὸ ἐρχόμενον πρὸς τὴν διὰ σαρκὸς εἶπεν φανέρωσιν. (Ed. Fritzsche, p. 21.) (Lect. Intro. to the Gospels, p.415)

1:12 ἡ ἀρχὴ . . . ἡ ἀρχὴν: [The RV is] also somewhat capricious in representing the article or the anarthrous construction. Thus in chapter 1:12 they say "the right to become children of God," where they properly drop it before "children," and needlessly insert it before "right." They give us "a woman" in chapter 4:27, and "a servant" in chapter 13:16; but they do not say "the woman" in chapter

16:21, though they do say "the child," whereas the one like the other is used generically, like "the bondservant" and "the son" in chapter 8:35. (Bible Treasury 13:319)

children: Notice that pious and learned men have made the mistake of confounding "son" and "child" in the Scriptures. But they, however closely connected, are not the same thing. To identify them is really to take no small liberty with the word of truth. Not that one means to deny that the child of God may be also called a son of God; but the N.T. shows plainly that the two words express different things. It is the apostle John that particularly dwells on our being "children" of God. "Why?" Because we are born into the family of God. Born of the Spirit, we are thereby children of God, children of His family. "Sons" is wrong in the A.V. of John 1:12 and of 1 John 3:1,2. Beyond question it should be "children" as in 1 John 3:10 and 5:2. But when it is a question of being "sons," it is predestination that puts us into this place of relation. This was overlooked in the A.V. of Gal. 3:26, which should be, not "children," but, "sons," as in chap. 4:5-7. And so it should be in our ver. 5 of Eph. 1, where the word requires the adoption of "sons," not "children." There is never the adoption of children, but of sons. One must be by new birth a "child" of God. But God also predestined to adopt the Christian into the position of a "son" by Christ Jesus to Himself. All the Old Testament saints were "children," as we who now believe are also. But they were not the adopted "sons," as we may read in the argument that opens Gal. 4. On the other hand, we are all His sons now, whether Jew or Greek, and receive the Spirit of His Son. Every Christian is brought into the place of sonship. It is one of the new privileges of the gospel. The King and Queen do not consider the highest nobles in the land to be in any such dignity. They may by courtesy be their trusty cousins; but they are not their sons. We Christians are adopted into the place of sons, and have the Spirit of God's Son sent into our hearts, crying Abba, Father. (Bible Treasury N6:107)

1:13 born: "Begotten" now, as distinct from "born," is false, absurd, and without a shadow of scripture to support it. (Exp. of John, p.19)

1:14 from beside: [Q: δόξαν ὡς μονογενοῦς παρὰ πατρός. Is there anything in this passage which necessitates or even allows departure from the regular rendering of παρὰ with a genitive by "from, proceeding from" &c? Is "with" (which requires rather a dative, see 1:40, 17:5, twice, &c.) permissible here? It is so given in "A new Translation." Every other instance in John's Gospel of παρὰ with a genitive seems to exclude any but the regular construction of "from" or "of." Cf. 16:28, 17:6, 8, &c. Of course the interpretation will be affected by the translation.]

All the older English Versions of John 1:14 favour "of" and avoid the usual rendering "from," as does the new translation which prefers "with," ordinarily answering to the dative. "On the part of" or shortly "of" seems best here. (Bible Treasury 15:112)

1:18 Son who is: ⋈ A B C^{pm} L 33, Syrr.^{not cu.} Aeth.^{Rom.} have the strange reading θεός, God, which Tregelles, Westcott and Hort adopt, the latter having written a learned monograph in its defence. As the variant seems to be out of all correlation to "Father," the weight of evidence is against it. (Exp. of John, p.22)

Son who is: [Q: ὁ μονογενὴς υἱός, ὁ ὢν κ.τ.λ. The reading here seems a difficult question, θεοῦ, υἱὸς τοῦ θεοῦ, and other variants having some support. But μον. θεός appears to be supported by some uncials, cursives, versions, and Fathers. It is adopted by Alford, Tregelles, Westcott and Hort, and others. Griesbach marks υἱός as doubtful; Lachmann inserts θεός in margin. This being the case, is the evidence brought forward in favour of θεός really strong enough to shake confidence in the Received Text of this passage? Yours faithfully in Christ, W.J.]

There is no doubt of the ancient, if not large, support, of θεός, instead of the ordinary reading υἱός, "Son." Nevertheless Tregelles alone ventured to follow them as he does in other harsh readings, till the Cambridge Editors joined him. All others, notwithstanding ⋈ B C^{pm} L 33, two or three versions, and patristic allusions, prefer A and fourteen other uncials, all cursives but one, the ancient Vv. and Fathers. It is not according to the analogy of scripture to speak of "only-begotten God"; and "Son" is the true correlate to "Father." Alford stands with Griesbach, Lachmann, Scholz, Scrivener, Tischendorf, Wordsworth, as well as all the older critics. (Bible Treasury 15:112)

Son who is: It is surprising that Bengel should follow Raphelius in preferring "qui erat" to "qui est," as almost all the ancients, Greeks and Latins, rightly insist. (Exp. of John, p.60)

Son who is: It is of the essence of the truth of Christ's person that ὁ ὢν here as in John 1:18 means "who is," not "who was;" and so the Revised no less than the Authorised Version. So even Winer and other Germans, poor as they are, and all men taught of God. It is true that the present participle, combined with a past tense or qualified by an adverb of time, may have an imperfect force, as in 1:29, 5:13, &c. But here nothing enters to weaken its simple, special, and emphatic force. The words are only difficult to unbelief. The late Dean Alford was bold enough in free thought; yet he expressly affirms that in both texts the present participle is used to signify essential truth without any particular regard to time. (A similar ignorance vitiates Dr. Steele's Tense-reading in his "Mile stones." The present in perhaps all languages is employed ethically and quite independently of the present moment. This is peculiarly true of the New Testament.) The figurative idea destroys that truth here as elsewhere; and here it is fundamental. A little knowledge is indeed a dangerous thing. To read this "Who was" may be natural perhaps, but is certainly neither spiritual nor accurate, but downright, though of course ignorant, perversion from an inveterate hunt after figurative language. (Bible Treasury 19:80)

1:27 ἄ he who: The best text omits other expressions, evidently derived from verses 15, 30. (Lect. Intro. to the Gospels, p.424)

1:28 Bethany: The best reading according to ancient authorities is Βηθανία (⋈^{pm} A B C^{pm} E F G H L M S V X Γ Δ Π^{pm} more than a hundred and thirty cursives, and many ancient versions), not Βηθαβαρά or Βηθαβαβή. It was not the well known village near Jerusalem, but another district of the same name beyond the Jordan. (Exp. of John, p.23)

1:39 therefore: ⋈ A B C L T^b X Λ, 33, Memph. read οὖν which inferior witnesses omit. (Exp. of John, p.30)

1:43 he: The best copies do not read "Jesus" here, but in the next clause. (Exp. of John, p.32)

1:46 [WK seems not to have translated the first part of this verse.]

1:49 [and saith to]: There is not a little variation here in the copies, even the more ancient. (Exp. of John, p.35)

1:51 [Henceforth]: The oldest copies and versions omit ἀπ' ἄρτι, which, if read, must be rendered "from now" or "henceforth," not "hereafter." (Exp. of John, p.36)

2:11 signs: In verse 11 of chapter 2 "signs" is rightly given [in the RV], and throughout this Gospel, rather than "miracles;" but why should ἐξουσία be rendered "right" in chapter 1:12, "authority" in chapter 5:17, and "power" (margin, "right") in chapter 10:18? (Bible Treasury 13:319)

2:17 [And]: ⋈ B L T X Memph. omit δὲ which A E P Δ with some cursives and versions insert. (Exp. of John, p.39)

The zeal of thine house: [The American correctors of the RV, "Zeal for thy house," is] as in Green. (Bible Treasury 14:336) uttermost, and makes its object forget his own poverty in riches of grace beyond all reckoning. (Christian Annotator 2:335-6) his: The Sinai and the Vatican (B) omit αὐτοῦ, "his". (Exp. of John, p.61)

on: [see note to John 3:15]

3:17 his: The word αὐτοῦ ("his") is omitted by \aleph B L T^b, five cursives and some Fathers, but read by all other authorities. (Exp. of John, p.64)

3:18 but: \aleph B, &c., omit $\delta\epsilon$ ("but") which all else read. (Exp. of John, p.65)

3:20 evil: 3:20 (as in 5:29) “evil” for “ill” [after the American correctors of the RV] is not much; nor “made full” for “fulfilled.” (Bible Treasury 14:336)

3:25 a Jew: There is equally good evidence from the most ancient and excellent witnesses for the plural form ($\aleph^{\text{pm}} \text{ G } \Lambda^2 \Pi^2$ 1. 13. 69. 124. &c. It. Vulg. Syr^{cu} Cop. Arm.^{usc} Aeth. Goth. Orig.) in the common text as for the singular ($\aleph^{\text{corr.}}$ A B E F H K L M S U V $\Gamma \Delta \Lambda^{\text{pm}} \Pi^{\text{pm}}$, many cursives, Syr^{pesh} ^{at phil.} and Arm^{zoh.} Chrys. Nonn.) preferred by most critics, partly as being the less common of the two, and so more likely to be changed. (Exp. of John, p.71)

3:28 me: The witnesses for omitting μοι include \aleph E F H M V Γ , many cursives, &c. and are scarcely inferior therefore to those in favour of the ordinary text. (Exp. of John, p.71)

3:29 fulfilled: [See note to John 3:20]

3:34 measure \wedge : I apprehend the words the authorised version gives in italics should disappear. The addition of “unto him” detracts, to my mind, from the exceeding preciousness of what seems to be, at least, left open. (Lect. Intro. to the Gospels, p.437-8)

4:3 [again]: A B E Δ, &c., omit, & C D L M T, 1, 33, 69, and many ancient versions, insert. (Exp. of John, p.78)

4:14 no way . . . for ever: It is not merely οὐ μὴ nor οὐ μὴ . . . πώποτε but οὐ μὴ . . . εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, the strongest possible exclusion of what is in question for eternity. (Exp. of John, p.84)

4:15 come here: In ^{nm} B and Origen the reading is διέρχωμαι, which Tischendorf and W. and H. adopt; but the MSS. differ, many giving the indicative, many the subjunctive. (Exp. of John, p.85)

4:27 wondered: The imperfect ἐθαύμαζον, is better than the common θαύμασαν, and rests on far better authority; but it is needless to express its continuity in English in such a case as this. (Exp. of John, p.93)

4:29 ever: There is a question between $\bar{\alpha}$ on the authority of $\aleph B C^{pm}$ and some other ancient witnesses, and $\delta\sigma\alpha$ with far more numerous copies, here and in verse 39, the difference in English being that the latter adds “ever.” (Exp. of John, p.93)

4:31 ^Λ Meanwhile: The great majority of the witnesses add δὲ “and” or “but”; the most ancient omit. (Exp. of John, p.94)

4:34 do: The best reading and most forcible sense is $\pi\omega\acute{\iota}\omega$ (A E G H M S U V Γ Δ Λ , &c.), not $\pi\omega\iota\eta\sigma\omega$, read by Lachmann, Treg., W. and H., though a manifest assimilation to $\tau\epsilon\lambda\epsilon\omega\sigma\omega$. (Exp. of John, p.94)

4:35 already: Tischendorf, &c., sever ἡδὴ from verse 35 and make it begin 36, following some ancient authorities; but the most ancient (B^{ms} B M II^{ms}, &c.) leave it open, and most give as is here done, which seems to be alone in keeping with the context. (Exp. of John, p.95)

4:36 ^Λ He: The common text prefixes καὶ on ample authority, but the most ancient uncials, and some good cursives, &c., are adverse. (Exp. of John, p.95)

both: Some good and ancient authorities omit καί. (Exp. of John, p.95)

4:37 the: The article before ἀληθινός is not read by \aleph B C^{pm} K L T^b Δ Π^{pm} many good cursives, and some of the Greek fathers. In one passage of Chrysostom which has the article, he has ἀληθής after it, and so have a few cursives. (Exp. of John, p.95)

4:39 [ever]: [See note to John 4:29]

4:42 Λ Saviour: The Sinai, Vat., Palimpsest of Paris, and an old St. Petersburg uncial (T^b), with almost all the most ancient versions, &c., do not read ὁ Χριστός . . . the copyists have inserted it without due reason. Ancient authority seems conclusive that the words "the Christ" should disappear. Their confession is much more simple and emphatic when so put. (Exp. of John, p.96-7)

Λ Saviour: [The RV] properly, with all critics and on good grounds, discard[s] "the Christ," the true force being far clearer without that title; so do they, on ample authority, omit other additions of less moment. (Bible Treasury 13:319)

4:43 Λ into: The Received Text, with most uncials and cursives, &c., has also καὶ ἀπῆλθεν, contrary to \aleph B C D T^b 13, 69, and some other excellent authorities. (Exp. of John, p.97)

4:45 Λ he did: There is good authority for ὅσα as well as ἀ the more widespread if not ancient copies inclining to the latter. (Exp. of John, p.98)

4:46 He: The best witnesses do not read ὁ 'I., as do the Received Text and Scholz, (though with a slight difference of position) following many MSS. (Exp. of John, p.98)

4:50 [And]: \aleph B D and a few other authorities omit καὶ, "and." (Exp. of John, p.100)

4:51 his: \aleph Dst L., &c., omit αὐτοῦ, "his." (Exp. of John, p.100)

4:52 at the seventh hour: [See note to Rev. 17:12]

5:1 the: Here authority is pretty equally divided for and against the insertion of the article. Ten uncials (\aleph C E F H I L M Δ Π) insert it, ten (A B D G K S U V Γ Δ) omit it. About fifty cursives and the Memph. and Theb. versions are with the former, still more with the latter. If the article be received, it can scarcely be any other feast than the passover, the first and foundation feast of the Jewish holy year. Some have thought that it might be the feast of Purim, but this would not account for Jesus going up to Jerusalem. It had no such divine claim. (Exp. of John, p.102)

5:2 gate: There is a good deal of confusion in the MSS. even where the text is certain here. Thus while ἐπὶ τῇ προβατικῇ (at the sheep-gate, Neh. 3 LXX.) is read by the Vatican, Rescript of Paris, and thirteen more uncials and the great body of cursives, confirmed by most ancient versions, \aleph^{corr} . A D G L, &c., have ἐν τῇ π. probably in the sense of the Authorised Version — "sheep-market"; whilst \aleph^{pm} and a few other inferior authorities omit ἐπὶ (or ἐν) τῇ, and hence seem to construe προβατικὴ κολ. a "sheep pool"; so Jerome's Onomast. (ed. Lars. et Parth. p. 112), Theod. Mops. p. 26, and the Jerusalem Itin., not to speak of the Vulg. Aeth. and Slav. Again, for ἡ ἐπιλεγ. \aleph^{pm} gives τὸ λεγόμενον (adopted by Tisch. in his eighth ed.) and \aleph^{corr} . ἡ ἐπιλεγ.; while D V, eight cursives, &c., read λεγ. In the same ed. Tisch. exhibits Βηθζαθα with \aleph L, &c. (D Βελζεθα, B, &c. Βηθσαιδα, &c., Δ, &c., Βιθεσθα). (Exp. of John, p.103)

5:3 multitude . . . [end of 5:3, all of 5:4]: In verses 3, 4 there are more serious differences. High if not large authorities (\aleph B C D L 33, 68, many of the ante-Hier. Latin versions, Theb. Memph. Syr^{cu.} et hier., &c.) do not read πολὺ, nor (except D h) παραλυτικῶν, which last is not in T.

R. But the great omission is of the clause ἐκδεχομένων τὴν τοῦ ὕδατος κίνησιν with \aleph^{pm} B C^{pm} L 18, 157, 314 Syr^{cu.} Theb. Memph^{de} and all verse 4 as in the common text, here strengthened by D (an ancient though erratic copy), but deserted by A^{pm}. It is certain that the narrative as ordinarily given must have been read by Tertullian (de Bapt. 5); and the answer of the sick man in the critical text, verse 7, implies, if it does not demand, such an explanation. The fact may have been too startling for the copyists to believe, not about themselves or Christian times, but about the days before and up to Christ's ministry. The Romanists found it hard to credit any evidence of God's goodness to the Jews as such, and in the time alleged. Even Lachmann retained the passage. I do not think there is real weight in Alford's argument against its genuineness grounded on the plea that there are seven words used here only, or here only in this sense; for so remarkable and singular a fact would naturally call for words suited to it. There are variations among the MSS. that contain the omitted passage, but not more perhaps than usual. (Exp. of John, p.103)

[end of 5:3, all of 5:4]: John 5:3,4 is the first considerable passage which has been improperly disturbed [in John's Gospel in T. S. Green, A Course of developed Criticism on passages of the New Testament, materially affected by various readings]; and here, as in Mark 16, it is remarkable that the incredulous Lachmann rises up to condemn Tischendorf and Mr. Green. These last omit from ἐκδεχομένων τοῦ νοσήματι, because of its absence, wholly or in part, in three of four first rate MSS. (pr. m.) some other authorities and suspicious circumstances confirming this. Now, to a simple mind, we think that the words of the impotent man, verse 7, decide the question in favour of the corrected A, C, and of D, E, F, G, H, K, (L in part), M, S, U, Δ, &c. They are grounded on the obnoxious statement relative to the troubling of the water, and are hardly intelligible without it. But when men get habituated to the textual manipulation of Germany, the most palpable gaps are turned into an evidence of genuineness, and the omitted words are viewed with the suspicion of being marginal glosses. (Bible Treasury 1:296-297)

[end of 5:3, all of 5:4]: But the omission [by the RV] of the last clause of verse 3, and the whole of verse 4 in chapter 5, is grave. No doubt a few of the oldest and best MSS and versions omit all or nearly all this portion. Still the unquestionable answer of the sufferer in verse 7 seems hardly compatible with the omission, which ancient rationalism might desire, as does the same spirit in our own day. There seems nothing unworthy of God in the omitted clause, while, on the contrary, what is there falls in with the scope of what is undoubted, if it be not requisite to give the full force. God under the law had not left Himself without witness of mercy; but sin wrought havoc, and strength was needed to avail oneself of any remedy afforded. What the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending His own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh and for sin condemned sin in the flesh, and so gave us deliverance. Jesus with a word heals the man whom no angel's help, no ordinance, could avail to meet. (Bible Treasury 13:319)

5:4 [See note to 5:3]

5:5 But: T.R. omits καὶ (so B K S V Γ Δ. &c.) contrary to \aleph A C D E F G H I L M U Δ and the mass of cursives, versions, &c. (Exp. of John, p.103)

his: αὐτοῦ against \aleph B C^{pm} D L Π^{corr}. &c. with most ancient versions. (Exp. of John, p.103)

5:7 Λ Sir: Several uncials (C^{corr} E F G H with many cursives, &c.) add καὶ before κύριε, a few omitting κ. - The received reading βάλλῃ is incorrect and rests on few if any copies. (Exp. of John, p.104)

5:9 immediately: \aleph^{pm} D, the Lat. Cod. Rhedig., and Arm. omit εὐθέως, but all other authorities insert it. (Exp. of John, p.104)

5:10 and: Καὶ is omitted in T.R. with at least ten uncials, very many cursives, Vulg., Syrr., &c., but read by א B A B C^m D G L V Γ, forty cursives, most ancient versions and fathers. (Exp. of John, p.106) thy: A B and some eleven or twelve other uncials, and most cursives, omit σου, reading "the." But א C^m D L A Π, thirteen cursives, and the body of ancient versions, &c., read the pronoun "thy." (Exp. of John, p.106)

5:12 [whole verse]: Two uncials and six cursives omit the verse, evidently by ὁμοιοτέλευτον. (Compare end of ver. 11.) (Exp. of John, p.106)

[therefore]: T.R. with most copies, &c., reads οὖν, "therefore"; but it is not found in א B D and several other good authorities. (Exp. of John, p.106)

[thy couch]: τὸν κρ. σου is not read by א^m et corr B C^m L Sah. (Exp. of John, p.106)

5:13 healed: For ἰαθεὶς, "healed" (with א B A B C L Γ Δ A Π and almost all the rest of the copies and versions and fathers), Tischendorf reads ἀσθενῶν with D and two or three Latin copies - a strange judgment and on light grounds. (Exp. of John, p.106) withdrew: [See note to Mat. 26:24]

5:16 ἅ because: T.R. adds καὶ ἐξήτουν αὐτὸν ἀποκτείναι with fourteen uncials, most cursives and some versions, contrary to א B C D L, 1, 22, 33, 69, 249, some old Latin, Vulg. Syr^m. Memph. Arm., and early Greeks. (Exp. of John, p.107)

5:18 therefore: א D and other authorities, followed by Tischendorf, omit οὖν contrary to the rest. (Exp. of John, p.108)

5:24 judgment . . . is passed: (For the faithful never coming into judgment at all, Mr. T. R. Birks saw "no ground but Alford's altered translation of John v. 24, which I believe to be a mistake" (Thoughts on the Times and Seasons of Sacred Prophecy, p. 65, 1880): an astounding utterance, not only in its philological aspect, since the Greek admits of no other sense, but no less certainly as a question of divine grace and truth, and of divine righteousness. . . . This misrendering in the A.V. is corrected beyond just hesitation by the R.V. As to "Alford's altered translation," be it remarked, that the A.V. of John 5:22 and 27 corrects the error in 24 and 29. It is the same word κρίσις all through, which indisputably means "judgment," not damnation or "condemnation" like κατάκριμα, as the verb (22,30) means "to judge." Nor is it unimportant to notice the ignorance of talking thus of Dean A., seeing that the most influential perhaps of all versions, Jerome's Vulgate, is quite right in both John 5 and 1 Cor. 11, where the A.V. was lamentably and inexcusably wrong. In the Gospel the old Latin MSS. Vercell. Veron. Brix. etc. were right. Many of the Oriental versions are correct; some waver like the A.V. to the ruin of definite truth on what is of great moment. But where the doctrine on everlasting punishment was unsound, it is not surprising to learn that there was lack of faith as to life eternal and its exemption from judgment.) . . . All the great English translations are wrong here, Wiclif, Tyndal, Cranmer, and Geneva, with the Authorised Version. Singular to say, the Rhemish version alone is right, in this following the Vulgate: a mere accident undoubtedly, for none are so distant from the truth conveyed by their own translation, from the apprehension of exemption from judgment, as Romish doctors. And none are so unfaithful in the next clause, for they actually make the Lord seem to say "shall pass from death into life." (In Nonnus' Paraphrase of our Gospel (fifth century, ed. by Passow and Bach, 1834) there is the similar error of rendering ἔεται εκ θανατοιο. So in the Amiatine and other ancient Vulgate MSS. we have "transiet," and in a Munich old Latin copy of the sixth century "transibit.") He really said ἀλλὰ μεταβέβηκεν εκ τ. θ. εις τ. ζ., "but is (or, hath) passed (the present result of a past act) out of death into life." Here the Protestant versions are right, Wiclif feeble, the Rhemish false. And there is not even the excuse of the Vulgate, which reads "transiit." Possibly they read "transiet": but if so, it was an error which some copies of the Latin would have corrected, if they ignored the inspired original. (Exp. of John, p.111-3) judgment: I do not wish to find fault with our translation, but let me prove that the word ought to be "judgment." "It is appointed unto men once to die, and after that the judgment." Here the very same word that is translated "condemnation" is used. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus." Here it is another word; and there is just as much difference in the words used in the Greek as in the English. What God declares is, that he that hears His word has everlasting life. It is a present thing. The believer again is passed from death unto life. What would be the sense of judging life, of judging what God has wrought? (Bible Treasury N8:169) judgment: You will observe that in this passage I have altered the word "condemnation" to "judgment;" I have done it advisedly, because it is the only true meaning of the word. "Condemnation" is a positive mistake. That which is rightly translated "condemnation" elsewhere, is totally different from this. Thus, "there is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus," is not the same word at all. But sometimes where our Lord and the Holy Spirit say "judgment," the translators have ventured to depart from the word of God, and have introduced "condemnation." (Lect. on Gal., p.167) judgment: It is well known, and must be insisted on, that this word κρίσις means judgment, and not "condemnation." There is no Greek scholar who does not know that there is another word (κατάκριμα) whose function it is to express "condemnation." Remarkably enough, it stands correctly represented in the common Popish version, though we all know the Roman Catholic version is too often inaccurate, and otherwise faulty, because it follows the common text of the Vulgate, even in its blunders not a few; yet for all that, the Vulgate being right as to this particular passage, the Romish version is therefore much nearer the truth of God in this chapter than the Authorised version of our Protestant Bible, though now given correctly by the Revisers of 1881. The Roman Catholic version, faithful to the Latin, which is here faithful to the Greek, allows and maintains throughout the whole context that there are two dealings in opposition one to the other, life-giving and judging. (Bible Treasury N6:105, Lect. on the Second Coming, p.352-3) judgment: The word used here throughout means simply "judgment." Unquestionably the effect of judgment is condemnation. Would that our own and other translators had only understood this thoroughly, because this very result, which is otherwise scripturally certain, necessarily excludes the believer! Herein lies the importance of the truth before us. . . . ["Judgment"] is a verbal noun formed from, and alluding to, the same word that was rightly translated "judge" in verse 22. It is essential to the context that the same sense should be preserved intact throughout. (Lect. on the Second Coming, p.355-6) judgment: It cannot be denied. It is in vain for learned or unlearned to attempt glosses, clever or clumsy, over the expression. The word of God is too strong for man to bend it. No doubt, the truth is too bright for those that uphold the error of the A.V. in this particular case. This or other reasons may have influenced the English translators from Tyndale: the motive I do not pretend to judge; but the fact is plain. And I affirm that "condemnation" or "damnation" is a wrong rendering of κρίσις for which there is no tenable ground. The verb means, and is rightly translated, "judge" (verses 22-30); the substantive means, "judgment," or "the act of judging," and should have been so translated throughout, as is now done by the Revisers of 1881. (Vers. 22,24,27,29,30). (Bible Treasury N6:123-4, Lect. on the Second Coming, p.359-360) judgment: [Q. What is the precise difference between κρίνειν, ἀνακρίνειν, διακρίνειν, ἐγκρίνειν, κατακρίνειν, and συγκρίνειν in N. T. usage? R.]

A. The meaning of the first or simple form is “to judge,” ἀνακρίσις being the technical word for the previous enquiry or preliminary investigation. Compare 1 Cor. 2:15, 4:3-5, 9:3, 10:25,27, in the Greek, as well as Acts 25:26 (noun). But διακρίνειν is “to discern,” right in 1 Cor. 11:29 but wrong in 31; as the simple form means not “damnation” but “judgment” and even as contrasted with that. Again συγκρίνειν is in plain contradistinction to ἀνακρίνειν in 1 Cor. 2, and means the communicating or authoritative explaining of spiritual things in spiritual words, not sifting or examining them. In John 5:22-29 the confusion of the A.V. is extreme and seriously misleading. The right word is “judge” or “judgment” throughout, not “condemnation” as in 24, nor “damnation” as in 29; for our Lord is contrasting “life” with “judgment,” though the issue in this case be the same. In 1 Cor. 11 the “judging” is present, in the sense of temporal only, in contrast with final and everlasting condemnation (κατακρ.). Compounded with ἀπὸ the verb means “to answer,” as it should be in 2 Cor. 1:9, not “sentence,” as we may add. (Bible Treasury N3:176)

5:26 also: The majority read καὶ, “also,” but not A B L, &c., Memph. (Exp. of John, p.115)

5:27 ἄ Son: “a” son of man would be wrong, especially in the text. Read not “the,” but simply “Son” of man. (Bible Treasury 14:336)

5:29 go forth: [See note to Mat. 26:24] evil: [See note to John 3:20]

5:30 him: The received text adds πατὴρ, “Father,” with many authorities, but not the most ancient. (Exp. of John, p.118)

5:32 I: The Sinaitic^{ms} and the Cambridge MS. of Beza, with a few other good authorities, read οἶδατε, “ye know,” but almost all the rest support the common reading. (Exp. of John, p.119)

5:37 himself: κ B L, have ἐκεῖνος, D ἐκεῖνος αὐτὸς, for αὐτὸς in the great mass of the authorities, as in Text. Rec. (Exp. of John, p.120)

6:2 ἄ signs: Without αὐτοῦ κ A B D K L S Δ Π, many cursives, and almost all the ancient versions; with it E F G H M U V Γ Δ, &c. (Exp. of John, p.125)

6:7 of them: κ A B L Π six cursives, and most versions reject αὐτῶν. (Exp. of John, p.125)

6:11 and, having given thanks: κ D, &c., read εὐχαρίστησεν καὶ, “gave thanks and.” (Exp. of John, p.126) distributed to ἄ those: It will be noticed that the vulgar text interpolates the disciples, τοῖς μαθηταῖς, οἱ δὲ μαθηταί, while the true text makes it only a question of the Lord. One may add too that κ D Γ nine cursive MSS. and other authorities have ἔδωκεν (eight others δέδωκεν) while A B L Δ Λ Π and most others give διέδωκεν, “distributed.” (Exp. of John, p.126)

6:14 Jesus: Ὁ Ἰησοῦς the reading of most MSS., is not in κ B D and some other good authorities. (Exp. of John, p.127)

6:15 [again]: πᾶν is supported by κ A B D K L Δ many cursives, and some versions. It is omitted by E F G H M S U V Γ Δ, more than one hundred cursives, besides versions. (Exp. of John, p.127)

6:17 ἄ ship: The article is not in κ B L Δ, a few cursives, &c., but is in more than a dozen uncials, and most cursives. (Exp. of John, p.129)

yet: οὐπω is read by κ B D L, some cursives, and most ancient versions. (Exp. of John, p.129)

6:22 one: κ^c A B L, some cursives, and excellent versions, support εἰ μὴ ἐν but the common text, following at least a dozen uncials, most cursives, &c., has ἐκεῖνο εἰς ὃ ἐνέβησαν οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ, “that one whereinto his disciples were entered.” (Exp. of John, p.130) ship: πλοῖον, κ A B D K L Θ^c, twenty-five cursives, &c.; πλοιάριον, “boat,” eleven uncials, most cursives, &c. (Exp. of John, p.130)

6:23 yet [other]: δὲ is omitted by B L Θ^c, &c. It is also a question between ἄλλα ‘other,’ or ἀλλὰ ‘but.’ (Exp. of John, p.130) boats: πλοῖα “ships” in a few MSS. (Exp. of John, p.130)

6:27 food: The second τὴν βρώσιν is omitted by κ E F G H, &c. (Exp. of John, p.130) shall give: δίδωσιν “doth give” is the reading of κ D, &c.; δώσει “shall give” of A B E F G H K L, &c. (Exp. of John, p.131)

6:32 hath given: So the majority of uncials with κ A, &c. But B D L, &c., have ἔδωκεν, “gave.” (Exp. of John, p.134)

6:35 And [or, Then]: The witnesses differ, some giving neither. (Exp. of John, p.135)

6:38 from: ἀπὸ A B L T with cursives; ἐκ κ D E Δ, &c. (Exp. of John, p.136)

6:42 then: νῦν “now” is the reading of B C T, the Memph. Goth. and Arm. Syr.^{hiets.} &c.; οὖν κ A D L and eleven other uncials, all known cursives (Aeth. = οὖν νῦν), Theb., &c. Many vv. omit both. (Exp. of John, p.138)

6:43 Jesus: Ἰησοῦς, omitted by most, is read by κ B L T, &c. (Exp. of John, p.138)

therefore: οὖν “therefore” is read by κ A D and ten uncials more, most cursives, &c.; but omitted by B C K L T Π ten cursives, and several ancient versions. (Exp. of John, p.138)

6:45 heard: The aorist participle has the preponderance of witnesses in age and number. (Exp. of John, p.139)

6:47 [on me]: κ B L T, &c., omit εἰς ἐμὲ though given by A C D E Δ, &c., cursives, &c. (Exp. of John, p.139)

6:51 this: Instead of τούτου τοῦ, as given by B C L T and twelve other uncials, all cursives, and versions, τοῦ ἐμοῦ “my”, is read by some old Latin copies, &c. (Exp. of John, p.139)

ἄ for: So B C D L T, several cursives, ancient versions and fathers, so κ &c., putting ἡ σάρξ μου ἐστὶν last; but twelve inferior uncials and the mass of other authorities add ἦν ἐγὼ δώσω. (Exp. of John, p.140)

6:52 his: B T (and the ancient versions apparently) add αὐτοῦ. (Exp. of John, p.140)

6:53 have: The Latins read “habebitis,” “ye shall have,” contrary to all authority. (Exp. of John, p.140)

6:55 truly . . . truly: ἀληθῆς κ^c B C F^a K L T Π, many cursives and versions; ἀληθῶς κ and eleven other uncials, most cursives, &c. (Exp. of John, p.141)

6:58 the: A dozen uncials and most cursives and versions add ὑμῶν, which is not in κ B C L T, &c. (Exp. of John, p.141)

6:63 have spoken: λελάληκα κ B C D K L T U Π, many cursives, and most ancient versions; but λαλῶ in the Text. Rec. with ten uncials and most cursives. (Exp. of John, p.148)

6:65 the: Text. Rec. adds μοῦ, with more than a dozen uncials, &c. (Exp. of John, p.148)

6:66 of: B G T, seven cursives, &c., read ἐκ but the weight of authority is against it. (Exp. of John, p.149)

6:68 Δ answered: The οὐν of the Text. Rec. is not in \aleph B C G K L U Δ II, many cursives, and the oldest versions. (Exp. of John, p.149)

6:69 Holy One: So \aleph B C^m D L, &c., against the great majority of inferior authorities which support the received reading, δ χ ς δ νιός, many also adding τοῦ ζῶντος. There are varieties in copies and versions which point to the most ancient reading, but mixed up with the later ones in different measures and forms. (Exp. of John, p.149)

Holy One: I am sorry on such an occasion as this, beloved friends, to bring in a little word that must correct our English Version. You must carefully remember that the English Version, after all, is not the word of God in the fullest sense, or strictest sense, of the word. That is, you must always leave room for an occasional spot or speck where man's carelessness has a little obscured the fulness of the truth. Now, if you look at any careful, any exact, presentation of the true text and translation of the N.T. you will find it to be this, "That thou art the Christ, the Holy One of God." "The Holy One of God" are the true words, as I believe, in this particular place. I do not think, therefore, it is the same thing exactly as we have in Matt. 16. It is a different confession of our Lord Jesus, and I will endeavour to shew the great beauty and appropriateness of that which Peter says here; for mark, beloved friends, there is no anxiety now. (Bible Treasury N8:210)

Holy One: I am aware that a learned but self-confident German pronounces the "Holy One" not Johannean. But this was a rash and ignorant judgment. It is a title given to our Lord once in his first Epistle as here once in his Gospel. He is the only writer in the New Testament who ever uses it of the Lord in relation to the saints. It is therefore more characteristic of John than of any other apostle. (Exp. of John, p.150)

6:70 [Jesus]: Many omit δ Ἰησοῦς. (Exp. of John, p.149)

6:71 Iscariot: The Text. Rec. reads Ισκα-ν, with some good MSS.; but the best have Ισκα-υ. (Exp. of John, p.149)

Δ one: ὦν "being," is not read by B C^m D L Syrr.^{cu. et pesch.} Aeth., but is found in the great majority. (Exp. of John, p.150)

7:1 [And]: καὶ is read by most uncials and cursives, but not \aleph^m D, &c. (Exp. of John, p.152)

7:8 the: ταύτην is added here in Text. Rec., in the \aleph^m and eleven other uncials and many ancient versions, but not in B and some of the best. It was probably taken from the next clause. (Exp. of John, p.154) not: οὐκ \aleph D K M II and most ancient versions and fathers; οὐπω in B L T and eleven other uncials, &c. (Exp. of John, p.154) up Δ : [The American correctors of the RV, "I go not up" and change the marg. to Many ancient authorities add yet, are] right. (Bible Treasury 14:336)

7:9 Δ Having: δὲ is added in many uncials. (Exp. of John, p.155) to them: For αὐτοῖς \aleph D K L X II, &c., excellent authority gives αὐτοῖς "to them." (Exp. of John, p.155)

7:15 therefore: οὐν \aleph B D L T X, some cursives, &c.; καὶ, as in Text. Rec., most uncials, cursives, and versions. (Exp. of John, p.156)

7:16 therefore: Text. Rec., with D L X and few cursives, &c., omits οὐν. (Exp. of John, p.156)

7:21 wonder because of this.: [The American correctors of the RV, "marvel because thereof. Moses hath", are] questionable. (Bible Treasury 14:336)

7:22 Moses hath: [See note to John 7:21]

7:23 a man entirely sound: [The American correctors of the RV, add marg. Gr. a whole man sound, are] right, but trivial (Bible Treasury 14:336)

7:24 judge . . . judge: If the readings (as in Tischendorf's text) be κρίνετε . . . κρίνατε, the first warns against the evil habit in general, the second urges the righteous judgment they should follow on this occasion. (Exp. of John, p.158)

7:31 these . . . did: ἐποίησεν, the common reading, is supported by \aleph^{corr} . B L T and the body of the uncials and cursives, save \aleph^p D, 13, 69 and a few versions which read ποιεῖ, "doeth." — The best witnesses omit τούτων, "these" also. (Exp. of John, p.159)

7:32 the chief priests and the Pharisees: There is high authority for the transposition here as compared with the Text. Rec. (Exp. of John, p.160)

7:33 Jesus Δ : There is little authority for adding αὐτοῖς "to them" as in Text. Rec. (Exp. of John, p.160)
go: [See note to Mat. 26:24]

7:34 find Δ : B T X with a few cursives and ancient versions add με which Lachmann edits here, and in verse 36 too. (Exp. of John, p.160)

7:35 dispersion among the Greeks: There can be no legitimate doubt, I think, that την διασποραν των Ἑλλήνων means (abstract for concrete) the Jews dispersed among the Gentiles (lit. Greeks, as their most striking representative). The Greek genitive is capable of expressing many relations besides that of possession. Compare μετοικεσία Βαβυλωνος (Matt. 1), &c. James 1:1 means the twelve tribes scattered abroad, i.e. living in that condition. 1 Peter 1:1 characterizes the believing Jews in a similar way, and furnishes further example of the comprehensiveness of the genitive in Greek. The teaching of the Greeks, or Gentiles, is another step in John 7:35. (Christian Annotator 3:416) dispersion among the Greeks: The late Dr. Alford says (the Greek Test. in loco), "The διασπ. τ. Ἑλλ. must not be interpreted 'the Hellenistic Jews,' for the Ἕλληνες are always distinguished from the Jews; and this would convey hardly any meaning. The sense of διασπορά is — see reff. James; 1 Pet., — 'the country where Jews lay scattered, as qualified by the succeeding genitive, where one occurs, as here. So here ἡ δ. τ. Ἑλ. means 'the dispersed in the Gentile world.'" This seems a singular mystification of plain Greek. The meaning unquestionably is the Jews dispersed among the Greeks as representative of Gentiles in general. The country is in no way expressed, but at most implied. The Dean further confused the meaning in his Prolegg. to 1 Peter (Greek Test. iv., third edition, p. 123) by saying that δ. "may well designate the engrafting of Gentile (!) converts into dispersed Israel." (Exp. of John, p.160-1)

7:36 find Δ : [See note to John 7:34]

7:37 unto me: Tischendorf omits πρός με (or ἐμὲ) "unto me" on the testimony of \aleph^m D and a few other witnesses contrary to the great mass. (Exp. of John, p.161)

7:38 belly: [The American correctors of the RV, "from within him", are] strongly euphemistic, in contrast with their preference in Luke 15:16 (Bible Treasury 14:336)

7:39 believed: πιστεύοντες the vast majority, πιστεύσαντες B L T, &c. (Exp. of John, p.161)

[the] Δ Spirit . . . yet Δ : ἄγιον and δεδομένον are evident additions, contrary to the best authorities. (Exp. of John, p.161)

[the]: The phraseology of verse 39, though at first it may sound strange, is strictly accurate and suitable. The Spirit is beyond doubt a person, but He is viewed here as the characterising fact of a state not yet in being. Hence it is πνευμα without the article. (Exp. of John, p.164)

7:40 [Some]: πολλοι is added by some eleven uncials and most cursives, &c., as in Text. Rec., contrary to κ B D L T X and some other of the most ancient authorities. (Exp. of John, p.165) these sayings: τῶν λόγων κ B D E G H K L M T U Γ Δ^m Π and many more witnesses, many of which give τούτων also, contrary to Text. Rec., which on inferior authority has τὸν λ. (Exp. of John, p.165)

7:41 Λ others: Text. Rec. adds δὲ with some cursives. (Exp. of John, p.165)

7:46 man Λ: Besides a difference in collocation, κ &c. add λαλεῖ; others omit the clause, perhaps by ὁμοιοτέλευτον or through love of brevity. (Exp. of John, p.166)

7:47 therefore: κ D, twelve cursives, &c., omit οὖν (Exp. of John, p.166)

7:50 Nicodemus Λ: Text. Rec. adds ὁ ἐλθὼν νυκτὸς πρὸς αὐτὸν, with E G H M S Γ Δ most cursives (probably from 19:39), some, as K U Δ Π, putting ν. after π. αὐ., and others, as κ^{corr} B L T, &c., omitting ν. and adding πρότερον, and others giving both, as X and some cursives and ancient versions. Tischendorf omits the clause with κ^m, &c. (Exp. of John, p.166)

7:52 ariseth: ἐγείρεται κ B D K S^m T Γ Δ Π, many cursives, Latin and other ancient versions; ἐγήγερται, "is risen," Text. Rec. following many uncials, cursives, &c. (Exp. of John, p.166)

7:53-8:11 [whole passage]: The point at which we have arrived gives me an opportunity of saying a little on the beginning of this chapter, and the end of the last; for it is well known that many men, and, I am sorry to add, not a few Christians, have allowed appearances to weigh against John 7:53-8:11 — a very precious portion of God's word. The fact is, that the paragraph of the convicted adulteress has been either simply left out in some copies of Scripture, or a blank equivalent to it appears, or it is given with marks of doubt and a good deal of variety of reading, or it is put in elsewhere. This, with many alleged verbal peculiarities, acted on the minds of a considerable number, and led them to question its title to a place in the genuine Gospel of John. I do not think that the objections usually raised are here understated. Nevertheless, mature as well as minute consideration of them fails to raise the slightest doubt in my own mind, and therefore to me it seems so much the more a duty to defend it, where the alternative is a dishonour to what I believe God has given us.

In its favour are the strongest possible proofs from such a character in itself, and such suitability to the context, as no forgery could ever boast. And these moral or spiritual indications (though, of course, only to such as are capable of apprehending and enjoying God's mind) are incomparably graver and more conclusive than any evidence of an external sort. Not that the external evidence is really weak, far from it. That which gives such an appearance is capable of reasonable, unforced, and even of what seems almost to amount to an historical solution. The meddling was probably due to human motives — no uncommon thing in ancient or modern times. With good and with bad intentions men have often tried to mend the word of God. Superstitious persons, unable to enter into its beauty, and anxious after the good opinion of the world, were afraid to trust the truth which Christ was here setting forth in deed. Augustine, an unimpeachable witness of facts, nearly as old as the most ancient manuscripts which omit the paragraph, tells us that it was from ethical difficulties some dropped this section out of their copies. (The suspicion that some weak believers or enemies of the faith omitted the section, as the Bishop of Hippo suggests, would expose the passage to be tampered with. It is very likely that the Christians who read the Shepherd of Hermas in their public services would omit John 8:1-11. Similar unbelief inclines critical judgment in that direction now. Judgment of facts is apt to be swayed and formed by the will.) We know for certain that dogmatic motives similarly influenced some in Luke 22:42,43. . . .

Choose for me in all Scripture a preface of fact so suited to the doctrine of the chapter that follows. The whole chapter, from first to last, beams with light — the light of God and of His word in the person of Jesus. Is not this undeniably what comes out in the opening incident? Does not Christ present Himself in discourse just after as the light of the world (so continually in John), as God's light by His word in Himself, infinitely superior even to law, and yet at the same time giving the law its fullest authority? Only a divine person could thus put and keep everything in its due place; only a divine person could act in perfect grace, but at the same time maintain immaculate holiness, and so much the more because it was in One full of grace. . . . (The fact that κατακρίνω is found here twice, and here only in John, is of no weight against the genuineness of the passage. It is the strict judicial term for passing an adverse sentence among men. How, where, could this be anywhere else in John? It is not true κρίνω is ever used in this sense anywhere in John. It means, and should always be rendered, "judge," not "condemn," though the effect for the guilty (and man is guilty) be necessarily condemnation.) . . . Man invented such a story as this! Who since the world began, had he set to work to imagine an incident to illustrate the chapter, could or would have framed such an one as this? Where is there anything like it, that poet, philosopher, historian ever wrote, ever conceived? Produce the Protevangelion, the gospel of Nicodemus, or any other such early writing. These, indeed, are the genuine productions of man; but what a difference from that before us! Yet is it in the truest sense original, entirely distinct from any other fact, either in the Bible, or anywhere else, not, of course, excepting John himself. Nevertheless, its air, scope, and character can be proved, I think, to suit John, and no other; and this particular context in John, and no other. No theory is less reasonable than that this can be either a mere floating tradition stuck in here by some chance, or the work of a forger's mind. I do not think it harsh, but charitable to speak thus plainly; for the course of incredulity is now running strong, and Christians can hardly avoid hearing of these questions. I therefore do not refuse this opportunity of leading any simple souls to see how truly divine the whole bearing of this portion is — how exactly opposite to that which the Lord insists on throughout the chapter. For, immediately after, we have doctrine unfolded which, no doubt, goes farther, but is intimately connected, as no other chapter is, with the story. (Among the detailed objections to the genuineness of the passage (John 7:53-8:11), it is contended that the evidence of Augustine and Nicon (who distinctly tell us that it was expunged wilfully on account of the supposed license it gave to sin) does not account for the omission of chapter 7:53. But this is short-sighted. For the going of each to his home is in evident connection with, and contradistinction to, the going of Jesus to the mount of Olives. He was ever the stranger here. And what Gospel, or whose style, does this simple but profound contrast suit so much as John? (Compare chap. 20:10,11.) We know, from chap. 18:2, that this neighbourhood was the frequent resort of Jesus with His disciples.

Next, the idea of many distinct and independent texts (as distinguished from abundance of various readings) seems an evident exaggeration. Take the fact, that this is eked out by putting the Received Text as one; the text of D (or Beza's Cambridge Uncial) as another: and that of most of the MSS. E F G H K M S U, &c., as a third. Now, what right has the Received Text to be thus ranged? It was formed by collating some of those very manuscripts which are thrown together as a third text. The true conclusion, therefore, is simply the not at all unprecedented phenomenon that D differs considerably from almost if not all other manuscripts, and that the Received Text is but a poor approximation to a text based on a collation of manuscripts. A really standard text, which gives just but discriminating value to all worthy witnesses, is as yet a desideratum.

Thirdly, what the contents of the passage are which countenance the notion that there is some inherent defect in the text to invalidate its claim to a place in the sacred narrative, I cannot divine, as it is not here explained.

The fourth objection is the very general concurrence of the MSS. that contain the passage in placing it here. Why this place, of all others, should have been selected, will be no difficulty to those who feel with me; but, on the contrary, in my judgment, it refutes the "desperate resource" (as it is even allowed to be, strange to say, by those who adopt it), that the evangelist may have in this solitary case incorporated a portion of the current oral tradition into his narrative, which was afterwards variously corrected from the gospel to the Hebrews, or other traditional sources, and from different diction put in at the end of Luke 21, or elsewhere. I am convinced, that where there is a real understanding of John 8 as a whole, the opening incident will be felt to be a necessary exordium of fact before the discourse which, to my mind, manifestly and certainly grew out of it, as surely as it happened then, and at no other time. Lastly, the mind which could conceive that the fact, as well as the tone or the moral drift of this incident, fits in to the end of Luke 21 rather than to the beginning of John 8, seems so decidedly imaginative, that reasoning is here out of place, particularly as it is allowed, along with this, that its occurrence here (spite of the evidence of some cursive MSS. for Luke 21) seems much in its favour. Lastly, I have examined with care, and satisfied myself, that the alleged weightiest argument against the passage, in its entire diversity from the style of John's narrative is superficial and misleading. Some peculiar words are required by the circumstance; and the general cast and character of the passage, so far from being alien to the evangelist's manner, seems to me, on the contrary, in his spirit, rather than in any other inspired writer's, no matter in which of the manuscripts we read it. D is the copy which makes the chief inroads; this is a common thing with that venerable, but most faulty document.) (Lect. Intro. to the Gospels, p.461-70)

[whole passage]: We are now arrived at a section of our Gospel, the external condition of which is to the reflecting mind a solemn evidence of human unbelief, here as daring as usually it appears to hesitate. No evangelist has suffered as much in this way, not even Mark, whose close disappears from two of the most ancient manuscripts. But as we saw that the angel's visit to trouble the waters of Bethesda was unwelcome to not a few copyists of John 5, so here again incredulity indisposed some to reproduce the story of the adulteress. This is plain from some copies (as L Δ), which leave a blank — a fact wholly inexplicable, if the scribe had not been aware of a paragraph which he knew to exist, but for reasons of his own thought fit to omit. Others, again, transposed it to another place, as the cursives 1, 19, 20, 129, 135, 207, 215, 301, 347, 478, &c., to the end of the Gospel (and 225 after chap. 7:36), and even to another evangelist, as 13, 69, 124, 346, and 556, though alien in tone from all but John, and suiting no place in John but here, where the mass of authority gives it. ✠ A (probably) B C (probably) T X with many cursives and ancient versions simply omit the passage; D F (defective) G H K U Γ (defective), more than 330 cursives, and many versions have it. It is marked by an asterisk, or obelus, in E M S A II, &c. The variations of the copies which do give it are considerable. This brief view of the evidence may suffice for the general reader, as it is more than enough to prove the peculiarity of the case externally.

As regards the internal evidence, some have alleged against the passage its entire diversity from the style of the Gospel elsewhere; and this, not merely in words and idioms which John never uses, but in its whole cast and character, which is said to savour more of the Synoptic Gospels.

All this, however, fails to meet the positive weight of truth in the passage; and its fitness at this very point of the Gospel is utterly unaccountable in a forgery or a tradition. The Lord is displaying the true light in His Person, as contrasted with others who boasted in the law. We have seen their conscienceless discussion in the preceding chapter. (Exp. of John, p.168-9)

[whole passage]: Still more blameable appears to us Mr. [T. S.] Green's dealing with John 8, following Lachmann, Tischendorf, Alford, and Tregelles. We frankly admit that the passage is wanting in a good many of the best MSS. It is contained, with some variations, in many uncials, and the mass of cursives; it has respectable testimony from versions of nearly every quarter, and from fathers. But it does seem extraordinary that Mr. G. should omit to give the weighty words of Augustine, (De conj. Adult. ii.) not so much because they positively attest the presence of this portion in the copies of his time, but more because he gives the clear, simple, and satisfactory key to the shiftings of place, the fluctuations of shape, the stigmas of distrust, and the non-recognition in Origen, Chrysostom, Tertullian, and many more, where a notice might have been looked for. Enmity to the true faith, according to Augustine, was the cause of its retrenchment. Some unwilling to go so far, would insert it with marks of doubt; others might hide it elsewhere, or more boldly leave a blank; which of itself intimates that its existence was known, but that for some reason it was omitted by those who little appreciated the glory of Christ, or the perfectness and the authority of His word. To say that "the genuineness of the passage cannot be maintained" is the conclusion of Mr. G! Some of these editors allow it to be true and inspired, but not St. John's: evidently a mere half-way towards discarding it altogether. It could be easily shown, were this the place, that the narrative bears the indelible marks of that disciple's style, and of the design which the Holy Ghost has imprinted on his gospel and on no other book. (Bible Treasury 1:297)

[whole passage]: The most noteworthy and important omission is of course the end of chapter 7 and beginning of chapter 8 to verse 11 inclusively. Here confessedly most of the old uncials are adverse, and not a few versions are silent, as ancient commentators also. But it is painful to add that Augustine at an early day, and Nicon, an Armenian abbot of the tenth century, bear their distinct testimony to the subjective reasons which led to leaving out the story, even where it was well known to exist in the Gospel. Nothing on the other hand can account for its insertion if it were not the inspired word of God; and in no place does it fit in, spite of strong and repeated efforts to dislodge it, save as the fact introductory to the discourse of our Lord in this chapter. The internal objections to the style or language are as weak as those alleged against Mark 16:9-20. The words, which viewed superficially afford occasion, turn out when duly weighed to be powerful evidences of their own genuineness as well as authenticity; as is indeed the case invariably with true scripture for all who value the truth. (Bible Treasury 13:319)

8:1 [See note to 7:53]

8:2 people: The Lord's habit in this respect, recorded by Luke (21:37, 38; 22:39), is a strange reason for discrediting John's mention of this particular instance. Nor does any reason appear to question that it was not merely "the crowd" (ὄχλος), but "the people" in a large sense (λαός) which here flocked to the Lord's teaching in the temple. (Exp. of John, p.169) [See note to 7:53]

8:3 [See note to 7:53]

8:4 [See note to 7:53]

8:5 [See note to 7:53]

8:6 [See note to 7:53]

8:7 [See note to 7:53]

8:8 [See note to 7:53]

8:9 ^Λ kept: The clause translated, “and being convicted by their conscience,” in the Text. Rec., and supported by E G H K S, &c., is omitted by still better authority. (Exp. of John, p.170) [See note to 7:53]

8:10 [See note to 7:53]

8:11 [See note to 7:53]

8:14 [but]: ^κ F H K, many cursives, &c., omit δέ. (Exp. of John, p.173) or: ^η B D⁸ K T U X ^Λ, very many cursives and ancient versions, instead of καὶ with the rest and Text. Rec. (Exp. of John, p.173)

8:16 true: ἀληθής ^κ and eleven other uncials, most cursives, &c.; ἀληθινὴ B D L T X, &c. (Exp. of John, p.173)

Father: ^κ^{mm} D omit πατήρ. (Exp. of John, p.173)

8:21 He: Eleven uncials, and the cursives, versions, &c., insert ὁ Ἰησοῦς, contrary to ^κ B D L T X, &c., Orig. Cyr. (Exp. of John, p.175) sin: All the old English versions too are wrong, save the Rhemish which has “your sinne.” (Exp. of John, p.175)

8:24 I am [he]: [The American correctors of the RV, “I am he” omit marg.¹, are] right (Bible Treasury 14:336)

8:25 Absolutely: The Authorised Version is here faulty like many others ancient and modern. It is true that ἀρχὴν with or without the article may be used in ordinary Greek for “at the first” or “formerly.” So in the Sept. of Gen. 13:4; 43:18, 20, &c.; and thus Nonnus understood the language of our evangelist in this place. Not the temporal sense, however, of the word is meant in the present remarkable phrase, but that of archetypal character or first principle. Thus Tyndale (1534): “even the very same thinge that I saye unto you”; and Cranmer (1539), only changing “saye” into “speake.” After them the Rhemish followed the strange and ungrammatical rendering of the Vulgate, “Principium qui et loquor vobis.” It is hard, if not impossible, to understand “qui” here; yet “principium” is not so far from the truth, as if the phrase had been confounded with “ab initio.” Indeed, the old Cod. Vero. has “initium quod loquor vobis,” as Cod. Brix. “Principium quod et loquor vobis.” The Geneva Version misled the translators of 1611 into a sort of double rendering, “Even the very same,” which would be a good enough version of τὴν ἀρχὴν, but they added also “from the beginning,” which necessitated a false representation of λαλῶ as if it were ἐλάλησα or ἔλεξα.

As the fourth Gospel pointedly employs ἐν ἀρχῇ, ὁ πᾶς ἀρχῆς (and in two cases ἐξ ἀρχῆς), there is the less reason for confounding the single occurrence of τὴν ἀρχὴν with any of them. The Lord uses the phrase prominently in answer to the question, Who art Thou? raised by the contemptuous unbelief of the Pharisees. He had already declared Himself the light of the world, but that they knew neither Him nor His Father, and should die in their sin because of their unbelief. He had not yet in terms disclosed His eternal Being as in ver. 58, but is gradually rising to this from the incident which so fittingly opens the chapter. The law of death in man’s hand is powerless before the Light of Life, Who is from above, and not of this world. He is the Word of God. He and He alone when challenged could say, “I am absolutely, altogether, what I speak also to you.” His speech thoroughly expresses Himself. Essentially, precisely, What He is, He also speaks. These alternatives, suggested by various interpreters, differ no doubt in degrees of accuracy; but substantially they agree in identifying the Lord with His utterance also; for He is the truth. They seem better than “originally,” which means little more than “at first” or “at the beginning,” and, though often legitimate, looks quite out of place when applied to Christ, the Faithful Witness, Who is “the same yesterday and to-day and for ever.” He alone could say that He was wholly what He also speaks. Mr. McClellan is right in holding that Christ’s speech reveals His eternal Being; but does not “originally” fail to convey it?

If the Sanscrit root helps us, it implies “worth, merit, fitness, dignity, and worship”; and “beginning” is secondary. Certainly ἀρχὴ appears in philosophic usage as “a principle,” whether of being or of thought; and in ordinary application as a “first place,” estate, or office, and even materially as in Acts 10:11; 11:5. Thus “at the first” or “originally” is the sense in Herodotus (i. 86, 140; ii. 28, 148; iv. 59; viii. 128, 132), when contrast with the present is intended. But an exclusive force appears with the negative even more frequently still (as in i. 192; ii. 95; iii. 16, 39; iv. 25, 28; vi. 33; vii. 26; ix. 57). On its very first occurrence (i. 9), how could “originally” assure Gyges? Did not the king mean that his own contrivance was to screen him absolutely? So Larcher understood in his learned version (i. 8, note a, ed. 1802). Dean Blakesley’s view was “to begin with,” which would be almost absurd, and certainly inadequate, for our text. To assume that only in negative sentences the absolute sense occurs is mistaken, at any rate in later Greek; as the reader may see in the following references to Dion Cassius (vol. i. 96 [Fr. Peir. ci.], ii. 342 [xlv. 34], iii. 688 [lix. 19], iv. 52, [lxii. 4] ed. Sturz. Two cases at least might be added of ἀρχὴν without τὴν.

We may dismiss then, among many untenable proposals, the renderings of Wiclif and the Wicliffe (iv. 280, Oxford, 1850), following the Vulgate, with which go Syr.^{het} and the Gothic; and with slight variations Augustine of old, and Fritzsche and Wordsworth of late. Not so held Cod. Veron. but “Imprimis,” as Cod. Corb. “de superioribus,” though it is hard to say what they meant. Nor can the interrogation stand with “at all,” as Chrysostom, Cyril. Alex. (and so Lücke and Ewald), and the R.V. margin; nor with “from the beginning” as Meyer. The more prevalent construction of the A. and R.Vv., like the Sah. Memph. Syr.^{pesh.}, slights both the sense and the tense of λαλῶ, with the place and force of καὶ, through the first fault of misrendering τὴν ἀρχὴν. The Aeth. Arab. Arm. differ from these and from one another, but afford no help, as far as I can judge. “Absolutely [or, In principle] what also I speak to you” reflects justly the language, the order of the words, the grammar, and above all the bearing of the context and of this sentence in particular. There is no need therefore of connecting the end of ver. 25 with the beginning of 26, as Bengel, Raphelius, and Wakefield suggested, who otherwise rather confirm the true import, as does the ὁλως of Euth. Zig. (Exp. of John, p.177-8)

Absolutely: There should be neither “at the beginning,” but “absolutely;” nor “what I said,” but “what I am speaking.” If these words are weighed, you will find the force of them. (Lect. on Ephesians, p.198) absolutely: But there is a difficulty of translation in the central part of this chapter which should not be lightly passed over. The Jews say to the Lord (ver. 25), “Who art thou? Jesus said unto them, Even that which I have also spoken unto you from the beginning,” τὴν ἀρχὴν οὐ καὶ λαλῶ υμῖν. Such is the Revisers’ translation and Mr. Palmer’s text, pretty much as the Authorised Version, “even the same that I said unto you from the beginning.” (The Vulgate has, Principium qui (some copies, quia) et loquor vobis; and this of course Wiclif follows, and the Rhemish yet more closely. No one can doubt that they are all absurdly wrong, though Augustine and Ambrose misused their liberties to extract a tolerable sense from what must have been wholly ungrammatical. To bear such a version the Lord must have said ἡ ἀρχὴ, not to speak of anything else. The Greek ecclesiastics, not comprehending the connexion, have apparently evaded coming to close quarters.) It is the more strange, as Tyndale followed by Cranmer had rendered it not only in better keeping with the context but with less violence to grammatical propriety: "Even the very same thing that I saye (C. speake) unto you." The Geneva Version introduced the error which still taints the Revision: "Even the very same thing that I sayde unto you from the begynnyng," which rendering appears to give a twofold meaning to τὴν ἀρχὴν, besides that one of these meanings leads to the violation of the time of the verb. This the Five Clergymen seek to avoid in "That which I also say unto you from the beginning." But even if this were otherwise allowable, how can τὴν ἀρχὴν = ἐξ (or ἀπ') ἀρχῆς? It is common enough to see ἀρχὴν or ἀρχάς, with or without κατά, in the sense of at first, in the beginning, to begin with; and no doubt the assumption that so it means here gave occasion to "I said" or "I have spoken" as the rendering of λαλῶ. Were all this permissible and feasible, where is the propriety of the sense that results? Plato's Lysis (recogn. Baiter. Orell. & Wink. 367, col. 2) proves that it is too hasty to say that the phrase cannot mean absolutely, altogether, save in negative and quasi-negative sentences; and Elsner adds a few more occurrences in later Greek. This alone gives a worthy meaning: "Who art thou? Absolutely what I am also speaking to you." Jesus is the Word, the Truth: what He speaks corresponds wholly with His being. He is what He says, as none other: not only the truth in itself, but precisely what comes out from first to last in this chapter, where He first acts as the light, then reveals Himself as such, and shows that He is the truth, the Son, and finally God, the Eternal One: before Abraham was (γενέσθαι) I am (ἐγὼ εἰμι). (Bible Treasury 13:319-320) absolutely: [The American correctors of the RV are] right. 25 is rather a timid dealing with the wild mis-rendering of the Revisers, both text and margin. What the Americans would substitute for the present margin should go into the text; and those who demand positive connexion of τὴν ἀρχὴν, instead of one merely negative as commonly, can consult Dio Cass. Fragm. Peiresc. ci. ὅτι καὶ τὴν ἀρχὴν ἐπικαλέσαι πὶ αὐτοῖς ἐτόλμησαν, κ. τ. λ. (Sturz' ed. i. 96; also ii. 342; iii. 688; iv. 52). This may satisfy the most imperious that the only rendering otherwise grammatical and suitable to the context is to give τὴν ἀρχὴν its idiomatic sense of "absolutely" or "altogether." (Bible Treasury 14:336)

8:26 unto: 26 needs no ridiculous margin of Gr. into. Every one knows that the word means "to" or "unto," just as well as "into." The Revisers' margin implies that "into" is alone correct, which is itself incorrect. (Bible Treasury 14:336)

8:28 [to them]: B L T, &c., omit αὐτοῖς which is read by the great body of the witnesses. (Exp. of John, p.179)

8:29 ^Λ he . . . to him: Some good authorities prefix καὶ "and," others add ὁ πατήρ "the Father" at the end of the clause, and so Text. Rec. (Exp. of John, p.179)

8:38 seen . . . your: The great majority read ὑμῶν, but not B L T, &c. . . . ἐω(ο)ράκατε ^{℣^m} D E F G H M S T U Γ Δ Λ, &c., Text. Rec.; ἡκούσατε ^{℣^{ant}} B C K L X, &c. (Exp. of John, p.180)

8:39 are: ἐστε B D L T, &c.; ἦτε Text. Rec. following the great mass. (Exp. of John, p.180)

8:41 [therefore]: Text. Rec. adds οὖν with fifteen uncials but not the oldest. (Exp. of John, p.180)

8:42 ^Λ them: The authorities are pretty equal for and against reading οὖν "therefore" as given in Text. Rec. (Exp. of John, p.180)

8:44 your: Text. Rec. omits τοῦ contrary to all good witnesses. (Exp. of John, p.181)

standeth: I agree that "stood" is untenable, and to give the margin [of the RV] is unintelligible, as it is a question of rendering, not of reading according to these or those authorities. (Bible Treasury 14:336)

8:46 ^Λ If: δὲ is added by many uncials, &c., and followed by Text. Rec., contrary to the best MSS. and versions. (Exp. of John, p.181)

8:48 ^Λ answered: A dozen uncials and most cursives, &c. (and so Text. Rec.) add οὖν, "therefore," contrary to the oldest, B C D L X, many cursives and versions. (Exp. of John, p.187)

8:52 therefore: Fifteen uncials and most cursives, &c., read οὖν "therefore," but not B C, &c., with some very old versions. (Exp. of John, p.188)

died: [The American correctors of the RV,] so Green, &c. (Bible Treasury 14:336)

8:53 died: [The American correctors of the RV,] so Green, &c. (Bible Treasury 14:336)

8:54 our: B^m D F X, &c., ὑμῶν (and so Text. Rec.) contrary to the rest. (Exp. of John, p.188)

8:58 was ^Λ: "was born" is fuller and more precise, but lacks the dignity of the Authorised Version "was." (Bible Treasury 14:336)

8:59 going through the midst of them, and so passed by: Here end B D and some of the oldest versions, the rest adding substantially as in Text. Rec. . . . The remaining words are probably taken from Luke 4:30, though many witnesses (A C E L X Δ, &c., with some very ancient versions) insert them. (Exp. of John, p.188,190)

9:3 ^Λ Jesus: Some authorities insert ὁ, "the," contrary to the great mass. (Exp. of John, p.191)

9:4 I . . . me: Tischendorf, in his eighth edition, reads ἡμᾶς, "us," in both occurrences, following ^{℣^m} B D L, several ancient versions, &c.; but Alford, Green, Griesbach, Scholz, Lachmann, &c., adhere to ἐμὲ and με with A C and the great majority of uncials, cursives, and many ancient versions. B D give με in the second place, followed by Tregelles, as by Westcott and Hort also, with the Sahidic and the Syriac of Jerusalem, &c. This goes far to explode the "we" must work; still more is the internal evidence against it. (Exp. of John, p.191) me: There is little calling for notice in the Company's work [the RV] on chapter 9 save the reception of ἡμᾶς "us" in verse 4 instead of the first "me" without even a caution in the margin. (Bible Treasury 13:320)

9:8 beggar: The common and largely supported reading is τυφλός, "blind"; but the more ancient is προσαίτης, "a beggar." (Exp. of John, p.194)

9:9 others: So read B C L X with many old versions; Text. Rec. ἄλλοι δὲ ὅτι with more than a dozen uncials, &c., as δὲ also. (Exp. of John, p.194)

9:10 then: οὖν B C D L X, &c. (Exp. of John, p.194)

9:11 The . . . and said: ὁ . . . ὁ B, &c., but omitting the first καὶ εἶπεν, as the mass omit the articles. (Exp. of John, p.194)

^Λ Siloam: B D L X, &c., omit τὴν κολυμβήθραν τοῦ and read τὸν Σ. (Exp. of John, p.194)

then: οὖν B D L X, &c., δὲ the mass. (Exp. of John, p.194)

9:12 And: καὶ B L X, &c., οὖν majority, but A and some old versions omit both. (Exp. of John, p.194) saith ^Λ: D &c., with ancient versions, add αὐτοῖς, "to them." (Exp. of John, p.194)

9:14 [on the day]: ἐν ᾗ ἡμέρᾳ ⋈ B L X, &c., but the great mass give ὅτε, “when.” (Exp. of John, p.196)

9:16 ⋈ Others: ⋈ B D and some cursives and versions add δὲ, “but.” (Exp. of John, p.197)

9:17 therefore: οὖν ⋈ A B D L X, many cursives and versions; but most, followed by Text. Rec., omit. (Exp. of John, p.198)

Thou: οὐ τί Text. Rec. with most; τί σου ⋈ B L X, &c. (Exp. of John, p.198)

9:20 therefore: οὖν ⋈ B, &c.; most δὲ many omit, and so Text. Rec., which adds αὐτοῖς with most, contrary to ⋈ B L X, &c. (Exp. of John, p.198)

9:25 answered ⋈ : καὶ εἶπεν is the addition of Text. Rec., following most uncials and cursives, but not of ⋈ A B D L, some good cursives, and the best ancient versions. (Exp. of John, p.199)

9:26 therefore ⋈ : Text. Rec. has δὲ, “and,” with many good authorities, but not ⋈^{ort} (⋈^m omitting) B D K L X, many cursives and versions. (Exp. of John, p.201)

[again]: πάλιν, Text. Rec., with most uncials, cursives, &c., but not ⋈ B D, &c., and many ancient versions. (Exp. of John, p.201)

9:28 railed ⋈ : οὖν is added in Text. Rec., with little support; καὶ ⋈ B, &c., but the most read neither. (Exp. of John, p.201)

9:30 the: τὸ θ. “the” in ⋈ B L, a few cursives, &c., omitted in the great majority. (Exp. of John, p.201)

9:31 ⋈ We: Text. Rec. adds δὲ “now,” with most, against ⋈ B D G L. (Exp. of John, p.202)

9:35 God [or, man]: But a perplexing difference of reading follows, which claims more than a bare critical notice. “Dost thou believe on the Son of man?” say the Sinaitic, the Vatican, and the Cambridge (of Beza) manuscripts, supported by the Sahidic, Roman edition of the Aethiopic, &c., though more than a dozen uncials, all the cursives, and the rest of the ancient versions, &c., give us τοῦ θεοῦ, “of God.” But Tischendorf in his eighth edition, and W. and H. adopt τοῦ ἀνθρώπου. Nor can it be denied that, as the rule, the Lord habitually and graciously loved to present Himself in relation to man; as again, it is plain that this chapter in particular sets Him forth, not only as the Light, Word, and God, like the preceding one, but as the Incarnate One Who was sent to manifest the works of God, the rejected Messiah about to suffer but to be exalted over all. On the other hand, that the Son of God is the great distinctive testimony of our Gospel none can overlook; and we can well understand how the light of this glorious truth (bursting on the soul gradually led on, spite of, and in a certain sense through, the blind hostility of the Pharisees) draws him out in homage to the Lord. It was at any rate the Son of God in grace, a man on earth, Who had been seen by, and was talking with, one who had experienced His light-giving power. (Exp. of John, p.203-4)

9:36 He answered: B and Theb. omit ἀπεκρίθη ἐκεῖνος, “he answered.” Memph. omits “said.” (Exp. of John, p.202) and: Text. Rec. omits καὶ, “and,” with A L and a few others, but good versions. (Exp. of John, p.202)

9:37 ⋈ Jesus: Text. Rec. adds δὲ with many good authorities, but ⋈ B D X, &c., omit. (Exp. of John, p.202)

9:40 And . . . these things: ⋈ B L X, three cursives, Theb. or Sah. Memph. Arm., &c., do not read καὶ as in Text. Rec. with most uncials, cursives, and versions, which also add ταῦτα, “these things,” save ⋈^m D, &c., with several versions. (Exp. of John, p.204)

9:41 ⋈ your: Text. Rec. adds οὖν with ten uncials and most cursives, contrary to ⋈ B D K L X, &c., and the bulk of the ancient versions. (Exp. of John, p.204)

10:2 ⋈ shepherd: [The RV] might have avoided both text and marginal alternative of chapter 10:2 by giving simply “is shepherd of the sheep.” It is not often perhaps that English answers to the anarthrous Greek without the definite, or even the indefinite, article; but here it seems to be unequivocally preferable. (Bible Treasury 13:320)

10:3 calleth: καλεῖ Text. Rec. with eleven uncials and most cursives, &c.; φωνεῖ ⋈ A B D L X, some cursives, &c. Either means “calleth.” (Exp. of John, p.206)

10:4 ⋈ When: Most insert καὶ (as Text. Rec.), or δὲ but the most ancient omit. (Exp. of John, p.206)

all his own ⋈ : Most uncials, &c., read πρόβατα “sheep,” as Text. Rec., but very ancient ones have either πάντα “all,” or nothing more than τὰ ἴδια, “his own.” (Exp. of John, p.206)

all his own ⋈ : [The RV has] adopted a better text than the Received in verse 4: “When he hath put forth all his own,” reading “all” and dropping “sheep.” (Bible Treasury 13:320)

10:6 proverb: The Gospel of John does not use the ordinary word “parable,” as the Synoptics do frequently, and no other, for our Lord’s narrative likenesses in illustration of truth. John was led to employ the word given in the Septuagint for a “proverb,” in the sense of an “allegory,” or a divergence from the common way of speech, as a parable means a comparison. (Exp. of John, p.208)

10:7 again to them: Some omit πάλιν and others αὐτοῖς. (Exp. of John, p.209)

10:8 [before me]: Authorities are about equally for and against πρὸ ἐμοῦ as in Text. Rec. (Exp. of John, p.209)

[before me]: 10:8 shows the remarkable omission of “before me” in many eminent authorities. Tischendorf, in his 8th edition, has the unenviable singularity of forming his text accordingly: it might be worth mentioning in the margin. (Bible Treasury 14:336)

10:12 [But]: The copulative particle δὲ is not in B G L and a few other good witnesses. (Exp. of John, p.211)

are: ἐστὶν ⋈ A B L X, &c.; εἰσὶν most uncials and cursives. (Exp. of John, p.212)

10:13 and the hireling fleeth: This clause ὁ δὲ μισθωτὸς φεύγει, “and the hireling fleeth,” is not given in ⋈ (A is somewhat uncertain) B D L, some cursives, ancient versions, &c., but a dozen uncials of inferior age and weight, with most cursives and some of the old versions, insert as in Text. Rec. (Exp. of John, p.212)

10:14 mine know me: The Text. Rec. with thirteen uncials and perhaps all cursives, &c., has γινώσκομαι ὑπὸ τῶν ἐμῶν, “I am known of mine”; ⋈ B D L, with the oldest versions γινώσκονσί με τὰ ἐμά. (Exp. of John, p.213) mine know me: Here it is in the mutual knowledge of the Shepherd and the sheep that His goodness is shewn; . . . This mutuality of knowledge disappears almost entirely in the Authorised Version through the unhappy full stop between verses 14, 15, and the consequent mistranslation of the earlier clause of verse 15. (Exp. of John, p.213)

mine know me: [The RV has] given the undoubtedly requisite correction on good authority, which beautifully connects the two verses now severed; (Of English versions here Wiclif is the best, and the Rhemish the worst, though both were founded on the Vulgate.) excluding the gross blunder of “fold” instead of “flock” for ποιμνὴ in verse 16, where Tyndale was right. (Bible Treasury 13:320)

10:16 there shall be: \aleph^{corr} B D L X, &c., support the plural form $\gammaενήσονται$, "they shall be," the rest have the sing. $\gammaενήσεται$, which might bear the same meaning. (Exp. of John, p.214) flock: It is not, as in the English Bible and others, following the Vulgate, "one fold," but "one flock." God owns no such thing now as a fold. . . . Another element which has wrought powerfully in favour of "one fold" is the mischievous confusion of the church with Israel, Zion, &c., which runs through not only common theology but even the headings of the Authorised Version, and constantly therefore is before all eyes. (Exp. of John, p.214-5) flock: Is it said in excuse that not only the loose speech prevalent in Christendom but the Vulgate of Jerome misled? Yet Pope Leo is a student of Scripture, they say, and probably familiar with the Greek original of the N.T. He ought therefore to have known and avoided so flagrant a mistake. In the same verse 16 of John 10 is the word ($\alpha\lambda\lambda\eta$) rightly translated "fold", the Jewish enclosure. Here the Lord declares that the sheep He had which were not of this fold should, with those He was leading out of the fold, be "one flock" with one Shepherd. No such gathering into one had been hitherto. It was reserved for Christ when rejected by the Jews. As the law was given by Moses, grace and truth came by Jesus Christ, Who died to gather together in one the scattered children of God (John 11:52). . . .

But there is another fact of immediate bearing, which, if not familiar to all, one might expect so experienced a theologian as the present Pope to know. The correct and only tenable rendering we now discuss is given in copies of the old Latin Gospels, both African (or unrevised) and of the Italic revision. Thus in the Cod. Vercell. we read "fiet una grex, et unus pastor"; in the Cod. Veron. (with which here agrees Cod. Corbei.), "fiet unus grex, et unus pastor"; and in the Cod. Brix., "fient unus grex et unus pastor": each independent and differing perceptibly, but all agreeing in the sure and weighty truth of "one flock." This the Hieronymian Version perverted, the Popes and Councils and clergy ever since sanctioning it, ignorantly or deliberately, for their return more and more to the Jewish fold; as in fact there is none but that one. The blessed difference of the "one flock, one shepherd" they do not appreciate. It is all one to them no doubt.

Let me add that even the Gothic V. of Ulphilas is correct: why Gabelentz and Loebe have given a misinterpretation in Latin is the more strange, because in their note they rightly convict Schultz of error on this point. It is well-known that the Peschito Syriac gives the just sense, as does the later Philoxenian: so also the Aeth., the Anglo-Sax., the Arabic, the Arm., the Georgian, the Memph. the Sah., and the Slavonic. Luther translated correctly, as did Tyndale; but Cranmer and the later English wrongly followed the Vulgate, which was natural in Wiclif and the Rhemish. Erasmus in his note cites Valla, who knew that $\piοιμν\eta$ is "grex" rather than "ovile"; but he left the error uncorrected in all his five editions. Beza corrects it in his fourth and fifth editions, though wrong in the first three. But there can be no question to those who adhere to the word, either of the truth, or of its importance. In Matt. 26:31, Luke 2:8, and twice in 1 Cor. 9:7, the Vulgate gives "flock," not "fold" without hesitation, and thus condemns itself in John 10:16, where it is dogmatically of moment. (Bible Treasury N1:127-8)

10:19 Δ again: "Therefore" in the Text. Rec. has considerable support of MSS., but the older omit it. (Exp. of John, p.217)

10:20 but: Here again some give "therefore," instead of "but." (Exp. of John, p.217)

10:22 Now: B L, 33, Memph. have "then," as they and more omit "and." (Exp. of John, p.217)

10:26 sheep Δ : The weightiest authorities omit "as I told you." (Exp. of John, p.217)

10:29 My . . . who . . . my: Some MSS. say "the" for my; others, not "who," but "as to what he." — \aleph B L omit last $\mu\omicron\nu$, "my." (Exp. of John, p.217) hath given me [them]: . . . it seems rather surprising that [the RV] should have deemed it advisable to give in the margin, "That which my Father hath given unto me," even though read by some ancient authorities, seeing that this is not really "greater than all," and that it also wholly breaks the context. No doubt Tischendorf, Tregelles and Alford adopt this unreasonable variation; but, strange to say, Dr. S. Davidson, who translates the text of the first, follows the ordinary readings here, and so does the last in his revised New Testament. And is there not a purposed omission of the object in both parts of the verse, which should be heeded by the translator instead of supplying "them" twice, as the Revisers do? The omission gives force to the gift, and strongly negatives wresting out of the Father's hand. (Bible Treasury 13:320)

10:31 [therefore]: \aleph B L, 33, &c., omit; the rest add. (Exp. of John, p.221)

10:32 the [or, my]: \aleph^{m} B D omit $\mu\omicron\nu$, "my." (Exp. of John, p.221)

10:33 Δ For: The bulk of witnesses omits, "saying." (Exp. of John, p.221)

10:38 believe . . . [believe, or] know: The weight of testimony is for $\pi\iota\sigma\tau\epsilon\upsilon\epsilon\tau\epsilon$ rather than $\pi\iota\sigma\tau\epsilon\upsilon\sigma\alpha\tau\epsilon$. Then, as $\gamma\iota\nu\omega\sigma\kappa\eta\tau\epsilon$ seemed difficult after $\gamma\iota\nu\omega\tau\epsilon$, many read $\pi\iota\sigma\tau\epsilon\upsilon\sigma\eta\tau\epsilon$ as the Text. Rec. has it. (Exp. of John, p.223)

Father: "The Father" is in \aleph B D L X, two cursives, several It. Vulg. Syrr. Sah. Arm. Arab. Anglo-Sax. Pers. (Memph. Aeth. reversing order); "him," as in Text. Rec., Δ Γ Δ and nine uncials more, mass of cursives, some It. Gothic, Syrr.^m Slav. (Exp. of John, p.223)

11:7 his [or, the]: \aleph B E L X, &c., read $\tau\omicron\iota\varsigma$, but the weight favours $\alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\upsilon$ also. (Exp. of John, p.225)

11:12 him: $\alpha\upsilon\tau\omega$ $\omicron\iota$ μ . \aleph D K Π , &c. some adding $\alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\upsilon$ with Syrr. &c.; B C^m X, &c., $\omicron\iota$ μ . $\alpha\upsilon\tau\omega$ (the latter only is in A, &c.), while the Text. Rec. with most gives $\omicron\iota$ μ . $\alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\nu$. (Exp. of John, p.227)

11:19 Mary Δ : The Received Text with Syr.^{hcl} implies "and their company"; but the more ancient copies and versions do not allow this. (Exp. of John, p.228)

11:22 ask: she applies to the Lord language far below His true relation to the Father: . . . It is all right to use $\alpha\iota\tau\acute{\epsilon}\omega$ of us, for the place of a suppliant or petitioner becomes us; but the word of more familiar demand, $\epsilon\rho\omega\tau\acute{\alpha}\omega$, is suitable to Him. (Exp. of John, p. 229-230)

11:31 thinking: $\delta\acute{o}\xi\alpha\nu\tau\epsilon\varsigma$ \aleph B C^m D L X, some cursives, and most ancient versions, &c.; $\lambda\acute{\epsilon}\gamma\omicron\nu\tau\epsilon\varsigma$, "saying," (Text. Rec.) A C^{corr} and a dozen uncials, most cursives and versions. (Exp. of John, p.231)

11:33 deeply moved: The word translated "deeply moved" occurs elsewhere for a "strict" or stern "charge," as in Matthew 9:30, Mark 1:43; or an angry speech, as in Mark 14:5. Here it is rather the inward feeling than the expression, approached rather nearly by such use as that in Lucian (Nec. 20), of (it would seem) groaning. It means the strong, and it may be indignant, affection the Lord experienced at the power of death over not the Jews only but Mary, wielded as it still was by the enemy. (Exp. of John, p.232)

11:35 Δ Jesus: \aleph D, &c., with most of the ancient versions, add the copula $\kappa\alpha\iota$, "and." (Exp. of John, p.231)

11:39 deceased: For the received reading τεθνηκότος, “dead,” supported by a good many uncials and most cursives, the highest authorities give τετελευτηκότος, “deceased.” (Exp. of John, p.233)

11:41 Λ and: Text. Rec. with the great majority of MSS. adds οὗ ἦν ὁ τεθνηκώς κείμενος, A K Π, &c., only οὗ ἦν, but the best (κ B C^m D L X, some cursives, and the oldest versions) omit. (Exp. of John, p.233)

11:44 And . . . him: The Received Text with most authorities begins with the copula καὶ, “and,” but omits the last αὐτὸν, “him,” contrary to a few of the best authorities. (Exp. of John, p.234)

11:48 [and]: D, 255, with Syrr., Memph.^w, Aeth.^r, add καὶ, “and.” (Exp. of John, p.235)

11:50 reckon: λογίζεσθε κ A B D L, some cursives, &c., instead of the Text. Rec. διαλ., “consider,” supported by most uncials, cursives, &c. (Exp. of John, p.235)

you: ὑμῖν, “you,” B D L M Γ, many cursives, &c.; ἡμῖν “us,” still more witnesses; κ &c. omitting either. (Exp. of John, p.235)

11:53 consulted: εβ. κ B D, &c.; συνεβ. much the most. (Exp. of John, p.235)

11:54 abode: Instead of διέτριβεν, “tarried,” as most, κ B L ἔμεινεν, “abode.” (Exp. of John, p.236)

the: κ B D I L Γ Δ, &c., do not read αὐτοῦ, “his,” as in the rest. (Exp. of John, p.236)

12:1 Λ whom Jesus: Text. Rec. adds ὁ τεθνηκώς with large consent of uncials, cursives, and versions, contrary to κ B L X, Syr.^{pesch}, Sah., Aeth., &c.; as it omits Ἰησοῦς at the end, spite of the best witnesses inserting it. (Exp. of John, p.239)

12:3 pure: πιστικός perplexes the critics, some taking it as liquid, others as genuine or pure, according to its supposed source. (Exp. of John, p.239)

12:4 And: δὲ κ B, Memph., Goth., and probably Syr.^{pesch} Aeth. &c.; Text. Rec., οὖν, with most uncials and cursives, &c., a few omitting. (Exp. of John, p.239)

Iscaiot Λ : Text. Rec. Σιμωνὸς without ὁ, on the authority of many MSS., &c. (Exp. of John, p.239)

12:6 and having the bag: εἶχεν καὶ Text. Rec. with most; ἔχων κ B D L Q, a few good cursives and versions. The Ancient versions generally render γλ. “chest.” (Exp. of John, p.239)

12:7 kept it: τηρήκεν Text. Rec., with a dozen uncials, most cursives, and many versions, but ἴνα . . . τηρήσῃ κ B D K L Q X Π, several cursives, and most ancient versions. (Exp. of John, p.239)

12:9 A [or, The]: A few witnesses of the highest antiquity and character (κ B^m L) read the article, as to which some of the old versions are ambiguous. (Exp. of John, p.241)

12:16 Λ These: The copula of Text. Rec., with fourteen uncials and most cursives, is not in κ B L Q and some of the more ancient versions. (Exp. of John, p.242)

12:17 because: ὅτι D E^m K L Π and some of the oldest versions; ὅτε, “when” (Steph., not Elz.) κ A B and most of the other uncials, many cursives, &c. (Exp. of John, p.243)

12:22 Λ Andrew: So a few of the oldest MSS. with a slight variation, while Text. Rec. with most has καὶ πάλιν, ‘A. κ.Φ.λ. as in the Authorised Version. (Exp. of John, p.244)

12:23 answered: ἀποκρίνεται “answereth” κ B L X., &c.; ἀπεκρίνατο “answered” Text. Rec., with the mass of uncials, cursives, and versions. (Exp. of John, p.244)

12:24 why not “the” grain of wheat, as they themselves [the RV] give “the” mountain . . . ? (Bible Treasury 13:320)

the: why not “the” grain of wheat, as they themselves [in the RV] give “the” mountain, “the” rock, “the” bushel, “the” lampstand, “the” sower, “the” bason, “the” sop, &c. (Bible Treasury 13:320)

12:25 shall: ἀπολλύει, “loseth,” κ B L, 33, &c. (Exp. of John, p.244)

12:26 Λ if: καὶ “and” is added in Text. Rec. with thirteen uncials, and most other authorities, but not the oldest. (Exp. of John, p.244)

12:28 thy: B by an evident slip reads μου for σου to the grievous detriment of the sense. (Exp. of John, p.247)

12:29 then: B omits οὖν while κ A D L X, &c. have it. (Exp. of John, p.247) him Λ : Augustine and Jerome confound this with chapter 17:5, from which it is wholly and demonstrably distinct . . . So does the venerable but gloss-loving Codex Bezae (conventionally called D); for it actually adds to the text ἐν τῇ δόξῃ ἣ εἶχον παρὰ σοι πρὸ τοῦ τὸν κόσμον γενέσθαι. (Exp. of John, p.247)

12:32 all: For πάντας with the great mass, κ^m D, and some ancient versions, read πάντα “every one” or “all things,” as Aug. in loc. expressly says. But there is the strongest internal reason to stand by the weight of external testimony. (Exp. of John, p.248)

12:34 then: Most omit οὖν but not κ B L X, &c. (Exp. of John, p.249)

12:35 among: ἐν κ B D K L M X Π, &c.; instead of Text. Rec. μεθ’ A E F G H S U Γ Δ Λ, &c. (Exp. of John, p.249)

12:40 hardened: ἐπώρ. A B^m K L X, &c. (κ Π in a corrupt form); πεπ. Text. Rec. following very many. (Exp. of John, p.250)

12:41 because [or, when]: ὅτι κ A B L M X, &c. ὅτε Text. Rec., most uncials and cursives, &c. (Exp. of John, p.250)

12:43 Λ of . . . Λ of: 12:43 gives no just ground for “that is” before “of men” and “of God,” nor is “from” needed for “of.” (Bible Treasury 14:336)

12:47 kept: φυλάξῃ κ A B D K L X Π, &c. πιστεύσῃ, “believed,” E F G H M S U Γ Δ Λ, &c. (Exp. of John, p.252)

12:49 given: δέδ. κ A B M X, many cursives, &c.; ἔδ. Text. Rec. D L Γ Δ Λ Π, &c. (Exp. of John, p.252)

13:1 unto [the] end: not merely till the end, as a question of time (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p. 255). . . . love to the uttermost . . . (Bible Treasury N2:245)

13:2 being come: The Authorised Version regards the phrase δ. γ. as implying the end of the repast; but I agree with those who take it to mean the arrival of the time for supper, which is confirmed by the wondrous action we are about to hear of. It cannot be doubted that it was usual to have the feet washed before, not after, supper. . . . γινόμενον B L X, Aeth.; γεγομένον A D^{er} E Γ Δ Λ Π, etc., the cursives, Chrys. Cyr., Ital. and Vulg. κ reads γελν, and gives γεν. as correction. (Exp. of John, p.255) being come: . . . “during supper” being certainly the true force of δειπνου γιν., not “supper being ended.” Even if γεν. (A D and a dozen uncials more, and almost all cursives, &c.) be read, it would mean “supper being come.” (Bible Treasury 13:320)

13:3 [Jesus, or] he: κ B D L X, and a few cursives, etc., omit, though most insert. (Exp. of John, p.255)

13:10 than his feet: κ, though the only MS. that omits ἢ (or, εἰ) μὴ τοὺς πόδας, is followed by Tisch., ed. 8, and bracketed by W. and H. (Exp. of John, p.258)

13:18 whom: τίνας NB C L M, &c., οὗς A D and eleven more uncials, &c. (Exp. of John, p.268)

hath: ἐπῆρκεν A U Π, &c.; the mass followed by Text. Rec. ἐπῆρεν. (Exp. of John, p.268)

13:22 [then]: οὖν ⁸⁰⁰ and most uncials, cursives, and versions, and so Text. Rec.; but ⁸⁰⁰ B C, &c., omit. (Exp. of John, p.268)

13:23 [Now] . . . of: B C⁸⁰⁰ L, &c., have no copula, but it appears in the other uncials, &c., and Text. Rec., which omits ἐκ with some of the uncials and most cursives, contrary to the more ancient authorities. (Exp. of John, p.271)

13:24 , Tell who: κ exhibits both readings which divide the other MSS. πύθεσθαι τίς ἂν εἴη περὶ οὗ ἔλεγεν καὶ λέγει αὐτῷ εἶπε τίς ἐστὶν περὶ οὗ λέγει. (Exp. of John, p.271)

13:25-6 then . . . thus fallen back . . . [then]: Tischendorf abandons ἀναπεσὼν with some good and old uncials (the usual phrase for the position), for ἐπιπ. with most MSS., and some ancient, which express the change of action. — It is a question of οὖν and δὲ in connection with it. — οὕτως, “thus,” seems pretty sure though omitted by Text. Rec. (Exp. of John, p.271)

13:26 [See note to 13:25]

13:31 is glorified: It is not that the aorist as here ever means the present or the future, but that in the Greek the act is spoken of as complete, summed up from the commencing fact to its completion. See ch. 15:6 also, and Rev. 10:7. (Exp. of John, p.274)

13:32 If God is [lit. was] glorified in him: The oldest and best MSS. omit this clause, ⁸⁰⁰ B C⁸⁰⁰ D L X Π, a dozen cursives, some of the good Latin, &c. Hence Lachmann and Tregelles bracket the clause, and W. and H. go so far as to omit it altogether. Before them, Schulz remarks on the omission, “recte, nam inepta videtur iteratio eiusdem dicti.” This is bolder than man should say and simply proves his own spiritual incapacity. It was worthy, if anything was, of repetition and most impressive. Twelve uncials, besides the correction of the Sinai MS., and the Rescript of Paris, the mass of cursives, much the weightier of the versions, not to speak of the fathers who commented on the passage, cite the passage as unquestionable scripture. (Exp. of John, p.277-8)

13:33 dear children: It seems preferable to render this term τεκνία generally “dear children.” For τέκνα all translate as “children”; and “little children” (παιδιά) is appropriated in [1 John] 2:13 and 18 to the third class of the “dear children” or τεκνία, which is the general designation of all the three classes, and so runs through the Epistle. Hence “children” in [1 John] 3:1,2 includes all the family. We are all called “children of God,” and we are so now; and it is a mistake to say “sons” of God, though we are also His sons. But here it is expressly “children” of God, not sons adopted but born of God, and so His children. But τεκνία is a diminutive term closely connected with “children”; and the reason for its use is as an expression of affection; as when a parent, not content to say to his little one “my dear,” calls it “my dearie.” It is meant for fondness of expression. This illustrates its force here; and therefore it seems best to say “dear children,” in order to distinguish from “children” (τέκνα) on the one hand, and the little children or babes (παιδιά) on the other. (Exp. of the Epist. of John, p. 255-256)

go: [See note to Mat. 26:24]

13:36 [him]: Omitted by B C⁸⁰⁰ L; but supported by κ A C⁸⁰⁰ D, etc. (Exp. of John, p.280)

13:38 answereth: The best sustain the present tense. (Exp. of John, p.280)

[him]: The oldest omit “him.” (Exp. of John, p.280)

14:1 ye believe on: Nor is their sufficient reason to prefer the Revisers’ marginal to their text, if the margin is at all justifiable. (Bible Treasury 14:336)

14:2 because: ὅτι κ A B C⁸⁰⁰ D K L X Π, twenty cursives, and most ancient versions, &c.; but Text. Rec. omits with some ten or eleven uncials, most cursives, the Gothic, Aeth., &c. (Exp. of John, p.282)

go: [See note to Mat. 26:24]

14:3 and prepare: D M with more than sixty cursives read ἐτοιμάσαι; others, like A E G K Γ Δ and forty cursives with the Gothic and Pesch. Syr., simply ἐτοιμάσω without καὶ, but κ B C L N S U X A Π, and versions, καὶ ἐτ. (Exp. of John, p.282)

14:4 And . . . I . . . ye know: Some authorities omit ἐγὼ and most with Text. Rec. add καὶ . . . οἴδατε, “and . . . ye know.” (Exp. of John, p.282)

14:5 [and] . . . know we [or can we know]: B C⁸⁰⁰ L, &c., omit καὶ; whilst B C⁸⁰⁰ D, Lat. MSS., Aeth., &c., read οἴδαμεν, “know we.” Text. Rec. with sixteen uncials, perhaps all the cursives, and the versions generally, has δυνάμεθα τ. ὁδ. εἰδέναι, “can we know” &c. (Exp. of John, p.285)

14:7 known . . . known . . . and . . . him: ἐγνώκατε . . . γνώσεσθε ⁸⁰⁰ D⁸⁰⁰ instead of ἐγνώκειτε . . . ἐγν. ἂν, as in all the other uncials, save that B C⁸⁰⁰ &c., give for the last ἂν ᾔδειτε. Some of these uncials, &c., omit καὶ before ἂν, and κ reads after it γνώσεσθε, not without some support form Latin; B C⁸⁰⁰ omitting αὐτὸν at the end. (Exp. of John, p.285)

14:9 [and]: Most MSS. read καὶ π., but the copulative is omitted by κ B Q, &c. (Exp. of John, p.289)

14:10 Believest thou not: B⁸⁰⁰ strangely reads οὐ πιστεύεις, “wilt thou not believe?” (Exp. of John, p.289)

say . . . that . . . the works: λέγω B⁸⁰⁰ (p m om.) L N X, &c. instead of the first λαλῶ as in most, as B L, &c., omit ὁ after the second πατήρ. κ B D read αὐτοῦ (“his works”) at the end, instead of αὐτὸς either there or before as ordinarily. (Exp. of John, p.289)

14:11 Father _Λ: In the Elz. of 1624 and 1633, ἐστὶν with the slenderest support; Steph. rejects it in his edd. of 1546, 1549, and 1550, as Beza in all his. (Exp. of John, p.296)

me: κ D L, &c., omit final μοι read by the mass of authorities. (Exp. of John, p.289)

14:12 _Λ Father: The weight of authority (κ A B D L Q X Π, many cursives, almost all the ancient versions, and the fathers) is against the addition of μου after πατέρα. (Exp. of John, p.289)

14:14 ask _Λ: [The American correctors of the RV are] right, as against “me” in the Revision, notwithstanding many old authorities, which might be stated in the margin. (Bible Treasury 14:336)

14:15 keep [or, ye will keep]: B L, &c. (κ, 33, 69⁸⁰⁰ τηρήσητε) τηρήσετε, “ye will keep”: so W. and H. edit. (Exp. of John, p.292)

14:16 request: It is of interest and even of importance to mark the distinctness of ἐρωτάω as used of Christ with the Father, and αἰτέω of the disciples. Scripture nowhere predicates of Him the last or supplicatory expression, save in Martha’s mouth whose faith though real was low. Christ uses ἐρ. in speaking to the Father, as the disciples use αἰτ. to Him, and both words to Christ. The word ἐρ. is also employed in the sense of “interrogating” or “questioning.” (Exp. of John, p.292)

Paraclete: But I apprehend the word “Comforter” sometimes fails (perhaps to most fails) to give an adequate notion of what it is that our Lord Jesus really meant us to gather from thus speaking of the Holy Ghost. We might very naturally draw from it, that the term was in relation to sorrow, that it intimated a person who would console us in the midst of the distresses of this lower world. And, indeed, the Holy Ghost does console us and comfort us. But this is only a very small part of the functions here conveyed by the word “Paraclete.” This is the expression, if one would give an English reproduction of that which is in point of fact the very word our Lord employed. But the meaning of that word “Paraclete” is not merely “Comforter,” but one who is identified with our interests, one who undertakes all our cause, one who engages to see us through our difficulties, one who in every way becomes both our representative and the great personal agent that transacts all our business for us. This is the meaning of the Advocate or Paraclete or Comforter, whatever equivalent may be preferred. Manifestly, then, it has an incomparably larger bearing than either “advocate” on the one hand, or “comforter” on the other: it includes both, but takes in a great deal more than either. In point of fact, it is One who is absolutely and infinitely competent to undertake for us whatever He could do in our favour, whatever was or might be the limit of our need, whatever our want in any difficulty, whatever the exigencies of God’s grace for the blessing of our souls. (Lect. on the Holy Spirit, p. 87)

Paraclete: . . . One who would undertake and carry through their cause, as a Roman patron of old did for his clients or a modern solicitor does now in his little measure. “Comforter” seems too narrow a word, and separates the Spirit unduly from our Lord, Who could hardly be so styled in 1 John 2:1, where Paraclete is applied to His action on high, as here to the Holy Ghost’s on earth. (Philologically it is hard, not to say impossible, to conceive the Greek term meaning “Comforter.” Its structure and usage alike point to one “called to aid,” as a cognate but different form signifies a comforter. This a paraclete may well be; but He is far more, and summoned for every difficulty and need. So is the Paraclete, and in an infinite way, as a divine Person. To comfort is but a small part of His functions. “Advocate” might do, as in 1 John 2:1. (Exp. of John, p. 292)

Paraclete: It is striking to see how almost all the ancient translators felt compelled to adopt rather than to render the Greek word; for so it is in languages different as the Syriac, the Sahidic, and the Memphitic, the Latin (old Itala as well as Vulgate), the Aethiopic, the Arabic, the Gothic, and the Persian. The Armenian gives “Comforter,” followed by Georgian and the Slavonic, and, it would seem by the Anglo-Saxon in its own way, and certainly by Wiclif and his disciple-translator; but they have “Advocate” like the Vulgate, Syrr. &c., in 1 John 2:1. (Exp. of John, p. 330)

14:22 [and]: καὶ ἅ G H K M Q S U Γ Δ Α Π, and many cursives; but A B D E L X, &c., with almost all the other versions, omit. (Exp. of John, p.298)

14:23 word: It is difficult to say why Tyndale, Cranmer, the Geneva, and the Authorised Versions give the plural form, which has no authority whatever. Wiclif and the Rhemish, adhering to the Vulgate, happen to be right. (Lect. Intro. to the Gospels, p.517) word: [The RV] of course give[s] “my word,” not words (Bible Treasury 13:320) make: ποιήσόμεθα ἅ B L X Π², some cursives, and many fathers; instead of the Text. Rec. ποιήσομεν (or -ωμεν) as in most uncials and cursives and many fathers. D., etc., strangely read ποιήσομαι, “I will make.” The middle voice gives the force of “our” in the strongest way, which the Text. Rec. loses. (Exp. of John, p.299)

14:28 ἅ I . . . ἅ Father: Text. Rec. following the later uncials and most cursives adds εἶπον “I said”; but the best give the text preferred. There is rather better authority for adding μου to ὁ Π. (= “my F.”) (Exp. of John, p.301)

14:30 ἅ world: ἅ A B D^{ef} L X Γ and ten more uncials, 150 cursives, both the Syriac, &c., omit τούτου which appears in the Text. Rec. supported by a few cursives and the versions in general, &c. (Exp. of John, p.302)

14:31 commanded me: ἐνετείλατό μοι ἅ A D Γ with ten other uncials and most cursives and versions; Lachmann, Treg. with W. and H., edit ἐντολήν ἔδ. (or δέδ.) μοι. after B L X, &c., with the It. and Vulg. (Exp. of John, p.302)

15:5 apart from: [See note to Mat. 10:29]

15:6 abide: μένη ἅ^{pm} A B D, μέινη the mass. (Exp. of John, p.307)

it: αὐτὸ D L X Δ Π. many cursives, and some ancient versions; αὐτὰ (“them”) the great majority, the Alex. and Vat. among them. (Exp. of John, p.308)

15:7 ask [or, ye shall ask]: αἰτήσασθε (-θαῖ A D Γ, &c.) A B D L M X Γ, many cursives, and the oldest versions; αἰτήσεσθε Text. Rec. with ἅ and most MSS. (Exp. of John, p.309)

15:8 [ye shall]: γένησθε B D L M X, &c.; ἅ and the rest support the future. (Exp. of John, p.309)

15:11 be: ἦ A B D, many cursives, It. Vulg. Goth. the Syrr. Arm. and Aeth.; μέινη Text. Rec. ἅ L and twelve uncials more, most cursives, but scarce any ancient version, unless the Georgian. (Exp. of John, p.310)

15:13 one: ἅ^{pm} D^{pm}, &c., omit τις, contrary to the rest. (Exp. of John, p.312)

15:14 [ever]: ἅ ἅ D L X, some cursives, and versions, &c. ὁ B, &c. ὅσα the mass as also Text. Rec. (Exp. of John, p.312)

15:16 appointed: “Ordained” suggests another line of things foreign to the passage and connection. In Acts 1:22 the same word, as is commonly known, is foisted into the Authorised Version; for it has no counterpart implied in the Greek. (Exp. of John, p.316)

15:26 [But]: ἅ B Δ and some other good authorities omit the copula which the great mass support. (Exp. of John, p.323)

16:3 you: Text. Rec. ὑμῖν “to you” with ἅ D L, &c., a few cursives and versions, but the mass of manuscripts and oldest versions omit. (Exp. of John, p.326)

16:4 the [or, their]: αὐτῶν “their” A B Π^{pm}, &c., but the great majority reject. (Exp. of John, p.326)

16:8 convince [or, afford proof to]: It is difficult to convey justly the force of this. “Reprove,” as in the Authorised Version, is too narrow a meaning, if not false. “Rebuke” is here out of the question. “Convict” hardly applies even to the first, not at all to the second and third clauses; and supposes an effect produced which may not really be in any case. Nor is one satisfied with “convince,” save in the sense of affording proof by His presence, rather than by His action. For by His coming and abiding in the saints, apart from the world, He gives it demonstrative proof of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment. (Exp. of John, p.331-2)

16:10 go: [See note to Mat. 26:24]

my [or, the]: ἅ B D L, some cursives and versions, omit μου, “my,” which the rest add. (Exp. of John, p.331)

16:13 in [or, into]: εν κ(om. πάση) D L, &c., but A B Y, &c., εις τ. α. π., while the mass have with Text. Rec. εις π. τ. α. (Exp. of John, p.333) whatever: Many add ἀν, some ἐάν. (Exp. of John, p.333) hear: Text. Rec. ἀκούση with most, ἀκούσει B D E^m H Y, ἀκούει κ L, &c. (Exp. of John, p.333)

16:15 receiveth: λήπεται Text. Rec. but λαμβάνει the best and most numerous. (Exp. of John, p.333)

16:16 not . . . [because I go away unto the Father]: οὐκέτι, “no more,” is read by κ B D^m, &c.; but οὐ Text. Rec. with most, κ B D L and other good authorities omitting the last clause, although it is added by some fourteen uncials, most cursives, and many ancient versions. (Exp. of John, p.336)

go: [See note to Mat. 26:24]

16:17 go: [See note to Mat. 26:24]

16:18 the: B L Y, &c., omit the article, contrary to the mass. (Exp. of John, p.336)

16:19 [therefore]: κ B D L, &c., omit οὖν contrary to most. (Exp. of John, p.336)

16:20 α ye: Text. Rec. with most adds δὲ, “and.” (Exp. of John, p.336)

16:23 ask . . . ask: It is well known that the Greek words we are well nigh obliged to translate “ask” in verse 23 are not the same, the first (ἐρωτάω) being expressive rather of familiar entreaty, the second (αἰτέω) of lowly petition. . . . But it seems too strong to say that every competent judge admits that “ye shall ask” of the first half of the verse has nothing to do with “ye shall ask” of the second; or that in the first Christ is referring back to the desire of the disciples in verse 19 to question Him. So Euthymius Z., as well as the Vulgate, and a crowd of moderns from Beza to Trench, including many German and British theologians. But though the word ἐρωτάω occurs often in the New Testament and even in this chapter with the ordinary classical sense of “question” (interrogo), it is used quite as often or more so for “requesting” or “beseeching,” &c. (rogo), as in the LXX., and thus like our English “ask,” which means “to request” no less than “to question” or “inquire.” Inquiring of God in Old Testament phrase approaches in fact nearer to prayer for any one or thing than to a question. It seems then that varying the English word is not the true solution, though obvious enough on the surface, and that the earlier Greek commentators were nearer the truth, save Origen, who like later errorists perverted the passage to deny the propriety of praying to our Lord, thus flatly contradicting the early disciples (Acts 1:24), Stephen (Acts 7:59), and the apostle Paul (2 Cor. 12:8). (Exp. of John, p.338-9)

Whatsoever: ὅτι (Text. Rec. after very many) is not in some of the best, and for ὅσα ἀν “whatsoever,” supported by most; ἀν or ἐάν τι B C D L Y, &c.; or δ ἀν κ; δ ἐάν X II, &c. (Exp. of John, p.338) in my name: ἐν τῷ ὄν. μου after “the Father” A C^{corr} D, &c. and Text. Rec.; but at the end κ B C^m L X Y Δ, &c. . . . The text differs in the manuscripts and other authorities; but the best of them place “in my name” after the assurance that the Father will give, not after the saints asking the Father as in the common text, which however is best supported by the ancient versions. (Exp. of John, p.338,340)

16:25 proverbs [allegories]: It is owing, I presume, to the large and various meaning of the Hebrew לִּשְׁכָּח that we have in Greek παροιμία as well as παραβολή used correspondingly not only in the LXX. but in the New Testament, the Synoptic Gospels always using the latter, John only the former as in chapter 10 and here. Perhaps “allegory” might be more appropriate, or even a “dark saying” in our chapter where parable or allegory can scarcely apply. A close examination of the usage will prove that both Greek words are employed with considerable latitude in the four Gospels as elsewhere. Here the Lord was conscious that what He uttered fell like enigmas on the ears of the disciples. (Exp. of John, p.341-2) proverbs [allegories]: if “dark-sayings,” so also in 10:7. (Bible Treasury 14:336)

report: κ A B C^m D K L M N X Y II, ἀπαγγ. “report”; others, ἀναγγ. “announce” as in vers. 13, 14, 15. (Exp. of John, p.341)

16:26 I say not to you: It is not an absolute statement, nor is there the smallest need to apply the technical device of Praeteritio, as it is called, so as to convey not a negation but a strong affirmation. Thus it would mean “I need not assure you that I will request the Father for you.” But it is simply an ellipse, which the words following explain: I do not say that I will request the Father for you, as if He did not love you; for the Father Himself (proprio motu) does love you dearly, &c. (Exp. of John, p.343)

16:27 God: θεοῦ κ^m A and most MSS. and versions; πατρός B C^m D L X, &c. How singularly biassed was Tregelles to edit the latter, being plainly inconsistent with the context! The edition of W. and H. follows Tregelles. (Exp. of John, p.341)

16:28 from: ἐκ B C^m L X, &c.; παρά A C^{corr} E Γ Δ, &c. (Exp. of John, p.341)

16:29 [to him] . . . with: αὐτῷ Text. Rec. with most MSS. vv., &c.; but not the most ancient, some of which add ἐν before παρηρησία. (Exp. of John, p.344)

now: Text. Rec. adds νῦν “now” with most manuscripts, but not the oldest. (Exp. of John, p.344) parable: [See note to John 16:25]

16:32 α is: Text. Rec. adds νῦν “now,” with some old MSS. and versions; but κ A B C^m D^m L X, &c., have it not. (Exp. of John, p.345)

16:33 ye α have: ἔχετε, “ye shall have,” is the error of D and many cursives, with most of the Latin copies, &c., followed by Elzevir, but not Stephens, for though it appears in the text of his edition of 1550, it is corrected at the end according to his editions of 1546, 1549; ἔχετε, “ye have,” κ A B C L and a dozen more uncials, &c. Here many of the ancient versions are wrong, but not the Syrr., Memph., some old Latin, &c. It is strange that Lachmann edited ἔχετε not only in his small edition of 1831, but in his larger and more mature one of 1842, actually giving B with D abc as authority. (Exp. of John, p.345)

17:1 thy [or, the]: Treg. and Tisch. with W. and H. omit σοῦ “thy,” following κ B C^m, &c. T.R. has καὶ “also,” but the best do not accredit it. (Exp. of John, p.347)

17:4 having finished: So κ A B C L II, &c.; but the finite verb in D E X Y Δ Λ, &c. (Exp. of John, p.347)

having finished: “having accomplished” is well known to rest on excellent authority, but differs very slightly in sense from the more general text. (Bible Treasury 13:320)

17:10 [first half of verse]: It is surprising that the editors and commentators have not noticed the natural if not necessary parenthesis of all but the last clause of verse 10. As to the universe it would not be true to say yet δεδόξασμαι ἐν αὐτοῖς. It is precisely true of the saints. (Exp. of John, p.355)

17:11 these [or, they]: κ B, two cursives, D F (not the other Ita. nor Vulg.) Memph., Aeth., Arm., Goth. read αὐτοὶ “they,” in which they are followed by Tisch. in his last ed. and by W. and H. (Exp. of John, p.354)

of less direct authorities. Still the weight of witnesses is overwhelming for ἕκτη, “sixth.” It would seem that our evangelist adopted a different reckoning of hours, from midnight to noon, as we do. Certainly the Romans did for their civil day: see Plin. N. Hist. ii. 77; Censorinus de Die. Nat. xxiii.; Aul. Gell. N. Att. iii. 2; and Macrob. Sat. i. 3. And it suits all the mentions of hours in the Gospel of John excellently, besides falling in with Mark’s 3rd, 6th, and 9th hours of the natural day from the sun. This serves to explain the otherwise singular message of Pilate’s wife (Matt. 27:19), in which she spoke of suffering much “to-day in a dream because of him.” To Procula as a Roman the day was reckoned from midnight; as the hours appear to be throughout our Gospel, but not in the Synoptists.

It is singular as showing the perplexity in minds of old as now that Jerome says in his breviary on Psalm 77: “Sic scriptum est in Matthaeo et Ioanne quod Dominus noster hora sexta crucifixus sit. Rursus scriptum est in Marco: quid hora tertia crucifixus sit. Error scriptorum fuit; sed multi episemum Graecum ζ putaverunt esse γ: sicut et ibi error fuit scriptorum: ut pro Asaph, Isaiam scriberent” (Hier. Opp. vii. 1046, ed. Migne). Jerome’s remedy was thus to correct the text, not of John, but of Mark; a correction of but one known cursive manuscript of the eleventh century, the margin of the later Syriac, and the Aeth. on which last says Bode (Pseudocrit. Millio-Beng. 265), “Habet omnino Aeth. sexta hora, idque ex Io. 19, 14. Nimirum Interpres Ioanni contradicere noluit.” But it is the just retribution of these tamperings with scripture that they do not satisfy the desired aim; for John connects his sixth hour with what was before, possibly hours before, the hours specified by Mark, be it sixth or even third. Thus the violence done to the surest authority in Mark would no more reconcile the statements than the similar violence offered to the witnesses of John 19:14; for Mark specifies the time when our Lord was crucified as the third hour, John speaks of the time when Pilate took his seat on the tribunal to give sentence as about the sixth hour. To change the latter to the third, or the former to the sixth, if admissible in the face of the gravest adverse evidence, would not clear the truth but only give birth to fresh confusion.

The true state of the readings also thoroughly overthrows the efforts of some eminent Greeks and Latins, who try to explain the earlier hour as applicable to the Jewish outcry for the crucifixion, the later hour as the actual moment when the soldiers carried it into effect. But this is only neglect of scripture; for John predicates “about the sixth hour” of the outcry, Mark “the third hour” of the actual crucifixion. As there is no sufficient reason to doubt the accuracy of the seemingly conflicting texts of the second and fourth Gospels (in itself no mean evidence that the apparent discrepancy exhibits the genuine readings of both), and as the very slight variation of readings is easily accounted for by the desire thus to reduce them to harmony, the natural solution is that John’s reckoning of time differs from that of the other evangelists. It will be found by comparing the various hours named in John 1:39, 4:6, 52, that the hours of the civil day suit as well after all as those of the natural (the last occasion apparently better), so as to confirm the different computation of John throughout. John 11:9 in no way opposes this, as being a general way of describing a working day, whatever the mode of computation; as for instance we can say so, who follow the style of the civil day from midnight. (Exp. of John, p.392-3)

19:16 [and led [him] away]: Thus end B L X, &c. But most with D E, &c., add “and led.” A, &c., support Text. Rec. α supports the same sense in a peculiar form. (Exp. of John, p.395)

19:30 spirit: Of none but Jesus, is it or could it be said that He gave up, παρέδωκεν, the ghost; which is wholly distinct from the expired, ἐξέπνευσεν, of Mark and Luke, confounded with the former by our translators. To expire could apply to any one’s death, the blessed Lord being man as truly as any other; to give the spirit up, as said in John, expresses His divine glory though a dying man, as the One who had title to lay down His life no less than to take it again. (Bible Treasury 13:167)

19:31 that: ἐκείνου Stephens, α A B D^{suppl} L X Y, nine more uncials, the great bulk of cursives, &c.; ἐκείνη Elz. with a late uncial (H) and a few cursives, Vulg., &c. (Exp. of John, p.399)

19:35 also: The oldest read καὶ, which Text. Rec. omits, with seven uncials and most cursives. (Exp. of John, p.400)

19:37 on him: Dr. Thomas Randolph, in his little work on the Prophecies and other texts cited in the New Testament and compared with the Hebrew Original and the Septuagint Version (4to., Oxford, 1782), remarks (p. 32) that “the evangelist here plainly reads לָנוּ instead of לָהּ in the Hebrew: but so also read forty Hebrew MSS. And that this is the true reading appears by what follows — ‘and they shall mourn for him.’ The Syriac renders it, ‘they shall look on me through him, whom they have pierced.’ The Sept. I cannot make sense of.”

Now there is really no serious doubt that the true reading is the latter (“to me”), not the former (“to him”), and that the best and most MSS. and versions are justified. It was in fact originally nothing but a marginal correction, due to the desire partly of eliminating so strong a testimony to the deity or Jehovah title of the Lord Jesus, partly of easing the flow of the context from the concurrence of “me” and “him.” Even the Targum and the Talmud, like the more ancient MSS., and all the Greek early versions, refute the idea. So even most of the better Jewish expositors notwithstanding their controversy with Christians and in the course of it. De Rossi suggests that “to him” may have entered by accident through the scribe having Psalm 34:6 in mind. Much better and wiser therefore would it have been to have adhered to ancient and good authority, spite of seeming difficulty, than to have adopted this Jewish keri like Newcome and Boothroyd, and so to help on such a humaniser as Ewald. Even R. Isaac in his Chizzuk Emunah, when controverting those whom he calls the Nazariners, admits the reading לָנוּ though he tries to weaken its force by interpreting לָנוּ as “because of him whom they pierced” and applying it to the war of Gog and Magog. Now it is true that לָנוּ may and does sometimes mean “because” (and so the LXX took the words, probably also confounding לָנוּ with לָנוּ which might originate κατωρχήσαντο); but the meaning cannot possibly be “because of him whom” for this would leave the verb without an object contrary to invariable Hebrew idiom. Hence also Radak’s (or R. D. Kimchi’s) translation fails, “because they have pierced,” though less objectionable perhaps as not foisting in an expressly false object. But they both divert from the true object; and therefore Abarbanel, Aben Ezra, Alshech, &c., condemn it, and so far confirm our Authorised Version. Rashi (i.e. R. Solomon) is no bad proof of the perplexity the clause presents to the Jewish mind; for he inconsistently applies it to Messiah ben-Joseph in his comment on the Talmud, whereas in his Commentary on the Bible he gets rid of this, applying it to some of the Jews pierced and killed by the Gentiles. It is the more surprising in the face of all, that these exploded mistakes should be reproduced in modern Jewish versions; as when Dr. A Benisch, like D. Kimchi, omits the object in his School and Family Bible, and Mr. J. Leiser in his Holy Scriptures supplies “every one,” to the manifest falsification of the sense like R. Isaac. There is really an emphatic object in the Hebrew text, which accounts for (if it does not require) the change of construction in the foregoing clause. The conclusion then is that the evangelist read no otherwise than we do in the ordinary Hebrew, and that the Holy Spirit in the Gospel and the Revelation does not cite but suppose that text, which is distinctly applied to the fact carefully recorded in the history, and doctrinally employed in John’s First Epistle. (Exp. of John, p.402-3) on him: It may be worth mentioning as a singular instance of the importance of knowing the original that Euthymius Zigabenus, in his comment on verse 37, speaks of the scripture as probably got rid of by the Jews since the Gospel. "For nowhere is it found now; or he means another scripture of the books called apocryphal" (Vol. iii. 621) This sounds strong with Zechariah 12:10 in view. How is it to be accounted for? This Greek monk read the prophet in the Septuagint, where the clause as to the piercing is miserably mistaken, ἀνθ' ὧν κατωρχήσαντο, "because they insulted (me)," while the later Jewish rendering of Aquila evades the truth by giving σὺν ᾧ. Theodotion has rendered the passage rightly on the whole. Hence the Spirit of God (both in John's Gospel and in the Revelation) does not cite the Septuagint, but alludes to it in terms which accurately represent the clause. (Exp. of John, p.404)

19:38 He . . . his body: Tischendorf now adopts the plural "they" with ⲁ, &c.; also αὐτὸν, "him," instead of τὸ σῶμα αὐτοῦ as in ⲛ^{cor} B L X Δ, ten cursives, &c., or τ. σ. τοῦ Ἰ. with a dozen uncials and most cursives, &c., and in Text. Rec. (Exp. of John, p.404)

19:39 to him: the best give "to him," the majority "to Jesus." (Exp. of John, p.404)

19:40 burial: The word is not θάπτειν but ἐνταφιάζειν, which is used for embalming, or at least preparing for burial as in the case before us. (Exp. of John, p.404)

20:16 Hebrew: The Text. Rec. omits Ἐβραϊστί with twelve uncials, most cursive MSS., and a few versions. But the Sinaitic, the Vatican, Beza's of Cambridge, the Parisian 62, the Moscow of cent. ix., the Munich or Landshut of a later date, those of St. Gall and of St. Petersburg, both of the ninth century, with some excellent cursives, and most of the ancient versions, give the reading. (Exp. of John, p.418)

20:17 Touch: Let me observe that "Touch me not" is not by any means an adequate rendering of the expression; and inasmuch as I am addressing those who are familiarly acquainted with the Scriptures, and among them many individuals who, I presume, have more or less the power and means of judging what I say, I feel the more free to speak out plainly that which I believe to be the truth. The fact is, that the word which is employed here implies much more than simply a touch. It is the verb which should be translated "handle." . . .

That this account of the word is correct I have no doubt whatever, as indeed it is one that would not be disputed by any who are competent to judge of such a matter. It is, of course, entirely apart from any views that might be considered by adversaries to be peculiar (though I know not why such sounds should be heard: I cannot on any account admit that a fair interpretation of God's word should be treated as a peculiar view). I hope it will not be regarded as a question of the number of those who really accept it. But however this may be, what I am now saying would be, and has been, admitted by persons of the most diverse views, provided they really search into and examine the matter of which I now treat. If this be so, the expression of our Lord to Mary Magdalene is not exactly given in "Touch me not." It is rather, "Do not handle." He tells her not to yield to her impulse in familiarly laying hold of His person. What confirms it is this, that the particular part of the word (μὴ μου ἅπτου, and not merely μὴ ἅψῃ) supposes a continuous handling of Him. In Colossians it is not so; there it is a single act, which might be ever so transient. But here it is a continuous act; that is, it would give this force, "Do not persist in clinging to me." Such is the idea conveyed by the word and its form here. (Lect. on the Holy Spirit, p.116-8) ascend: There is not the slightest ground to suppose an ascension previous to that which is described in Acts 1. A little intelligence as to John 20:17 removes the difficulty, without having recourse to a supposed private ascension. Ἀναβαίνω is the abstract present, a common enough usage, not only in Greek, but in our own and other languages, often of the greatest value to remember in exposition. It is really ignorance to infer from the present that the action must be either actually going on, or so imminent as to follow immediately. The present may be used in the New Testament to convey certainty or permanence, but still more frequently perhaps an action eminently and emphatically characteristic as here. Take πορεύομαι ἐτοιμάσαι τόπον ὑμῖν in John 14:2; take ἐρχομαι and εἰμί in the next verse, or ὑπάγω in verse 4. Here, too, mysticising commentators tell us that this ἐρχομαι is begun in Christ's resurrection, carried on in the spiritual life, further advanced when each by death is fetched to be away with Him, fully completed at His coming in glory, when they shall for ever be with Him in the perfected resurrection state. All this style of drawing ever so many applications out of a word, which here means but one, the last of these alleged comings, enfeebles scripture, and injures the saint. So in verse 17 there is no need to change μένει (abideth) into μενεῖ (shall abide), with some of the old versions, or to understand it, with Euthymius Zigabenus, as the Spirit's then abiding in Jesus, who was among them. It really expresses permanence from the time He comes to abide, not an abiding going on then. (Bible Treasury 11:320)

20:18 word ἄ : Text. Rec. adds μου with most uncials, cursives and versions, but not ⲁ B D and some few other authorities. (Exp. of John, p.420)

have seen: The oldest manuscripts give the uncompounded form of the participle, and also the direct style, "I have seen," &c., not as in Text. Rec. (Exp. of John, p.420)

20:21 He [or, Jesus]: Text. Rec. and Lachmann follow A B and eleven other uncials, most cursives, &c., in reading ὁ Ἰ. but ⲁ D L C X and most ancient versions omit. (Exp. of John, p.424) sent . . . send: [See note on John 17:18]

20:28 My Lord and my God: That Gilbert Wakefield should deny the confession and merge all in a mere exclamation, or rather in two, "O! my Lord! and O! my God!" was to have been expected from his heterodoxy. But such a notion is as inconsistent with the context as it is irreverent, and of course misses all the force of the truth. For it will be observed that the Gospel says, not merely that Thomas said these words, but that they were said to his Master. It is true that, if a mere assertion, the article would be absent, as being simply predicative. The emphatic form of the sentence is due to its combining exclamation in the vocative according to the New Testament usage with confession, and this said to the Lord Jesus; which also accounts for the twofold occurrence of the personal pronoun, the first of which assuredly could not have been used had it been an address to Jehovah as such. (Exp. of John, p.430-1)

20:30 Many other: It may be that the Authorised Version has led some into, or confirmed in, the mistake of a possible conclusion here. "And many," &c., is not a quite correct rendering. It is literally the familiar "Many and other signs," that is, "Many other signs," &c. (Exp. of John, p.431) disciples: αὐτοῦ, "his," is added by many copies, but not the oldest or best. (Exp. of John, p.431)

20:31 name. ἄ : How any men of intelligence could say that our two verses which conclude chapter 20 are a formal close of the Gospel might have been viewed as inconceivable, if it was not positive fact. Grotius seems to have been the first man of mark who gave expression and currency to a supposition irreconcilable with the plain connection of the two first days of the week in chapter 20, and with the scene which follows in chapter 21: irreconcilable just in proportion to one's real understanding of the Gospel as a whole. Modern Germany took up this and other injurious notions of that learned Dutchman, not only Ewald, Lücke, and Tholuck, but even Meyer, Neander, and Stier. It is painful to add that Alford, Scrivener, Westcott, &c., have yielded to the uncalled-for theory that John 20 originally ended the Gospel, and that chapter 21 is a later appendix from the apostle's own hand, though many go farther and deny it to him altogether.

When we enter on the details of the concluding chapter, we may be enabled to show yet more how unfounded is this thought. Meanwhile it suffices here to point out briefly the mistake of regarding as a true end the two verses which have been now occupying us. In fact, they are an instructive comment by the way, not without a glance at the signs wrought by the Lord all through, but with special declaration of God's aim for the glory of Christ and the blessing of the faithful, suggested by the case of Thomas, yet delicately avoiding any needlessly direct allusion to one so honoured of the Lord. It would indeed be as true to say that the evangelist began more than once in chapter 1 as to admit more than one ending in chapters 20, 21. In fact, if men are to reason thus from superficial appearances, it would be more plausible to infer at least two if not three supplements to the Epistle to the Romans. Nor is authority wanting which transports the doxology from the end of chapter 16 to that of chapter 14. Yet it is to be doubted if the hypothesis there be so unnatural as it would be here to sever the third manifestation of the Lord in resurrection from the two which preceded it, or even to admit the former as a later addition, since it is necessary to the completeness of the picture. It is the true complement. In no way is it, as men have thought, a mere supplement, since it forms an essential part of one organic whole; just as chap. 2:1-22 pertains as a sequel to chap. 1 and never could be justly dislocated from it, as an afterthought supplied at a later date even by the same hand.

Mr. J. B. McClellan, in his "New Testament" (I. 744-747), is an honourable exception to the fashion of the day, which subordinates sound criticism to subjective ideas. On the one hand, the external authority is full and unimpeachable; on the other, the peculiarity of the Evangelist's manner has not been fairly taken into account by any who have indulged in the hypothetical Appendix. John was led of the Spirit to intervene from time to time with the expression of his heart at what affected his divine Master for good or ill, or at the testimony rendered in His words, in His ways, and in the signs that accompanied all as here. More than this is a spurious inference, which severs chap. 21 from its due place. How discreditable to the self-vaunting "modern critics" that they allow their own thoughts to run away with them in the face of overwhelming authority and consentient witnesses! Nor is this all. For the true internal evidence is conclusive for the continuity of the text as it stands, as it demands the chapter which follows to complete the scope of this Gospel in general, and especially the bearing of what was begun in the latter part of chap. 20.

It is impossible fairly to sever the manifestation of Jesus at the lake of Tiberias from the two previous scenes of which it is the complement; as indeed verse 14 warrants us to say with decision. It is therefore quite improper to speak of the chapter as an appendix, still more so to speculate on its being written at an interval of some length after the rest of the Gospel: an inference due chiefly if not altogether to a misunderstanding of the two closing verses of chapter 20, as has been already pointed out. (Exp. of John, p.433-5)

21:1-25 [whole chapter]: I think it is to be regretted that Mr. Garrod did not state the reasons for questioning the authorship of this chapter, unless his real desire be to prove for the good of others that there are no substantial grounds for a doubt. The external evidence is unexceptionable. A, B, C, D, E, G, H, K, L, M, P, S, U, X, Δ, are witnesses of the highest class, not to speak of cursive MSS. and a crowd of versions and fathers. Internally, I admit, the chapter has a special place and character; it is obviously of the nature of an appendix to the Gospel; but then it is St. John's Appendix to his own Gospel. For who, save himself, would have included James and John as Zebedee's sons after Thomas and Nathaniel? Further, John's discerning eye of Love in verse 7 is in beautiful harmony with chapter 20:8, as Peter's casting himself into the sea is in keeping with his going into the sepulchre before John, though the latter had arrived there first. So, it seems to me, there are striking links of analogy between the converse after supper in chap. 13 and in the scene here after they had dined, in the thorough restoration and the apostolic reinstatement of Peter, answering to his threefold denial, of which the Lord had warned him in John 13:38; all perfectly in the tone and line of an Apostle. Again, what more like the enigmatic intimations elsewhere in John (2 the temple; 3 new birth; 4 the well of water; 6 the bread, body, and blood, &c.) than the gracious reassuring of Peter (ver. 18) that his recent failure, after his too confident boast, would not deprive him of confessing Christ in the most glorious but naturally painful way, which has John himself for its subject, shrouded too under a similar veil, bespeaks his hand, and appears to me to link him with the Revelation which so fitly closes the Book of God. The two last verses admirably wind up the whole — the true conclusion of a heart surpassed by none in love and reverence for Him of whom the Holy Ghost privileged him to testify, whose works, if every one were written, would more than fill the world itself.

Permit me to add that it would be well, on so serious a subject as God's Word, to withhold the publication of a doubt, till we have examined the matter on all sides. For the natural mind is sceptical enough without help or incentives; and a mere question might raise doubts which might trouble many a soul in spite of the clearest light in answer to it, for the heart loves darkness. The first step of scepticism often is to unsettle people as to the particular human hand which God employed, and, this done, the way is more easy to deny that God employed any hand at all. (Christian Annotator 3:191)

21:2 [See note to John 21:1]

21:3 entered . . . boat Δ : The Compl. rightly gives $\epsilon\nu$ -, Erasmus wrongly $\alpha\nu$ -, with Steph., Be., and Elz., though not without uncials (Δ Λ) and other support; but the Compl. is as wrong as the rest in adding $\epsilon\nu\theta\upsilon\varsigma$ with many more MSS. (Exp. of John, p.436) [See note to John 21:1]

21:4 breaking . . . on: $\gamma\epsilon\nu$. Text. Rec., early read in uncials, and most copies; $\gamma\upsilon\nu$. A B C^m E L, ten cursives, &c. The MSS. also differ as to $\epsilon\pi\iota$ and $\epsilon\iota\varsigma$. (Exp. of John, p.436) [See note to John 21:1]

21:5 [See note to John 21:1]

21:6 net: [See note to Mat. 4:18.]

able: The more correct form $\iota\sigma\chi\nu\nu\nu$ is given by \aleph B C D L Δ Π , more than ten cursives, many Latin copies, Syriac, &c. (Exp. of John, p.436) [See note to John 21:1]

21:7 [See note to John 21:1]

naked: 21:7 needs explanation rather than a marginal note [as suggested by the American correctors of the RV]. (Bible Treasury 14:336)

21:8 [See notes to John 21:1]

net: [See note to Mat. 4:18.]

21:9 [See note to John 21:1]

21:10 [See note to John 21:1]

21:11 [therefore]: \aleph B C L L Π ^m, &c., add $\omicron\nu\nu$ contrary to most uncials and cursives. (Exp. of John, p.439)

net . . . net: [See note to Mat. 4:18.]

to land: Most, with Text. Rec., read ἐπὶ τῆς γ., but the best εἰς τὴν γ., a few ἐπὶ τὴν γ. (Exp. of John, p.439)

[See note to John 21:1]

21:12 [See note to John 21:1]

21:13 Jesus ^Λ: οὖν is added by most, but ^κ B C D L X, &c., do not warrant it. (Exp. of John, p.439) [See note to John 21:1]

21:14 ^Λ disciples: Text. Rec., against ^κ A B C L, &c., adds αὐτοῦ "his." (Exp. of John, p.439) [See note to John 21:1]

21:15 [See note to John 21:1]

lovest . . . dearly love: [G-y enquires what is the difference between ἀγαπάω and φιλέω? You will observe that Jesus says to Peter the first and second times ἀγαπᾷς με, and that Peter replies φιλῶ σε. The third time Jesus says φιλεῖς με. It has been remarked that one means "love," and the other simply "friendly feeling." But on referring to the Englishman's Greek Concordance, I find φιλῶ used in John 5:20 ("for the Father loveth the Son"), and also in John 15:27 ("for the Father himself loveth you," &c.).]

It is not surprising that our correspondent is little satisfied with the usual explanation. The true difference seems to be simple. Ἀγαπάω is the generic term for loving, and is applicable in all directions — to superiors, inferiors, and equals. It is said of God's feeling toward man, and of man's toward God. It is predicated of God's love to the world in giving His only-begotten Son, and of Christ's love in giving Himself for the Church. On the other hand, φιλέω seems to be a narrower word, and properly implies special affection and endearment. Hence it is often used to describe the outward sign of fondness and also vaguely that feeling which produces the habit of certain actions, though this last is true of ἀγαπάω. Both are said of God's love to His Son. The notion that ἀγαπάω denotes reverential love, and φιλέω mere human affection, is untenable. We are not called to love our enemies reverentially. (Mat. 5:43,44; 6:24.) Nor was it thus that Christ loved the rich young man; nor will it be pretended that God reverentially loved the world. Yet this is not a tithe, perhaps, of the absurdity that attends such a thought. As little can φιλέω be reduced to the purely human regard of the heart. It is not so that the Father loves the Son or even us; nor can anything be more opposed to the true scope of 1 Cor. 16:22; Titus 3:15; Rev. 3:19, &c., where φιλέω occurs.

It would rather appear that while the Lord thoroughly judges Peter's confidence in his own love to Him, He not only hears Peter's declaration of his true and near affection for Him, but Himself takes it up the third time, and that this, flashing on Peter's three-fold denial, went to his very heart, and drew out the deeply-felt and humble confession that it was only the Lord's omniscience which could at all discern such affection. It may be added that in the first case, the Lord's word is, "feed my lambs," in the second, "shepherd, or rule, my sheep," and in the third, "feed my sheep." Peter's last answer appeals to the Lord's knowledge, both subjective, οἶδας, and γινώσκεις, objective. (Bible Treasury 2:16) lovest . . . dearly love: I do not think that the student will get much satisfaction by reading the remarks of the Rev. H. Alford on this affecting scene. There is more perhaps in what the Rev. R. C. Trench has observed in his New Testament Synonyms. But the true difference seems to me much more simple than either of these gentlemen apprehend. . . . Mr. A., if I remember rightly, considers that the Lord drops the word of reverential love (ἀγαπάω) which He had twice used, comes down to the word of human affection, Peter's own word (φιλέω), and this third time questions, not merely his loyal love for his Master, but the very human regard of his heart. On the contrary, it appears to me, that while the Lord thoroughly judges Peter's confidence in his own love to Him, in its so exceeding that of others, that he could stand where they fled, He not only hears Peter's repeated declaration of his true and near affection for Him, but Himself takes it up the third time, and that this, flashing on Peter's three-fold denial, went to his inmost heart. The Greek concordance utterly dissolves the idea that reverential love is the dominant thought in ἀγαπάω Let the reader judge. (Christian Annotator 3:351)

21:16 [See note to John 21:1]

lovest . . . dearly love: [See note to John 21:15.]

21:17 Jonah: "John" is supported by a few of the oldest authorities, "Jonah" or Jonas too being perhaps only an abridged form of the name, Johanan or Jehohanan. (Exp. of John, p.443)

Jonah: [The RV has] "Simon, son of John" rather than Jonas, as in chapter 1:42 (Bible Treasury 13:320) dearly love . . . dearly love . . . dearly love: [See note to John 21:15.]

knowest: "Perceivest" is a poor alternative in the margin [of the RV] for "knowest," γινώσκεις as compared with οἶδας. (Bible Treasury 13:320)

sheep [or little sheep]: if the reading of the Alexandrian, the Vatican, and the Paris palimpsest, &c., be preferred, My "little sheep," a diminutive of tenderness and endearment. (Exp. of John, p.446)

[See note to John 21:1]

21:18 [See note to John 21:1]

21:19 [See note to John 21:1]

21:20 ^Λ Peter: Text. Rec., which ^κ D X Γ Δ Π² and others support, adds δὲ, "but," not the other ancient manuscripts. (Exp. of John, p.449) [See note to John 21:1]

21:21 therefore: The highest authorities add οὖν "therefore," but most oppose. (Exp. of John, p.449) [See note to John 21:1]

21:22 [See note to John 21:1]

21:23 what [is it] to thee: ^κ is alone in omitting τί πρὸς σε; "what is it to thee?" (Exp. of John, p.450) [See note to John 21:1]

21:24 [See note to John 21:1]

21:25 [whole verse]: Verse 25 is omitted in Tischendorf's eighth edition on the slender omission of the Sinaitic copy, supposed to be confirmed by "Scholia," edited by Matthaei. (Exp. of John, p.452) [See note to John 21:1] written. ^Λ: The Ἀμήν at the end (Text. Rec.) is not in ^κ A B C D, &c. (Exp. of John, p.452) [see note to Mat. 28:20]

Notes for Acts

1:7 [whole verse]: [See note to Acts 1:14]

1:13 Zealot: Simon was called Zelotes (Luke 6:15, Acts 1:13), answering to the Hebrew word translated "Cananean," as it should be, not meaning either of Canaan or of Cana, but "zealot," one of that well-known fierce party of Jews. (Bible Treasury 20:380)

1:14 [whole verse]: there is laxity [in the RV] in verses 14, 18, 19; correctness in verses 7, 17, 22. (Bible Treasury 13:334)

1:15 together: But the true meaning of the words is a muster of names "together," and not their being "gathered," as the Revised Version puts it. (Bible Treasury 14:221)

1:16 Brethren [lit. Men brethren]: So also 2:29,37; 7:2; 13:15,26; 15:7,13; 22:1; 23:1,6; 28:17. (Exp. of Acts, p. x)

1:17 [whole verse]: [See note to Acts 1:14]

1:18 [whole verse]: [See note to Acts 1:14]

1:19 [whole verse]: [See note to Acts 1:14]

1:22 [whole verse]: [See note to Acts 1:14]

become: [See notes to Mark 3:14 and John 15:16] become: 'Be ordained to be' is the unfounded rendering of the A.V. (Exp. of Acts, p.15)

become: It will be noticed that the words "ordained to be" are left out. Every one ought to be aware indirectly, if not from his own knowledge, that there is nothing in Greek to represent them. There is not, and there never was, the smallest pretence of divine authority for their insertion. It is hard to say how godly men endorsed so pure an interpolation — with what object can easily be surmised: it does not require a word from me. (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist., and Rev., p.7) [see note to Mk. 3:14]

1:26 for them: The true reading, as attested by \aleph , A, B, C, D (corr.), and many ancient versions, is $\alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\iota\varsigma$ (not $\alpha\upsilon\tau\omega\upsilon$, as in D, E, the mass of cursives, &c.). The meaning is, "they gave lots for them." This meets the chief reasoning founded on the common text which Mosheim urges with his usual force against the view in which, he confesses, all the commentators agree (i.e., in representing Matthias as having been chosen an apostle by lot, agreeably to the ancient Jewish practice). It is evidently of no consequence who they were that set forth or appointed ($\epsilon\sigma\tau\eta\sigma\alpha\nu$) the two: some, like Alford, arguing that the whole company thus produced them; others, like Mosheim, contending that it must in all propriety have been the eleven apostles. I think that the vagueness of the phrase, without a defined subject, shows that the stress laid on either side is a mistake. It suffices to say, that two candidates were brought forward, possessed, as far as either apostles or disciples could say, of adequate qualifications. The Lord alone could decide: to Him all looked after the manner so familiar to the people of God. But Mosheim's conclusion destroys the whole point, besides doing violence to the text by confounding $\kappa\lambda\eta\rho\omicron\varsigma$ "lot" with $\psi\eta\phi\omicron\varsigma$ vote or suffrage. It would bring in man's will and voice where the prayer just offered was an abandonment of it for the intervention of the heart-searching God. This, no doubt, was natural to one who was swayed by Lutheran prejudice, and strengthened by the practice which undoubtedly prevailed (from the third century at latest), the assembly deciding by suffrage, not by lot, between the candidates proposed by those who took the lead in their affairs. There seems little difficulty in understanding a Hebraistic extension of the word "gave" (1 Sam. 14:41) for the more common "cast"; and as to the pronoun, it is as intelligible and correct in the dative, as in the genitive it is perplexing in sense, and, I think, inaccurate in form; for the article would be requisite with the substantive if it were the true reading.

Compare J. L. Moshemii de rebus Christianorum ante Const. M. Comm. Saec. Pr. § xiv. pp. 78-80. (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist., and Rev., p.9)

2:1 together: Text. Rec., followed by the Authorized Version 'with one accord,' has $\delta\mu\omicron\phi\upsilon\mu\alpha\delta\omicron\nu$ with one or two uncials and most cursives; but $\omicron\mu\omicron\nu$, 'together', is the reading of \aleph ABC, et al. (Exp. of Acts, p.17)

2:2 blast: Why should $\pi\nu\omicron\eta$ in chapter 2:2 be translated "wind" [in the RV], as in the Authorised Version? The sound out of heaven seemed like the rush of an impetuous blast or blowing. (Bible Treasury 13:334)

2:3 parting asunder: Another point by no means clear is the "parted" or "parting asunder" of verse 3, which they [the RV] alternate in the margin with "parting asunder among them," or "distributing themselves" — a very different meaning. Alford and the Authorised Version follow Erasmus' dissectae, rather than the Vulgate dispertitae, which Wiclif neglected wholly. (Bible Treasury 13:335)

it: Some read with \aleph^m D^{Gr}, some ancient versions and fathers 'they'; but ABCE, the cursives, and other ancient versions support the singular. The plural is probably to suit 'the tongues' just before. (Exp. of Acts, p.17)

2:6 report [or, sound]: And why should $\phi\omega\nu\eta$ in verse 6 be confounded [in the RV] with the $\eta\chi\omicron\varsigma$ of verse 2, instead of the more natural Septuagintal sense of "report," adopted in the Authorised Version? . . . T. S. Green takes it as "gift of speech," Bloomfield as the noise of the multitude; but the former seems without example in the LXX, or New Testament, and the loud noise would be when the strangers flocked rather than that which drew them together. (Bible Treasury 13:334-335)

2:7 saying \wedge : Text. Rec., with the Authorized Version, adds $\pi\rho\omicron\varsigma$ $\alpha\lambda\lambda\eta\lambda\omicron\upsilon\varsigma$, 'one to another', with pretty good authority, but not the best. (Exp. of Acts, p.18)

2:8,11 dialect: The two words $\delta\acute{\iota}\alpha\lambda\epsilon\kappa\tau\omicron\varsigma$ and $\gamma\lambda\omega\sigma\sigma\alpha\iota$ are by no means synonymous. When the Spirit desired to express the language of each, the former was appropriate: when the point was the aggregate of various and many languages, the latter was the suited expression. $\Gamma\lambda.$ might of course be used in the singular or plural, as the case might require; but $\delta.$ is always used in the singular by St. Luke, who is the only inspired who uses the word. The idea of $\gamma\lambda.$ meaning here, or anywhere else, "varieties of musical tones," cannot be maintained. (Christian Annotator 2:352)

2:11 Cretans: Wiclif was right as to men of Crete, where Tyndale and the Geneva by a strange error gave "Grekes" in chapter 2, and the Authorised Version "Cretes," not the singular "Cretians," of Tit. 1:12. (Bible Treasury 13:335)

tongues: [See note to 2:8]

2:12-14 perplexed . . . meaneth . . . mocking . . . all: The critics depart from the Text. Rec. chiefly in forms which affect the sense so little that we need not notice them. (Exp. of Acts, p.20)

2:13 sweet wine: $\Gamma\lambda\epsilon\upsilon\kappa\omicron\varsigma$ appears to be used properly and ordinarily in classic Greek to denote the sweet unfermented juice of the grape. Nevertheless, it is certain, from Acts 2:13 compared with verse 15, that this is not its New Testament sense. That a word may bear a meaning here different from what it has in classic authors is confessed (Temperance Topic, pages 95,96). The context shows that a wine which was familiarly known to possess intoxicating properties, is meant. Mere irony! exclaim Dr. Lees (M.D. Discussion, p. 18) and Mr. Burne (Concordance, pp. 100, 101). But if the insinuation of the Jewish scoffers had been ironical, would an apostle have gravely replied, "These are not drunken, AS YE SUPPOSE" — not merely as ye say? Do men in these days pretend to understand the taunt better than St. Peter did? Or if he be allowed to have understood, do they mean that he chose to allude to it as if he had not? Alas! what is such reasoning, if it be not taking pleasure in unrighteousness? The sense is perfectly simple to those who believe in the Word of God. (Pamphlets, p. 285-286)

2:20 and manifest: Tischendorf omits καὶ ἐπιφανῆ ('and manifest') on the authority of κ D. (Exp. of Acts, p.20)

2:22 shown forth: Again, is it desirable in verse 22 [of the RV] to continue "approved" (ἀποδεειγμένον), seeing that the word is never used now in the sense of "shewn plainly forth," "proved," "appointed," but judged worthy or pleasing, which wholly misleads? To this the Vulgate and Beza contributed, giving "approbatum," rather than Erasmus' "exhibitum," or "demonstratum," or "designatum." (Bible Treasury 13:335)

2:23 by hand of lawless [men]: . . . the Revisers [of 1881] very properly give "by the hand of lawless men," (Bible Treasury 13:335)

2:30 loins λ : . . . the Revisers [of 1881] very properly . . . leave out . . . a clause as unauthorised as it is unnecessary (Bible Treasury 13:335)

2:36 all: [Q. Why should it be "all the house of Israel" in Acts 2:36, as there is no article in the Greek? Does not πᾶς οἶκος mean "every house"? ENQUIRER]

A. Without "of Israel" connected, it would be "every house"; but with it the case is altered. "House of Israel" is in thought a compound term and is sufficiently defined without the article, like "all Jerusalem" which dispenses with it. So it is with "building" in Eph. 2:21, a composite whole in sense, which makes "every" improper and false. The Revisers seem to have been quite astray in all this, though right of course in Eph. 3:15, as "family" has no such reason to plead. "Each several building" is gravely false, at issue with the context even, as with all scripture, which insists on unity. (Bible Treasury 20:64)

2:41 word λ : 'Gladly,' the reading of the Received Text, is rejected on ample evidence by the critics as not found in the oldest and best authorities. It seems to be a perhaps unconscious importation from, or effect of, chapter 21:17, where it is in perfect keeping. Here it is not. For precious and comforting as the gospel may be, deep seriousness would characterize those souls so newly repentant, and on grounds suited to sound them thoroughly. A 'glad' reception would better harmonize with a revival movement and its generally superficial results. (Exp. of Acts, p.28)

word λ : It appears to me that ἀσμένως, "gladly," was inserted in the commonly received text against the best testimony, as well as internal reasons. For the great uncials (κ , A, B, C, D, &c.), supported by the Vulgate and Aethiopic, omit the word, which was probably suggested by chap. 21:17, where it falls in as admirably as here it sounds somewhat out of season. Nearly the same authorities concur in omitting καὶ, "and," between "the fellowship" and "the breaking of bread." This serves to strengthen the view that "the fellowship" goes with "the teaching of the apostles," though put as two objects instead of being combined by a single article in one idea; and it would throw the breaking of bread and the prayers similarly together. (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist. and Rev., p. 18-19) word λ : It may be new to some though to many of you more familiar, that the word "gladly" has no sufficient authority to stand there. Reflect for a moment what it means for one newly converted "gladly" to receive the message. Such a word has not the appropriate link with an occasion so solemn as souls brought to God out of darkness. Do not conceive for a moment that there is any wish to cloud the joy of the believer; but our Lord instructs us that it is a bad sign when the first effect of the truth entering the soul is gladness. Deep self-search and humiliation are incomparably better proofs of a true work of God there. Compare Luke 8:13. (Bible Treasury N4:69) word λ : The history of this word "gladly" really is that it comes from another part of the Acts of the Apostles (21:17). It is a word occurring but this once in the N. T. and rightly applied to receiving beloved servants of the Lord. This curiously illustrates how a word, sometimes a clause, gets occasionally where it ought not. We can understand how brethren who saw the apostle with other servants of the Lord would gladly receive them. One feels how proper this was for men who were at rest and peace with God. But in Acts 2 souls were first brought face to face with their sins, and this in the presence of God. Did not solemnity become them at the most important epoch of their lives? It is not questioned that, whatever may be the difficulties, the result will be joy and peace; but we are speaking now of the process, and of the proper, legitimate, and desirable effect of the word of God in dealing with our souls submitting to it and for the first time taking their stand as confessors of Christ as individuals in the light. (Bible Treasury N4:83, see also Bible Treasury 13:335) word λ : equally good is their omission [in the RV] of ἀσμένως in verse 41, an evident insertion from chapter 21:17. (Bible Treasury 13:335)

2:42 [whole verse]: Verses 42, 46 are more correctly represented [in the RV] (Bible Treasury 13:335)

2:43 apostles λ : Some ancient authorities add 'in Jerusalem; and great fear was upon all': apparently a gloss. Cf. Acts 5:5. (Exp. of Acts, p.26)

2:46 [whole verse]: [See note to Acts 2:42]

2:47 together: In the last verse, 'to the assembly' appears to be a gloss. 'Together', from chapter 3:1, should come in here: 'and the Lord was adding day by day together those that were to be saved.' (Exp. of Acts, p.30) together: It has been objected that some editors, as Lachmann and others, have omitted τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ here in deference to the Sinai, Vatican, Alexandrian, and Rescript of Paris, and a few Juniors, with the Vulgate, Coptic, Aethiopic, and Armenian versions; but all the other uncials and cursives, with the Syriac, Arabic, and Slavonic versions, not to speak of early citations, accept the word; and these were followed by Griesbach, Scholz, &c., as well as Bengel hesitatingly. Tischendorf, who had at first rejected the common reading, replaced it in his later editions, though probably κ will now incline him once more against it. But it ought to be remembered that even the school of Lachmann, if they reject it, separate ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτό from chap. 3:1, so that the passage would make the sense substantially the same as if τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ, "to the church," were read; namely, "The Lord was adding daily together those that should be saved." (Lect. on the Church, p. 79) together: Hear again [from the Christian Observer, Dec., 1866]: "Is Mr. Kelly really so ignorant as not to know that the word ἐκκλησία is constantly used by the Septuagint translators for the Hebrew word which in our English translation is rendered 'congregation' or 'assembly?' The idea of Church, then, was no new thing. Mr. Kelly makes a great parade of his knowledge of the Greek, and of the various readings of the New Testament, where it suits his purpose: he could even tell us that 'the Holy Ghost' used the singular 'the Church' where our version has Churches (Acts 9:31); but how is it that he has not discovered that the word, 'the Church' in the passage, 'the Lord added to the Church such as should be saved,' is not found in the ancient MSS. but is an unauthorized interpolation; and yet upon this groundless basement he has built his grand fabric, that now for the first time God's Church came into existence." (Pages 898,899.)

Now in the same page of the Christian Observer there is printed an extract from my Lectures on the Church, which to any man of sense and temper would prove (if the writer questioned my acquaintance with the fact), that the LXX. (as is also done exceptionally in the New Testament) employ the word ἐκκλησία in the sense of the congregation of Israel. I expressly said, "The Church, in the New Testament sense of the word," i.e., as the body of Christ; and I challenge this writer, or anybody else, to produce instances from the Septuagint where ἐκκλησία is so used. His insinuation, his logic, and his learning are equally at fault, not to speak of good manners, which I hope one may expect from a decent evangelical journal. If this be so, "the idea of the Church" was a new thing in the sense in question; for there never was before even the thought divulged of believing Jews and Gentiles taken out of their natural associations and united on earth in one body with the Head glorified in heaven. And so far is it from being true that my books referred to contain a parade of Greek and various readings, that, on the contrary, every scholar must see that I refrain from these topics save where the truth would be, in my judgment, seriously affected by reticence. Further, it was my dislike to talk of "the Greek" and "the right translation" which led me, as I do not infrequently, to speak of the blessed "Spirit of God" saying so and so, which I think I never do unless perfectly sure of my ground. But enough of this. As to the attempt at textual criticism on Acts 2:47, I recommend the Christian Observer to beware of damaging its character by allowing men to venture on such a serious task who are such novices as my reviewer. If his ignorance made him ridiculously timid and captious (not to say more) as to Acts 9:31, his ignorance makes him ridiculously rash as to Acts 2:47. "How is it that he [Mr. K.] has not discovered," &c. Let me answer that I have not now discovered anything of what he says, but that I am perfectly sure he knows hardly anything of the matter, no matter what books he had to help him. His statement is in every point of view unfounded. 1, I knew the various readings of this verse quite familiarly, but a statement of them here would have been mere "parade," because the determination of the point is not clear or sure. 2, It is false that the words "the Church" are not found "in the ancient MSS." Is not Laud's copy of the Acts (now in the Bodleian) an "ancient MS.?" 3, So far is it from being "an unauthorized interpolation," that it is the reading of the vast majority of manuscripts, supported by both the Syriac, the Arabic, and the Slavonic versions, not to speak of early citations. 4, So far from being "a groundless basement," (as says this slashing sutor ultra crepidam), the greatest of living editors, Prof. Tischendorf, who had yielded in his first edition of the Greek Testament, has replaced τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ in his following editions (except of course his strange Greco-Latin one, Paris 1842), and Griesbach, who is inferior in acumen to none of the past editors, never removed the words. But the fact is, that the editors who, like Lachmann, omit τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ take ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτό from the beginning of chapter 3 (as in the received text). Now this makes the sense in substance the same as if τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ were read. "And the Lord was adding daily those that should be saved together." In this case Acts 5:11 would be the first occurrence of the word, referring to the assembly, of Church, as an existing and known institution; but this would fall in with the idea that the assembly, not yet begun to be built when Christ was on earth, actually commenced at Pentecost and is ever afterwards recognised as a subsisting fact. Lastly, even if the words were removed, my doctrine of the Church is affected no more by their removal than the doctrine of the Trinity by the exclusion of the unquestionable interpolation in 1 John 5. Nor would it be shaken if there were six or twelve dubious insertions of the word ἐκκλησία, for happily both the word and the general truth, presented in a variety of forms and phrases, cover a large part of the Acts of the Apostles as well as the Epistles of Paul. (Bible Treasury 6:218-9) together: At the end of the second of Acts the occurrence of the word [church] is doubtful. It is very probable that it is not correct there. In that place "the Lord added together," is the true reading. I make this remark because it will show the great importance of having as correct a translation of the Scriptures as possible. I think that those who desire intelligence in the word of God ought to possess such a translation for their own private reading. I do not say that they should have it for use in the meetings, as the less said as to points of this kind, especially at a worship meeting or anything of that kind, the better; but I conceive that here I have the object and purpose of seeking to help the children of God to know the truth as much as possible, and therefore I do not scruple to speak of this, though I do not like it. If we all had the truth of God presented to us in the correct and best form there would be no need to dwell upon these things, but, unfortunately, we have been accustomed to an imperfect translation, and consequently it is necessary to shew, in certain cases, what is really the truth. (Bible Treasury N8:377) together: It is well known that the true text of the last clause is "And the Lord kept adding daily together those to be saved." For want of understanding this, τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ, "to the church," crept in as an explanation; and ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτό got relegated to the beginning of chapter 3. But, however taken, it is clear that the words do not mean "in the same place." . . .

The fact is that the phrase is used adverbially in classical or ordinary Greek writers, just as we have seen in the New Testament, for "together." Thus Thucydides, though not using it often, does thereby express (i.79, vi.106) concurrence in sentiment or in falsehood without reference to place. For other purposes he with marked precision employs εἰς τὸ αὐτό, ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ, κατὰ τὸ αὐτό, ἐκ τοῦ αὐτοῦ, κ. τ. λ. So Polybius (ii.326) uses it for "together," Dionys. Hal. (Ant. Rom. iii.), Cl. Ptol. (Geogr. i. 12), and Plutarch frequently, not to speak of other heathen authors.

But it is evidently to the Septuagint, Philo, and Josephus, we must look for more direct and sure illustration of New Testament phraseology; and there the formula occurs freely, and habitually for "together," &c. Occasionally, of course the place or time, may be the same; but, as in the New Testament, the usage is wider and often admits of difference in these respects where there is community of act or design. Compare Exod. 26:9, 36:13; Deut. 22:10, 25:5,11; Josh. 9:2, 11:5; Judg. 6:33, 19:6; 2 Sam. 2:13, 10:15, 12:3, 21:9; Ezra 4:3; Neh. 4:8, 6:2,7; Pss. 2:2, 4:9, 18; (Heb. 19: and so in the following) 10, 33:3, 36:40, 40:7, 47:4, 48:2,9, 54:15, 61:9, 70:11, 63:7,9, 82:15, 101:23, 121:2, 132:1; Eccles. 11:6; Isa. 66:17; Jer. 3:18, 6:12,46:12, 50:4; Hos. 1:11; Amos 1:15, 3:3; Mic. 2:12. Comment on these occurrences of the Septuagint is needless: though they will naturally be of chief interest to the student of the Greek Bible, it is hoped that the English reader may find the search not without profit, as it fully confirms the fact that the phrase admits of sameness of purpose for several companies in as many places. (Bible Treasury 14:221, see also Bible Treasury 13:335) that were to be saved: It appears to me that σώφητε, in ver. 40, refutes the prevalent mistake that τοὺς σωζομένους means 'those in process of salvation' though this be grammatically possible and easy. But see Luke 13:23. So Heb. 10:10 shows that τοὺς ἀγιαζομένους in ver. 14 cannot refer to present process. Not time, but character, is in question. (Exp. of Acts, p.30) that were to be saved: For the true force of τοὺς σ., let me appeal to the respectable Company [of Revisers of 1881] themselves in their version of Luke 13:23 (not to speak of 1 Cor. 15:2). Correct accordingly not only Acts 2:47 but 1 Corinthians 1:18, and 2 Corinthians 2:15, τῶν σ. in Revelation 21:24 being beyond a doubt spurious. It has been often pointed out that οἱ σ. is a technical expression of the LXX for the Jewish remnant destined to salvation out of the ungodly people, and that the present participle is here used (as the indicative no less frequently) apart from time for the class; for the same persons at the same time have predicated of them the aorist and perfect as well as the present. This proves that the present must be used, not historically, but as the description of a class; the present cannot otherwise apply, as well as the two past tenses; abstractedly of the character it might. Compare the use of "sanctified" in Heb. 10:10, 14, to which the same principle applies. (Bible Treasury 13:335) that were to be saved: 2:47 is better in the Authorised Version than in the Revision, whether of British or Americans; but of the two latter the American version, "those that were saved," is not strictly grammatical. The British amendment, "those that were being saved," might be correct but for other considerations. Every scholar knows that the present tense, including its participle, need not be temporal, but may be what is called ethical. Hence the general truth and the particular context must often come in to decide the real force intended. In itself the words τοὺς σωζομένους might quite well mean "those that were being saved" if the present participle were only used relatively. But there is an absolute usage which drops all thought of actual time, and simply expresses a person (as ὁ ἐρχόμενος he that should come), or a class (as οἱ ἀγιαζόμενοι) characterised according to the word employed. And so the Revisers correctly take it in Luke 13 — "Are they few that be saved?" Are those to be saved few? "The saved" is true; but is not quite the thought. Compare 1 Cor. 1:18, 2 Cor. 2:15 (Rev. 21:24 being no genuine occurrence). In Eph. 2:5 is quite a different form, which does mean "ye are," or have been "saved." It seems impossible to admit the strict relative present with Peter's σώθητε just before in verse 40; for the aorist and the relative present cannot apply together. It must be therefore the absolute present, with no definite notion of time, which it is difficult in English to express justly. If the Americans meant this, they were right in their aim. But a full view of the Scripture use of the various forms appears to exclude the Revisers' version of the phrase. A Christian could not be said to be σωθείς or σεσωσμένος, if he is only in the process of being saved. If σωζόμενος be applied, as it is, to such an one, it must be apart from time, referring to no particular moment when the action takes place. (Bible Treasury 14:350-251)

3:11 Peter and John: [See note to James 3:9]

3:13 servant: In chapter 3:13, 26, as in chapter 4:27, 30, the Revisers rightly give, not Son or Child, but "servant," referring to Isaiah 42:1; (Mat. 12:18); 52:13; 53:11. Verses 19, 20 are given accurately, "Repent ye, therefore, and turn again, that your sins may be blotted out, that so there may come seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord; and that he may send the Christ who hath been appointed for you, even Jesus." (Bible Treasury 13:335)

3:21 restoring: I cannot allow the justice of what is said of Acts 3:19-21. The obviously correct rendering of the passage is: "Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, unto the blotting out of your sins, that (Compare Matt. 6:5, προσεύχεσθαι, ὅπως ἂν φανῶσι κ. τ. λ. the ἂν in both being required, because of the dependance on an infinitive, and not on the principal verb. The authorised version and the Vulgate are both wrong in their translation of this clause.) times of refreshing may come from the presence of the Lord, and that He may send τὸν προκεκηρυγμένον (or with Griesbach, Scholz, &c. προκεχειρισμένον) ὑμῖν 'I. X. whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things," &c. Now, the very formation and nature of the word ἀποκατάστασις proves that it cannot have here, or any where else, "the same effect with fulfilment." Supposing even that the verb ἀποκάθιστημι meant to fulfil, still it will hardly admit of question, that the amendment here proposed is wrong; for words so formed, as a class, refer not to an act past and completed, but to the doing of the act implied in the verb. In other words, it would mean the fulfilling or fulfilment, but not an action already finished; and, therefore, this verse would teach the retention of Christ in heaven, not till the prophecies have received their accomplishment, but till the times of the fulfilling itself, i.e. the reverse of what the sermon [Dr. Wardlaw, Sermons, p. 492] would aver. But the truth is, that in the eight passages where that verb occurs in the New Testament, there is not one passage where it can be shown to mean "fulfil"; there is not one where it may not be safely rendered "restore." "Reconstitute," in some cases gives the force well. Using this, then, the meaning of the verse in question would be, "until the times of reconstituting, or restoring," i.e. not, in any sense till the act was done, but being done, or doing. (Prospect 2:38-39)

since time began: as in 15:18 "from of old" is well enough. (Bible Treasury 14:351)

3:26 servant: [see note to Acts 3:13]

4:1 [chapter break]: The discourse of the apostle was interrupted at this point, but this is lost to many a reader by the division of the chapters. (Exp. of Acts, p.36)

4:24,25 27,30 He. . . Who by [the] Holy Spirit . . . in this city . . . servant . . . servant: It will be noticed that the critical text differs not a little from the Received, not merely in omitting 'God' in ver. 24, and giving 'in this city' in ver. 27, but yet more in the singular addition 'by (the) Holy Spirit' in ver. 25, given by ABE and other authorities. It is difficult to conceive the ordinary text deliberately changed into that ancient form with its unusual harshness; it is easy to understand that later copyists might soften the phrase. It is not often that the older witnesses give us greater copiousness; but here we have distinct instances of it. Further, in vers. 27 and 30, as in chap. 3:13,26, the true counterpart is 'Servant', and not 'Son,' nor even 'Child' here, answering to Isaiah 42:1; 52:13; as indeed the Authorized Version rightly translates in ver. 25. Only in the prayer Jesus is here carefully distinguished from David as His 'holy' One. (Exp. of Acts, p.47)

4:25 Who by [the] Holy Spirit: The most ancient reading, here followed, seems difficult or at least confused. (Exp. of Acts, p.43) [See note to 4:24]

4:27 in this city . . . servant: [See notes to Acts 3:13 and 4:24]

4:30 servant: [See notes to 3:13 and 4:24]

4:31 the: The article is required by the best authorities: a plain proof, if needed, that the Holy Spirit personally is in question, not a mere influence. Bishop Middleton is also mistaken about the converse, or absence of the article, which is quite independent of personality, and simply characterizes. (Exp. of Acts, p.47)

5:6 the younger: Up to this time the administration was in the hands of the apostles, as we see in chapter 4:35, though probably they may have employed many brethren in the actual distribution to each needy individual. But that there were already officers whose province it was, is not only without, but against the evidence of Scripture. I am aware that Mosheim tries to prove such a class of functionaries from 'the young men' (οἱ νεώτεροι) in chapter 5:6, which he will have rather fancifully to be the counterpart of the 'elder' (οἱ πρεσβύτεροι) who do not appear till the end of chapter 11, Kühnöl and Olshausen accepting his thought. But the usage of Scripture nowhere countenances any such official 'younger men', as it does often in the use of 'elders'. On the contrary in the same context, on their return from burying Ananias, they are called 'the young men', (οἱ νεανίσκοι) which cannot be conceived to have such a force and therefore ought to refute it for the previous and corresponding term. They were simply the younger brethren, on whom would naturally devolve any prompt call for a laborious and sorrowful duty of a physical nature. Compare 1 Tim. 5:1, 2; Tit. 2:6; and 1 Pet. 5:5. (Exp. of Acts, p.70-71)

5:24 [the priest and]: The more ancient MSS. and versions reject 'the priest and' as in the Received Text. But while one can readily understand the omission from ignorance of the phrase, it is hard to see how some good copies, as well as a great many, accepted it unless genuine. 'Proclivi lectioni praestat ardua' is an acknowledged maxim in such matters. The fact is, however, that in the Old Testament the use of 'the priest' for 'the high priest' is common. See Exod. 29:30; 35:19; 38:21; Lev. 4:5, 6, 7, 10, 16; 6:22; 13:2; 16:32; 21:21; Num. 3:6, 32; 4:16, 28, 33; 7:8; 16:37, 39; 18:28; 25:7, 11; 26:1, 3, 63; 27:2, 19, 21, 22; 31:6, 12, 13, 21, 26, 29, 31, 41, 51, 54; 32:2, 28; 33:38; 34:17. Nor is it only in the books of Moses that we find the use of 'priest' thus frequently for 'high priest'; for so it is in Joshua 14, 17, 19, 21, 22; so in 1 & 2 Sam.; 1 & 2 Kings; 1 & 2 Chron. So the Lord is predicted in Ps. 110; Zech. 6. We are not driven, as Krebs would seem to have supposed, to the Apocrypha (1 Macc. 15:1, 2), though the usage is there and in Josephus (A. vi. 12, 1), to whom he refers. In the New Testament itself compare Heb. 5:6, and (not to speak of 7:5) 7:3, 11, 15, 17, 21; 8:4; 10:21. (Exp. of Acts, p.59)

5:32 [His]: The greater copies exclude 'His'; but the strange reading of B rather strengthens EHP and the mass in holding to it. (Exp. of Acts, p.60)

5:33 took counsel: ἐβουλεύοντο & DHP and the bulk of cursives, the Vulgate, Syriac Versions, et al.; Lachmann, Tregelles, et al., prefer ἐβούλοντο ('were minded') with ABC, et al. (the addition or omission of a syllable in the middle, easily made, is all the difference between the readings). (Exp. of Acts, p.64)

5:39 them: αὐτούς & ABC^{corr.} DE, at least a dozen cursives, the later Syriac, et al., as against αὐτό ('it') C^{ms} HP, most cursives, versions, et al. (Exp. of Acts, p.64)

5:41 Name Λ : E and many other copies add 'of the Lord Jesus', as others simply 'of Jesus', or 'of Christ', or 'of Him', which last is in the Received Text. (Exp. of Acts, p.68)

5:42 Christ [is] Jesus: The Received Text has 'Jesus the Christ', Ἰησοῦν τὸν Χριστὸν, HP, et al., not τὸν Χριστόν Ἰησοῦν as in & AB and very many more. (Exp. of Acts, p.68)

6:2 seemly: ἀρεστὸν admits of a wider sense than the very narrow one of 'pleasing', or 'our pleasure' (Exp. of Acts, p.71)

6:7 priests: It is painful to note how prone men of learning are to parry and pare down the marvels of God's grace. Thus, Beza, Casaubon, and Valckenaer would change the text — Elsner, Heinsius, Kühnöl, and Wolf, the only legitimate use of the last clause — to get rid of this great work among the priests. Is aught too hard for the Lord? Were priests alone a hopeless class? The Peschito (not the Philoxenian) Syriac had already yielded to similar unbelief, and the Arabic also, both omitting all notice of the priests. (Exp. of Acts, p.74)

6:8 full of grace: Such is the reading of & ABD, of more than twenty cursives, and of the best ancient versions. (Exp. of Acts, p.75)

6:9 called: If we might safely adopt the reading of Tischendorf's last edition (τῶν λεγομένων with & A, eight cursives, Sah. Memph. et al.), the construction would be easier, 'of those called L'. But the mass of uncials, cursives, versions, et al., is adverse. (Exp. of Acts, p.75) and Asia: Lachmann was bold enough to omit 'and of Asia', because of its absence in AD. (Exp. of Acts, p.75)

6:13 Λ words . . . the: The best authorities omit 'blasphemous', which the Received Text adds with 'this' against the mass. (Exp. of Acts, p.75)

7:2 Λ brethren: It may be needed to point out that there are only two classes here addressed, elders and youngers, "men" applying to both by a well-known idiom. (Bible Treasury N5:122)

7:4 He: There is a question in verse 4 whether the subject be Abram or God understood. If verse 43 points to the latter, the construction of 1 Chron. 8:6 (in the LXX.) favours the former: so that some may and do abide with the Authorized Version, instead of following the Revisers, and the Vulgate, Syrr., Ar., Cop., if not Aeth. The connexion with verse 5 would lead one to prefer God (Exp. of Acts, p.81)

7:5 gave . . . not . . . and promised: There is no ground for regarding 'not', as 'not yet', nor 'gave' and 'promised' as pluperfect in sense, nor 'and' as 'yet', with learned men who did not understand nor believe the scripture before them. (Exp. of Acts, p.82)

7:16 [son, or father of]: The chief various reading in this verse is a question between ἐν and τοῦ: the former supported by \aleph^{ms} BC, several cursives and ancient versions (and with τοῦ before ἐν \aleph^{corr} AE and three cursives, et al.); the latter (which is the commonly received text) by inferior authorities. The whole phrase is omitted by the Pesh. Syr. and Erp. Arabic. (Exp. of Acts, p.85)

7:17 vouchsafed: There can be scarce a question that ὡμολογήσεν is the right reading, as in & ABC, et al., with most of the old versions; and not the vulgar reading ὡμοσεν 'swore', as in HP, most cursives, the Pesh. Syr. Cop., et al. (Exp. of Acts, p.85)

7:30 angel Λ : "[of the Lord]": DEHP, almost all cursives and many ancient versions. (Exp. of Acts, p.89)

7:31 Lord Λ : "[unto him]": Most authorities but not the best. (Exp. of Acts, p.89)

7:32 Λ Isaac and Λ : 'The God of' in the Authorized Version and Received Text on ample, but not the highest, authority. (Exp. of Acts, p.89)

7:33 whereon: 'Wherein' is the more common reading. (Exp. of Acts, p.89)

7:35 hath: The perfect has best, not most, support. (Exp. of Acts, p.89)

7:36 of Egypt: Probably Lachmann's choice of ἐν τῇ Αἰγύπτῳ is right (BC et al.), which may next easily have lapsed into ἐν γῇ Αἰγύπτου or φ both being well supported but not the oldest. (Exp. of Acts, p.89)

7:37 Λ God . . . me Λ : The Received Text adds, 'The Lord your', as in the Authorized Version, and 'him shall ye hear', but not so the oldest. (Exp. of Acts, p.89)

7:38 assembly: [Q. Acts 7:38. — Is the word "church" right here? ENQUIRER]

A. Certainly not, if the reader thereby gathers "the Church of God" as unfolded variously in the Epistles to the Corinthians, Ephesians, and Colossians. The meaning is clearly the assembly of Israel in the wilderness. Hence "assembly" or "congregation" would be a better rendering, as avoiding ambiguity and leaving the reader to infer from the context what assembly is meant. The word itself is capable of other applications, as in Acts 19, where it is applied to the meeting of the Ephesians. It is technically used in Greek authors for the legislative assembly to which the citizens belonged. (Bible Treasury 3:320) assembly: It may be worth while to add that among men of known ability and of every ecclesiastical shade, even of some as far as possible from "Brethren" and of others on the evangelical platform, there is no hesitation in coming to the same conclusion as I do on Acts 7:38. There is this slight difference that some, as Grotius, contend for the congregation of Israel in general, while others, as Kühnöl, think that it means that particular assembly of Israel which gathered at Sinai when the law was given. But I do not know a single person of weight who does not accept one or other of these shades of the same thing, without a word about the inference which the Christian Observer seems to think everybody holds except "the Brethren." This is the more remarkable, because most of these writers held the usual loose traditional view of the Church as the aggregate expression of God's people from first to last. Yet they were faithful enough to Holy Writ not to force this verse to say what it was not intended to convey. Thus Schleusner says on the expression here, "concio Israelitarum, ad audiendam legem convocata;" and Dr. Hastings Robinson in his monograph (Πράξεις τῶν Ἀποστόλων, Cantabr. 1824) differs not from others: "Sermo est in h. l. de certa quadam populi concione, qualis illa fuit in promulganda lege ad montem Sinai congregata." Meyer (Krit. exeget. Kommentar, Göttingen, 1835, in loc.) takes the same view, as does Bloomfield. The truth is that the word ἐκκλησία in itself determines nothing, as being applied, even in the book of the Acts alone, in three senses, Jewish, Gentile, and Christian: — first, the assembly in the wilderness; secondly, the assembly at Ephesus; and thirdly, the assembly whether in Jerusalem, &c., or absolutely. It is the context which decides whether by some particular qualification or by the general sense. (Bible Treasury 6:222) assembly: Surely no serious person would contend that in Acts 7:38 the word ἐκκλησία has the same force as in Acts 2 or Matthew 16, 18. The truth is, that the word in itself means "assembly," and is capable of application to a bad or good one, a civic or a religious one, the congregation of Israel in the Old Testament, or the church of God in the New Testament. (Bible Treasury 9:107) assembly: Another word which has been unduly restricted, in modern thought at least, is the word "church." The simple force of the Greek word ἐκκλησία is "assembly" or "congregation," a word applied to many other assemblies besides the body of Christ. Thus the confused meeting of the Ephesians in Acts 19:32 cannot mean the church of God, yet is it called ἡ ἐκκλησία. So "the church in the wilderness" (Acts 7:38) ought rather to have been "the congregation" there. It means unquestionably, not the church of God, but the congregation of Israel, almost all of whose carcasses fell in the wilderness, and to whom He swore that they should not enter in to His rest. (Bible Treasury N3:11-12, Prospect 2:127) [See note to Acts 19:32] assembly: [In the RV] is perpetuated the old error of "church" in the wilderness, with "congregation" in the margin, the converse of Hebrews 2:12, where "congregation" appears in the text, "church" in the margin. (Bible Treasury 13:335) living: But on the one hand 'lively' is too slight here, as also in 1 Pet. 1:3 and 2:5; on the other 'life-giving' goes too far, and at any rate is not the epithet intended; for this is to characterize the oracles themselves, not their effect on others. I know not why Mr. Humphry should have endorsed the error which Kühnöl adopted from Grotius. And why 'saving'? This is but to change, not to translate or to expound, any more than the opposite lowering of the sense by J. Piscator and J. Alberti, as if received viva voce! 'Living' alone is right and sufficient. (Exp. of Acts, p.94)

7:46 God: \aleph^m . BDH join against all other witnesses in reading τῷ οἴκῳ 'the house', instead of τῷ θεῷ 'the God', and Tischendorf actually accepts it! — 'a habitation for the house of Jacob!' (Exp. of Acts, p.96)

7:48 [places]: The best authorities \aleph ABCDE, some cursives, and all the ancient versions, save the Armenian, et al., have no such addition as 'temples' in the Received Text and most junior MSS., et al. (Exp. of Acts, p.97)

7:51 hearts: There is a question of reading between καρδίας (with, or without, ταῖς), and τῇ καρδίᾳ. A few of the oldest, \aleph ACD, with some cursives, support the plural; but EHP with the mass of cursives, ancient versions, et al., give the singular. The reading of the Vatican is a clerical error of καρδίας, for καρδίας probably. Some, as the Sinaitic, add ὑμῶν. (Exp. of Acts, p.98)

7:52 became: The chief uncials (\aleph ABCDE), well supported by cursives, present ἐγένεσθε 'became'; the majority of cursives, with HP, have γεγέννησθε 'ye have been', which seems to have slipped, or been put, in to add force to the simple fact. (Exp. of Acts, p.98)

7:53 as: The apostle's language in Gal. 3:19 by its similarity materially helps to clear up the words of Stephen here, though it is painful to observe how few seem to have profited thereby. Each word of the phrase (εἰς διαταγὰς ἀγγέλων) has been the occasion of strange perplexity and dispute among the learned to the depravation of the sense. Winer (N. T. Gr. xxxii. 4, 6) refers to Matt. 12:41 as illustrative of the force here too of the preposition; but the difference of the phrases seems to render the desired sameness impossible. 'Repenting at' the preaching of Jonah is very intelligible and clearly meant; not so 'receiving' at ordinances of angels.

Hence Alford, who follows this later suggestion of the German grammarian, understands it as 'at the injunction' of angels. But this departs from the sense we had got for διαταγὰς from Gal. 3:19, which signifies, beyond just doubt, 'ordained' or administered through angels, not 'enjoined' by them, a very different idea, as also is 'promulgated'.

Now what is the meaning of receiving the law as ordinances of angels? Those who take εἰς here as 'at' are obliged therefore, in order to make sense, to interpret διαταγὰς as 'injunctions', swerving in this from the true force of the participle in Gal. 3:19. It appears to me accordingly, that, if it be 'ordinances' here in keeping with 'ordained' there, we must understand εἰς in the very common Hellenistic sense of 'as' rather than 'at', the accusative of the predicate, to which Winer had inclined in earlier editions, and, as I believe, more rightly. Israel received the law, not as a code drawn up by human wisdom, but as administered by angels, and so, through their intervention, from God. Hence the solemnity of their failure to keep what was divine. The allusion seems to be to Deut. 33:2. Jehovah came from Sinai, rose up from Seir unto them; He shone forth from Mount Paran, and He came from the myriads of holiness (or, holy myriads) — from His right hand a law of fire (or, fiery law) for them. Compare Psalm 68:17. It is needless to cite Josephus, Philo, or the Rabbis. What is of more moment, Heb. 2:2 quite falls in with the Galatians and with our text. In the Septuagint we find singular confusion; for, first, instead of 'holiness' they seem to have understood 'Kadesh'; and yet, secondly, they bring 'His angels' into the last clause, instead of 'a law of fire', so that their version errs greatly from the text. . . . Again, 'by troops of angels' is not more opposed to grammar than to philology; as also 'by' (A.V.) the disposition of angels is clearly untenable. (Exp. of Acts, p.101-102) as: There is a good deal of uncertainty in the treatment of verse 53, the law "as it was ordained by angels," or "as the ordinance of angels," Greek "unto ordinances of angels." Undoubtedly εἰς διαταγὰς ἀγγ. is not an easy phrase, but means at injunctions or ordering of angels. (Cf. Matt. 12:41; Gal. 3:19.) (Bible Treasury 13:335)

7:59 invoking Λ : There is no ground for the addition in the Authorized Version of 'God', and a questionable need for that in the Revised Version of 'the Lord'. It was on the Lord that His dying servant called, as the blessed Lord dying commended His spirit to His Father's hands. (Exp. of Acts, p.103) invoking Λ : In verse 59 if words must be intercalated, [the RV is] . . . more right in saying "the Lord" than the Authorised Version, which detracts from His glory by inserting "God;" better leave out either and give, "invoking and saying, Lord Jesus," &c. (Bible Treasury 13:335)

8:1 and: The first hand of the Sinaitic leaves out the copula, with two cursives, which Tischendorf singularly adopts. It is just as necessary as in ver. 2. (Exp. of Acts, p.105)

8:3,4 was . . . word Λ : Laud's MS., E, gives the aorist here, and adds 'of God' at the end of ver. 4, in both faultily, in the latter with several Versions. (Exp. of Acts, p.105)

8:4 evangelising: [Q. What think you of the following note of T. Scott on Acts 8:4? "The difference between statedly and authoritatively as a herald, and by office and authority, preaching to regularly convened congregations, and simply declaring what a man knows of Christ and salvation, amongst relations, juniors, ignorant neighbors, or ignorant persons of any sort, without assuming any authority, seems of great importance. No doubt in this way a man's sphere will often gradually enlarge, till he appear something like an authoritative preacher; but would it not then be proper that pastors and rulers should send some Barnabas to confirm what has been done, and to confer due authority? And would it not be right in this case for the person himself to seek from the pastors and teachers of the Church their sanction for his labours, now become more public than he at first either expected or intended?" T.]

A. The notion is quite unfounded, and directly at issue with the very Scriptures before the commentator's eye. Neither Barnabas nor any other man ever conferred authority to preach as a herald, or even in the most unpretending form. It is true that the word descriptive of the preaching in Acts 8:4 is εὐαγγελίζω. But this word is frequently applied to the preaching of the Lord and the apostles, as well as of others. (Comp. Luke 4:18, 43; 7:22; 8:1; 9:6; 16:16; 20:1; Acts 5:42; 8:12, 25, 35, 40; 13:32; 14:7, 15, 21; 15:35; 16:10; 17:18; Rom. 1:15; 15:20; 1 Cor. 1:17, &c.; Gal. 1:8, &c., &c.) The other word, κηρύσσω, which means to proclaim as a herald, has not the smallest connexion with office and authority, or regularly convened congregations, more than εὐαγγελίζω. It also is used of the Lord and the apostles, (Matt. 4:17, 23; 10:7, 27; 11:1; 24:14, &c., &c.) but it is predicated, just as freely, of others too. So it is applied in Mark 5:20 to the delivered demoniac, and in Philippians 1:15 to the brethren at Rome, some of whom were preaching Christ of envy and strife, and some also of goodwill. Of both, however, it is declared, that they τὸν χριστὸν κηρύσσουσιν. That is, the word employed about these unappointed brethren is the expression of authoritative proclamation as a herald. In short, the commentator in this note was supplementing and unwittingly corrupting Scripture, instead of fairly expounding it. When Barnabas and Paul visited and confirmed the assemblies, they ordained, not persons to proclaim the gospel statedly to regular congregations, but elders or presbyters in each assembly. But an elder was a local official whose function was to rule; it was needful that he should be apt to teach, but he might never preach the gospel in his life; and if he did, it was not in virtue of any conferred authority (which was with a view to government), but of the gift of the evangelist, if he possessed it. Thus, Philip who was one of the seven was also an evangelist. In virtue of the one he discharged his diaconal duties at Jerusalem, in virtue of the other he evangelized or heralded, (for both words are used of his preaching,) in Samaria and elsewhere. (Bible Treasury 5:192)

word Λ : [see note to Acts 8:3]

8:7 many: The true text here is a good instance of the tendency in later copyists to soften down a rugged or peculiar construction and so get rid of the difficulty. The older MSS., \aleph ABCE, some cursives, and among the ancient versions the Vulg., Sah., Syrr., et al., support πολλοὶ, which gives grammatically an anacoluthon or irregularity of construction by no means uncommon: so 7:40. We can easily understand the change to πολλῶν in order to make all smooth, supported by but two later uncials (HP) with the mass of cursives, et al. (Exp. of Acts, p.109)

8:8 great: The critical reading πολλὴ χαρὰ (not μεγάλη) seems to refer to the extent rather than the quality of the joy. (Exp. of Acts, p.109)

8:10 called: \aleph ABCDE, many cursives, and ancient Vv., etc. supply καλουμένη 'called', omitted in the Received Text on inferior authority, and probably because the copyists, not perceiving its importance, imagined it was a mere gloss. It is expressive of the egregious assumption of the impostor. (Exp. of Acts, p.110)

8:12 evangelising Λ : On the other hand τὰ 'the things' is an insertion contrary to the oldest witnesses, which enfeebles the sense here, and in 28:23, though in general a favourite expression of Luke if not peculiarly his. (Exp. of Acts, p.110)

Λ Jesus: The article, read by a few cursives but adopted in the Text. Rec., has no place here in the best authorities. (Exp. of Acts, p.110) [See also the note to Mat. 1:18]

8:13 signs and great works of power: The best copies and Versions have the order of words here followed as in the margin of the Authorized Version. R. Stephens, Elz., Beza even from his first edition (Tiguri, 1559) are right; not so Erasmus and Colinaeus who read δυνάμεις καὶ σημεῖα, not the Complut. Edd. who have δ. κ. σ. μεγάλα. It may be added that the MSS. \aleph CD from the primary hand join at the end of the verse in the great blunder of 'they were' amazed. (Exp. of Acts, p.110)

8:14 them Λ : The bare structure of the phrase in the Text. Rec. of the Greek, one article for Peter and John, joins both in a common position here. But the great uncials do not favour its insertion. (Exp. of Acts, p.113)

8:16 He: it is hard to see why we should go back to "it" in Acts 8:16 from the "he" of both the Authorised and Revised Versions. (Bible Treasury 14:351)

8:25 returned . . . evangelized: The most ancient and best copies present here the imperfect, not the mere historical tense or aorist, as in the Text. Rec. following the inferior authorities. (Exp. of Acts, p.120)

8:26 this is desert: All can see that the reference may be to Gaza, rather than to one of two roads which is designated 'desert'. And Strabo is cited in confirmation of the former thought, which seems to have been the opinion of the A.V. if not of the Revisers though both might be understood of the way as easily as of the town. Not so Mr. T. S. Green, who renders the clause, 'This road is a lone one'. (Exp. of Acts, p.121)

8:27,28,30,31,33 treasures Λ . . . chariot Λ . . . Isaiah Λ . . . guide Λ . . . Λ humiliation . . . Λ generation: \aleph A^{ms} C^{pm} D^{pm} followed by the Vulg. and the Sah. omit ὅς (27) though almost all others seem to insert it. It is one of those readings which affect the sense infinitesimally, yet as to which much might be argued on either side. So with other variations in vers. 28, 30, 31, 33, where the numeral is put. (Exp. of Acts, p.121)

8:28 chariot Λ : [See note to 8:27]

8:30 Isaiah Λ : [See note to 8:27]

8:31 guide Λ : [See note to 8:27]

8:32-33 [both verses]: The difference in the language from the Old Testament in our hands is due to the Septuagint, or Greek Version then in common use, and especially among the Egyptians and others. The sense remains substantially the same. (Exp. of Acts, p.123)

8:33 Λ humiliation . . . Λ generation: [See notes to 8:27 and 8:32]

8:37 [whole verse]: The great authorities \aleph ABCHLP, with more than eighty cursives, the most ancient Latin copies, Pesh-Syr. Sah. Memph., excepting Laud's MS. 35, do not read ver. 37, which seems from internal evidence also to be spurious. For 'the Son of God' would have been a wonderful step in advance, as we see really in Saul, ch. 9:20, but here as decidedly out of keeping with the Ethiopian's ignorance, as with the development of the history. It was an early interpolation; and we need not wonder that those capable of the deed failed in spiritual apprehension of the truth, and overshot the mark. (Exp. of Acts, p.121)

[whole verse]: Remember that verse 37 is only an imaginary conversation between him and Philip. The man just now so ignorant is not the channel that God was about to use for bringing out the remarkable confession that is introduced prematurely here. It was reserved for another of whom we shall read in the next chapter. This scene does show the stranger discovering the predicted Messiah in Jesus of Nazareth — the Messiah suffering, no doubt, but accomplishing atonement. Certainly the Ethiopian received the truth; but verse 37 had better be passed by in your minds, at least in this connexion. All who are informed in these matters are aware that the best authorities reject the entire verse. (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist., and Rev., p.55-6)

[whole verse]: For it is certain and commonly acknowledged that Acts 8:37 is spurious. There at least Philip is supposed to ask of the Ethiopian treasurer a confession of his faith, which the latter renders. But all this must be given up as a gloss of an imaginary kind, and not really in the ancient MSS. It was probably a marginal note which crept into the text by a later scribe who fancied it to be part of the original. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.151-2)

[whole verse]: [Q. I have seen it stated that "the whole of Acts 8:37, 'If thou believest with all,' &c., is universally pronounced by Biblists as an interpolation. It exists in only one Greek MS., having no place in the other MSS. It is marked in our Greek Text as spurious, is omitted from some, and never ought to have had a place in our English Bible." G.T.A.]

A. The verse exists in Laud's Uncial MS., now in the Bodleian, in Bede's Greek (unless it be the same copy), in about twenty cursives, as well as some versions. Nor has it wanted defenders, as Wolf abroad and Whitby at home. At the same time it was certainly not read by much the weightier as well as by the most numerous authorities, and is justly rejected by the best critics, and should disappear from all Bibles. It seems to have been read by several early fathers as Irenæus and Cyprian, if it was not inserted to support the later copies of the Vulgate. Internal evidence is, at least, as decisively against it as external. (Bible Treasury 7:256)

[whole verse]: I must avow my conviction that Acts 8:37 stands on a very different footing [from Mark 16:9ff]. The most ancient MSS. omit the verse; accordingly it is omitted by every critic of weight known to me. Griesbach, Matthiæ. Scholz, Lachmann, and Tischendorf are of one mind as to this, and it must be remembered that it is as wrong to add to as to take from the Word of God. The believer may be assured that God never fails to watch over His own Word, and to supply adequate evidence to such as have grace to receive, and obey, and love it as His. (Christian Annotator 1:181)

[whole verse]: [See notes to 1 John 5:7,8 and Mat. 1:18.]

9:5 he said . . . persecutest Δ : The Text. Rec. on inferior authority adds first 'Lord said', then an interpolation from chap. 26 '(it is) hard for thee to kick against goads', and an exaggerated form in the first half of ver. 6 of the clause of chap. 22:10. (Exp. of Acts, p.126) persecutest Δ : Still stronger is all textual authority against the interpolated clauses in chapter 9:5, 6, from "persecuted" to "Arise," or rather, "But arise;" for in error the conjunction has been omitted. This is a notable instance of Erasmus' temerity, misled by the Vulgate, the source of the corruption, founding the words in part on chapter 22:10; 26:14. The Complutensian text is right, διώκεις ἀλλὰ ἀνάστηθι κ. τ. λ., and so all modern critics, and of course the Revisers. (Bible Treasury 13:335)

9:6 [See note to 9:5]

9:7 sound: The word often means 'voice', as it is rightly translated in verse 4, where Saul clearly heard what the Lord said to him. Here his companions did not hear one word articulately, as we are distinctly told in chapter 22:9. Yet they did hear that something was being uttered. Hence 'sound' appears to be a more accurate representation of the fact intended by the expression. And this is confirmed by a nice difference in the form of the Greek phrase; for the genitive (expressive of partition) is used where the physical effect was incomplete, the accusative where the words were sent home in power. In spiritual reception the genitive is always used; for who among men could be said to have heard in full what the voice of the Son of God imports? (Exp. of Acts, p.128-9)

9:8 nothing: Or, 'no one', which is the reading of most authorities, some of them ancient and good, though \aleph A^m B Vulg. Syrr. Sah., et al., give the broader sense of the neuter. It may help some to notice the objective or historical fact in this expression, as compared with the subjective state in the last clause of ver. 7 and the first of verse 9: objective again in the latter part of 9. (Exp. of Acts, p.126)

9:12 in a vision . . . hands: ἐν ὁράματι 'in a vision', though given by most MSS. and Vv. finds no support in \aleph A 61 Vulg. Sah. Memph. Aeth. There are also several changes of order in the words in these verses; and the oldest MSS. incline to the plural form of 'hands', where the Text. Rec. after most has the singular. (Exp. of Acts, p.129)

9:13 heard: The perfect has most MSS., but the more ancient give the aorist. (Exp. of Acts, p.129)

9:15 both: τε 'both' \aleph ABCE, eight cursives, et al., but τῶν is wrongly added by B C^m. (Exp. of Acts, p.129)

9:18 Δ and: 'Forthwith' is here added in Text. Rec., but very high authority excludes the word, which is needless. (Exp. of Acts, p.130)

9:19 he: The Text. Rec. on inferior authority adds 'Saul'. (Exp. of Acts, p.133)

9:20 Jesus: It is 'Jesus' in \aleph ABCE, sixteen cursives, Vulg. Syrr. Memph., et al. One of the Aeth. has 'Jesus' only, the other 'Jesus Christ'. . . . The reader will observe that for 'Christ' in the Authorized Version after the Text. Rec. of verse 20 is here substituted 'Jesus', as it stands in the best authorities, followed by the Revised Version and by others founded on carefully collated authorities. It is not improbable that the later copies which introduced the error may have been swayed by ignorant considerations of a quasi-Christian sort, unless it were a mere slip of memory which crept in and got perpetuated among those who understood not the difficulties and wants of such Jews as were addressed. To preach to them 'the Christ' or Messiah as the Son of God would have served no adequate purpose and have met with little, if any, opposition. They would have all allowed it in terms, even if none really entered into its full import. But the momentous truth Saul affirmed was as to Jesus, Jesus of Nazareth: and that He is the Son of God. What could be graver to a Jew? (Exp. of Acts, p.133,135)

Jesus: But the Complutensian is as wrong as Erasmus, and the rest who follow the inferior MSS in giving "Christ" rather than Jesus (\aleph A B C E, fifteen cursives, Vulg. Syrr., Sah., Memph., Theb., Armen., Aeth. &c.) which the Revisers follow. (Bible Treasury 13:335)

9:21 had: Most copies but not the best have the perfect in ver. 21. (Exp. of Acts, p.133)

9:22 the: Only κ^m B omit the article in ver. 22. Other minute differences may be left. (Exp. of Acts, p.133)

9:24 also: The Text. Rec. has παρετήρουν τε but the best witnesses give παρετηροῦντο δὲ καὶ and so the chief modern editors. (Exp. of Acts, p.136)

9:25 the: The oldest copies, with ancient Latin copies, have the strange reading 'his' disciples, which appears to be as easy a slip as out of keeping with the account. (Exp. of Acts, p.136)

9:28 at: εις κ ABCELP, et al., ἐν H., Syrr. Pst. & Hcl., Arm. \mathfrak{A} ethiop. (Exp. of Acts, p.141)

9:29 Λ preaching: κ ABC Fuld, Arm., et al., omit the copulative: EHLP Vulg. Syrr. Cop., et al., insert. (Exp. of Acts, p.141)

Lord Λ : T.R. with κ^m HLP, et al., add Ἰησοῦ, but κ^m ABE and Versions omit; Ἰησοῦ only, is read by C, Syr. Pst. (Exp. of Acts, p.141)

Hellenists: A is alone of the uncials in reading Ἕλληνας, all others giving Ἑλληνιστάς. . . It is needless to dwell on the error whether of old MS. or of ancient version, which makes the apostle speak and dispute at this early day with the 'Greeks' in Jerusalem. In fact it was with the same class which furnished 'the seven' who had been set over the daily ministration; of whom Stephen and Philip had been so highly honoured also in the word (Acts 6:1-5). (Exp. of Acts, p.141-3)

9:31 assembly: The singular is read by κ ABC Vulg. Syr. Pst., Sah. Cop. Arm. \mathfrak{A} ethiop, Erp Arab., et al., as against the plural of the Text. Rec. HLP Syr. Hcl (and E, ἐκκλησίαι πισται). (Exp. of Acts, p.143) assembly: The external authority is very decidedly for the singular against the plural. Thus all the first-rate Uncials, the Sinai, Vatican, Alexandrian, and Palimpsest of Paris, supported by some of the best cursives and all the best ancient versions, oppose the vulgar reading. . . . One hundred and fifty years ago, Dr. E. Wells, in his "Help for the more easy and clear understanding of the Scriptures" (Oxford, 1718), not only adopted the singular in his Greek text and his English paraphrase, but pointed out in his Annotations the great weakness of the argument drawn by dissenters from the plural ἐκκλησίαι, as if it favoured their system of separate churches. . . . The common text and translations have "the churches;" but I believe that this faulty form crept in here, because the sense of the oneness of the church so speedily passed away. (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist., and Rev., p.63-4) assembly: By the way, in passing, I would remark that Acts 9:31 has its force impaired, to say the least, in the common Greek text and English version. . . . Now the best copies and most ancient versions give "the church," not "the churches." I admit fully there were churches in all these districts; but there is nothing peculiar in this. But that which, I am persuaded, the Spirit of God wrote here, was "the church." Minds were perplexed very early indeed. The idea of the church as a subsisting united society upon the earth is easily lost sight of, particularly when we look at different districts and countries, such as Judæa, and Galilee, and Samaria. The true reading at once leads us back to the substantial unity that belonged to the church, or assembly of God, here below. There might be ever so many assemblies throughout Judæa, and Samaria, and Galilee, but it was the church. I admit that we often hear of the churches of Judæa, and of other countries, as Galatia for instance. No one questions the fact of many different assemblies in these different lands. But then there is another truth which has not been seen for a long while by the great mass of God's children — not only that God set up a body which did not exist before, but that wherever assemblies might be, it was all the assembly. Not only did He constitute the church upon earth, susceptible of daily growth, but while He extended the work, while He formed fresh assemblies in this or that district and country, it was nevertheless one and the same church wherever it might be. This scripture, rightly read, furnishes a strong proof of it; and I will now just add that the best authorities leave no doubt on my mind as to this. The word churches supplanted the church at an early day; and probably it is due to the fact that very soon the copyists, like other people, began to lose sight of the unity which God was establishing among His children upon the earth. (The external authority stands thus. The Alexandrian, the Vatican, the Palimpsest of Paris, and the Sinai MSS. are documents of the highest value, which agree in reading "the church," not "the churches." In this they are supported by the most important cursive extant, now in the British Museum, along with a fair number of others. Of the ancient versions, there is not one of first-rate authority which does not conform to the singular — the Peschito Syriac, Coptic, Sahidic, Vulgate, \mathfrak{A} ethiopic, Armenian, and the Erpenian Arabic. The most ancient Uncial which gives the plural form is that of Laud, in the Bodleian Library, of about the sixth or seventh century, supported by two others of the ninth century, with the mass of cursives, the Philoxenian Syriac, and an Arabic version. But even here it is to be remarked that the weightiest, or Laudean copy, is unquestionably wrong in reading "all the churches;" and the others may have been influenced by Acts 16:5. It is certainly easier to suppose that the less usual form might have been changed by scribes to a common type, which the crowd of juniors escaped. Ordinarily, the tendency runs in a direction exactly opposite.) It is so much more natural to conceive merely of distinct churches, than to take in the precious truth of the church wherever it is found upon the face of the earth. This may have led to assimilating the true phrase to another and more familiar one, especially when the sense of unity decayed and disappeared. (Lect. on the Church, p.85-7) assembly: . . . the uncial MSS. E H L P with the great mass of cursives, two ancient versions, and some Greek and Latin fathers, oppose κ A B C, some dozen cursives, most of the very ancient versions and several ecclesiastical writers. For it is my judgment that "the church," as it has the best and oldest testimony, so also ought to be frankly accepted as the true reading. It was probably changed by scribes, who were struck by its peculiarity and did not understand its force, into conformity with Acts 16:5, where the plural is as right as here it seems weaker than the singular. "The church, then, throughout (καθ' with the genitive) the whole of Judea and Galilee and Samaria had peace," &c. . . . it is a simple intimation that the church viewed as a whole, wherever it had extended, had peace; and hence it is in sense equivalent to the church of God in its entirety here below. For at that time, though there may have been individual members disseminated more widely, gathering to Christ's name as yet was unknown beyond the lands here defined. (Bible Treasury 14:205) assembly: . . . a charge which will surprise every man of real learning among the Anglicans as well as anywhere else in Christendom. "And when Scripture does not use the exact words that suit his theory, he [Mr. Kelly] undertakes, with the most astounding presumption, to speak for the Holy Ghost and says (referring to the expression, Acts 9:31, 'Then had the churches rest'), 'But that which I am persuaded the Holy Ghost wrote here, was the Church.' The Holy Ghost is continually made answerable for what Mr. K. asserts, which to us sounds very much like profaneness, not reverence. Whether it be so, let others judge." Others will judge (and this, were they the bitterest enemies of "the Brethren") that the Christian Observer has committed itself here to unwarrantable abuse, growing out of an ignorance of New Testament criticism which is in the highest degree disgraceful to a man who presumes to write on such subjects, and to the party which could produce and reproduce such flippant floundering about God's word. The candid reader is requested to examine the "Six Lectures on Fundamental Truths," pp. 85, 86. Is it true that the author undertakes to speak for the Holy Ghost when Scripture does not suit? It is a baseless calumny; and the writer must be totally incompetent to understand the grounds on which the decision of such a point turns. For there is an ample statement of the overwhelming ancient authority of manuscripts and versions, which reject the vulgar "churches" as not Scripture, and read ἐκκλησία, "Church" as the exact word spoken by the Holy Ghost. (Bible Treasury 6:158) assembly: [The RV follows] "church" rather than "churches" in verse 31, the Compluten. giving the plural form in Greek, the singular in Latin. (Bible Treasury 13:335)

the: The article is omitted by A, though read by all others. (Exp. of Acts, p.143)

9:34 [the]: ⲛ B^{pm}. C with half a dozen cursives, et al. omit the article which is supported by the great mass of copies. (Exp. of Acts, p.143)

9:35 the Sharon: I presume the Revisers meant to distinguish between the town and the district by 'at Lydda and in Sharon'. (Exp. of Acts, p.143)

the Sharon: Further, though Calvin lays it down confidently that the Sharon (or Assaron, as he calls it) was a city hard by, and slights Jerome's thought that thereby is meant the plain lying between Cæsarea and Joppa, there is no good reason to doubt that the early translator is right, not the reformer. (So HLP and many cursives, manuscripts which probably point to the Hebrew article. Cf. Josh. 12:18 (Lasharon). The Sinaitic indeed erroneously omits the article before the word, but it is added as a correction.) And the minute accuracy of the Greek text affords a striking evidence to the reader in the article prefixed to 'Sharon', not to Lydda. So invariably is it in the Hebrew, where the same district is referred to (1 Chron. 27:29; Cant. 2:1; Isa. 33:9; 35:2; 65:10); whereas the article is dropped where the same name is applied to a different locality on the other side of Jordan and not improbably a town of the Gadites. 'The Sharon' lay north of another district, 'the Sephelah', which in our Version has fared worse than 'the Sharon' in having been quite stripped of its character as a proper name and reduced to 'the vale' and other vague terms. (Exp. of Acts, p.145) turned: It may be added that Kühnöl has as utterly failed in the grammar as in the exegesis, when he would have this last passage to mean merely that all the Christians (i.e., all those who had turned to the Lord) saw Æneas restored to health. For though the aorist may occasionally bear or require a pluperfect force in English, in the sentence before us such a rendering is not only uncalled for but destroys the power and dignity of the narrative; whereas the ordinary meaning in the simplest way maintains all that could be desired, crowning the miracle wrought, with a worthy and blessed spiritual result, instead of a close so frigid and feeble as to sink below not scripture only but any writing whatever. Grammatically too the indefinite relative is just the word proper to introduce the statement of a moral nature or character. (Exp. of Acts, p.144-145)

9:36 which being interpreted is called Dorcas (Gazelle): Will it be believed that a professed and not unlearned translator of the New Testament dared thus to render the opening verse: 'Moreover, there was among the disciples at Joppa a woman named Tabitha, who was always doing good works and giving alms'? I cite from Gilbert Wakefield's second edition ii. 27, though I cannot say (not having its predecessor) whether this is one of its alleged 'improvements' or a mere reproduction of the first. It is the note (on page 375) which is so offensive: — 'I have left out the impertinent explanation in this verse, because, even if no interpolation, it must be either ridiculous or unintelligible in a translation.' It is the more shameless from one who allows himself no such audacity in his rendering (as among many like passages) of John

1:38, 41, 42, with all three of which he deals fairly. Now what is the fact in our case? It is the true Aramaic form of that time and country; so Gamaliel's maid was called; and Josephus (B. J. iv. iii. 5) gives as Luke does the same corresponding Greek name to the mother of a certain truculent John, as the English reader can see in Dr. Traill's Tr. ii. 64. The Hebrew word that answers to it means 'beauty'; but it is commonly used of a 'gazelle', 'hart', or 'roe', as in Deut.; 2 Sam.; Song of Solomon. So in our own tongue men and women are called Buck, Doe, Roe, Stag, and the like. In Lucret. iv. 1154 it occurs as a term of endearment. Where is the 'impertinence' of such an explanation? Only in the empty, presumptuous, and profane mind of Mr. Wakefield. I take the trouble of refuting it, as a caution to the misinformed not to be imposed on by the unconscious impiety of such as believe not the inspired character of Holy Writ. Whenever they assail that word, it would be easy to expose their self-sufficient folly. (Exp. of Acts, p.146-7)

9:37 an: Lachmann, following ACE (and many cursives), reads 'the'; but the best and most ancient copies confirm the common reading with all other editors. (Exp. of Acts, p.146)

9:38 Delay not: The ancient copies give the entreaty more graphically than the Text. Rec. (Exp. of Acts, p.146)

Delay not: The marginal reading (ver. 38) of the Authorized Version ('be grieved') is in no way suitable as a rendering here, though habitually used in classical authors for the hesitation of shame, pity, or alarm. They were led to retain it in the margin through their respect for Tyndale, followed by Cranmer. The Geneva V. discarded it rightly. The Rhemites give 'Be not loth', though Wiclif had translated correctly, as they adhered servilely to the Vulgate. Num. 22:16; Judg. 18:9 are unquestionable precedents in the LXX., and so Josephus, Ant. ii. 7. (Exp. of Acts, p.147)

9:40 arise ⲕ: Some of old in east and west and south have ventured to add 'In the name of [our Lord] Jesus Christ'. (So in the Thebaic, Armenian, Philox. Syriac; Cyprian, et al.) If they meant honour, they were guilty of a heinous wrong. 'Add thou not unto His words.' The inspiring Spirit has given us the truth perfectly. Enough to know that Peter knelt down and prayed, and turning to the body, said, Tabitha, arise. Spoil not the word of God, O man, unworthy of the name of a believer, unworthy of the task of a translator, or of an expositor, by thy unhallowed glosses. His prayer proved to Whom He looked and on Whom He leaned; but we may not take from His words in chapter 3:6, nor add to them in 9:40, nor assimilate either one or other to 9:34. Let us be assured that each is as God wrote it, and therefore as each should be: our place is to receive humbly, believe confidently, and enjoy to the uttermost. (Exp. of Acts, p.147-8)

10:2 ⲕ giving: τε 'both' is in Text. Rec. which LP support with most cursives, et al., but the most ancient and best reject. (Exp. of Acts, p.150)

10:3 about: . . . the very best manuscripts, the Sinai, Alexandrian, Vatican, Palimpsest of Paris, and the Laudian of Oxford, with more than twenty cursives and other authorities, give ὡσεὶ περὶ ὧραν ἐνάτην, and so it is edited by Alford, Lachmann, Tregelles, as well as Tischendorf in his most recent (8th) edition. (Lect. on Revelation, xxvi.)

about: [See note to Rev. 17:12]

10:5 [one]: Authorities are divided, so that 'one' is here hardly certain. (Exp. of Acts, p.150)

10:11 descending ⲕ: Text. Rec. (supported by LP and most cursives) adds 'upon him' — I suppose from Matt. 3:16, Mark 1:10, Luke 3:22, John 1:32, 33, and, very strangely, contrary to the best MSS., Versions, et al. (Exp. of Acts, p.152)

10:12 [the]: The article here is doubtful, though its insertion in Text. Rec. has ancient authority as well as numbers. (Exp. of Acts, p.152)

10:16 straightway: The best MSS., et al., sustain 'straightway' as against the Text. Rec. which gives 'again'. (Exp. of Acts, p.152)

10:17 perplexed in himself: Such is the true construction, not 'in himself' separated from the verb, as by G. Wakefield and Valckenaer (like the Codex Bezae). (Exp. of Acts, p.153)

10:30 fasting and: In chapter 10 the most remarkable change [in the RV] seems the omission of "and fasting" in verse 30, the most ancient MSS and Versions omitting the words, the mass sustaining them. (Bible Treasury 13:335)

10:36 of all: Perhaps 'of all things'. The two accusatives λόγον and ῥῆμα are dependent on the verb διδάτε, 'ye know', the second being in apposition with the first. (Exp. of Acts, p.157)

10:39 [are]. . . also: 'Are' is wanting in the best copies, which read 'also' omitted in the Text. Rec. 'We' here is emphatic, contradistinguished from the 'ye', also emphatic, in ver. 37. (Exp. of Acts, p.157)

10:41 chosen: [see note to Mk. 3:14]

10:48 ^Λ Jesus: The older MSS, and Versions omit 'the Lord'; some give 'the Lord', only; a few supply both. (Exp. of Acts, p.160)

11:12 doubting nothing: [The RV has] a very questionable adoption, "making no distinction" μηδὲν διακρίναι (οὐδὲν διέκρινε is the phrase for this in chapter 15:9.) which rests on ^κcorr. A B and half-a-dozen cursives. The primary reading of the Sinait. with Laud's and a few cursives is μ. διακρίνοντα, but the bulk of MSS with all the versions support μ. διακρινόμενος, as in chapter 10:20 where the MSS are not at all at variance. D and Syr^p omit the words, as Griesbach thought probable and Alford and Green certain. (Bible Treasury 13:335)

11:17 we: . . . because they believed on the Lord Jesus Christ (not τοῖς π. "who believed," as in our version.) (Christian Annotator 1:321)

11:20 Greeks also: The simple participle is right, not the compounded as in Text. Rec. which drops 'also' and reads Ἑλληνοστὰς after BD^{corr}.EHL^p and most, the Sinaitic giving the strange blunder of 'evangelists' as its primary reading. . . .

It is well known that large and good MS. authority supports the reading of the common text, Hellenists, Grecians, or Greek-speaking Jews. But the sense afforded by ^κcorr AD^{pm}, and, if not all the ancient versions, by the Armenian, is made decisive by the requirements of the truth stated. For in Jerusalem itself before the scattering not only were 'Grecians' objects of testimony as well as other Jews, but notoriously the murmuring was of that portion against the Hebrews, or native Jews who spoke Aramaic. Nay more, all 'the seven' chosen to allay the unworthy outbreak, and to relieve the apostles from a work that hindered for an incomparably better, bore Hellenistic names; and one of them was expressly from Antioch. Again, it is recorded in Acts 9:29 how Saul of Tarsus spoke and disputed against these Hellenists in Jerusalem. Thus there would be nothing new or peculiar in similar speech at Antioch; whereas it is declared here that at first none but Jews were addressed, and afterwards 'the Greeks also', and this effectively under the good hand of the Lord. Now 'Hebrew' stands over against 'Hellenist', but not 'Jew', which includes both. So that 'Jew' can only be confronted by 'Greek', not by 'Hellenists', which falls under that category. The point therefore is so far from immaterial, that 'Greeks' can alone bear rigid or intelligent investigation, and at once conveys a new and important fact. . . . (No wonder that with his usual tact Abp. Ussher (Works, xi.

24) accepted the reading, even though the Vatican supports that which prevails among the more modern copies, and the Fathers seem to vacillate with their too frequent lack of discernment. The effort of Wetstein, et al., fails to make out that Ἑλληνοσταί means Gentiles, instead of Greek-speaking or foreign Jews, its real import. Equally vain (as founded on the common mis-reading), is the reasoning of Saumaise, Wolf, et al., that they were Gentiles but proselytes to Judaism. It may be well to note that while in the New Testament the Authorized Version distinguishes 'Grecian' (= Hellenist) from 'Greek', in the Old Testament (Joel 3:6) the former is used for the latter where the LXX. properly have τῶν Ἑλλήνων. Kühnöl is quite mistaken in referring ἐξ αὐτῶν (ver. 20) not to the scattered preachers but to the Jews just named. (Exp. of Acts, p.166, 168-9)

Greeks: The word "Grecians" does not mean "Greeks," but rather Greek-speaking Jews; to whom the gospel had been preached long before, as the cases of Stephen, for instance, and Philip clearly testify. Chapter 6 shows us the party in question murmuring. They were in the church already. But the point here is lost in our English version. There is a mistake, not only in our vernacular Bible, but also in the common Greek text which is equally faulty as the authorized version. The true text, which has sufficient if not the most ancient authority, tells us that they spoke to Greeks or Gentiles. (The copyists of old seem to have confounded in writing, as the Latin and most other ancient translators did in rendering, Ἑλληνοστὰς (Hellenists), here and elsewhere. Thus it might seem incredible, if it were not a notorious fact, that the only two known manuscripts in favor of that which is here most certainly requisite are the Alexandrian and the Cambridge Graeco-Latin of Beza. The Vatican and all others, uncial and cursive (as far as collated and known), support the error. Of the fathers, Eusebius among the Greek, and Cassiodorus among the Latins, are in favor of the true; others are in strange conflict, their text having the wrong reading (perhaps through mistaken scribes), and their comment correcting it. The reading of the Sinai MS. (εὐαγγελιστὰς) is a mere blunder, not uncommon in that most ancient but not very accurate document, arising from confusion through a contiguous word; it would give the sense of "unto the preachers, preaching the Lord Jesus. But the correction confirms the true reading. . . . But it is still more strange as evidence of the slipshod criticism of the Reformers that Beza, who was more of a scholar than his predecessors, uniformly edits Ἑλληνοστὰς, and writes a blundering note to the effect that it is here used in the sense of Ἑλληνας. And yet he had in his possession that famous Graeco-Latin Uncial (D) which he presented to the University of Cambridge in 1581, which MS. supports the Alexandrian.) (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist. and Rev., p.75-6)

Greeks: They went to various parts and preached, not merely to "the Grecians" as they are called in our New Testament, but to the Greeks. The New Testament distinguishes between Greeks and Grecians, only we must remember that in this verse, what is called Grecians ought to be Greeks. The "Grecians" were Greek-speaking Jews. The "Greeks" were Gentiles, not Jews; and the point here was not that they preached to the Grecians — which was no new thing, and which had been done long before — but they preached to the Greeks. If you look at any proper version — any correct version of the New Testament — you will find it is Greeks here and not Grecians. (Bible Treasury N9:27, see also Bible Treasury 13:335)

11:21 beleieved and turned: ^κAB and three cursives give 'that believed turned'. (Exp. of Acts, p.166)

11:22,25,26 Barnabas ^Λ . . . he . . . finding ^Λ . . . him: High authorities omit 'to go through', and 'Barnabas' in ver. 25, also the word 'him' (one or both) in vers. 26. (Exp. of Acts, p.166)

11:25 he: [See note to 11:22]

11:26 finding Λ . . . him: [See note to 11:22]

even: 'Even' is omitted in Text. Rec. (Exp. of Acts, p.166) in: 'In' seems not more literal than exact and full. 'With' does not convey the intimacy of their relation, themselves a part of the assembly: it might rather imply a place less close. (Exp. of Acts, p.169) called: It is rather bold of Mr. Myers (Norrisian Prize Essay, 1832, p.16, note) to say as an ascertained fact that 'the apostles gave heathen converts this name'. The form of the Greek verb is active, no doubt; but what of its real force? The N. T. usage in the sense here required is limited to the occurrence of the future in Romans 7:3, which is beyond controversy opposed directly to the assumption. There it means 'shall be called' or 'get the name of' and so it is here. How much more sober is Abp. Ussher on the fact: 'Quod nomen, Latina non Graeca a Christo deflexum, a Romanis Antiochiae tum agentibus impositum illis fuisse videatur'. Where a divine communication is intended, the form is different. The classic use for managing, and hence speaking of, business, does not occur in the New Testament, though one can see how from this people would get a name, and at length a name irrespective of their business. (Exp. of Acts, p.170)

11:28 Claudius Λ : 'Caesar' is added in Text. Rec. (Exp. of Acts, p.170)

12:3 the: Some high authorities (\aleph BHLP, et al.) omit the article. (Exp. of Acts, p.172)

12:5 earnestly . . . concerning: The adjective form is most common in the MSS., as is 'for'. (Exp. of Acts, p.172)

12:9 followed Λ : Text. Rec. adds 'him', which the most ancient authorities do not express. (Exp. of Acts, p.172)

12:13 he: The more recent copies say 'Peter'. (Exp. of Acts, p.172)

12:20 he: 'Herod' is read in Text. Rec. after most. (Exp. of Acts, p.175)

12:21 throne: It is literally the $\beta\eta\mu\alpha$ elsewhere in the Authorized Version translated 'judgment seat', or suggestus, for oratory, formal audience, or honourable reception, as well as for judicial investigation. (Exp. of Acts, p.175)

13:1 Λ prophets: \aleph ABD, more than six cursives, et al., and almost all the ancient Versions do not read $\tauινες$ 'some', or 'certain', as in the majority. (Exp. of Acts, p.178)

Λ prophets: The best authorities omit $\tauινες$ "certain"; and there is no authority whatever for the insertion of "as" in the Authorized Version. Thus the vague impression is removed, that there were other teachers there unnamed. There were really three besides Barnabas and Saul. ("Christian Ministry," Pamphlets, p.206)

13:2 Λ Barnabas and Λ : Text. Rec. has $\tau\epsilon$ with slight authority, but $\tau\acute{o}\nu$ before $\Sigma\alpha\tilde{\upsilon}\lambda\omicron\nu$ has large support. (Exp. of Acts, p.178)

13:3 let them go: Would it not be better [in the RV] to have distinguished between "sent" in verses 3 and 4? The first is only let go, the second is really "sent forth," which when not distinguished might lead to false inferences in clerical minds. (Bible Treasury 13:336)

13:6 whole: $\delta\lambda\eta\nu$ is authenticated by the best authority, though omitted in Text. Rec. with most MSS. (Exp. of Acts, p.178)

13:9 Spirit Λ : Text. Rec. in ver. 9 follows many in giving the copulative. (Exp. of Acts, p.178)

13:12 pro-consul: not 'deputy' or legate, as in the Authorized Version. . . . Wiclif and the Rhemish, guided by the Vulgate, say 'pro-consul'; Tyndale, Cranmer, and the Geneva Version give the vague 'ruler of the country'. It is of the more moment to be exact, as Cyprus under the Romans had been imperial, and hence governed by a pro-

praetor; but not long before it had been handed over by Augustus to the people, which involved government by a pro-consul, $\alpha\nu\theta\upsilon\pi\alpha\tau\omicron\varsigma$ instead of the former $\alpha\nu\tau\iota\sigma\tau\rho\alpha\tau\eta\lambda\omicron\varsigma$. (Exp. of Acts, p.181)

13:18 bore them nurse-like: The reader will notice the beautiful expression of verse 18 weakened in the more favourite ancient MSS. \aleph BC^{corr}:DHLP, et al., but happily preserved in AC^{pm}E, as well as in most of the ancient versions, as it seems truest to the Hebrew in Deut. 1:31 which the apostle, beyond just doubt, had in view. Here Tregelles and Westcott and Hort part from most moderns as well as others of weight. (As usual, the note of the Cambridge Editors is ingenious, so much so as to overshoot the mark. But to bear the sense of 'carry' is not the same as 'to be patient with,' and both Deuteronomy and the apostle are dwelling on God's favour to His people, rather than on their bad manners, as Chrysostom long ago remarked.) (Exp. of Acts, p.185) bore them nurse-like: Still stranger [in the RV] is the adoption with Tregelles of $\epsilon\tau\rho\phi\omicron\phi\omicron\rho\eta\sigma\epsilon\nu$ which is the vulgar or Stephano-Elizevirian text and has high authority (\aleph B &c.) with the great mass of cursives and other witnesses. $\epsilon\tau\rho\phi\omicron$ has not only A C^{pm} E and some cursives and almost all the ancient versions save the Vulgate, but Deuteronomy 1:31 in Hebrew and the LXX (save a few copies of the latter), the intrinsic sense being in my judgment beyond comparison in its favour: and so Alford, Bloomfield, Griesbach, Green, Lachmann, Mill, Scholz, Tischendorf, Wells, and Wordsworth. Bengel too even thinks that the other word means the same thing, an alternative only in form, the context pointing to the sense of Deuteronomy 1 and Numbers 12, especially as Jehovah, whatever His grace, chastised their manners in the wilderness as is written for our admonition. (Bible Treasury 13:336) bore them nurse-like: [The American correctors to the RV] are, however, in my opinion quite right in adopting the critical reading $\epsilon\tau\rho\phi\omicron$, instead of the received $\epsilon\tau\rho\phi\iota$ which seems a mere though early blunder of \aleph B and most others, but not of A C^{pm} E, some good cursives and all the ancient versions save the Vulgate. It is pleasant therefore to find Alford, Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles, Wordsworth, supporting Griesbach, Mill, &c. Bengel in his Gnomon labours elaborately to show that, though the orthography differs, the notion is the same. It is painful to see the error, which Deut. 1 refutes, perpetuated in the Revision [of 1881]. This was probably due to Drs. W. and H. (Bible Treasury 14:351)

13:19 in: In verses 19, 20 there is a notable difference from the common words. It is not giving by lot which is the point, though in itself true, as (by the least and lowest possible testimony) in the received text, but causing them to inherit their land. But here there is a more united front among the editors of late; for, excepting Dean Alford, almost all accept \aleph ABC, et al., and the ancient versions save the Syrr. and Aeth. This connects the date of 'about 450 years' with the accomplishment of the promised inheritance (under law, which made nothing perfect). The common text makes it the duration of the judges.

But it appears to me that the dative of epoch suits the sense of the critical text as distinctly as it disagrees with the common one. Both before and after this phrase the accusative is given to express a term of continuance, here only the dative. Now if the idea intended were the supply of judges for 450 years, the accusative would here also be the natural construction. At any rate, it is a date within which a certain action occurred, and not duration as in the other cases. If the oldest vouchers be accepted, it was in about 450 years that Israel was made to inherit this land, after the promise to 'our fathers', i.e., from the birth of Isaac as the starting-point. Indeed so Junius and others take the common reading, not as the space for which judges were given, but in which God had fulfilled His promise at least provisionally, till judges were given in the low estate of His people. It cannot therefore be assumed that Paul assigns a duration of 450 years to the judges, and so invalidates the date (in 1 Kings 6:1) of 480 years from the Exodus to the founding of Solomon's temple. More than one period of considerable duration has been added to the space of the Judges which really fell within other assigned dates. But it suffices here to note that the extended space for judges drawn from the verses before us is illegitimate. Ussher (Works xii. 70; xiv. 340) firmly holds to the integrity of both the Hebrew and the Greek in both these scriptures, rejecting the bold conjectures of Luther and others as wholly needless and of course improper. (Exp. of Acts, p.185-6) in: [Q. What is the difference in the use of the dative and accusative of time, as in Acts 13:20, &c.? B.]

A. When the dative is used for time, it is always viewed as one whole point or object; when the accusative, it is a space during which. Thus, taking the common reading, judges characterized the period of 450 years, as we hear of them during forty years in the desert. (Ver. 18) So ικανῶ χρόνῳ in Acts 8:11, and Romans 16:24. Thus τρίτῃ ἡμέρᾳ and τρίτην ἡμέραν would not have the same force, though in result the sense would be the same. In the first phrase I should think of that one day so characterized. With τρίτην ἡμ. I think of two days elapsed before. In a word the accusative is duration, as the dative is epoch, though in sense running often into one another. Thus, according to the common reading of the dative, in Acts 13:20, the statement would not be during 450 years, but up to, as far as, (i.e., counting from the end of the desert). Thus Joshua, elders, and Cushanrishathaim would have to be deducted — say some forty-five years. And the chronology is in no way changed. But then the reading of the more ancient authorities gives a very different sense. (Bible Treasury 7:272) in: though the critical reading of verses 19, 20, is that of the Revisers, they involve themselves in an ungrammatical rendering of ὥς ἔτεσιν κ.τ.λ. as if it were ὥς ἔτη “for about four hundred and fifty years,” instead of “in about four hundred and fifty years.” The distinctive use of the dative and accusative in questions of time should not be overlooked in the version, as it is not in the context. (Bible Treasury 13:336)

13:23 bring: ‘Raised up’, as in the Text. Rec. supported by CD and many other authorities, has a weight far below what I adopt, and was due probably to the language of the preceding verse. (Exp. of Acts, p.186)

13:25 What suppose ye that I am? I am not: Y.E.N.E. will perhaps be gratified to hear that Dr. Tischendorf has edited this verse as he suggests [i.e. “Whom ye think I am, I am not.”], Τίνα με ὑπονοεῖτε εἶναι, οὐκ εἰμὶ ἐγώ. Luther had evidently so taken the clause, “Ich bin nicht der, dafür ihr mich haltet,” following the Latin, probably. Raphelius and Wolf contended, one for, and the other against, this construction: so that I think your Querist may be assured that the Greek will bear it, though it is somewhat unusual. There can be no doubt that in profane authors τίς is sometimes used for δοσις in oratio obliqua after verbs expressive of a doubt, question, or the like, and this not merely with the optative, but where the verb of the indirect question passes into the indicative. Compare Xen.An.iii.3-18, ed. Schneider. Tischendorf also gives τίς σοφός, αὐτῷ προσκολληθήτηι (Sap.Sir.vi.34), while Valpy has τίς σοφός, κ.τ.λ. from the edition of Holmes and Bos. Without pretending what is happily an insignificant question, for the sense either way is substantially alike, I do not go too far in concluding that the interrogative force is not so universal but that a relative sense is possible. (Christian Annotator 2:352)

13:26 us: ‘Us’ ABD, et al. The mass support ‘you’; but ‘us’ includes the witnesses benignly. The ‘you’ just before may have got repeated. (Exp. of Acts, p.187)

13:31 now: The common text with more than one excellent MS. of antiquity omits the adverb, though it is really emphatic and important. . . . ‘Now’ is attested by AC, more than twenty cursives, and almost all the ancient versions. Hence even Tregelles goes with modern critics generally, and only Westcott and Hort bracket the word, presumably in deference to the Vatican. (Exp. of Acts, p.188)

13:33,35 their . . . second . . . wherefore: ‘To our children’ is the strange reading of the most ancient authorities. So the ‘first’ psalm (D, et al.) ver. 33; but this may be due to Jewish arrangement combining Pss. 1 and 2 in one; and ‘because’ for ‘wherefore’ in ver. 35. (Exp. of Acts, p.189)

13:33 raised up: Acts 3:22, 26; 7:37 are clear cases of this usage of ‘raised up’ in the same Book; so that the Authorized Version in the wake of Tyndale is not safely to be defended in going out of the way to insinuate resurrection into verse 33. ‘Raised up’ is correct; ‘raised again’, might have been said, if the text had certainly pointed, as it does not really at all, to the resurrection. But ‘raised up again’ is unjustifiable. In any case the compound can only yield either ‘up’ or ‘again’, not both; and here we have seen on good and cogent grounds that ‘up’ is right, ‘again’ inadmissible, because rising from the dead is not intended in verse 33. (Exp. of Acts, p.190) raised up: It is not warrantable to say “raised up Jesus again.” You may read it either “raised up Jesus,” or “raised Jesus again,” but you cannot give both. The word cannot at the same time include both, though it may, in certain cases, according to the context, mean either. The proper rendering here is “raised up Jesus.” (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist. and Rev., p.101) raised up: [The RV] rightly drop[s] “again” in verse 33, as the participle cannot mean “up” and “again,” though it may mean either; (Bible Treasury 13:336)

13:34 Λ no more: It has also been noticed that the addition of ‘now’ in the English Version of verse 34 is not only needless but misleading, as it might imply a previous turn to corruption. Here too Tyndale misled all the public Protestant versions since his day, even to the Revised one. (Exp. of Acts, p.190)

13:34 Λ faithful: [The RV draws] no attention to the peculiarity of δοσις for “holy” or the preceding δοσα. (Bible Treasury 13:336)

13:35 wherefore: [See note to 13:33]

13:39 and . . . Λ Moses’ law: ‘And’ is omitted by the most ancient authorities. Most of the late witnesses add ‘the’ to ‘law of Moses’. (Exp. of Acts, p.189)

13:40 on you: ABD, some cursives, and a few Latin MSS. reject ἐφ’ ὑμᾶς. (Exp. of Acts, p.193)

13:42 Λ kept: Verse 42 has suffered not a little from both copyists and from commentators. The ordinarily received text instead of ‘they’ (αὐτῶν), has, with some cursives, the interpolation ἐκ τῆς συναγωγῆς τῶν Ἰουδαίων, which may have been due to the public lessons of early days, though more common in the passages taken from the historical books than in selections from the Epistles. But this addition, though unauthorized, does not contradict (though it may alter) the sense, like τὰ ἔθνη, ‘the Gentiles’, which is made the subject of the sentence, to the confusion of the passage as a whole, and without the least to commend it in itself. The verse is quite general. . . .

Dr. J. Bennett conceives that the critical reading of verse 42 points to the sense that they (i.e., Paul and Barnabas) entreated that the same things should be spoken to them (again). But this is quite a mistake. The true reading leaves us open to the people’s thus entreating the apostles; which appears to me much more simple and becoming as well as ‘delightful’. Even Calvin, who understands the sense to be that Paul and Barnabas went out while the Jews were yet assembled, holds that they (the apostles) were then requested. . . , though he was misled by the misreading to think it was the Gentiles who made request. But what could have brought 'the Gentiles' to the synagogue on the first sabbath? It is easy to understand that they flocked there on the second; and doubtless this it was and yet more their heed, as well as the free grace proclaimed, which roused the envy of the unhappy Jews. But even this premature introduction of the Gentiles though unfounded does not yield so strange and repulsive a meaning as that Paul and Barnabas (!) entreated that their discourse should be spoken on the next sabbath. That souls struck by the truth might beseech that 'these things', blessed yet so startling, so momentous yet solemn, should be spoken to them again, is very intelligible, as it is the unforced sense of the true text. (Exp. of Acts, p.194-5) following: Tyndale completely missed the point of time intended, for he took εἰς τὸ μετὰ τὸν σάββατον of the intervening week — 'bitwene the Sabboth dayes'. But this was from oversight of the later usage of μετὰ which signifies 'after', not 'between' only, as Kypke, Ott, and others have noticed with illustrations. Calvin was quite wrong therefore in censuring here the Vulgate and Erasmus who were right; and still more is Beza to be blamed, because he was a better scholar than the great theologian he followed, and he ought to have known how thoroughly Josephus, Plutarch, and Clem., Rom. 44 (twice), justify the text of the Authorized Version against the marginal alternative. Dr. J. Lightfoot plainly confirmed it from his vast Rabbinical learning. (Exp. of Acts, p.195)

13:44 next: Again, in the beginning of verse 44 stands the expression on the 'coming' sabbath, vouched by both the most ancient uncials of highest character and the mass of cursives, and so not only adopted by Erasmus, the Complutensian, Colinaeus, R. Stephens, the Elzevirs, but also by Tischendorf (eighth edition), Tregelles, and by Westcott and Hort. On the other hand, at least two of the great uncials with several good cursives testify to the exactly technical word which differs by a letter less, for 'next following', 'ensuing'. Acts 18:21 used to be cited for the former, till the critics omitted the clause; but there is no doubt that the rival reading is a standing usage of the inspired writer (Luke 13:33; Acts 20:15; 21:26), as it is in the language generally. No wonder therefore that Alford, Bengel, Green, Griesbach, Lachmann, Scholz, and Wordsworth accept it as right: an instructive instance, by no means uncommon, where a few copies are more accurate than the weight of both antiquity and number combined. (Exp. of Acts, p.196)

God: Many ancient authorities, as is well known, concur in reading 'the Lord' for 'God'. (Exp. of Acts, p.195)

14:2 disobeyed: It was not a visit from without but the alienation of the Jews that refused God's message on the spot; as is confirmed by the correct form of the word (ἀπειθήσαντες) in the more ancient witnesses as against the Received Text. . . . (E L P and most cursives support the received ἀπειθοῦντες, but the older give ἀπειθήσαντες, a completed act.) (Exp. of Acts, p.198) brethren ^Λ: D E, et al., add at the end of ver. 2, 'but the Lord gave (quickly) peace'. It has no stamp of truth. He was really pleased to give signs and wonders. It was needless here to speak of peace to the believer. (Exp. of Acts, p.198)

14:5 an effort was: But the intent of violence, which had oozed out, brought the testimony to a close: for a plan or start of this kind seems to be the force of what is meant here, rather than an 'assault', as may be inferred safely from the context. Had there been an actual 'rush', there seems little propriety in the words 'becoming aware of' what could not be doubted and made escape hard. Nor does the form of the verb admit of the rendering 'was making'; for the aorist must signify a definite fact instead of anything merely in course, which would be rather the imperfect. (Exp. of Acts, p.199)

14:8 ^Λ lame . . . had walked: 'Being' H L P, et al. (Text. Rec.) but not in the most ancient. The aorist seems best for the last verb of the verse. (Exp. of Acts, p.199)

made whole: The marginal of 14:9 ["saved," RV,] had better be omitted. (Bible Treasury 14:351)

14:9 made whole: The marginal of 14:9 ["saved," RV,] had better be omitted. (Bible Treasury 14:351)

14:10 ^Λ Rise: (Lachmann follows C D E et al., in adding, 'I say to thee, In the name of the Lord Jesus Christ.') . . . The addition to verse 10 . . . was made early to save the appearance of pretension on the part of him who wrought the miracle. The absence of the clause is the instructive lesson that as such words would be unavailing in another mouth (definitely proved long after at Ephesus), so they are by no means called for where all the life and testimony were set on magnifying Christ. There was no legally required formula. Of all men Paul was most conspicuously, as he loved to call himself, the 'bondman of Jesus Christ'; so that in his case it was the less necessary by a formal declaration to disclaim any virtue to heal by his own power or holiness. (Exp. of Acts, p.199-200)

14:14 out: The best MSS. 'out', not 'in' as in the Text. Rec. and most copies. (Exp. of Acts, p.199)

14:15 a: The definite article is probably to be omitted as in the best. (Exp. of Acts, p.199)

14:17 you . . . your: 'You. . .', not 'us. . .' as in Text. Rec. (Exp. of Acts, p.199)

14:21 preaching the gospel . . . unto (2nd) . . . unto (3rd): The best MSS. support εὐαγγελιζόμενοι, εἰς being repeated also. (Exp. of Acts, p.202)

14:23 chose: Naturally the differences in Christendom warp the minds of too many in their impressions of this instructive verse. Jerome, though by no means so extreme as some of the early fathers, interprets the word χειροτονήσαντες (which all the early English Versions as well as the Authorized have rendered 'ordained', Tyndale, Cranmer, and Geneva adding 'by election') of ordination by laying on of hands, as if χειροτονία = χειροθεσία. This, Mr. Humphry rightly treats as untenable, or at least unsupported by any clear example of such a sense.

But we may go farther than Dean Alford, and must affirm that scripture nowhere points to the churches selecting elders by show of hands or in any other way. Indeed the phraseology before us excludes any such thought; for, first, if χειροτονήσαντες necessarily implied any such etymological import here, the meaning must be that Paul and Barnabas chose elders by the method of suffrage. This nobody holds or wishes, but the contrary. And, secondly, this is confirmed yet more abundantly by the pronoun 'for them', which excludes the disciples from their desired part in the election, and distinctly makes the apostles choose the elders for the saints concerned. Of all interpretations, therefore, none is so bad as the amiable compromise that the apostles ordained those whom each church elected. The words simply teach that Paul and Barnabas chose elders for the disciples in each assembly. No doubt the word may mean to stretch out the hand, and this especially in voting; but it had long been used, where no such form could be, to express choice or appointment. And this is certain in the New Testament without going outside it, and in Luke's usus loquendi, as the most prejudiced must allow in Acts 10:41, and here too, unless he contends for Paul and Barnabas holding up their hands in each of these cases. This, however, is not what Congregationalism wants, but that the disciples should thus decide their choice of each elder and of one only in each church; whereas the text declares that the apostles chose elders for them in each assembly: the most distinct and conclusive disproof of popular election which language can convey. (Dr. Bennett says that the more remote antecedent, 'the disciples', may be referred to; which is so certainly wrong that he himself immediately changes this by the suggestion that Luke may have designed to show what no doubt (?) was the fact (!), that the apostles concurred in their election, and held out their hands, along with the disciples (!) in favour of the elected elder.) And if laying on of hands followed, it is in no way taught here, for the word refers only to the choice of the presbyters. (Exp. of Acts, p.204) chose: "When they had ordained them." Let me take the liberty of saying that "ordained" is a very misleading term, which conveys an ecclesiastical idea without any warrant whatever. Not that "ordained" is an interpolation here as in the first chapter of Acts, but certainly the meaning given is fictitious. The true force of the phrase is simply this, "they chose them elders." In more ways than one it is important; because, as a simple choice takes away "ordination," and with it that mysterious ritual which the greater bodies like, so on the other hand, the apostle's choosing for them elders takes away all that gives self-importance to the little churches. For it is neither the smaller bodies choosing for themselves, nor an imposing authority vested in their great rivals, but a choice exercised by apostles; that is, they chose for the disciples "elders in every church."

I am well aware that persons of respectability have not been wanting who have tried to make out that the Greek word means that the apostles chose them by taking the sense of the assembly. But this is mere etymological trifling. There is not the slightest warrant for it in the usage of scripture. It is not requisite for a man to be a scholar in order to reject the thought as false. Thus the word "them" refutes it for any intelligent reader of the English Bible. It is not merely that apostles chose. If it be said that the people must have chosen for them to ordain, the answer is, that the people did not choose at all. This is proved by the simple declaration that the apostles chose for the disciples. Such is the way to fill up the sentence — "They chose them elders." (It is scarcely necessary to refute at length the notion of the fathers, and of some moderns like Bishop Bilson (Perpetual Government of Christ's Church, p. 13, Eden's edition, Oxford, 1842), that χειροτονήσαντες here means ordaining by imposition of hands. That the word was so used in later times by ecclesiastical writers is true; that this is its meaning in scripture is palpable error. It is to confound χειροτονία with χειροθεσία (or its equivalent, ἡ ἐπίθεσις τῶν χειρῶν). On the other hand the idea that χειροτονήσαντες means that the apostles conceded to the disciples the power of selecting by vote, whilst they reserved to themselves the right of approval and institution, is still harsher and in short unexampled in all Greek writings profane or sacred, ancient or mediæval. In the earlier Greek authors who write of their public affairs, the word often occurs in the sense of choosing by suffrage (as opposed to lots); later on it meant appointment irrespective of votes. But it is never used, so far as I know, to express that some appointed on the ground of election by others. And I am glad to say not merely that a candid Presbyterian like Prof. G. Campbell treats Beza's version (per suffragis creassent) with the utmost severity as "a mere interpolation for the sake of answering a particular purpose," but that the Presbyterian divines of 1645 in the "Jus Divinum" point out the flagrant inconsistency of such an interpretation with the express language of the text. None but Paul and Barnabas chose (whatever the manner); and they chose for the disciples, not by their votes, which would be incompatible with their own choice. Compare Acts 10:41, 2 Cor. 8:19. In the former case God chose beforehand the witnesses, but others gave no votes; in the latter the churches chose brethren to be their confidential messengers, but they never thought of collecting the suffrages of other people. Scriptural usage in every instance is simply choice. (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist., and Rev., p.110-111) chose: This opportunity is taken to furnish clear and conclusive evidence against the notion that the elders were chosen by the votes of the churches. The word χειροτονέω, if etymologically viewed, means to stretch out the hand; hence it was applied to election, as we say by show of hands, and, generally, to choice or appointment without reference to the manner. Just so ψηφίζομαι starts from mere reckoning with pebbles, and was used for voting thus; then for voting in general, and lastly for the simple resolve or decision of the mind. The context, not the word in itself, shows which is to be understood. Hesychius explains χειροτονεῖν by καθιστᾶν (compare Titus 1:5), ψηφίζειν; as Suidas for χειροτονήσαντες gives ἐκλεξάμενοι. With all this accords the usage of Aristophanes, as well as of Æschines, Demosthenes, &c., both in the narrow and literal sense, and in the general meaning of choice or designation. Appian, Dio Cassius, Plutarch, Lucian, and Libanius afford many examples where the word conveys no more meaning than choosing. In these therefore the idea of popular suffrage with or without the hands stretched out is quite excluded.

But a few instances must be given from Hellenistic writers familiar with the Old Testament and contemporaneous with those inspired to write the New Testament. Thus Philo (περὶ Ἰωσήφ) repeatedly uses χ. of Pharaoh's appointing Joseph his prime minister, and of Moses in the place to which he was chosen by God, and in his selection again of Aaron's sons for the priesthood. So Josephus (ANT. VI. xiii. 9) speaks of Saul as "chosen king by God," ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ κεχειροτονημένον βασιλέα, and also (ANT. XIII. ii. 2) represents Alexander as writing to Jonathan in these terms, χειροτονοῦμεν δέ σε σήμερον ἀρχιερέα τῶν Ἰουδαίων. "We constitute thee this day high priest of the Jews." This may suffice to prove what we are to judge of Dr. J. Owen's statement (Works, vol. xv. pp. 495, 496, Goold's edition) that "Paul and Barnabas are said to ordain elders in the churches by their election and suffrage; for the word there used will admit of no other sense, however it be ambiguously expressed in our translation." Indeed, Beza, Diodati, Martin, and others had committed themselves to the same thing. Dr. G. Campbell, however, Presbyterian as he was, repudiated this version of the text, and (in his Prelim. Diss. x., Part v. § 7) pronounced per suffragia in the Latin of Beza "a mere interpolation for the sake of answering a particular purpose." If one do not endorse so strong a censure, the only alternative is that the gloss sprang from inadequate research and strong prejudice.

The truth is that we need not go beyond the New Testament to demonstrate the error; for here as elsewhere, even when applied to the most rigid election, χ. never means choosing by the votes of others, which it must mean to bear the alleged sense. Wherever the word occurs technically, the person intended does not take the votes of others merely; or preside as moderator of the election, but is the voter himself. Now in this case the subject in question is beyond doubt not the disciples but Paul and Barnabas. If any voted by stretching out their hands, it was the apostles only. Hence the authorized version rightly dropped "by election," the sense given in some of the older English and foreign translations which had been too much influenced by the Genevese school and even Erasmus.

The true meaning is that the apostles chose elders for the disciples in each assembly (not the disciples for themselves). And this is entirely confirmed by Acts 10:41 and 2 Cor. 8:19; in one of which passages God is said to have chosen beforehand; in the other the churches are the choosers precisely as here the apostles. Neither God nor the assemblies gathered the votes of others: no more did Paul and Barnabas. But this is the sole testimony which has ever been imagined directly to favour the popular election of elders; and we have seen that the inference drawn is assuredly fictitious. For the matter in hand the usage of the word in the political or civil affairs is no evidence.

It is perhaps hardly necessary to add that χ. does not mean the imposition of hands, for which scripture supplies another phrase never confounded with the word in question. But this confusion soon began to show itself in ecclesiastical authors, who not unfrequently employ χειροτονία where we might expect χειροθεσία or ἡ ἐπίθεσις τῶν χειρῶν. This error occurs in the so-called Apostolical Canons, Chrysostom, and subsequent writers; and it may have led the authorized translators to give "ordained" rather than "chose" or "designated." Bishop Bilson, in his "Perpetual Government of Christ's Church," is guilty not of this confusion only but of the strange error that "the elders" included "deacons." (See chaps. 7 and 10.) But really the discord of commentators is almost past belief, unless one have read extensively and proved the fact by experience. Thus Hammond tries to extract from this verse the appointment of a single bishop to each church or city; whereas one might have inferred (without appealing to such incontestible proof to the contrary as Acts 20:17, 28) that the plurality of the presbyters with the singular distributive was as strongly against him as language could make the case short of an express contradiction. Had Hammond's idea been meant, nothing could have been easier than to have written πρεσβύτερον κατ' ἐκκλησίαν or πρεσβυτέρους κατ' ἐκκλησίας. On the other hand, if I may trust Mr. Elsley's report, Whitby opposes this ultra-Episcopalianism on the equally untenable ground that these elders were such as had miraculous endowments either directly from God (as in Acts 2,4,9,10,11) or through an apostolic medium (as in Acts 8), and who had the care at first of the churches; not fixed ministers, but nearer to the apostles in rank. Can any statement be conceived more random and unfounded?

The last and perhaps the worst specimen of this speculation I take from Calvin's INST. IV. 15,16, where, according to the author, "Luke relates that Barnabas and Paul ordained elders throughout the churches; but he at the same time marks the plan or mode when he says it was done by suffrage. The words are χ. πρ. κ. ἐκκλ. (Acts 14:23.) They therefore selected (creabant) two; but the whole body, as was the custom of the Greeks in elections, declared by a show of hands which of the two they wished to have." It has rarely been my lot to meet with a more glaring perversion of the facts and language of inspiration than this passage exhibits, the refutation of which has been already anticipated. The new translation by H. Beveridge is purposely cited to cut off cavil on that score; and the original is given . . . for verification. ("Refert enim Lucas constitutos esse per ecclesias presbyteros à Paulo et Barnaba: sed rationem vel modum simul notat, quum dicit factum id esse suffragiis, χειροτονήσαντες, inquit, πρεσβυτέρους κατ' ἐκκλησίαν. Creabant ergo ipsi duo: sed tota multitudo, ut mos Græcorum in electionibus erat, manibus sublati declarabat quem habere vellent." (Genevæ, 1618)) It is consolatory however to find that so untoward a construction was destined to no long existence; for its own author smothered it through reluctance in his commentary on the passage: — "Presbyterium qui hic collectivum nomen esse putant, pro collegio presbyterorum positum, recte sentiunt meo iudicio." (Comment. in loc.) (Lect. on the Church, p.217-221) chose: Some argue from the etymology; but usage, not etymology, is the only safe guide. The word (χειροτονέω) meant originally to stretch out the hand. Hence, it was applied to voting in this manner, and by an easy transition to choosing without reference to the manner. Thus in Acts 10:41 the same word, compounded with a preposition, is applied to God's choice, where the notion of the church's voting is of course excluded. (Bible Treasury N12:374 and The "Brethren" with an Appendix Containing Some Notice of the Mention Made of Them in Mr. Winslow's Silver Trumpet.) [see note to Mk. 3:14]

14:25 [of the Lord]: Tischendorf on small but ancient authority gives 'unto Perga'. Rather more of similar character add 'of the Lord', or 'of God'. (Exp. of Acts, p.205)

14:28 tarried ^Λ: The more ancient authorities do not give 'there'. (Exp. of Acts, p.205)

15:1 circumcised: The critical or aoristic form, as in κ A B C D and many cursives, is preferable. The Text. Rec. though largely supported implies continuance or habit, which does not apply here. (Exp. of Acts, p.207)

15:2 And: Text. Rec. followed by the Authorized Version and many has 'therefore', and even Lachmann adheres to it, as A E H P and most cursives give it. But the correct particle δέ has the best support and is clearly right. The common συζητήσεως is unfounded. (Exp. of Acts, p.208)

15:3 set forward: Is there any good reason why προπεμφθέντες should not be rendered 'set forward' here as in Rom. 15:24; 1 Cor. 16:6; 3 John 6? No doubt the heart of the saints was with them, not with the legalists; but there was considerate and affectionate care for their wants by the way, whether or not there was any escort, as in chapter 21:5, which some conceive here. (Exp. of Acts, p.210)

both: Text. Rec. follows most in omitting τε 'both', which the more ancient authorities insert. (Exp. of Acts, p.209)

15:4 welcomed: The critical reading is stronger than that of Text. Rec. (Exp. of Acts, p.210)

15:7 you: Most with Text. Rec. read 'us'. (Exp. of Acts, p.212)

15:8 [them]: The pronoun here is doubtful; the sense is clear. (Exp. of Acts, p.212)

15:11 believe: The Sinaitic, et al., have the strange error of the future here. (Exp. of Acts, p.212)

Jesus ^Λ: 'Christ' in the Text. Rec. has some authority, but neither much nor the best. (Exp. of Acts, p.212)

15:17 maketh: The reading in verse 18 is somewhat doubtful, and even the version, which may mean 'Who doeth these things known from the beginning of the world.' The general sense is plain enough. (Exp. of Acts, p.215)

15:20 pollutions of idols: 'The pollution of idols' were meats offered to idols, as in verse 29. Cf. Dan. 1:8; Mal. 1:7; not to speak of Ecclus. 40. Bentley's conjecture of χοιρείας ('pork') for πορνείας is an instance of the great scholar's audacity and erudite ignorance (perhaps suggested by Bellonius' Observat. iii. 10 whom he cites in ver. 29). We may think it strange to see unclean sin classed with idolatrous sanction; but the Jew felt differently, and to the Gentile they were equally indifferent. (Exp. of Acts, p.215)

15:22,25 chosen . . . choose: 'Chosen', verses 22 and 25, in the Authorized and other Versions is ungrammatical. G. Wakefield is half right, half wrong. (Exp. of Acts, p.216)

15:22 called: Text. Rec. with some authority gives 'surnamed', as in Authorized Version. (Exp. of Acts, p.216)

15:23 elder brethren: The common text follows E H L P, et al., as opposed to κ A B C D et al., and probably was framed to suit verse 22; it was a mere clerical error. . . . It will be observed that the most ancient authorities open with a reading which is now accepted by almost all critics. This yields a sense rather more remote from ecclesiastical tradition than the ordinary text, where 'the elders' are distinguished sharply from 'the brethren' immediately following. The 'elder brethren', however, is a formula which exactly agrees with the state of things which was obtaining at Jerusalem. No doubt they were 'the elders' there, as we find them called in chapter 11:30, as well as in chapter 15:2,6. They were the local authorities; but they appear not to have been chosen formally, as the elders undoubtedly were in the Gentile assemblies, by apostolic authority, direct or indirect; they seem rather to have acted simply from their experience and moral weight, as was usual among the Jews. This falls in remarkably with the peculiar expression employed here, 'the elder brethren', and harmonizes with the tone of Peter's address in chapter 5:1-4 of his First Epistle. (Exp. of Acts, p.216-7) elder brethren: There is very grave authority (⌘, A, B, C, D, &c.) for dropping καὶ, "and," and so throwing together οἱ πρ. ἄδ. "the elder brethren" (in the sense, however, of "the elders"). (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist. and Rev., p.120) elder brethren: Yet the peculiarity alluded to is no less plain in the critical text of ver. 23, which is the opening sentence of the decree determined at the council. It runs, if we heed the Vatican MS., the Alexandrian, the Sinaitic, the Rescript of Paris, and Beza's of Cambridge with other good support, not as in the A.V., "The apostles, and the elders, and the brethren," but "The apostles and the elder brethren"; and this is adopted in the Revised Version, as by Alford, Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles, Westcott and Hort, &c. The reading of the later copies, seems due to conforming the phrase with ver. 22. But this was implied here, as it was there expressly asserted to be "with the whole assembly." Nor was it the least likely that the ecclesiastical copyists would have dared to introduce a phrase so alien to their habit of helping on hierarchial distinction. Even Luther, Calvin, and others down to our day have felt constrained to yield to the larger sense of elders and youngers in this context. (Bible Treasury N4:335, Epist. of Peter p. 244-245)

elder brethren: the weight of testimony is against the insertion of καὶ οἱ before ἄδ., but the American [correctors of the RV] rendering is harsh indeed, however well meant, as compared with the more natural one in the Received Text. (Bible Treasury 14:351)

15:24 ^Λ to whom: Text. Rec. with many MSS. adds 'saying that ye must be circumcised and keep the law'. The most ancient authorities omit. (Exp. of Acts, p.216)

15:25 of one accord: The Authorized Version renders this in a way of no bearing here. (Exp. of Acts, p.216)
choose: [See note to 15:22]

15:33,34 unto those that sent them: After some time Judas and Silas were dismissed in peace 'unto those that had sent them', not merely 'unto the apostles', as in the later copies and some early versions; the more important of which join the ancient in omitting verse 34 of the Text. Rec. as reflected in the Authorized Version. It was probably an insertion due to an inference from verse 40, which is as easy to account for as it is hard to conceive, the best leaving it out if genuine. (Exp. of Acts, p.220)

15:34 [whole verse]: verse 34 is not now read by any critic of note, as not appearing in ⌘ A B E H L P, some sixty cursives, &c. (Bible Treasury 13:336)

[whole verse]: [See note to 15:33]

16:6 went: The highest authorities (⌘ A B C D E) with adequate support of the cursives, and versions, et al., support the finite verb against the participle in H L P and the mass of cursives, and Text. Rec. (Exp. of Acts, p.227)

16:7 and . . . into . . . of Jesus: The more ancient read the copulative against the majority and Text. Rec.; as they give εἰς instead of κατὰ and ἀδ Ἰησοῦ. (Exp. of Acts, p.227) of Jesus: [The RV] rightly give[s] "the Spirit of Jesus" (Bible Treasury 13:336)

16:10 ^Λ Macedonia . . . God: The authorities are more divided as to the article here, the best omitting it. So they are between 'God' and 'the Lord', but the oldest support the former. (Exp. of Acts, p.227)

16:12 a city of Macedonia, first of the district: why in verse 12 "a city of Macedonia, the first of the district," when "a principal city of the district of Macedonia" strictly represents the Greek text? Amphipolis had been for some time the capital of the district, and Neapolis was first in geographical order for one arriving from the East like the apostle. It is known however that a Greek city might be designated πρώτη without being the metropolis of the region, as for instance, Smyrna and Pergamos were so styled, though Ephesus was the capital of the province. And reasons were not wanting quite sufficient for such a claim on the part of Philippi, especially as Augustus had shewn himself ready to shew it uncommon favour. (Bible Treasury 13:336)

16:13 gate: The most ancient MSS., ⌘ A B C D, good cursives, et al., give πόλις, instead of πόλιος (city), as in the Text. Rec. following most. (Exp. of Acts, p.231)

prayer [or, place of prayer]: Some ancient authorities give 'where we supposed there was a place of prayer', as in the Revised Version. (Exp. of Acts, p.231) prayer [or, place of prayer]: As the better authorities (⌘ A B C E, et al.) insert the article with 'prayer' in verse 16, it is allowed that 'the place of prayer' is the more likely meaning. But if so here, it would go far to commend the same sense in verse 13, the article being there properly absent as it was a previously unknown and unmentioned place. (Exp. of Acts, p.234)

16:16 prayer [or, place of prayer]: [See note to 16:13]

16:19 gone: Literally, 'gone out'; it would seem in allusion to the going out of the demon (Exp. of Acts, p.235)

16:20 prætors: [See note to Acts 19:31]

16:22 rent their garments: It may not be necessary to hold with Bengel that the duumvirs stripped Paul and Silas with their own hands; but the special expression employed (περιρήξαντες) and the general scope and intrinsic sense, exclude the notion that the magistrates rent (διαρρήσω) their own clothes. (Exp. of Acts, p.236)

16:31 Jesus ^Λ: The mass of witnesses adds 'Christ' as in Text. Rec., but the most ancient with some good cursives, the Vulg., et al., do not accredit it. (Exp. of Acts, p.237)

16:32 Lord [or, God]: Some ancient authorities read 'God', but the best sustain the Text. Rec., save in preferring 'with' to 'and to', though in sense equivalent. (Exp. of Acts, p.240)

16:38 prætors: [See note to Acts 19:31]

17:1 the: It is remarkable that the more ancient manuscripts (⌘ A B D, et al.) omit the article before synagogue, as do the Authorized and Revised Versions; but the testimony to its existence is ample and varied. On the one hand it is well-nigh impossible to conceive its insertion unless it were originally there. On the other it is easy to understand its omission, because of its unusual connexion. It would be quite justified if in fact there was but that synagogue in the district, which would give it notoriety. At Philippi we saw that there was none; there was only the place for prayer by the river, where a few used to assemble on the sabbath. (Exp. of Acts, p.243)

17:6 city-rulers [or, politarchs]: The Greek noun here, πολίταρχος, not πολίταρχος, is a word, with its cognate verb, of common occurrence in Dio Cassius, for præfect or commandant of a city, besides its broader usage in the past as said of a king or prince. But I do not find it applied to magistrates in Greek cities, only to the præfect of Rome. . . . a peculiar title of the local authorities, which so much the more attests Luke's accuracy because the term occurs in no known remains of Greek antiquity. But an inscription still extant on the marble arch of the western or Vardir gate of Saloniki proves that such was the title of the Thessalonian magistrates, and that there were seven. (Exp. of Acts, p.244-5)

city-rulers [or, politarchs]: [See note to Acts 19:31]

17:9 security: This is expressed, not in the more ancient Greek technical expression ἐγγύη but in the equivalent of the Latin satisfactio, τὸ ἱκανὸν. (Exp. of Acts, p.247)

17:13 and troubling: 'And troubling' has ancient and wide support. (Exp. of Acts, p.247)

17:14 toward: Ignorance of the idiomatic use of ὡς here probably led to ἔως in \aleph A B E and some other authorities, and to its omission in D, et al. (Exp. of Acts, p.247)

17:16 idols: 'Κατείδωλός πόλις Actor. Apost. xvii. 16, quod non est, ut quidam opinantur, simulacris dedita urbs, sed simulacris referta.' Zeunius ap. Viger, de pr. Gr. L. Idiom. 638, ed iii. Lips. 1822. (Exp. of Acts, p.248)

17:18 also . . . Λ Stoic . . . Λ preaching: 'Also' has good authority, though omitted in Text. Rec., which inserts 'the' before Stoic, and 'to them' before preached. (Exp. of Acts, p.248)

17:21 something: The most ancient authorities support the double 'something'. (Exp. of Acts, p.248)

17:22 very [i.e., more than others]: why should ὡς δ. be translated "somewhat superstitious"? Very religious, devoted to higher powers, or given up to demon worship, seems rather the force of the word here. (Bible Treasury 13:336)

very [i.e. more than others] reverent: "very religious" seems nearer the mark than "rather superstitious." (Bible Treasury 14:351)

17:23 this: The neuter form has more ancient support than the much more general masculine. (Exp. of Acts, p.249)

17:25 human: 'Of men' in Text. Rec. must yield in antiquity to 'human'. (Exp. of Acts, p.249)

17:26 [blood] . . . all: 'Blood' is not in \aleph A B, eight cursives, and most ancient Versions, some reading 'every face'. (Exp. of Acts, p.249) appointed: 'Foreappointed' rests on D and a few more. (Exp. of Acts, p.249)

17:27 God: 'God' has ample support of the best kind. (Exp. of Acts, p.249)

God: "The Lord," as in the Authorised Version is a bad reading: "God" is in the best copies, and required by the truth intrinsically. What had the nations to do with "Jehovah"? What could they know of Him whom God made Lord and Anointed? (Pamphlets, p.329)

God: [The RV] rightly change[s] "the Lord" into "God" (Bible Treasury 13:336)

17:29 divinity: τὸ θεῖον, the divine, or what is divine, in verse 29, should not be confounded with θεϊότης or still less θεότης. (Bible Treasury 13:336)

17:30 commandeth Λ : Text. Rec. has 'all men' with many, but not the best witnesses, as in the text followed. (Exp. of Acts, p.249)

17:31 inasmuch: καθότι \aleph A B D E, et al., διότι 'because', has inferior weight. (Exp. of Acts, p.249)

18:1,2 he: Good MSS. add ὁ Παῦλος as in Text. Rec., the Authorized and other Versions, but the best omit. (Exp. of Acts, p.254) from . . . commanded . . . from: The form varies in copies, with the same sense in substance, in all the words thus marked. (Exp. of Acts, p.254)

18:2 commanded . . . from [See note to 18:1]

18:3 and [?they]: 'They' wrought is sustained by \aleph^m B, Coptic and Origen; for one can scarce add the loose Æthiopic Version. It seems strange that the Revisers should adopt so precarious a reading in the face of all other authorities. (Exp. of Acts, p.254)

18:4 discoursing: The same word means either 'discoursing' in general, or in particular 'reasoning', or even 'disputing', as in Mark 9:34; Acts 17:2; 24:12; Jude 9. Here as in chapter 20:7,9; Heb. 12:5, the more general force seems preferable; in others 'reasoning' may be right as between the extremes. Context alone can decide. (Exp. of Acts, p.257-8)

18:5 word: λόγῳ \aleph B D E, six cursives, Vulg. Memph. Theb. Syrr. Arm. Aeth.; πνεύματι (as in Text. Rec.) has quite inferior authorities. . . . Not the least ground seems to support the notion that their arrival with supplies enabled Paul to give up tent-making for the exclusive preaching of the word: certainly the verb συνείχετο does not mean anything of the sort, but rather that the state of absorption with the word, by which he was characterized, went on; for it is the imperfect, not the aorist as it should have been if indicative of a fresh act or course consequent on their coming.

But there is another word which has to be taken into account, in order to a sound judgment. Were πνεύματι genuine, I cannot but think Erasmus (pace Bezae) right, and that the meaning would then be 'straightened in spirit'. But it is not so. The Received reading πνεύματι ('spirit') is not sustained by the best authorities which give λόγῳ ('word'), πνεύματι having crept in from Acts 17:16; 18:25; 19:21, et al. Hence such a rendering as Wakefield's must be summarily and on every ground discarded, 'the mind of Paul was violently disturbed'; and none the less because the translation is commended by its author in his notes as perfectly agreeable to the original. Similarly erroneous is the turn given by Hammond, Mill, and Wolf, as if the apostle's spirit was vexed at the unbelief of the Jews; or the opposite notion of Beza and others, who construe it into the zealous ardour which carried him away. Others again like Casaubon, Grotius, et al., depart still farther and consider 'the spirit' to mean the Holy Spirit by Whose impulse he was borne away at this time: a rendering which is in every way faulty, for the verb cannot bear such a force, and the reading is certainly erroneous. If genuine, it would rather require the article absent (unless ἀγία were expressed): its insertion simply would point to one's own spirit. (Exp. of Acts, p.258-260) word: [The RV] correctly substitute[s] "by the word" for "by the Spirit," whilst Alford would render it "earnestly occupied in preaching," and T. S. Green similarly. (Bible Treasury 13:336)

was: εἶναι is read by the best witnesses. (Exp. of Acts, p.258)

18:6 shook out: Think of Wakefield, while he retains the ordinary version, saying, 'I am partly inclined to think it means here — throwing off his garment: which exhibits a striking image of the conduct of the apostle: As I throw off this cloak, so I relinquish all further concern with you.' (Exp. of Acts, p.260) pure; from henceforth: It may interest some to know that, even in so simple a passage as the last, men of learning have differed. Lachmann suggested, and Alford followed, a punctuation which yields the sense, 'I shall henceforth with a pure conscience go to the Gentiles.' Wakefield follows the Peschito Syriac in breaking it up thus: 'From this moment I am clean therefrom; I go to the Gentiles.' In his note he says, 'This disposition gives a degree of abruptness to the periods more suitable to an angry man!' The irreverence of the translator seems to my mind as manifest as his lack of judgment, and the ordinary division most consistent, dignified, and impressive. (Exp. of Acts, p.260)

18:7 thence: instead of ἐκεῖθεν the Codex Bezae and a cursive (137) expressly change 'thence' into 'from Aquila's'. . . Of course it was a mere gloss, and even a misinterpretation to boot. (Exp. of Acts, p.261)

Titus: Titus, or Titius, is vouched for by \aleph B D^{ff} E, four cursives, Vulg. Memph. Syr.-Harcl. Arm. Indeed Syr.-Pesch. and Theb. gave Titus only; and a cursive corrects Justus by Titus. (Exp. of Acts, p.259)

18:9 by night through a vision: The order of the words differs in the MSS. (Exp. of Acts, p.262)

18:12 pro-consul: ἀνθυπατεύοντος is the Text. Rec. supported by most cursives; but \aleph A B D with several good juniors give the two words ἀνθυπάτου ὄντος. The additions of Codex Bezae are numerous here as elsewhere, but hardly call for remark) . . . It may be well to notice again the precise position of Gallio. He was 'pro-consul' of Achaia. It is the more striking, because the province under both Tiberius and Caligula had been imperial, and hence under the authority then of a pro-prætor. Claudius, the reigning emperor, had restored Achaia to the senate, which involved the change of its former government to that of a pro-consul. Accordingly at this time Luke speaks accurately not of a pro-prætor, but of a pro-consul. We saw a similar instance in Sergius Paulus the pro-consul of Cyprus, which, like Achaia, had been under imperial authority, but was afterwards transferred to the senate, and thus became pro-consular. The inspired historian made no mistake in these details, where it was exceedingly easy to do so if he had not been under divine guidance; and the more so, as the early Christians notoriously kept aloof from all meddling with political administration. But in scripture we are entitled to look for the truth in things small and great; and this should be recognized by giving as exactly as possible the reproduction of its meaning.

In fact Luke had been supposed in one at least of these instances to have erred by applying the term erroneously according to the state of things which had existed before the transfer to the senate, till a passage was found in an historian not read generally which confirmed the change, and coins with the new title made it still more evident. Had there been no coins, no statement in Dio Cassius, extraneous evidence would have failed, yet the truth would have remained all the same in scripture: only even Christians would have trembled because history did not speak in support of scripture. It is such incredulity which is so deplorable, and this among not heathen and Jews only but the baptized. But how sad that men bearing the Christian name should be swayed in a moment by human testimonies, after showing their readiness to doubt even when they had the inspired word for it! Can anything evince more clearly that men naturally distrust God and His word? These things ought not so to be. (Exp. of Acts, p.265-7)

18:15 Λ I: Text. Rec., supported by four uncials and most cursives, adds γάρ 'for'; but the oldest MSS. and Versions do not give it. (Exp. of Acts, p.266)

18:17 all Λ : (Text. Rec. with most adds οἱ Ἕλληνες, 'the Greeks', but the best authorities are adverse.) . . . It is not needful to specify that 'all were Greeks', who assailed the prominent Jew who complained in the case, though there is large and good authority for this addition, adopted in the Text. Rec. Certainly the reading of some cursives, which attributes the assault to 'all the Jews', refutes itself as intrinsically worthless and absurd. Had not Sosthenes but Crispus been said to be the object of animosity, such a reading could be understood. But Sosthenes would seem to have succeeded Crispus in that office, without a hint of his conversion as yet, though he may have been the one who is later spoken of as a brother. The best, though not the most considerably authenticated, variant is that which is found in the Sinaitic, Alexandrian, and Vatican Uncials, and some of the most ancient versions. These witnesses simply say that they 'all' laid hold of Sosthenes the ruler of the synagogue, and were beating him before the judgment-seat, and that Gallio gave himself no trouble about the matter. (Exp. of Acts, p.266,268)

18:19 they: (So read \aleph A B E, et al., Sah. Syr.-Pesch. Ar^c Aeth.^{pp}; D^{ff} καταντήσας, the rest supporting the Text. Rec., as in the A.V., et al.) . . . There is no doubt considerable and good authority in support of the Received Text, followed by the A.V. and most others. But the best witnesses and versions sustain the plural form in the first clause, which gives additional force to the singular in the second, in which all agree. 'And they arrived at Ephesus' is the reading given by the Sinaitic, Alexandrian, Vatican, and Laud's Bodleian, with some cursives. The Greek of Beza's MS. is probably a mere clerical error, as it makes no grammatical coherence, and the Latin agrees with the oldest authorities and several of the best ancient versions. (Exp. of Acts, p.269-270)

he left them there: Some ancient authorities omit, or transpose, this clause, to make the narrative more flowing; and there is much conflict of testimony as to αὐτοῦ or ἐκεῖ for 'there'. (Exp. of Acts, p.269) reasoned: διελέξατο has the best suffrages, διελέχθη the most numerous, διελέγετο has a few MSS. and Versions of value, but is hardly consistent with the next verse. (Exp. of Acts, p.270)

18:20 Λ he: 'With them' (or 'there'), is added by some, as in Text. Rec., but the best omit. (Exp. of Acts, p.270)

18:21 [I must by all means keep the coming feast at Jerusalem]: Very weighty witnesses omit the words in brackets; as to which Tischendorf refers to Acts 19:21; 20:16. . . It is well known that the clause within the brackets is not in the Uncials of the highest character, though it is attested by abundant and good authority. Hence it becomes very much a question of internal evidence. Meyer lays stress on the reference of ἀναβάς in verse 22; but 'going up', though unquestionably to Jerusalem, need not have been to keep a Jewish feast, unless it was expressly so explained. The only thing recorded as a fact is his saluting the church. This in no way disproves the purpose to keep the feast there; but it undoes the force of the argument founded on ἀναβάς. The truth is that both may be true; verse 21, if genuine, stating what he meant to do in Jerusalem, though nothing is said of its accomplishment; and verse 22 letting us know that his heart had other objects before him than the purpose he had mentioned to the Jews of Ephesus. (Exp. of Acts, p.270)

18:24 Apollos: The Sinaitic^{pm}, two cursives, the Coptic and the Arm., confound Apollos with Apelles (Rom. 16:10). (Exp. of Acts, p.272)

18:25 way: Beza's uncial with more than fifteen cursives reads 'word' for 'way'. (Exp. of Acts, p.272)

Jesus: For 'the Lord' in Text. Rec. (supported by H P, et al.), the best witnesses have 'Jesus'. (Exp. of Acts, p.272)

18:26 Priscilla and Aquila: The order in the inferior uncials, etc., is 'Aquila and Priscilla' but \aleph A B E with Vulg. Cop. Aeth. as above. (Exp. of Acts, p.272)

the way of God: The order, and even words, fluctuate in the copies. (Exp. of Acts, p.272)

19:1 [?down]: Text. Rec. ἐλθεῖν, B H L., most cursives and Versions; κατελθεῖν \aleph A E, many cursives, Arm. (Exp. of Acts, p.275)

finding . . . disciples Λ : Text. Rec. εὐρών. . . εἶπεν, D E H L P, et al. εὐρεῖν . . . εἰπέν τε \aleph A B, several cursives, Vulg., et al. (Exp. of Acts, p.275)

19:2 [said]: Text. Rec. on large authority adds εἶπον which does not appear in \aleph A B D E, et al. (Exp. of Acts, p.275)

19:3 said: ὁ δὲ εἶπεν simply ⋈ A E, et al. εἶπε τε Text. Rec. with B H L P and most (H L P, et al., adding πρὸς αὐτούς). (Exp. of Acts, p.275)

19:4 Jesus: Text. Rec. has τὸν χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν H L P, most cursives; as some with several Versions support 'Jesus Christ'; but the best τὸν Ἰησοῦν, D giving only χριστόν. (Exp. of Acts, p.275)

19:8 the: Some MSS. and Versions omit the article, but most insert it, which Luke's usage confirms. (Exp. of Acts, p.281)

19:9 ἄ Tyrannus: Most support Text. Rec. in adding 'a certain'; but the most ancient omit. (Exp. of Acts, p.281)

19:10 Lord ἄ: Text. Rec., with H L P and most cursives, adds 'Jesus', but not ⋈ A B D E, and all the old Versions. (Exp. of Acts, p.281)

19:14 certain: So it stands in the Vatican and other good authorities. The ordinary text has 'certain ones, sons of. . .', and much the larger support. (Exp. of Acts, p.285)

19:15 ἄ Paul: [Q. — Acts 19:15. Dr. J. B. Lightfoot in his Fresh Revision of the N.T. iv. §3 (p.60) speaks of "the distinction which is effected by the insertion of the article before the one name and the omission before the other," &c. But this is not the fact, though he cites the Greek expressly, and wrongly, just before. He was eminently learned, and usually most accurate. How can we account for the statement? R.]

A. — It is a striking proof that good Homer sometimes nods. Not only no known MS. bears him out, but the supposed omission would be in this case impossible Greek. The repeated article is even more requisite than the separate verbs, γ. I know or acknowledge, ἐπ. I am acquainted with. It is to be presumed that in a later edition so glaring and of course unwitting a mistake must have been corrected; I have only the first before me. (Bible Treasury N3:192)

19:16 both: The better reading is ἀμφοτέρων (⋈ A B D, et al.), not 'them', as in the common text, a change to suit the 'seven', whereas two only were concerned in this case. (Exp. of Acts, p.285)

both: it is "both of them," not the seven, but two of them, easily made into all, but not the converse. (Bible Treasury 13:336)

19:22 in: D^{tr} has ἐν, but this evidently to avoid the difficulty of εἰς, which expresses the direction of the apostle, though it was only a question of abiding where he was, a pregnant construction not at all infrequent. (Exp. of Acts, p.288)

19:25 we: Tischendorf has shown the mistake of Griesbach in giving ὑμῶν for ἡμῖν (A B D E, et al.), instead of the vulgar ἡμῶν. This error is faithfully repeated in the notes of Scholz, a very inferior critic. (Exp. of Acts, p.288)

19:27 her: τῆς μεγαλειότητος ⋈ A B E and near 20 cursives, et al., rather than τὴν μεγαλειότητα as in Text. Rec. (Exp. of Acts, p.288)

19:31 Asiarchs: "Asiarchs" with a marginal explanation is suggested [by the American correctors of the RV]; but if so, should there not be "Prætors" or Duumvirs in 16:20, 38, and "Politarchs" in 17:6? (Bible Treasury 14:351)

19:32 assembly: . . . the New Testament employs ἐκκλησία in reference to at least two other subjects: one, the assembly at Ephesus, Acts 19:32, 39, 40; the other, the congregation of Israel in the wilderness, Acts 7:38, which is in our version, rendered "church in the wilderness." "Congregation" would evidently be better, as "church" here is calculated to mislead; for there is no question of a body baptized by the Holy Ghost. A similar remark, perhaps, applies also to Heb. 12:23. (The Second Advent of Christ Premillennial: A Reply to the Rev. D. Brown, D.D., Glasgow: R. L. Allan, 1868, p. 31)

19:33 instructed [or, drew together] συνεβίβασαν is the best reading (⋈ A B E and many cursives) and means as above. The vulgar text hardly falls in with προβαλόντων following without tautology. (Exp. of Acts, p.290)

19:35 ἃ which: The γάρ, 'for', not expressed in our version, or perhaps any other, implies, without bluntly saying, Why this ado? For 'which of men is there who knoweth not. . .' (Exp. of Acts, p.291)

19:37 temple: All the old Protestant English Versions have the absurdly false rendering, 'robbers of churches'. So inveterate is bad habit, even beyond the vulgar. Wiclif and the Rhemish were preserved from it by adhering to the Vulgate. (Exp. of Acts, p.291)

19:39 ἃ it: B and many cursives support περαιτέρων and so Mr. T. S. Green, 'further', which makes good sense; but the ancient versions are adverse. (Exp. of Acts, p.291)

assembly: [See note to Acts 19:32]

19:40 shall ἃ be: The best authorities add a negative here. It may be due to οὐ immediately preceding. If genuine, it may be explained by emphatic speech, which is not always logically correct. (Exp. of Acts, p.291) concourse: [See note to Acts 19:32]

20:1 called [or, sent]: Most support the former, the best the latter. (Exp. of Acts, p.293)

20:3 [whole verse]: In verse 3 structural varieties appear in the copies. (Exp. of Acts, p.293)

20:4 (as far as Asia) . . . [son] of Pyrrhus: A few very ancient witnesses do not contain these words, which are sustained in the great mass; but '[son] of Pyrrhus' is genuine. (Exp. of Acts, p.293)

20:7 we: ⋈ A B D E, some twenty cursives, and all the Ancient Versions, as against the Text. Rec.; τῶν μαθητῶν H L P, and most cursives, probably to square with αὐτοῖς. So σὴν in verse following with the scantiest support. (Exp. of Acts, p.295)

we: As for Acts 20:7, neither italics nor capitals will relieve "Typicus" from the charge of unbelief, nor add a particle of strength to the weak assertion that "there is not the slightest evidence to prove" that it was the Lord's Supper. The language is decisive that it was then the practice of Christians to come together on the first of the week, and this to break bread. (Comp. also 1 Cor. 16:2.) The critical reading (ἡμῶν), which rests on much the best authorities, seems to me stronger than the vulgar one (μαθητῶν), which probably grew out of a desire to make easier sense with αὐτοῖς. Nothing is simpler: all came together to break bread, but with prominence given to Paul and his companions in "we," the family word. (Bible Treasury 6:80)

we: I am sorry to be obliged to point out a necessary correction here. But you will understand that the change has already been made from the truth. I am only seeking to bring souls back to the truth. The real words of the Holy Spirit here were: "When we came together." (It is a question of the true Greek text, not of our version only. ἡμῶν is read by ⋈ A B D E, twenty cursives, all the ancient versions of value, save perhaps the Coptic, and several of the Greek fathers, as against H L P and most cursives.) Now no doubt at first sight it seems a little harsh. I will read to you how it runs, and you will see that it is a little difficult. In the most authoritative text of this verse, according to the oldest and best MSS., it reads thus: "Upon the first day of the week, when we came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them." One can readily conjecture how the change took place. The copyists, seeing "preached unto them," thought that “when we came together” did not well harmonise, that there must be some mistake, and that “we” had probably slipped in instead of “the disciples.” The truth, however, is, that “we” is right, and that the real intruder is “the disciples.” It was the apparent jar of which the correction sought to get rid. This was wrong. Always accept this, my beloved brethren, as a true canon in such questions as to the word of God: never cut the knot of a difficulty in scripture, but wait till God untie it for you. There are difficulties in His word. What is to be done with them? Submit to them; own that you do not understand; pray to God till, in the use of all right means, He clears them up. But never force the word of God. That appears to have been done here. Some of the scribes cut the knot by changing “we came together” into “the disciples came together”; thus they thought that the latter would agree better with “them.”

But now let us simply take the clause as God wrote it; for there cannot be a legitimate doubt, to any competent person who has examined the matter, that I am giving the true form of the verse. Thus it will be found in every critical text of value, no matter whose it may be; and so you will find it in every correct version of the critical text — “Upon the first day of the week, when we came together.” Why we? Because all had a common interest. Had it been said, “when the disciples came together,” it might possibly have been thought that it meant no more than the disciples in that place, who had the habit of meeting together on the first day of the week. But as it is “when we came together to break bread,” the principle takes in all saints. All are found here in a common character. The family word, “we,” so familiar to the Spirit, is used — “when we came together.” It is not merely the mode adopted by the disciples in the Troad. It is the habit of the saints wherever they might be — of Paul, and Luke, and every one else. The only question that could be raised is, whether the writer does not mean by this to put himself along with the rest when he says, “When we came together to break bread.” This I do not doubt he does; but that the phrase goes farther we see from the context, which implies the fixed and regular habit of all saints of God, wherever they had the opportunity, to meet together for the Lord’s supper on the first day of the week. (Bible Treasury N9:376)

we: it is correctly “when we came together to break bread, Paul discoursed with them,” (Bible Treasury 13:336)

20:9 sitting: καθεζόμενος seems better than καθήμενος. (Exp. of Acts, p.296)

20:11 the: τόν ^{8^m}. A B C D —, which Text. Rec. omits with most. (Exp. of Acts, p.296) eaten: Some have supposed that when Paul had gone up and broken the loaf and eaten, it was the interrupted celebration of the Lord’s supper. This appears to me opposed to the intimations of the context. Scripture describes it, not as fellowship, but solely as the personal act of the apostle. No doubt it was ‘the loaf’ of the Lord’s Supper; but it was that loaf now partaken of by the apostle for his own refreshment, after so long speaking and circumstances so trying, about to go forth on his journey. This seems borne out by the word, γευσάμενος, rightly translated ‘eaten’, or literally, ‘tasted’. We can readily understand therefore why the Lord avoids such a word in calling on His disciples to ‘take, eat’, in the institution of His supper. The word φαγεῖν could be, and is, used in the most general way, but it is here γεύομαι. Again, the apostle’s ‘conversing’ with them a long while, till daybreak, much better suits a meal than the assembly. (Exp. of Acts, p.298)

20:16 past: ‘By’ (A.V.) is equivocal as it might mean by that way. ‘Past’ means without stopping there. (Exp. of Acts, p.299)

20:19 ^Λ tears: Text. Rec. adds ‘many’, supported by C H L P, et al., but ⁸ A B D E et al., omit. (Exp. of Acts, p.301)

20:22 the [or, my]: Canon Humphry attaches more importance than is due to the old expositors, as Chrysostom, Ammonius, Didymus, who will have the phrase to mean that Paul went ‘led captive by the Spirit’. Usage, as well as the distinction τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἄγιον in the following verses, point to his spirit, on which Meyer at last fell back, after first taking up the notion of the Greek Fathers. Paul was not free in his spirit for any other direction than Jerusalem, cost what this might. (Exp. of Acts, p.304)

20:24 [whole verse]: There are minor differences in the readings of the text, but nothing of weight enough to detain us here. (Exp. of Acts, p.305)

20:25 [of God]: The best and oldest MSS. and Versions, save the Vulg., etc., read simply ‘the kingdom.’ Others add ‘of God’, which is meant if not expressed; others ‘of Jesus’, and ‘of the Lord Jesus’. (Exp. of Acts, p.306)

20:28 heed ^Λ: The copula οὖν ‘therefore’ seems an early addition, but the best copies have it not. (Exp. of Acts, p.307)

in: The Authorized Version has gone a little beyond what the inspired word really says, ‘Over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers.’ It is rightly rendered in the Revised Version, ‘in the which’. They were thus made to feel that they were in and of the flock of God like every other saint. (Exp. of Acts, p.308)

God: [With the American correctors of the RV, “the Lord” (with marg. Some ancient authorities, including the two oldest MSS., read God),] we cannot agree. It is a question of Scripture and spiritual judgment amidst the collision of witnesses. (Bible Treasury 14:351) with His own blood [or, the blood of His own one]: ‘With His own blood’ is beyond controversy a difficult expression, and especially in the best representation of the text, which deserves careful examination. It is not meant that there is the least cloud over the truth that He Who shed His blood for us was God. If the Saviour here was not God, His purchase would have only a creature’s value, and must be wholly insufficient to acquire on God’s part the assembly as it was, yea, as it is. Being a divine person, His gaining it to Himself by blood has an infinite and eternal efficacy.

But the expression, as it stands in the Authorized and Revised Versions, is unexampled in scripture; and what is more, as already remarked, it is peculiarly embarrassing for the Christian scholar, because the form of it, now most approved on the best grounds, is extremely emphatic instead of being general. Indeed it would be easier to understand the sense as commonly understood, if the form had been, as in the vulgar reading, τοῦ ἰδίου αἵματος. The critical reading, though at first sight it may add to the difficulty, seems however the right one, τοῦ αἵματος τοῦ ἰδίου. But it is suggested that we should take τοῦ ἰδίου in government rather than in concord. The meaning that results from this would be ‘the blood of His Own One’, i.e., of Christ, His Son, rather than ‘His own blood’. This meaning, if certain, would make all plain.

It was in all probability the perplexity here felt which led some copyists in early days to substitute the church ‘of the Lord’, for that ‘of God’. But this reading, though externally well supported (A C^m D E, et al.), is at issue with New Testament usage, and is thus on the whole inferior to that of the common text, though as far as ‘God’ goes no one need be surprised that Wetstein and Griesbach adopted it; but it is not so intelligible why Lachmann, Tischendorf, and Tregelles are not here found rather with Mill, Wolf, Bengel, Scholz, Alford (in all his editions since the first two), Wordsworth, Westcott and Hort, who hold to τοῦ θεοῦ. It is Alford’s mistake that Matthäi prefers the same; for in both his editions he follows his Moscow copies, and has the same conflate reading as the Complutensian, τοῦ κυρίου καὶ θεοῦ (C³ H L P, some 110 or more cursives). Other varieties there are, scarce worth noticing on any ground, as, τοῦ κυρίου θεῶν (3,95), τοῦ θεοῦ καὶ κυρίου (47). Some ancient versions represent τοῦ χριστοῦ, one old Latin 'Jesu Christi', and the Georgian — τοῦ κυρίου τοῦ θεοῦ.

Dr. Scrivener therefore fairly enough says that our choice evidently lies between κυρίῳ and θεῶν, though Patristic testimony may slightly incline to the latter, as he does himself. But why he should consider that the usus loquendi of the apostle, though incontrovertibly sustaining θεῶν against κυρίου, 'appears little relevant to the case of either', is to my mind unintelligible. For the utmost that can be said for the immense weight on one side is that it may not have been impossible to have said the other in this sole instance. Scripture beyond doubt is larger than man's mind; but assuredly he is rather bold or careless who could slight an expression invariably found for one never found elsewhere, and here easily understood to be a change in order to escape a sentiment extremely harsh and unexampled if taken as it commonly is.

It may not be without profit to conceive how the discovery of the Sinai MS., and a clearer knowledge, not only of the Vatican copy, but of other weighty authorities, must have modified, if not revolutionized, the judgment of Griesbach. 'Ex his omnibus luculenter apparet, pro lectione θεῶν ne unicum quidem militare codicem, qui sive vetustate sive interna bonitate sua testis idonei et incorrupti laude ornari queat. Non reperitur, nisi in libris recentioribus iisdemque vel penitus contemnendis, vel misere, multis saltem in locis, interpolatis. Sed nec versionum auctoritate tueri se potest. Nulla enim translatio habet θεῶν praeter Vulgatum recentiore, (quam redarguunt antiquiores libri latini,) et Philoxenianam syriacam, . . . Tandem neque apud Patres certa lectionis istius vestigia deprehenduntur ante Epiphanium, . . . Quomodo igitur salvis criticis artis legibus lectio θεῶν, utpote omni auctoritate justa destituta, defendi queat, equidem haud intelligo.' (N. T. Gr. ed. sec. ii. 115, Halae Sax. et Lond. 1806). It is now certified, not by Birch only, who might have been more heeded, notwithstanding the silence of the collation for Bentley, but by the personal and expressly minute examination of Tregelles, who rather looked for an erasure, but found no sign of it in B, but θεῶν, as also in A. Now no sober and intelligent mind can doubt that the weight of A and B is at least equal to A C D E.

Among the cursives, as usual, some may be of slight account, but others are really valuable and undeserving of so sweeping a censure. As to Versions, none can be produced of greater value than the Vulgate, and the most ancient and excellent copies, such as the Amiatine, Fuldensian, Demidovianus, Toletanus, et al., as well as the Clementine edition, have 'Dei'. It is rather audacious to begin with Epiphanius among the Fathers in face of the well-known allusion of Ignatius (Πρὸς Ἐφεσούς i.) which this verse alone can account for. Greek and Latin Fathers cite the common text, or refer freely to it (as Tertullian Ad Uxorem ii. 3, Clement Alex. ii. 3, 44) though no doubt there is a vacillation which answers to the various readings.

Griesbach also argues on the improbability that Athanasius could have read the text as it stands and deny as he does against Apollinarius that αἷμα θεοῦ occurs, ascribing such an expression to the Arians; indeed many besides Athanasius objected to such language. And it would have been truly impossible if διὰ τοῦ ἰδίου αἵματος had been the true reading. But it is not. The majority of later copies may support it, as they do the unquestionably wrong τοῦ κυρίου καὶ θεοῦ but all late critics agree to follow A B C D E, et al.

It would appear then that the great champion of orthodoxy must have understood τοῦ ἰδίου to be expressive of Christ, as God's 'own' One. Otherwise the emphasis, if we take τοῦ ἰδίου in concord, renders the phrase so intolerable that nothing but necessity could justify it. Is there any such need? In other words, if the true text were διὰ τοῦ ἰδίου αἵματος, we must translate it as in the Authorized Version and all others which were based on that reading now recognized as incorrect; and we could then understand the phrase only as predicated of Him Who is God by what theologians call κοινωνία ἰδιωμάτων. And Meyer considers that the true reading was changed to the common but indirect one because τοῦ ἰδίου, as it ought to be, might be referred to Christ. Dæderlein, Michaelis, and other moderns, when they so refer τοῦ ἰδίου, may have had low thoughts of Christ; but certainly not such was Athanasius, who, it seems, must have so understood the passage. Can it be questioned that the emphatic contrastive force, if we take it as God's own blood, brings the phrase under what he calls the τολμήματα τῶν Ἀρειανῶν?

It is easy to ask for justification by Greek usage. This is exactly what from the nature of the case could hardly be; for in all the New Testament, as there is no other instance of a noun followed by τοῦ ἰδίου, there is no distinct matter for comparison. But it is to be noticed that, where Christ goes before, what follows is διὰ τοῦ ἰδίου αἵματος (Heb. 9:12; 13:12). It is reasonable therefore to infer that, as the emphatic contrast would be dogmatically extravagant, the rendering most entitled to our acceptance is 'through the blood of His own One'. Dr. Hort indeed suggests 'through the blood that was His own, i.e., as being His Son's' (The N.T. in Greek, ii. 99). It may be doubted whether this will commend itself more than Mr. Darby's.

The general truth is untouched. The question is how best to solve the very real difficulty. The suggested version seems less objectionable than Dr. Hort's conjecture at the close of his note, that υἱοῦ may have dropped out of the τοῦ ἰδίου at some very early transcription affecting all existing documents. Conjectural emendation in N.T. scripture has never approached a proof of its need or value in a solitary example. He Who gave us His word has watched over it; and we need not distrust Him here. (G. C. Knapp, N.T. Gr. ii. 647, 8, ed. 4th, London, 1824) hazards another guess. 'Primitively perhaps it was thus written — the church, which He purchased with the blood of His own [namely, Son], Rom. 8:3, 32. Luke elsewhere always speaks simply of the church. Those who referred "purchased" to Christ, substituted, from Heb. 13:12, διὰ τοῦ ἰδίου αἵματος'. But leaving out his conjecture, he leans to this version, which he preferred to the usual one.)

The reasoning of Bp. Middleton (Greek Article, Rose's Ed., 291-5) is founded on the erroneous vulgar text, and directed mainly against Mr. G. Wakefield, whose version and notes are here, as ever, devoted to the confirmation of his heterodox views. But Michaelis was not so ignorant as to translate the common text as the Bp. says he did; nor ought a writer on the Greek article to have overlooked an emphasis in the repeated article, as compared with the ordinary form, which would be hard indeed to predicate of God as such, when the unemphatic only is applied to Christ's own blood. It is to be doubted therefore whether Bp. Middleton, or those who cite him in this connexion did really comprehend or see the true conditions of the question. For on the one hand the common deduction involves us in thoughts and expressions wholly foreign to scripture; on the other hand, if the Greek can honestly mean by the blood of His own One, the balance of truth is at once restored, and the utmost that can be alleged against the construction is that its seeming ambiguity might be supposed improbable for the apostle's mouth. That it is sound Greek to express this meaning will scarcely be disputed save by prejudiced persons who do not sufficiently bear in mind the graver objections to the other version. (See also J.N.D.'s footnote to the passage in his New Translation (1884).)

Returning then from the consideration of the passage, one may conclude that the Text. Rec. is right in reading church or assembly 'of God', but wrong in following that form of expression at the close of the verse which would compel us to translate, contrary to all the phraseology of scripture elsewhere, 'through His own blood'. The reading of all critics with adequate information and judgment might, and ordinarily would, bear the same meaning with the force of a contrasting emphasis, which is never used even of our Lord; if said of God, it is wholly unaccountable. It seems that this moral improbability made Athanasius deny the phrase (found in Ignatius, Clement of Alexandria, and Tertullian) to be in scripture; which nevertheless has it, and has it in the most pointed form, if we are bound to render διὰ τοῦ αἵματος τοῦ ἰδίου as scholars usually do, without speaking of the Oriental Versions, which cut the knot by giving 'the Lord', 'the Lord and God', and 'Christ'. But it seems only prejudice to deny that τοῦ ἰδίου may be as legitimately in regimen as in concord: if in regimen, the sense would be 'of His own One', and the difficulty of the right text is at an end. In this case the apostle employs unusually touching terms to enforce on the elders to shepherd the assembly of God, which He acquired to Himself through the blood of His own One, special personality being merged in a purchase so beyond measure dear and precious. That the Saviour is the Son of the Father from everlasting to everlasting is certain to the believer; but the Book of the Acts habitually presents the truth from a broader point of view with which the apostolic charge would here coalesce. (Exp. of Acts, p.309-313)

20:30 the: Here it may be noticed that the Authorized Version fails to represent the full malignity of the evil. Every party leader seeks to draw away disciples. Here it is the more aggravated effort to draw away 'the' disciples after them. It was to mislead them all, to subject all saints to themselves. . . . Let me notice again how the ordinary translation of verse 30 weakens the force of the last words. It is not merely to draw away 'disciples' after them: every heretic seeks to do and does this; but the object of the enemy through these perverse men is to draw away 'the' disciples, the body of those that confessed the Lord on the earth. Not less than the desertion of the whole flock was the blow aimed at the glory of Christ. (Exp. of Acts, p.314-316)

the: it is correctly . . . "the disciples" (Bible Treasury 13:336)

20:32, 26:18 sanctified: . . . the present participle may be used abstractedly apart from the question of the action or the passion. But the perfect tense could not be used as it is in [Heb. 10] verse 10 about the same persons at the same time, if the object were to define by ἀγιαζόμενοι that we are only under a process of sanctifying now going on, but as yet imperfect. For while the present may express either the actual time or the abstract character and object of the operation, the perfect necessarily gives the permanent result of a terminated action, and therefore affirms that we have been and are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all. It is no question of God's counsel respecting us, but of a present abiding effect of Christ's finished work. Hence to lay stress on ἀγιαζόμενοι as if it must needs indicate a process going on is not only arbitrary, because the present participle does not always convey this force, but even negated by ἡγιασμένοι which decides the time and excludes what is imperfect. It is not potentiality, but a present fact and a continuous character acquired by Christians through the accomplished and accepted sacrifice of Christ. To translate therefore in verse [Heb. 10:] 14 τοὺς ἀγιαζομένους as "them who are being sanctified" is, under the appearance of literal precision, to prove that we have never seen the true spirit of the passage, and that we do not understand the apostle's doctrine on this great head; and the rather too as τετελειώκεν ("he hath perfected") in the same clause is irreconcilable with this effort to get rid of sanctification here as a standing condition, by denying the abstract force of the present participle as used in this case. It is interesting to observe that in the same chapter ([Heb. 10] ver. 29) the Spirit employs the aorist ἡγιασθή to describe him who had once been a baptised confessor of Christ crucified, but afterwards turned out an apostate. That tense simply states the fact historically; whereas the perfect, adding to it the idea of an existing result, could not properly be used of one who had spurned Christ and counted the blood of the covenant a common thing. It is not true that he had advanced so far in the spiritual life that this blood had been applied by faith, or that its hallowing or purifying effects were visible in his life.

Such talk is merely imaginative, not only without scripture, but neglecting the obvious intimation of that which is said; for the passage says nothing of spiritual life, or of applying the blood by faith, or of purifying effects visible or invisible, but only of sinning wilfully after having received the knowledge of the truth. Be it ever so exact and full, this in no way implies in itself a divine work in the conscience so that the person was born again and converted to God, but such a clear full and certain knowledge as many unconverted men possess who nevertheless hold fast the truth in unrighteousness. Very different is the statement in Heb. 9:14 where the blood of Christ is said to purify the conscience from dead works in order to serve (i.e. religiously) the true God. (Bible Treasury N11:335, Pamphlets, 169-170)

21:4 out: The unlading of the cargo gave the apostle and his companions the time, not exactly to find disciples as in the Authorized Version, but to find 'out' the disciples. We cannot as in the Greek idiom say, 'found up', though we do say 'hunted up'. It would appear hence that they were the object of search, not of casual discovery. (Exp. of Acts, p.320)

21:8 ^Λ we ^Λ : 'Paul, and we that were with him', is a later reading, which slipped into the Text. Rec., the Authorized Version, et al. (Exp. of Acts, p.321)

21:10 many: [The American correctors of the RV] would give in the text the Revisers' marginal "some." "More" than might have been expected is the source of the phrase. (Bible Treasury 14:351)

21:15 baggage: 'Our carriages' would convey a mistaken impression to ears familiar only with modern English. It is possible that at the time of our Authorized Version, the word was used in a double sense, as has been suggested; not only as now for the vehicle which carries, but also for what was carried in it. The Old Testament likewise contains the word in its old meaning, which of course is found in profane writers of that day also. (Exp. of Acts, p.323-4) baggage: "our baggage" or "effects" is right instead of "carriages." (Bible Treasury 13:336)

21:16 early: An 'old' disciple is certainly not exact, and may not even be true, ἀρχαίω expressing not his age as a man, but his discipleship from the beginning. It is interesting thus to find incidentally that Cyprus had been blessed of God, not only through the visits of Paul and Barnabas, but even before. (Exp. of Acts, p.324)

22:7 voice: In chap. 9 φωνή 'sound' or 'voice' is in the genitive, and merely partitive; in chap. 22 it is the accusative which has the largest bearing on the object and is not partitive. (Exp. of Acts, p.333)

22:9 ^Λ but: Text. Rec. adds on large authority of MSS. et al., καὶ ἐμφοβοὶ ἐγένοντο, 'and they were affrighted', but ^Λ A B H, several cursives, and the best Versions leave the words out. (Exp. of Acts, p.333)

22:16 get: Here also we have the interesting fact of the terms in which Ananias called him to 'get baptized' or submit to baptism, on which a few words may be well, as to some there is no small difficulty. The reason of the departure from the Authorized Version, as well as the Revised, however slight, is an endeavour to express the force of the Middle Voice, as it is called, in Greek. This, however, is independent of the (to some) doctrinal difficulty in calling on the apostle to have his sins washed away in baptism. (Exp. of Acts, p.337)

His: So the most ancient MSS. and Versions, but H L P and most read τοῦ κυρίου 'of the Lord,' as in the Text. Rec. (Exp. of Acts, p.336)

22:20 consenting ^Λ : The Text. Rec. adds with many MSS. et al. 'to his death,' evidently imported from Acts 8:1, but the best copies (^Λ A B E) and versions do not sanction it. (Exp. of Acts, p.338)

23:6 a son of Pharisees: (Such is the reading of the most ancient MSS. with the Vulgate and Pesch. Syr.) . . . Paul was not only a Pharisee but a son of Pharisees, a stronger expression than that which obtains in the Received Text or the Authorized Version. (Exp. of Acts, p.344,346)

a son of Pharisees: The plural form is recommended to us by the most ancient uncials, some good cursives, the Vulgate and the Syriac; the singular prevails in the great majority of copies and versions. Being more natural or customary, though far less energetic, we can understand copyists falling into it. (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist. and Rev., p.160-1)

23:9 angel? Λ : chapter 23:9 ends correctly with "and if a spirit hath spoken to him, or an angel?" So \aleph A B C E and other good authorities, though the addition of the common text is not without numerous attestations. (Bible Treasury 13:336)

23:11 cheer, Λ : 'Paul' is not in the best authorities. (Exp. of Acts, p.346)

23:12 the Jews: And it is evident that the ecclesiastical chiefs were quite as much implicated as the blood-thirsty rabble, the prey of crafty leaders who taught that religion sanctifies murder (John 16:2). It is therefore said to be 'the Jews', not merely 'some of the Jews', as in the softened words of the Received Text. (Exp. of Acts, p.348)

23:14 put ourselves under a great curse: 'We have cursed ourselves with a curse' it is literally; which may be correctly rendered, 'a great curse'. (Exp. of Acts, p.347)

23:15 you Λ : 'Tomorrow', though read by H L P and most, is not in the oldest witnesses, but implied of course in the story. (Exp. of Acts, p.347)

23:21 the: Not 'a', but what they counted on already. (Exp. of Acts, p.348)

23:23 spearmen: 'Spearmen' is rather a guess for $\delta\epsilon\lambda\omicron\lambda\acute{\alpha}\beta\omicron\upsilon\varsigma$, which has been variously but not yet satisfactorily explained. Meyer cites Const. Porphyrog. who distinguishes the $\delta\epsilon\lambda\omicron\lambda\acute{\alpha}\beta\omicron\upsilon\varsigma$ from bowmen and targeteers. Grasping the weapon with the right hand is not very distinctive. (Exp. of Acts, p.349)

23:27 soldiery: $\sigma\upsilon\nu\ \tau\acute{\omega}\ \sigma\tau\rho.$ is not "with an army," but with the soldiery, or my soldiers. (Bible Treasury 13:336)

23:30 forthwith: The question raised in 23:30 is between $\acute{\epsilon}\xi\alpha\upsilon\tau\eta\varsigma$ which the Revisers prefer on the excellent authority of B H L P, most cursives, Syr. Pesh., Sah., Memph., Theb., &c., and $\acute{\epsilon}\xi\ \acute{\alpha}\nu\tau\omega\nu$ \aleph A E, a few cursives and Versions. Alford, Green, Westcott and Hort adopt the former, as Lachmann, Tischendorf, and Tregelles the latter. The Revisers are, I doubt not, right; though it might be well, with the Americans [correctors to the RV], to add the other in the margin. (Bible Treasury 14:351)

24:1 certain: ($\tau\iota\nu\ \acute{\omega}\nu$ \aleph A B E, et al.) . . . we may well receive the more ancient witnesses which speak only of certain elders, instead of the Sanhedrim as a whole as in the Received Text. But the more modern copies in this case present without doubt the more difficult reading. Had the authorities been reversed, the critics would probably have regarded $\tau\iota\nu\acute{\omega}\nu$ as a softened correction of $\tau\acute{\omega}\nu$ (Exp. of Acts, p.351)

24:2 reforms: $\delta\iota\omicron\rho\theta\omega\mu\acute{\alpha}\tau\omega\nu$ the more ancient reading, rather than $\kappa\alpha\tau\omicron\rho\theta\omega\mu\acute{\alpha}\tau\omega\nu$ as in the Text. Rec. (Exp. of Acts, p.351)

24:5 insurrections: The plural form is best attested, though Dean Alford will have it to be a correction. (Exp. of Acts, p.351)

24:6-8 [end of 24:6 to start of 24:8]: The bracketed passage in verses 6-8 may be questioned fairly. It is omitted by the witnesses of chief value, and consequently is not received by the Editors, Griesbach, Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles, nor by Mill and Bengel before them. Alford writes undecidedly. Undoubtedly the variations are great in the manuscripts which have the substance. De Wette represents a class of men usually bold; but here it is admitted that it is hardly to be supposed that Tertullus should have said so little, or that Luke should have omitted if he said more; and again it is plain that to stop at the seizure of Paul by the Jews, without explaining how he got rid of them and came into the custody of Lysias before being taken to Cæsarea, leaves the speech remarkably abrupt. But Alford sees in verse 22 a strong argument for the genuineness of the words in debate, because $\pi\alpha\rho'\ \omicron\upsilon$, if the words to be inserted, refer, naturally to Lysias, and we find Felix there putting off the final hearing and decision till the arrival of Lysias. If the words are not genuine, $\pi\alpha\rho'\ \omicron\upsilon$ would rather refer to Paul which the Dean considers unlikely. Others on the contrary allow that at an anacrisis, or first hearing, this is quite correct, and altogether independent of torture, which in the case of a Roman was of course illegal. More might be added in evidence of the uncertainty which hangs over the bracketed words; but it seems unedifying to say more, if one cannot adduce proof enough to clear up the question either way. Abridgement is at least a rare fault in the copyists, who were more prone to venture on insertions to ease the sense when it seemed obscure. (Exp. of Acts, p.352)

24:10 I Λ : 'The more' is not sustained by the best copies (\aleph A B E, et al.). (Exp. of Acts, p.353)

24:11 ascertain: 'To know fully', 'recognize', or 'ascertain', is the preferable reading (\aleph A B E, et al.). (Exp. of Acts, p.353)

24:12 tumult: [See note to 2 Cor. 11:28]

24:13 to thee: 'To thee' is omitted wrongly in the Text. Rec. (Exp. of Acts, p.353)

24:14 sect: the Revisers rightly say "a sect," or faction or parties, as they should have said, not heresies but sects or factions in 1 Corinthians 11:19, and in Galatians 5:20, as Titus 3:10 should be factions rather than "heretical." (Bible Treasury 13:336)

24:15 resurrection Λ : The best MSS. (\aleph A B C et al.) omit $\nu\epsilon\kappa\rho\acute{\omega}\nu$ 'of dead'. (Exp. of Acts, p.354)

24:16,18 Λ Herein . . . but: 'But' is in verse 18 read by the better authorities, as in verse 16 it should be omitted. (Exp. of Acts, p.354)

24:17 several: [See note to Acts 21:10]

24:18 but: [See note to 24:16]

24:20 what: 'What', not 'if', is right. (Exp. of Acts, p.354)

25:3 wait: if we will be exact, it is rather laying "an ambush" than "a plot" or "wait." (Bible Treasury 14:351)

25:5 power . . . amiss . . . the: The only thing one would now notice in chapter 25 is in verse 5, where the Authorized Version deserts Erasmus and Stephens for the Complutensian and Beza (at least in his later editions, for up to that of 1565 he too omitted $\acute{\alpha}\tau\omicron\pi\omicron\nu$). Only the modern critics (Alford, Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles) exclude $\tau\acute{\omicron}\upsilon\tau\omega$ "this" as well as adopt $\acute{\alpha}\tau\omicron\pi\omicron\nu$ "amiss." It may be added that $\delta\upsilon\nu\alpha\tau\acute{\omicron}\iota$ here does not refer to ability, as in the Authorized Version, following Erasmus and Beza, but to power, influence, or authority, as in the Vulgate potentes, not qui . . . possunt. (Bible Treasury 13:336)

26:1 for Λ : Here and elsewhere in these verses occur several readings scarce affecting a version. (Exp. of Acts, p.366)

26:2,3,4,7 Λ Jews . . . Λ Jews . . . Λ Jews . . . Λ Jews: In this connexion there is no article in the text of verses 2,3, as there should be none in verses 4 and 7, though in verse 4 there is much conflict among the MSS. (even the best uncials), and only Lachmann, and Alford, Tregelles, with Westcott and Hort, follow BC^{pm}E, et al., here, against the rest in omitting the article. Nor is it to be wondered at that Tischendorf, who had dropped it in his later editions up to the seventh, went back in his eighth to that of his earlier issues in 1841 and both of 1842. The fact is that the sense required in this phrase here seems without example in the New Testament, where in other cases πάντες οἱ Ἰουδαῖοι is the correct form, and the article, as far as I have noticed, could not be omitted without damage. Here there is a distinct and unusual peculiarity; for 'all the Jews' are not meant, but all Jews knowing Paul before from the outset. This accordingly requires πάντες Ἰουδαῖοι προγινώσκωντές με ἀνωθεν.

All Greek Testament students know of course the late Dean Alford's note on verse 2, which seems a long-standing reproach to scholars and ought to have been repudiated far and wide: for I cannot doubt there must be not a few beside the late Bishop of Durham, who are aware of the fallacy. 'There is no force in Meyer's observation that by the article before Ἰουδαίων, Paul wishes to express that the charges were made by some, not by all of the Jews. That omission is the one so often overlooked by the German critics (e.g., Stier also here), after a preposition. See Middl. ch. vi. § 1, and compare κατὰ Ἰουδαίους in the next verse, of which the above cannot be said' (Greek Test. ii. 276, fifth ed. 1865).

Now it is admitted that the celebrated German expositor's remark is imperfect, even though in many cases true. The omission of the article is due here and everywhere to presenting the word or combination of words characteristically, whilst the use of the article presents it as an object before the mind. There may be a very few exceptions, but these only prove that the rule is otherwise universal. And prepositions are in no way an exception, though they admit freely of serving to define the characteristic design of the anarthrous construction, which has been overlooked by English scholars quite as much perhaps as German. This is exactly one of the great defects of Bishop Middleton's able treatise, which has for effect the making imaginary exceptions as numerous as the rule. This of itself ought to have indicated failure in generalization. John 4:9 is a plain illustration of the principle: not only πῶς οὐ Ἰουδαῖος ὢν which every one sees, but Ἰουδαῖοι Σαμαρεῖταις where the article for either would be out of place if the object were, as it certainly is, to mark both characteristically.

It is no question of 'some' no doubt. And the article might have been with truth prefixed to both; but the meaning would have been altered. The two peoples would then stand contrasted as objects, not characteristically as they are now. Compare for this a selection from the book of Acts, chapters 2:5, 7, 9-11; 11:19; 14:1, 5, 19; 18:4; 19:10, 17; 20:21; 25:10. Again, any intelligent examination of the Greek Testament cannot fail to convince that the preposition makes no difference whatever. The article is or is not used with the word in question like every other, in accordance with its principle of insertion or omission.

Thus in Matt. 28:15 character is the point, and therefore it is παρὰ Ἰουδαίους. In John 4:22 the Jews are the object, and hence it is ἐκ τῶν Ἰουδαίων: so in chapters 10:19, and 11:54, ἐν τοῖς Ἰουδαίοις in 11:19, ἐκ τῶν Ἰουδαίων; in 18:38, πρὸς τοὺς Ἰουδαίους. It is really a total oversight of the nice shades of thought in the Greek language to conceive that there is the least laxity or exception after prepositions. Perhaps the notion is due to the difficulty of always representing the distinction in English, which sometimes compels us to use our definite article where there is none in Greek. But this is no reason to deny that there is invariably an intended difference. Weigh Acts 23:8 where we have Σαδδουκαῖοι and Φαρισαῖοι without the article, though there is no preposition. If οἱ had been prefixed to each, it would have been true; but the absence of the article makes them characteristic, however hard it may be to express it in English.

And there is an analogous difference in the cases before us, alike when with or without prepositions. 'I am accused by Jews' in verses 2 and 7 is far more forcible than if the article had been inserted. It was not lost on Agrippa or Festus or the Jews that heard it. Of all men Jews were the last to have accused Paul for proclaiming in Jesus the resurrection that is from among the dead. Sadduceanism had alas! withered up their old faith. As a fact, too, which may be weighed with Meyer and Stier, the Pharisees diverged in chapter 23 from the dominant faction which persecuted Paul. The preposition clearly gives not licence, (ὐπό) Jews, not the Jews, being meant. Nor is it otherwise with κατὰ Ἰουδαίους, however confidently urged. Doubtless 'according to the Jews' would have been true in fact; but it is stated characteristically; and here again as 'Jews', not 'the Jews', is the force intended, so it is evident once more that the preposition does not really affect the question. The article is inserted or omitted with prepositions on its own principle. Lastly, to be correct, πάντες οἱ Ἰουδαῖοι would require οἱ προγινώσκωντές qualifying the subject, πάντες Ἰουδαῖοι προγινώσκωντές is correct as it is given; for it means only all such Jews as previously knew Paul from the outset. In a word it is characteristic and therefore anarthrous. Not only is πάντες οἱ Ἰουδαῖοι the more usual expression, but quite distinct in sense; for it means the whole Jewish people as a known, definite and complete object, whereas the phrase here means all Jews qualified by the peculiar and described knowledge of Paul. (Exp. of Acts, p.367-8)

26:2 today Δ : Beza alone adopted εἰδώς (in his edition of 1582 and afterwards) 'in uno codice peruetusto — certainly an error, for the three cursives that give it are comparatively modern. Had he known ἐπιστάμενος there would have been better reason, as A C, et al., have it. But either is a gloss. (Exp. of Acts, p.366)

26:3 Δ Jews: [See note to 26:2]

26:4 and: κ A B E^{gr}, et al. (Exp. of Acts, p.366)
 Δ Jews: [See note to 26:2]

26:7 Δ Jews: [See note to 26:2]

King Δ : τῶν and Ἀγρίππα omitted by the best authorities τῶν by almost all. (Exp. of Acts, p.366)

26:17 taking thee out: Verse 17 is not well given by either the Revisers or the Authorized Version. Though the word may bear 'delivering', as it often signifies, its simpler meaning of 'taking out' is far more suitable to the context and the truth intended and verified in the apostle's career. It is admitted on all hands that the Lord's taking Saul out from the people (or the Jews) is suitable; but De Wette and Meyer allege that it does not chime in with the Gentiles. This seems quite a mistake. Separation from both is most appropriate to characterize his position; and there is no need to extend 'unto whom I send thee' beyond the latter. . . . The 'I' is emphatic, and the adverb 'now' only added by inferior witnesses.

The difficulty these scholars feel is owing to their ignorance of Christian position, and even of Christianity according to Scripture. For the Jew believing in Christ is not levelled down to a Gentile, nor yet is the believing Gentile raised up to that of the Jew; but the Holy Spirit unites both to Christ in heavenly glory, while at the same time the gospel of grace goes forth indiscriminately, but to the Gentile practically, as the once favoured nation is given up to temporary blindness in God's just judgment. (Exp. of Acts, p.372-3) taking thee out: ἐξαίρ. does not seem to mean deliverance or rescue, but taking Paul out from the people, and from the Gentiles. (Bible Treasury 13:336)

26:18 sanctified: [See note to Acts 20:32]

26:23 He first by resurrection: [See note to Rom. 1:4.]

26:28 [pains] . . . great [pains]: May I be permitted to examine the criticism which has been rather confidently applied to this passage? It will be seen that the usual view, with a slight modification, has little to fear from its rivals. Far from being "philologically" or "exegetically" impossible, it seems to be a legitimate and even a necessary construction.

1. It is a mistake if it be supposed that we are restricted to ὀλίγων for the meaning "almost." The Dean of Christ Church and Dr. Scott are no mean witnesses as to such a point; and they give ὀλίγων or ὀλίγω as so far equivalent, though doubtless the former is the more common; while παρ' ὀλίγων is not infrequent in the Septuagint, and Aquila (in Ps. 71:2) has ὡς ὀλίγων in the same sense. Whatever may be thought of the spirituality of "most of the ancient commentators," it would be strange if Greek fathers, able and eloquent, like Chrysostom for instance, perpetrated the alleged blunder as to their own mother tongue. Who, again, can doubt Theodoret's idea, after reading the following allusion to our text, παρ' ὀλίγων με πείθεις ὁμοουσιαστὴν γενέσθαι (v.930, ed. Schulz.) I infer from such circumstances that the phrase was capable of the meaning "almost," in the judgment of those who ought to be eminently competent to treat of the question.

2. It is agreed that χρόνῳ though often supplying the sense where ἐν ὀλίγῳ occurs in ordinary Greek, is inadmissible here from contextual reasons. What Dr. Davidson says (Introd. N.T. vol.ii.p.95) after Hensen and De Wette, is quite unsatisfactory; but I need not dwell on it, as Mr. Alford also rejects it.

3. If any word is to be supplied to the phrase, μέτρῳ μέρει, or some such noun, would make good sense, but it is better left general. The old English word "lightly" (i.e. with little pains) is as unsuitable to Ephes. 3:3, as to our text, and these are the only occurrences in the New Testament. For, in the Epistle, the Apostle does not want to imply that he had written before with little pains; which I must be forgiven for pronouncing an absurd interpretation. He alludes to the previous scanty or brief notice, as compared with the fuller development the subject was now receiving at his hands. The idea of little pains, or ease, is out of the question, and it is wrong to slur it over as equivalent to "few words." On the other hand, the sense "in a little (measure)" is clear in itself, and evidently consistent with the purport of the verse and the context. It is equally in keeping with Acts 26:28,29, . . . Thus the present tense is no difficulty whatever, nor the appellation; for his mind might easily allow the propriety of that which contrasted strangely with his worldly position, and the verb expresses the actual effect on the King, not his intentions. Whether one looks at verse 27, or at verses 31, 32, it is an incongruous notion that Agrippa was so insensible to the solemn appeal as to answer ironically. Besides, as I have already pointed out, to make ἐν ὀλίγῳ mean "lightly," "with little pains," or "with ease," is to put an intolerable sense on Ephes. 3:3; and it is not pretended that it has a different meaning there and in Acts. What is more, that construction, no less than De Wette's, compels us to take the copulative in a disjunctive sense, which, I am bold to say, is unjustifiable, especially where two occur, as here, together. It is manifest that Matt. 7:10, James 4:13, are not parallel, even if the readings were indisputable. I have no hesitation, therefore, in stating my conviction that Mr. Alford's rendering (i.e. "lightly," in verse 28, and "whether with ease or with difficulty," in verse 29, which, I presume, would require εἴτε or the like) upsets the grammar of the last verse, affords a jejune meaning which coheres with the context neither before nor after, and reduces Ephes. 3:3, to nonsense, if the same phrase be supposed to carry the same force, which is intimated. The Syriac, Vulgate, Diodati, Martin, Ostervald, De Genoude, the Lausanne version, &c. maintain in substance the old and truer view. (Christian Annotator 2:395-396)

[pains] . . . great [pains]: Verses 28, 29 [in the RV] are given correctly in the main. "In a little thou art persuading me to become a Christian. And Paul, I would to God, both in a little and in much that not thou only but also," &c. (Bible Treasury 13:336)

[pains] . . . great [pains]: I doubt that either Revisers or Americans have hit the mark in 26:28,29. "In a little thou art persuading" &c. "Both in a little and in a great" [degree] &c. (Bible Treasury 14:351) persuading _A : A reads πείθῃ, 'thou art persuading thyself', which Alford adopts; but _{B E H L P}, et al., support πείθεις as in the Text. Rec. Only instead of γενέσθαι _{A B} and four cursives with several ancient versions sustain ποιῆσαι. (Exp. of Acts, p.375)

26:29 great: μεγάλῳ _{A B}, six cursives, and almost all the ancient versions instead of πόλλῳ, as in most copies followed by the Text. Rec. . . . This appears to be the sense if we take into account the critical reading μεγάλῳ in what follows. Were the Received Text justified which gives πόλλῳ 'much', this rendering could hardly stand; for the more natural force would then be 'in a little while', distinguished from 'much time'. (Exp. of Acts, p.375-6) great [pains]: [See note to 26:28]

26:30 And _A : The Text. Rec. adds 'when he said these things' with the mass, contrary to the most ancient and best copies. The ancient text gives the impression of an abrupt closure on Agrippa's part; the addition takes it away. (Exp. of Acts, p.375)

27:1 a: 'One' in this case is quite uncalled for, as in all the Protestant English Versions from Tyndale. (Exp. of Acts, p.378)

27:2 about to sail: μέλλοντι (i.e. the ship) _{A B}, some 30 cursives, and the ancient versions; μέλλοντες (i.e., we) Text. Rec. with which agrees _{H L P} and most MSS. (Exp. of Acts, p.378) to: εἰς is doubtful, but the sense remains. (Exp. of Acts, p.378)

27:3 the [or, his]: The article is genuine, though omitted in the Text. Rec. (Exp. of Acts, p.378)

27:7 with difficulty: 'Scarce' as in the Authorized Version (ver. 7) does not give the thought intended, but 'with difficulty'. (Exp. of Acts, p.379)

27:9 voyage: "the voyage," not sailing or navigation (Bible Treasury 13:336)

27:12 Phoenix: This harbour on the south of Crete ought to have been distinguished by its true name from Phoenix or Phoenicia (Acts 11:19; 15:3; 21:2), the Canaanite land of Tyre and Sidon: the one deriving its designation from the palm tree that flourished there; the other from the famous dye, or shell fish, that produced all shades from red to violet, generally called purple. (Exp. of Acts, p.380) north-east and south-east: The value of a close adherence to the text is remarkably shown by the numerous mistranslations of this chapter, which had introduced confusion and insuperable difficulty for exposition. A striking instance occurs at the end of verse 12, where the Authorized Version represents this haven of Crete, Phoenix, or Lutro, as lying 'toward the south-west and north-west.' What the clause says is that the harbour looks 'down' (κατὰ) south-west and down north-west. But looking down a wind means along or with the direction in which it blows, and not to the quarter whence it came. The meaning therefore is that the port of Phoenix looks north-east, and south-east, the points opposite to those which have been understood. Now this (says Mr. Smith) is exactly the position of Lutro, which 'looks' or is open to the east; but having an island in front which shelters it, it has two entrances, one looking the north-east, which is κατὰ Λίβα, and the other to the south-east, κατὰ Χῶρον. (The translators not only mistake κατὰ in this connexion, but they omit the precision of the repetition of it from Tyndale downwards, as others did before them.)

Hackett, who does not think it safe to give up the common interpretation, objects to this view of Mr. Smith that it involves two inconsistencies. First, it assigns opposite senses to the same term, viz. south-west as the name of a wind and north-east as the name of a quarter of the heavens. Secondly, it destroys the force of βλέποντα, which implies that the wind and the harbour confronted each other, and not that they were turned from each other. But the reasoning is faulty, because the fact is misunderstood. The harbour in question does look with the wind in each case, so that the force of 'looking' is preserved intact; and again the winds in question are preserved in their exact force and not confounded with aught else. Only looking down south-west wind and down north-west wind means in fact looking north-east and south-east. The Authorized Version confounds κατὰ with πρὸς or εἰς. The direction toward the source of the wind is expressed by the latter; whereas the nautical phrase of down the wind means whither it blows. Hence Phoenix looked north-east and south-east. The look of the harbour signifies the direction to which — not from which — these winds blow. The harbour looked down the south-west and down the north-west winds, i.e., in both directions; and hence to the north-east and south-east quarters, as the resulting force. The winds are only to mark the outlook definitely. Nautical phrases abound in the chapter. Josephus uses κατὰ λίβα just as it is here (Antt. Jud. xv. 9, 6). See Lidell & Scott on κατα B.I. 1. (Exp. of Acts, p.381)

north-east and south-east: down south-west or down north-west (verse 12) means the opposite point of the wind, i.e. looking north-east and south-east. (Bible Treasury 13:336)

27:13 close: Here the Vulgate misled Wiclif, Tyndale, and Cranmer to give the imaginary port of Assos (the true place was away in Mysia, compare Acts 20:13,14), instead of 'close', rectified in the Geneva Version after Beza who refuted the proper name with ability, and proved the necessity of understanding the adverb. (Exp. of Acts, p.381-2)

27:14 beat down: The hurricane that caught the ship 'beat down' from Crete, which appears to be the true force of κατ' αὐτῆς, not 'arose against it', i.e., the ship, as in the Authorized Version (ver. 14). This is confirmed by Luke 8:23, though ἔβαλε κατὰ is a far more forcible expression than κατέβη . . . εἰς as indeed the case here demanded. Compare also, as Mr. Smith suggested, κατὰ τοῦ κρημνοῦ in Luke 8:33. Other ways of taking the words are unnatural in the extreme. Tyndale, after Luther probably, refers 'it' to 'their purpose' in verse 13. The version of Geneva (1557) should be noticed: 'But anone after there arose agaynst Candie, a stormye wynd out of the north-east.' Now this was not the fact. The wind blew down from Crete, not against Crete, which it could not do. Besides the accusative not the genitive would have been employed in that case. The Authorized Version, with most, understood the ship, which however is in the context always πλοῖον and therefore ungrammatical. Only in verse 41 is ναὺς employed. The beating of the tornado down the highlands of Crete seems a far more graphic account than its striking against the ship, which was a matter of course in that sea when exposed to a rushing east-north-east wind. (Exp. of Acts, p.382-3)

Euraquilo: So in the oldest MSS. and Versions; but most have Euroclydon . . . And here it may be remarked that Euroclydon is no known appellation, nor is there any satisfactory source of the word. The more ancient εὐρακύλων is to be preferred, testified by the best MSS. and Versions. J. Bryant's objections to the compound are not well grounded. Euro-Auster is a similiar hybrid. (Exp. of Acts, p.382-3)

27:16 Claudia: In the Vatican and Vulgate it is Cauda. (Exp. of Acts, p.382)

27:17 Syrtis: What is rendered in the Authorized Version 'the quicksands' ought really to be 'the Syrtis'. Two Syrtis are spoken of. This was the greater or eastern, now the gulf of Sidra, which Admiral Smyth was the first to survey adequately, as shown in his Memoirs on the Mediterranean: an object of great and natural dread to ancient seamen. (Exp. of Acts, p.383)

lowered the gear: In this same verse (17) occurs one of the most serious of the many mistakes in the older versions, even Meyer and other moderns perpetuating them. Had they 'struck sail', the ship must inevitably have been driven directly into the Syrtis. 'It is not easy (says Mr. Smith) to imagine a more erroneous translation than that of our Authorized Version "Fearing lest they should fall into the quicksands, they strake sail, and so were driven." It is in fact equivalent to saying that, fearing certain danger, they deprived themselves of the only possible means of avoiding it.' Some sail, as the authorities lay down and as common sense feels, is absolutely requisite to keep the ship steady, and hinder her from pitching about and rolling so deeply as to strain and work herself to pieces. Hence the measures necessary were that storm-sails should be set, and the ship go on the starboard tack. 'Lowering the gear' is the right translation. Kypke who was a sensible man and sound scholar, is surprisingly loose in his annotations here. He will have it to be 'letting down the anchor'! as βλέποντα κατὰ in verse 12 and elsewhere: he illustrates by βλέποντα πρὸς. It is singular that Kühnöl, De Wette, and Meyer followed in this wake, so inconsistent with the context. (Exp. of Acts, p.383-4) lowered the gear: χαλ τὸ σκεῦος is not "strake sail," but "lowered the gear," and so scudded (οὕτως ἐφ.). (Bible Treasury 13:336)

27:19 they: Most MSS., et al., have 'we', but not the most ancient. (Exp. of Acts, p.382)

27:30 lay out: the sense is to lay or carry out, not to "cast out," anchors (Bible Treasury 13:336)

27:37 two hundred: the omission of 200 in the Vatican MS., and the Sahidic version is not, as is suggested [by the American correctors to the RV], worth notice in the Revisers' margin. (Bible Treasury 14:351)

27:40 casting off, they left . . . foresail: The Authorized Version here (ver. 40) is far from accurate. They did not take up the anchors, but cast them away (lit., round), and abandoned them (not 'themselves') into the sea. The loosing of the bands of the rudders, attached to the stern on each quarter, was a necessary act; for when a ship was anchored by the stern, the rudders had to be lifted out of the water and secured by lashings, which again were loosed when the ship got under way. Further, it was not the 'mainsail', but the foresail, which they raised to the wind. Possibly the French term misled here; but the weight of practical or circumstantial evidence, as in Smith's Dissertation iii., seems decisive. In this sense ἀρτέμων occurs in no ancient Greek author. We see a foresail in an old painting of Pompeii. Luke alone designates it here. (Exp. of Acts, p.387) casting off, they left . . . foresail: nor does 40 mean "taking up" but casting off the anchors; nor committing themselves but letting the anchor go into the sea; as also by τὸν ἀπτ. is meant the foresail, not the "mainsail." The revision [RV] in all this seems quite correct. (Bible Treasury 13:336)

28:7 the chief: There is good reason from more than one ancient inscription to regard 'the first', or 'chief' as a title and not a vague distinction. (Exp. of Acts, p.391)

28:8 fever: Fever is in the Greek plural, being a malady of renewed attacks. No writer in either the Old or New Testament abounds in such medical technicality as Luke; and nobody has so elaborately evinced this fact as Dr. W. K. Hobart in his Medical Language of St. Luke, an interesting volume of the Dublin University Press Series. (Exp. of Acts, p.391)

28:16 [the centurion delivered the prisoners to the captain of the prætorian guard, but]: The most ancient copies do not recognize the bracketed clause. (Exp. of Acts, p.395)

[the centurion delivered the prisoners to the captain of the prætorian guard, but]: [In the RV] the doubtful authority of the central part of verse 16 is acknowledged (Bible Treasury 13:336)

28:17 he: The Text. Rec. wrongly reads 'Paul' here on insufficient evidence. (Exp. of Acts, p.395)

28:23 ^Λ concerning: The Text. Rec. adds 'the things'. (Exp. of Acts, p.396)

^Λ concerning: [See note to Acts 8:12]

28:28 ^Λ salvation: The Text. Rec. inserts 'the': 'this' is the reading of [⌘] A B, good cursives, and many of the most ancient versions. (Exp. of Acts, p.396)

28:29 [whole verse]: Verse 29 in the Text. Rec. as represented in the Authorized Version is not found in the ancient Greek MSS. To cast out an innovation is the reverse of innovating. (Exp. of Acts, p.396)

[whole verse]: the doubtful authority of . . . the whole of verse 29, the best witnesses being adverse, not only in MSS but in the ancient versions. (Bible Treasury 13:336)

Notes for Romans

1:1 called: The first verse of the first chapter of Romans [in the RV] affords an instance of loose or wrong views. "Called to be an apostle" [in the RV] is no less mistaken than "called to be saints" in verse 7. As he was then an apostle, so were they saints. There is no need of supplying any words in either case; and in both the supply of "to be" rather weakens and falsifies, instead of justly defining the sense. It was for the saints in their call, as for the apostle in his, a fact. In neither case was it a birthright, nor was it a human acquirement; but they became, what they were, apostles or saints by calling. It was the call of grace, according to divine purpose, but an actual relationship, which "to be" at least obscures. So it is also in 1 Corinthians, Jude, and the Revelation, as well as in Romans 8:28. (Bible Treasury 13:348) [See note to 1 Cor. 1:1]

1:2 scriptures: Again, γρ. singular or plural, for "the scripture" or "the scriptures," regularly takes the article; so that, in Greek, there must be a specific reason here to render the word anarthrous. The epithets here and in chapter 16:26 are supposed by some to account for this, as others allege the prepositions; but neither ground seems satisfactory; and it is weak to say that it was indifferent to insert or omit the Greek article. The expression here then appears to be purposely general. Further, the characteristic description of, not God's gospel only, but His Son, in verses 3, 4, is not as faithfully reflected in the Revision [of 1881] as one might desire: see also verse 16. (Bible Treasury 13:348)

1:4 by resurrection of [the] dead: The exact phrase in question occurs not eleven times, but twice, in the New Testament. In my opinion our translators have rendered it as well perhaps as the language admits. Acts 26:23, is somewhat free owing to the form of the sentence εἰ πρῶτος ἐξ ἀναστάσεως νεκρῶν, "that he should be the first that should rise from the dead." The exact meaning is, that Christ was to be the first strictly and properly risen from the dead, νεκρῶν simply qualifying ἐξ ἀν. and declaring it to be resurrection in the fullest sense. It is a characteristic description, and therefore without the article. The same remark applies to Rom. 1:4. It is quite a mistake to suppose that the singular is meant either there or in Acts 17:32. If a definite class were intended, the article would be necessary; where the character of the thing is in question it is excluded, whether or not a preposition is employed. If the English idiom admitted of the phrase "by dead resurrection," as the German "durch Todten-auferstehung," it would convey the sense of the Greek; but this would be to revolutionise the language, and to Hellenise, not to translate. (Christian Annotator 3:384)

1:5 Gentiles: Or, nations. (Notes on Romans, v.)

1:6 called: [See note to 1 Cor. 1:1]

1:7 called: [see notes to Rom. 1:1, and 1 Cor. 1:1]

1:16 gospel _Λ: The Company [of Revisers of 1881] have, as almost all allow, properly cast out "of Christ" (ver. 16), "also" (ver. 24), "of and fornication" (verse 29), "implacable" (ver. 31). (Bible Treasury 13:349)

gospel _Λ: The Company [of Revisers of 1881] have, as almost all allow, properly cast out "of Christ" (ver. 16), "also" (ver. 24), "of and fornication" (ver. 29), "implacable" (ver. 31). (Bible Treasury 13:349)

1:17 righteousness: The first thing to be remarked is that δικαιοσύνη does not mean justification, but here at least, as in most passages where this phrase occurs, righteousness, and this justifying. It is therefore kept distinct by the apostle from δικαίωσις (chap. 4:25; 5:18), which expresses the act of justifying, or the effect — justification; as δικαίωμα sets forth accomplished righteousness in justification or in judgment, righteous requirement whether morally or as an ordinance or decree. (Luke 1:6; Rom. 1:32; 2:26; 5:16, 18; 8:4; Heb. 9:1, 10; Rev. 15:4;

19:8.) Thus δικαιοσύνη retains its regular signification of habit or quality of righteousness. (Bible Treasury 6:229, Notes on Romans, p.11) righteousness: It is a singular fact that, while God used Rom. 1:17 to Luther's conversion, and we may say to the Reformation, neither he nor his companions, or their followers, ever apprehended the full truth conveyed by this blessed expression — "righteousness of God." Hence it is habitually mistranslated in Luther's German Bible, where δικαιοσύνη θεοῦ is rendered "the righteousness which is available before God." This, evidently, is far short of the truth; for a legal righteousness, if accomplished by man, would have availed before God. But God, in His grace, has accomplished in Christ and given an incomparably higher, i.e., a divine, righteousness, and nothing less than this are we made in Christ. Perhaps the imperfect view entertained by the great German Reformer may account in large measure for the fluctuations in his enjoyment of peace. The same thing applies to most Protestants up to our day, even where they are devoted Christians, and perhaps from a similar cause; for they have advanced little, if at all, beyond the light on this head possessed by Luther. (Bible Treasury 1:196-7)

_Λ righteousness: one doubts the need of saying either "a" righteousness or "the" wrath, the phrases being alike characteristic. (Bible Treasury 13:348) revealed: Again, the reader must beware of the notion which some found on the present tense of the verb ἀποκαλύπτεται, as if it warrants the idea of a gradually more complete realization of the state of justification. (Calvin may illustrate the danger of this; for he draws from it, that as our faith makes progress and advances in this knowledge, so the righteousness of God increases in us at the same time. What can be looser than such language?) I do not doubt that faith grows and so apprehension and enjoyment of our blessing in Christ, but the thing revealed in the gospel to faith is complete: divine righteousness repudiates any other thought, whatever may be the measure in which the heart apprehends it. (Bible Treasury 6:231, Notes on Romans, p.16)

by: It is singular that the Authorized Version should give "from faith" here and "by faith" for the same phrase in the same verse. The former appears to me objectionable in this connection; because it insinuates the idea of growth from one degree of faith to another, as some ancients and moderns have avowed. On the other hand, to take ἐκ π. (by faith) with δ.θ. (God's righteousness) is due perhaps to the difficulty some have found in assigning to each phrase its own definite value. (Bible Treasury 6:231, Notes on Romans, p.16)

by: "from" faith is here objectionable, as leading the reader naturally to the error of conceiving from one degree of faith to another, from less to more. This is not at all the thought any more than "by" in the Revised Version, which makes no just sense with "is being revealed." Hence the Revisers separated it from ἀπ., its true connection, to "righteousness," which alters the truth and mars it. In the gospel God's righteousness is revealed by faith unto faith in the gospel. (Bible Treasury 14:351)

1:18 _Λ wrath: [see note on Rom. 1:17]

hold: Some find a difficulty in the last clause and, assuming that κατεχόντων, if here taken in the sense of "holding," must have it only in the lowest degree, they contend for the meaning of "holding back" or restraint as in 2 Thessalonians 2:6,7, which they persuade themselves is suitable to our context. My conviction is that κατέχω retains here its usual emphasis of possession or holding fast, where moral things are in question, and that this is necessary to the solemn lesson here conveyed. For the apostle is speaking of God's wrath as against not merely all impiety in general but specifically men's unrighteousness who ever so stubbornly keep the truth in unrighteousness. God is not mocked. . . . I understand, therefore, that verse 18 gives first the general description of human ungodliness in every phase, and then the unrighteousness which was at that time most conspicuous in the Jews who combined with practical injustice a tenacious hold or possession of the truth: the former demonstrated to the end of Romans 1, the latter (after the transition of chap. 2:1-16) pursued from chapter 2:17 to chapter 3:20. Had this two-fold aspect been apprehended in the verse before us, the rendering of the Authorized Version would not have been deserted for "restraining the truth by unrighteousness," which is a sense framed to meet the condition of the heathen who were supposed here to be alone in the apostle's view. (Bible Treasury 6:246-7, Notes on Romans, p.19-21) hold: [The RV] of κατεχόντων in verse 18 calls for the more notice, as the Company adopt a sense which has prevailed extensively among ancients and moderns; yet is it not the primary force of the word but rather a possible contextual modification, which the context here in my judgment proves inadmissible. The word means, not simply like ἔχειν, to have, but to have thoroughly, to take (Matt. 21:38, Luke 14:9), to possess (1 Cor. 8:30), to hold, or keep if there be danger of losing, to hold fast (Luke 8:5; 1 Cor. 11:2, 15:2; 1 Thess. 5:21, &c.); if there be an opposing power, to withhold or hinder (2 Thess. 2:5, 6). What then is the connection of the passage helping us to determine which of these shades of meaning is best here? The apostle (ver. 16) was not ashamed of the gospel, for it is God's power unto salvation to every one that believeth, both Jew first and Greek. For God's righteousness is revealed therein from faith unto faith, according as it is written, But the righteous shall live by faith, verse 17. This may be fairly regarded as the subject-matter of the epistle. The next verse states summarily why such an intervention of grace was requisite if a man was to be saved righteously. For there is revealed God's wrath from heaven against (or upon) all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men that possess or hold the truth in unrighteousness. This is precisely what is unfolded in what follows to the end of chapter 3:20: first, every sort of ungodliness in the Gentile world, gross to the end of chapter 1, and more refined in the first half (vers. 1-16) of chapter 2; where secondly he turns to the proof of unrighteousness in those that hold the truth in unrighteousness, which marks the self-satisfied and unbelieving Jew. (Chrysostom (Hom. in loc. pp. 36, 37, Field, Oxon. 1849) seems rather unusually wide of the mark, taking verse 18 of one class, evil in dogma and life, of which the proof follows in verse 19 &c.. Nor is he alone in the mistake of thus limiting "the truth" to the testimony of creation.) Nor is anything more common in Christendom than truth, or orthodoxy, held ever so firmly along with total disregard of practical righteousness. It was notoriously so at that time among the Jews. Assuredly this is a phase of evil against which God's wrath is revealed; and the warning is as solemn as it is instructive in the most comprehensive treatise inspiration furnishes on the foundation of Christianity. Stiffing or hindering the truth is a part of men's ungodliness no doubt; but for this very reason it does not fit in so strikingly with the Spirit's distinction between every sort of ungodliness and unrighteousness of those that hold the truth in unrighteousness. It appears to me then that "hold down" or "hinder," as the Revisers (English and American) say, does not give the true sense, nor does the marginal alternative "withhold" of the previous English Versions, still less "detain" of the Rhemish, with the Vulgate, Syriac, and Arabic. The Coptic is right, if I may judge from Wilkins. The Ethiopic is there quite unreliable, I believe therefore that the Authorised Version is right, not the Revision. (Bible Treasury 13:348-9) hold: Still worse in 18 is the rendering of the Revisers "hold down," or of the Americans [correctors of the RV] "hinder." Either is to lose the point, which is to mark God's wrath against not only every sort of ungodliness, but unrighteousness of men that hold the truth in unrighteousness. Firm orthodoxy may go with practical disregard of righteousness. Holding truth down is scarcely sense; hindering it adds no worthy idea to the phrase. Holding the truth is a solemn caution for professing Christians now, as once for Jews. (Bible Treasury 14:351)

1:19 what may be known: Τὸ γνωστόν means here, I think, not the knowledge (ἡ γνώσις) or what was known of God, but as the English, "that which may be known" of Him. It is the knowable, rather than the known. The evidence was ample and distinct, but their eyes were dull. (Bible Treasury 6:262, Notes on Romans, p.22)

among them: Next, I see no sufficient ground to take the phrase ἐν αὐτοῖς in an emphatic sense, but in one more general. Had self-knowledge been appealed to, as many conceive, it appears to me that the proper word for subjective knowledge must have been employed, and, further, the reflexive pronoun. It is expressly an objective character of knowledge which lay open in the midst; and this is confirmed by the added intimation — "for God manifested it to them," not the action of conscience, which finds its more appropriate place in chapter 2 where moral perception and conduct is discussed. (Bible Treasury 6:262, Notes on Romans, p.22)

1:20 from [the] world's creation: The phrase ἀπὸ κτίσεως κόσμου, "from the world's creation," can signify the foundation or source of the suggestion as easily and surely as the earliest starting point of time; but the latter seems to me preferable here, because the things made by God are immediately afterwards named as furnishing the groundwork for the mind to infer their Maker by. (Bible Treasury 6:263, Notes on Romans, p.22-23)

1:23 likeness of an image: Ὁμοίωμα and εἰκὼν are not the same and are both needed to complete the apostle's thought. The one means a thing made like, or likeness; the other, a representative or image, whether externally resembling or not. This explains why the forms of ἄμιος are never used of the Son in relation to the Father; for He who was God in the beginning before creation and yet with God, could not be said to be merely like God. But when incarnate He could be and is said to be the image of the invisible God. On the other hand, it was no derogation but the highest distinction for God to say of the first Adam that He would make him "in our image, after our likeness;" i.e., representing Him here below, and withal sinless morally like as He was. The tracing of the application both in Genesis and in the New Testament is deeply interesting and will prove how little the Fathers or modern books based on their ideas have caught the truth conveyed. They exalt the first man as unduly as they lower the glory of the Second; and this through the influence of Platonism. Fallen as he is, man is still God's image: to curse him is to curse one that was made after His likeness. In the resurrection the saint will be like Christ and conformed to His image as the Firstborn among many brethren. (Bible Treasury 6:263, Notes on Romans, p.23-24)

1:24 ^Λ gave: [see note to Rom. 1:16]

1:25 rather than: Literally "beyond." (Notes on Romans, vi.)

for ever: Literally "unto the ages." (Notes on Romans, vi.)

1:28 disapproved: [The RV renders] οὐκ ἔδ. "refused," which is beyond question more correct than "did not like" of the Authorised Version. From "proving" in the sense of assaying, the word comes to mean "approve," or think good, or choose (Bible Treasury 13:349) acknowledgment: Or, 'in [their] knowledge.' (Notes on Romans, vii.)

reprobate: The word ἀδόκιμος is here as elsewhere translated "reprobate," as this well suits the phrase and contrasts their not approving to retain God in their knowledge with His giving them over to a "disapproved" mind. But it may rightly bear an active sense, and would then mean an "undiscerning" mind, as the sentence on their presumption in rejecting God after pretending to test and try the matter. (Bible Treasury 6:298, Notes on Romans, p.27)

1:29 ^Λ wickedness: It will be observed that in verse 29 I have omitted on good external authority πορνεία ("fornication"), as the internal appears to me to turn the scale against it. As for the resemblance to πορνεία, it might act either in giving room to its insertion by mistake, or to its omission. But I think that the first class consists of personal evil; the second of that which is relative; as the third brings out, not roots of moral pravity, abstractedly viewed, whether personal or relative, but developed wicked characters, and this in an order neither unsystematic nor difficult to discern. (Bible Treasury 6:298, Notes on Romans, p.27) [see note to Rom. 1:16]

1:31 ^Λ pitiless: Ἀσπόνδους is deficient in authority, being omitted in the best and most ancient manuscripts. "Implacable" is therefore left out of verse 31. It was probably introduced here because of its connection with ἄσποργοι in 2 Timothy 3:3. (Bible Treasury 6:298, Notes on Romans, p.27) [see note to Rom. 1:16]

1:32 do: Whether [the RV is] . . . not deceived by sound in giving πρ. rather than ποι. the sense of "practise" is a grave consideration, though they stand not alone in their judgment; it affects the bearing of many scriptures from Matthew to Revelation as well as Romans frequently. (Bible Treasury 13:349)

2:7 incorruption: "Incorruption" is right, not immortality, in verse 7, as in Ephesians 6:24 morally, and 2 Timothy 1:10, as well as 1 Corinthians 15:42, 50, 53. (Bible Treasury 13:349)

2:12 have . . . have: 2:12 is a curious instance of the Revisers' neglect of their own claim laid to superior accuracy in the aorist. Why should not the "have" be omitted twice in the text without any marginal Greek? (Bible Treasury 14:351)

2:13 [parentheses]: it is not 14, 15 only but 13 also which constitute the parenthesis. The connection of "in a day when," &c., is with "shall be judged," at the end of verse 12. (Bible Treasury 14:351)

^Λ law: "a" law in verse 13 seems objectionable, if . . . [the RV] discard[s] the article with the first νόμου and accept it with the second where Mr. Palmer gives the article. With Alford, Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles, and Wordsworth, the article should be in neither, and the version accordingly be "the law-hearers" and "the law-doers," or "the hearers of law" and "the doers of law" as Mr. Green. We all know that Bishop Middleton in his celebrated treatise repeatedly pronounces this form inadmissible; but it is his oversight of cases not in the New Testament only (Matt. 11:13; Heb. 9:13) but in the purest Attic Greek (Plat. Phaedr. 808, 811, edd. Bait. Orell. et Winck.). Equally wrong was Mr. Gilbert Wakefield, who tries to account for the absence of the article in the sentence of Mark where it is well established. The governed noun need not therefore take the article, because the governing noun has it; whether it should take it or not depends on general principles. (Bible Treasury 13:349)

^Λ law . . . ^Λ law : the Americans [correctors of the RV] are as wrong in saying "the" law twice, as the Revisers with their "a" twice. It means the law-hearers, the law-doers. Bishop Middleton was mistaken in laying down absolutely, that if the governing noun has the article, the governed must also. But this does not justify Dean Alford in overlooking the proper force of the anarthrous construction, which gives a general character instead of specifying only that of Moses. (Bible Treasury 14:351)

2:14 having no: [The American correctors of the RV] are quite wrong in mistranslating μὴ ν. after the Revisers had corrected the similar error of the Authorised Version. So "having no" is correct, instead of "not having the." (Bible Treasury 14:351)

2:15 [end of verse]: [The American correctors of the RV, add marg. Or, their thoughts accusing or else excusing them one with another,] seem right (Bible Treasury 14:351)
[parentheses]: [See note to Rom. 2:13]

2:17 But if: "But if," εἰ δέ, is unquestionably the right reading, not ἴδε ("behold") as in the Received Text and Authorized Version, which seems to have been in correction to ease the sense, if not a mere blunder in copying. (Bible Treasury 6:341, Notes on Romans, p.36)

But if: Of course the blunder of ἴδε "behold," for εἰ δέ "but if" (ver. 17) in the vulgarly received text, is corrected [in the RV]. (Bible Treasury 13:349)

2:18 provest the things that differ: It might mean the consequence of this process, "approvest the things that are excellent." (Notes on Romans, viii.)

provest the things that differ: [The American correctors of the RV, in marg. read "dost distinguish,"] seem right (Bible Treasury 14:351)

2:22 commit sacrilege: [The American correctors of the RV, omit the marg. ("commit sacrilege"),] seem right (Bible Treasury 14:351)

2:27 in the way of: [The RV has] followed others in correcting the strange inaccuracy of the Authorised Version "by" the letter, &c. for which they give "with" to express the condition, not the instrument. The medium through which the act was done is not in question. But here again why not "who with letter and circumcision art a transgressor of law"? (Bible Treasury 13:349)

3:3 faith: That is, His faithfulness or good faith. (Notes on Romans, ix.)

3:4 art judged: the Authorised Version in the end of verse 4 is corrected [in the RV] into "comest into judgment," (Bible Treasury 13:349)

3:5 the Authorised Version . . . is corrected [in the RV] . . . into "visiteth with wrath." (Bible Treasury 13:349)

3:8 judgment: why should not the Revisers [of 1881] adhere to their usual "judgment" in verse 8? (Bible Treasury 13:349)

3:9 are we better? : [The RV renders] προέχόμεθα "are we in worse case than they?" instead of the generally preferred "better," with the marginal alternative of "do we excuse ourselves?" The active voice may mean to have the advantage or surpass, the passive to be excelled; and so Wetstein suggested here, whom substantially the Company follow in their text, whilst giving the view of Hemsterhuis, Venema, Koppe and Wahl, in the margin, founded on one sense of the middle voice as such is beyond question of common usage. As the word occurs but once in the New Testament, we have no direct help to decide; but it has been pointed out that παρέχεσθαι is used (Acts 19:24; Col. 4:1; Titus 2:7) where it differs from παρέχειν only by a delicate shade. Hence in not a few passages there is a conflict of readings between the active and the middle form of verbs, as in Luke 15:9, John 14:23, Acts 23:13. Whether in the simple verb or in its compounds, the active and the middle in some cases approximate, though no doubt each has its appropriate application. In the present instance the middle voice suits the force intended, far more than the active προέχομεν: "are we on our part better?" And as the context favours this rendering, so it condemns the version of the Revisers beyond all others as well as their margin. (Besides, will the Greek even bear the marginal sense, any more than Meyer's, "what, then have we an excuse?" The verb in this sense demands an object: and hence grammatically Wahl, &c. were compelled to find it in τι. But this construction would require the answer to be, not οὐ π., but οὐδέν.) . . . And this serves to shew the mistaken division here; for verses 19 and 20 close this paragraph, the opening words being bound up with the citations from the law, or Old Testament. (Bible Treasury 13:349)

better: it is pleasant to say we are agreed [with the American correctors of the RV, "better" and omit the marg.] (Bible Treasury 14:351)

3:19 the law . . . the law: [See note to Gal. 2:16] in: under (or, in the scope of) (God's Inspiration p. 379)

3:20 ^Λ law . . . ^Λ law: [See note to Gal. 2:16]

3:21 [paragraph]: it is pleasant to say we are agreed [with the American correctors of the RV, begin a paragraph] (Bible Treasury 14:351)

^Λ law . . . the law: [See note to Gal. 2:16]

apart from: [See note to Mat. 10:29]

3:22 in: lit. of (God's Inspiration p. 380)

and upon all: Some of the most ancient (the Sinai, Vatican, Alexandrian, and Rescript of Paris, beside some juniors, versions, and fathers) omit καὶ ἐπὶ πάντας ("and upon all"). But I agree with the judgment of those who retain the received text in this, and I have little doubt that the words were omitted through the eye or ear resting on one πάντας so as to overlook the other. Possibly indeed one scribe or more may have designedly left out the clause, fancying it to be a mistake from not apprehending the scope, and conceiving, like some commentators (e.g., Dean Alford), that there is no real difference of meaning in the prepositions. But this is incorrect. There is no difference of words in scripture without a different sense, though sometimes the shade is so fine as to be more easily felt than expressed. Here the distinct force of the clause is plain and important. The former (εἰς πάντας) marks the direction of God's righteousness. It is not, like the law, restricted to a single nation; it addresses itself "unto all" men without exception; but the benefit depends on faith in Jesus Christ, and hence it only reaches and takes effect "upon all that believe." This distinction is of great practical value; but it turns mainly on the difference of the prepositions. Divine righteousness was in principle applicable to all, but in fact applied only to all believers. (Bible Treasury 6:376, Notes on Romans, p. 43-44) and upon all: Romans 3:22 is still more in point, as bringing in what is due, not to His personal glory only, but to His work: "God's righteousness through faith of Jesus Christ unto all, and upon all them that believe." For I utterly reject the mutilated text, which reads no more than εἰς πάντας τοὺς πιστεύοντας, though so given in ^Λ A B C P, etc. It is easy to see how εἰς π. might have been confounded with ἐπὶ π., for even Dean Alford (who does not go so far as some moderns in sacrificing every consideration to the oldest external evidence, and, therefore, only brackets καὶ ἐπὶ π.) will have it, that in the theological meaning ἐπὶ π. has no real difference from εἰς, and adds to this error the further one of referring to ver. 30 and Gal. 1:1, which in fact prove an intended distinction. But it is to me incredible that an unprincipled scribe should have seen the grave difference which results from the full reading, amply sustained as it is by an ancient and wide-spread testimony; especially as a similar difference reappears in chap. 5:18,19, couched in a somewhat altered form, which shews only the more emphatically how well-founded is the distinction. Even Bengel, who rightly accepted the fuller text, understood its value no more than Theodoret and other fathers, who applied εἰς π. to the Jews, and ἐπὶ π. to the Gentiles! No wonder people revolted from so unsatisfactory an exposition, and were disposed to doubt the text on which it was based.

It would have been wiser to have weighed the words more fully, and sought their true force. For it ought to have been plain enough that by εἰς πάντας the apostle was indicating the direction of God's righteousness by means of faith in Jesus Christ, and hence "toward all" without distinction, yet for that reason it takes effect only "upon all those who believe," but on all such, be they Jew or Gentile. It was preached to all, for all were objects of divine compassion, and Christ died for all; but it took effect only on believers in Him, and on all of them. What can be conceived more luminous than the statement, more grave than the distinction, or more consoling than the truth, for those who bow to the gospel and Him whom it makes known? But the distinction is enfeebled or lost in a weightier witness than Dean Alford or the Greek fathers, even in the Authorised Version of Rom. 5:18, where εἰς should be rendered "unto" or "toward," as in 3:22. The apostle is distinguishing the universal tendency or bearing of Christ's act with Adam's in chap. 5:18, from its actual effect in the following verse, which exactly answers to what we have seen in chap. 3:22. How confirmatory of the difference between purchase and redemption, need not be insisted on at greater length. (Bible Treasury N6:264 and 16:277-278) and upon all: Next comes in the answer to the second goat [of the Day of Atonement], "and upon (ἐπὶ) all them that believe." Here is implied the security of the believer. It is not "unto all them that believe." "Unto" thus distinguished is a tendency or direction; and, even when meaning more, it may not reach all. This is exactly what the gospel is — "unto all." The gospel addresses itself to every creature; as also every soul is bound to receive the testimony of God's grace, which puts upon them the responsibility of bowing in their hearts to it as from God. As it is "unto all," he who does not preach it "unto all" misunderstands his duty as a herald of the gospel. On the other hand, the righteousness of God is not merely "unto all them that believe," but "upon" them. What does "upon" represent here? The effect produced; which is not upon all mankind, but only "upon all that believe." We have therefore to distinguish two objects in this verse: the universal aspect of the gospel in going out to every creature; and the positive effect upon all those that believe.

Here the A.V. exactly gives the truth; what of the R.V.? The revisers, oblivious of a mistake common even in ancient copies (of which some of the company seemed almost idolaters), followed the favourites blindly. Wherever a word is followed by the same word, perhaps in the next phrase one of the commonest slips (by writers to-day, as with early scribes) is to skip over the words between the two. The old copies, ^Λ A B C P, with two juniors and some ancient versions, would ordinarily have the greatest weight; but here they appear by a merely clerical blunder to have passed from the first "all" (πάντας) to the second with the fatal effect described.

That later copyists could have invented the admirably correct and comprehensive distinction, which the common text intimates, is too much to conceive. The distinction is also especially Pauline; which none of the copyists even understood, any more than some modern commentators. Theodoret may interpret unwisely, but he writes unhesitatingly about two clauses; as indeed they are attested by ancient versions older than any existing MSS. But a real conflation is ever feeble, if not false.

A slip might naturally ruin a nicely poised and fully stated truth, entirely beyond mediæval mind to construct. The effect of the slip is, "the righteousness of God unto all them that believe." Such is the form in which it is given in the Revised Version. What is the consequence? That they give us an unscriptural platitude. They unwittingly take from scripture its edge and fulness. "They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid Him." They have mixed up the two forms of the truth, so that one cannot get at either. The hotch-potch of both destroys the exact sense of each.

The change means that there is not a word "unto all" sinners as such, whilst all believers receive a mere offer of the gospel. "The righteousness of God is unto all believers," if they like to accept it. Thus is effaced the effect of the gospel upon all that believe, while the mercy to unbelievers vanishes away, because His righteousness is only "unto all them that believe." If the words omitted be read, the double truth is given in perfection. This the revisers virtually treat as a blunder of the scribes. But when did mere man ever invent so nice and full a statement of the truth? The change leaves not the smallest ground here for preaching the gospel to the unconverted; while the safety of the believer thereby and equally disappears. Yet this mutilated and emasculated sense is given, as if a perfectly adequate authority sustained it, although any one easily sees, when it is once pointed out, how readily the intervening words might be omitted. The twofold truth of God is marred in the passage, and we are deprived of that which answers in the antitype to both the first goat and the second. (Bible Treasury N3:264,265) and upon all: It will be noticed by the reader what havoc is made [in the RV] by the omission of καὶ ἐπὶ π. "and upon all" in verse 22. No doubt four or five of the oldest uncials with two cursives and some ancient versions and fathers leave the words out; and they are followed by Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles, Westcott and Hort. But the Homœoteleuton simply and satisfactorily accounts for the slip, aided as it may have been by the inability of many to see the double bearing of the truth enunciated. For how readily the mind swerves to Calvinistic views, or to Arminian; and how few accept the truth in its fulness, of which extreme partisans see but one part, unintelligently opposed to the other part! The main body of uncials, cursives, versions, and fathers declares for the text as rendered in the Authorised Version. Even the mutilated form of some of the best Latin copies ("super omnes") bears witness against that abbreviation which has found favour. And though the expositions of Greeks and Latins have little worth or point, they shew the fact; for it is no question of Jews and Gentiles, but of God's righteousness manifested unto all, going out toward all indiscriminately, and taking effect actually on all those that believe. To overlook the difference of the prepositions is unworthy, and yet more so to confound "all" with "all that believe." The old writers who state but misapprehend the difference were certainly not the men to foist in a clause which, giving both comprehensiveness and precision, falls in as strikingly with this epistle in particular as with all scripture generally. God's righteousness could not but be for all; but in fact none but believers profited by it through faith in Christ. Its direction was towards all, not merely all believers, but all mankind; its application was upon all that believe. To take away the former is to deprive it of breadth; to blot out the latter is to deny its depth and strength. "Unto," not "upon," all that believe is far short of divine truth. The ordinary reading just suits the gospel of God; that of the Revisers seems equally one-sided and useless. To say that God's righteousness is unto all that believe would be a truism. (Bible Treasury 13:350)

3:23 ^Λ sinned: compare 2:12 (Bible Treasury 14:351)

come: [Q. Rom. 3:23. The ambiguity of the English Version misleads many readers. Instead of understanding it to mean, "All have sinned, and do come short," &c., they interpret it as if it were, "all have sinned, and have come short," &c. After setting forth the true restoration of man, i.e., believing man, by the gospel, the happy counterpart to the above sad sentence, is found in chap. 5:2, where we are said to "rejoice in hope of the glory of God." I may add that not overlooking the right tense in ὑστεροῦνται contributes to make the meaning clear, i.e., all fail to obtain the glory of God, rather all have failed to exhibit it. But I invite your judgment as to the truth of this. L.C.L.B.]

A. The remark is right as to the ambiguity of the English, because "come" is also the participle — have come, and the natural connexion is, "sinned and come short." But it seems to me that ὑστεροῦνται does not refer to exhibiting. With a genitive, and particularly in later writers, it has the sense, "destitute of," "wanting," "failing to have." (See Lobeck. Phryn. 238. Valck. Schol. in N.T. ii.472. Steph. Thes. Col. 9812, Ed. Valpy.)

Now that sin has come in, we must meet the glory of God or be excluded by it. In a state of innocency man enjoyed favour, and the question of consistency with the divine glory had not been raised. Now, we say, "All have sinned, and do come short of, fail in meeting, or standing in the presence of, the glory of God." Christ, as Son of man, has glorified God on the cross, and human nature has a place in the glory, οὐκ ὑστεροῦται. And so we in Him. This point of meeting the glory I believe to be an important one, and to run through the Gospels. John 13 specially treats it with immense depth, though briefly. I add that ἡμαρτον, the aorist, is the historic fact, which is the ground of the present state expressed in ὑστεροῦνται. We have sinned, and are outside of, away from, morally wanting in what meets, and gives us a place in, the glory of God. (Bible Treasury 4:96)

3:25 propitiatory: That is, a mercy-seat as in Hebrews 9:5. (Notes on Romans, x.)

propitiatory: it is strange to see that . . . [the RV retains] "a propitiation" with the Authorised Version in verse 25, instead at best of presenting a "propitiatory" or mercy-seat as the Greeks generally understood, and they themselves do elsewhere (Heb. 9:5) and Tyndale did here. (Bible Treasury 13:350)

set forth as a propitiatory through faith in his blood: [The American correctors of the RV are] right. "set for a mercy-seat (or, propitiatory) through faith in his blood," omitting marginal 9, 10 and 11. (Bible Treasury 14:351)

3:26 in: lit. of (God's Inspiration p. 380)

3:28 then: it seems peculiar that "for" (⋈ A D^{ms}. E F G, many cursives, versions, and fathers, and hence received by almost all, notwithstanding B C K L P and the Syrr. &c. which favours "therefore") is not approved by the Company [of Revisers of 1881], but "therefore" as in the received text. What misled was the supposition that it is a conclusion from the argument preceding, but rather a reason in support of verse 27. They are bold men who reject the judgment of Alford, Bengel, T. S. Green, Griesbach, Harwood, Koppe, Mill, Scholz, Tischendorf, Tregelles, Wells, Wordsworth, and the Five Clergymen. Is it that Drs. Westcott and Hort have changed their opinion? Judging by Dr. Vaughan's text of Romans (1st ed) they did not then oppose the critics. (Bible Treasury 13:350)

3:30 by . . . through: Nor do the Revisers seem successful in dealing with . . . the distinctive force of the prepositions, &c. in verse 30. . . . "by faith," not by works of law which Jews might plead, and "through their faith" if Gentiles believed in Christ: the one excluding legal pretension, the other honouring faith where it existed. (Bible Treasury 13:350)

[the] . . . ^Λ uncircumcision: Nor do the Revisers seem successful in dealing with the anarthrous form of verses 30, 31, . . . it is not "the" circumcision and "the" uncircumcision, which would imply these bodies of people, but persons of either class as such (Bible Treasury 13:350)

^Λ faith: The article follows, meaning the faith actually exercised by any. (Notes on Romans, x.)

^Λ faith: the faith which they have (and hence only in this case the article is used) (God's Inspiration p. 380-381)

3:31 [no paragraph]: To make a paragraph of 31 seems needless. It well closes the verses from 21. (Bible Treasury 14:351)

^Λ law . . . ^Λ law: [See notes to Gal. 2:16 and Rom. 3:30]

^Λ faith: The article follows, meaning the faith actually exercised by any. (Notes on Romans, x.)

4:1 fore-father according to flesh hath found: The manuscripts differ widely in this place. The Vatican is not alone in omitting εὐρηκέναι ("hath found"), which would yield a very easy sense. Most of the copies place εὐρηκέναι before κατὰ σάρκα, but the best have it after ἐροῦμεν. Προπάτορα is the reading of but few, but perhaps enough; as πατέρα is the usual form and might easily have slipped in. (Bible Treasury 7:13, Notes on Romans, p.47)

fore-father according to the flesh hath found: 4:1, it appears to me, according to the best testimony (ⲁ A C D E F G, some cursives, and ancient versions, &c.) connects "our forefathers (or fathers) according to flesh," not "hath found according to the flesh" (K & P, most cursives, &c.) as the Americans [correctors of the RV] would prefer for the text, relegating the former to the margin. Westcott and Hort follow B, 47^m. and Chrysostom's comment in cutting the knot by the omission of "hath found" altogether. (Bible Treasury 14:351)

4:6 apart from: [See note to Mat. 10:29]

4:12 also to those: In chapter 4 [of the RV] the main blemish is one perpetuated from the Authorised Version in verse 12, and probably due to not seizing the force of π. π., which means chief, or first characteristic, type of true separation to God; . . . the erroneous version appeared in Tyndale, but not in the other English translations (Wiclif, Cranmer, Geneva, and Rhemish), which rightly give two classes, not one only characterised doubly. (Bible Treasury 13:350)

4:17 nations: Or "Gentiles," as ἐθνῶν is elsewhere translated. (Notes on Romans, xi.)

4:18 nations: Or "Gentiles." (Notes on Romans, xi.)

4:19 [not]: In verse 19 there occurs a remarkable difference of reading; and yet, strange to say, though that which results is as opposite as can be, in either way the sense is good. For both appear to suit and carry on the argument, though of course one alone is the true and intended comment of the Spirit on the state of Abraham. There is excellent and perhaps adequate authority of every kind (manuscripts, versions, and ancient citations) for dropping the negative particle, which is therefore marked as doubtful in the version just before the reader's eye. (The Sinai, Vatican, Alexandrian, and Rescript of Paris (C.), with a few cursives, some of the oldest and best copies of the Vulgate, the Syriac (not the later or Philox.), the Coptic, the Erpenian Arabic, and some Greek and Latin fathers did not read οὐ. Lachmann accordingly leaves it out, and Griesbach counted it a probable omission. Tischendorf too omitted it in his first edition, but replaced it in the second and those subsequent. Meyer adheres to the common text.) If οὐ be an interpolation, the meaning would be that Abraham, instead of slighting the obstacles, took full account of them all (Gen. 17:17), yet as regards the promise of God had no hesitation through unbelief, but on the contrary was inwardly strengthened in faith. If the ordinary reading be right, the meaning is that, far from being weak in faith, he paid no heed to the facts before his eyes whether in himself or in his wife, nor staggered at the promise of God through unbelief, but found strength in faith, giving glory to Him and satisfied that He was able also to perform the promise. (Bible Treasury 7:44, Notes on Romans, p.52-53)

4:25 on account of: Διὰ with the accus. means "for," "on account of," either retrospectively or prospectively, according to the requirement of the context (as here we have instances of each). The active force of δικαίωσις forbids "because of," as does Romans 5:1, which makes faith necessary to justification. I have therefore preferred "for" as admitting of a similar latitude in English. (Bible Treasury 7:44)

on account of: [Q: I believe there is no sufficient reason to doubt Rom. 4:25 means that Christ was raised "for" our justification. Grammatically, it is well known, "because of" is a common, perhaps the most common, force of the preposition διὰ, with the accusative. But the form of the word δικαίωσις resists such a view here; and still more does the context, especially chapter 5:1, where justification is made to depend on faith, instead of being treated as a thing already settled independently of believing. I have heard it argued, however, that διὰ τὴν πᾶρωσιν, in Ephesians 4:18 (which, beyond question, means "because of," and not for "the hardness," &c.) sets aside the reasoning grounded on the form of the word. What think you? X.X.]

A. No doubt, πᾶρωσις, being the active form of nouns like δικαίωσις, may seem to raise a question; but if adequately considered, the difficulty disappears. For πᾶρωσις has the simple sense of a callous place, as one might say, "it is a hardening of the skin," though the form "hardening" be active, because it was a gradual act, while it is now a state. So νέκρωσις is applied to Sarah's womb; and again, we are to carry about the νέκρωσις of the Lord Jesus. But this is, I apprehend, in no way the case with justifying, or δικαίωσις. Διὰ always means "on account of:" the question is, does it here signify previous to, or after, the resurrection of Christ? People often cite the verse, as if it meant that Christ was raised on account of our having been already justified before He rose. This, I am convinced, would require some such phrase as διὰ τὸ δικαιοθῆναι ἡμᾶς, which essentially differs from that which St. Paul employs. In the present case, there would be no process like that of πᾶρωσις, or νέκρωσις (which words express a state as result), but a state existing by the simple act of another, a relationship in virtue of an act done. This, the active form, does not, I believe, express; an effect to be produced it can express. The great doctrinal mischief of the alleged rendering, "because of," is, that it excludes faith from justifying, which is Calvinism, or ultra-Calvinism, but wholly unscriptural. (Bible Treasury 4:32) justification: The form of the word here and in chapter 5:18 means the act of justification, not the thing done or its ground. (Notes on Romans, xii.)

5:1 we: [The American correctors of the RV] are quite right in preferring "we" to "let us" as the Revisers say. The change of ο to ω is one of the most frequent errors in the oldest copies; and this accounts for the subjunctive displacing the indicative to the grievous detriment of the sense, whatever ingenious pleaders may argue to the contrary. (Bible Treasury 14:351-352) have: This is an instance of a reading which differs from that given in the great majority of first-class authorities (the Sinai, Alexandrian, Vatican, Rescript of Paris, Clermont, many excellent cursives, ancient versions, and fathers), yet, as it appears to me, decidedly most in keeping with the requirements of the context. For ἔχωμεν ("let us have") brings in an exhortation which agrees neither with what goes before nor with what follows, as the christian reader can judge for himself. The fact is that nothing is easier than to account for the various reading, for the interchange of the short with the long vowel or a diphthong that corresponds to it is most familiar to all acquainted with the critical history of the text. Thus inadvertence may have introduced the long ω instead of the short ο. Besides, the subjunctive suits man's mind, when conscious of want Godward (and such is the state of most), rather than the indicative which expresses the blessing possessed already. Just so we see in 1 Corinthians 15, as another has remarked, where the Vatican stands alone of the Uncials in supporting some modern copies against the mass of ancient MSS., which favour an unquestionable error. ⲁ, A, C, D, E, F, G, J, K, with the great majority of cursives, the Italic, Vulgate, Coptic, Gothic, Slavonic, and many ancient ecclesiastical writers read φερέσωμεν, the subjunctive instead of the indicative, as in the common and correct text. (Bible Treasury 7:61, Notes on Romans, p. 57) have: Does it not shew rather how precarious is Dr. [Salmon]'s critical judgment? For the question between ο and ω is precisely one of that class as to which the ancient manuscripts are least reliable. Whether we can best account for their frequent lapses in the interchange of these letters by ignorant copyists deceived by the ear may be a question; but the fact that the most ancient and best cannot be depended on in such cases is certain. Compare 1 Corinthians 15:49, Hebrews 12:28. This explains why the reading of several of the oldest MSS. may be merely a clerical blunder. If Tischendorf is gone over to ἔχωμεν with the uncorrected text of the Sinai, with Vat., Alex., &c., Lachmann abandoned it for ἔχομεν in his maturer edition. There is no deficiency whatever in external authority, for the majority of uncials, and cursives, supports ἔχομεν. The criterion for a spiritual mind under such circumstances is the bearing of the context: and, if so, I have not a doubt that this reading and not ἔχωμεν is required by the scope of the verse and the argument generally. But the odd thing is that Dr. S. himself accepts the reading ἔχομεν, "we have." If so on solid grounds, why is it precarious to use it? If he have no solid grounds, why "prefer" it? (Bible Treasury 9:317,318) have: Very excellent and ancient MSS. read ἔχωμεν, which however to my mind suits not the context, for this is doctrine, not exhortation. It is well known that the best copies often faultily interchange ω with ο, as I presume they did here. Under such circumstances internal evidence is entitled to great weight. Thus in 1 Corinthians 15:49 the authorities save B. and very few others) read φορέσωμεν, which, I am bold to say, no sober Christian of intelligence can accept as in keeping with the context or even sound doctrine. (Notes on Romans, xii.)

have: none can be surprised to hear that the Revisers adopt for their text "let us have" for "we have," though in Greek it is only the question of a long for a short ο, letters habitually confounded (Itacism as it is called) in the best and oldest MSS. The diplomatic groundwork, though seemingly strong beyond measure, is therefore really precarious, unless the context be also clear and sure. But in my judgment the dogmatic or inferential, not exhortatory, character in this part of the epistle decidedly demands the indicative rather than the subjunctive in chapter 5:1, 2, 3, as is strongly confirmed by the structure of verse 11, which does not admit of the latter. But souls weak in the gospel would naturally incline to the subjunctive of old as now. (Bible Treasury 13:350)

5:2 we: [See note to Rom. 5:1]

Λ boast : [see note to 5:1]

5:3 we: [See note to Rom. 5:1]

Λ boast : [see note to 5:1]

5:7 Λ-righteous: [The Peschito has "unrighteous." Is there any authority for this in any Greek manuscript? . . . R.W. Ferguson] (Christian Annotator 2:35)

[The Syriac Testament certainly gives the "unrighteous;" and this reading seems preferable, though perhaps not in any known MS. Yet, the Syriac being an old version, it is very likely an α privative may have dropped from δικαίου, and in reading much Greek I have always found a good conjecture preferable to an indistinct MS.: δικαίος ἐστ' ἀπολωλέναι can hardly have anything to do with the meaning. The antithesis between δικαίου and ἀγαθοῦ is, philologically considered, barely satisfactory. W.B.M., Rammerscales, 5 Feb. 1855.

[We greatly demur at conjectures. What warrant, moreover, has our friend for supposing that the MSS. are indistinct in this place? — ED. of Christian Annotator. (Christian Annotator 2:70)]

I perfectly agree with the Editor's objection to conjectural emendation. In the present instance the conjecture is founded on a manifest blunder of the Peschito Syriac, which stands alone, not here only, but, as far as I know, in the hypothetical structure which it gives to the preceding verse 6. The ancient and modern MSS. are unusually consentient, and there is no proof that the reading of a single copy is indistinct, as the sense and reasoning are strong and unambiguous. Experience, as well as the history of mankind, testifies to the distinction which the spirit of God draws between δικαίου and τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ (the article in the latter, not in the former case, being strictly correct), both of which are in contrast with our condition when God commended His love to us. I am of opinion, therefore, that the conjecture of W.B.M. is not baseless only, but destructive of the real scope of the passage. (Christian Annotator 2:94-95)

the good [man]: [The American correctors of the RV omit marg. "that which is good:"] agreed. (Bible Treasury 14:352)

the: The article is here inserted, not before δικαίου but before ἀγαθοῦ. One would hardly die for any just person simply as such; but it might be for some known good man, whose excellence had powerfully acted on the heart of another. (Bible Treasury 7:88, Notes on Romans, p.62)

5:9,10 by . . . by: The preposition ἐν here and in the next verse I have translated "by." It is a far more intimate relation (= "in virtue of," "in the power of") than is expressed by διὰ, which, with the genitive as in each of these verses, signifies a means or instrument ("through"), as sometimes also in a certain condition ("with") — a sense which it occasionally bears in the accusative also. Compare Galatians 4:13 with Romans 2:27. (Bible Treasury 7:104, Notes on Romans, p.63)

5:10 by: [See note to 5:9]

5:11 reconciliation: [Q. Rom. 5:11, Heb. 2:17. Are these texts correctly rendered in the A.V.? AMERICAN]

A. Not so, but in the R.V. The late Abp. Trench (Synonyms of the N.T., seventh ed. 276) owns that the word "atonement," by which our (A.) Translators have once rendered καταλλαγή (Rom. 5:11), has little by little shifted its meaning, and confesses that, were the translation now for the first time made, "atonement" would plainly be "a much fitter rendering of ἰλασμός," as "reconciliation" of the term in Romans 5:11. Indeed no christian scholar can doubt it. It is therefore astounding confusion for anyone, not merely to go back to "atonement," which the present force of our language forbids, but to imagine this to be its primary meaning and according to its Biblical usage, if we mean the original, which of course alone is authoritative. The simple and certain fact is that our A.V., now at least, is doubly incorrect; it gives "atonement" in Romans, where "reconciliation" is the sole right rendering; as "making atonement for," or expiating, is requisite in Hebrews. A similar blunder pervades the O.T. rendering of the corresponding Hebrew term. To reproduce that error is strange, especially with a view to clearness and accuracy of statement, which it destroys. Wiclif and the Rhemish were right as to Rom. 5:11; which fact goes far to convict of error the others from Tyndale, notwithstanding the amiable prelate's desire to excuse it on the ground of the language shifting. On the other hand, Wiclif's "merciful to" is very inadequate in Hebrews 2:17, as Tyndale's "to pourge" is incorrect and rather the effect, which has its own proper expression, though followed by all the older English save the Rhemish (here as usual servile to the very odd "repropietaret" of the Vulgate). In the R.V. of this text to make "atonement" takes the place of "reconciliation" very properly. Καταλλαγή in the N.T. sense is unknown to the Septuagint. Trench's doctrine of "reconciliation" is well meant, but, like that of theologians in general, infirm and clouded. God was in Christ reconciling the world to Himself. Such was His aspect in the incarnate Word. But man, ungodly and implacably hostile, rejected Christ even to the death of the cross; wherein God made Him sin for us, and raised Him from the dead for our justification. Therefore, justified by faith, as being reconciled by His death even when enemies, we shall much more be saved by His life. To be reconciled to God supposes more than atonement, redemption from the enemy, and justification; it comprehends, besides, ourselves set in relationship with God righteously, according to the purpose of His grace. It means, neither changing God's mind from alienation into love, nor merely man brought out of his enmity to God, but the God of love and holiness having so wrought in the sacrifice of Christ, that He can righteously send the gospel of grace to every creature, and establish every believer in a new and steadfast relationship of favour with Himself. (Bible Treasury 19:272) reconciliation: In Rom. 5:11 it is commonly known that it should be "the reconciliation," not "the atonement"; whereas in Heb. 2:17 "atonement," expiation, or propitiation would be correct, not "reconciliation" which is another word and truth. (Bible Treasury N3:211) reconciliation: Of course, "reconciliation" displaces "atonement" in [the RV] (Bible Treasury 13:350) reconciliation: [See also Bible Treasury 19:312 and note on Heb. 2:17.]

5:13-17 [parentheses]: Though I cannot but dissent from those who consider this a difficult passage, it is plain that it is often misunderstood, as it is certainly momentous in its bearings.

First, I am of opinion that the parenthesis is rightly marked so as to help the sense, 13-17 inclusively being one of those full and instructive digressions so characteristic of St. Paul. . .

Then, we have the general thread resumed with light and force derived from the parenthesis, and this in the most abstract way possible. "Therefore, then (in allusion to the intervening verses, but in direct reference to verse 12), as [it was] by one offence unto all men to condemnation;" . . . (Bible Witness and Review 1:348-349, Christian Annotator 4:37-38)

5:14 the coming [one]: I am surprised Mr. Green should understand τοῦ μέλλοντος "of the future;" for the context points unequivocally to a person, and to one person only, Christ, not to time coming merely. (Bible Treasury 7:152, Notes on Romans, p.73)

5:15 [shall] not: Probably Mr. Darby (who first, as far as I know, adopted the interrogative form) was not aware that this idea was suggested by the famous Bentley, as appears from the papers in the library of Trinity College, Cambridge, lately edited by Mr. A. A. Ellis, page 28. (Notes on Romans, xiii.)

[shall] not: it seems strange that the Company [of Revisers of 1881] have not adopted, even in the margin, the excellent suggestion of the famous Dr. Bentley (Ellis, p. 28) presenting the first clause of verses 15, 16 in the interrogative form. The sense is clearer thereby. (Bible Treasury 13:350)

5:17 [parentheses]: [See note to 5:13]

5:18 ^ offence [it was] toward . . . toward: There is no reasonable doubt that the marginal correction of our English Bible ("by one offence") should be adopted, in preference to the text — "by one man's offence," however weighty and from various sides the names which have espoused the latter. The Sinai Manuscript actually inserts ἀνθρώπου here, as we find in some minuscules also. But this is an unquestionable error. The point of the verse, as it appears to me, was to present the direction respectively, apart from the actual issues, whether on Adam's part or on Christ's. Hence the strikingly elliptic, as well as the broadly characteristic, form of verse 18. There is no need (as in the Authorized Version) to bring in κρίμα or χάρισμα from the parenthesis. If we understand ἐγένετο [it was], this suffices, though we may conform the phrase more to English ears by saying "the bearing was." (It appears to me, because of contextual reasons, that ἀπέβη (as Meyer, Winer, &c.) is rather strong.) But it is more to maintain the idea of direction here by giving εἰς the force of "unto," "for," or "towards" rather than "upon," which is more suited to convey the notion of the definitive effect or result. This, we shall see, it is the object of the following verse 19 to supply, and in contradistinction from verse 18. And as has been observed by another, this is confirmed by chapter 3:22 where we have two classes distinguished — εἰς πάντας, καὶ ἐπὶ πάντας τοὺς πιστεύοντας (easily merged into one δι' ὁμοιοτέλειαν or the double occurrence of πάντας, whereas it is hardly possible to conceive one clause enlarged into two). Here the distinctive force of εἰς and ἐπὶ is plain: the former gives the bearing of God's righteousness by faith of Jesus Christ "unto all" (and so the gospel is preached to every creature); the latter gives the result (and, as we know the gospel has its blessed effect "upon all those that believe," and upon them only). (Bible Treasury 7:185, Notes on Romans, p.75-6) toward . . . toward: . . . the true force is clearly not "upon" but unto all men (bis), because there it is a question of the simple universal tendency, and not of the result. (Christian Annotator 2:231) toward . . . toward: [The RV] correct[s] the confusion of εἰς as if it were ἐπὶ in the elliptical verse 18, and rightly say "unto all men to condemnation," &c. (Bible Treasury 13:350) [See note to Rom. 3:22] toward . . . toward: [See note to 3:22.]

toward . . . toward: May I just say in closing, that the Authorised Version is clearly wrong in twice rendering εἰς πάντας ἀνθρώπους "upon all men"? In such a sentence it ought to be, "unto or towards all men." The distinction of εἰς and ἐπὶ strikingly appears in Rom 3:22; where we have, first, the universal tendency of God's righteousness, by faith of Jesus Christ, and then, the actual application of it to all those who believe. This is accurately given in our Bible, "unto all," the first and general presentation, putting all under responsibility; and then, "upon all them that believe," the special portion of all such as believe. (Bible Witness and Review 1:350, Christian Annotator 4:37-38) justification: [See note to Rom. 4:25] righteousness: It is the same word, δικαίωμα, as is translated "justification" in verse 16. See also Romans 1:32; 2:26; 8:4. (Notes on Romans, xiii.)

righteousness: But the reader may see in the margin of a Bible which has references, that there is "one righteousness." There cannot be the least doubt that this is the true rendering. When the Apostle would say, by the offence of one, he uses a different and correct form, a different one from that which he uses for one offence. Theology may make it the righteousness of one, but not Greek. (Bible Treasury 2:241)

5:19 the many: There is no "total" in this verse, but "the [known] many" in relation to "the one" definite person who represented each his own company. It is not the same total in the two verses, nor is there any total expressed in the latter of them. (Bible Treasury 7:186, Notes on Romans, p.78)

the many: All men were not left in their ruin, nor were all, in result, delivered through Christ. Hence the change from πάντες to οἱ πολλοί, for it is mere ignorance to take them as equipollent. In certain circumstances they may mean the same persons, but the terms are invariably distinct in themselves. Thus, in verse 18, where "all" occurs, we have the universal aspect of the act, whether of Adam or of Christ; but in verse 19, where the positive application is treated of, we get "the many" who are in fact affected thereby. . . . (Bible Witness and Review 1:349-350, Christian Annotator 4:37-38)

the many . . . the one: of course "the one" and "the many" are accurately given [in the RV] throughout, with other corrections of interest (Bible Treasury 13:350)

5:20 law came in by the way: Every word is uttered with the greatest accuracy. Thus the apostle speaks of the legal state of things, and hence employs the word νόμος, "law," here as in verse 13 without the article. It is clearly the Mosaic law that is in question; yet if it be, Middleton allows that the rejection of the article is not here authorized by any of the canons (i.e., of his own treatise). And this is true. The case is one which demonstrates the defectiveness of his theory. Even in verse 13 the preposition has nothing to do with the true solution; and his notion, though still followed by very many scholars, that the use or non-use of the article is a license after prepositions, is a total fallacy. It may call for more nicety of observation to account for cases with certain prepositions, but nothing more. The regular usage, with or without prepositions, is to present a phrase in the anarthrous form wherever a characteristic state is meant rather than a fact or an abstraction. So here it was the state of things when God gave His law through Moses to Israel which enters the discussion; and, hence, νόμος (not ὁ ν.) was the correct form. Again, the reasoning of Macknight is of no force; for it is not the point whether the Mosaic law as ushered into the world with pomp and notoriety, or privily. Not the historical fact, but the resulting state is here meant. Further, there is no need to take παρεισῆλθεν as necessarily implying an entrance by stealth or privily. The true idea appears to be that the legal state came in by and by. It was neither the original state, in which man was made, nor is it the final condition to which he is destined. It came in not directly, but ancillary, for a special though subordinate purpose, between the entrance of sin and the coming of our Saviour. Hence law in the abstract is uncalled for, even if the phrase would admit of it. But this is carefully excluded, quite as much as giving prominence to the objective historical fact, which also would be out of place. (Bible Treasury 7:197, Notes on Romans, p.79-80)

6:3 unto: [The RV] may dispel the delusion that all were not baptised, only many: a strange oversight of the force of the phrase. But baptism was to or unto, not "into," a person, though that of the Spirit was "into one body." (Bible Treasury 13:350) unto: [Q. The expression "baptized into Christ" is found in Rom. 6:3; also in Gal. 3:27. See also 1 Cor. 12:13, where the agency of the Holy Spirit in Baptism is clearly indicated. Is it not so? CLERICUS.]

A. The premises are unsound, and the conclusion an error. The Greek preposition means "unto" (or "to") as often as "into": which depends on the context or on the nature of the case. Now baptism with water is clearly indicated in 1 Cor. 10:2 as a warning to the baptised at Corinth. Impossible to think the Israelites were baptised into Moses; and here therefore the A. and R. Vv. rightly say "unto". The marginal note of the R.V. is a delusion, for the Greek means "to" no less than "into". So in Acts 19:3 it is as in the A.V. "unto", not "into" as in the Revised. Baptism is the symbol of profession. Reality depends on faith; which might, or might not, be true of the baptised, as is certain from our Lord's words in Mark 16:16. To say "into" therefore goes beyond God's word and implies vital efficacy without and against scriptural warrant. This falls in with the self-importance of a caste (on which the truth frowns), and takes away efficacy from living faith in Christ (on which scripture insists). All have not faith. "He that disbelieveth shall be condemned" (the same sense as "damned" in the A.V.). Baptism will no more save him than dead faith. Baptism is "unto" or "to" only, not "into", even in Matt. 28:19. Compare 1 Cor. 1:13,15. (Bible Treasury 18:224)

6:5 become identified: is it not a marvel that a considerable number of sensible men should not have been struck by the oddity [in the RV] of "united with him by the likeness of his death, we shall be also by the likeness of his resurrection"? It is really identified with the likeness in each case respectively. One would not impute a dogmatic aim or effect; but united with Christ by the likeness of His death or of His resurrection is strange doctrine, if indeed it have any proper sense. (Bible Treasury 14:352)

6:6 serve sin: why change "serve sin" in 6 into "be in bondage to sin," which is sadly ambiguous at best? (Bible Treasury 14:352)

6:7 justified: we may of course explain in the margin δεδ. as released, cleared, discharged, "hath his quittance," &c. But it is of moment to hold "is justified" in the text, though it is singular to see the Revisers departing from their own canons of exactness as to the aorist and the perfect in this short verse. "Freed" as in the Authorised Version is equivocal, and might be confounded with that "liberty" which the Spirit of the Lord produces. From the structure of the word we see that the justification here meant is expressed not as an act but as a state. (Bible Treasury 14:352)

6:10 [whole verse]: Yet worse is the rendering of 10 on which the Americans [correctors of the RV] are still silent; the Authorised Version gives the only true sense. (Bible Treasury 14:352)

6:12 [it in]: Beza notices the critical reading as that of the old interpreter (the Vulgate) and of Augustine, and as also so found in one Greek. This may serve to shew how much more fully and accurately the authorities are now known; for it is so read in the Sinai, Vatican, Alexandrian, and Rescript of Paris (C); in six cursives; in the Coptic, Sahidic, Syriac, Æthiopic, Armenian, &c., besides the Latin, not to speak of many fathers Greek and Latin. (Bible Treasury 7:251, Notes on Romans, p.89)

7:3 belonging: [The RV's] "be joined to," is certainly better than the too definite "married" of the Authorised Version. The Greek exactly answers to the Hebrew, as for instance in Hosea 3, "To be, or belong to" is the literal and precise force. (Bible Treasury 13:350)

7:4 belong: [see note to Rom. 7:4]

7:6 having died in what we were held: . . . this is notoriously inexact, not only in the Authorised Version, but in the received Greek text, where one letter makes the difference between truth and error. The English margin is right. (Exp. of Luke, p. 273)

having died in what we were held: It is scarcely needful to point out how false is the doctrine of the common text and translation, which the margin corrects. If true, Antinomianism would follow, than which nothing is more false and evil. Death to law as well as sin is the fruit of Christ's death and resurrection, and the privilege of the Christian. The law lives to condemn every living soul who pretends to a righteousness of his own. (Bible Treasury 7:297, Notes on Romans, p.101-102)

having died in what we were held: it is high time that the doctrinal error involved in the editions of Beza, and repeated in the text of the Authorised Version, should be expunged. Indeed, it seems to lack the support of a single MS or even version, and to have been a mere conjecture of Beza founded on a misconception of Chrysostom, who really, like every other early ecclesiastical writer, had ἀποθανόντες (not -τος). That the law died is Antinomian in tendency; that the Christian died to law (Gal. 2:19; Col. 2:20, 3:3) is sound and fundamental truth. There is a various reading here (τοῦ θανάτου) supported by Græco-Latin uncials, and mentioned by Origen as then extant in some Greek copies, and followed by the Vulgate (except the Amiatine, which gives morientes, though it should be mortui), and many Latin fathers. But this is to miss the means of discharge or quittance from the law. Of course the Rhemish, like Wiclif, adheres to the less correct form of the Vulgate, whilst all the other English Versions were right in this till the Authorised Version went farther astray than ever. Erasmus, not in his first but in a later edition, had paved the way for Beza's rash conjecture through a misuse of Chrysostom's comment on the passage. Dr. Bloomfield, in his Recensio Synoptica, v. 580, attributes ἀποθανόντος to accident. But this is beyond controversy a mistake, from not knowing the facts. Had it been found in Greek copies, it might have been so; but we can trace its first appearance to the intentional alteration of Théodore de Bèze. (Bible Treasury 13:350-351)

to serve: do not the Company [of Revisers of 1881] go too far in translating ὥστε δουλεύειν ἡμᾶς, "so that we serve," and not "so as to serve," or "so that we should serve"? (Bible Treasury 13:351)

7:7 [^]lust: The article is in the Greek, implying what was actually there. (Notes on Romans, xv.)

7:14 carnal: The best authorities (א, A, B, C, D, E, F, G, &c.) read σάρκινος, not σαρκικός as in the received text. The difference is that the former is a confession of being mere flesh physically. So it is in 2 Cor. 3:3; Heb. 7:16, and probably in 1 Cor. 3:1 (but not in verses 3, 4, where the other form is clearly right). In Rom. 15:27; 1 Cor. 9:11; 2 Cor. 1:12; 10:4; 1 Peter 2:11, it is σαρκικός, in most of which the physical idea of flesh would be out of place. In our text the difference is of some importance as corroborating the scope of the passage that the will was not engaged. Were this meant to be expressed, σαρκικός would be the more proper term. (Bible Treasury 7:326, Notes on Romans, p.105)

carnal: There seems no effort on the Revisers' part to distinguish between σαρκινός (ver. 14) and σαρκικός as in 1 Corinthians 3:3; 9:12, though there is in 2 Corinthians 3:3. (Bible Treasury 13:351) [See note to 1 Cor. 3:1]

7:25 I thank: The Vatican and other ancient authorities give "thanks to God," but the Sinai, Alex., and the mass of other MSS., support εὐχαριστῶ. (Notes on Romans, xvi.)

Λ myself: It is hard to see what is gained by the suggestion [of the American correctors of the RV, "of myself with the mind, indeed, serve,"] on 7:25, which is not very smooth English, without being closer to the Greek. (Bible Treasury 14:352)

8:1 Jesus Λ: There is purposely no loophole for modifying or enfeebling the deliverance.

Therefore I cannot at all agree with those who admit that the clause in the received text and ordinary translation is (i.e., thus the latter half in the Authorized Version) immaterial. (The great uncials α, B, C, D, F, G, with some good cursives and ancient versions omit, while A, D (corr.), &c., omit the last part. The English Version even so is incorrect; for, if genuine, the meaning would be, "those in Christ Jesus who walk," or "those who in Christ Jesus walk," &c. (not "them which are in Christ Jesus who walk.") Believing it to be spurious on the best and ample authority, I am of opinion that it is of great importance to the force of the passage that the gloss added should be rejected. These words are of the greatest value in verse 4; they are an incubus, a dead weight, in verse 1. Here they would necessarily tend to act as a qualifying clause and throw the soul on an examination of walk as the means of certifying that one is in Christ Jesus. Now the duty of self-judgment as to my heart and ways is freely admitted; but it is not the way to ascertain that I am in Christ. If I did gather from my walk and spirit the assurance of such a standing for my soul, it would be in the highest degree self-righteous and presumptuous. The man whose assurance was founded on the good estimate he had formed of his own inward and outward ways would be an object not enviable but of the deepest pity. The true place of self-judgment for the Christian according to scripture is, while holding fast that by grace we are in Christ and hence possessors of the highest privileges, that we should detect our shortcomings and their causes in order to humble ourselves for practical inconsistencies of any kind measured by that exalted standard. If introduced here, it would dislocate all truth, impair all grace, and eventually destroy all the springs of power in walk. (Bible Treasury 7:374, Notes on Romans, p.110-111)

Jesus Λ: I suppose (in spite of A D² and some good versions that have μη κατὰ σ. π. or of D³ E I K, etc., for ἀλλὰ κ. πν.) that the last clause was added to guard the full grace from verse 4, where the same words rightly occur. (Bible Witness and Review 1:315, same as Christian Annotator 3:241)

Jesus Λ: . . . perhaps one ought to explain why the last clause of the first verse is quite ignored. It is not scripture. The same clause is scripture in the fourth verse, but not in the first. It is as perfect and divine in the one case, as it is wrong and human in the other. But the monastic scribes who copied for us the writings of the apostle seemed to have thought the first verse as it stood meagre, and rather dangerous too, and so did their best to improve and guard it by this addition. Was not this rationalistic? Rationalism does not mean conscience judging what is wrong, but man presuming to judge where he should believe and learn of God. Any attempt to mend the scriptures is about as bold and bad rationalism as can be. You may find it in a monk just as much as in a monkey-loving professor. No doubt the monks included many a rationalist of the middle ages; I leave you to judge who are such now. In the first verse there cannot be a question that the words referred to are a mere human accretion. Ask any one entitled to speak: Mill, Griesbach, Scholz, Lachmann, Tischendorf or Tregelles, will tell you that the clause is an interpolation. They rejected it, not because all, or any of them, liked the truth resulting from the true text, but because they were honest men, and competent scholars, and stuck to the best witnesses. In the Catholic Greek Testaments of Munich, 1847, and of Dublin, 1860, you will find the same thing; the clause is omitted, and quite correctly, spite of the Vulgate. So also Bishop Wordsworth and Dean Alford, in their editions of the Greek New Testament, omit it.

Do not mind what people say about "peculiar views." For that is just what I eschew, at least as much as they. I want to help souls more fully into the truth, which surely ought not to be "peculiar." I call human views, old tradition or modern speculation, peculiar, if not wicked too. But I do not call it peculiar, and I hope you do not, to adhere uncompromisingly to the words of the Holy Spirit, and to seek the genuine, simple, and sure sense of God's word. The true form of the verse, then, is, "There is therefore now no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus." The apostle so speaks without the smallest qualification. If you add, "who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit," if you translate it more correctly as not "who," but "if," "when," or "because they walk not," &c., you bring in another idea — walking in the Spirit, not standing. It would amount then to this: that there is no condemnation to them if they walk in holiness. But this were to mix up the walk with the position, the effect of which is that you can never be sure of your position. All is plunged in uncertainty. Place in Christ and walk in the Spirit are two distinct things. I do not know what a man's position is by looking at his walk, for he may often shift and move. The walk is surely of the utmost importance. But the first verse of the chapter speaks only of position, and if you bring in walk there, the position is unsettled, and the truth is spoiled.

When you speak of walk, you bring in christian responsibility (which I entirely admit); but if the apostle is teaching "no condemnation," how can our conduct, our desert, our possible faults be introduced? Do not faults deserve to be censured? Whose walk is such as to claim "no condemnation?" If the walk is mixed up in the question, it is impossible for one ever to know it. The word is thus made void, the apostolic comfort is also nullified, and people get to a religion of doubt, in consequence of this confusion. They find themselves on a quicksand instead of a rock, and miscall it Christianity, whereas it is so far a mere consecration of naturalism. The object of the verse is to shew the rock on which God has placed His people. (Bible Treasury 12:41-42)

Jesus Λ: The Revisers are justified in excluding the last clause of verse 1, which, even if genuine, is incorrectly rendered in the Authorized Version. (Bible Treasury 13:351)

8:2, 4, 5, 6, 9, 11, 13, 14, 15, 16 Spirit: why print "Spirit" with a capital in verses 2, 9 (twice), 11 (twice), 14 and 16, while they [the RV] print it with a small letter in verses 4, 5 (twice), 6, 9 (twice more), 13, 15? (Bible Treasury 13:351)

8:3 in that: The expression ἐν ᾧ seems to be used with a certain variety of application. It is either want of knowledge or strength of system which alone can account for the effort of some moderns to restrict it to the sense "wherein." Nevertheless it never, that I am aware of, passes the bounds of correct usage, so as to be used, as Grotius says, for ἐφ' ᾧ, which expresses the condition or occasion under which a thing is done, or occurs; while ἐν ᾧ is the time, sphere, state, or power in question. Alford is singularly vacillating; for whilst on our text he says “because” (not ‘wherein,’ as in chapter 2. 1., but ‘in that’) and refers in his margin to Hebrews 2:18; on the latter text he says, ‘in that which,’ and remarks, “The ordinary rendering is to take ἐν ᾧ as equivalent to ‘forasmuch as,’ ‘in that,’ English Version, and to justify it by the Hebrew בְּכֵן. But it is doubtful whether ἐν ᾧ has ever this meaning absolutely.(!) It seems only to approach to it through ‘quatenus,’ ‘in as far as,’ which is an extension of its strict meaning, ‘in that particular in which,’ ‘wherein.’(!) And this slightly extended meaning is preferable in all the places usually cited to justify the other: e. g., Rom. 8.3; chap. 6. 17.” It is a little strong to send us to a reference and then to nullify the meaning first, and add there a new reference (Heb. 6:17), where he contradicts himself again and substantially confirms his first statement, for he there says, “in which behalf,” nearly equivalent to “wherefore,” which he expressly prefers to “in which.” (Bible Treasury 8:21, Notes on Romans, p.117) through: I reject the notion that διὰ τῆς σαρκὸς means “in having to act through the flesh,” or “through the medium of the flesh.” No doubt, the construction is decisive against “on account of the flesh;” but διὰ with a genitive often means in a given state, though oftener still “by means of.” (Bible Treasury 8:21, Notes on Romans, p.117) and for sin: [The suggestion of the American correctors of the RV] is simply for the text a return to the Authorised Version with the R.V. rendering in the margin. (Bible Treasury 14:352)

8:4 requirement: the textual rendering [of the RV] and the marginal should change places; and so perhaps in 11 (Bible Treasury 13:351) that: The reader of the Greek Testament will observe that the true text of verse 4 differs from the spurious clause of verse 1. It is not the anarthrous περιπατοῦσιν, which would import a condition (“if walking”), but τοῖς π., which means the fact or character — “those that walk.” (Bible Treasury 12:44)

Spirit: I believe it should be “Spirit” (not “spirit,” as if it was ours only) in 4, as well as 5,6, and in 10 as well as 9,13. The anarthrous construction does not deny the Holy Spirit to be in question, but presents it as character, rather than as the person objectively viewed; which might be no less true of Father and Son: only it is, from the nature of the case, more frequently so predicated of the Spirit. This is a great blemish in the Revised Version, being uniformly a small “s”; which Dr. Scrivener throughout has rectified in the excellent Cambridge Paragraph Bible of 1873. (Bible Treasury 14:352)

Spirit: [See note to Rom. 8:2]

8:5 Spirit: [See note to Rom. 8:2]

8:6 Spirit: [See note to Rom. 8:2]

8:9 Spirit: [See note to Rom. 8:2]

8:11 on account of: [See note to Rom. 8:4]

Spirit: [See note to Rom. 8:2]

8:13 Spirit: [See note to Rom. 8:2]

mortify: [The American correctors of the RV read “put to death” and omit marg.²] agreed; though it is a small question. (Bible Treasury 14:352)

8:14 Spirit: [See note to Rom. 8:2]

8:15 Spirit: [See note to Rom. 8:2]

8:16 Spirit: [See note to Rom. 8:2]

8:18 in regard to us: The phraseology seems to me choice and precise. It is not ἡμῖν, which after ἀποκαλυφθῆναι would be ambiguous and is already appropriated to the sense of receiving spiritual communication. It is not ἐν ἡμῖν, which makes or tends to make the glory concentrated and terminated in us. Εἰς ἡμᾶς leaves room for us to be reached by the glory but takes it in universally. (Bible Treasury 8:135, Notes on Romans, p.144)

8:21 that: Or, “in hope: because.” (Bible Treasury 8:135, Notes on Romans, p.144)

8:24 by: [The American correctors of the RV read “in” (with marg. Or, by:) agreed (Bible Treasury 14:352)

[last half of verse]: [The RV has] adopted “who hopeth for that which he seeth?” on the authority, as far as I am aware, of the great Vatican uncial (1209) supplemented by the margin of a Bodleian cursive, Roe 16, conventionally cited among the Pauline copies as 47. No editor has as yet ventured to put this forward as the true text, though no doubt the resulting sense seems simple and suitable — indeed so much so as to look like the smoothing down of a rather rugged phrase. And it may be mentioned that Mr. Hansell’s Oxford edition of the more famous uncials does not represent B aright, any more than older editors, ὁ γὰρ βλέπει τις, τί ἐλπίζει; whereas Tischendorf reports its text (P^m) as ὁ γὰρ βλέπει, τίς ἐλπ. The margin of verse 47 [sic.] is the less trustworthy here as reading ὑπομένει for ἐλπ. though, strange to say, P^a and A do the same. Is it not strange that under such circumstances so ill-sustained a reading should be the ground of a change in so grave a work as the publicly revised version of the New Testament? (Bible Treasury 13:351)

8:26 itself: [The American correctors of the RV read “itself”:] [not] agreed . . . (as before) (Bible Treasury 14:352)

for us: The received text inserts here ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν contrary to the best authorities. It seems to me implied, and needless to say, if not rather narrowing the thought. In the following verse we have ὑπὲρ ἀγίων expressed in its due place. (Bible Treasury 8:155, Notes on Romans, p.149)

8:27 ^A God: It is not merely “according to his will,” as in the Authorized Version, but according to Himself. (Bible Treasury 8:156, Notes on Romans, p.150)

^A God: the added words in Italics [in the RV] only encumber and enfeeble the sense. The Spirit intercedes for the saints according to God and His nature, yet more than His will, which comes very short of the truth. And though the “purpose” be without doubt of God, still it has pleased Him not to qualify it here in any way, as the fullest explanation follows in verses 29, 30. (Bible Treasury 13:351)

8:33,34 justifieth: . . . for us: This I think is the true way of arranging as well as punctuating the clauses. The Authorized Version impairs the link between the end of verse 33 and the beginning of verse 34, as also between the rest of verse 34 and verse 35; while others seem to me to injure the force by putting a note of interrogation at the end of verses 33 and 34. (Bible Treasury 8:182, Notes on Romans, p.157) justifieth: . . . for us: The punctuation of verses 33-35 is better [in the RV] than in the Authorised Version, but not quite uniformly correct. “Who shall lay anything to the charge of God’s elect? It is God that justifieth: who is he that condemneth [or shall condemn]? It is Christ Jesus that died, yea rather that was raised from the dead, who is at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us: who shall separate from the love of Christ? shall tribulation,” &c. (Bible Treasury 13:351)

8:34 [whole verse]: [See note to Rom. 8:33]

condemneth: it is a question of an accent, and so of a tense present or future. The future [in the RV] I presume to be due to Drs. Westcott and Hort after Lachmann (Tyndale, the Geneva, and the Rhemish giving it of old); and perhaps one may add the Hebrew of Isaiah 50. In the Septuagint also we find the future, but quite another phrase. It seems to us with Dean Alford that ὁ δίκαιων naturally leads to the present ὁ κατακρίνων, and that the balance and the emphasis might be preserved better throughout by a colon before “who,” not only between verse 34 and 35, but also between 35 and 36. (Bible Treasury 14:352)

for us: [See note to 8:33]

8:39 nor powers: This is the true place of δυνάμεις according to ample authority of the highest order. The oldest Greek MSS. which give the place of “powers” as in the common text are two uncials of the ninth century, but they are supported by several very ancient versions which were (probably through inadvertence) swayed by Ephesians 1:21, 3:10, 6:12; and Colossians 2:15. (Bible Treasury 8:183, Notes on Romans, p.160)

powers: In the close of this part of the apostle’s profound communication there is good and full authority, as is well known, for placing “nor powers” after (not before) “nor things present nor things to come.” (Bible Treasury 13:351)

9:1 [whole verse]: The opening verses of chapter 9 are fairly rendered in the Revised V. as in the Authorised, being substantially alike. The marginal alternatives are of no real weight; the last, like the American suggestion, being unidiomatic. For in such cases the predicate ought to have the emphatic position, and the subject should have the article in Greek, the only apparent exception being the LXX’s rendering of Psalm 68:19, which is acknowledged as corrupt. (Bible Treasury 13:351)

9:2 [whole verse]: [See note to Rom. 9:1]

9:3 [whole verse]: [See note to Rom. 9:1]

could wish: There is no doubt that the imperfect will bear the idiomatic sense given in the Authorized Version: “I could wish.” (Comp. Acts 25:22; Gal. 4:20.) The question is, whether the apostle does not go farther here and affirm that he had actually so wished, not soberly, but still as a fact, not that he did or could so wish as a fixed principle. So the Vulgate’s “optabam,” supported by the Polyglott. Erasmus gives “optarem,” and in the same sense E. Schmid, Schott, Naebke, &c. (Bible Treasury 8:202, Notes on Romans, p.163) could wish: Though unwilling to add to your already numerous notes upon this text, I may be allowed to say that the Cambridge Annotations and the Bampton Lectures of Dr. Bandinel are in error if they deny the idiomatic use of the imperfect. No particle is requisite to give it a potential sense. Though the tense is past and in the indicative mood, it is perfectly proper, as far as grammar is concerned, to render ἤχόμην “I could wish.” Matthiae (Gr. Gr. 509a) cites from Æsch. in Ctes. p.333, ἐβουλόμην οὖν τὴν βουλὴν . . . ὁρθῶς διοικεῖσθαι; but an instance from the New Testament may be more satisfactory, as ἐβουλόμην καὶ αὐτὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἀκούσαι. (Acts 25:22.) The fact is, that the true rendering is a question of the context, and not merely of grammar. My opinion is that the Auth. Version, DeWette, Beza, Martin, and Ostervald are right, and that the Vulgate, Luther, the Lausanne Translation, &c. with Valpy and Haldane, are wrong. The meaning is, I think, that Paul loved his brethren in the flesh quite as much as Moses, and that he esteemed their privileges most highly, whatever the Jew might think or say to the contrary. (Christian Annotator 1:279)

9:4 and the lawgiving: Mr. T. S. Green has inadvertently dropt the rendering of καὶ ἡ νομοθεσία, “and the law-giving” out of this portion. (Bible Treasury 13:351)

9:5 over all God: Very needless difficulty has been raised about the terms ὁ ὢν ἐπὶ πάντων Θεός. The Noetian heretics of old drew from this and other scriptures that God the Father suffered. Others in opposing so flagrant an error were too anxious to restrict ὁ ἐπὶ πάντων to the Father, especially as He is unquestionably so qualified in Ephesians 4:6. But there is no real difficulty; and it is only ignorance or heterodoxy which finds any; for scripture is plain in attributing not merely Θεοότης but Θεότης to Christ. He is God, as is the Father, and also the Holy Ghost.

They are each and all styled Jehovah, the name incommunicable to the creature, let it be ever so exalted. The Son did not deem it a matter of plunder to be on equality with God. He emptied Himself in taking a servant’s shape; whereas even the archangel is at best but a servant and never can be other: it is Michael’s blessedness and part to be serving God. Not so the Son: He humbled Himself to take the place of a servant, being in His own proper nature and dignity infinitely above it. He learned obedience by the things which He suffered; He had only known what it was to command; but, taking that position in communion with the love and counsels of the Father, He was therein the perfect pattern of all lowly obedience. How base to take advantage of His grace to despise His glory! — to be so occupied with the humiliation to which He stooped to glorify God the Father, and shew us both God and man in His own person and ways, and above all, to accomplish redemption — to be so filled, I may say, with the circumstances of shame into which He went down in love as to forget who He is in Himself that for us descended so low! No; He that was the perfect man was the very God, equally with the Father and the Holy Ghost. All things were made not only by Him but for Him.

But is not this true of the Father? Assuredly: yet this in no way impeaches the title of the Son. Scripture is plain as to both. God as such in the true and full sense is and must be supreme. This attaches to the persons in the Godhead. Differences there may be and are; but not in this. To deny supremacy of the Son or of the Spirit is to fall into the Arian heresy or the Macedonian. No doubt, as in Ephesians 4:5, Christ is contradistinguished as one Lord from the Father; and so similarly in 1 Corinthians 8:6. This however, far from derogating from His intrinsic divine glory, only shews us another glory which He receives and as the exalted man who is made Lord and Christ. He, and He distinctively, has the official place of lordship, though of course as a term of dignity it belongs alike to Father, Son, and Spirit; and so any one can see who will take the trouble of comparing the scriptures.

There is no discrepancy in the authorities there that affects the sense, as in 1 Timothy 3:16. Manuscripts and versions proclaim the truth with an unwavering voice: Christ is over all, God blessed for ever. The notion that Θεός is wanting in the citation of the early ecclesiastical writers is a mistake. They all read as we do, unless we conceive that Chrysostom omitted ὁ before ὢν, as the Augian and Boernerian MSS. did τό before κατὰ σάρκα, which was probably mere inadvertence. What the Pseudo-Ignatius (ep. Tars.) or the Constit. Apostol. may say is of the moment. (Even these spurious pieces seem to be only opposing the Patripassian or Sabellian notion (i.e., that the God and Father suffered), and affirming that He who did suffer was Jesus, not His God and Father who is over all.) As to Athanasius, not only is it not true that he ever wrote περὶ δὲ τοῦ εἶναι ἐπὶ πάντων Θεὸν τοῦ σταυρώθεντα φοβοῦμαι (“I fear to say that the crucified One is God over all”), but it was not even the Pseudo-Athanasius who is so represented, but the Pseudo-Arius in answering the citation of this passage. Wetstein therefore was wrong here and betrayed his Arian animus. (See Athanasii Opp. 1.125 B, ed. Col. 1686). Erasmus is equally wrong in thinking that Cyprian and Hilary left out “Deus;” for it is only omitted by careless editors, and is found in all good editions. As to Origen, his wildness was such as to weaken the weight of his assertions; but what he does say, in answer to Celsus’ charge that the Christians made Christ God the Father or greater still, is that while some might be hasty enough to aver τὸν Σωτῆρα τὸν μέγιστον ἐπὶ πᾶσι Θεὸν ἄλλ’ οὐτὶ γε ἡμεῖς τοιοῦτον οἱ πειθόμενοι αὐτῷ λέγοντι, κ.τ.λ. Now I do not admit that Origen (contra Cels. vii.14) was justified in quoting the last clause of John 14:28 (which he misquotes) where it was a question of the Son’s Deity, while the text speaks of His place of earthly subjection. But even he does not go so far as to deny supreme Godhead to the Son; he does deny, as all taught of God must, the monstrous folly that the Son has power over God the Father. The doubtful opinion of Eusebius may indeed be cited, who did restrict, it would seem, τὸν ἐπὶ πάντων Θεόν to the Father; but it is well known that he was feeble as to the great truth of Christ's Godhead if not an Arian. (I am pained, but bound, to protest once more against such words as are allowed to continue from edition to edition in Dean Alford's work (in loco). "That our Lord (says he) is not in the strict exclusive sense, ὁ ἐπὶ πάντων θεός, every Christian will admit, that title being reserved for the Father." Every clause is a grievous blunder. Our Lord is in the strictest sense what He is said not to be, for ὁ ὢν ἐπὶ π. θ. is even stronger than ὁ ἐπὶ π. θ. Nor is it true that the Father is such in the "exclusive" sense, as he says; nor is it reserved for Him in a sense stricter than for the Son. He allows that Christ is ἐπὶ πάντων θεός. But this, though true, is not what the apostle teaches, but a proposition about Christ still more stringent than his expositor essays to deny. I trust and am willing to believe that the Dean of Canterbury wishes neither to lower our Lord nor to adhere to a most objectionable statement; and therefore I again entreat him to correct on so grave a matter words which neither faith nor even logic can justify. To reason from human order to the divine nature and relations is ground as unsafe as it is false. No doubt in the creature, being essentially limited, the highest place for one excludes another. But it is the direct road to the worst gulf of error so to think of the Godhead, as to which we have only to believe what is revealed from on high; and this may be hard to the natural mind but is unambiguous, and too clear for faith to deny or explain away.) But these seem really all who have been exaggerated into "multi patres qui Christum τὸν ἐπὶ πάντων Θεόν appellari posse negant" (Griesbach in loco), save indeed that by very strange logic it is assumed that to call the Father so is to deny it of the Son. But this is only the mistake handed down through Wetstein to the critic of Jena. The fact is that the fathers as a whole applied our text to the Lord Jesus without a suspicion of its incompatibility with Ephesians 4:6. They are both equally true, as the Father and the Son are equally God. I grant that they speculated dangerously sometimes; and of their crude assertions controversy and heresy have availed themselves: the latter to cover its aberration from revealed truth; the former to make councils or the Pope the only securer of the truth, as against the earlier fathers and (what is worse) holy scripture. But from Irenæus to Theophylact among Greeks, and from Tertullian to the middle ages among the Latins, it could be easily shewn that the passage was accepted as we have it now in the Authorized Version and in the ordinary orthodox sense. Cyril of Alexandria is most express in contradicting from this text the Emperor Julian who was rash enough to say that Paul did not speak of Jesus as God. Nor is there a single name of sound reputation opposed to this.

The ingenuity of criticism however, having neither various readings nor ancient versions to invoke, is not content with misrepresenting the testimony of the early christian writers and has strained itself in the most violent efforts to effect a diversion by the help of points; as it is well known that they are wanting in the most ancient copies. The Complutensian editors punctuate fairly. Erasmus, not in his earlier editions but later, suggested a period after σάρκα, as had been done before by the writers of two MSS. of the eleventh and twelfth centuries usually numbered 5 and 47 in the conventional list of Pauline copies. Lachmann and Tischendorf acted on this; and Vater clenched the rent quite as effectually by putting the cut-off clause or clauses within marks of parenthesis ended by a note of admiration. Now not only is this severance, however managed, in opposition to the mass of punctuated manuscripts, all ancient versions and citations, but, what is of more weight still, it is contrary to the invariable idiom employed to express such a blessing (or on the contrary a curse). The regular formula is to open the sentence with εὐλογητός or some kindred word. (Even Socinus was clear-sighted enough to see this and honest enough to acknowledge it.) Here therefore to bear regularly the desired punctuation the words should have run: — Εὐλογητός ὁ ἐπὶ π. θ., the ὢν in this case being worse than useless. The only apparent exception produced is from the Septuagint of Psalm 67 (68):19, κύριος ὁ θεὸς εὐλογητός. But judging by the old Latin quoted in Holmes and Parsons' note, "Dominus Deus benedictus est," it is no exception, because it is an assertion about God, not an ejaculatory blessing. The latter follows immediately; and then the usual order appears. The former clause may indeed be an interpolation; as there is no Hebrew text to found it on.

Further, the incongruity of such a doxology here, remembering the apostle's grief just expressed and the relation of the Jews to the Messiah, is also a decisive disproof; and, lastly, it would utterly mar the beautiful antithesis so characteristic of the apostle, even in the opening of this very epistle, in which he contrasts the human line of the Messiah with His divine dignity.

Another mode of punctuating, also suggested by Erasmus (who perhaps did not know that a Viennese MS. 71 of the twelfth century, represents it), and adopted by Locke, places the stop after πάντων with a shorter clause taken as the blessing, and is even more objectionable, as it is pressed by the additional difficulty that we ought in that case to have the article with θεός. It should stand Εὐλογητός ὁ θεὸς εἰς τ. αἰ. ἀμήν. But after all it would not effect what is desired, for it is impossible to have a stricter predication of supremacy. It is not merely, as Hippolytus and others thought, that the Father delivered all things to the Son, an important but different truth. Here we have what He is; and He is over all, being essentially divine.

Conjectural emendation of the text is another device of unbelievers to defraud the Lord of His glory; but this may be dismissed into its native obscurity. Even the Grotian expedient of dropping θεός is contrary to all authority of MSS. but would be useless if conceded; for ὁ ὢν ἐπὶ πάντων is the strongest affirmation in itself of divine supremacy. Quite as futile was the effort to lower the sense of θεός by reference to 2 Thess. 2:4, and to translate the clause here, "who is as God," &c. For, first, the supposed analogy is cast out of that verse on the best authority; and secondly, it would tell, if genuine, in the opposite way; for certainly the man of sin will not claim to be God in an inferior sense. The absence of the article is a sign that character is meant to be conveyed, and has nothing to do with inferiority. Compare Romans 1:21.

On the whole then the reader may rest assured of both the text and the sense of this most impressive testimony to Christ, the importance of which may be in some measure inferred from the evident desire of so many since the Reformation, Catholics and Protestants, without reckoning Arians or Unitarians, who have done what they could to neutralize its force. Thanks be to God who vouchsafes the truth to be in us and to abide with us for ever. (Bible Treasury 8:203-5, Notes on Romans, p.165-171) over all God: It is easy to say that the proposed rendering ("he who is over all, God be blessed for ever. Amen.") is at least as good as that in the Authorised Version; but I am persuaded that the statement is rash and groundless. It is true that, through ignorance or heterodoxy, the copies vary not a little; some making the new sentence commence with ὁ ὢν, others with θεός, and a third class with εὐλογητός; but the most ancient versions of the East and West, as the Syriac, Itala, Vulgate, &c., and the early Greek and Latin Fathers, as Irenæus, Victorinus, Tertullian, Cyprian, Hilary, &c., leave no doubt as to the way in which the words were then understood and applied. One is therefore pained to see the prejudice which warped the judgment of Griesbach, Lachmann, and Tischendorf, in severing the last clause from Christ, to whom it really belongs; at least, their punctuation leads me to suppose that their editors mean this, though Lachmann gives the usual sense in the Latin version of Jerome at the foot of his page.

But there are stronger reasons than any human testimonies. The context, and the bearing of the sentence itself, resist all such efforts or mistakes, and prove that the common version gives the intended and only right sense; . . . 2 Cor. 9:31, which might by a superficial reader be thought to favour the contrary view, does in truth confirm the ordinary construction of Rom. 9:5; for there, as here, it is the before-named subject of the preposition, with which ὁ ὢν κ. τ. λ. is in apposition; and clearly as this is "the God and Father of the Lord Jesus" in the one case, it is with equal certainty "Christ" in the other. Moreover, if the sense for which Dr. Beard contends had been meant, I think that in accordance with such formulas elsewhere in the New Testament the clause would have begun with εὐλογητός. Of the copies which thus begin, some concede the point which Dr. Beard seeks to escape; for they read ὁ ὢν ἐπὶ πάντων θεός, in connexion with ὁ Χριστός το κατὰ σάρκα. The remaining expedient adopted by others is to read ὁ ὢν ἐπὶ πάντων, θεός εὐλογητός εἰς τ. αἰ. Of this last Dr. Beard perhaps thinks as cheaply as I do; for while εὐλ. is brought into its normal place, there is an anomalous absence of the subject in the doxology, besides making the preceding clause disconnected, if not meaningless. He was therefore obliged to fall back on a rendering which, far from being able to compete with that given in the English Bible, supposes a collocation in the Greek contrary to precedent, and is inconsistent with the Apostle's argument, instead of crowning it triumphantly as the true connexion does.

Why all this labour and ingenuity against the plain force of the sentence? Because men refuse, till grace wins or judgment compels them, to honour the Son even as the Father. (Christian Annotator 3:176-177) over all God: The marginal alternatives presented as to 9:5 are unworthy efforts of unbelief to enfeeble the plain testimony of the text to the Divine glory of the Lord Jesus, and the Americans [correctors of the RV] note sins against the usus loquendi like others. (Bible Treasury 14:352)

9:6 Not however: The version of Beza, E. Schmid, &c. (which Bucer adopted before them, and Macknight since), "It is not possible," errs, not so much in requiring τε as Calvin remarked (for it may dispense with this particle) as in the absence of the infinitive after it. Besides, the other sense is better, even were it grammatically admissible. (Bible Treasury 8:218, Notes on Romans, p.172)

9:7 to thee: Or, thy seed. (Bible Treasury 8:218, Notes on Romans, p.172)

9:9 [first part of verse]: Verse 9 runs "For this word is of promise" or [one] of promise, the Revised seeming looser than the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 13:351)

9:10 by one: There is no insuperable difficulty, I think, in ἐξ ενός. There was in this case a single mother, also one father. Its object is to give emphasis to both, in contradistinction to the former case. (Bible Treasury 8:218, Notes on Romans, p.172)

9:21 one: ought there not to be "one" vessel (not "a" merely) in verse 21, to express the first ὁ? (Bible Treasury 13:351)

9:22 willing: [The suggestion of the American correctors of the RV, marg. Or, although willing,] is a marginal that weakens the sense. (Bible Treasury 14:352)

9:23 glory: But in this passage as elsewhere there is no sufficient reason to depart from the ordinary meaning of "glory" or to give the word the sense of God's mercy. Nor does Ephesians 1:12 sanction this, where glory maintains strictly its own distinctive place, as will appear to him who thoughtfully weighs verses 6,7,12. The word grace is undoubtedly and most properly left out of the last, where grace is not intended to be expressed any more than in verse 14 where it could not be. The Spirit looks onward to the day when the purpose of God shall be accomplished. (Bible Treasury 8:262, Notes on Romans, p.186)

9:28 [middle of verse]: Verse 28 is presented [in the RV] in the abridged form of the oldest MSS and versions, which most modern editors prefer; the larger form seems assimilated to the LXX. (Bible Treasury 13:351)

9:32 [of law]: There is excellent evidence to shew that νόμον and πᾶς have been inserted by the copyists to add force, clearness, or symmetry to the apostle's citations from Isaiah. But there is nothing so good as the divine word as He gave it. (Bible Treasury 8:307, Notes on Romans, p.197)

9:33 he: Copyists probably added πᾶς from chapter 10:11. (Notes on Romans, p.198)

10:1 delight: The word εὐδοκία means benevolent wish, or good will, where it goes beyond complacency and good pleasure. Compare the usage of the verb εὐδοκέω. It is more than ἐπιθυμία or ἐπιπόθησις. (Bible Treasury 8:330, Notes on Romans, p.200) their: all critics of weight on ample evidence, instead of "for Israel," read "for them," as following up chapter 9. (Bible Treasury 13:351)

10:2 them: The substitution of "them" for "Israel," required by the more ancient and better authorities, appears to me really stronger as being more expressive of affection than the common text. It was needless to define more clearly for whose blessing he was so earnestly interested, and this the more because of their great danger. The threatenings in the prophecies verified in their deepening unbelief drew out his strong crying to God on their behalf, and this for salvation. For what short of it could satisfy a heart that loved them? To say that "internal as well as external evidence is against" αὐτῶν and for τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ proves nothing but the unfitness of him who could so speak to judge of questions which demand not learning only but critical acumen and spiritual discrimination. (Bible Treasury 8:330, Notes on Romans, p.200) for: "Zeal of God" is an objectionable rendering, just as "faith of the Son of God" in Galatians 2:20. The Greek genitive is far more comprehensive than the English possessive case, and admits of an objective force as readily as a subjective. "The love of God" in that tongue equally means God's love to us or ours to Him: the context alone decides. Here there can be no question of the intended force. The Jews were zealous for God but not according to right or true knowledge (κατ' ἐπίγνωσιν). (Bible Treasury 8:330)

10:5 the righteousness that [is] by the law . . . those things: But the Revisers also adopt the briefer reading in verse 5, on small but ancient and good testimony. (Bible Treasury 13:351)

10:10 belief is . . . confession is: Literally, the verse runs, "it is believed. . . and it is confessed. . ." (Bible Treasury 8:357, Notes on Romans, p.206)

10:12 ᾧ rich: the Revisers go back in substance, though more correctly, to the English versions older than the Authorised Version, with a copulative perhaps needlessly inserted. (Bible Treasury 13:351)

10:15 of those that announce glad tidings of peace: [The RV] drop[s] as not duly authenticated one of the last clauses of verse 15 ("of those that announce glad tidings of peace") with the noble quaternion, α A B C, supplemented by a few cursive witnesses, ancient versions, and early writers. (Bible Treasury 13:351)

10:17 God's: α B C D E, with some cursives, versions, and fathers read Χριστοῦ "Christ's" for "God's;" F G, &c. omit either. (Bible Treasury 8:372, Notes on Romans, p.212)

11:4 Baal: In the LXX, as the text at present stands, the masculine article is prefixed, not as here the feminine; but it may originally have been otherwise as elsewhere. (Judg. 2:13; Hos. 2:8; Zeph. 1:4.) The quotation is the sense, not the precise transcript of either the Heb. or the

LXX. Abarbanel speaks of a male image for men, a female for women; but this scarcely accounts for the case before us. Others (as Authorized Version) suppose an ellipse of εἰκόνι. (Bible Treasury 9:5, Notes on Romans, p.215)

11:6 grace Λ : [but if works, it is no longer grace, otherwise work is no longer work] . . . The Vatican, which is the best support of this doubtful clause, reads χάρις, grace. . . But I do not see that the bracketed clause adds to the precision of the truth; whereas it was natural enough to tack it on, especially as the form in the Vatican copy seems an evident error (χάρις instead of ἔργον in the end of the disputed clause). (Bible Treasury 9:5, Notes on Romans, p.215,217)

grace Λ : The latter part of chapter 11:6 is rejected by \aleph^{am} . A C D E F G P, &c., with the ancient versions, save the Syrr. and Eth., and so is properly left out of text and margin by the Revisers, notwithstanding its presence (ρ^{am}) in the favourite Vatican, L, and the mass of cursives. (Bible Treasury 13:351, 352)

11:7 hardened: "Hardened" also is the right sense, rather than blinded (though this is also taught elsewhere). It may be that ἐπαρώθησαν was confounded in thought and sense with ἐπηρώθησαν, as another has pointed out in the Vatican text of Job 17:7 in the LXX. (Bible Treasury 9:5, Notes on Romans, p.217)

11:11 [paragraph]: [The American correctors of the RV] are right in preferring to begin the paragraph of chapter 11 with verse 11 rather than 13. (Bible Treasury 14:352)

11:13 For: $\delta\acute{\epsilon}$ "but," "now," is the reading of \aleph A B and other good authorities, instead of the more common and easy γάρ, "for." The difference in sense seems slight. (Bible Treasury 9:22, Notes on Romans, p.221)

11:17 among: The rendering here is as certain as the sense resulting from it is clear and good. With plurals or collectives ἐν regularly means "among," as in the Authorized Version, or "inter illos" as Grotius correctly translates. The Vulgate ("in illis") is obscure; Calvin and Beza, not without predecessors among the fathers and followers in modern Germany, including even Olshausen and Meyer, give "pro illis" which is unequivocally without warrant. Erasmus is far more right in his comment than Beza who cavils at it and adopts the sense which the former justly censures. But there is no need of resorting to the influence of the Hebrew preposition בְּ however largely true elsewhere in the New Testament. What we find here is as common in classical as in Hellenistic Greek; but ἐν = in loco (or locum) is the usage nowhere that I know, and in my judgment impossible to reconcile with the genius of the language. (Bible Treasury 9:23,24, Notes on Romans, p.226) and: The καί "and" is doubtful; \aleph^* B C, with the Coptic, and Damasus, reject it, probably others also; and we can readily see why some might bring it in to soften a phrase seemingly rugged without it. (Bible Treasury 9:24, Notes on Romans, p.226) and: [The RV] adopt[s], on the doubtful authority of \aleph^{am} B C with the Coptic, the singular exclusion of καὶ "and." That the copyists took liberties with the verse is plain from D F G omitting τῆς βίβλης καὶ altogether, and in Latin as well as Greek. (Bible Treasury 13:352)

11:19 The: \aleph A B C D^c F G L P and many cursives and fathers omit οἱ, which may readily have crept in from the context. (Bible Treasury 9:24, Notes on Romans, p.226)

11:21 [fear] lest: [The RV] discard[s] (as do some modern critics) μήπως, and with the best copies read simply οὐδε σοὺ φείσεται in the face of Chrysostom's express contradiction (iv. 338, Field, Oxon, 1849). Certainly the preferred text is far easier than that commonly received, which is opposed to the well-known canon of diplomatic criticism. (Bible Treasury 13:352)

11:22 God's: $\Theta\epsilon\omicron\upsilon$ is attested by \aleph A B C D* beside many ancient versions. (Bible Treasury 9:24, Notes on Romans, p.227)

God's: $\theta\epsilon\omicron\upsilon$ "God's," is now given on weighty grounds [in the RV] (Bible Treasury 13:352)

11:29 indefeasible: Or "irrevocable," not subject to change of mind. (Notes on Romans, xxiv.)

11:31 [whole verse]: Rom. 11:31, rightly translated and understood, . . . [shows] the triumph of mercy in behalf of the poor Jew in the latter day. . . I have reason to believe, from correspondence with Mr. GREEN, that he would now concur with this view, though the old mistake appeared in his learned Grammar of the New Test. Dialect, p.247. The Syriac, the Vulgate, Luther, Tyndale, and the Lausanne Version seem to give a sense substantially similar. (Christian Annotator 1:331)

[whole verse]: Wiclif, Tyndale, and Cranmer, with the Vulgate, the Peschito and the Philoxenian Syriac, the Arabic, are here more correct than the Geneva Version, Beza, and the Authorized. Calvin seems nearer to the truth, but has not quite hit the mark. "That they became unbelievers through the mercy shewn to the Gentiles" is indeed somewhat harsh; nor is there any need of his own mistake. The Jews rebelled against the mercy shewn to the Gentiles as we learn from the Acts, 1 Thess. 2, &c., and as experience shews in fact to this day. (Bible Treasury 9:42, Notes on Romans, p.234)

[whole verse]: Verse 31 is an unhappy instance of misrendering [in the RV]; the comma if inserted should follow, not precede, τῷ ὑμ. ἐλέει, as the true force is "even so have these also disbelieved your mercy, that they also may be objects of mercy." The older English versions were right, following with the Pesch. and the Philox. Syrr., the Coptic, and the Vulgate, till the Geneva misled under the false guidance of Beza. Luther on the one hand and Estius on the other were nearer the truth; and so apparently Green, Lachmann, Tischendorf and Tregelles. (Bible Treasury 13:352)

[whole verse]: How strange that the Americans [correctors of the RV] fail to notice the error in the misrendering of 31? For it really opposes and upsets the very doctrine the apostle is teaching in the chapter, insinuating a notion flattering to Gentile conceit, and at issue with all the prophetic word? (Bible Treasury 14:352)

11:33 Λ God's: Or "both of God's wisdom," &c. as in the Authorized Version. (Bible Treasury 9:43, Notes on Romans, p.236)

12:1 intelligent: But "spiritual," if strange in the Revisers' margin is worse for the text of chapter 12:1 as the rendering of λογικὸς, which may mean of the mind, intelligent, or again according to the word, but should not be confounded with πν., however truly they may coalesce. (Bible Treasury 14:352) intelligent: or . . . governed by the word (God's Inspiration p. 390)

12:2 not to: An excellent reading of most ancient MSS is "and do not fashion," &c. (Notes on Romans, xxiv.)

the: [See note to Rom. 12:6]

12:6 Λ faith: the question is whether "faith" is not better than "the" or "our" faith. Abstraction gives the article in Greek in contrast with English; which the Revisers have often overlooked, as e.g., in verses 2, 3, where "your" is erroneously introduced from inattention to the principle. (Bible Treasury 14:352)

12:8 simplicity: This in effect is "liberality." (Notes on Romans, xxv.)

presideth: To render ὁ πρ. in verse 8 "ruleth" [in the RV] is a deduction from the close meaning of "presideth," though perhaps allowable and true; as in verse 10 the word translated "preferring" means being the first, or leading the way in the honour paid to each other. (Bible Treasury 13:352)

12:10 anticipating: the word translated “preferring” means being the first, or leading the way in the honour paid to each other. (Bible Treasury 13:352)

12:11 serving the Lord: (I see no good reason here for taking the dative as a mere case of relation like so many others in the context, and for rendering it with Stuart, “as to the Lord, obedient or engaged in His service.” The common construction as the complement of the participle seems to me more exact and simple.) . . . It is well known that Griesbach, following a few MSS, versions, and fathers, joined with Erasmus in reading καὶρῶ for Κυρίῳ, contrary to the mass of authorities and almost all other editors. It was, we may boldly say, infirmity in judgment; especially as the internal evidence is at least no less adverse than the external. Serving the time (rather “season” or “opportunity”) seems at least somewhat unworthy, is little suited to the context in itself, and easily susceptible of the worst abuse. It is no fair instance of a more difficult and therefore preferable reading. The two words may have been confounded by an ignorant scribe, who took the abbreviated form of κω as meaning καὶρῶ instead of Κυρίῳ. Possibly it may have been wilfully altered, but we should be slow to suspect this when we can otherwise account for a change. (Bible Treasury 9:71,72, see also Christian Annotator 3:140) serving the Lord: It is one of the strange phenomena of ancient copies that some (D^{am}. F G) should be found with the monstrous reading καὶρῶ “time” or “season;” that Erasmus should have adopted it in his editions ii.—v. after having “the Lord” in his first edition; and that Stephens, Mill, and even Griesbach should have followed in his wake. The weight of external evidence as well as internal propriety so decidedly preponderates against this heathenish maxim that one is surprised to see greater weight attached to it by the marginal note of the Revisers [of 1881] than in the Authorised Version. Every recent editor of weight rejects it with \aleph A B D^{cor}. E L P and almost all the cursives, ancient versions and fathers, save some Latins. To buy up the fit time is one thing; to serve it is another, which wrongs the Lord to whom alone we owe allegiance unlimited. (Bible Treasury 13:352)

12:16 consorting . . . the lowly: It may seem more literal to take this as “led away,” i.e. to the judgment seat of rulers with the despised Christians when thus oppressed, as Schleusner, &c., or by them in the sense of conforming to them, as Grotius, &c. But the meaning given in the text seems far better. . . .

Spite of the antithesis tempting one to take the last word in the same gender as in the clause before, which is grammatically easy, I think that the differing form is both more in keeping with the fulness of the apostle’s style and better in this passage, though “lowly things” may yield a sense not to be despised. . . .

So far it seems to me that the text of the Authorized Version is preferable to the marginal alternative. But the phrase as a whole is otherwise given very unhappily. In no way does it mean “condescend to men of low estate,” but rather to associate with them. Condescension is quite contrary to the spirit the apostle would have us cultivate: for it supposes the maintenance of worldly superiority in our own hearts, because it means shewing kindness to the lowly in a patronizing tone. The Lord guards the disciples against similar feelings and ways in Luke 22:25-27. (Bible Treasury 9:72, Notes on Romans, p.246) consorting: Such is the true force of συναπαγόμενοι, and “condescending to” would be rather an evil the apostle guards us against by bidding us associate with the lowly. The latter is of Christ, the former of the world. (Notes on Romans, xxv.)

consorting: It may be worth while pointing out here that “courteously” is used appropriately, both of Julius the Roman centurion (φιλοθρόπως, better “kindly”), Acts 27:3, and of Publius the chief man of Melita (φιλοφρόνως), Acts 28:7. In 1 Pet. 3:8 it is excluded on solid ground by intelligent critical editors who read the more suited “humbleminded” (ταπεινόφρονες). Again, συναπαγόμενοι in Rom. 12:16 means a voluntary course of love, not “condescend” (as in the A. and R. versions), but “consorting along with” the lowly, as Gal. 2:13 and 2 Pet. 3:17 shows its bad sense. Certainly Zos. Hist. v. 6 does not support “condescending to” rather than sharing or being involved in the common capture of Hellas. “Condescend to” keeps our social status as men “living in the world”; whereas as Christians we died with Christ to this and far more, and we are as such exhorted to bear ourselves away from it all, and along with the lowly ones (or, lowly things). (Exp. of Titus and Philemon, p. 136) consorting: τοῖς ταπ. συναπαγόμενοι is rendered worse [in the RV] than in the Authorised Version, which adheres to the personal application prevalent with the Greek commentators. But the Revision on too narrow a view of the antithesis decides with some moderns for the neuter, “conscend to things that are lowly,” adding in the margin the impossible literal rendering “be carried away with.” Now condescension is not a christian feeling, but rather of Gentile patrons (cf. Luke 22:25,26). It supposes the maintenance in the saints of what Christ destroys and displaces by grace in a new creation; whereas “going along with,” or some such rendering stronger than the “inclining” of the Five Clergymen, seems to me required by the word as modified by the context. It would be too much to expect in heathen writings the expression of a feeling there unknown; but Chrysostom (in loc.) fairly explains. (Webster and Wilkinson (ii. 439) suggest the singular idea that it may mean “carried off with,” as if they could not resist the attraction of low company! But though undoubtedly used elsewhere (Gal. 2 and 2 Pet. 2) in a bad sense, it means what is truly noble here.) Theodore’s συγκατένευ falls into the idea of condescension (Opera Omnia ex recens. Jac. Sirmondi, v. 134). Mr. Green gives “assort yourselves with the lowly.” (Bible Treasury 13:352)

12:19 \wedge wrath: The Americans [correctors of the RV] seem even less at home if possible here, as we may see by their suggestion on verse 19 [“the wrath”] and other places. (Bible Treasury 14:352)

12:20 Nay: The most ancient text seems to be ἀλλὰ ἐὰν π. as in \aleph A B P and some good cursives and versions; a few also drop the ἀλλ (which Griesbach thought probable and Mr. Green follows). (Notes on Romans, xxv.)

13:2 judgment: not “damnation,” which is an extravagant mistake here as in 14:23. (Brief Hints on the Epistle of Paul to the Romans, p. 16.)

13:3 for the good work but for the evil: So it is in \aleph A B D F G P, and other authorities, instead of the common τῶν ἀγ. ἐρ. ἀ. τ. κ. (Bible Treasury 9:86, Notes on Romans, p.248)

13:10 fulness: Or, “fulfilment.” (Notes on Romans, xxvi.)

14:1 decisions: Or, “doubts,” doubtful points. (Notes on Romans, xxvi.)

14:5 judgeth . . . judgeth: Literally, “judgeth.” The word means originally to pick or choose, hence decide, sentence, prefer, or even condemn. (Bible Treasury 9:101, Notes on Romans, p.255)

14:6 and he that regardeth not the day to [the] Lord doth not regard: The bracketed clause [here underlined since W.K. did not bracket these words except within his exposition] does not appear in \aleph A B C D E F G, besides cursives, Vulg., Cop., Aeth., with various Greek and Latin fathers. (Bible Treasury 9:101, Notes on Romans, p.255)

[second clause]: [The RV] rightly omit[s] the second clause (Bible Treasury 13:352)

14:9 For unto this [end] Christ Λ died and lived Λ : The common reading has no serious support of manuscripts. There is much discrepancy in the copies; but the best text is what I have here translated. (Bible Treasury 9:101, Notes on Romans, p.256)

Λ died . . . lived Λ : [The RV] rightly omit[s] . . . “both” . . . “and revived” (Bible Treasury 13:352)

14:10 God: [The RV] properly substitute[s] “God” for “Christ” (Bible Treasury 13:352)

14:14 unless: [See note to Gal. 2:16]

14:15 destroy: [The RV] duly distinguish[es] between “destroy” in verse 15, and “overthrow” in verse 20, which is neglected in some careful versions. (Bible Treasury 13:352)

14:20 pull down: [See note to Rom. 14:15]

14:21 [or is offended or is weak]: On rather slender authority . . . [the RV leaves] out “or is offended, or is weak” (Bible Treasury 13:352)

14:23 sin. Λ : [The RV is] certainly justified in relegating to the end of chapter 16 the doxology which some 200 cursives with L and others foist in here, though two uncials A P have it in both, and some in neither. (Bible Treasury 13:252)

15:1 Λ But: It is well known that between chapters 14 and 15 certain old editors inserted (according to the testimony of many copies, versions, and fathers) the doxology of Romans 16:25-27. It was not surprising that Matthæi, &c., keeping close to their special manuscripts, adhered to them in this. But there is no sufficient reason to disregard the weightiest witnesses of the ancient text, confirmed as it is by the internal evidence. The Sinai, the Vatican (1209), the Parisian palimpsest, the Clermont, and the St. Germain Greco-Latin Uncials, with several good cursives (16. 80. 137. 176), the Vulgate, Peschito Syriac, Coptic, &c., give the passage at the close of the epistle. The Alexandrian and the Porphyrian with some other authorities have it in both positions, a corrector of the Clermont MS in neither; while Boerner’s Uncial, now in Dresden, leaves a vacant space at the end of chapter 14 — the Augian of Cambridge has a similar vacancy at the end of chapter 16; as opposed to Passionei’s Cod. angel. (L., now belonging to the Augustinian monks at Rome), backed up by about two hundred cursives, &c. The insertion here is resisted by the connection of the chapters; it is perfectly suitable at the end. The first seven verses of our chapter conclude the subject under discussion, with five transitional verses following which prepare the way for the notices of his ministry among the Gentiles to the end of the chapter. (Bible Treasury 9:133, Notes on Romans, p.263)

15:4 through: “HOLD FAST THE HOPE” (Rom. 15:4) . . . We are thankful for these remarks [of H. Bonar] as far as they go, only protesting against the evident mistranslation of the text cited at the close, which is entirely misapprehended, and less correctly given than in the Authorized Version. For the idea of the Spirit, we believe, is through endurance, on the one hand, and through the comfort of the scriptures, on the other; not “the patience and comfort,” &c. Some of the best authorities introduce a second “through,” and there certainly should be an article before comfort, whereas patience, or endurance, though it has one in Greek, requires none here in English. And the same principle applies to the last expression, which most decidedly ought to be “hope,” not a particular expectation, the abstract thing, which in our language excludes, and in Greek demands, the article. (Bible Treasury 1:181)

15:16 minister . . . ministering: is not some of the force of the apostolic phrase lost in the vague “minister of Christ Jesus . . . ministering the gospel of God”? It is “serving sacrificially” as just after explained in an allusion to Numbers 8. (Bible Treasury 13:352) of the Gentiles: Mr. Green by the way leaves out of his version the English corresponding to εἰς τὰ ἔθνη in this connection. (Bible Treasury 13:352)

15:24 [I will come to you, for]: The bracketed words are not in the most ancient copies. (Notes on Romans, xxix.)

16:1 Cenchrea: it should be “Cenchræ.” (Bible Treasury 13:352)

16:2 too: The “also” of verse 2 should be with “she herself,” not with “myself.” (Bible Treasury 13:352)

16:3 Prisca: Such seems the best reading here, 1 Corinthians 16:19, and in 2 Timothy 4:19. In Acts 18:2,18,26, it is rather Priscilla, the diminutive form, but the same name. (Bible Treasury 9:166, Notes on Romans, p.275)

Prisca: “Prisca” is the true form (Bible Treasury 13:352)

16:4 which: I have thus throughout rendered the various forms of ὅστις, distinct from ὅς, as denoting character and not fact only. (Notes on Romans, xxx.)

16:5 Asia: In the common text of Romans 16:5, Epaenetus is said to be a first-fruits of Achaia; but the ancient and true reading is Asia, not “Achaia,” of which Stephanas’ house was the firstfruits. (Notes on First Corinthians, p.294)

Asia: it should be “Asia,” not “Achaia,” (Bible Treasury 13:352)

16:6 us: [it should be] “you” rather than “we” (Bible Treasury 13:352)

16:7 Junias: Junias . . . [is] preferable to “Junia.” (Bible Treasury 13:352)

16:8 Amplias: The Sinaitic, Alexandrian, Vatican and others read Ἀμπλιᾶτον. A similar remark applies to this probably as to Prisca and Priscilla. (Bible Treasury 9:166)

16:10 Urbanus: Urbanus . . . [is] preferable to . . . “Urbane.” (Bible Treasury 13:352)

16:16 All: Copyists seem to have regarded the apostle’s word as overstrong; and have tried to soften by omitting πάντα “all.” But he could speak from a large sphere without hesitation. (Bible Treasury 9:167, Notes on Romans, p.278)

All: the apostle added “all,” which slipped out of the received text and Authorized Version. (Bible Treasury 13:352)

16:20 you. Λ : “Amen” should disappear from the end of verse 20, after a benediction which some repeat with πάντων added as verse 24, contrary to \aleph A B C and other good authorities; as others omit it at verse 20. (Bible Treasury 13:352)

16:24 [whole verse]: [see note to Rom. 16:20]

16:25 everlasting: [See note to Mat. 12:32]

16:26 prophetic: The context of this passage is decisive, not to speak of the absence of the article, that the Authorized and the Revised versions are wrong in giving “the scriptures of the prophets.” (Exp. of the Two Epistles to Timothy, p.322) prophetic: Not “by the Scriptures of the prophets,” but by prophetic scriptures, or writings, i.e. of the New Testament. (Christian Annotator 2:260) prophetic: “By the scriptures of the prophets” in verse 26 misleads: read “by prophetic writings” or scriptures, meaning thereby his own epistles on “the mystery,” or the inspired writings in general of the New Testament. For the church is built on the foundation of the apostles and prophets. (Eph. 2, 3) (Bible Treasury 13:352)

There is an important error to notice in the Authorised Version at 16:26 perpetuated by the Revisers which the Americans [correctors of the RV] have overlooked. "The scriptures of the prophets" is a misleading sense. (Bible Treasury 14:352)

Notes for 1 Corinthians

1:1 called: I see no reason for doubting κλητός with Lachmann (because of the omission in ADE &c.) The word is vouched for by 8BFGLP, all the cursives, and almost all the ancient versions and the Fathers that cite the verse. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.2) called Λ . . . called Λ : It is only needful to call attention to "called to be," in verses 1,2, as the error of the Rhemish version, followed by the Authorised Version and Cranmer. Wiclif seems better, but especially Tyndale and the Geneva version, as they gave "by vocation," and "by calling," which reflect the sense justly enough, though (strange to say) in Romans 1 both were wrong in verse 1, right in verses 6,7. (Bible Treasury 13:365)

Christ Jesus: 'I.X. with 8ALP and all the cursives save five, all the versions save the Latin, and most of the Fathers save in the west, I prefer to X.'I. as adopted by Lachmann and Tischendorf on the authority of BDEFG 17,37,76,115,119, some copies of the It. and Vulg. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.2-3)

1:2 that is in Corinth: This order of inserting τῇ οὐσῃ ἐν K. (8AD and LP, perhaps all the cursives and the Fathers, as against BD and CFG and a few Latin copies which insert the clause between 'I. and κλ.), I believe correct. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.3) called Λ : [See note to 1 Cor. 1:1]

Λ theirs and ours: The authorities are pretty evenly divided as to weight if not numbers for and against τε ("both"); I rather incline to its absence. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.3) theirs and ours: I reject the notion of such as connect "theirs and ours" with "every place." The Authorised Version gives the true sense, which does not render the first ἡμῶν superfluous but gives emphasis. It asserts the Lord's relationship to all that call on Him wherever they may be. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.9)

1:4 my: The Sinai (original hand) and Vatican MSS, as well as the Aethiopic Version, omit μου, which all others read correctly. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.11)

1:6 Christ: Three uncials (B*FG) and ten cursives read Θεοῦ "of God;" but the received reading seems right. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.11)

1:8 day: Four Latin-Greek MSS, &c. read παρουσία mistakenly. It was a Western error. The Vulgate makes matters worse by uniting both, "in die adventus." . . . It is not that aspect of our Lord's return which will unfold and express His grace to His own, but rather that which deals with conscience now, as it by and by will display their faithful or unfaithful employment of all entrusted to their charge. (This would have been expressed by the παρουσία, presence or coming of Christ, which the Authorised translators have wrongly confounded in their version with ἀποκάλυψις, though the correction was given afterwards in the margin. They are not synonymous, but expressive of distinct facts which embody different principles as different as grace and government.) (Notes on 1 Cor., p.11-12)

1:10-11 Lord Jesus Christ . . . among you . . . among you: In the paragraph the MSS differ in the order of the Greek words repeatedly. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.15)

1:11 [See note to 1:10]

1:12 I of Christ: There seems no ground whatever for the strange fancy of Estius and others, that ἐγὼ δὲ χριστοῦ is the apostle's own proper sentiment in contrast with the aberration of the Corinthians. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.17)

1:13 divided?: Lachmann, following the opinion of some, punctuates this clause as affirmative, not as interrogative: "Christ has been divided."

And Meyer uses against the interrogative form the fact that there is not μὴ here as just afterwards. But it has been justly replied that it was due to Christ that a difference should be thus made between a question relating to Him, and one that follows as to His servant. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.16)

1:14 God: The Sinai, Vatican, and a few other witnesses, do not give τῷ θεῷ (or as A. &c. μου also) like the rest. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.15)

1:15 baptized: The Sinai, Vat., Alex., Cod. Res. Par., some good cursives, ancient versions, with Greek and Latin Fathers, have ἐβαπτίσθητε, not ἐβάπτισα as in others. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.15)

1:16 baptized: The Clermont, Aug., and Boern. MSS read βεβάπτισα, and the first again at the end of the verse — a mere error, for the perfect is only read when special aim interferes with the regular employment of the aorist in such cases. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.15)

1:18 are to be saved: Again in verse 18 the Company [of Revisers of 1881] gives us "are being saved" from not bearing in mind that the present participle may be, and often is, employed to present a class stamped with the character of salvation, rather than the process or fact going on. . . . They forget the absolute present, which this must be, not an actual present, as already there. (Bible Treasury 13:365) are to be saved: The reader is referred to the remarks on Acts 2:47 for a solution to the difficulty in the right construing of the absolute usage of the present participle here and elsewhere. The Revisers by keeping to its temporal force introduce confusion into the truth by setting one scripture against another; the Americans [correctors of the RV] do not sufficiently guard themselves against confusion of the tenses, though their version may be justified and explained. But what is already said may suffice. Those who affect greater precision than the Authorised Version here have slipped into error through narrow views of the Greek, in aid of unsound doctrine. (Bible Treasury 14:367)

are to be saved: [See note to Acts 2:47]

1:19 understanding: I do not see why "discernment" (19) &c., should displace "prudence" or "understanding." (Bible Treasury 14:367)

1:20 the: Many second-rate uncials and cursives, &c., insert τούτου ("this") here, answering to the clause before; but the better authorities omit it. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.25)

1:21 wisdom: "Wisdom" here is preceded by the Greek article which seems to mean its wisdom, what it has as a fact, and not merely character. . . . One must not be surprised that not a few adopt the rendering "by the revelation of God's wisdom," that is, in His works with or without His law. . . . By διὰ τῆς σ. is meant "by wisdom" in the abstract or "by its wisdom," either of which would require the article in Greek. I do not think that Stanley and Alford are right in taking the phrase as "through the wisdom [of God]" just mentioned, though of course the article there too would be proper. The latter wisdom seems to me contradistinguished from the former, the one self-exalting and destructive, the other real and righteous altogether. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.26-29)

the preaching: . . . the apostle here speaks not exactly of preaching as a mere instrument, but of the thing preached. Such is the force resulting from the form of the word, which with others I have translated "the preaching." (Notes on 1 Cor., p.30)

the preaching: [The RV is] right in verse 21, "the preaching" or thing preached, (Bible Treasury 13:365)

1:22 signs: The Text Rec. has σημείον: so L and most cursives; but the oldest and best uncials, some cursives, and almost all the ancient versions favor σημεία, the plural. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.26) signs: [The RV is] right in . . . "signs" for "a sign" (Bible Treasury 13:365)

1:23 Gentiles: The Text. Rec. follows what I cannot but regard as the meddling of C³D^c and most cursives to agree with the words before and after; but the best authorities give here ἔθνεσιν, Gentiles, not Ἕλλησιν, Greeks. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.26-7)

1:26 [The RV is] right in . . . the imperative force "behold," (Bible Treasury 13:365)

[are]: "There are" (26) has been suggested as a simpler alternative in the margin than "have part therein," which is cumbrous. 14:367)

1:28 [and]: The copulative (καί) is not read by κ ABCD Γ FG and various other authorities. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.32)

1:29 God: C is the only first-rate MS which joins many inferior copies, the Vulg. Syr. &c. in reading αὐτοῦ. All others give Θεοῦ. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.33)

1:30 [whole verse]: [The RV is] justified again in their rendering of verse 30. (Bible Treasury 13:365)

2:1 testimony: There can be no doubt in my judgment that the various reading in the first verse μυστήριον, though given in the Sinaitic (first hand), Alexandrian and Palimpsest of Paris (C), with some good cursives and very ancient versions (Pesch. and Cop.), &c., is not correct, but the common text. It is not only erroneous but an error which destroys the beauty and indeed the sense of the passage. For the apostle is contrasting his use of revealed truth in dealing with such souls as those in Corinth when he first carried them the gospel, and that which he would do with those who simply and thoroughly submitted to Christ. The mystery in all its hidden depths and all its heavenly glory he sets before those he calls "the perfect," that is, the full-grown who were established in Christianity; but not so with babes unformed in the truth of the gospel. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.40) testimony: . . . in the first verse of chapter 2 occurs an extraordinarily violent change [in the RV of 1881], the "mystery" instead of "testimony" of God. This of course turns on the adoption of μυστήριον (as in κ^m AC, some seven or eight cursives, the Pesch. Syr., and Memph., with some early citations, whereas all the editors of note, even the most extreme, properly adhere to μαρτύριον, with the great stream of authority early and later. Alford and Meyer treat it as a gloss from verse 7, Lachmann and Tregelles, bold as they were, reject it from their text. None but Drs. Westcott and Hort admit it. Was it not strange that a company of grave men, under the call to provide a version aspiring to general acceptance, should yield to so precarious and generally rejected a reading? The context is, in my judgment, certainly and irreconcilably opposed to the innovation. For the apostle distinguishes between his first announcing at Corinth the glad tidings, apart from every human effort to make the truth palatable, not knowing anything among them save Jesus Christ and Him crucified, and the speaking wisdom among the perfect or full-grown, God's wisdom in a mystery. This evident and most momentous contradistinction is ruined by endorsing the blunder of scribes, who confounded two words similar in appearance, and easily interchanged by any whose spiritual senses were not exercised to discern the difference. Hence Bengel gave this variant his lowest mark in the Appar. Crit., while in his Gnomon he expounds, with his usual fine tact, the difference between verses 1 and 7 in a way which shews how rightly μυστήριον must vanish from any place in the first. Griesbach gave a better mark to the reading than it deserves. Pott pertinently remarks that not καταγγέλλων but γνωρίζων or λαλῶν would suit μυστ., whereas it exactly fits in with μαρτ. (Bible Treasury 13:365)

2:4 \wedge wisdom: The common insertion of ἀνθρωπίνης is supported by κ^{corr} ACL Γ P, most cursives, and a few versions, with many Fathers Greek and Latin; but the great weight of authority rejects it; and in my opinion the unqualified phrase is right. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.39)

2:6 fullgrown: It is hard to see how the Revised Version could have done better than to give "perfect" in their text, and "full-grown" in the margin. (Bible Treasury 14:367)

2:8 knew: "knoweth" say the Revisers, and the Americans [correctors of the RV] "hath known:" "hath come to know" is more the idea, I suppose. (Bible Treasury 14:367)

2:9 which: The most ancient witnesses give ὅσα, the rest ἄ. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.43)

2:10 but: The Vatican MS., and some cursives, the Cop. Sah., &c., read γάρ "for," which seems to me not to suit the context like δέ which the other authorities support. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.43)

2:11 men: A few witnesses, including the Alexandrian uncial and a Paris cursive (17), omit ἀνθρώπων, but it is surely right. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.47)

knoweth: The received text, with one uncial and very many cursives, &c., reads οἶδεν instead of the true word ἐγνώκεν (ἐγνω FG 23, &c.) as in κ ABCDE Γ P ten cursives, &c. With οὐδεὶς it was proper to say "cometh to know," rather than "consciously knoweth." The Spirit οἶδεν of course, and so do we when we have the Spirit of God in us. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.47)

2:12 \wedge freely . . . by: "Of" seems to have a delicacy in 12, rather than "from" God, though this of course is true also; but "were" is better than "are." (Bible Treasury 14:367)

2:13 \wedge Spirit: The received text, with D^{corr}ELP most cursives, &c., adds ἁγίος "holy," contrary to the best authorities. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.49)

communicating spiritual: The Vatican and a good cursive (17) read πνευματικῶς, "spiritually;" as the Porphyrian has the Spirit communicating (συνκρίνοντος), not we. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.49) communicating spiritual . . . spiritual: It is well known that the last clause has been variously interpreted, through a different sense given, now to συνκρίνοντες, now to πνευματικοῖς, and even to πνευματικά. Thus Chrysostom, Theodoret, &c., take it to mean, "explaining spiritual truths [of the New Testament] by [Old Testament] spiritual testimonies." Only less far-fetched is the counter-view of Theophylact, H. Grotius, and others, "explaining what the Spirit-led prophets said by what Christ has opened to us by His Spirit." But Theophylact proposed a way too, which as it prevailed in medieval times, so also it has been common up to our day, of taking πνευματικοῖς as masculine, which the late Dean Alford treated as "clearly wrong" in several editions of his Greek Testament, but gave as right in his New Testament revised (1870), as Wiclif had done in 1380.

Again our Authorized Translation preferred, with all the other early English versions except that of Geneva, the sense of "comparing" as in the Syriac, Vulgate, &c., rather of "explaining" for συνκρίνοντες. And doubtless it is a natural impulse to use a meaning which is unquestionable in 2 Corinthians 10:12 for the same word in 1 Corinthians 2:13: so Tyndale's (1534), Cranmer's (1539), and perhaps that of Rheims (1582), though I am not quite sure what was meant by "comparing spiritual things to the spiritual," as the latter might be understood as masculine (so the Arabic) no less than as neuter. The Geneva Version (1557) gave "joining spiritual things with spiritual things," I presume after Calvin, Beza, Piscator, &c.

There are two elements for gathering the mind of God in the clause which have not been in general borne in mind adequately. First, the context as elsewhere helps to the sense of σ. here demanded. Now it is certain that the apostle is describing, in verse 13, neither the revelation of divine things which the Spirit of God alone knows and can give (vers. 10-12), not the reception of what is revealed, which is due to the power of the Spirit (vers. 14, 15), but the intermediate process of conveying in words spiritual things when disclosed that they may be received by the spiritual man. Secondly, as συνκρίνοντες appears to be a carrying on the thought of speaking the things of God to others in verse 13, so is ἀνακρίνεται equally characteristic of the manner and means of reception. As the one aptly expresses the putting together (συνκρίνοντες) spiritual things with spiritual words so as to furnish that concrete whole, the word of God, so the spiritual man ἀνακρίνει π., the converse sifting and examining accurately — a sense common to the New Testament and the LXX. (1 Sam. 20:12; Acts 17:11. Ἀνακρ. was a word used technically in ordinary Greek of the preliminary investigation to ascertain whether an action would lie.

Hence in my judgment the meaning of “comparing” or even of “explaining” is here shut out; and, when we examine the present passage along with that in the Second Epistle, we may readily see with certainty that the construction wholly differs, though Parkhurst is rash enough to say the contrary. For in the latter it is a question of persons only, and hence “comparing” gives the sense justly. So Wahl in his second edition rightly, though from Rose’s note to Parkhurst it would seem that in his first with Schleusner he explained it as “we cannot endure to enrol or mix ourselves with” &c. — a poor sense assuredly.

Here, in one phrase, if not in both, it is a question of things, and hence the analogy disappears. In the LXX, which so constantly furnishes the true source of the Greek New Testament language, we find the verb and its derivatives used in senses more suitable to the requirement of our text, as has been often noticed. Compare Genesis 40:8,12,16,18,22; 51:12 (twice), 15(twice); Daniel 2:4-45 (thirteen times); 4 (seven times); 5 (eight times), where “interpret” or “interpretation” is meant. Again we have Numbers 15:32, where it means “to determine;” also Numbers 9:3; 29 six times in the sense of “ordinance,” &c.

It is certain then that the most common meaning in the Septuagint, so familiar to the writers and earliest readers of the New Testament, is that of making known the previously hidden mind of God couched in a dream or vision; and that the word was also applied to a determination through a judge or law-giver speaking for God. By an easy transition thence the apostle was inspired to use it in the sense of “communicating” (or, in a similar usage, of “expounding”) spiritual things by spiritual words. “Communicating” however seems to me better, because less ambiguous than “expounding,” as the point here is the fact and appropriate form of conveying spiritual truths rather than of “expounding” or explaining it when conveyed in words, which is the function of the teacher and not really in the passage at all. It is plain to him who weighs all that, though in some cases σύνκρισις may seem to mean pretty much the same as ἐξηγήσις applied to such subjects, it goes really farther. For instance, Joseph’s or Daniel’s task went much beyond that of an ordinary expounder of scripture; and the word which duly described it might easily pass into the sense of communicating the previously unknown things of God in language suited to them. This I feel assured is the idea in the verse under consideration. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.49-52) spiritual [1st]: Much is often built on the last clause, which is, I think, foreign to the intention of the Spirit, though fairly deduced from the authorised version. The word understood as πνευματικοῖς, I believe to be λόγοις: so that the sense is rather, “communicating spiritual things by spiritual words.” (Christian Annotator 2:270) communicating spiritual . . . spiritual: Omitting lesser points, the last clause of verse 13 appears to be inadequately rendered [in the RV of 1881] if we take the context into account. The marginal “combining” is the simple unmodified force of συνκρίνειν, to which is opposed ἀνακρ. directly afterwards. Now if the aim of the verse had been duly weighed, it would have been seen that it is a question, not here (as in verse 14) of receiving and knowing, but of communicating. Hence the conveyance of spiritual things by spiritual [words] is the meaning, rather than expounding or interpreting special things to spiritual men, though otherwise the words might quite bear this. Thus the source that revealed, the means of communication, and the power of reception, are shown to be in the Spirit of God. “Combining” is too vague; “comparing” or “interpreting” would do well for the receiver; but neither expresses properly the conveyance of the truth or spiritual things by the inspired agents in a medium of spiritual words. (Bible Treasury 13:365) communicating: The chief question lies in the word (ver. 13) translated “comparing.” As it undoubtedly has this meaning in 2 Cor. 10:12, it was a natural temptation to understand it similarly here. But notoriously words are modified by their context; and as we have no other occurrence in the N. T., we must search into the usage of the LXX or the like. For the sense of “comparing” is wholly unsuitable to the intermediate process, of which the apostle treats, though it might well form part of that which pertains to the reception or understanding of what was already written. Now in the Septuagint the most prevailing application of the word in its cognate forms is to the expounding or explanation of what God was pleased to reveal (Gen. 40:8,12,16,18,22; 41:12,15), as in vision or dream (Dan. 2:2,5,6,7,9,16,24,25,26,30, 36,45; 4:3,4,6,14,15,16,17,21; 5:7,8,13,16,18,20,28; 7:16). (It is also used in Num. 15:34 with the sense of “determined,” or “decided.”) As however in our text it is no question of a dream or vision to be interpreted, the sense naturally admits of a larger modification, and hence in this instance requires “communicating” or some such equivalent.

This accordingly and perfectly falls in with the bearing of the clause and the demands of the context. For the clause is occupied, not with the spiritual man’s apprehension of what is propounded, but with the conveying it to him in words taught by the Spirit. They were as to this expressly not left to man’s wisdom or ability. Not only divine ideas were seen in the Spirit, but moreover the wording was no less taught by the Spirit. Herein “comparing” has no propriety and is therefore inadmissible. And though “interpreting,” “expounding,” or “determining” might convey the sense in substance, none of them seems to give it at this stage so unambiguously as “communicating.” The connected words also acquire a definite force, free from the liability to different meanings which add nothing of moment. For “comparing” opens the door to vague and uncertain adjuncts; whereas with “communicating” the sense is fixed to “spiritual [things] by spiritual [words].” He had already spoken of the things of God, here designated “spiritual things,” and he had also treated of words Spirit-taught; now brought together briefly in communicating “spiritual [things] by spiritual [words].” “To spiritual men” would be premature in ver. 13; for he takes up this question only in the verses that follow. (God’s Inspiration of the Scriptures, p.23-25) communicating spiritual things by spiritual [words]: the note on the Revision applies no less to the American [correctors of the RV] suggestion [“combining spiritual things with spiritual words”]. “Comparing” or “combining,” though possible renderings of the word in itself like “expounding” also, are unsuited to and excluded by the scope of the verse and clause, which bears on the communication of what was revealed, or spiritual things, in spiritual [words]. It is a description of the intermediate process between God’s revelation, and the believer’s reception, of the truth, in all three the Holy Spirit having His own blessed part. (Bible Treasury 14:367-368) things . . . [words]: “. . . communicating spirituals by spirituals,” or, if we supply the gap, “spiritual [things] by spiritual [words].” (God’s Inspiration p. 599)

2:14 [the] natural: "Natural" means "soulish," not necessarily "sensual," as wrongly given in James and Jude. It is man as he is without the teaching of the Spirit through the word revealing Christ. Nor is there need to say "the" but "a" natural man. Neither the Revisers nor the Americans [correctors of the RV] show adequate care as to the presence or absence of the article, though it was well known that the Authorised Version needed much overhauling. (Bible Treasury 14:368) to him: The Alexandrian omits αὐτῷ "to him." (Notes on 1 Cor., p.49)

3:1 fleshy: Perhaps, "carnal." (Notes on 1 Cor., vi)

fleshy: The most ancient authorities (αABC^{p,m}D^{p,m} 17,67^{s,m},71, and some Greek fathers, who however vary elsewhere) here give σαρκῖνοις, in verse 3 all but D^{p,m}FG on the first occurrence, all on the second. The difference is that σάρκινος means physically of flesh (2 Cor. 3:8, Heb. 7:16); whereas σαρκικός supposes a fleshy will (1 Pet. 2:11; 1 Cor. 3:3; 2 Cor. 1:12; 10:4), where it is not used generally as in Romans 15:27 and 1 Corinthians 9. In Romans 7:14 the best authorities (α^{p,m}ABCDEF and many cursives, &c.) give σάρκινος contrary to the reading in the common text. Here the importance dogmatically is great. The main question is which of the two should stand in 1 Corinthians 3:1. Tischendorf says on Hebrews 7:16, that in the apostolic age either form was undoubtedly applied in the same sense, and refers in proof to Romans 7:14 and 1 Corinthians 3:1; but these prove really that there is the difference in scripture which flows from the differing structure of each word. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.56-7)

3:3 strife ^Δ: The common text (T.R.) adds καὶ διχοστασίαι on the authority of many MSS uncial and cursive, but contrary to the best copies (αABCP 23,46,57,71,74, &c., Vulg. Cop. Arm. Aeth. and many Greek and Latin fathers). (Notes on 1 Cor., p.57) strife ^Δ: [The RV has] rightly dropt "and divisions," (Bible Treasury 13:365)

3:4 men: Instead of the vulgar reading σαρκικοί at the end of verse 4, the weight of authority is decidedly in favor of ἄνθρωποι (αBCDEFG, &c., most ancient versions and fathers). (Notes on 1 Cor., p.57)

3:5 What . . . what: Τί is twice read by α^{p,m}AB.17.46.71.121.Vulg.Aeth., &c.; τίς ("who") is found in the great majority of MSS and Vv. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.60)

What . . . what: Or, "who." (Notes on 1 Cor., vi)

is Apollos . . . Paul: The order of P and A is thus given in αABCD^{p,m}EFGP 17.37.46.71.116., &c. The best of these uncials (αABCP) and the same cursives add ἐστίν which is left out of the vulgar text. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.60)

^Δ Ministers: The common text inserts ἅλλ' ἤ, and so read D^{s,m}LP, and most cursives, contrary to αABCD^{p,m}EFG, a few cursives, several of the oldest versions, &c. It is hard to think what Calvin means, save that he is mistaken, in saying that in some copies καὶ is wanting, for this is not so. The Cod. Rescr. Ephr. of Paris leaves out ὡς, but I am aware of no support for this but a Latin copy. No Greek MS omits καὶ. He may confound ἅλλ' ἤ with it, as to which we have already seen the evidence for and against. Calvin's critical remarks here, as often, are not to be trusted. His division of the verse is every way wrong, especially in making the last clause a further query. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.60)

3:9 God's fellow-workmen: In chapter 3:3 . . . [the RV has] rightly dropt "and divisions," and in verse 9 rendered the phrase "God's fellow-workers," instead of "labourers together with God," which is very objectionable, as irreverent and feeding human vanity. It is the more peculiar therefore that in 2 Corinthians 6:1 our Revisers should there introduce the obnoxious idea in italics. So do the Five Clergymen, and Dean Alford in his version. They were fellow-labourers doing God's work; but to say "fellow-workers with God" is false and presumptuous, and so of course is "with him." (Bible Treasury 13:365)

3:16 ^Δ God's: In verse 16 they [the Revisers of 1881] make the apostle say, "a temple of God," as does Mr. T. S. Green. No doubt the phrase is capable of being so rendered in itself; but the truth forbids. It should be God's temple. The same oversight of the anarthrous construction often occurs. The Company [of the Revisers of 1881] were not masters of the use or absence of the Greek article. Whether the English should have the indefinite article or not depends on the nature of the case, and often on the truth as defined elsewhere. A similar error occurs in Ephesians 2:22; it is common in other subjects also. (Bible Treasury 13:365)

4:1 ^Δ God's: Only F inserts τοῦ before θεοῦ. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.70)

4:2 Here: Ὡδε in αABCD^{p,m}F, Vulg.It.Syr.Copt.Aeth.Arm. &c.; whereas ὁ δέ has only D^{corr}L., many cursives and some Greek Fathers. . . . The critical reading is ὥδε instead of the common ὁ δέ, and there can be little doubt that the former, not the latter, is correct. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.72)

Here: [The RV has], like others, rightly added "Here" (ὥδε), though Mr. Green adheres to the received reading (ὁ δέ), and translates "And for the rest of the matter." (Bible Treasury 13:365)

4:3 examined: The word ["judged"] properly signifies the preliminary inquiry before the trial. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.72)

4:4 I am conscious to myself of nothing: The true force is, "For I am conscious to myself of nothing," or "I have nothing on my conscience;" but the whole passage is rendered loosely in our version, which confounds ἀνακρίνω, in verses 3,4, with the simple verb in verse 5. (Christian Annotator 2:382)

4:6 ^Δ transferred: [See note to 1 Cor. 4:9]

^Δ in order: The MSS differ in trifles or slips, which do not affect a version of verse 6, save here, where α^{p,m}BD^{p,m}EP^{p,m}FG, old Latin, Vulg., &c., add nothing to γεγρ. But the Text. R. adds φρονεῖν, "to think," supported not only by the later correctors of some of the older copies, but by LP, and most cursives, versions and fathers. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.76)

^Δ in order: [The RV] follow[s] the critical omission of φρονεῖν, which would then give "that in us ye may learn the [lesson], Nothing above what is written." (Bible Treasury 13:365)

4:7 having: [See note to 1 Cor. 4:9]

4:8 reigned: Why not "reigned"? No doubt, "have" reigned reflects the perfect rather than the aorist. (Bible Treasury 14:368)

4:9 ^Δ God: T.R. here inserts ὅτι "that," supported by the corr. of α and DELP, most cursives and versions and fathers, as against α^{p,m}ABCD^{p,m}FG,46,116, some of the best and oldest Latin copies, and of the earliest fathers, Greek and Latin. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.78)

^Δ set: Nor is any notice taken [by the American correctors of the RV] of the Revisers' "hath" set forth in 9, any more than I "have" transferred in 6, or "hadst" in 7. (Bible Treasury 14:368) to both: [The American correctors of the RV, "both to angels" and substitute the present text for the marg.] seem right (Bible Treasury 14:368)

4:13 slandered: For βλάσφ. (α^{corr}BDEFG, most cursives, and perhaps It.Vulg. &c., as in T.R.), α^{p,m}ACP 17,46, &c. give δυσφημούμενοι, "defamed." (Notes on 1 Cor., p.78)

4:15 child-guides: It is well to observe that there is no depreciation of christian teaching or teachers in comparison with gospel work, such as the common version naturally insinuates. It is an appeal to the love which ought to bind specially the converted souls to him who was the means of bringing them to God; and not in any way a formal comparison of the relative value of this gift with that. Hence there is the avoidance of the word διδασκάλους, or teacher, and the use of the somewhat slighting term, παιδαγωγούς, as applied to those at Corinth who had done too much to occupy and turn away the saints there. Some of these might affect the law, others philosophy; but all sought to keep the brethren who listened to them in their leading-strings. They had little enjoyment of, or confidence in, the grace that is in Christ Jesus, and hence sought to direct the thoughts and ways of their admirers, as do guardians, or παιδαγωγοί, with the young entrusted to their charge. But this savors more of Jewish or Gentile modes, than of the gospel or its liberty; and the apostle could not but remind them that he it was who begot them through the gospel. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.81-2)

4:17 [Jesus]: κCD^b , some fifteen cursives, some good Latin copies, Cop. later Syr. Arm. (Aeth. invertedly), &c., give X. 'I., but the latter is not in ABD^oELP, most cursives, other good Latins, Pesch. Syr., &c. DFG (Gr. and Lat.) have Κυρίω X. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.82)

4:18 were puffed up: There seems no need to depart from the historic force of the aorist in verse 18 (compare also their [the RV] rendering of the aorist in vers. 8, 17). (Bible Treasury 13:365)

4:21 [whole verse]: It seems to me, therefore, that Calvin did not duly see the connection with what the apostle had just pressed, or he would not have said that the person who divided the epistle into chapters ought to have made 4:21 the beginning of chapter 5. These chapters appear to be better divided as they are. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.84)

[The American correctors of the RV, "gentleness,"] seem . . . questionable (Bible Treasury 14:368)

5:1 even Δ : The received reading "is named" in chapter 5:1 gives place to the true and nervous sense resulting from its simple omission according to the best authorities. (Bible Treasury 13:365)

5:3 Γ Δ : $\kappa\text{ABCD}^{\text{p.m.}}$ six cursives, Pesch. Syr. Copt. Aeth. Vulg. with ancient Greek and Latin fathers, omit ὡς before "absent in body." (Notes on 1 Cor., p.87)

[concerning]: The grammar seems a little harsh, but it is in order to give special prominence to the guilty person, who follows παραδοῦναι as τ. τ. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.87)

5:4 [our]: κ A &c., raise a question as to ἡμῶν here. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.87)

5:7 out Δ : The revision [of 1881] properly omits "therefore," in verses 7, 13. It is a direct call in both, not a consequence. (Bible Treasury 13:366)

5:9 have written: Epistolary, or allusive usage of aorist, as in chapter 9:15. See 1 John 2. (Notes on 1 Cor., x) have written . . . the: In verse 9 they [the Revisers of 1881] retain the Authorised Version, instead of the epistolary aorist, which, however, they express in verse 11. This insinuates the idea of some that the apostle had written a previous letter which we have not. Grammatically there is no doubt that both may refer to the epistle he was then writing, as every scholar must know; and νυνί may have a logical force, or a temporal, as required. Of course, τῇ ἐπιστ. cannot mean "an epistle," as in the older versions, but "the," or "mine." (Bible Treasury 13:365-6)

5:10 [whole verse]: [See note to Rom. 5:11]

Δ not absolutely: The best MSS ($\kappa^{\text{p.m.}}$ ABCDEF^{p.m.} 17.46.93. vv. and fathers) omit καί, which T.R. puts with LP, &c., some vv. and ff. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.94) not absolutely: J.D. raises a question as to the accuracy of the English Bible, in rendering οὐ πάντως, "not altogether." He enquires whether the words are not rather to be viewed as emphatically negating any companionship or intercourse with the worldly characters which are afterwards enumerated, and whether verse 11 is not a supplement, regarding professed Christian brethren, who are to be yet more stringently dealt with. The best versions, ancient and modern, which are accessible to me, (including the Syriac, Vulgate, Beza, Luther, De Wette, the Elberfeld, the Dutch, Diodati, Ostervald, the Lausanne, &c.,) appear to give the same sense as the authorised V., which, in my opinion, necessarily flows from the last clause of the verse. For what is ἐπεὶ ὀφείλετε ἄρα ἐκ τοῦ κόσμου ἐξελεῖν, but a proof of the futility of an absolute avoidance of worldly bad men? — "for then ye must needs go out of the world." The apostle proceeds to show that the command not to keep company refers to communion in any way with guilty brethren so-called. (Bible Treasury 1:165) and: καί in $\kappa\text{ABCD}^{\text{p.m.}}$ FGP and some cursives, for ἦ, as in T.R. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.94)

5:11 [whole verse]: The suggestion [of the American correctors of the RV] only makes bad worse, both here and in 10. (Bible Treasury 14:368) be: ἦ Steph. several uncials and vv. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.95)

5:12 Δ Do: κABCF , &c. vv. omit καί. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.95)

5:13 judgeth: κρίνει L and many more, κρινεῖ B^cP, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.95)

Δ Put: καί here D³L, contrary to $\kappa\text{ABCD}^{\text{p.m.}}$ FGP, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.95)

Δ Put: [See note to 1 Cor. 5:7]

6:2 What!: $\kappa\text{ABCD}^{\text{p.m.}}$ FGP, at least ten cursives, &c., read ἦ omitted in Tex. Rec. on the authority of two or three uncials and most cursives. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.99)

by you: [Ἐν ὑμῖν is by competent scholars translated "before you." May not this decide the meaning of the world and even angels being judged? That is, not by the saints as assessors with Christ but as witnesses in whose presence the judgment takes place.]

Wetstein has shewn by sufficient examples that κρίνεσθαι ἐν is a technical phrase for being judged at such or such a tribunal: Aristides de Soc.i.p. 128; Platon.ii.pp. 214,261. Polyb.v.29. Plut. Themist p.123. Cat.p.349. Lysias c. Philost. and Diod. Sic. xxix.51.

With κρ. therefore ἐν is quite distinct from ἐμπροσθεν or ἐνώπιον and beyond controversy confirms instead of enfeebling what had been just laid down as an axiom of common christian knowledge, that the saints are to judge the world and even angels, not merely to be present when their judgment proceeds before the Lord. So Raphelius and Kypke, the last explaining the idiomatic use of ἐν from a company of judges in the midst of whom the case is disposed of. But the truth is that the preposition branches out from a mere local or material idea of inclusion into various applications characterizing what is spoken of, and so even meaning "with" or "by," as grammars and lexicons will shew. Κρίνεσθαι ἐπὶ is much more to be "judged before," as any one can see in the preceding verse 1: ἐν ὑμῖν should be distinguished from this, as it unquestionably is the strictly proper phrase for the closer sense of "by you." It is not the final judgment, that of the dead, which is in the hands of the Lord, the Son of man (John 5), but of the quick, judging akin to the sense of reigning. (See Matt. 19:28; Rev. 20:4.) Even now angels are ministering spirits sent out for service on account of those who shall inherit salvation: how much more when the saints shall be glorified and reign with Christ! (Bible Treasury 11:64)

6:7 therefore: $\kappa^{\text{p.m.}}$ D^{p.m.}, several cursives &c., omit οὐν. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.102)

6:8 this: So it is, τοῦτο, in \aleph ABCDEP, &c.; ταῦτα in Tex. Rec., with L and most cursives, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.102)

6:11 were washed [literally, "had yourselves washed"]: [Mr. ALFORD translates this, "but ye washed them off (viz. at your baptism)."] He goes on to say that ἀπελούσασθε, being the 1 aor. mid. "cannot by any possibility be passive in signification, as it is generally, for doctrinal reasons, here rendered." The rest of the verse he translates, "ye were sanctified (. . . by the reception of the Holy Ghost you became dedicated to God and holy), but ye were justified in the name of the Lord Jesus," &c.

As Mr. ALFORD is extensively read amongst young divines, I shall be glad to hear some remarks on this note of his.

I observe that the Lausanne translation is the same. "Mais vous vous êtes lavés, mais vous avez été sanctifiés, mais vous avez été justifiés," &c. Ω . Ω . Ω . (Christian Annotator 3:102)]

As I have not Mr. ALFORD's book before me, but only Ω . Ω . Ω . 's extract, I can only conjecture that Mr. A. imputes a Calvinistic bias, or low views of baptismal grace, to the authorised translators. Now, I do not at all deny that they differed widely from that gentleman's doctrines; but it is utterly unfounded to attribute their version of ἀπελούσασθε to any such bias. Cyprian cannot be charged with attenuating the supposed effects of the rite. Yet he has repeatedly cited "abluti estis," the reading of the old Itala. Jerome has the same, and this is the more important as being the authentic version of Rome. Such, too, is the force of the Peschito. Luther, Beza, Ostervald, Diodati, the Dutch, the Lausanne, and the Elberfeld (including, with those which follow the Vulgate, all shades of Protestantism and Romanism), give the same sense as the authorised English. For my own part, I attach no sort of doctrinal importance to this particular translation, and would be quite willing to read, "ye have washed." The momentous question is not a question of "are" or "have;" but how is the washing effected, what its nature, its effects, its end? The outward rite may be and is an apt sign, but is that the great and weighty privilege of which St. Paul reminds the Corinthian saints?

But when Mr. A. makes such a charge against the English translators, in the face of the fact that their version is that of Papists and Protestants, Fathers and Moderns, Nationalists and Dissenters, Arminians and Calvinists, he betrays his own prejudices. For, while the mode "ye have, or ye are washed" was immaterial to King James's translators, as I judge, Mr. A. shows his own desire to bring in "ye washed them off (viz. at your baptism)." But this is unwarrantable. There is no "them" in the Greek, nor anything to warrant such an interpolation. The Authorised Version may be somewhat free, but this is false. There is an object in Acts 22:16; there is none here, which was, I presume, the just reason for the difference in the English version of the two passages. And, in fact, I only know of one version which leans to Mr. Alford, viz. de Wette's; the only difference being that the rationalist German is more exact. He gives "washed yourselves" (not them off). (Christian Annotator 3:192)

[Christ]: Χριστοῦ is here read by \aleph BCD^{p.m.}EP, some cursives, and almost all the ancient versions, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.104)

6:16 What!: η is read by \aleph ABCFGP and other authorities. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.106)

6:19 body: τὸ σῶμα \aleph A^{p.m.}BCDEFGKP, &c.; τὰ σώματα A^{p.m.}L, many cursives, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.106)

6:20 body λ : The rest of the verse in the Authorised Version and others is a spurious addition from bad manuscripts. (God's Inspiration of the Holy Scriptures, p. 406. See also Bible Treasury 13:366) body λ : The most important change in chapter 6, well known and fully sustained by authority, is the omission of the latter half of the last verse. Unspiritual men thought "the body" too low, and must needs foist in, "and in your spirit, which are God's," which distracts from the aim in view. The body of the Christian, which is even now God's temple by the Spirit's dwelling, soon to be conformed to the body of Christ's glory, is claimed meanwhile for his glorifying God therein, whatever be the difficulties or doubts or unbelief of philosophy. (Bible Treasury 13:366) body λ : The common reading καὶ ἐν τῷ πνεύματι ὑμῶν, ἅτινα ἐσσι τοῦ θεοῦ is absent from \aleph ABC^{s.m.}D^{p.m.}EFG, and many excellent witnesses. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.106)

7:3 due λ : there are unwarranted additions of the common text struck out [in the RV] with good reason from verses 3, 5, and 39. (Bible Treasury 13:366)

7:5 λ prayer: [See note to 1 Cor. 7:3]

7:6 permission: "Concession" may be less equivocal than "permission," which might mean on the Lord's part.

7:14 wife λ : The best MSS (\aleph ABCKLQ, &c.) do not give τῇ πιστῇ as in DEFG and some ancient versions. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.114) is: Dr. Wall's criticism is unsound. Our translators were far nearer the truth than he. His alteration of the tense not only is not required but falsifies the sense. The aorist would be the form, rather than the perfect, to convey his notion and bear his paraphrase. The perfect expresses a state consequent on an act, whether we say "is," or "has been, sanctified." But it means the permanent result of a completed action, and not what ordinarily comes to pass, a sense which the gnomic or iterative aorist may approach as in James 1:10,23; 1 Peter 1:24. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.118-119) in: Mr. Booth's effort to render ἐν το, instead of "in," is futile. Luke 1:17, 1 Thessalonians 4:7, and 2 Peter 1:5,6,7, give not the least warrant for it, any more than 1 Corinthians 7:15. The first is elliptic, and has a pregnant force. John was to turn disobedient ones not merely to, but so as to abide in, thoughts of just men. (2) God called us, says the apostle to the Thessalonians, not for uncleanness, but in sanctification, which similarly is far stronger than εἰς, to. (3) Peter calls on the christian Jews, in their faith to supply or have also virtue, in virtue, knowledge, &c.; as Paul reminds the Corinthians, God hath called us in peace. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.119-120) brother: ἀδελφῶ is read by \aleph ^{p.m.}ABCD^{p.m.}EFGP, &c., ἀνδρί by the mass, and by almost all the ancient versions. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.115)

7:15 λ is: η is omitted by \aleph ^{p.m.}FGP, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.120)

us: \aleph ^{p.m.}ACK, &c., have ἡμᾶς, "you." (Notes on 1 Cor., p.120)

7:17 Only: εἰ μὴ is in some cursives and ancient commentators changed into ἡ μὴ and joined with the foregoing, evidently to escape a difficulty. It appears to be really an elliptic phrase to the effect that there is no more to say except that, &c.; which we turn briefly by "But," or "Only." (Notes on 1 Cor., p.121)

Lord . . . God: In the first clause ὁ κύριος \aleph ABCDEFGF, many cursives, versions, &c.; in the second ὁ θεός \aleph BCDEF, and many cursives, versions, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.121)

Lord . . . God: It will be seen that the authorised version following the common text inverts the true relationships here. It is God that has called, the Lord that divided, not the converse, as in what is known as the Received Text. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.122-123) divided: \aleph ^{p.m.}B read μεμέρικεν "hath divided." (Notes on 1 Cor., p.121)

7:21 but if: I think the Americans [correctors of the RV, "nay even if".] beyond just doubt wrong in their preference of the margin to the text of both Authorised and Revised Versions. (Bible Treasury 14:368)

[it]: I am aware that many in ancient (Chrysostom, Theodoret, Oecum., Phot., &c.) and in modern times (Bengel, DeWette, Estius, Meyer, &c.) take this last verse (21) quite differently, supposing it to mean, Even if thou canst be free, use it rather (that is, the bondage). Prefer to be a slave rather than a freeman. This however appears not only to be extravagant, but to make the human circumstances of too much weight, as if slavery were more favorable for christian walk than freedom. Yet even the Syriac so construed the words; and such is the view taken in one of the most recent of English versions. The true sense is given in the authorised Bible; and such was the conviction of the Reformers and of most since the Reformation.

It may be well to notice here the grounds of the question. The Dean of Canterbury thus argues for the sense of remaining rather in slavery: "This rendering . . . is required by the usage of the particles, εἰ καὶ — by which, see Hartung, Partikel-lehre, i. 139, the καί, 'also' or 'even,' does not belong to the εἰ, as in καὶ εἰ, but is spread over the whole contents of the concessive clause . . . It is also required by the context: for the burden of the whole passage is, 'Let each man remain in the state in which he was called.'" It is remarkable that the same commentator, in his note on Mark 14:29, seems to reverse this statement, and says that the καί before εἰ intensifies only that word which it introduces in the hypothesis, citing Klotz on Devar. p. 519f. (I cite from the fifth edition of both vols.) Allowing however that the latter is incorrect, I maintain that the principle is quite consistent with the ordinary version and view. For the effect of καί following εἰ is in some cases simply to emphasize the verb that follows; whereas καὶ εἰ, were this the reading, would really be more in favor of the sense desired. For we should then translate it, Wert thou called, a slave? Let it not trouble thee; but even if thou canst become free, use it [that is, slavery] rather. But these very epistles to the Corinthians furnish plain instances, which prove what is just affirmed. Thus, 1 Corinthians 4:7, the Dean gives (New Testament newly compared, 1870) "if thou didst receive." As Madvig observes, the καί is often best rendered by the emphatic present or past (do, did) or emphatic auxiliary. So 2 Corinthians 4:3, 16; 5:16; 7:8 (three times), 12; 11:6,15; 12:11. In every case the right rendering is "if also" where an additional fact is intended; "if even" or "though" where it is not.

In the text under discussion then the apostle meets the question as to one called while a slave by the answer, Let it [that is, δουλεία, understood from the preceding δοῦλος] not be a care to thee; as he meets the added supposition, but if also thou canst be free, which of course might occasionally be, rather use it (that is, ἐλευθερία, understood from the preceding ἐλεύθερος). The context is in no way decisive against this; for as abiding in the marriage state has the exceptional provision for separation enforced by the unbeliever, so for the slave there is the analogous provision for the use and even preference of freedom. Manifestly too if the unmarried have an advantage in being less divided in caring for the things of the Lord, a similar remark tells perhaps as much in favor of the freeman compared with the slave. (See vers. 32-35) The objections urged are null. Thus καί is in its right position here, not after δύνασαι. Again, ἀλλ' εἰ is required rather than εἰ δε, as one may see by comparing 2 Corinthians 4:16, and Philippians 2:17. Nor is a demonstrative needed after χρησάι more than before μελέτω. The imputation of inconsistency with the general context and with verse 22 in particular has been already disposed of; the depreciation of the prevalent view of the apostolic precept as "worldly wisdom" is as unjust, as it seems important to rescue his teaching from the total absence of sobriety implied in the preference of slavery to freedom. Galatians 3:28, and 1 Corinthians 7:29-31, are quite consistent, and with one equally as the other. Nor is there any weight in the argument as to χράσασθαι, the import of which suits the use of freedom as a new thing no less than slavery as an old. Besides, it was meant to express not the act of entrance on freedom, implied in ἐλεύθερος γενέσθαι, but of using it when given.

Indeed it is evident that, as the other view of slavery, μ. χρησάι is a hard or vague phrase, and thus differently understood by Bengel, &c., of late, as compared with Chrysostom of old. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.123-126)

7:22 freedman: Such is the correct force, "freedman" rather than freeman. ἀπελεύθερος means one who was made free, not who was free-born. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.126)

7:25 virgins: In "virgins" or οἱ παρθένοι we see an usage of the word not exactly unknown in classical Greek (see Jacob's Index to the Anth. Gr.) but so unusual that most New Testament commentators seem indisposed to allow it. Of the ancients Theodore of Mopsuestia found no harshness in the language. "Ὅτ' ἂν οὖν εἶπη περὶ τῶν παρθένων, δὴλον ὅτι περὶ τῆς παρθενίας λέγει, τὰ ὅμοια καὶ ἐπὶ τούτου περὶ τῶν ἀνδρῶν καὶ τῶν γυναικῶν φηγεγόμενος." As to its contextual propriety there ought to be no doubt. That it should be rarely said of males in ordinary Greek authors no one acquainted with the morality of the heathen can be surprised at. If therefore it were absolutely strange among their productions, I should not consider this a valid objection to its extension in christian or apostolic hands. What believer would limit ἀγάπη to its sense in classic Greek? We shall find a further use of the word, lower down, natural indeed yet uncommon, the admission of which appears to be essential to a due understanding of the closing verses, where it is used for a man's own state, not of his daughter; but of this more in its own place. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.128-9) faithful: "Faithful" is the right word [not "trustworthy" as given by the American correctors of the RV] (Bible Treasury 14:368)

7:26 present: the right word [is] "present" as always. And what is gained by "that is upon us?" Is it not then "present"? (Bible Treasury 14:368)

7:29 brethren Λ: ἵτι DEFG, many cursives, and versions (and so the Elzevir T.R., not R.S.), but *Λ*ABKLP, thirty cursives, &c., reject it. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.130) henceforth: FG and other authorities read ἐστὶν λοιπὸν ἐστὶν. R.S. has τὸ λοιπὸν ἐστὶν. Elz. and Griesbach without the colon. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.130)

7:31 the world: τὸν κ. ἡ^{ms} AB, Arm. Cop. Basm., changed into τῷ κ. τούτῳ in most uncials and cursives, and so in T.R. to accord with usual grammar. Alford is wrong however in denying the acc. in Xen. Ag. xi. x., II. viii. i. l. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.130) using . . . for themselves: Or "not using it in full." It is not "abusing" the world — which would be παραχρῶμενοι, whereas here it is καταχρῶμενοι, using it for oneself, not for the Lord. (Lect. Intro. to the Pentateuch, p.298. See also Bible Treasury N6:283.)

using . . . for themselves: The word is καταχρῶμενοι, "using to the full," or "outright," as the "Five Clergymen," Dean Alford, and Mr. T. S. Green translate. "Abusing" would be παραχρῶμενοι, where it does not mean "slighting" — a word common enough in Greek moralists and historians, but never used in the New Testament. Even a heathen might exhort against "abusing" the world, but the apostle would have us to use it not for ourselves but for Christ's glory, just as he forbore to use his own title to support in the gospel. (Bible Treasury 16:281)

using [it] for themselves: "abusing," in verse 31 would answer to παραχρῶμενοι, not to καταχρῶμενοι (as the margin corrects [in the RV], and the text in chapter 11:18) (Bible Treasury 13:366) using [it] for themselves: [The American correctors of the RV read "using it to the full" and omit the margin:] we agree. (Bible Treasury 14:368) for themselves: Or, to the full, καταχρῶμενοι. See chapter 9:18. (Notes on 1 Cor., xiv)

7:34 also: καὶ μ. \aleph ABDP, many cursives and versions, omitted in T.R., following most authorities, as also before ἡ γ. which has overwhelming weight. Lachmann and Reiche point thus: γυναικί, καὶ μεμέρισται. καὶ ἡ γ., κ.τ.λ. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.131)

both: καὶ τῷ σ. \aleph BFGKL, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.131)

7:35 waiting on: ἐνπάρεδρον all the most ancient uncials and many cursives, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.131)

7:36 his virginity: Apparently this, the plain key to the passage, was not seen before the well-known Locke observed it, and produced excellent reasons drawn from the context, which commend themselves to any dispassionate mind. The great emphasis given to the heart's purpose (for instance, "one's own will" and "one's own heart") suits perfectly if it be a question of one's own virginity, but how a daughter's? There they sound beyond measure arbitrary and inconsiderate. If it mean one's persevering unmarried himself, it is easy to see the force of all; as to a daughter or ward, it seems out of the way. The wonder is that Whitby should be among the few who follow Locke's interpretation. The phrase is no doubt peculiar; but the apostle may have been influenced by the Hebrew idiom which uses the plural for the abstract idea. The singular seems more suited to the Greek tongue, which allows sometimes of a secondary sense, as e.g. βίος life, and means of life. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.133-134) his virginity: . . . the great difficulty created by not extending "virgins" to virginity in both sexes (cf. Rev. 14:4) is left without help [in the RV], especially in verses 36-38, where the estate seems meant. Doddridge was more perplexed by this passage than by any other in the epistle; and no wonder, if he followed the Authorised Version, which the Revisers also follow. Verse 47, as he admits, "puts the issue of the matter on the man's own mind, the power he had over his own will, and his having no necessity; whereas if a daughter or a ward were in question, her inclination, temper, and convenience were certainly to be consulted; and it would be the same if the virgin spoken of were one to whom the man was himself engaged." That παρθένος should be extended from the person to the condition (παρθενία) is easy to see, though it may want proof. Perhaps we should hardly look for it in the classic language of the corrupt Greek mind. The difficulty of ἐκγαμίζων, or rather of γαμ., the critical form, is null; were it γαμῶν, as Mr. Slade thought, in the case of his own virginity, it would be insuperable, for how could a man be said to marry it? If he took a wife, he might be said to give it in marriage by an easy figure, from just before speaking of keeping his own virgin estate — an emphasis very hard to apply to one's ward or daughter as assumed. The addition of "daughter" three times, in my opinion, makes the revision [of 1881] worse than the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 13:366)

7:37 his . . . his own: αὐτοῦ supported by the best MSS is wanting in T.R. in the first case, ἰδίᾳ in the second. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.133)

7:37-38 shall do . . . shall do: The fut. \aleph AB, &c.; the pres. most MSS, &c.; and so in the end of verse 38. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.133) [see note to 1 Cor. 7:37]

7:38 marrieth . . . marrieth: γαμίζων in both places is sustained by the best witnesses, as is the addition of τὴν αὐτοῦ παρθένον, though the order is not always the same, and it may have been inserted. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.133)

7:39 bound Λ : νόμῳ is added in Text. Rec. with many excellent authorities, but the best omit it. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.134)

bound Λ . . . Λ husband: [See note to 1 Cor. 7:3]

Λ husband: αὐτῆς is added in T.R. following many witnesses, but not the highest. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.134)

8:1 know Λ : The construction of the opening sentence has led to some difference of judgment and arrangement. Griesbach and Scholz, among editors, insert marks of parenthesis from after "we know," in verse 1, to the end of verse 3, which involves translating ὅτι "for," or "because." This was the view of Luther, Bengel, Valcknaer, and others; but it is liable to the objection that in the resumed sentence "ὅτι," after the second οἶδαμεν, certainly means "that." I am therefore disposed to take it so in the former case. Mr. T. S. Green, &c., would begin the parenthesis with πάντες, which necessitates singular abruptness in the structure. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.137)

8:2 If: δέ in Text. Rec. is not in \aleph BP, several cursives, and ancient versions. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.136) knoweth: ἐγνώκεναι \aleph ABDEFGP and several cursives, &c., but KL and most cursives εἰδέναι: the former, objective knowledge; the latter, inward conscious knowledge, as remarked by another. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.136) yet: οὐπω \aleph ABP, six cursives, &c., οὐδέπω the mass. The best do not add οὐδέν. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.136) knoweth: ἔγνω \aleph ABD^m-FGP, seven cursives, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.137)

8:3 known: There is no sufficient or right ground therefore for taking ἐγνωσται in a Hophal sense — "hath been caused to know." It is really the converse (see Gal. 4:9). Nor is there need to give it the sense of approval. The best meaning is its ordinary one. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.138)

[The American correctors of the RV read "by him":] may be, though "of" idiomatically means the same thing in this connection. (Bible Treasury 14:368)

8:4 [there is]: It would seem also that the parallelism in the last clause of verse 4 favors our translating οὐδέν εἰδωλὸν ἐν κόσμῳ as "there is no idol," rather than, "an idol is nothing in the world," though in itself equally legitimate. It is quite true, as the prophets assert, that the idols of the Gentiles are vanities and impotence; but here the apostle appears to affirm that they had no existence in the world. There were no such beings as they associated with their idols. Later on he shews there were demons behind, as indeed the law intimated. (Deut. 32:17). (Notes on 1 Cor., p.138-139)

Λ God: ἔτερος is not in \aleph ^m-ABDEFGP, many cursives, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.136)

8:6 unto: The text of the English Bible "in" is quite wrong, as are many commentators, such as Calvin, &c.; the marginal correction "for" is right. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.139)

8:7 with conscience: The Sinaitic, Vatican, Alexandrian, and Porphyrian uncials, four or five cursives, and several of the most ancient versions, &c., read συνηθεία, "through custom," not conscience, that is, from their habituation; and so Lachmann and Tischendorf. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.140) with conscience: [The RV], like Lachmann, Tischendorf and Tregelles, have adopted συνηθεία, "through their habituation," with \aleph A B P, four or five cursives, Memph. Basm. &c., against συνειδήσει, "through their conscience," with the great mass of other authority. (Bible Treasury 13:366)

8:8 shall: παραστήσει \aleph ^m-AB, several cursives, versions, &c., instead of παρίστησι ("commendeth") \aleph ^{cor}-DELP, and most cursives, Ital., Vulg., &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.136)

Λ neither: γάρ, added in Text. Rec. is not in \aleph AB, &c., several ancient versions, but in most MSS and versions. There is a difference of order also in the copies as to the clauses. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.136-137) commend: [The American correctors of the RV add marg. Gr. present: this] might be well. (Bible Treasury 14:368)

[last part of verse]: [The RV has] also reversed the ordinary order in the latter part of verse 8. (Bible Treasury 13:366)

8:11 perisheth: For καὶ ἀπολείται Text. Rec. with most of the witnesses. AB and a few other authorities read ἀπόλλυται γάρ many giving the present who read καί. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.137)

by: ἐν ABDEFGP, &c. ἐπί ("for") Text. Rec. L and most cursives, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.137)

9:1 Am I not free? am I not an apostle?: The order is transposed in the vulgar text, following the mass but not the best MSS and versions, ABP, &c. Vulg. Syr. Cop. Aeth., Arm., &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.141)

Am I not free? am I not an apostle?: [The RV has an] inversion [of the ordinary order] (Bible Treasury 13:366)

Jesus _Λ: 'I. X., as in T.R., DEKLP, most cursives and versions; X. FG, &c.; 'I. AB, a few cursives, some ancient versions, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.141)

9:6 from working [lit. not to work]: μὴ ἐργ. ABDFGP, &c.; τοῦ μὴ ἐργ. the rest. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.141) from working [lit. not to work]: One may add here the curious error in the Vulg. (not alone the printed editions but some good, if not most of the, manuscripts), hoc or haec operandi. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.144)

9:7 of its fruit: τὸν κ ^{AB}ABC^{FGP}FGP, &c.; ἐκ τοῦ κ. T.R. supported by the mass. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.144)

9:10 altogether: π. in the New Test. means "altogether," "quite," not "assuredly." (Bible Treasury 14:368)

thresher _Λ: T.R. adds τῆς ἐλπίδος αὐτοῦ with large but inferior authority. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.144)

9:13 attend: παρεδρεύοντες ^{AB}ABCDEF^{FGP}FGP, a few cursives, and many citations; προσεδρεύ. T.R. following a few uncials, most cursives, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.144)

9:20 not being myself under law: μὴ ὦν αὐτὸς ὑπὸ νόμον ABCDEF^{FGP}FGP, many cursives, ancient versions, &c.; D^{corr}K and most cursives omit, as does Tex. Rec. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.148) not being myself under law: It is in verse 20 that a remarkable clause appears, omitted in the common Greek text, but attested by the best MSS. and versions. The words are μὴ ὦν αὐτὸς ὑπὸ νόμον, i.e., "not being myself under law," and evidently guarding against a possible deduction from the preceding clause. So in 21, the parenthesis is a similar guard, "being not without law to God, but lawfully subject to Christ." It is a mere allusion to the word "law" and means due subjection. (Bible Treasury 2:160) not being myself under law: And here let me commend 1 Corinthians 9:20,21 to the Christian Observer and the Record, and let them not fall into the egregious error of fancying that we add to the Scriptures, because we say that the Tex. Rec. and the Auth. V. present the passage in a mutilated form. The clause μὴ ὦν αὐτὸς ὑπὸ νόμον "(not being myself under law)" properly comes in before the last clause of verse 20, resting, as it does, on the amplest authority of the best MSS. and Vv. It was omitted δι' ὁμοιοτέλευτον, as was indeed a much larger portion of the same verse in one ancient copy. (Bible Treasury 6:159) not being myself under law: [The RV has] rightly inserted the omitted clause (Bible Treasury 13:366)

9:21 under law: [See notes to 9:20]

9:27 having preached to others: there is no more reason to bring into the margin "have been a herald" than the analogous form in 1:23 and elsewhere. (Bible Treasury 14:368)

reprobate: why translate ἀδόκιμος here "rejected," but in 2 Corinthians 13 "reprobate" as in Romans 1:28? "Worthless" would be yet better than "rejected" in Hebrews 6 where it is a question of "land" or "ground." (Bible Treasury 13:366) reprobate: The word which is softened down to "disapproved" is never used in the N.T. in any sense but the worst. If said of "land" (Heb. 6), it means "worthless," bearing thorns and briars, but no acceptable fruit. So it is employed in 2 Cor. 13:5,6,7, never for what is good though failing. Lack of perception that the apostle had no real fear as to himself, but was transferring the case to himself to make it all the stronger if he were to walk so wickedly, misled not a few to imagine that he meant works rejected but the preacher saved. It is precisely the contrary here. The preaching might be all right, but the preacher's life was offensive to God, and himself therefore rejected or as the A.V. says, "a castaway," which is quite sound, though it is a pity to multiply needlessly the rendering of the Greek word. (Bible Treasury N5:302)

reprobate: The word ἀδοκιμος, here translated "a castaway," and elsewhere "reprobate," "rejected," is I think limited by the subject-matter. (Christian Annotator 3:332)

10:1 For: γάρ ABCDEF^{FGP}FGP, ten cursives, the Latin and Egyptian versions, many fathers Greek and Latin; δέ is read by ^{corr}KL, most cursives, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.152)

10:2 were all baptized: ἐβαπτίσαντο (= got baptized) BKLP and the cursives generally, and many Greek fathers; ἐβαπτίσθησαν ACDEFG with some cursives and Greek fathers. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.152)

10:8 in: ἐν, added by most, is not in ^{AB}BD^{FG}FG, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.152)

10:9 Lord: κύριον BCP, eight cursives, some ancient versions and fathers; Χριστόν DEFGKL, most cursives, versions, &c.; θεόν A, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.153)

were perishing: ἀπόλλυντο AB, the rest ἀπώλοντο. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.153)

10:10 murmur ye: γογγύζωμεν, 'let us murmur,' NDEFG, &c., contrary to the general testimony. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.153) some: καθάπερ BCP, καθὼς the rest, as in Text. Rec. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.153)

10:11 all: πάντα is omitted by AB, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.153)

typically: τυπικῶς ABCKP, and many other witnesses; τύποι, as in Text. Rec., DEFG and most cursives, &c. For the Text. Rec. συνέβαινον, supported by ADEFG and most; -γεν BCK (not L, as Tisch. gives by oversight on both sides) many cursives, &c. The force is greatest, when we see the facts in detail happening, (pl.) to Israel, but recorded (sing.) as a whole in scripture for us. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.153)

10:13 ye: ὑμεῖς ("ye") is expressed in Tex. Rec. with large cursive support, but contrary to the great uncials, save in a correction of two. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.159)

10:16 blessing: It is not that εὐλογέω is exactly equivalent to εὐχαριστέω, but clearly they can be used to a certain extent interchangeably; they express with a shade of difference the self-same act, neither prayer for a miracle nor the form of effecting one, but very simply a benediction or thanksgiving. If our ordinary food be sanctified by the word of God and prayer, who could think of the supper of the Lord without blessing and thanksgiving? (Notes on 1 Cor., p.163) is it: ἐστὶν stands before τοῦ αἵμ. in ABP, &c., and before τοῦ σ. A, &c., contrary to all the rest. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.160)

10:19 [second clause]: ^{corr}BC^{corr}DEP, some cursives, many versions &c., have the order different from KL and most with Text. Rec.,

AC^{p.m.} omitting the second clause altogether. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.165)

10:20 they: τὰ ἔθνη ACL most cursives, the ancient versions, &c., as in Text. Rec., but not in BDEF^g-G^g &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.165) sacrifice: θύουσιν ABCDEFGP &c. θύει KL, most cursives, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.165)

10:23 Λ but . . . Λ but: μοι is added by the correctors of κ and C, by HKL, most cursives, &c., contrary to the best authorities of every kind. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.167)

10:28 sacrificed: ιερόθυτον, as a heathen would say, κABHS Sah. Syr. (Pesch.); but all others, εἰδωλόθυτον, sacrificed to idols, as a Christian might say. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.168) conscience Λ: The last clause of T. Rec. is omitted by the ancient authorities. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.168)

10:30 If: δέ ("For") is added in T. Rec. by few and slight witnesses. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.168)

11:2 you Λ: κABCP, some good cursives, and ancient versions, do not read ἀδελφοί, "brethren." (Notes on 1 Cor., p.171) traditions: "Traditions," in chapter 11:2, though lawful otherwise, seems objectionable as exposing the unwary reader to a serious assumption of Rome, which tends and is even boldly used to subvert the authority of scripture. (Bible Treasury 13:366)

11:3 the Christ: ὁ Χ. κAB^{corr}D^{corr}EKLP, most cursives, &c.; but some good witnesses omit. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.171)

the Christ's: τοῦ κABDE, &c., the rest omitting the article. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.171)

11:5 own: ἐαυτῆς BD^{corr}EK &c.; very excellent authorities, αὐτῆς. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.171)

11:10 have authority on: [The American correctors of the RV omit marg. "have authority over": this] seems trivial. (Bible Treasury 14:368)

11:17 Now in enjoining this I praise [you] not: The readings here are singularly conflicting. Lachmann and Tregelles read τοῦτο δὲ παραγγέλλω οὐκ ἐπαινῶν, "This I enjoin, not praising [you]" on the authority of AC^{p.m.}-FG, some cursives, the Vulgate, Pesch. Syr., and other ancient versions. Tischendorf had adopted this, but in his eighth edition he returns to the common text, παραγγέλλων οὐκ ἐπαινῶ supported by κ and the mass of uncials and cursives, &c. The Vatican strangely gives παραγγέλλων οὐκ ἐπαινῶν, which can hardly be said to have any just sense and is probably a mere slip, one or other only being a participle, not both. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.177-178)

11:19 sects: In the margin . . . [the RV gives] "factions" or "sects," which more truly represents αἰρέσεις than "heresies" or heterodoxies, which does not seem meant. They were parties in separation from the assembly, which the apostle warns must result from the "schisms" or divisions already within. This is very important; for many mistake the truth here taught and imagine that "schism" is the fruit of "heresy;" whereas on the contrary splits without, or "heresies" as here shewn (that is, factions or sects), come from splits within (that is "schisms," or divisions). Differences within are dangerous and bad; but when self-will and impatience burst all the bands of unity and boldly take shape as a party without, how much worse? The kindred word, "an heretical man" in Titus 3:10, is thus rendered plain, as not necessarily heterodox, but independent and self-willed, impatiently breaking through unity in his self-confidence and disregard of the assembly. It is strange that the Revisers, or any one else, should continue the meaning "heretic," when it really means a sectary or party-leader. Hence it is no question of putting him out; for he was gone out; and Titus after a first and second admonition was simply to have done with him (Bible Treasury 13:366) [see note to Acts 24:14]

sects: "heresies" is a word that misleads; the sense is "factions" or "sects." (Bible Treasury 14:368)

11:24 Λ This . . . Λ for you: The Alexandrian, Vatican, Sinaitic, and Palimpsest of Paris, with other authorities, have not κλώμενον "broken" as in most followed by Tex. Rec. Still more largely do the witnesses reject λάβετε φάγετε, "take, eat." (Notes on 1 Cor., p.179-180)

Λ This . . . Λ for you: [See note to 1 Cor. 11:27]

11:25 covenant: [See note to 1 Cor. 11:27]

11:27 or . . . guilty as to: The main mistranslations in the section relating to the Lord's Supper are corrected by the Revisers, though "guilty of the body of the Lord" in verse 27 may still leave the door open to mistake. But "Take, eat" and "broken" are rightly gone from verse 24, "covenant" appears in verse 25, "or" displaces "and" in verse 27, "the" supplants "that" twice in verse 28, above all "judgment" expels "damnation" which was always an inexcusable error refuted by verse 32, and "discern" is rightly used both for "the body" that is, the Lord's, and "ourselves" in verses 29, 31. These corrections, long known and sure, are none the less to be thankfully received in what is now so largely disseminated where the English language is used or known. Evil and superstitious doctrine, too common, will hence be detected; and by grace the truth will get in where it has long been obscured. (Bible Treasury 13:366) eateth Λ: τοῦτον KLP, most cursives, several ancient versions, and so Text. Rec. contrary to κAB¹CDEFG, several cursives and ancient versions. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.185) unworthily Λ: κD^{corr}E and twenty cursives, add τοῦ κυρίου "of the Lord." (Notes on 1 Cor., p.185) unworthily: "unworthily" means "in an unworthy manner," and is less prolix. (Bible Treasury 14:368) the: Text. Rec., with some cursives, omits τοῦ. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.185)

11:28 the . . . the: [See note to 1 Cor. 11:27]

11:29 drinketh Λ . . . body Λ: Text. Rec. adds ἀναξίως and κυρίου with many MSS and versions, contrary to κABC, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.185)

drinketh Λ: . . . most add "unworthily," but the most ancient omit . . . (Notes on 1 Cor., p.188)

judgment: But there is another error still more prevalent, and even long and widely consecrated, which has wrought as much mischief as almost any other single mistranslation of a scripture. It is not "damnation" of which verse 29 speaks, but in contrast with it judgment, κρίμα. Yet all the celebrated English versions, from Wiclif downward, have sanctioned the grievous mistake, save the worst of them, the Rhemish, through its servile adherence to the Vulgate, which here happens to give judicium rightly. The curious fact however is, that of all systems none is really so tainted with the unbelief which led to the mistranslation as the Romanist. For it naturally regards with the utmost superstition the Lord's supper, and with it interweaves its idolatry of the real presence. Hence its interpretation of guilt as to the body and the blood of the Lord. Hence its notion of "damnation" attaching to a misuse of the sacrament, followed by almost all the Protestant associations. But the Protestant is misled by his version, while the Romanist is the less excusable, inasmuch as his Vulgate and the vernacular version are so far right, yet he is even more deeply under the delusion which denies christian relationship and an atom of grace in God, as a fact now known to the heart by faith. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.188-189) judgment: The translators have introduced a word and idea of their own, unequivocally erroneous: and have ventured to say, that "he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself." It is not true. God says, "he eateth and drinketh judgment to himself." There is no competent judge, no christian man acquainted with the language of the Holy Ghost, that could deny it, if he fairly examined the evidence. Human tradition accounts for the proneness of persons to put aside plain principles of the truth. For it is not so much a question to be decided on critical grounds; but such an alteration contradicts the whole object of the Holy Ghost in the passage. (Lect. on Galatians, p. 167) judgment . . . discerning: [See note to 1 Cor. 11:27]

11:30 For: δέ ^{ms.} ABDEFG, &c.; γάρ ^{corr.} CKLP, &c. Text. Rec. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.185)

11:31 discerning: [See note to 1 Cor. 11:27]

11:32 the: τοῦ ^{ms.} ABC, &c., which Text. Rec. omits with most. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.186)

11:34 ^{ms.} If: Text. Rec. adds δέ with most, contrary to ^{ms.} ABCD^{ms.} FG, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.186)

12:1 things: The Authorized translation, with almost all others, inserts "gifts" after "spiritual" in the first verse; but this is scarcely comprehensive enough, for it does not properly contemplate the presence of the Spirit Himself, which clearly is far more momentous than any gift, and in itself distinct from them, they depending on Him rather than He on them. Hence "manifestations" has been suggested. But this, though better, seems inadequate to express the great truth in question, as we may learn from verse 7, where "the manifestation of the Spirit" refers to what is given to each, as distinct from the baptism of the Spirit, which forms all into one body. The sense is the entire range of what pertains to the Spirit; and if our language could bear "spirituals," this would seem the best way of rendering τῶν πνευματικῶν. A christian usage has already adopted "heavenlies" in Ephesians. There seems at least as much need for a similar modification here in Corinthians. There is no sufficient reason, with Locke and others, to suppose that spiritual men are meant here again, as in chapter 14:37, 2:15; Galatians 6. Compare verse 31 and 14:1. This would narrow the field even more than the common version, and thus be more objectionable still. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.197-198) things: It will be observed that the word "gifts" is inserted by the translators. Nor is it correct; for the subject, though embracing gifts, goes farther, and takes in what is of far deeper moment as being the source of all, the presence of the Spirit working in the sovereign power of a divine person in the church, and by its members. Perhaps "spirituals" would give the idea, if our language could bear it without any addition. If we must, for clearness, supply a word, it should be "manifestations" rather than "gifts." (Bible Treasury 15:235)

12:2 when: The Received Text omits ὅτε on small authority, and to the destruction of the sense which requires the adverb; but we have it in all the great witnesses to the ancient text ^{ms.} ABCDELP, more than fifty cursive manuscripts, Vulg., old Latin, Syr., Sah., Arm., Aeth., and many Fathers, Greek or Latin. (Bible Treasury 15:235)

when: It is clear that ὅτε was omitted by mere oversight through the preceding ὅτι in FGK and many cursives, followed by the Pesch. Syr., Cop., &c., but all the rest ^{ms.} ABCD^{ms.} E^{ms.} LP, &c., read it. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.197)

[latter part of verse]: the Revisers rightly read "when ye were Gentiles, ye were led away unto those dumb idols, howsoever" &c. (Bible Treasury 13:367)

12:3 [whole verse]: Verse 3 is also rendered better [in the RV]. (Bible Treasury 13:367)

Lord Jesus: The Text. Rec. follows the mass in giving the accusative; but ^{ms.} ABC, &c., the nominative. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.197)

12:6 God ^{ms.} _Λ: BC, &c., read καὶ "and;" and the Text. Rec. with most adds ἐστι "is." (Notes on 1 Cor., p.197)

God ^{ms.} _Λ: Needless additions of the received text vanish from verses 6, 12, 21 [in the RV]. (Bible Treasury 13:367)

12:9 ^{ms.} _Λ to: δέ "and" is read by the majority of MSS and versions, but is not in ^{ms.} BD^{ms.} EFG, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.200)

same: Or "one," ἐνί, AB, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.200)

12:10 operations of powers: . . . (erroneously rendered in the Rhemish and Authorized Versions, "the working of miracles") . . . (Notes on 1 Cor., p.203)

^{ms.} _Λ to a different: Authorities are pretty equal for and against δέ "and." (Notes on 1 Cor., p.200)

12:12 ^{ms.} _Λ body: Text. Rec. adds ἑνός, with two or three uncials and the mass of cursives, &c., contrary to the best MSS, versions, and other authorities. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.205)

^{ms.} _Λ body: [See note to 1 Cor. 12:6]

12:13 ^{ms.} _Λ one Spirit: A few uncials with most cursives insert εἰς, contrary to ^{ms.} ABC^{ms.} D^{ms.} FGP and the best of the other witnesses. A gives the strange reading καὶ πάντες ἐν ὁμῳ ἔσμεν. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.205)

12:21 [whole verse]: [See note to 1 Cor. 12:6]

12:26 whether: εἰ τι BFG, &c., and versions, the rest εἴτε. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.214)

a [or, one]: The second ἐν is not in ^{ms.} AB. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.214)

12:28 then: ἐπειτα (sic) ^{ms.} ABC, five cursives, and several fathers; εἴτα Text. Rec., with KL and most cursives, &c., while DEFG, &c., omit either. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.216)

12:31 [whole verse]: 12:31 seems to me better in the Authorised and Revised Versions than in the American [correctors of the RV] suggestion as in Alford and others. (Bible Treasury 14:368) greater: μείζονα ^{ms.} ABC, ten or more cursives, both Aeth., and many ancients; κρείττ(σ)ονα as in Text. Rec. DEFGKL and the great mass of cursives, most versions, &c. Chrys. and Theoph. expressly add even that he did not say τὰ μ. but τὰ κρ. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.216)

13:1 love: Love is the theme in hand, not "charity," for which we are indebted to Wiclif's too close following of the Vulgate. Tyndale and Cranmer gave "love," from which our Authorized translators often went back again to "charity." (Notes on 1 Cor., p.219) love: I cannot but coincide with the Revisers in preferring "love" to charity (Bible Treasury 13:367)

love: [See note to 3 John 6.]

13:3 burned: We may notice that the reading, καυχῆσο-(or -ω-)μαι, "I may boast," is that of ^{ms.} AB, 17, the Roman Æthiopic, &c. But it is, as Matthæi said, whatever Jerome alleges, "prorsus absurda lectio," and a change by one letter from καυθήσο-(or -ω-)μαι, "I may be burned," whether inadvertently, or by the design of such as did not understand the scope of the passage; for the motive of boasting would exclude love so completely, as to render ἀγάπην δὲ μὴ ἔχω a needless addition. The fact however is instructive, in that it is one of not a few proofs how mistaken and perilous it is to accept absolutely the united verdict of the three most famous uncials. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.221)

13:5 seeketh not its own things: Strange to say, the Vatican manuscript (B) reads οὐ ζητεῖ τὰ μὴ ἑαυτῆς, that is, love only seeks her own advantage! So do even the Gentiles, who know not God. It is the character of selfishness, not of love. Yet Clement of Alexandria cites this false reading, and reasons on it as if correct in Paed. iii. 1, sec. 3; though elsewhere he cites the clause as it should be. One sees the folly of making such men authoritative in the least degree. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.223)

13:12 [last clause]: 13:12, last clause, is in the American [correctors of the RV] preference as in Dr. S. Davidson, &c. (Bible Treasury 14:368)

13:13 greater: it is the greater “of,” not “than,” these; and hence our “greatest.” (Bible Treasury 14:368)

14:1 spiritual things: it is strange that τὰ πν. in verse 1 and πν. in verse 12 should be alike translated “spiritual gifts.” (Bible Treasury 13:367)

14:2,4,13,19,27 ^Λ tongue: There can be but little doubt that the interpolation of the word unknown in the Authorised Version of 1 Cor. 14:2,4,13,19,27, gave occasion to, and helped to consecrate, the delusion of the enemy. It is no small proof of the evils of these unwarranted additions; . . . (Exp. of Acts, p. 18)

14:3 encouragement: Perhaps “encouragement” is the true derivative sense here. (Bible Treasury 14:368)

14:4 ^Λ tongue: [See note to 14:2]

14:5 [in the RV] changes . . . made (5, 18, 25, 35, 37) seem well-founded (Bible Treasury 13:367)

14:12 spirits: [See note to 1 Cor. 14:1]

14:13 ^Λ tongue: [See note to 14:2]

14:18 [whole verse]: [See note to 1 Cor. 14:5]

14:19 ^Λ tongue: [See note to 14:2]

14:21 lips of others: So read κAB and twice as many cursives, &c.; but the vast majority give the easier reading of the Text. Rec. “by other lips.” (Notes on 1 Cor., p.235)

14:22 to . . . to . . . [is] . . . to . . . to: The common English version needlessly introduces “serveth” in the latter half of verse 22. I think, however, that it is justified in not understanding “sign” with prophesying, which essentially differs from those powers correctly falling under that designation, like a tongue or miracle. It was this, no doubt, which influenced them in changing the “to” of the former clause into the “for” of the latter, which reads more smoothly in English. But the change seems scarcely called for, and is not here adopted. We could equally well say tongues are as a sign for the unbelieving, prophesying for those that believe. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.236-237)

14:25 [whole verse]: [See note to 1 Cor. 14:5]

^Λ the secrets . . . and thus: The Text. Rec., with two or three uncials and most cursives, &c., here inserts καὶ οὕτως instead of before the last clause, contrary to the best authorities; it also puts οὕτως after ὁ θεός whereas it should be before as I have translated. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.235)

14:26 of you: ὑμῶν “of you” is not in κAB, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.239) tongue, ^Λ: [WK includes the missing words in his exposition, Notes on 1 Cor., p. 239]

14:27 ^Λ tongue: [See note to 14:2]

14:29 the others: [Q. Does “the other” mean the rest of the prophets? G.]

A. The question is a mistake. The prophets are not considered as a distinct body of persons at all. It is not οἱ προφηταί, but such. In verse 31 it is stated, “You may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn and all may be encouraged.” “Let the prophets speak” is a false translation; so is “the spirits of the prophets.” It should be, “the spirits of prophets.” Hence the whole question falls to the ground. The passage is the same as if the apostle should say, “(As to) prophets, let two or three persons speak and the rest judge.” (Bible Treasury 3:304)

14:33 [whole verse]: 33, 34 the order of the Authorised and Revised Versions seems far better than in Lachmann, Tischendorf, Meyer, &c., whom the Americans [correctors of the RV] follow. (Bible Treasury 14:368)

as in all assemblies of the saints: It is not quite certain whether we should connect the last clause with verse 33 as its close, or with verse 34 as its beginning. Many critics and commentators prefer the latter. There is no doubt that Lachmann was wrong in punctuating the Greek, so as to make “of the saints” the complement, not of the assemblies to which it unquestionably belongs, but of “the women,” ὑμῶν being of course omitted on the authority of the three greatest uncials, six cursives, with most of the ancient versions and early citations. But safer editors, like Tischendorf, who also omit ὑμῶν, separate αἱ γυναῖκες, “the women,” from τῶν ἁγίων, “of the saints.” To begin with such a phrase is unexampled. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.241)

14:34 [whole verse]: [See note to 1 Cor. 14:33]

subjection: Text. Rec., with DFGKL, &c., has ὑποτάσσεσθαι, which may be regarded as the more difficult, but ὑποτασσέσθωσαν is in κAB and other ancient authorities, besides good cursives. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.241) speak: What can be more distinct and peremptory than this? The ingenuity of will, however, has found a supposed loophole. The word “speak,” say they, means only to talk familiarly or to chatter. This is wholly untrue. It is the regular word for giving utterance, as may be seen in 1 Peter 4:10-11. (Exp. of the Two Epistles to Timothy, p. 48)

14:35 [whole verse]: [See note to 1 Cor. 14:5]

speak: [see note to 1 Cor. 14:34]

14:37 [whole verse]: [See note to 1 Cor. 14:5]

[the]: τοῦ “the” in Text. Rec., with many cursives, but not in the uncials, the best and most cursives, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.243) commandment: Tischendorf omits ἐντολή with DEFG, &c.; Lach., &c., ἐστὶν ἐντολή, with κAB, &c.; Text. Rec. εἰσὶν ἐντολαί, with most. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.243)

14:38 ignorant: ἀγνοεῖται “he is ignored,” with κADFG, &c., the common reading has excellent authority. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.243)

14:39 my: μου, omitted by Text. Rec. with most is in κABD, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.243)

in: ἐν BDFG, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.243)

14:40 but: δέ, omitted by KL and most, is read by κABEFGP, many cursives, versions, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.243)

15:2 are being saved: “are saved” [in the RV] is right, though not consistent with the work elsewhere. (Bible Treasury 13:367)

[last half]: [The American correctors of the RV, “saved, if ye hold fast what I preached unto you, except” substituting “the word which” for “what,” are] right. (Bible Treasury 14:368)

15:8 as to the abortion: [The American correctors of the RV read “as to the child untimely born” which] seems awkward, though the article should be expressed. (Bible Treasury 14:368)

15:19 [whole verse]: 19 is better in the Authorised and Revised Versions than in the proposal of the [American correctors of the RV]. (Bible Treasury 14:368)

15:20 ^Λ first-fruit: ἐγένετο (Text. Rec.) is added by D^{corr}-KL, most cursives, Syrr., Goth., &c., contrary to all the rest. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.259)

Λ first-fruit: One omission, of ἐγένετο, is notorious (Bible Treasury 13:367)

15:23 rank: As unfounded is the idea that τάγματι in 1 Cor. 15:23, means “company,” “band,” “regiment,” while fully admitting of course that such is a frequent signification in profane authors. But here the context is decidedly adverse, whether τὸ τέλος be applied to the wicked dead, or to Christians uninstructed in the Lord’s second coming and kingdom. All or most of the versions at all known and accurate (as the Syriac, Vulgate, Beza, Luther, De Wette, Diodati, Martin, Ostervald, the Lausanne, etc.) seem to agree with the authorised version in giving “order.” Indeed, the way in which our Lord’s resurrection is introduced appears to me of itself to exclude such a translation; for His resurrection is the first step, which perfectly agrees with “order,” but not with “company.” Again, such a view necessitates the harshest possible construction of “the end” (τὸ τέλος), which, by a figure, must be tortured to mean the good (or bad) who are raised then; whereas, in truth, it is most plain that “the end” is really after the kingdom is given up, and, a fortiori, subsequent to all judgment. The white-throne judgment of the dead is one of the closing acts of the kingdom, after which cometh “the end.” Lastly, it would be incongruous to suppose that after “they that are Christ’s” rise, another regiment of Christ’s should remain to rise. Not a class, but an epoch, is meant by “the end;” an epoch subsequent to the resurrection of the wicked and their judgment. (Bible Witness and Review 1:307-8, Christian Annotator 3:174, 1856)

the Christ’s: τοῦ is omitted in Steph. and the early edition, Elz., by mere carelessness. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.259)

15:24 giveth up: παραδῶ (Text. Rec.) KL and most cursives, &c., παραδιδῶ (or -ῶ) the best authorities. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.259)

to him [who is]: “To God even the Father,” in the Revised as in the Authorised Version, is not a happy rendering; and still less is Mr. Green’s “to God the Father;” because both tend to lower the Son, as if the Father only were God, or as if the Father might be all in all, whereas it is really God (i.e., Father, Son, and Holy Ghost). Hence “to him that is God and Father” appears less objectionable. “To God and the Father” say the Five Clergymen, which sounds as if the Father were not God; yet this none can mean. (Bible Treasury 13:367)

15:25 until Λ: ἄν (Text. Rec.) is added by a good many authorities, uncial and cursive, but not the more ancient, as is ἀντοῦ by AFG, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.259)

15:29 baptized for the dead: There is no need of departing from the ordinary meaning of “baptized,” “for,” or “dead.” . . . The context suggest the true substitutionary idea. That ὑπὲρ allows of some such shade of thought is certain, not only from its usage in all correct Greek, but especially from the New Testament, where the physical sense of “over,” so common elsewhere, does not occur. (Yet this was the thought of Luther, Tyndale, and others here. They took ὑπὲρ as meaning over their graves; but the Greek Testament usus loquendi is against the sense.) Thus we find the apostle’s use in Philemon 13, which is distinct. (Compare John 11:50-52; 18:14; Rom. 5:6,7,8; 2 Cor. 5:14,15,20; 1 Thess. 5:10; 1 Tim. 2:6; 1 Pet. 2:21; 3:18, &c.) Nor is this found in the inspired writers only. Viger has cited a decisive passage from Dion. Hal. (Ant. Rom. viii. 87, ed. Reiske, p. 1723): οὗτοι τὴν ἀρχὴν παραλαβόντες, ὑπὲρ τῶν ἀποθανόντων τῷ πρὸς Ἀντιάτας πολέμῳ στρατιωτῶν, ἤξιον ἑτέροισι καταγράψαι. . . . Had it been οἱ βαπτισθέντες, there might have been some trifling show of argument for an exceptional fact or class, but οἱ βαπτιζόμενοι much more naturally suits the baptized in general, the objects of that action. To infer that the present participle, rather than the aorist, implies a practice not generally prevalent, is as illegitimate grammatically, as it is exegetically to conceive a practice not otherwise known to us. There is not the least ground to gather from the text that it existed then, or was here alluded to. There is no reason, therefore, for translating the phrase “on behalf of the dead.” Indeed it seems to me that, were there a reference to friends, believing or not, who had died without baptism, a much more definite and restricted formula would be imperatively called for than ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν, which very naturally refers to those in verse 18, as present danger does to verse 19. This also accounts for the change from the third to the first person; so strict is the analogy, without the strange fancy that by the third person, and by the article before βαπτ., the apostle indirectly separates himself and those to whom he is writing from participation in, or approval of, the practice. . . . Nor do I understand what Mr. T. S. Green means by “baptized concerning the dead,” as he translates in his “Twofold New Testament.” In his “New Testament Grammar” of 1842, page 251, he cites Romans 1:4, and 1 Corinthians 15:29, as supposed instances where by νεκρῶν only one person, namely Christ, is really signified; but this is in both a mistake. C. F. Matthæi falls into the opposite error of supposing that, baptism being typical of resurrection, ὑπὲρ τῶν ν. = ἐατῶν, comparing Matthew 8:22 and similar passages. This resembles Chrysostom, Theodoret, Tertullian, &c., who taught that “for the dead” meant for our bodies. None of them saw the train of thought.

But G. B. Winer seems at least as uncertain as any in his Grammar of New Testament Greek (Moulton’s edition). First, he tells us (page 219) that ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν can hardly refer to (the dead) Christ — in that case we should have had εἰς τοὺς νεκρούς — but must be understood of (unbaptized) dead men. There is no such necessity, as we have seen. But, letting this pass, in page 349 we are told that the text is probably to be rendered, “who allow themselves to be baptized over the dead;” whereas, when formally treating of the prepositions, he admits that the meaning of ὑπὲρ in the New Testament is always figurative, the nearest approach to its local signification being 1 Corinthians 4:6, unless we so render our text. In the same page (478) he gives “for the benefit of, for,” as probably meant in 1 Corinthians 15:29. But he does not close the paragraph without admitting that, as in most cases he who acts in behalf of another appears for him, ὑπὲρ sometimes borders on ἀντί, “instead of,” and cites, besides Eurip. Alc. 700 and Philemon 13, Thuc. i. 141 and Polyb. iii. 67.7. This last evidently sustains the real unforced sense of our text, which is as consonant with the context and argument, as it avoids the need of doing harshness to grammar, exegesis, early doctrine, and history. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.265-269) baptized for the dead: [The manner in which Tertullian, Chrysostom, and Theodoret explain this passage is worthy of notice. Will any reader give his opinion on the following interpretation and pointing?

ἐπεὶ τί ποιήσουσιν οἱ βαπτιζόμενοι; ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν, εἰ ὅλως νεκροὶ οὐκ ἐγείρονται τί καὶ βαπτίζονται ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν;

Dr. Tregelles translates: “Else what shall the baptised do; [It is] for the dead, if the dead rise not at all; why then are they baptised for them.” He gives Theodoret’s exegesis in his note on p. 216 of his “Account of the Printed Greek Text.” αὐτῶν must be adopted; it is according to Griesbach, Scholz, Lachmann, Tischendorf, and Tregelles. I am inclined to approve of this rendering. What do your Correspondents think? March, 1855. Thos. Myers.] (Christian Annotator 2:175)

I presume that Mr. Myers must have failed in accurately punctuating this text. I see no reason for doubting that an old and common interpretation is the best, as it certainly flows from the obvious construction, and a very ordinary meaning of the words employed. After the positive revelation in verses 20-28, the Apostle resumes his argument with εἰ ὅλως νεκροὶ οὐκ ἐγ. which he had pressed in verse 16, with its consequences as to Christ, themselves, and the dead. Here the Apostle repeats the phrase of that verse, in view, first, of those who take the place of those who were fallen asleep in Christ; and secondly, of a lot in this life most miserable, if hope be there only. Compare 29 with 18, and 30 with 19. To enter the company of such if the dead rise not, would be folly indeed. Every proper lexicon or grammar will show to those who may not be aware already, that ὑπέρ has regularly and not infrequently the sense, "in the place or stead of," which here, in my opinion, accords best with the previous context, the general reasoning, and the actual phraseology of this particular verse. Αὐτῶν is of course to be read at the end rather than τῶν νεκρῶν, as having the largest support of the best authorities, MSS. versions, and fathers. A question might arise, as it has arisen, whether the first note of interrogation ought to follow βαπτ. or ἐγ.; but the substantial sense remains the same. (Christian Annotator 2:223)

them: αὐτῶν ABD^mEFGKP, twenty cursives, most versions, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.265)

15:31 brethren: ἀδελφοί, ABKP, many cursives, versions, and fathers. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.269)

15:33 [whole verse]: 33 in both the Revised Version and the American correction [of the RV] is inferior to the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:368)

15:34 [whole verse]: 34 is more faithfully given in the Revised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:368)

15:44 [whole verse]: 44, 46 should be compared with 2:14-51, as in the American [correctors of the RV] suggestion after Meyer, would interpret the apostle as saying what is untrue, i.e., that no Christian should die. The Authorised and Revised Versions are right. Alford, Green, Davidson, the Five Clergymen, all reject the change. (Bible Treasury 14:368)

if . . . also . . . spiritual \wedge : εἰ ABCDF, &c., while Text. Rec. omits it with the rest: so also with the place of καί after or before ἐστιν, and further against or for σῶμα before πν. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.275)

if . . . [last half of verse]: The εἰ, omitted by most of the later uncials and cursives, and even the Syrr. vv. as well as the Greek fathers, is attested by the most ancient and best manuscripts, uncial or cursive, the rest of the old versions, and the Latin fathers: only some, by ὁμοσιτέλευτον, have left out the entire latter half of verse 44. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.276)

15:46 [whole verse]: [See note to 1 Cor. 15:44]

15:47 second man \wedge : So \aleph^m BCDEFG, &c., with many ancient versions and fathers. T. Rec. adds ὁ κύριος, "the Lord," with most of the later uncials and cursives, Syrr. Arm. and Goth. It is even said to be a Marcionite corruption in Dial., and by Tertullian. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.276) second man \wedge : [Q. Does the expression, "the Second man is [the Lord] from heaven," necessarily mean descent? That is, is it affirmed of Christ, as now on high, or of Him in incarnation? It is known that "the Lord" is expunged by the best editors. . . . W.]

A. I do not, in reference to the question asked, attach any importance to the presence or absence of κύριος. Griesbach retains it; the more recent editors give it up, with several Uncials and other authorities. As to the question itself, I judge the ἐξ οὐρανοῦ to be more characteristic than relative to any "descent" from heaven, but that character to be drawn from the place He came from: origin is universally used as characteristic. Race and kind are the same word, γενος. Thus the genitive (or really generic) case, and ἐκ, which expresses origin, are in very many (perhaps all) languages used as characteristic, and in force are adjectives. In Hebrew it is well known, as in Greek, in French, English, and other modern languages; so that it may be considered as belonging to the structure of the human mind.

This may be drawn from place or origin, or the material of which anything is composed. It so far differs from an adjective that it is constitutive of character, not the character itself simply. Here we have ἐκ γης χοικος. The former is the constitutive cause, the latter the actual character. But the cause was from origin; so with ἐξ οὐρανοῦ. It is characteristic, but because of the place of origin. He has not ceased to be it now; but what is expressed is not what He is now, because gone to heaven, but His character because of His origin.

It attaches to His person. He is so now, because He cannot be otherwise; because His origin was such, He was so on earth. The full display of this is when He takes the place of the ἐπουρανιος; that gives the fulfilled consequent place, and, from the subject, is more than characteristic, though it be that. I judge, then, that ἐξ οὐρανοῦ is character from origin, or the place the Lord belonged to, as ἐκ γης. Not that He came from, but that He was from, and of, and ever is. The result is, that the first is χοικος, the second ἐπουρανιος. This is on high, the natural, normal, and purposed place of one ἐξ οὐρανοῦ, who is become a man. But still it is character and nature, though the ἐπι suggests a place, I think. Hence, there is for it an abstract consequence of conformity, not a statement of what will happen. As is the χοικος, so the χοικος — as the ἐπουρανιος, so the ἐπουρανιοι. Then the form, not merely character and nature and time, is brought in. It is in the second case future. "As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall bear the image of the heavenly." Thus origin, participation in nature and character abstractedly given, and then actual conformity in glory, are successively, each in its place, introduced. It will be seen that, without much affecting the question, what I have said tends to justify the omission of κύριος. If it be retained, I apprehend it should be read — "the Second man, the Lord, from heaven." Not that I desire to separate "the Lord" from "from heaven," but to preserve the characteristic force of the latter. (Bible Treasury 4:127-128)

15:49 shall bear: If we go alone by manuscripts, &c., we should have here φορέσωμεν, "let us bear," seeing that the great majority of the best authorities is in its favor, not (it is true) the Vatican, and a few cursives with some versions and fathers, while others lay the express emphasis on the hortative form. The context is decisively in favor of the fut. ind. How then is the erratum to be accounted for? By two considerations: first, the proneness, even of the best copies, to confound ο and ω; secondly, the readiness of pious men, who feebly know grace, to turn a promise into an exhortation. The rationalist naturally prefers a reading which puts forward man, so as to hide the glorious power of God in raising the dead into the likeness of the risen Christ. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.278-279)

15:49 shall bear: [See note to Rom. 5:1]

15:50 Now . . . inherit: δέ is the reading of \aleph ABCKLP, all the cursives known, &c., γάρ "for" of DEFG, &c. So the future κλ. is in CDFG, &c., but contrary to the mass and best. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.279)

15:51 we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed: The true text is πάντες μὲν οὐ κ., π. δὲ ἀλλαγῆσόμεθα, as in BEKLP, &c. But \aleph AFG, and many other excellent authorities support the absurd reading, "we shall all sleep, but we shall not all be changed," as Lachmann actually edited not only in 1831, but in 1850. He also read with many MSS ἀναστήσονται for ἐγ. in verse 52, but this makes scarcely a perceptible difference in translation. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.280)

we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed: . . . the singular vacillation here found in the ancient copies and versions. There is no need, perhaps, no ground, for accusing any of failure in good faith; but if not, it is hard to account for the departure from the words and truth given by the Spirit, save by the strangeness of it for those who copied or translated.

Thus the Latins followed the reading extant in the first hand of the Clermont manuscript, but corrected there later, ἀναστήσόμεθα, οὐ πάντες δὲ ἀλλαγῆσόμεθα, omnes quidem resurgemus, sed non omnes immutabimur, “we shall indeed all rise again, but we shall not all be changed,” a double error, directly opposed in each part to positive scripture. . . . Accordingly, without a particle of prejudice against the Vulgate, one may say that it would be difficult to match such a departure from the true text and the truth in general in the worst version that ever was made. Yet human tradition dooms its votaries to the sanction, as authentic scripture, of these gross and grievous errors throughout half Christendom.

But the text of Lachmann the critic, founded on ACFG, and other authorities, is as bad, if not worse, π. [μ.] κοιμηθῆσόμεθα, οὐ π. δὲ ἀλλογ. For here we are taught in no sense the power of life, but of death, in the very chapter which develops resurrection in and of Christ, and in the part of it, above all others, which discloses the secret of victory by and with Christ when He comes for His own then alive on earth. A singular mystery it were, that “we shall all die (or sleep);” seeing that this is the common lot of the race, and in no way the disclosure of the exemption which grace will confer when the Lord Jesus will come and gather us to Himself. We need say no more of the further error which denies the change, after the pattern of Christ’s glorification, to any that are His. Rationalism shares this latter with Romanism; and though they differ as to the former point, the one affirming that “we shall all sleep,” the other that “we shall all rise,” they agree in adopting mistaken readings, which deny the special grace of Christ to His own who are to be found awaiting His descent from heaven, and the special mystery here added to complete the general truth of the chapter. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.282-284)

15:52 shall rise: [see note to 15:51]

15:55 Where, death, [is] thy victory: ^{W^mBCIM}, &c., support this order contrary to Text. Rec., with most. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.280)

death: “Grave” or “Hades,” ^{W³A³LMP} contrary to the oldest. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.280)

death: In 1 Corinthians 15:55 it is twice, “O death,” θάνατε, ^{W³BDEFGI}, some cursives, the more ancient versions save the Syriac and Gothic, several Greek, and all, or almost all, the Latin fathers. Two uncials of the ninth century (KL) with the bulk of cursives support the reading of ἡδῆ. The Alex. before being changed gave ποῦ σου νίκος. (Preaching to the Spirits in Prison, p. 32)

16:3 with letters: But the letters were to be his, not theirs as the Authorised Version says, following the mistake of the Vulgate, Erasmus, Calvin, Beza, and the Text. Rec., which punctuates wrongly in consequence. For what would be the sense of their approving by their letters when the apostle came? The Corinthians really were to select whom they approved, and Paul, on arriving, would send them on, furnished with letters from himself. So too the Greek commentators understood. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.290) with letters: it is surprising that the Revisers support the various old English versions (Wiclif excepted) in verse 3, against the more natural sense which the Greek commentators prefer. His recommending them by letters is the point. (Bible Treasury 13:367)

16:4 suitable: It is common to make the genitive dependent on ἐξίον, “meet,” and to deduce the meaning, “if the occasion, or magnitude of the collection, warrant an apostolic mission in order to carry it.” But such a sense, though grammatically possible, seems to me unworthy, not only of the apostle, but even of the delegates, and only tolerable because men have been lowered by the mendicant habits of Christendom. The truth is that the genitive of design, purpose, or the conclusion to be formed, as here, is a common Hellenistic usage, not unfrequent in classical authors. The Authorised Version is therefore nearer the mark, and much more in unison with the dignity of all concerned, as well as with God’s word and Spirit, which, while cherishing the largest self-denial and generosity, are wont to slight the resources of unbelief, and to brand covetousness as idolatry. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.291)

16:7 for: Not δέ as in Text. Rec. following KL and most cursives, but γάρ in the ^{W³ABCDEFGHIIMP}, many cursives, the best of the ancient versions, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.291)

16:13 ^Λ be: Some manuscripts and versions, &c., prefix καί, “and,” but it is not sustained by the best authorities. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.293)

16:15 Stephanas ^Λ: Some add of “Fortunatus” here, others, “and of Achaicus” also, but the best oppose. It is a gloss. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.294) appointed: The word is ἐταξαν, and means that they set, or appointed, or devoted themselves to the ministry. It is one of the words sometimes translated “ordained.” Let those who have not scrupled to ridicule “self-appointment” weigh this passage, and remember that what they despise, as some carnal Corinthians may have done, the Holy Ghost by the apostle distinctly and unqualifiedly commends. If they will obey God, let them be subject to such. (Bible Treasury N12:375)

16:18 they: οὗτοι ^{W³BCKLP}, and the cursives, &c., in general; αὐτοί ^{ADEFGM}, &c. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.296).

16:22-24 [Jesus Christ] . . . [Christ] . . . [Amen.]: I have given the best authenticated reading; but others add what follows [i.e. “Jesus Christ” after “Lord”, “Christ” after “grace of the Lord Jesus”, and “Amen” at the end of verse 24]. (Notes on 1 Cor., p.297)

16:23 Christ: [See note to 16:22]

16:24 [Amen]: [See note to 16:22]

[Amen]. ^Λ: It is evident from verse 8 that the apostle was in Ephesus when he wrote to Corinth this first epistle. The spurious postscript in the common text, followed in the Authorised Version, says “from Philippi,” but it was really from Ephesus, as in the Vatican and some other copies; and therefore salutations are given from “the assemblies of Asia.” (ver. 19) (Notes on 1 Cor., p.292)

Notes for 2 Corinthians

1:1 Jesus Christ: X. 'I., & B M P, etc. 'I.X., as in Text.Rec., A D E G K L, the mass of cursives, and most ancient versions, &c. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.5)

1:5 the: Text.Rec. on very slight authority omits τοῦ. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.7)

1:6 [whole verse]: Verse 6 is in a varied order in the MSS and edd. Text.Rec. puts καὶ ἡ ἐλπὶς β. ὑπ. ὑμ. at the end, and τῆς ἐν. κ. τ. λ. after σωτηρίας, which seems an unauthorised conjecture. Tisch. follows & A C M, &c., in reading εἶτε δὲ θλ., ὑπὲρ τῆς ὑμῶν π. κ. σ. εἶτε π., ὑπὲρ τ. ὑμ. π. (omitting καὶ σ.) τῆς ἐνεργ. I follow B D F K L, &c., except that B. omits the first καὶ σωτηρίας. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.)

1:8 as to: περὶ & A C D E F G P many cursives, &c., ὑπέρ, Text.Rec. with B and most uncials and cursives. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.9) pass _Λ: ἡμῖν Text.Rec. with most MSS, but the oldest and best authorities do not read "to us." (Notes on 2 Cor., p.9)

1:9 sentence: I see no reason to doubt that not "answer" but "sentence," as Hesychius says, is the true meaning. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.11) sentence: the margin [of the RV] seems better than the text, which seems to betray ignorance of the truth conveyed. (Bible Treasury 13:367) sentence: [The American correctors of the RV, read "sentence," have] a reasonable suggestion. (Bible Treasury 14:368)

1:10 doth [or, will]: ῥύσεται & B C P, &c., with some of the best versions, ῥύεται, Text.Rec. and most others, save A D, &c., which omit either. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.9)

1:11 _Λ thanksgiving . . . us: The Elz. ed. of 1633 without sense inserts τὸ before εὐχ. The MSS and even edd. strangely interchange ἡμῶν and ὑμῶν. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.10)

1:12 holiness: ἀπλότητι is the reading of Text.Rec. with the mass, ἀγιότητι of the oldest. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.10)

holiness: the Revisers are pretty bold in absolutely discarding "simplicity" for the alternative "holiness" without even a marginal note. (Bible Treasury 13:367)

1:13 read: There is much difference as to the force here of ἀναγινώσκετε. Elsewhere in the New Testament the meaning, beyond controversy, is to "read," which very many hold to, like the Authorised translation; others, like Calvin, contend for "well know," which is rarely if ever found save in poets. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.13)

1:14 our: Text.Rec. with most omits ἡμῶν. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.10)

1:15 previously: [The American correctors of the RV, read "first",] is slight enough. (Bible Treasury 14:368) might have . . . favour: χαράν the reading of B L &c., is not entitled to shake the common χάριν. There is more question between the received ἔχητε or σχήτε, which last is supported by & B C &c. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.14)

1:17 purpose: For the vulgar βουλευόμενος, the best MSS, &c., give βουλόμενος. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.14)

1:18 is: ἐγένετο Text.Rec. with later witnesses, but the earlier shew ἔστιν. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.14)

1:20 [whole verse]: [The RV gives] the sense, if not perfectly, far better than the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 13:367)

also by him: καὶ ἐν αὐτῷ Text.Rec. with some later authorities, but διὸ καὶ δι' αὐτοῦ & A B C F, &c. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.14,18)

1:21 us with you: So & A D E F G K L O P, most cursives, and Text.Rec. C, &c., ὑμᾶς σὺν ἡμῖν, B and another the absurdity of ὑμᾶς σὺν ὑμῖν (Notes on 2 Cor., p.19) is God: . . . the emphasis is all the greater, because God is expressed, not objectively, but as a predicate. It is truly surprising, then, that a professed commentator, and a distinguished scholar, should have said that ὁ δὲ βεβ . . . ἡμᾶς is the (prefixed) predicate, and θεός the subject; for this is to reverse all that is certain in the language, and to lose the true force of what is here insisted on. . . Compare chapter 5:5, where a precisely similar construction occurs. . . Had it been ὁ θ. in these cases, the proposition would have been reciprocal, and either might have been viewed as subject or as predicate. But the effect of the absence of the article is to characterize Him who works as is described in each instance. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.19-20)

1:22 who: So & B C^{corr} D E L O, &c., Text.Rec.; F G, &c., καὶ ὁ, but & A C^{mm} K P &c., omit the article. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.19)

1:24 [whole verse]: Authorised and Revised Versions [are] right, the margin of the latter is not the thought. (Bible Treasury 14:368)

2:1 to come again unto you in grief: The true order is πάλιν ἐν λύπῃ πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἐλθεῖν with the best and most MSS. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.24)

2:3 wrote _Λ: There is no ὑμῖν in & A B C^{mm} O P, &c. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.24)

2:3 this very thing: It is not at all clear, to say the least, that the apostle refers in 2:3,4 to the same letter. But in verse 3 he may speak of the present or second, and in verse 4 of the first, which would affect the version. Here [in the RV] the two are identified. (Bible Treasury 13:367)

2:10 [whole verse]: Verse 10 [in the RV] is rendered from a better text than the received. (Bible Treasury 13:367)

2:14 [no paragraph]: 2:14 would be weakened by the separation from the preceding verses. (Bible Treasury 14:368)

leadeth us in triumph: . . . many commentators, Protestant and Catholic alike, pare down and alter the meaning. Among the rest, our own Authorised translation was so affected by this impression, that they rendered θριαμβεύειν, "to cause to triumph," instead of lead in triumph, as they should. The other has been attempted to be sustained by the Hellenistic causative usage of μαθητεύειν, βασιλεύειν, καπηλεύειν, and χορεύειν, even in classical Greek. But the usage of the apostle in Colossians 2:5 is adverse, nor am I aware of a single instance in which it can be proved to be ever thus employed. Besides, it really weakens, if it does not destroy, the beauty of the apostle's image, and makes it to be his triumph rather than God's. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.34)

leadeth us in triumph: "Leadeth us in triumph" in verse 14 is correct (Bible Treasury 13:367)

2:15 to be saved: "in" them that "are being saved" does not agree with "are saved" in 1 Corinthians 15:2 any more than with the truth. (Bible Treasury 13:367) to be saved: 15 may be compared with 1 Cor. 1:18 and Acts 2:47. (Bible Treasury 14:368) [See note to Acts 2:47]

2:16 from . . . from: ἐκ twice (& A B C, &c.), with the genitive. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.32)

2:17 _Λ corrupting [lit. retailing]: Is not "retailing," or "trafficking with" the word, the point in verse 17? "Which" is an error, and rightly dropt in the revision [of 1881]. (Bible Treasury 13:367)

3:1 or: η (not $\epsilon\iota$ as A K L P, &c., which follows) $\mu\eta$ κ B C D E F G, &c. The Auth. V. here rejects Er. Compl. St. Be. for the reading of Colinaeus and the Vulg. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.37)

or Λ from: The second ουστατικῶν added in Text.Rec. following most MSS is rejected by the best witnesses. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.37)

3:2 our: κ half a dozen cursives, and versions too, exhibit the strange blunder of $\eta\mu\omega\upsilon\nu$ for $\eta\mu$. "in your hearts." (Notes on 2 Cor., p.37)

3:3 heart [or, hearts]: καρδίαις "hearts" in apposition with $\pi\lambda.$, "tablets," is read by high authority (κ A B C D E G L P, five and twenty cursives, &c.); the common reading καρδίας "of the heart," by F K, most cursives, and almost all ancient versions, &c. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.37) heart [or, hearts]: [The RV has] a bold adoption of the reading καρδίαις, with the version, "tables that are hearts of flesh." It is to be presumed that the two Bishops [Ellicott and] Wordsworth, Dr. Scrivener, and other sober scholars in the Committee did not tamely give in, without a severe struggle, to what one of them not long ago called a "perfectly absurd reading." Yet that reading externally has the strongest authority. The Five Clergymen adopt the reading of the most ancient copies, but adhere to the Authorised Version, explaining it by "heart-tables of flesh." (Bible Treasury 13:367)

3:6 a: Again occurs the strange version "a" new covenant, through their [the RV] not apprehending the characterising force of the anarthrous construction, to the detriment of the meaning. (Bible Treasury 13:367)

3:7 letter: γράμματα (sing.) B D F G, Pesch., Arm.; γράμματα (plur.) in much the more numerous copies, and versions, and all the fathers. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.42)

came with glory: "Came with glory" is right, only stating that it was so brought in, and contrasted with the ministration of the Spirit (for it should be thus, not "spirit") being, or subsisting in glory. (Bible Treasury 13:367) came with glory . . . shall: A few details may be useful in helping the reader to appreciate the remarkably compressed phraseology of these verses. ἐγενήθη ἐν δόξῃ means that the law was introduced in or with glory, rather than that it existed in glory. The verb is changed when we come to the Spirit and His ministry, subsisting in glory. It is an error, however, to suppose that the future ἔσται is one of time; it is rather of inference. There is no allusion here to the coming glory. The apostle points emphatically to what the Spirit is ministering now. It is hard to express, but important to bear in mind, the abstract nature of the contrast, τὸ καταργούμενον and τὸ μένον, the present participle of character, apart from time, not of actual fact.

Lastly, it is at best oversight to affirm that διὰ δόξης and ἐν δόξῃ present a mere variation of expressions without a difference of meaning. Never does scripture thus change words without a fresh thought and a distinct purpose. ἐν δ. is admirably adapted when connected (not with ἐγενήθη but) with μένον to set forth permanence of glory; διὰ δ. a mere accompanying condition of what was to pass away. Romans 3:30, 5:10 prove difference, not sameness, of force, whatever Winer may say (Moulton's edition, pp. 453, 512), or the commentators misled by such laxity, as Alford, Hodge, &c. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.45-46)

3:8 shall: [See note to 3:7]

Spirit: [See note to 3:7]

3:9 Λ the ministry: $\tau\eta$ δ . κ A C D^m F G, Syrr., &c.; but η δ . most MSS., versions, &c. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.42)

Λ the ministry: 3:9 affords probably an instance of an early correction in the dative for the nominative; but the older copies have it, Lachmann, Tischendorf, and Tregelles adopt it, and the Americans

[correctors of the RV] translate accordingly, putting the ordinary text and version in the margin. (Bible Treasury 14:368)

3:10 not: $\acute{o}\nu$ the best MSS. and versions and Fathers; $\acute{o}\nu\delta\acute{\epsilon}$ Text.Rec. following many cursives, &c. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.42)

3:11 glory. Λ : But a grievous error follows [in the RV] in the very arrangement of the paragraph. The vital thread of connection is cut through by closing one section at the end of verse 11, and beginning a new one at verse 12. Now, whether we do or do not use parenthetical marks, there is one of the apostle's frequent parentheses in this chapter, embracing verses 7-16; so that, for the sense, verse 6 is followed (with a most instructive digression helping on the truth between) by verse 17: "for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life . . . Now the Lord is the spirit." It is not that the Lord is the Spirit, as they print, which tends to confound the Lord Jesus, the spirit underneath the letter in question, with the Holy Ghost. I am convinced that spiritual intelligence of this most instructive scripture, as a whole, is impossible without seizing this; and it is, I submit, equally evident that the Committee cannot have perceived it: else they had not so divided what ought at least to have been left unbroken, if they did not supply the aid of the usual parenthetical signs to help the reader, as they do sometimes, but too sparingly. (Bible Treasury 13:367)

3:14 unlifted [lit. not unveiled], which in Christ: Or, It not being unveiled (that is, revealed) that (or, because) in Christ it is done away. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.47)

3:17 spirit: It is an utter mistake to give "the spirit" in the first clause a capital letter, which would imply the Holy Ghost to be meant; and where would be the sense, where so much as the orthodoxy, of identifying the Lord with the Holy Ghost? (It is not denied that the Spirit is Lord, which seems to be conveyed in verse 18. Still this, if put in the form of a proposition, would be expressed by τὸ πνεῦμα κυρίου ἐστίν and not in the reciprocal form which would exclude the Father and the Son from the same title. The fathers, therefore, who regarded this clause as an assertion of the Holy Ghost's divinity, were as wrong grammatically as exegetically. Neither words nor context can admit of this interpretation.) (Notes on 2 Cor., p.53) spirit: which...word ought to be printed with a small "s," not a capital. Some Bibles have this, I dare say, correctly; but others, like the one in my hand, incorrectly. (Lect. Intro. to Epist. of Paul, p.107) spirit: People often think that if you have "spirit," or any other word in a verse more than once, it must always bear the same meaning. Here this is not the case. "The Lord is that spirit." How should "spirit" be printed? I answer unhesitatingly, with a small "s." "Now the Lord is that spirit." The "Spirit" would be downright heterodoxy. Who would tolerate such a notion as that the Lord Jesus is the Holy Ghost? One can understand how in the "Shepherd of Hermas" (a most offensive little treatise, and really heretical, which in the second or third century used to be read in public worship) there occurs a confusion and worse between the Lord Jesus and the Holy Ghost; but this no where is or can be in Scripture.

The fact is, that the meaning of the verse is connected with what was quoted before. The apostle was contrasting the old covenant with the new, and he says, "the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." Christ, under the letter of the old, quickens; the letter of the old without Christ does not. "Now," says he, "the Lord is the spirit," i.e., of the old. The letter cannot quicken, but the spirit does. It is the Lord that is meant by the Passover, Red Sea, Manna, etc., as also by the burnt, meat, peace, and sin offerings; and so one might go through all the letter of the law. "The Lord is the spirit"; and this is the reason why I should print "spirit" with a small letter, though it is not so in my book. It may be different in your Bibles. But if not, you must remember the copyists were not inspired, any more than the printers, translators, or critical editors. The question is the bearing of the truth of God; and I affirm that the doctrine which confounds the Lord Jesus with the Spirit is not true. Is it not impossible, therefore, to print "spirit" in that verse with a capital "S" consistently with truth? For this would identify the second person of the Trinity with the third, which is wholly untrue.

But the moment you come to the next clause, "Where the Spirit of the Lord is," you must have a capital "S," because the Holy Ghost is meant. (Bible Treasury N8:121)

[there]: ἐκεῖ in Text.Rec. is supported by many MSS., but not κ A B C D, &c. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.55)

3:18 beholding: κατοπτριζόμενοι means neither "reflecting," nor "seeing in a mirror," though this last be etymologically the source, but "beholding," without reference to the mirror, as in so many words which thus cast their primitive shell. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.55)

beholding λ: "as in a glass," is a blundering addition founded on etymology. (Lectures on the Second Coming, p. 329) beholding λ: κ. does not here mean "reflecting" but "beholding," as in Philo's Legis Alleg. iii. 33, ed. Richter p. 154. The etymological notion of a mirror is merged and only hinders the sense in this derived application. The Americans [correctors of the RV] are partially right; as they are quite in discharging the strange marg.⁵ (Bible Treasury 14:368)

[the] Lord [the] Spirit: It is scarcely needful to add, that one rejects the translation of the closing phrase, which pleases Olshausen, De Wette, Meyer, &c., "Lord of the Spirit," as being clearly against the truth of Scripture — a serious fault in a subject of this kind. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.56)

[the] Lord [the] Spirit: The Americans are partially right; as they are quite in discharging the strange marg.¹³ [of the RV, "the Spirit which is the Lord"]. (Bible Treasury 14:368)

4:1 faint: The more ancient MSS. read (some ἐνκ.) ἐγκακοῦμεν the great mass (some old) ἐκκ., and the critics, as well as lexicographers, fancy a difference of reading and word, where there seems but variety in spelling. Thus Dean Alford takes ἐνκ as not "shrinking back," quailing or acting cowardly; while he assigns to ἐκκ. the sense of "fainting." But he is not consistent, for, though he reads ἐγκ in Luke 18:1, he rightly treats it as "fainting;" so also in Galatians 6:9, Ephesians 3:18, 2 Thessalonians 3:14. In Polyb. iv. 19,10 it is properly the same (not ἐξ. but ἐνεκάκησαν), the Lacedaemonians failed to send, not that they behaved badly, &c. They were faint-hearted about it. Liddell and Scott, as well as Rost and Palm, should revise the words, or rather word. I see Bishop Ellicott had been before me in coming to a judgment which I had formed independently. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.57)

4:3 those that perish: 4:3 may be compared with 1 Cor. 1:18 and in particular Acts 2:47. (Bible Treasury 14:368)

4:4 gospel of the glory: Here also it is well to notice that "the glorious gospel," as in the Authorised Version, is not only inadequate, but incorrect. For "the glory" is definitely of Christ exalted to God's right hand. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.61) gospel of the glory: [The RV is] right of course in giving "the gospel of the glory," not "the glorious gospel:" a most unhappy rendering, which leads into all sorts of wrong thoughts, besides missing the truth. (Bible Treasury 13:367) forth λ: αὐτοῖς "unto them," is not an omission, as Dr. Bloomfield says, but rather an addition of the more recent copies, followed by the Text.Rec., against the oldest MSS. and versions and fathers. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.61)

4:5 Jesus Christ as Lord: The MSS. fluctuate between X. 'I. K., supported by the Vatican, some few uncials, and most cursives, versions, &c.; 'I. X. K. as the Sinaitic, Alex., Rescript of Paris, and some other good authorities; K. 'I. X. with some few witnesses; and finally 'I. X. or X. 'I omitting K. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.63)

Jesus': The weight of authority is in favour of διὰ Ἰησοῦν but the Sinaitic and Paris Rescript, &c., read διὰ Ἰησοῦ, as some others have Χριστόν or Χριστοῦ. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.63)

4:6 the God: The Vatican, &c., omit ὁ before θ. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.63)

shine: For λάμψει as in Text.Rec. following most, the oldest read λάμπει (= God that said, Out of darkness light shall shine). (Notes on 2 Cor., p.63) shine: In chapter 4 [of the RV] there are some peculiar changes, especially in verse 6, where they represent the apostle thus: "Seeing it is God that said, Light shall shine out of darkness, who shined," &c. Here they follow Tischendorf's eighth edition against his seventh, or rather κ^m. A B D^m. and a few other witnesses against the great mass of manuscripts, versions, &c. (Bible Treasury 13:367) who . . . God . . . Jesus Christ: Some MSS. (D F G, &c.) omit ὁς as others beside (C D, &c.) for τοῦ θ. have αὐτοῦ. Most give 'I. X., others X. 'I., A B, &c., simply X. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.63) dying [or, putting to death]: [Q. What is meant by νέκρωσιν (translated in the English Bible "dying") here? Is it "deadness" or the state of death, or "killing," or what else? W.]

4:10 the: Many authorities give "our." (Notes on 2 Cor., p.66)

A. Νέκρωσις is stated to have a passive or rather neutral sense as well as active, it is not simply deadness. It is not the state of death, but, where not killing, the act of dying. So putting to death even is used in English: only agency is supposed there. I may say 'his putting to death' was inexcusable, i.e., his being put to death. In Romans 4 it is not simply death, as if Sarah were dead, but the losing the power of life which had taken place. He did not think of Sarah's womb losing its vital powers. In 2 Corinthians 4:10 it is not losing, as in Romans 4, but he realised in the body the applying death to it, as death was Christ's portion. It is not, as to Christ, the Jews' act of crucifying and slaying, which is in mind. Hence killing does not suit, but the fact of the setting aside of life. No English word exactly answers. Dying is looked at as the fruit of something at work; but it is not the working of the instrument which is looked at, but the effect on the person. He held his body down as dead because, as regards Christ in this world, he knew Him as one who had died to it, for whom putting to death was His portion and the source of all blessing. It is the cross applied to the flesh's life. Νέκρωσις is making a corpse of, depriving of life; this ended with his body because it had so been with Christ. So Peter says, Christ having suffered in the flesh, we are to arm ourselves with the same mind. (Bible Treasury 6:368)

λ Jesus λ: Some three uncials, &c. add χριστοῦ "Christ" as Text.Rec. with two uncials and most cursives prefix κυρίου "the Lord," but the best support the text followed here. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.66)

λ Jesus λ: it is "Jesus" all through, not "the Lord," as the received text adds in verse 10. (Bible Treasury 13:367) body: κ, &c., read σώμασιν "bodies." (Notes on 2 Cor., p.67)

4:11 Jesus: C gives χριστοῦ "Christ" instead of "Jesus;" others give both. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.67)

Jesus: [See note to 2 Cor. 4:10]

4:12 λ death: μέν is not read by the best authorities. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.69)

4:13 [also]: καί "also" κ F G, &c. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.69)

4:14 Lord: B, &c. omit κύριον. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.70)

with: $\sigma\upsilon\nu$ 'I. κ^m B C D E F G P, &c., &c., $\delta\iota\alpha$ 'I. a few uncials with most cursives, &c. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.70) with: It is a mistake to use Ephesians 2:6 or Colossians 2, 3:1, to illustrate the critical reading $\sigma\upsilon\nu$ "with" against the more common $\delta\iota\alpha$ "by" or "through." For these epistles, pre-eminently treating of our association with Christ, insist that we are already dead and risen with Christ, whilst our text speaks solely of the future. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.72)

4:18 while: We must not lay unfounded stress on the "while" which introduces the last verse in our tongue. It is not here the expression of time emphatically. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.75)

5:3 [whole verse]: [The RV] rightly adhere[s] to the Authorised Version, rejecting the perversion of Dean Alford and others, as also in verse 7. (Bible Treasury 13:367)

indeed: $\gamma\epsilon$ κ K L P and almost all cursives, and fathers; $\pi\epsilon\rho$ B D E F G, 17, 80, &c. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.76)

indeed: . . . one must reject every attempt to tamper with the conditional rendering of verse 3. The ordinary text $\epsilon\lambda\gamma\epsilon$ (or $\epsilon\lambda\gamma\epsilon$) has excellent support, not only in the vast majority of the manuscripts, but in the antiquity and goodness of some, as the Sinaitic, Rescript of Paris, and others; and this is adhered to by most critics. But Lachmann and Tregelles prefer $\epsilon\lambda\pi\epsilon\rho$ with the Vatican, Cambridge, and a few other authorities. But the alleged distinction (of Hermann's notes on Viger) is unfounded in the New Testament, as elsewhere also. It has been even remarked by one of remarkable penetration that the converse is true, and that the true difference is: $\epsilon\lambda\pi\epsilon\rho$ puts the case that a thing is; $\epsilon\lambda\gamma\epsilon$ the possibility that it is not. Et $\gamma\epsilon$ says J.B. Lightfoot, leaves a loophole for doubt; $\epsilon\lambda\pi\epsilon\rho$ is, if anything, more directly affirmative than $\epsilon\lambda\gamma\epsilon$. Assuredly this seems rather confirmed by their distinctive origin, for as $\pi\epsilon\rho$ is intensive, $\gamma\epsilon$ is restrictive. But the usage appears to indicate that the context must be taken into consideration in order to decide the true bearing. So Meyer and Ellicott confess that it is the sentence, and not the particle, which determines the rectitude of the assumption. It is utterly false that, either in or out of the New Testament, $\epsilon\lambda\gamma\epsilon$ as a matter of course means "since" any more than $\epsilon\lambda\pi\epsilon\rho$ always expresses doubt. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.81) clothed: $\epsilon\kappa\delta$. is the strange error of D^m F G &c., contrary to all the set. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.76) clothed: The various reading $\epsilon\kappa\delta\upsilon\sigma\acute{\alpha}\mu\epsilon\nu\omicron\iota$ "unclothed," in the Clermont, Augian, and Boernerian manuscripts, &c., accepted by many fathers and even by a few critics, is a mere effort to get rid of difficulty. The sense may be plainer, but it is worthless. The true reading $\epsilon\kappa\delta\upsilon\sigma\acute{\alpha}\mu\epsilon\nu\omicron\iota$ is most pertinent and forcible, unless indeed we translate $\epsilon\lambda\gamma\epsilon$ "since," which reduces the clause to a platitude. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.82)

5:4 the: D E F G, &c., with many versions and fathers read $\tau\omicron\upsilon\tau\omega$ "this," contrary to κ B C K L P and the great majority. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.84)

because: $\epsilon\pi\epsilon\iota\delta\acute{\eta}$ St.(not Elz.) with a few juniors. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.84) because: Difficulties have been made about the phrase, which opens the next clause; but it seems rather needlessly, for $\epsilon\phi'$ φ , the true reading, is not uncommon in our apostle, whose use of it quite falls in with its regular application in all correct Greek to express the condition, or occasion, under which a thing or person is characterised, and may be rendered "for," "seeing," "in that," or "because" — qualifying what precedes. Compare Romans 5:12, Philippians 3:12, 4:10, with the clause before us, in all of which may be found a like sense substantially, though modified by a different context. "Wherefore," or "in which," seems as feeble as misleading. The fact is that it is but a special case of its general sense as the ground, condition, or occasion of anything — the term on which a thing is based. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.85)

5:5 wrought: D E F G &c., $\kappa\alpha\tau\epsilon\rho\gamma\alpha\acute{\zeta}\omicron\mu\epsilon\nu\omicron\varsigma$ "worketh." (Notes on 2 Cor., p.84)

gave λ : $\kappa\alpha\acute{\iota}$ is added by some uncials and most cursives, contrary to the best authorities. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.84)

5:7 [whole verse] . . . appearance [or, sight]: The parenthetic verse 7 has given much trouble to scholars, though the general sense is plain enough. But $\epsilon\lambda\delta\omicron\varsigma$ in the New Testament, as in ordinary Greek authors, seems rarely if ever used like $\delta\psi\iota\varsigma$ for sight, but for "appearance" (as in Luke 9:29), or "form" (as in Luke 3:22; John 5:32, as also derivatively in an ethical sense in 1 Thess. 5:22). Every intelligent reader of Plato and Aristotle knows its philosophic bearing as modified by their respective theories. But "species," or "sort," or "form," cannot be meant here. We are shut up therefore by New Testament usage to the alternative "appearance," unless we admit the sense of "sight" with our authorised translators, though its occurrence in this subjective meaning seems doubtful in any author, sacred or profane. The substantial meaning however amounts to the same. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.92-3)

[whole verse]: [See note to 2 Cor. 5:3]

5:9 zealous . . . agreeable: The common version conveys an utterly misleading idea, which if fully received would destroy the gospel; and the more so as $\phi\iota\lambda\omicron\tau\iota\mu\acute{\omicron}\mu\epsilon\theta\alpha$ is rendered "we labour" or "endeavour," and $\epsilon\upsilon\acute{\alpha}\rho\epsilon\sigma\tau\omicron\iota$ "accepted," to the danger of insinuating salvation by works in the most barefaced manner. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.94)

agreeable: The discrepancy which appears in the English version of this text and Ephes. 1:6, does not exist in the Greek: for the latter speaks of the acceptance, in full grace, of the person — the former, of the desire that our service should be acceptable to Christ. "We may be well-pleasing (or acceptable) to Him" would be, I apprehend, more correct in point of doctrine, as well as in point of rendering. (Christian Annotator 4:8) agreeable: Of course they avoid [in the RV] the equivocal language of our version in verse 9. (Bible Treasury 13:367)

5:10 we . . . all: And here I would point out that there is a slight difference in the form but important enough in the sense, which shews that "we all," in the tenth verse of 2 Cor. 5 differs essentially from "we all" in the eighteenth verse of chapter 3. In the third chapter, "We all ($\eta\mu\epsilon\acute{\iota}\varsigma\ \delta\epsilon\ \pi\acute{\alpha}\nu\tau\epsilon\varsigma$), with open face beholding, as in a glass, the glory of the Lord," means all Christians, and Christians exclusively. But in the fifth chapter there is a specific difference ($\tau\omicron\upsilon\varsigma\ \gamma\alpha\rho\ \pi\acute{\alpha}\nu\tau\alpha\varsigma\ \eta\mu\acute{\alpha}\varsigma$) which has not been noticed, as far as I am aware, proving that a larger thought is in the mind of the Holy Ghost, and that while Christians, of course, are included, the expression embraces more than Christians, in fact, all men, without exception. It seems to me there need be no hesitation whatever in affirming this; it is, at any rate, my conviction. It is well known that some have restricted 2 Cor. 5:10 to Christians; but they have overlooked, in my judgment, the comprehensive character of the passage that follows, which they are obliged to pare down and even alter unwarrantably, even then presenting a lame and impotent conclusion and failing to give value to the distinct phrase alluded to, which appears to me expressly calculated, and, indeed, framed to intimate a different truth. For it is not the way of the Spirit of God to vary the language after this manner, unless He have some different sense to convey by it. In 2 Cor. 5 the Greek article, thus inserted, gives all possible breadth — "the whole of us;" whereas in 2 Cor. 3 it is simply "we all." What confirms this is, as was said, the effect produced and stated immediately after in verse 11, which shews that the apostle had more in his mind than believers and their portion. (Lect. on the Second Coming, p.342-3)

5:13 were: The Five Clergymen, like others, argue for “have been beside ourselves,” but while there is a propriety in the aorist as transient, our English idiom seems to require a present here, as in many other cases. The sobriety was continuous. [WK’s exposition gives “are”] (Notes on 2 Cor., p.102)

5:14 if: The mass of authority and of the highest character omits ἐἰ “if,” which Text.Rec. has with ^{κ^{con}} C, &c. Vulg. Cop. and Arm. and many fathers. It seems a mere slip to omit it, because of the εἰς following. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.101)

if . . . then: [Q. The brevity of the remark on the late Bp. Lightfoot’s view of these verses, followed by the Revisers’, may account for my difficulty in apprehending the evidence and argument against it. May I ask for further clearing of the point? F.]

A. Not having the Bp.’s book at hand, I quote the R.V. which conveys his mind! “For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that one died for all, therefore all died; and he died for all, that they which live should no longer live unto themselves, but unto him who for their sakes died and rose again.” Every reflecting believer, I think, must feel that the critical text sounds harsh and inconsequent for want of the ἐἰ (if) of the vulgar text. And every one used to various readings can see that the ἐἰ was peculiarly liable here to be dropt, because of the ι immediately preceding and the εἰς immediately following. But accepting the text preferred, wherein does the consequence lie that, because one died for all, therefore they all died, in the sense of dying with Him to sin, the marked privilege of all Christians? This very assumption misled Dean Alford unconsciously into misrepresenting the apostles, when he says that He died for all, that all should live to Him. But this is to change what the apostle wrote in contrasting “all dead” with “those that live.” “The all” are men universally; “they that live,” are only such as by faith have life in Christ. And this distinction is fundamental and everywhere sustained by the scriptures. The sense therefore is, for “all,” death through sin and their sins, for whom nevertheless Christ died as the witness of love toward them in their sad and sinful state. The judgment of love is not merely this but that He died for all, that they that live by faith in Him, which assuredly “all” do not, should no longer be as once when dead, but live to Him who for them died and was raised. For the Saviour whom the Christian owns is not a mere Jewish Messiah ruling Israel and the nations in righteousness peace and happiness on the earth, but a dead and risen Lord with whom we are associated, rejected by the earth but glorified on high, and we in obedient devotedness sharing His sufferings here and waiting to join Him there. . . .

. . . As these learned men give the sentence, “We thus judge, that one died for all, therefore [illatively] all died,” it stands rather unintelligible, and is refuted by the context that follows. Text and translation, if right, lead to no such result. (Bible Treasury N6:47-48)

if: But there are grave questions in verse 14 [of the RV], where, with the critics, they follow the stream of the most ancient manuscripts, and drop the hypothetical particle represented in the Rescript of Paris and many other copies, with the best versions, and, I think, most early citations. But in my judgment, whatever the reading or translation, the Bishop of Durham is not warranted in saying that a death to sin is meant, but death through sin, to interfere with a revelation so foreign to Christendom. It is not true that all men have died with Christ to their former selves and to sin, so as to be therefore bound to lead a new life — His life. Nor is this said here; but Christ’s dying for all is used as a proof of death in all. There is even a contrast, “they which live,” with all who died; and οἱ ζῶντες means not merely that they were alive, but that they lived spiritually, and of these as distinguished from all who died — of these only is it added that they should no longer live unto themselves, but unto Him who, for their sakes, died and rose again. The dead [or, died]: It is contended, as I am aware, that ἀπέθανον can only mean “died,” and not “are” or “were dead.” But this is an oversight from pressing too technically the aoristic force, so as to clash with English idiom. We may see how harsh it would be to absolutely reduce us to the English preterite by a glance at the same or a kindred word in the case of Jairus’ daughter. Even the most servile of translators gives us Matthew 9:18 as “My daughter is just dead” (ἄρτι ἐτελεύτησεν), though he represents verse 24, “For the maid did not die but is sleeping” (οὐ γὰρ ἀπέθανεν); and Mark 5 as “My daughter is dead” (ver.35), but “The child did not die” (ver.39); and Luke 8, “She did not die.” Is it not evident that the nature of the case modifies the aorist? Although strictly ἀπέθανεν expresses only the fact that one died, still, death being for the present final, it may be used for, as it implies, the condition of death: if one died, one is dead. But where express precision is intended, the perfect appears as in Luke 8:49, “My daughter is dead,” τέθνηκεν. Yet in verses 52,53, it is in both cases ἀπέθανεν. To say here “She did not die,” and “she did die,” is mere pedantry, not good English; and in this connection the Authorised Version more fittingly gives “she is not dead,” and “she was dead.” It is not that the aorist is ever used with impropriety, or confounded with the perfect; but that the fact in Greek is enough, where English gives the state. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.104-105)

“all” who died are all men, who are naturally lost; “they who live” are the saved who are called to live to the dead and risen Christ, and no longer (as once) to themselves. It is true that these died with Christ to sin; but this is the doctrine of Romans 6 and not of 2 Corinthians 5. It is here death through, and not to, sin; and the making it “to sin” introduces the confusion and heterodoxy evident in Dr. Lightfoot’s doctrine. All men have not participated potentially, as he says, in Christ’s death; for this is true only of those who live through faith, in contrast with all who died through sin. I doubt not that all are bought; but only believers have in Him redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of their trespasses. The righteousness of God by faith in Jesus Christ is toward all, and upon all that believe. The gospel is not limited, as some would make it; but it is efficacious, though for faith only, unlike what others say. (Bible Treasury 13:367-368)

5:16 ^Λ if: Text.Rec. adds δέ “but” with the majority, but not ^{κ^{con}} B D, &c. F G, &c., and in καὶ ἐἰ “and if,” as some also add κατὰ σ. κ “as to flesh” at the end of the verse. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.108)

5:17 old: [Q. What is the difference between παλαιός and ἀρχαῖος? and how do they stand in relation to νέος and καινός?]

A. Παλαιός = more “the former,” ἀρχαῖος = “ancient, antique.” You could not say ἀρχαῖος ἄνθρωπος in the sense of παλαιός. Ἀρχαῖος is opposed to νέος but cannot be so absolutely to καινός. But ἀρχαῖος can be neither νέος nor καινός. It may be opposed to both: so may be παλαιός. It is contrasted with καινός, but it is not the νέος — what now begins. In 2 Corinthians 5, ἀρχαῖα are things which have been of old, a long time; we have a new system or creation. So in Matthew 13:52: they are things καινὰ καὶ παλαιά, the old scribe knowledge, and other new things. (Bible Treasury 6:208)

they [or, all things]: Text. Rec. with most adds τὰ πάντα before or after κ., but not ^{κ^{con}} B C D^m F G nor most of the very ancient versions. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.108)

5:18 Christ ^Λ: Text. Rec. adds “Jesus,” with a few uncials and the bulk of the cursives, &c., against the best MSS. and all the ancient versions. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.112)

5:19 Christ ^Λ: the Revisers avoid the error of the Five Clergymen, but the omission of the comma after Christ vitiates their rendering as compared with that of the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 13:368) world: There is no real ground for Bishop Middleton’s remark (Doctrine of the Greek Article, pp.350,351, Rose’s ed. 1845) that κόσμος

here and in Galatians 6:14 is one of those words which partake of the nature of proper names, and so dispense with the article exceptionally in these two instances. The true reason has nothing to do with its emphatic position, and simply is that the word is used characteristically in both, and hence, though we cannot so express it in English, more forcibly than if “the” word in either case were presented as an objective fact. Hence, the critical reading which drops not only δ but $\tau\omega$ in Galatians 6:14 is right. Further, it is not the fact that Plutarch (περὶ Στωικ. ἐναντ.) omits the article with κόσμος for it is inserted in both Reiske’s ed. 1778, x.848, and Wyttenbach’s, Oxon. 1800, v.193. The Bishop’s citation was from an old edition and a bad text. Winer and T. S. Green follow in the same wake, classing κ . with many other words like ἥλιος, γῆ, which may drop the article, as nearly equivalent to proper names. This is as to all defect of analysis. They probably misled Alford and Ellicott, but not Dr. Lightfoot, who evidently sees nothing irregular, and simply remarks that the sentence thus (i.e., by the anarthrous form) gains in terseness. So in our passage the entire clause is intentionally and essentially characteristic, θεὸς ἦν ἐν Χριστῷ κόσμον καταλλάσσων ἐαυτῷ and τῶν would have brought in fact, which is exactly what is not intended, any more than ἦν καταλλάσσων = reconciliavit as Wetstein says. It is the aspect or bearing of His presence in Christ, not an accomplished fact (which is expressed by the aorist part. in verse 18. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.115-116)

5:21 Λ him . . . we might become: γάρ, “for” is added in Text. Rec., with many uncials, most cursives, and several ancient versions; but the weight of authority is against it, as also yet more in favor of γενώμεθα, instead of the present form (γιν.). (Notes on 2 Cor., p.112)

Λ him: The last verse [in the RV] is more energetic without “for,” which some Greek scribes thought proper to insert rather early. (Bible Treasury 13:368)

we might become: The aoristic, not present, subj. is the true form, for “we might become,” as all critics allow following every manuscript of value. Why Scholz and others read γενώμεθα it is hard to say, for every authority he cites is against him. Indeed it would be hard to shew what manuscript reads the present, not even Matthæi or Scrivener citing a single cursive for it. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.121)

we might become: None of the early editors seems to have suspected the reading of the present (γιν.), which besides has not one good known MS. in its favour. If true, it would mean that it is a process going on, contrary to all sound doctrine taught elsewhere. The best witnesses, if not all, have the aorist, which imports an accomplished fact. (Bible Treasury 20:377.)

6:1 together Λ : There is no authority for inserting “with him” as in the italics of the Authorised Version, though supported by many commentators. It is an unscriptural familiarity, if not irreverent. 1 Corinthians 3:9 gives it no real countenance; for the messengers are said to be not fellow-workers with God, but His fellow-workmen, or journeymen together doing His work. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.124-125) together Λ : compare the remarks on 1 Corinthians 3:9 (Bible Treasury 13:368)

6:4 as ministers of God commending: It may be noticed that in this version “as God’s ministers” is placed before the participle, whereas in Greek it follows. The reason is that our idiom does not admit of the order which is correct in the original because of its definite case-ending. The Authorised Version really expresses ὡς θεοῦ διακόνους which is the reading of the Clermont manuscript, and the more extraordinary, because the corresponding Latin is “sicut Di [Dei] ministri.” The Vulgate falls into the error of translating ὡς θ. διάκονοι “sicut Dei ministros.” If the same order were sought in English as in Greek, it would necessitate, I think, the addition of “should;” for there is a difference of sense attaching to the difference of construction, and the apostolic phrase expresses precisely what the context requires. Were it the accusative, διακόνους, the meaning would be commending ourselves as competent to be God’s ministers (In this case the order would also differ, probably by placing ἐαυτούς before σ . so as to give the former more emphasis.), whereas with the nominative διάκονοι, as it is, the force is that in everything we in the capacity of His ministers commend ourselves, &c. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.129-130)

6:11 our: There can be no doubt that this is the word and sense intended. But it is an instructive fact that the two oldest and best uncials unite in a positive and evident error. The Vatican and Sinaitic uncials give your, not “our.” Such facts should correct the exaggerated confidence of some in a few very ancient copies. The context has its grave importance where the external authorities differ. Here there can be no doubt that the mass of other and later authorities is right. The argument requires “our” imperatively, if ever so many voices had pronounced differently. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.137)

6:11-13 [These verses were supplied from the body of WK’s exposition, having been omitted in error, I suppose, from the text at the front of the volume.] (Notes on 2 Cor., p.136,138)

6:13 for the same requital: Here we may notice the strange misconception of the Vulgate, followed as usual by Wiclif and the Rhemish, “eandem remunerationem habentes,” “ye that have the same reward,” “having the same reward.” This inverts the meaning: he wanted the reward in the same kind, not that they had it. Tyndale understood the phrase as “I promyse you lyke rewarde with me as to my children;” and Cranmer follows in the same wake, “I promyse unto you lyke reward, as unto children,” taking the accusative as the complement or direct regimen of the verb. The Geneva Version exhibits another variety, nearer the true sense, “Now I require of you the same recompense,” &c. The Authorised Version seems best, not applying any fresh verb, but taking the accusative absolutely, or rather as in apposition with a cognate accusative supposed in the verb following. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.138)

6:14 Be not diversely yoked: This opening phrase is very compressed, being a kind of pregnant construction, and to be resolved either with Winer as μὴ γίν. ἑτεροζυγ. καὶ οὕτως ὁμοζ. ἀπ., or simply perhaps μὴ γίν. ὁμοζ. ἀπ. καὶ οὕτως ἑτεροζυγ. The sense is plainly a heterogeneous yoke, not another part of it as Grotius, nor a beam with diverse weights as Theophylact. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.140)

6:15 Beliar: The MSS fluctuate as to the form of the word, βελίαλ being the nearest to the Hebrew original, corrupted through Syriac to βελίαρ which is best supported (8 B C P, more than fifty cursives, and other excellent authorities). Some give βελίαν and βελίαβ. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.140)

6:16 ye are: Good witnesses (8 B D L P, &c.), followed by a few eminent critics, read ἡμεῖς . . . ἐσμέν “we are,” for ὑμεῖς . . . ἐστέ with C D^{corr}. E F G K, the mass of cursives, and most of the versions and commentators. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.140)

[the]: compare [the remarks] on chapter 3:16 [of 1 Cor.] (Bible Treasury 13:368)

7:1 [paragraph]: The Revisers are assuredly justified in connecting closely chapter 7 with the preceding chapter, the rest returning to what he had said in chapter 2 (Bible Treasury 13:368)

7:8 [whole verse]: Verses 8-10 are in general far closer [in the RV] than in the Authorised Version, though one may question the taste of “which bringeth no regret,” in verse 10; not, or never to be regretted seems simpler. (Bible Treasury 13:368)

[whole verse]: 7:8,9 is Rinck’s, Lachmann’s, Tischendorf’s, and Green’s punctuation, which the Americans [correctors of the RV] prefer.

It seems harsher in the Greek than in English, as I cannot but agree with Alford. (Bible Treasury 14:368) the: It is not "a" but the letter, clearly referring to the first epistle to the Corinthians. Did our translators wish to conceal this? (Notes on 2 Cor., p.149)

did regret; : Some punctuate thus: "if also I did regret, for I see that that letter grieved you if also for a time, now I rejoice," &c. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.146)

7:9 [whole verse]: [See notes to 2 Cor. 7:8]

7:10 [whole verse]: [See note to 2 Cor. 7:8]

worketh: ἐργάζεται ⁸ B C D E P, &c. κατ- Text.Rec. with ⁸ F G K L, and most cursives, &c. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.146)

7:12 your diligence for us [or, ours for you]: B C E K L P and a great many cursives, &c. Steph. ὑμῶν τ. ὑπ. ἡμῶν; &c. ὑπ. ὑμῶν; G, &c., ἡμῶν τ. ὑπ. ἡμῶν; but Elz. with some cursives, Vulg., Gothic, &c., ἡμῶν τ. ὑμῶν. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.147)

7:13 [whole verse]: Verse 13 is more correct now [in the RV]. (Bible Treasury 13:368)

but: T. Rec. omits δέ which affects the sentence considerably, and also reads ὑμῶν instead of ἡμῶν. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.147)

7:16 rejoice ^Λ: Elz., not Steph., adds οὖν with a few cursives. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.147)

8:2 riches: Text.Rec., with most, reads τὸν πλ., but ⁸ B C P &c., τὸ πλ. as in verse 3, ὑπέρ instead of παρὰ. Krebs seems not to have been aware of this last fact. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.157)

8:3 [whole verse]: In chapter 8, 3 and 4 stand more correctly in the revision [of 1881]; as also verses 7, 12, 19, 21, 24. (Bible Treasury 13:368)

8:4 [whole verse]: [See note to 2 Cor. 8:4]

entreaty ^Λ: (The addition of δεξασθαι ἡμᾶς in Text.Rec. is supported by some cursives and versions, against the great mass of good authority.) . . . It will be noticed that the Authorised Version, following the common Greek text, contains the words, "that we would receive" (δεξασθαι ἡμᾶς), which again involves the insertion of "take upon us" in verse 4. But as the former is not warranted by the best authorities, so the latter is needless and indeed worse; for both additions enfeeble and falsify the sense. (Even so difficulty has been felt because of the absence of the finite verb expressed; but it seems plain enough, as Bengel long ago suggested, that ἔδωκαν which follows in verse 5, is understood in the earliest clause, and this removes all appearance of what has been styled "a sentence entirely shattered in passing through the apostle's mind." But it is no less plain that Bengel was mistaken in supposing that χάριν and κοιν. depend on ἔδωκαν, for they are unequivocally objects of δέόμενοι, which also takes a genitive of the person.) (Notes on 2 Cor., p.157,160)

8:6 as to: I see no need whatever of giving εἰς ὑμᾶς so wide a rendering as Mr. Green's "on reaching you," or even "among you" as is oftener done. It is not for ἐν ὑμῖν but more exact as it stands. No more is there any real ground for translating ἀλλὰ in verse 7 "therefore," as is A.V. "But" introduces a new appeal. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.162)

8:7 [whole verse]: [See note to 2 Cor. 8:4]

but: [See note to 8:6]

from you: Lachmann actually adopts the strange reading of the Vatican MS. supported by other witnesses, ἐξ ἡμῶν ἐν ὑμῖν. Internal evidences would be decisive against this if the external evidence were not as strong as it is. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.157)

8:8 through . . . your: D E read διὰ τὴν &c., that is, on account of. Elzevir differs from Stephens in falsely reading ἡμετέρως "our," with a few cursives, instead of ὑμ. "your." (Notes on 2 Cor., p.157)

8:12 [whole verse]: [See note to 2 Cor. 8:4]

8:19 [whole verse]: [See note to 2 Cor. 8:4]

[himself]: B C D^m F G L many cursives and ancient versions omit αὐτοῦ "himself." (Notes on 2 Cor., p.167)

our: Text.Rec. has ὑμῶν "your," contrary to the oldest and best MSS which read ἡμῶν "our." (Notes on 2 Cor., p.167)

chosen: [see note to Mk. 3:14]

8:21 [whole verse]: [See note to 2 Cor. 8:4]

for we provide: Instead of Text.Rec. προνοούμενοι with later MSS (or better γάρ added as in C. &c.), the best read προνοοῦμεν γάρ, "for we provide." (Notes on 2 Cor., p.167-168)

8:23 messengers: It is well to note how the expression "messengers" (ἀπόστολοι) of assemblies" illustrates the difference of a charge from men however delicate and weighty as compared with a gift or charge from the Lord like an apostle. . . Our Authorised Version, however, is quite right in not rendering the word "apostles" (which is appropriated to the envoys of the Lord in the highest rank of His work) and in preferring "messengers" here and Philippians 2:25, where it is said of Epaphroditus who was the bearer of what the Philippian saints sent at a later day of the apostle in Rome. To translate the passage in our text or in Philippians 2 "apostles" can only be from inconsiderateness, or still worse — the desire to level down the apostles of Christ by levelling up the messenger or messengers of churches. The source of the commission is the measure of their difference. To confound them is to degrade the Lord or to deify the church. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.172-3)

8:24 [whole verse]: [See note to 2 Cor. 8:4]

shew forth: For Text.Rec. ἐνδείξασθε with many old MSS, ἐνδεικνύμενοι is read in B D^m E^m F G &c. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.168) them ^Λ: The καὶ "and" of the Text. Rec. has no adequate authority and encumbers the sense. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.168)

9:2 your: The common T.R. reading ὁ ἐξ ὑμ. is largely supported, but not by the best MSS, &c., and may be taken as "zeal on your part." (Notes on 2 Cor., p.175)

9:4 [whole verse]: there is, if possible, less to note [of improvements in the RV]: verses 4, 10, 13, 14. (Bible Treasury 13:368) confidence ^Λ: T.R., with several uncials and most cursives, &c., adds τῆς καυχήσεως "of boasting." (Notes on 2 Cor., p.175)

9:5 before: προεπηγ. has much the best support, not as in T.R. προκατηγ. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.175)

as: ὥς the best MSS, not ὡς περ as T.R. with a few cursives. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.175)

9:7 hath purposed: T.R. has the present, "purposeth," with most, but the oldest read the perfect. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.175)

9:9 righteousness: There is no need, we may by the way remark, or altering the force of "righteousness" here or elsewhere. It does not mean "benevolence" as the Geneva Version renders it with many a commentator, but comprehends it. (Cf. Matt. 6:1,2.) Righteousness means consistency with relationship; and what can be more consistent than generous remembrance of want in others, especially in the household of faith...? (Notes on 2 Cor., p.179-180) will: (The future appears in the most ancient and best MSS, & B C D P, fifteen cursives, in the old Latin, Vulg. Cop. Arm. Aeth., &c.) . . .

9:10 [whole verse]: [See note to 2 Cor. 9:4]

2 Corinthians Notes

It is not a wish or prayer as in the Authorised Version, nor is it (with the same Version, the Vulgate, Luther, Calvin, &c.) correct to construe χορηγήσαι "minister" or supply (were this the true form) with ἄρτον εἰς βρ. ("bread of your food"). Compare Isaiah 55:10. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.180)

9:13 [whole verse]: [See note to 2 Cor. 9:4]

9:14 [whole verse]: [See note to 2 Cor. 9:4]

10:4 with: mighty "with" God, "before," "according to," or "for," Him. . . . It is the dative which admits of all these shades, of which it is not easy to decide which is best. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.187)

10:7 [whole verse]: the reader can compare [the RV] verses 7, 13, 16, which give the sense better than the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 13:368)

? : The Latins and some of the Greeks took this as an exhortation, not as a question. Others understand it indicatively. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.191) is Λ : Sundry copies as D^{ms} E^{ms} F G, &c., add δοῦλος, "bondman." (Notes on 2 Cor., p.191) of: ἐφ' ἑ. κ B L, &c., ἀφ' ἑ. almost all others with Greek fathers. Lachmann originally inclined to the first, afterwards to the last. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.191)

we Λ : Most cursives with a few uncials support Χριστοῦ, "of Christ," as in the Text.Rec. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.191)

10:8 For even: τε even is omitted by B F G, &c., as καί is by the best MS and most versions. A few also read, "I shall boast." (Notes on 2 Cor., p.191) gave Λ : ἡμῖν "to us" Text.Rec., is not in the oldest copies. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.191)

10:10 saith one: B with the Latin copies give "they say," and so Lachmann, though Tischendorf says that he omits it. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.192)

10:12 [last phrase]: The critics strangely differ, as do the copies, in the last phrase, not only as to form, but as to arrangement. The renderings proposed singularly differ also. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.192)

10:13 [whole verse]: [See note to 2 Cor. 10:7]

things: The singular is in D F G, and in several Latin copies. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.196)

10:14 not: Lachmann strangely follows the Vatican (B), &c., in omitting the first and objective negative, which necessitates an interrogative force: "For do we overstretch," &c. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.196)

10:16 [whole verse]: [See note to 2 Cor. 10:7]

11:1 bear . . . little folly: Steph. with the most and best, ἀνείχ. Elz. ἡνείχ. but, rightly μικρόν τι (for τι Steph.) and ἀφροσύνης (though wrongly τής). (Notes on 2 Cor., p.200)

11:3 [whole verse]: [The RV's] judgment as to the true text of chapter 11:3 seems very questionable; but I do not argue it here, nor specify more. (Bible Treasury 13:368) craft Λ : οὕτω is added by the Text.Rec. with many witnesses, but not κ B D F G P, &c.; καὶ τῆς ἀγνόητος added by κ B F G, &c., and so Lachmann and Alford. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.201)

11:6 manifest [or, manifested it]: φανερῶσαντες κ ^{ms} B F^{ms} G, &c. φανερῶντες κ ^{cor} D^{cor} E H L P, &c. φανερῶθεις D^{ms} &c. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.201)

11:10 stopped: σφραγί the error of a few cursives with Steph.; Elz. has rightly φραγίσεται. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.201)

11:14 wonder: θαῦμα κ B D F G P R, &c. for θανυμιστόν of Text.Rec. supported by most later copies. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.202)

11:23 above measure: Lachmann gives ὑπερεγώ it is hard to say why. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.211)

very abundantly, in prisons very abundantly: Lachmann and Treg. follow B D E. &c. φυλ. περ. ἐν πλ. ὑπ.; Tisch. prefers κ ^{ms} F^{ms} G, &c. πλ. περ. ἐν φυλ. ὑπ. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.211)

very abundantly, in prisons very abundantly: No doubt the comparative occurs both with "labours" and with "prisons," and even Bengel thought the false apostles experienced these like Paul, but less. But it was overlooked that the Greek tongue often uses the comparative without any object of comparison in a merely intensive sense, where we should employ the positive qualified by "very," "rather" or the like, meaning (if we attempted to fill up the ellipsis) "more than usual," or "ordinary," &c.; and the context confirms this as well as the moral bearing. (Winer (Gr. N.T. Gr. iii. §35, Moulton's ed.) seems to deny this, so far as the N.T. is concerned; but hardy assertion is no proof. I do not say that it is ever used for the positive; nor would the superlative suit, but just what is found. Were there only the two comparatives employed, it would be strange to depart from the literal meaning "more abundantly." But as the context stands before and after, and taking account of the moral considerations, as well as the delicate dignity of the apostle, I incline to the version given as preferable.) For μᾶλλον or πλέον would have been more natural to express comparative superiority, while ὑπερβαλλόντως and πολλάκις just afterwards oppose the idea. We see in chapter 10:12 what the apostle felt of comparing, which was their way, not his who was altogether above a habit so far beneath Christ or the Christian. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.214)

11:27 by: Text.Rec. adds ἐν with the later uncials, cursives, Vulg., &c.; but κ ^{ms} B D E F G and Gothic do not read the preposition. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.211)

11:28 pressing care: ἐπίστασις κ B E F G, several cursives, &c.; ἐπισύστασις Text.Rec. supported by most of the later uncials and cursives, apparently also by the Greek and Latin expositors. The more ancient copies give μοι instead of the vulgar μου. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.211) pressing care: There is little doubt that an early confusion crept into the text, and that the true word here is one signifying "urgent attention," as in Acts 24:12 it is rather one signifying "faction" or "tumultuous concourse," though the more ancient copies support the former word (ἐπίστασις not ἐπισύστασις) in both; and they are followed in this by Lachmann, Tischendorf, Alford, and Tregelles. Mr. T.S.Green is one of those who fall into the opposite extreme of reading the latter word in both. It is one of the few instances where Scholz has in my opinion shewn better judgment, reading "concourse" (ἐπισύστασις) in Acts and "pressure of attention" (ἐπίστασις) in the passage before us. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.217)

11:31 The God and Father of the Lord Jesus: Verse 31 has been strangely tampered with by copyists. Thus the Clermont and St. Germain's (now St. Pet.) MSS to ὁ θεὸς add τοῦ Ἰσραήλ. Again they and two other uncials with very many cursives add ἡμῶν to τ. κυρίου, as still more add Χριστοῦ to Ἰησοῦ. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.211-212)

11:32 Damascenes' city: The more ancient copies read π. Δαμ. rather than Δαμ. π. and have no θέλων as in Text.Rec. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.212)

12:1 [first half of verse]: For κ. δὴ οὐ συμφέρει μοι, ἐλ. γάρ T.R. after K M and most cursives, &c.; the more ancient support κ. δεῖ, οὐ σ-ον

μέν, ἐλ. δέ, & D, &c., having κ. δέ and B 213 ἐλ. δὲ καί. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.219)

12:3 without [or, apart from]: B D^m E^m read καρὶς the rest ἐκτός. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.219)

12:6 me \wedge : τ is added by T.R. and Lachmann. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.219)

12:7 there: διό & A B F G, &c. . . . With this goes an extraordinary irregularity in the very expression which it is easier to paraphrase than to translate with any smoothness, if we adopt with some διό "wherefore" after "revelations" and before "that."

This the Revisors deal with ingeniously: "And by reason of the exceeding greatness of the revelations — wherefore, that I should not be exalted overmuch, there was given," &c. Otherwise, accepting the word, Lachmann was driven to make verse 6 a parenthesis, and to connect the first clause of verse 7 with the end of verse 5; and then the new sentence began with διὸ ἵνα μὴ κ. τ. λ. which of course, if all allowed, yields a simple sense. In the text of Tregelles the insertion is beyond measure harsh. Alford brackets the word, and very oddly the last clause also, though repeatedly affirming its propriety for emphasis or solemnity; Tischendorf rejects it. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.225-6)

there: 12:7 is certainly of doubtful acceptance as it stands in the Revised Version and their Greek text where διό seems an unmeaning appendage. Lachmann makes some sense by closing with τῶν ἀποκ. and beginning afresh with διὸ ἵνα μὴ ὑπ. and so Westcott and Hort. Tregelles punctuates in the wildest way, sticking to his oldest copies right or wrong. No wonder that the Americans [correctors to the RV] cannot approve of the text and suggest as they do. (Bible Treasury 14:368)

[last clause]: The last clause is omitted by the best MSS. &^m A D E F G, &c., Vulg. Aeth., &c.; but it can hardly be doubted that it was done in error to correct a supposed repetition, which was meant for emphasis. This is an instructive fact. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.225)

12:9 [my]: μου is added in T.Rec. with many but not the highest authorities. It is implied. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.225)

12:11 foolish \wedge : Text.Rec. adds καυχώμενος on large but inferior authority. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.229)

12:12 by both signs: Good and numerous authorities support Text.Rec. ἐν σ., as some read τε σ., and &^m B, &c., σ. τε. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.229)

12:14 this . . . heavily \wedge : τοῦτο omitted in Text.Rec. with three uncials and most cursives, is attested by & A B F G, many cursives, and most ancient versions, &c., ὕμῶν "on you" being added in Text.Rec. with most but not the oldest. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.232)

12:15 even: The καί is very doubtful, being rejected by &^m B F G, &c., but given in most other authorities. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.232) loving: ἀγαπῶ instead of the participle in &^m A and a few other witnesses. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.232)

12:19 long ago: Text.Rec. has πάλιν supported by the later uncials and most cursives, versions, &c.; πάλαι &^m A B F G and most of the Latins, Vulgate, &c. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.234)

Before: κατέναντι on similar grounds [to those in the previous note on this verse], and rather stronger than the received κατενώπιον. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.234)

12:20 strife: There is the highest, though not the largest, authority for the singular form, which seems to have been assimilated to the words following. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.234)

13:3 \wedge Since . . . (who: it seems strange that the Revisers [of 1881] should fail here also to preserve the force of the scriptures from ruin through vicious punctuation. Verse 3 ought to begin a new sentence, interrupted by a digression which begins with the latter half of that verse and includes also verse 4; and the conclusion or apodosis of the sentence, which answers to the protasis of the first half of verse 3, follows in verse 5. So that if by external marks we are to help readers who easily let slip the connection of thought, it would run thus: — "Since ye seek a proof of Christ speaking in me (who to youward is not weak but is powerful in you; for indeed he was crucified through weakness, yet he liveth by God's power; for we also are weak in him, but we shall live with him through God's power toward you), try your own selves whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves," &c. The arrangement, bad in the Authorised Version, is no better in the Revised; and perhaps this has contributed to the singular misconception which has prevailed as to the passage. How many misuse it to consecrate their inward workings of question and doubt as to God's grace toward them, as if this scripture set them so to work! It is really an irrefragable argumentum ad hominem and a withering rebuke to Corinthian vanity if they had any heart for Christ and His apostle. Since they sought a proof of his apostleship, why not examine themselves? They were their own selves the proof, unless they were reprobate — the last thing they thought. As surely, then, as they were in the faith, he was an apostle — to them without doubt who, through his speaking, had Christ in them. The whole force of this argumentative appeal turns on the assurance of being in the faith to the certainty of his apostleship; and this, generally misunderstood through stops which ruthlessly surrender all the links and ignore the parenthesis essential to be noted, is perverted by unbelief to prove that the apostle calls on the believer to search and see whether he be not an unbeliever after all! The Revisers certainly cannot boast of rescuing the passage from the confusion which here reigns in the Authorised Version, and almost all others. They probably just followed mechanically in the wake of their predecessors; for had they previously understood the reasoning of the apostle or stopped to consider the meaning of the text they were translating, it is hard to see how they could have overlooked the facts, that verse 2 closes the previous subject, and that the new sentence passes from 3 to 5, with an intervening digression. (Bible Treasury 13:368)

you: Any person of intelligence ought to see the impossibility of the sentence ending here, as in the version of 1611. An answer to the "since" or "seeing that" is required, in order to make any tolerable sense. As this is not furnished by the close of ver. 3, nor by ver. 4, we have it really supplied by ver. 5. And this answer is not only simple and satisfactory but full of gracious force and a serious rebuke to their ungrateful and thoughtless vanity. The version of 1881 yields evidence that the Revisers perceived the lameness of the sense afforded by the A.V., but of their own total failure to seize the true connection. For they hang vers. 3 and 4 on to ver. 2, though there is no trace of a link with what goes before to warrant it. Ver. 2 appropriately follows ver. 1, as both do the closing vers. 19-21 of chap. 12. But 13:3 opens a fresh and distinct appeal to the hearts of those who ventured to question his apostleship. . . . The R.V. is purposely cited to show how excellent is the sense, when the erroneous punctuation is corrected, and the true connection is allowed. Otherwise the appeal is robbed of power, and a spurious meaning is suggested, to the injury of souls ever open to man's mistake rather than God's truth. (God's Inspiration of the Holy Scriptures, p.431)

13:4 in: [see note to Eph. 2:1.]

you): [see note to 1 Cor. 13:3]

2 Corinthians Notes

13:7 we pray: εὐχόμεθα ⌘ A B D F G P many cursives and all the ancient versions save the Pesch. Syr. and the Gothic, instead of the sing. εὐχομαι of the Text.Rec. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.244)

13:9 For ^Λ : Text.Rec. adds δέ contrary to the best authorities. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.244)

13:14 all ^Λ : Text.Rec. adds ἀμὴν with most manuscripts (not the most early) and most ancient versions, &c. (Notes on 2 Cor., p.247)

Notes for Galatians

1:4 age: [See note to Mat. 12:32]

1:6 are being removed . . . in . . . different: the present force is properly given [in the RV], "ye are so quickly removing" (not "removed"), and "in" (not "into") the grace of Christ, and of course, "unto a different (not "another") gospel:" a very considerable correction of mere renderings, and long known to be necessary for a single verse. (Bible Treasury 13:377) different . . . another: In our English version it is a sort of paradox — "another gospel, which is not another." But in the language in which the Holy Ghost wrote, there was sufficient copiousness to admit of another shade of language. (Lect. on Gal., p.21)

1:7 another: [The American correctors of the RV] would like Winer's view ["which is nothing else save that"] in the margin. It seems poor. (Bible Treasury 14:379)

but: Or, 'another gospel, which is nothing else than,' &c. (Lect. on Gal., p.iii) [See note to 1:6]

1:8 preach: So also the slight shade of distinction between "should preach" in verse 8 and "preacheth" in verse 9 is due to truth. (Bible Treasury 13:377)

1:9 is preaching: [See note to Gal. 1:8]

1:10 conciliating . . . seeking: 10 has nothing about "seeking" in the first clause, nor "striving" in the second. Acts 12:20 illustrates π. which means in this connection "to gain over" or "make a friend of." (Bible Treasury 14:379)

1:13 [whole verse]: The revision [of 1881] of verse 13 seems more cumbersome and less Pauline than as it stands in the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 13:377)

1:15 God: Or, 'him.' (Lect. on Gal., p.iii)

2:1 after: 2:1 seems too vague in margin 4 [of the RV, "in the course of"]. It was after that lapse of time. (Bible Treasury 14:379)

2:3 [parentheses]: we have to complain of the same defect [of the RV] in catching and conveying the scope, which we saw so conspicuously in 2 Corinthians 3 and 13, reproduced here also in a punctuation which quite destroys the true, and insinuates a false, connection. It is the more striking because the Company shew no disinclination to avail themselves of parenthetical signs for verse 8, to which nobody demurs, though these are less required there than here: they were guided in both by their predecessors, who so marked verse 8 but not verse 3. There is strictly another insertion in verse 6; but there is perhaps less necessity to indicate it, though there be parenthesis within parenthesis. (Bible Treasury 13:377)

2:6 — . . . — : [See note to Gal. 2:3]

2:8 [parentheses]: [See note to Gal. 2:3]

2:11 was self-condemned: Or, 'had been blamed.' (Lect. on Gal., p.v)

2:16 but: [Q. Galatians 2:16. It has been lately asserted on the strength of ἐὰν μὴ in this verse, that, since it is by faith of Him who is the end and fulfilling of the law that men are justified, it involves in itself the full virtue of a legal righteousness. The apostle does not say, as he often does elsewhere, that man is not justified by works but by faith simply; but that he is not justified by works of law "except through faith of Jesus Christ," that faith receiving as its portion not only a clearance from all legal blame, but by imputation the positive merit also of that righteousness of law, which described by Moses, is found only in the man Christ Jesus and with the rest of His personal perfections carried to the account of those who have by grace their redemption and their acceptance equally in Him. . . . Is it true, in short, that this is the natural force of the words ἐὰν μὴ διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ as contrasted with ἐκ πίστεως Χριστοῦ, and that it would be possible to justify the authorised version only on the assumption of a large ellipsis? "Man is not justified by works of law" (and therefore not justified at all), except by faith of Jesus Christ. Does the remainder of the verse, as it stands in the original, appear to forbid this? INQUIRER.]

A. I do not think the smallest doubt can rest on the sense of Galatians 2:16. We have only to read the rest of the verse to make the meaning of the apostle perfectly clear, and more than clear if possible, earnestly contradicting such a sense: ἐκ πίστεως Χριστοῦ καὶ οὐκ ἐξ ἔργων νόμου. That makes his meaning incontrovertible. But he adds, as anxious to insist on the point, διότι ἐξ ἔργων νόμου οὐ δικαιοθήσεται πᾶσα σάρξ. How this can be an explanation that we shall be justified by works of law by the faith of Christ, I am at a loss to understand. But it is a mistake as to the force of εἰ μὴ or εἰ δὲ μὴ. Not that it is not used as "unless" or "except." But its connection with the main idea of the previous phrase, and the opposition to the manner there stated, is common: it is really stronger than ἀλλά, having the force of only, or but only. Compare Romans 14:14, where the δι' αὐτοῦ must be left out, and the unclean, or main idea taken by itself. Only in that case a thing is unclean, and the point is the opposition to the way or manner. It is exactly so here. There κοινός is the common idea, justifying here, δι' αὐτοῦ the special case hypothetically put and denied. Introduce δι' αὐτοῦ into the second member of the sentence and you make nonsense of the whole. And so you do here if we read what follows. So Matthew 12:4. It was not lawful for him to eat nor those with him, but only for the priests. So Luke 4:26, 27, but (or but only) to Sarepta, which was not in Israel: so as to Naaman. There is always the contradiction of or opposition to something in εἰ μὴ. The question is to what? In the first case it is of priests to common Jews; in Luke it is to "in Israel;" in Romans "by nature" or to him who so esteems it; in Galatians law and Christ; and always a common idea too, as in Matthew, lawfulness to eat; in Luke, widows or lepers; in Romans uncleanness; in Galatians, justifying. Hence the common idea is not uncommonly left out, and only εἰ δὲ μὴ put in, and the contradicting matter only stated. Meyer, Ellicott, De Wette, Hammond, Fritzsche on Romans 14:14, all take it as "but," or "but only" in Galatians 2:16. The difference of ἀλλά seems to me to be that there is not necessarily a common point or subject as well as contrast, but simply contrast (not this, but that) with εἰ μὴ there is always a common point about which the contrast takes place. But it is a great mistake to think that it makes the whole antecedent clause the common point, which is what the question would do, so that the clause following it is a condition simply of the whole. You may see the grammatical statements in Klotz's Devarius, Hoogveen or Viger, Bos' Ellipses, and Winer 654, (sec. 66), the rests under εἰ μὴ, and the Commentaries in loco. In both, passages from the classics will be found. The point of the difference of ἀλλά and εἰ μὴ has not been noticed that I am aware of; but I think it will be found just.

There does not seem to me to be the smallest doubt as to the sense of the passage; at any rate, that it means what the question supposes by the grammatical force of the words is a mistake. Passages such as Romans 14:14 demonstrate it, and others too, as Mark 13:32; Rev. 9:4. In 1 Corinthians 7:17 it stands elliptically by itself for "only." Romans 3:27 fully confirms what I have said of the difference of ἀλλά. When the supposed common point is set as to be, and a condition or way of it is negated, what follows εἰ μὴ is exclusive and contradictory of the condition or way. Thus οὐδὲ τις ἄλλος αἷτιος ἀθανάτων εἰ μὴ νεφέληγερέτα Ζεύς. A cause is supposed, ἄλλος negated, εἰ μὴ exclusive and contradictory of ἄλλος; when there is no negative and the case supposed, the εἰ μὴ negatives the supposition and says why.

Μιλτιάδην δὲ τὸν ἐν Μαραθῶνι εἰς τὸ Βάραθρον ἐμβαλεῖν ἐψηφίσαντο, καὶ εἰ μὴ διὰ τὸν πρύτανιν ἐνέπεσεν ἄν. If it had not been for the Prytanis, he would have fallen into it. There are cases where μὴ is left out, and εἰ δέ put with a possible substitution. It answers in the cases of exclusion to 𐤇 𐤏 𐤍 in Hebrew. See Wolff's Curæ in loco. When the whole sentence is negative, the εἰ μὴ becomes a positive affirmation of what follows, as 1 Corinthians 10:13, Mark 8:14, and others. Schütz's Hoogveen gives a pretty full explanation under the words εἰ μὴ. In result, the negation of works, or faith in Christ to the contradiction or exclusion of works of law, is clearly the sense of the passage. (Bible Treasury 9:112)

but: the rendering [in the RV] of verse 16 in the text is really strange, "save" being here most inadequate to convey the strongly oppositive exception conveyed by ἐὰν μὴ. The margin "but only" is much better, for it excludes works of law, whereas "save" admits of them conjointly with faith in Jesus Christ. Now the entire argument, and especially this verse, contradicts any such combination. Justification is not a law-work; it is through faith. We believed on Christ Jesus that we might be justified by faith in Him, and not by law-works, because by law-works shall no flesh be justified. Hence every shade of orthodoxy concurs in giving a stronger opposition to the phrase than the Company convey in their singularly mild version. Law-works are excluded from being put with faith in Christ in order to justification. It is really stronger that ἀλλά, whatever the common point implied besides the contrast. (Bible Treasury 13:377)

Λ law . . . Λ : Here we see, too, how little the Revisers estimated the force of the anarthrous construction. They put in the margin "works of law," and "law," where their text gives "the works of the law," and "the law;" and they do not always mark this, as twice in the latter part of verse 16. It is as opposed to fact as to philological principle that the article was inserted or omitted arbitrarily. Prepositions are no exceptions, though from their nature they suit with peculiar facility the anarthrous usage; but the presence or the absence of the article depends on its general principle. Thus in Romans 3:19 the article is twice required with νόμος, and once with a preposition; in verse 20 it is twice left out just as correctly, and in verse 21 it is once both omitted and inserted with ν., and in each with a preposition; in the last verse of the chapter it is twice anarthrous, and in both the object of verbs. It is bad grammar and perhaps feeble theology to confound νόμον with τὸν ν. The apostle generalises, though no doubt "the" law falls under the expressly characteristic term. So it is often in Romans, as in Galatians and elsewhere; but there is not the least backwardness or laxity in giving the article with this word or any other where its presence is really wanted. The indefinite article of our tongue would be quite improper in all or most of these cases; nor does English idiom forbid the exact representation of its anarthrous usage in at least very many instances like these cited, and Galatians 2:19, 21, 3:2, 5. — Verses 10-13 are valuable in confirming the refutation of the too prevalent fallacy, where we have the broad principle in its characteristic and therefore anarthrous form, and then the article for the particular matter of fact; see again the principle in verse 11, and the fact in verses 12, 13. If the Company had understood the true force of the anarthrous usage, they never would in my opinion have agreed to consign to the margin what ought to have been unhesitatingly set out in the text. (Bible Treasury 13:377) works of Λ law: The margin (2) [of the RV, "works of law"], is better than the text [of the RV] or the softer American [correctors of the RV] view. (Bible Treasury 14:379)

2:19 to law: [Q. The received version of Galatians 2:19 is "to the law;" but it is argued, it should be by the law; the law denounces death.]

How the writer can take νόμῳ in Galatians 2:19, as "by the law," is hard to conceive; because it is preceded by διὰ νόμον, meaning 'by the law,' which makes it simply impossible. (Bible Treasury 6:144)

2:20 [whole verse]: 20 stands cumbrously if even correctly in the Revised Version. It would be better if only a comma displaced; "and yet;" which applies to the Americans [correctors of the RV] as well. (Bible Treasury 14:379)

3:1 you Λ : The expression, "that ye should not obey the truth," is one brought in from chapter 5:7. "Ye did run well; who did hinder you that ye should not obey the truth?" There it is most undeniably and properly inserted, but here it is left out in the best copies of the epistle. I am not founding anything upon it, but merely state the fact by the way, because it is right to do so on fitting occasions. One main form of this meddling with Scripture consisted in transplanting a text, or phrase, that is perfectly true in its right place, from some other part of Scripture. (Lect. on Gal., p.55-56)

you Λ . . . among you: [The RV has] rightly struck out the addition (from the end of chap. 5:7), though it has no little ancient support in manuscripts, versions, and Fathers, also at the end of the verse. (Bible Treasury 13:377)

3:12 he: it is rightly "he" (not "the man") (Bible Treasury 13:377)

3:14 unto: "upon" in verse 14 goes beyond εἰς (unto). It is not Paul, but his translators and commentators who fail in the force of the preposition. (Bible Treasury 13:377)

3:17 God Λ : the gloss "unto Christ" rightly vanishes [in the RV]. (Bible Treasury 13:377)

3:20 the: the article is no doubt generic; but why should we not say "the" Mediator, though we only speak of one descriptive of the class? Perhaps in this particular instance it was desirable to avoid the equivocation of mere previous mention, which is not at all the reason of its insertion here. (Bible Treasury 13:377)

not Λ : it seems to me that the italic insertion here [in the RV] is needless, and rather enfeebles the apostle's idea that it "is not of one" (that is, it supposes at least two parties, whilst God is one), promising and accomplishing Himself. (Bible Treasury 13:377)

3:22 hath shut up: 22 is one of the very many cases where the Revisers forsake their judgment as to the aorist without reason. (Bible Treasury 14:379)

3:23 the: In 23 is an instance that they forgot that personification gives the article in Greek, but not in English. The Americans [correctors of the RV] have noticed the inconsistency; (Bible Treasury 14:379)

3:24 hath been: [The American correctors of the RV] correct γέγονεν in 24 from "hath been" to "is become". (Bible Treasury 14:379)

Λ unto: [Q. — Is the A.V. [and Revised] "to bring us unto Christ" a correct translation? or does the text mean "until" or "up to" Christ? W.D.]

A. — The Geneva V. by the English refugees (1557) seems to have suggested first, in our tongue at least, the words printed in italics. Cranmer's Bible in 1539 gave merely the literal "unto"; but in sense equivalent to "until." So ἕως is sometimes added to lend strength or precision; sometimes is used alone, as are ἄχρι and μέχρι, as more definite, though each has its own propriety. "Unto," "for," or "up to" appears safest, though the temporal meaning is often legitimate, whether an epoch or point as "until" or a period as "for." But it is even more frequently used ethically for aim, state or effect, and result, as the case may require. So it means here: certainly not "in" Christ, as Wiclif and the Rhemish following the error of the Vulgate: εἰς never really has such a force. Nor is it correct to confound the "child-guide" with the "school-master" or teacher. Even 1 Cor. 4:15 uses the word disparagingly, though the apostle be not contrasting the law as in Gal. 3 with the promise and the gospel. Severe dealing is implied in both, not parental love. (Bible Treasury 19:380)

^Λ unto: Nor is there any need of inserting "to bring us" in verse 24, where "up to," or "unto," is better than "until," as expressive of the object in view, and not of a temporal limit only. (Bible Treasury 13:377)

3:26 sons ^Λ . . . by faith in Christ Jesus: The only error in the A.V. is in "the children," where all agree it should be "sons," of God. Thus "W.M. Do you read the passage in Galatians 'Ye are all the sons of God in Christ Jesus by faith?' F.E.R. I do." This seems drawn from the R.V. which by its strange punctuation comes to the same sense, or from an English scholar who followed two or three Germans, and, being himself learned, had great weight with the Revisers in misleading them too often. But learning carries none safely through Scripture. The present instance is a distortion of the sentence, and the issue a truly unnatural abortion. No scholar would so twist a classic. Where is there anything in the N.T. to warrant "sons" any more than "children" in Christ Jesus? Either would be out of harmony with God's word. It is due to sonship on the brain of one who has no title to pose as the least authority on such a question, despising here as elsewhere an honoured servant of God who really had the fullest claim to respect. (Bible Treasury N4:12-13) sons: [See note to John 1:12.]

faith ^Λ : Nor does the severance of "faith" from "in Christ Jesus," here [in the RV] insinuated by the punctuation, seem warranted. (Bible Treasury 13:377) faith ^Λ : [The American correctors of the RV] do not notice the strange punctuation of 26, due, I presume, less or more to the Bishop of Durham's influence. I do not admit that the context points to any such severance between "faith" and "Christ Jesus." (Bible Treasury 14:379)

3:28 is: [The RV translates] ἐνι by the more forcible "there can be," (Bible Treasury 13:378)

one ^Λ : Our being one in Christ Jesus follows in verse 28; but here [in Gal 3:26] it is not one in Christ, nor Abraham's seed, that is being urged, but that the Galatian saints were God's sons through faith in Christ Jesus. Drs. Alford and Ellicott were right, not the Bishop of Durham. (Bible Treasury 13:377-378)

3:29 ^Λ heirs: [The RV] omit[s] the copulative (Bible Treasury 13:378)

4:7 ^Λ but: the critical reading which rests on superior authority is adopted [in the RV], for the comma softening down the sense in Text. Rec. and the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 13:378)

4:12 Be . . . [am] . . . ye ^Λ : "Become" is well for "be" and "am become," for "am"; but the great oversight in the Revised Version is in the last word; for if we are to supply, it should be "were," not "are." They had been Gentiles without law; and Paul maintains freedom from law by Christ dead and risen as the normal condition of the Christian, not getting under law after faith in Christ like the Galatians actually. No supply might be best. (Bible Treasury 14:379)

ye ^Λ : do the Revisers really understand the import of verse 12? The apostle exhorts the Galatians to be as he is, free from law, "for I [am] as ye." To say "as ye are" seems to spoil the thought, for at that time they were affecting the law, and from this he is earnestly dissuading them. They did him no wrong in affirming that he taught or practised freedom from the law in virtue of Christ's death; for such is the doctrine and the life of the Christian, as Romans, Galatians, and Colossians clearly prove. (Bible Treasury 13:378)

4:13 in: Are the Revisers justified in treating δι' ἀσθενειαν as "because of infirmity"? No one, of course, questions that διὰ with the accusative ordinarily means "on account of;" but the question is, whether this narrow view which yields so strange a sense be here intended, when in poetry at least such a form was notoriously used to express a state in which one might be. The Greek fathers saw no difficulty in thus interpreting the Pauline phrase, and never thought of confounding it with the phrase in Thuc. vi. 102; and it appears to me that Nicias would have startled his audience beyond measure if he had said δι' ἀσθενειαν ἔσωσα τὸν κύκλον, in the sense of "on account of an infirmity I saved, &c." though he might very simply be left behind on that account. (Bible Treasury 13:378)

4:16 by being truthful: [The American correctors of the RV read "by telling you" which] is well enough. (Bible Treasury 14:379)

4:18 to be zealous: [The RV] seems hazardous, and little agreeing with the context, though one can readily admit the difficulty of the passive form, which some believe to be a true middle. But the passive sense makes sad havoc in the verse and its connection. (Bible Treasury 13:378)

you.: a dash would be better after "you," and before "my children;" for the Revisers have put, not a comma, but a period between the verses. (Bible Treasury 14:379)

4:19 children: [See note to John 13:33.]

4:26 ^Λ mother: It is not "the mystery" which is here [Gen. 21:1-7] foreshewn, but the new covenant; it is the mother, and not the bride. (It may be noticed here that the error in question gave rise to the spurious reading πάντων at the end of Gal. 4:26, and to the no less unfounded misinterpretation of "Israel of God" in Gal. 6:16, as if the phrase meant all the saints, though two classes are here distinguished.) (Bible Treasury N2:225)

^Λ mother: The word "all" has been added to this verse. The true text ends with "us," and obviously the sense is fuller and better without it. "All" was added, probably, by those who thought to strengthen the connexion of all the children of God; whereas the inspired writer particularly refers to those that had been Jews. (Lect. on Gal., p.114)

5:1 [whole verse]: Chapter 5:1 is an entangled question as to text and translation: whether the Revisers were wise in giving us so awkward a result seems doubtful. (Bible Treasury 13:378)

with which: 5:1 is a perplexing question of text. If ἦ be read, the Authorised Version is substantially right; if omitted by the Revisers, and the οὖν read after στ., their version is (I think) correct, rather than marginal 4 [of the RV, "For freedom"]. (Bible Treasury 14:379)

5:10 as to: Is the rendering [of the RV] of verse 10 English? "I have confidence to your word in the Lord" — confidence to, or toward a person! Who ever heard of such language save among youths whose mother-tongue got spoiled by Greek idiom? On the other hand the "in" of the Authorised Version goes beyond εἰς, which in this connection should be translated "as to." (Bible Treasury 13:378)

5:12 even cut themselves off: Or, 'were even cut off.' (Lect. on Gal., p.ix)

cut themselves off: The suggestion [of the American correctors of the RV, "go beyond circumcision,"] on 12 is too vague for the text, even if the sense. (Bible Treasury 14:379)

5:17 that ye should not: This, I believe, is what the Holy Ghost wrote and meant. What we have in our version is, as many of us have long known, positively wrong. I wish not to pass it over, nor to bring it in by an underhand way: but wherever there is anything plainly mischievous in this version, which is but a human one, it is a christian duty to call attention to it; and the more so, as I am always ready to maintain its general excellence and to defend the common Bible we have got against adversaries who would do it dishonour. But it is not a friend's part to justify a real mistake that may have slipped in through human infirmity, or worse.

Here, then is one of the most serious mistakes, practically. When I insist upon this, it is not a matter that I admit to be open to a question, or that there should be any doubt about. No person acquainted at all intimately with the language in which the Holy Ghost wrote, could hesitate, save through the effect of strong prejudice. I would also observe, that the best men — the ablest scholars, who perhaps differ from my own views as to much I deem important — nay, persons who are dignitaries in the very church which had the principal hand in the production of this version, — admit candidly and with one consent, that the version I have just given is the true one. There is no doubt of it on the minds of persons of the most opposite ways of thinking on other matters, as to what is the true meaning of this verse. (Lect. on Gal., p.141) that ye should not: May we say, if it be needed by any one that has read our writings, that we seriously object to the error expressed in the Authorised Version of Gal. 5:17, last clause? It is untrue and unholy. We are responsible never to sin, and the Spirit is in us to give adequate power to prevent it. Verse 16 contradicts the rendering of 17: the Revised Version is right. The Authorised Version here naturally means an excuse for sinning, one of the consequences of non-deliverance from law, the other on the opposite side being the presumptuous thought of perfection attainable here below, into one or other of which all are apt to fall who know not the gospel by faith. From Tyndale the English versions were bad. The more do I regret that Mr. Green and the Bishop of Durham differ from Bishop Ellicott and Dean Alford in saying that ἵνα here seems to denote simply the result. Any sense here but purpose is as opposed to the context as to truth and holiness. (Bible Treasury 14:334) that ye should not: It is ἵνα, not ὅπως, and the sense "in order that," &c., just the contrary of the A.V., which confounds the case with Romans 7, and might act as an Antinomian excuse for sins. (Bible Treasury 12:45) that ye should not: Will the Christian Observer stand to the error of the English versions since Tyndale? Will the writer be bold enough to deny that ἵνα μὴ ἔσθω θέλητε, ταῦτα ποιῆτε means "that ye may not do" (not, "so that ye cannot do," which is bad doctrine as well as false translation)? Real scholars, like Bishop Ellicott and Dean Alford, or indeed any others of any land you please, will unhesitatingly condemn the two organs of the Evangelicals. Will it be contended that the Spirit of God sanctions the false reading, the false version, or the narrow-minded spite which disclosed its astonishing ignorance in refusing and calumniating a correction because it emanated from "the Brethren?" (Bible Treasury 6:158) [See also Bible Treasury N8:119]

5:20 parties: [see note to Acts 24:14]

parties: should be compared with 1 Cor. 11:19. (Bible Treasury 14:379)

6:1 in: does not mean surprised "by," but taken or detected "in." (Bible Treasury 14:379)

6:10 as: Nor does "since" suit 10 like "as." (Bible Treasury 14:379)

6:11 [whole verse]: [The RV shows] the correct rendering of verse 11 (Bible Treasury 13:378)

large letters I have written: In 11 it is the epistolary aorist, which in our idiom means "I write." The Revisers are right in saying "with how large letters," γράμμασιν. Had Paul meant to say "how long, or large, a letter," as in the Authorised Version, &c., the proper Greek would be γράμματα. And π. well expresses the length of the letters, not of the letter, which is by no means long. (Bible Treasury 14:379) written: in large uncouth letters he wrote the entire Epistle. (Contrast with the aorist here the present in 2 Thess. 3:17). (God's Inspiration p. 442-443)

6:14 world . . . world: [See note on 2 Cor. 5:19.]

6:17 the Lord: [The RV shows] the omission of "the Lord" (Bible Treasury 13:378)

Notes for Ephesians

1:1 ^Λ faithful: the common class is obscured [in the RV] by putting in “the” before “faithful,” like Dean Alford, though less than in the Authorised Version, reproduced by Bishop Ellicott. Mr. Green is more accurate. (Bible Treasury 13:378)

1:5 adoption ^Λ: [See note to John 1:12.]

1:7 ^Λ redemption: I do not think that τὴν ἀπολ. in verse 7 is rightly rendered “our” redemption, though do doubt it is ours. The article simply designates redemption as a distinct object which we have in Christ, like παρρ. in chapter 3:12 where the Revisers do not say “our,” and this properly. (Bible Treasury 13:378)

1:10 to sum up: It is almost needless to say that these set times are not yet completed, and that Christ has not yet all things in the heavens and on the earth headed up in Him, and that the church is not yet reigning joint-heir with Him. The translation, which has been supposed to involve one, and which to be consistent ought to involve all, of these consequences is a mistake. “That for the dispensation of the fulness of seasons, He hath headed up for Himself all things in Christ,” is a version founded upon a misconception of the force of the aorist infinitive being abstract. ἀνακεφαλαιώσασθαι is as capable of referring to the future as to the past. You cannot gather the time of actual occurrence from that word in itself. It seems that the Authorised Version gives the sense here correctly. The purpose of God was, “that He might gather,” or “to gather together” etc. The object was not to express the time of the gathering; and this is so true, that usually the aorist infinitive is expressed in Latin and English by the present. Moreover, as here, the infinitive of the aorist is often employed, where we might have expected that of the future, because the action is considered in itself as concluded; and its future occurrence is sufficiently indicated by the governing verb, and the context generally. Besides this, the infinitive aorist is generally used if the principal verb be in that tense. (Bible Treasury N2:247)

1:11 obtained an inheritance: It is an instructive proof how little the most eminent critical ability avails for the N.T., that Lachmann edited ἐκλήθημεν (ADEFG) in Eph. 1:11, where spiritual intelligence is certain that it must be ἐκληρώθημεν, the added truth of our heirship. The Vulgate had similarly erred though qualifying it by “sorte,” as also the Peschito and Harcl. Syrr.; Memph. &c. in the reading of “chosen” which belongs to the calling, not to the inheritance. (Bible Treasury N3:70, Epist. of Peter p. 19-20) obtained an inheritance: is not the version of verse 11 distinctly for the worse as compared with the Authorised Version? It is exactly one of the marked points of contrast between the faithful now and Israel of old, that these are designated the inheritance of Jehovah, those are styled God's heirs and Christ's joint-heirs. Hence the force of ἐκληρώθημεν is that we were allotted our inheritance, not “made a heritage,” the καὶ adding this to our being called. For there are two main parts in the blessing: our calling, and also our inheritance, which embraces the universe as put under Christ (cf. verse 10), given as Head over all things to the church which is His body. The church is in God's grace and purpose the heavenly Eve of the Last Adam, to possess all things, not merely the things on the earth like the first man, but the things in the heavens. Here accordingly it will be noticed that the apostle speaks not of the glory of God's grace (ver. 6), nor of the riches of His grace (ver. 7), but of His glory (vers. 12, 14). He looks not at present privilege, but onward to the redemption of the purchased possession which will be then, as distinguished from the redemption we have now through His blood, the forgiveness of our offences. There is no doubt that God purchased the church with the blood of Christ, and that the believers from among the Jews are now reckoned a people of possession, or peculiarly His own, as indeed are all saints; but this does not at all decide the true force of the purchased possession here, which is really the inherited universe when His glory dawns. There is no need for introducing the italic supplement “God's” here or elsewhere. (Bible Treasury 13:378)

1:15 the love: Next we have [in the RV] an instance of what seems nothing less than hardihood in the Company, due probably to scholastic influence overriding all right spiritual feeling: a too common fault in the Revised New Testament. Three of the primary copies with later uncials, also a single cursive, and a few Fathers, omit ἀγαπήν τήν: an omission obviously accounted for by one of the most frequent causes of various readings, homœoteleuton. The omission, to my mind, gives us no sense; and this has positively passed muster as the collective judgment of the Company! “For this cause I also, having heard of the faith in the Lord Jesus which is among you, and which ye shew toward all the saints.” Of course they say in the margin that many ancient authorities insert “the love;” but what temerity in adopting for their text what Lachmann alone (now followed by Westcott and Hort), never hindered by the least apprehension of divine truth, ventured to endorse! No doubt Bishops Ellicott and Wordsworth, and Drs. Brown and Scrivener, and one would hope others, protested, but were outvoted. Tischendorf and Tregelles were daring, especially after the Sinaitic MS gave sometimes its voice in accordance with the occasionally wild readings of the Vatican copy; but even they, in spite of their tendencies, here withstood this idolatry of ancient documents to the destruction of truth. Love “toward all the saints” (Col. 1:4) should have guarded against such an error in their thoughts of Ephesians 1:15, though each scripture has its peculiar form. (Bible Treasury 13:378-379)

the love that [ye have]: The suggestion [of the American correctors of the RV, “the love which ye shew”] is right. (Bible Treasury 14:379)

1:23 which: Or, ‘the which’ (though this is rather antiquated), ‘inasmuch as it,’ ἥτις, not ἡ, i.e., character, not fact. Comp. chap. 3:13, 6:19, and 6:2. (Lect. on Eph., p. iv)

2:1 in: [Is there sufficient ground for the assertion that, in these passages, the dative case is mistranslated, that being often used (as every Greek scholar knows), for the instrument or means whereby a thing is done or comes to pass? Should it not be (Eph. 2:1) “by trespasses and sins” (or in consequence of “having no life” in us)? There seems some incongruity in speaking of walking in the sins wherein they were dead. Moreover it is worthy of note, that the same apostle speaking of spiritual corruption (Colossians 3:5,7), says, “in the which ye also walked sometime when ye lived in them,” and it is difficult to suppose, that he used life in sin, and death in sin, to express precisely the same thing. Turning to Romans 6:2, should it not be, “dead by sin”? If sin is such a dreadful thing as to have exposed us all to the punishment of death — from which Christ's death alone frees us — how can we think of continuing in it any longer? In chapter 5:12, we have “death by sin,” and in verse 17, “By one man's offence.” Why then in Romans 6:2 is “to” to be employed in rendering the same dative case? The apostle has shown what we have incurred by sin, and then immediately he is made to say, “How shall we who are dead to sin?” which has no force in connection with his previous reasoning. In regard to Romans 6:10,11, how can Christ be said to be dead unto sin? but if it should be “dead by sin” — by reason of man's sin, the sense is plain, “in that he liveth, he liveth by God,” “by the power of God.” (2 Cor. 13:4). . . .

The value of these queries may not at first be very obvious; but these passages have an importance in a controversy not needful to mention here; and we cannot be too anxious to endeavour to ascertain the correct text of the word of God. T. D.]

Ephesians Notes

As regards Romans 6, the wished-for translation is the result of a misconception of the whole passage. It makes it a motive drawn from a previous evil result and no more; whereas it is perfectly certain that the passage contemplates our dying in becoming Christians, not by our sins. Those who have been baptized unto Christ have been baptized unto His death. We have been made one plant with Him in the likeness of His death; and this in order that we might walk in newness of life. Hence it is perfectly certain that the doctrine of the chapter is dying out of our old man, and living in newness of life — not our dying by our sins so as to be afraid of living in it now. And such is the whole tenor of the chapter; “our old man had been crucified with him;” and the use too of the dative at the close. . . .

2 Corinthians 13:4 is ἐκ δυνάμεως. I suppose he only quotes this for the sense. Living in sin, and being dead in it, is not the same thing. One is the continuity of the old man in sin, the other is his state in respect of God; but both are true. Alienated from the life of God. A reference to Colossians shews, in the analogous passage, νεκρούς . . . ἐν τοῖς παραπτώμασι καὶ τῇ ἀκροβυστίᾳ. Now ἐν can be used as an instrument or power too. But I think no intelligent Christian could doubt what it means here; and I do not see how it is possible with ἀκροβυστίᾳ to take it in any other sense than ‘in.’ Besides, νεκρούς would not be the word. It signifies properly ‘corpse.’ It is not dying as a punishment for them, but a state in which they were. Then God creates again. They are viewed not as dying by or for their sins. It is not ἀπεθάνετε, but being νεκρούς He has quickened. The first work in the corpse is quickening with Christ, God’s act. In Romans and Colossians, being alive in sin, ye have died (ἀπεθάνετε) in Christ. In Ephesians, being νεκροί, we have been quickened with Him. It is a new creation. It does not seem to me there can be the smallest doubt of what is the right translation. (Bible Treasury 6:144)

2:2 age: [See note to Mat. 12:32]

authority: It is really “authority” rather than “power”; and “powers” would appear to be erroneous. (Bible Treasury 14:380)

2:17 peace: [The RV is] right in adopting . . . εἰρήνην (verse 17), omitted in Text. Rec. (Bible Treasury 13:379)

2:18 ^Λ access: I had hesitated whether I should not, with several translators say ‘our’ access (and so bis in 3:12 and in 3:17). But it appears to me that our possessive is too strong an expression of the Greek article here; and that the force, in one case at least, is rather technical. (Lect. on Eph., p. v)

2:19 ye are [2nd]: [The RV is] right in adopting ἔστε (Bible Treasury 13:379)

2:21 all the: [Are we compelled either to adopt the R.T. insertion of ἡ (with A,C,P, &c.) or to admit the later Greek usage and translate πᾶσα οἰκ. “the whole” or “all the building?”]

The context shews that it means the whole building. The criticism is difficult. I am disposed to leave out ἡ. (κ has it as a correction. Chrys. in text); but I think πᾶσα ἡ οἰκοδομή would not do, as it would be then built, and that the force is as a whole, all the building. Compare Acts 2:36; Ezekiel 16:2. Moral words have not the article; in them ‘every’ and ‘the whole’ run into one another, as “all righteousness,” every thing so characterised. This is quite general: so used of δύναμις. We get all Israel as an army where it is Israel as a whole, not those of it; and where a thing which may be composed of many parts but is viewed as a whole, not as one, the article is not added. Often ‘every’ is tantamount. This is practically the case with πᾶσα γραφὴ θεόπνευστος where ‘all’ is as good as ‘every,’ or better. πᾶς ὁ Ἰσραὴλ is one object, πᾶς Ἰσραὴλ Israel as a whole. In Ephesians 2 the church as a building is viewed as a whole (not yet ναὸς ἁγίος, it is growing to that); it is a building going on, the building grows as a whole. The following verse gives the particular present habitation in which the Gentiles συνοικοδομοῦνται. (Bible Treasury 10:15-16)

all the: Against . . . [the RV’s] dropping the article, though sustained by κ^{corr}. A C P many cursives, &c., in verse 21, I have anything save objection; but their version, as so often in such cases, is in no way justified, though it might seem so on a first glance at the anarthrous form. But πᾶσα ἡ οἰκ. would imply that the building was complete, in contradiction to the express teaching of the clause that it is only in process — “groweth into a holy temple in the Lord.” So the Revisers themselves render πᾶς οἶκος Ἰσραὴλ in Acts 2:36, though they give “every house” in the margin. This they might have done here with less opposition to God’s word generally; for “each several building” is irreconcilable with what is everywhere else insisted on. There is no such thought in scripture as ecclesiastical independency, but intercommunion. It may not be here the church as one, but as a whole, not every part. (Cf. the revision of Mat. 3:15; Eph. 1:1; and many like cases.) (Bible Treasury 13:379)

all the: The article seems necessarily wanting in v. 21, though excellent old MSS. insert it; but according to correct usage as the building is not complete, it could not be there. Yet this does not warrant “each several,” as in the RV. For though as the ordinary rule πᾶσα without the article requires “every,” there are known exceptions, as “all Jerusalem” (Mat. 2:3), “all the house of Israel” (Acts 2:36), “all Israel” (Rom. 11:26). It is not a proper name that really accounts for this; a whole viewed in its parts excludes the article, yet means “all.” The mistranslation is therefore not only superficial, but directly upsets the unity of the building on which the apostle here insists as everywhere else. (God’s Inspiration p. 447-448)

2:22 an: [See note to 1 Cor. 3:16.]

3:3 briefly: [See note to Acts 26:28]

3:7 the: was there any real need to say “that” grace of God [in the RV]? (Bible Treasury 13:379)

3:9 administration . . . things ^Λ: Of course, in verse 9 it is “dispensation” not “fellowship” as in Text. Rec. and Authorised Version, and “by Jesus Christ” disappears. (Bible Treasury 13:379)

3:12 ^Λ boldness . . . ^Λ access: [See note on 2:18]

^Λ boldness: [See note to Eph. 1:7]

3:13 [you] not to faint: The American [correctors of the RV] suggestion, which we find in the Syriac and elsewhere, seems as unworthy of the truth and general context as unsupported by the surrounding words. (Bible Treasury 14:380)

3:14 of our Lord Jesus Christ: [The RV appears] to be justified in rejecting “of our Lord Jesus Christ,” (Bible Treasury 13:379) of our Lord Jesus Christ: an addition favored by many MSS., Vv., etc. (God’s Inspiration p. 450)

3:15 every: Further, the true sense is “every family” in verse 14, not “the whole,” so that the argument tells in the opposite direction. No one doubts about all being in the kingdom by Him, or in heaven; but all this is distinct from the relationship of Christ’s body as scripture teaches it. The “learned theologian,” who says that saints and angels make but one family, cannot have weighed the Greek here, or the Bible throughout its invariable testimony. St. Paul says “family;” but he has πᾶσα πατρία, every family, leaving room for many, certainly not one only. (Bible Treasury 9:270) every: [πᾶσα πατρία, every family. It is evident that the above words require to be so rendered, πᾶσα being here distributive rather than collective. By this change we lose a very beautiful idea (at least as far as this text goes), that, namely, of one universal family in heaven and earth; but doubtless the true rendering may suggest other views equally valuable and good to the use of edifying. Probably some of your many contributors may be prepared to furnish an able criticism on the entire passage. It will be found replete with precious meaning. E.H. Haskins] (Christian Annotator 1:295)

I humbly think that it is wrong to speak of what we lose by giving up a wrong translation for a right one; and it is confessed that “every family” is here required. Sure I am that the true rendering suggests not merely views equally valuable, but much more so than the false one, which has really confused and prejudiced the minds of Christians against that which otherwise might have been apprehended and enjoyed. I do not doubt that the phrase embraces the sum of God’s intelligent creation, at least what is blest, whether in the heavens or on earth, angelic or human. (Bible Witness & Review 1:288, Christian Annotator 2:365)

every: [The RV appears to be justified] in saying (not all the, but) “every family.” (Bible Treasury 13:379)

3:17 ^Λ faith: [See note on 2:18]

[last part of verse]: [The RV does] not seem right in verse 18, which should be “being rooted and grounded in love in order that ye,” &c. This adds to the clearness of the truth, if it be not absolutely needful. (Bible Treasury 13:379)

3:18 that ye: [See note to Eph. 3:17]

3:21 ^Λ in: External authority is confessedly strong for the insertion of καί before ἐν X. ‘I. in verse 21; but one does not wonder that Ellicott, Green and Wordsworth rejected, and that Alford hesitated to accept it even in the face of ^Λ A B C and other witnesses. (Bible Treasury 13:379)

4:3 using diligence: “Endeavoring” fails to give the real force of the word employed by the Spirit of God. The word “endeavor” in the ordinary language of the day is habitually applied to that which men essay or seek after, even if they have not a hope of accomplishing. They feel that they may fail, but at any rate they try or “endeavor” to do this or that. Such is not the meaning of the word here, but rather zeal in heeding and carrying out what is already true, giving diligence . . . This, however, shows that not mere effort to attain, but earnestness to maintain, is the exhortation intended. (Bible Treasury 14:140)

4:6 [us, or, you]: most editors, like many copyists, have lost the finely drawn truth by a misapplied love of uniformity. It is exceedingly hard to suppose the insertion of ἡμῖν (not ὑμῖν as in Text. Rec. and Auth. Ver.) unless it were really of God. Man would be prone to remove it even in the early days, as we find it wanting in ^Λ A B C O^{corr} P and not a few cursives, &c. But the mass of testimony in MSS uncial and cursive, Versions and Fathers, favors “us all.” And so beyond cavil does the internal requirement. For as the apostle had traced vital or intrinsic unity in verse 4, and external unity in verse 5, he closes with the unity of the God and Father of all, universally supreme and permeating, and withal most intimate for “us all,” but this limited to us all (them who believe). No blunderer, still less a forger, could have hit on a shade of truth so unexpected beforehand, yet so momentous and happy when expressed. If people had introduced a gloss, they would have extended the pronoun to all three. (Bible Treasury 13:379)

4:8 captivity: Some have gone so far as to suppose an active force in the word αἰχμαλωσία. But there is no need to go beyond the ordinary usage, and the Hebraistic emphasis. That they had been captors before being thus emphatically led captive is no doubt true; but it is not expressed in the phrase itself, which simply but intensely expresses the completeness with which they were vanquished. . . . Possibly the marginal alternative of “a multitude of captives” captivates persons of an imaginative turn of mind, who are under the delusion that such alternatives are more faithful than the text. Here it appears that it is not mere “multitude” which is the point, but the completeness of His victory over the enemy. Yet in any case there was a multitude. (Bible Treasury N2:335)

4:16 [the]: “due” measure seems hardly allowable [in the RV] (Bible Treasury 13:379)

4:22-24 should put . . . be renewed . . . put: Or, ‘in Jesus — your having put off . . . and being renewed . . . and having put on,’ &c. (Lect. on Eph., p. viii) should put . . . put: Some suppose that the truth in Jesus is, “that ye have put off, as concerns your former conversation, the old man . . . and have put on the new man,” &c. (Ver. 22-24). So Dr. Eadie and Mr. Peile, whose rendering seems to me quite consistent with the context, notwithstanding the depreciatory notice of Alford and Ellicott. Mr. Darby takes the version and connection to be, that the truth in Jesus is not exactly “that ye should,” nor “that ye have,” but “your having put off,” &c. I have not, however, altered the rendering and the comment, which remain here as before. The reader can judge for himself. (Lect. on Eph., p.223-4) should put: Do not verses 22, 23 set forth truth in the person of Jesus? “Your putting (or having put) away,” &c. (Compare Col. 3:9,10) For the Christian it is a fact already accomplished in the Saviour, of which faith lays hold; as mysticism always strains after it in man’s own feelings. (Bible Treasury 13:379)

4:23 be renewed: [See note to Eph. 4:22]

4:24 put: [See note to Eph. 4:22]

4:28 him that stealeth: It is not exactly “him that stole,” but “the stealer.” “Thief” would be too strong; and “he that stole” is too weak. The apostle was led to choose a term so large as to take in every shade of such dishonesty. (Lect. on Eph., p.230)

4:30 by: what is the meaning, verse 30 [of the RV], of “the Holy Spirit of God, in whom ye were sealed”? &c. The sealing was in His power, or in virtue of Him. (Bible Treasury 13:379)

4:32 in Christ: The reader will notice that there is a departure from the Authorized Version of verse 32. It is done advisedly. Why King James’ translators deserted the Greek, followed by Wycliffe, Coverdale, and even the Rhemish, it is hard to say, especially as Beza, who often influenced them, is here accurate. The erroneous rendering obscures the very grace of God which is set before us as our spring and pattern, and tends to countenance the error that Christ was the procuring cause of His love, instead of being the blessed and infinite channel of its communication to us, the only possible means in which even His love could holily and justly avail for us. (Lect. on Eph., p.239)

4:32 [last part of verse]: The Revisers rightly say in verse 32, “even as God also in Christ forgave you.” (Bible Treasury 13:379)

5:1 imitators: [The RV] correctly say[s] “imitators” of God (Bible Treasury 13:379)

5:4 becoming: [The RV] correctly say[s] . . . “befitting” for the obsolete synonym “convenient.” (Bible Treasury 13:379)

5:5 ye are aware of, knowing: [The RV] read[s] ἵστε (not ἐστε) λ. (Bible Treasury 13:379)

5:9 light: [The RV] read[s] . . . the fruit of “light” in verse 9, so agreeable to the context. (Bible Treasury 13:379)

5:13 ^Λ all . . . ^Λ reproved: Here the Auth. Version is doubly wrong. To justify it, there should be no article with πάντα, and there ought to be one with ἐλεγχόμενα. I have done the best I could (though the result is poor) to represent the text. (Lect. on Eph., p. x)

Ephesians Notes

[last part of verse]: whether their view [in the RV] of the end of verse 13 is sound may be doubted. (Bible Treasury 13:379)

5:18 drunk . . . dissoluteness: Two words in this verse have been subjected to no little violence. First, it is said that μεθύσκεθε means drenched rather than “drunk;” secondly, that ἀσωτία means danger, not “excess.” Now, it is certain that in the New Testament the regular word for drunkenness is μέθη, for drunkard μέθυσος, for making drunk μεθύσκω, and for getting drunk μεθύω, or, what is equivalent, the preceding word in Mid. as in our text. That μεθύει in 1 Cor. 11:21, means “plentifully fed,” is the mistaken notion of Mr. Ewing in his N.T. Lexicon. But πεινᾶ compels us to no such violence. Our own version faithfully represents the original, and makes good sense, in spite of the strictures of Archdeacon Jeffreys. The Septuagint translation of Ps. 36:8 is not parallel, because wine is not in question, and the expression is certainly figurative. The Vulgate also has the same — “Inebriabunter ab ubertate domus tuae.” Here, on the contrary, it is a question of literal eating and drinking. All admit that μ. may metaphorically mean “soaked,” “steeped,” as in oil or water. Hence it may also be transferred from the effect of wine to that of passion. But all this does not in the least weaken the proper meaning of the word. Accordingly, even in 1 Cor. 11:21, we have the same idea given in the versions of Wiclif(1380), Tyndale(1534), Cranmer(1539), Geneva(1557), Rheims(1582), and the authorized(1611). It is the same sense in John 2:10, save in the Bible of Wiclif, who has “fulfilled.” The ruler evidently did know the good wine from the bad: he is merely describing the custom of substituting a worse wine when men could not discern the difference. That is, the context favours the common rendering. — Next, that ἀσωτία in the New Testament, means “excess,” “prodigality,” “dissoluteness,” is manifest. It has just the same force in classic Greek. He who has read Aristotle’s Eth. Nicom. may remember the sentence (ii.7) — περὶ δὲ δόσιν χρημάτων καὶ λήψιν, μεσοτῆς μὲν ἐλευθεριότης, ὑπερβολὴ δὲ καὶ ἄλλειψις, ἀσωτία καὶ ἀνελευθερία. Not danger but waste is the thought. So in Rhet. ii., where it is contrasted with φειδῶ. This may justify our translators; though “riotousness,” as given in the Rhemish, accords well with their own version of Tit. 1:6, 1 Peter 4:4, and of a kindred word in Luke 15:13. Wiclif translated the last clause “wherein is lechery.” But to say that he understood the evil to be a property of the wine, is as unwarrantable as to say that our translators meant “the excess” to be in the first drop. Just apply this notion to 1 Tim. 5:23, and we should have the Spirit of God advising Timothy to use a little “danger,” or “excess,” or even worse, for his stomach’s sake. Their absurdity is not the worst thing about these pseudo-criticisms. It is evident, I think that ἀσωτία refers to μεθ. οἶνω, not to one only, but both. (“The Use and Abuse of Wine,” Pamphlets, p.283-4)

5:20 God and Father: compare note on 1 Corinthians 15:24 (Bible Treasury 13:379)

5:21 Christ: “Christ” is right in verse 21 (Bible Treasury 13:379)

5:22 [submit yourselves]: Some excellent authorities read, “Let the wives be subject to their” &c. Others do not express the verb. (Lect. on Eph., p. x)

5:26 sanctify it, having cleansed: The English Version might, and no doubt does confuse, by putting it as “sanctify and cleanse.” The cleansing or purifying by the washing of water by the word is the way by which Christ sanctifies the church. The object here is to state the work in itself, not to distinguish the initiatory setting apart from the progressive work. (“Sanctification,” Pamphlets, p.157)

washing: It is not true, as Alford says, that the word translated “washing” means “laver” or “bath” (which would be λουτήρ), but “bathing,” and hence the water used, not the vessel which contained it, ἐν β. characterising it as effected by the word, and not ritual or ceremonial as in Judaism. (Bible Treasury 12:240) washing: [Q. Ephesians 5:26. Is it true that the laver, and not “the washing,” of water is here intended? Is it correct to say that we must not join ἐν ῥήματι (“in the word”) with τῷ λουτρῷ nor with τοῦ ὕδατος, because the former would require τῷ ἐν ῥήματι, and the latter τοῦ ἐν ῥήματι? that therefore the connection is with ἀγ. or rather with καθαρίσας? A.]

A. The great general lexicographers, from H. Stephens to Liddell and Scott, give not only “laver” but “bath,” and hence washing and even water for bathing or washing. See the amplest proof in classic Greek given by Passow, Rost, Palm, &c. So Schleusner, Wahl, and Rose’s “Parkhurst,” among those devoted to the Greek New Testament. Indeed the LXX use in general a different word (λουτήρ) for a laver, and λουτρὸν for washing, as in Cant. 4:2; 6:6. So the Apocryphal Sir. or Ecclesiastic 31:30 (Ed. Tisch., 1850, Vol. ii., p. 195.) Further, λουτρὸν was used for the bath as a place for washing, λουτρον or λουτριον for the water rendered impure by bathing. See Scapula, Hederic, &c. Hence the English version is thoroughly justified, instead of its being “a meaning the word never has.” It is generally, says Pape, cleansing, washing away of filth, abwaschen, abspülen. It may take, as a secondary meaning, the bath itself, as the word “bath” does in English. But it means applying the water, not the vessel. It is used often by the fathers for baptism, but even there in the same sense (ὡς ἐκπλυσίν, says Gregory Nazianzen). Indeed so far from being or alluding to a vessel, it is not likely a vessel was ever used in scriptural times. At any rate, Dean Alford’s statement is quite unfounded. Titus 3 refers to baptism, but to washing, not to a font. He says, See Lexx.; but the Lexx. give bath, water for washing or bathing, the act of washing, and even drink-offerings. It is not the bath properly as a place, but the bathing; and hence we have λουτρὰ θερμὰ and ψυχρά, λουτρὰ ὕδατοιο, and λουτρὰ φαινόμενα ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, κ. τ. λ. So the λουτροφόρος used to bring the water, not the bath as a vessel.

Next, while it may be right to connect ἐν β. with the verb or the participle we must necessarily connect τῷ λ. τοῦ ὕδατος too, and ἐν β. becomes characteristic of the cleansing by the washing of the water. Thus this is the instrument of cleansing, and its true character is ῥήμα. Neither of the constructions said to be required in this case is called for in the least degree. Τῷ ἐν β. would be utterly out of place; τοῦ ἐν β. would be nonsense; but ἐν β. as it stands by itself is just what is wanted as a characteristic explanation (like ἐν πνεύματι, chap. 2:22, and many such cases). But τῷ ἐν β. (if it be Greek, which is doubtful) would point to a specific agent that would make the bath. If the meaning were “purified by the bath of water by the word,” the Greek would be διὰ τοῦ β. or τῷ β. But ἐν β. is unequivocally the character of the thing spoken of as a whole. Τῷ λ. is the dative of the instrument; by the washing of the water they were purified: what was its character? It was ῥήμα, or rather ἐν β.

Again, this use of ἐν is quite common on all subjects. (Matt. 12:28; Luke 1:41,77) It characterizes. The reasoning on Ephesians 5:26 would connect the last case with δοῦναι, and turn the passage into folly. See Luke 4:32; 8:43; 21:23. It is simply to characterize the state. The article is no way needed, but rather its absence. So Romans 8:3; 13:8; 1 Corinthians 15:43. In fact it would be endless to cite cases of the sort. It is the regular characteristic style. Prepositions are Middleton’s weak point. He followed Hellenism ably, but not the mental bearing of words. Nouns answer to “what?” as ὁ answers to “who?” (or “which”)? The article is indicative of an individual or individuals. Hence, prepositions or not, it makes no difference really. The absence of the article marks the nature or character of a thing; as here ἐν ῥήματι characterizes.

Compare John 15:3 for the doctrine. Both Ellicott and Alford are wrong in regarding sanctification as exclusively a progressive thing after initiation. It is so used, but even more frequently for the first setting apart to God. Here it appears to be used for the thing itself, and not distinctively either first or progressive. The apostle may allude to baptism (or, as is alleged, though very doubtful, to a sponsal bath). But he takes care to shew that it is the word that purifies, καθάριας ἐν τῷ λουτρῷ τοῦ ὕδατος ἐν ῥήματι being one sentence, which explains how the sanctification is effected. Christ, having loved the Church and given Himself for it, made it His, and does the other two things: He sanctifies it, and then presents it to Himself, being God as well as Second man. Its sanctification is by the purifying power of the word applied by the Holy Ghost.

Hence the 'washing of water by [the] word' is right; and ἐν ῥ. characterizes the whole statement, being no more connected with καθάριας or ἁγ. than with τῷ λ. or τοῦ ὕδατος. It would not be ἐν ῥ. if it were specifically connected with either. (Bible Treasury 7:176) washing: The word employed is not "laver," (which in fact never occurs in the N.T. but often of course in the Greek Version of the O.T.), but "bath water," and hence "washing." The absence of the Greek article with the qualifying term ἐν ῥήματι is strictly correct, though English like most other tongues cannot dispense with it, as thereby it makes the word to characterise the washing. Nor could any instrument but God's word applied by the Spirit effect that purifying process all through. (Bible Treasury 20:320) washing . . . in: the more correct "washing" stands in the text of the Revisers as in the Authorised Version. Only they say "with" for "by" the word, which is regrettable perhaps. (Bible Treasury 13:379)

5:29 Christ: it is "Christ," not "the Lord," as in the Authorised Version, followed by Text. Rec. (Bible Treasury 13:379)

5:30 of his flesh, and of his bones: [The RV] leave[s] out the latter half in Text. Rec., as in the Authorised Version also. (Bible Treasury 13:379)

5:32 mystery: Yet what is the result of this unnatural rendering? "This is a great sacrament; but I speak in Christ and in the church:" a transcript of Jerome's Vulgate, and a gross travesty of the divine mind in the inspired Greek. Even Cardinal Cajetan and Dr. Estius expose the error. It is false in both substance and form, but serves, as error well suits, to sanction a sacrament of purely human invention. (Exp. of Titus and Philemon, p. 32)

6:5 [whole verse]: [See the RV] for a change of order (Bible Treasury 13:379)

6:9 [whole verse]: [See the RV] for a necessary correction of the Text. Rec. and of the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 13:379)

the master both of them and of you: literally "the Master of both them and you." To warrant the suggestion [of the American correctors of the RV], the Greek might have been ὁ καὶ αὐτ. καὶ ὑμ. κ. (Bible Treasury 14:380)

6:12 heavenly: Anybody who intelligently reads the Greek Testament will know, and even those who can enquire of those who do will hear it confirmed, that the expression ἐπουρανίους means not merely "high" but "heavenly" places. No matter where you examine elsewhere, it invariably means "heavenly places"; and, in point of fact, it never does bear the sense of "high" simply, nor do I believe it to be possible. Any man who knows the language will hardly deny that "high places" is a slip or an evasion. I suppose our translators did not know what to make of the passage. They may have supposed that it would sound strange to hear of wicked spirits in "heavenly places," and so they thought to tone it down or to obscure it a little, and so put in "high places."

However this may have been, it is far from my wish to fasten any unworthy motives on them. They have erred occasionally, but were, many if not all, excellent men and able scholars, and I believe did their work with fidelity, though with a certain measure of hindrance, especially on the part of the king. We know he was superstitious on some points, and would not allow them to alter ecclesiastical terms which notoriously foster much misconception and prejudice. I do not mean to insinuate that James I. had anything to do with the mistake alluded to in Eph. 6, nor does it particularly matter who it was that suggested or kept it up; but the fact is certain, that we are said by the Holy Spirit to battle "with spiritual wickedness in heavenly places," as Israel with blood and flesh (that is, their Canaanite enemies). (Bible Treasury N9:269) heavenly: The term "high places" is an error of the translators, which falsifies the sense. It has led persons to oppose the higher authorities, for instance it led the Roundheads to oppose the government of their day. Such an interpretation is as false as the translation. The rendering and the doctrine are both wrong. The doctrine of the New Testament is that we have to do with the most serious fight that ever can be carried on by man here below; we have to combat Satan, not only to hold our own, but to hold the Lord's own against all the power of the enemy. But in no case is the Christian to wage carnal warfare, only against Satan. (Bible Treasury N10:222) heavenly: The rendering of verse 12 [in the RV] is also much better, "high" places being unequivocally wrong. (Bible Treasury 13:379)

6:21 what I do: Or, 'how I fare.' (Lect. on Eph., p. xii)

6:24 incorruption: The last verse ends rightly with "in uncorruptness," or incorruption. "Sincerity" is misleading. (Bible Treasury 13:379)

Notes for Philippians

1:1 bishops: King James' translators left in 'bishops', instead of adopting 'overseers' as in Acts 20:28. The cases are exactly parallel; as indeed a similar constitution prevailed wherever the apostles visited and supplied full order. The modern 'minister' of dissent is as unknown as the traditional 'diocesan'. (Exp. of Acts, p. 308)

1:5 with: Chapter 1:5 is more correctly translated "in furtherance of," not "in" (εἰς), the gospel (Bible Treasury 13:379)

1:10 that are excellent: Or, "prove the things that differ." (Lect. on Phil. and Col., p.1) against: the same preposition [εἰς] should be "for" (Rev. Ver. "unto"), not "till" (Auth. Ver.) the day of Christ (Bible Treasury 13:379)

1:13 in the whole of the praetorium and to all the rest: instead of "in all the palace, and in all other places," the Revisers prefer "throughout the whole praetorian guard and to all the rest." (Bible Treasury 13:379)

1:15 [whole verse]: The interference with the true order of verses 15-17, to give a more mechanical exactitude, is rectified [in the RV], whereas as originally written it is more forcible. (Bible Treasury 13:379)

1:16 [whole verse]: [See note to Phil. 1:15]

these, indeed, out of love: 1:16, 17. The suggestions [of the American correctors of the RV] seem uncalled for, as already implied in the text. (Bible Treasury 14:380)

1:17 [whole verse]: [See note to Phil. 1:15]

these out of contention: [See note to Phil. 1:16]

1:21 to live [is] Christ, and to die gain: [A famous man says,] "I, on the other hand, make Christ the subject of discourse in both clauses, so that He is declared to be gain to him both in life and in death; for it is customary with the Greeks to leave the word pros to be understood. Besides that this meaning is less forced, it also corresponds better with the foregoing statement, and contains more complete doctrine. He declares that it is indifferent to him whether he lives or dies, because, having Christ, he reckons both to be gain." So Calvin, followed by Beza, who adds that "Christ" is the subject of both members and "gain" the predicate, and that the ellipse of kata is not only tolerable but an Atticism! The reader may rest assured that a more vicious and violent rendering has rarely been offered. The truth is that "to live" is the subject, "Christ" the predicate of the first proposition; "to die" is the subject, "gain" the predicate of the second, as in the authorized version. (So the Vulgate rendering, "Mihi enim vivere Christus est, et mori lucrum," is correct, whereas that of Beza is as false as his comment ("Mihi enim est Christus et in vita et in morte lucrum").) The real force is lost by this strange dislocation of the French reformers, and the true connection is broken. (Lect. on Phil. and Col., p.24-25, Bible Treasury 5:251)

1:22 [whole verse]: 22 seems to me as ill-rendered by the Americans [correctors of the RV] as by the Revisers. Living and dying were before the apostle — to live, Christ; and to die, gain. But if to live in the flesh [were his], this, he says, is to me worth while, or fruit of work to reap; and what I shall choose, I know not [or cannot tell, for γν. may mean either]. The "if" of the Revisers and [the Americans] seems quite out of place from not separating the last clause, whether we omit marginal 5 or not. To regard καὶ as introducing the apodosis appears only to embarrass. The Bishop of Durham confesses how doubtful that construction is here, and how awkwardly the sentence runs even if admissable. (Bible Treasury 14:380) worth while: But verse 22 seems ill-represented [in the RV]. Does not καρπὸς ἔργου = operae pretium, worth while? Thus the connection would run: If to live in the flesh (fall to me), this (is) to me worth the while; and what I shall choose I know not, whereas not only does the arrangement of the Revisers seem cumbrous, but the result is unsatisfactory. "But if to live in the flesh — if this is the fruit of my work, then what I shall choose I know not." What does this mean, if the sentence would bear so awkward and violent a construction? Even the literal sense given in the margin appears far preferable, "this is the fruit of my work," or this is to me fruit of my work. It gives me opportunity for longer labour and its yield in the Lord's harvest. (Bible Treasury 13:379-380)

1:27 with: Nor are the Company [of Revisers of 1881] happy in their rendering of the last words in verse 27, where they miss the apostle's animated identification of the saints with the faith of the gospel, personified as the agent engaged in conflict. Striving "with," that is, in concert with, is much better than "for." (Bible Treasury 13:380)

2:1 comfort . . . consolation: "comfort" and "consolation" rightly change places [in the RV] (Bible Treasury 13:380) comfort: 2:1 is a questionable change [by the American correctors of the RV], though on the surface "exhortation" may seem close. (Bible Treasury 14:380)

2:6 being: Or, "subsisting." (Lect. on Phil. and Col., p.2) being . . . an object of rapine: Is not "subsisting" a more suitable word than the suggested "existing"? The verse runs better in the Revised Version, "a thing to be grasped" not fitting in well. (Bible Treasury 14:380) an object of rapine to be on an equality: "a prize to be on an equality" is more correct than "robbery to be equal" (Bible Treasury 13:380)

2:7 emptied himself: "emptied himself" [is more correct in the RV] (Bible Treasury 13:380)

2:9 the: the right reading "the" (not a) name is adopted [in the RV] (Bible Treasury 13:380)

2:10 in: "in" (not at) the name [is adopted in the RV] (Bible Treasury 13:380)

infernial: The groaning or deliverance of creation in Romans 8 is quite another thing, and ὑποκάτω τῆς γῆς in Revised Version is not at all the same as καταχθονίων here, being things that burrow, not the lost infernal beings. (Bible Treasury 13:380)

[beings]: why "things" instead of "beings" when we have the knee and tongue called to confess that Jesus Christ is Lord? Is not this very distinct from the personification of universal nature in Psalm 148 or elsewhere? (Bible Treasury 13:380)

2:14 reasonings: διαλο. is used for "questionings" as well as "reasonings," and "disputes," and may be so used here. (Bible Treasury 14:380)

2:15 be: "become," instead of "be," is suggested (I presume) the better to mark γένησθε rather than ἦτε (A D E F G &c.) which Lachmann preferred. (Bible Treasury 14:380) lights: Or, "light-bearers." (Lect. on Phil. and Col., p.3)

2:25 messenger: [See note on 2 Cor. 8:23]

2:30 of Christ: it is surprising the Revisers did not see that the Rescript of Paris in giving simply "the work" preserves the true reading, to which others added \overline{XY} or \overline{KY} . But others must here have overborne the Bishop of Durham. The insertions are easily accounted for. (Bible Treasury 13:380)

3:1, 4:4 rejoice . . . Rejoice . . . rejoice: [Q. —Phil 3:1, 4:4. What ground had the Revisers for putting “farewell” as the marginal equivalent for “rejoice”? A.B.]

A. — Nothing but pedantry. The verb as a secondary meaning is used for “saluting,” and so for “farewell”; but this sense is in narrow contextual bounds, as Matt. 26:49, 27:29, 28:9; Mark 15:18; Luke 1:28; John 19:3; Acts 15:23, 23:26; James 1:1, and 2 John 10, 11. Everywhere else it means “rejoice,” or “be glad,” and emphatically so in the Epistle to the Philippians where it is an evident keynote, as in 1:18, 2:17, 18, 28, 3:1, 4:10. What would be the sense of “Farewell in the Lord always”? Yet this is long after 3:1, where “farewell” would be therefore unnatural. Then we have also to take account of the kindred “joy” (χαρὰ) in the same Epistle, as in 1:4, 25, 2:2, 29, and 4:1 which it is impossible to mistake. But the verb ought not to be confounded as the A.V. does with καυχᾶσθαι, “I boast” as in Rom. 5:2, 11, Phil. 3:3, James 1:9, 4:16. It may surprise one that so profound a scholar as the late Bp. Lightfoot should express the opinion on Phil. 3:1 that the word conveys both meanings here, referring also to 2:18, 4:4. Spiritual perception is another thing, and indispensable for the right rendering of scripture. (Bible Treasury N1:320)

3:3 God in Spirit: or, according to the best MSS, ‘who worship by God’s Spirit’. (Lect. on Phil. and Col., p.52)

God in Spirit: “worship by the Spirit of God” is right (Bible Treasury 13:380)

3:6 righteousness that [is] in law: Or, “according to legal righteousness.” (Lect. on Phil. and Col., p.4)

3:7 I have counted: “have I counted” [in the RV] [is right] (Bible Treasury 13:380)

3:8 refuse: “Refuse,” as in the margin [of the RV], is a wider and well supported sense rather than “dung,” though this too the word σκύβαλα meant. (Bible Treasury 14:380)

3:9 of: “of” God to my mind keeps up the idea of intrinsic and immediate source rather than an external removal, and at any rate a more remote starting-point like “from.” (Bible Treasury 14:380)

3:11 from: There is no reasonable doubt that the received text is wrong, followed by the Authorised Version (“of,” instead of “from” the dead). The Alexandrian, Vatican, Sinai, Clermont, and St. Germain Uncials, supported by some ten cursives, very many versions, and the chief Greek and Latin ecclesiastical writers read τὴν ἐξανάστασιν τὴν ἐκ νεκρῶν. Codd. F and G, by manifest error, read τῶν ἐκ, and this seems to have been corrected (or rather corrupted) in order to make sense into τῶν (omitting ἐκ) in K and L and the mass of cursives. But in my opinion the sense, and even the Greek, seems bad; for on the one hand both ἐξανάστασιν and the drift of the argument point to a resurrection of favour and blessedness, not to that in which the unjust must rise to judgment; while on the other hand τῶν νεκρῶν would imply the dead, i.e. all the dead, as a class. Hence I cannot but consider it a surprising error in Griesbach that he edited the received text in this place. Alter and Matthaei followed according to their plan the manuscripts before them; but the latter was too good a scholar not to feel the difference, though he appears to impute it to a corrector for the sake of elegance in his second edition. Long before them, Mill had given his judgment in favour of the more ancient reading; and Wetstein repeated it apparently with approval. Bengel hesitated; but Dr. Wells in this, as in many other instances, showed his sound judgment and quiet courage in rejecting the common text, and adopting that which has by far the best authorities.

Dr. S. T. Bloomfield indeed (Addit. Annotations in loc.) admits that the external testimony is quite in its favour, though it is hard to see what he means by the internal evidence being in this case denied; for he suggests himself that τὴν ἐκ may have been a correction proceeding from those who thought that the sense which the context requires, “the resurrection from the dead,” could not be extracted from ἐξάν. τῶν νεκρῶν. The critical reading he owns has force and propriety; but he does “not see why ἐξανάστ. τῶν νεκρῶν should not of itself have the same sense as that conveyed, with more propriety of expression (and for that reason likely to be adopted in the early Uncial MSS.), ἐξάν. τὴν ἐκ νεκρῶν. Little probable is it that the reading, ἐξανάστ. τὴν ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν should have been altered to ἐξ τῶν νεκρῶν. There is great reason to think that the ἐκ arose from those who thought it necessary to the sense, and did not see that it could be fetched from the ἐξ in ἐξανάστ. Hence I am inclined to retain ἐξάν. τῶν νεκρῶν as a popular and familiar mode of expression (suitable to the persons addressed), according to which the expressions εἰς τὴν ἐξάν. τῶν advert — as at Rom. 4:16, and elsewhere — to the state of the persons in question, the state or kind of resurrection unto life of those who have died in the Lord, and whose resurrection will be a resurrection unto life and glory, their bodies being raised incorruptible, and both body and soul united for ever with the Lord. See 1 Thess. 4:6-18.”

I have transcribed this note at length, because it is a fair example of Dr. B.’s critical, scholastic, and exegetic manner. Enough has been already said above, before I even knew of his reasoning, to prove how unfounded it is in every point of view. The internal evidence (i.e. the scope of the context) is as decidedly for τὴν ἐκ as the weightiest external witnesses. How the text got gradually changed from the most correct form (not correction) in the early Uncials has been explained. When the distinction of the resurrection of the just from that of the unjust got lost in Christendom, and all were merged in the error of one general indiscriminate resurrection, one can understand that people would not feel the impropriety of substituting τῶν for τὴν ἐκ (for as to τὴν ἐκ τῶν, of which Dr. B. speaks, it exists in no document whatever). There is therefore not the slightest ground to countenance the rather dangerous idea, that the apostle did not employ a phrase analogous to the correct one which is found elsewhere in the New Testament, and adopted “a popular and familiar mode of expression,” i.e. a really inaccurate mode. And why should our Lord adopt a correct form to the Sadducees (Luke 20 repeated in Acts 4), and Paul an incorrect one to the Philippians? Who can understand why it should be “suitable to the persons addressed,” on Dr. B.’s showing? Of the two, the converse would be more intelligible; but my conviction is that both the Lord and His apostle used similar and correct phraseology, as did the Holy Spirit elsewhere. And as to Rom. 4:17 (which was probably meant rather than 16), it has no bearing on the matter, as it is there merely a question of God’s power displayed in quickening the dead, and calling things that are not in being as in being, and in no way distinguishing the resurrection of life from that of judgment. When the state or kind of resurrection is meant to be expressed, the anarthrous form is requisite, as we see in verse 24 of this very chapter, and regularly so. (See Rom. 1:4.) I believe, therefore, that ἐξανάστασιν, especially if ἐκ be supposed to be fetched (as Dr. B. says) from ἐξανάστ. is incompatible with τῶν νεκρῶν, the one conveying the notion of a selected company, and the other of the dead universally. Modern editors of value, however differing in their system of recension agree in the ancient as against the received reading; so Scholz, Lachmann, Tischendorf, Ellicott, Alford, Tregelles, Wordsworth, &c. (Lect. Intro. to the Epist. of Paul, p.265-267) from: But Phil. 3:11 receives from Dr. B. [David Brown], and claims from us, a fuller notice. “It was a resurrection peculiar to believers — a resurrection exclusively theirs — exclusive, however, not in the time of it, but in its nature, its accompaniments, and its issues.” (p.183 [of “Christ’s Second Coming: Will it be Premillennial?”]) Moreover, he acknowledges that the preferable reading is (not the vulgar ἐξανάστασιν τῶν νεκρῶν, but what, since Bengel, and in spite of Griesbach, “has been established”) ἐξανάστασιν τὴν ἐκ νεκρῶν. (In a note to p. 183, Dr. B. says that though this “was originally an emphatic form, it came gradually to be employed even where no emphasis was intended. Winer says it ‘almost uniformly’ did so; and he makes this remark in connexion with the passage before us.” Now we cannot say what this German scholar may have remarked in former editions, but we can affirm that, having examined his latest (sixth) edition of the “Grammatik,” we believe that no reference is made to the passage, much less is there an assertion so unworthy of a really learned man as imputed to him. If W. ever committed himself to that opinion, it seems to have vanished from his most mature statements. The section 19, to which Dr. B. alludes (now at least) without reason, discusses the omission of the article under certain limitations — a subject of which Winer is by no means master. It may be remarked here, that the late Mr. Gipps founded an argument of apparent weight and acuteness on the common text against a literal resurrection of saints before the rest are raised for judgment. The absence of ἐκ was the gist of his reasoning. But the fact is that the sentence is not correct Greek, and hardly sense, as it stands in Text. Rec.; whereas, the oldest and best authorities for τῶν read τὴν ἐκ. Had Mr. G. known this, he would have felt that his main objection was gone — nay, that the clause told strongly against him. “If,” says he, “Phil 3:11 had been meant to express the rising from the dead, the preposition ἐξ in composition with ἀνάστασις would have been repeated.” (p. 85, note.) It is repeated according to the latest critics, Scholz, Lachmann, and Tischendorf, none of whom sympathizes with premillennialism. The ancient MSS. A, B, (C is here defective) D, E read τὴν ἐκ. F, G give τῶν ἐκ, which is evidently a slip for τὴν ἐκ, and this again was, probably, the parent of τῶν without ἐκ in J, K and the cursive manuscripts which follow them. The best versions and fathers confirm the reading from the dead. The currency which the common reading once had says little for the accuracy of copyists, editors, and commentators.) This we venture to affirm, is the strongest possible statement in Greek of an eclectic resurrection. “The out-resurrection from the dead” may convey some idea of its force to the unlearned reader. It is even more emphatic, as Bengel observes, than the word used of our Lord’s rising from the dead. The main question, however, is on the latter part of the phrase. Is ἐκ νεκρῶν ever predicated of the resurrection of the wicked dead, — of those who, as we believe, rise last? NEVER. Ἀνάστασις νεκρῶν is, of course, true of Christ, and of the righteous, no less than of the wicked; for all that it means is the rising again of dead persons. This, then, is in not the smallest degree favourable to Dr. B., as he inconsiderately infers. On the other hand, the phrase ἐκ νεκρῶν is restricted to Christ and His saints; because this resurrection (whether of Him or of them) was from among the dead, who were left for the time undisturbed by it in their graves — a prior, as well as a peculiar, resurrection. Nor is there the least difficulty in discerning why St. Paul chose the more general expression in 1 Cor. 15, though he there confines himself (as Dr. B. believes with us, in opposition to Mr. Birks, Barnes, &c.) to the resurrection of Christ and of them who are Christ’s. The reason is because he is asserting the abstract doctrine of resurrection, which some of the Corinthians, though holding the perpetuity of the soul, had denied. But the apostle insists on the resurrection of dead persons, — of the body. He shows that to question this is to destroy alike the foundation in Christ and the hopes of the Christian — the grand motives to, and power of present holy suffering. Can Dr. B. refuse this explanation of his objection? If not, the argument founded on the distinctness of the Greek formulas is thoroughly sound and conclusive. Neither is there ambiguity in the phrase ἐκ νεκρῶν: it means “out of,” or “from amongst the dead,” not “from the place or state of the dead.” Mr. Inglis’s criticism on Heb. 11:19, (preface, pp. vi, vii,) founded on ὅθεν, “whence,” as if it necessarily meant the dead state, is quite inept; because the expression being figurative, (ἐν παραβολῇ,) “out of dead persons” yields a sense just as good as its rival. Like the Latin unde, this Greek adverb means not only “whence,” but from whom or which, and this, not in mere loose and barbarized dialects, but in the purest Attic authors. Mr. I.’s remarks ignore this, (being founded on the mistaken idea that ὅθεν can only mean whence, and only be applied to the dead state,) and therefore, if ingenious, must forfeit claim to accuracy. (Bible Treasury 1:156-157) from: [On looking into the Peshito Syriac version, I find ἐξ ἀναστάσεως νεκρῶν in Acts 26:23, and in Rom. 1:4, and ἐξανάστασιν τῶν νεκρῶν in Phil. 3:11, uniformly rendered, the first and third of the above passages, . . . of or to “the resurrection from the house of the dead.” In the second, . . . “who rose from the house of the dead.”

What Matthew (14:2) has expressed by ἀπο τῶν νεκρῶν, Mark (6:14) and Luke (9:7) have expressed by ἐκ νεκρῶν. Ἀπο τῶν νεκρῶν also occurs in Matt. 27:64, and 28:7. In the Syriac version all these different phrases are uniformly translated “from the house of the dead.” Acts 24:15 is translated “resurrection from the house of the dead, of the just and of the unjust.” J.H.]

[Valuable as we know the Peshito Syriac to be, yet it is but a version, and may be mistaken. Besides, the question lies — and we express no opinion upon it — not so much between the cases above cited, in which a preposition occurs, be it ἀπο or ἐκ, with or without the article, but between all these passages and the phrase ἀναστάσις νεκρῶν, where νεκρῶν is a genitive governed by the preceding noun, and not by a preposition. Resurrectio mortuorum, or resurrectio e mortuis — Resurrection of dead bodies, or resurrection from amongst the dead. — Ed. of Christian Annotator 2:60]

I think that the just inference from a comparison of the various texts cited from the Peshito-Syriac is, that this venerable version is lax in representing the true force of different phrases in the Greek New Testament on the subject of the resurrection; not only confounding things which are distinct, but adding, in most or all cases, an idea not suggested by the original.

As to the Greek, there are the strongest reasons for doubting that ἐξανάστασις τῶν νεκρῶν is an inspired expression — I scarcely think that it is a correct one. But it is certain that A B (C is here defective) D E read, in Phil. 3:11, τὴν ἐξανάστασιν τὴν ἐκ νεκρῶν (F and G giving τῶν ἐκ, which seems to be a slip for τὴν ἐκ), while only two uncial MSS. of the ninth century, viz. J K, read τῶν without ἐκ. Accordingly, critics, with wholly different systems of recension, like Scholz, Lachmann, and Tischendorf, reject the received text in spite of Griesbach’s adoption of it, though he marked the right reading as probable.

It is not surprising that J. H. has failed to seize the exact point of ἐξανάστασεως νεκρῶν. The phrase is purely characteristic, and hence is anarthrous. The preposition is not omitted before νεκρῶν for the sake of euphony, as Mr. Birks supposes in a recent volume; but ἐξανάστασεως in Acts 26:23, and Rom. 1:4, indicates the mode or condition in which Jesus should shew light to Jew and Gentile, and be defined as Son of God in power; while νεκρῶν was added, it seems to me, as a complement to denote that it was a resurrection in a proper, strict sense (not figuratively, as in Luke 2 and elsewhere).

It is a mistake to suppose the presence or absence of the preposition immaterial. The truth is that, while the resurrection of Christ, or of the just (i.e. those who are Christ’s), like that of all others, is or may be styled ἀνάστασις νεκρῶν, never is the resurrection of the unjust designated ἀνάστασις ἐκ νεκρῶν — a phrase restricted to those who rise before the wicked. In other words, “the resurrection from the dead” (which it ought to be in Phil. 3:11, as it is in Luke 20:35, where the expression in Greek is rather the weaker of the two) is, à fortiori, “of the dead” — but the converse does not hold; and this suffices to prove their distinctness. I believe that the reader who is familiar with the Scriptures will the most readily acquiesce in this statement. (Christian Annotator 2:200-201, Bible Witness and Review 1:272-273)

from: The translation is changed according to the true reading. In the commonly received text it stands as in the authorised version — “the resurrection of the dead.” But I have no hesitation in saying that this is a mistake, though it is not a question of translation only, but of text. Unfortunately, the ordinary Greek Testaments are just as faulty as King James’ translators. You must not imagine that the actual condition of the text in a Greek Testament corresponds minutely with the inspired Scripture in its original perfection, any more than the English does, or any other version. What God wrote by the inspired penmen was perfect; but then it is evident that copyists and printers were not inspired, and I am sure the editors were not either. Accordingly we have some of them bad, some good, and some better, while none is such as to exclude inquiry or the need of a discerning judgment. But it is established now, upon all sorts of excellent witnesses, and spite of considerably different systems of recension among the editors, and peculiarities in many other ways, that the true text is not τῶν νεκρῶν, but τὴν ἐκ νεκρῶν (the latter of which, I do not doubt, was gradually corrupted into the former). Now, there can be no just question that ἐξανάστασιν τὴν ἐκ νεκρῶν means “the resurrection that is from the dead.” (It is not accurate to say that Polybius uses ἀνάστασις and ἐξανάστασις as equivalent. Of the former there is perhaps but one genuine occurrence in his extant remains, the force of which has been much contested; the latter occurs more frequently, but in a somewhat different sense.) All the modern critics of just reputation (save one at the beginning of this century) have been obliged, by the weight of diplomatic evidence, to come to one result, and this a very satisfactory one for the truth, especially as none of those who thus settled the text were themselves aware of its bearing; and all of the German editors, at any rate, must be thought inclined to the error which is now cast out of this text. The expression used in the passage for resurrection is the strongest that occurs in God’s word. There is a redoubled emphasis in the phrase. It seems to be designed forcibly to express a peculiar, not a collective, resurrection. It is not the usual word “resurrection;” but “out-resurrection” might help to convey the meaning to the English reader. It would not suit the genius of our tongue, I admit; but it may illustrate the original word, by the way, were one to say, “If by any means I might attain to” [or, arrive at] “the out-resurrection from the dead.” Thus there is a twofold emphasis; one from the word itself, which is used here only in the New Testament; the other from the strong, regular phrase for an eclectic resurrection which follows. The true reading, then, which strengthens the evidence for a special rising of saints from among the dead, is established upon evidence which it would be out of the question to enter into here. But this I may say, that the editors of note (with one strange exception, more than fifty years since), whether believers or rationalists, Romanists or Protestants, High Church or Low Church, no matter who, if they were men competent to give a sound opinion, agree on the point. This result is happy, because the text, as it was, proved a stumbling-block to some who were too much swayed by the critic, who erroneously continued the received text, by some oversight, against his own witnesses. But at present the true text may be regarded as settled as to this verse. Nor is there any just doubt as to the right version. As little doubt ought there to be about the doctrine; for not a resurrection which is a necessity for all, but one of special privilege alone could be such an object of desire to the apostle’s heart. (Lect. on the Second Coming and Kingdom, p. 369-372)

from: Of course in verse 11 it is the resurrection from (or from among) the dead, not “of” as in the Authorised Version, following the bad reading τῶν ν. instead of τὴν ἐκ ν., not to speak of the intensified form of the word (ἐξανάστασις) here, only occurrent in the New Testament, as has been often noticed and is obvious. (Bible Treasury 13:380)

from: The Bishop of Durham in loco (p. 151, Fourth edition) admits of course that the vulgar reading is wrong, and that the true is the final (but why final?) resurrection of the righteous to a new and glorified life. (Bible Treasury 14:256)

from: [See also Lect. on Rev., p. 428, Bible Treasury 9:111, 17:142]

3:12 lay hold, for that . . . laid hold: “lay” and “laid” hold on are all well for apprehend and apprehended; but the better point in the margin of the Revisers over their text is in taking ἐφ’ ᾧ in the usual sense of the condition, or occasion, which gives character to what is spoken of, “for that,” “seeing that.” (Bible Treasury 14:380)

3:13 laid hold: 13 is the same thing [i.e., as Phil. 3:12] (Bible Treasury 14:380)

3:20 commonwealth: Or, “conversation.” (Lect. on Phil. and Col., p.5) heavens: [See note to Mat. 16:2]

[as] Saviour: The version of verse 20 [in the RV] is an improvement on the Authorised Version, but is it not feeble? We await as Saviour the Lord Jesus Christ. Salvation in this epistle is regarded as incomplete till the body of our humiliation has its fashion changed into conformity with the body of His glory. (Bible Treasury 13:380)

4:2 [whole verse]: The Authorised Version is duly corrected [in the RV] in chapter 5:2,3 in its misunderstanding of the female names, a false reading, and a false rendering. (Bible Treasury 13:380)

Euodia: . . . we may just notice the true form in passing; Euodias sounds like a man’s name, whereas here it is really a woman . . . (Lect. Intro. to the Epist. of Paul, p. 271)

4:3 [whole verse]: [See note to Phil. 4:2]

4:4 Rejoice: Assuredly “farewell” does not deserve a place in the margin here. Indeed the Americans should have objected to it in the margin of 3:1. Here it is monstrous: for what is the meaning of “Farewell in the Lord alway?” and why not, if it be so, say in 1 Thess. 5:16, Farewell “alway”? There indeed they omit their marginal note properly; but they should not have given it here. (Bible Treasury 14:380) [See note to Phil. 3:1]

4:5 [whole verse]: The rendering is improved [in the RV] especially in verses 5, 6, 7, 8, 12, 15, 17.

4:6 [whole verse]: [See note to Phil. 4:5]

4:7 [whole verse]: [See note to Phil. 4:5]

4:8 [whole verse]: [See note to Phil. 4:5]

4:12 [whole verse]: [See note to Phil. 4:5]

4:13 [whole verse]: There are also corrections [in the RV] in verses 13 and 23, but nothing of special moment. (Bible Treasury 13:380)

4:15 [whole verse]: [See note to Phil. 4:5]

4:17 [whole verse]: [See note to Phil. 4:5]

4:19 fully supply: “fulfil” is one of the singular aberrations of the Revision Committee, without even a marginal alternative. The sense is “supply” as in the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:380)

4:23 [whole verse]: [See note to Phil. 4:13]

Notes for Colossians

1:1 Jesus Christ: we have [in the RV] "Christ Jesus" rightly (Bible Treasury 14:13)

1:2 Father Λ : The omission of "and the Lord Jesus Christ" in the best text is particularly to be noted; for the drift of the epistle is to give especial prominence to the glory of Christ. Some excellent copies which contain the words may have naturally fallen into this mistake; for the scribes would not without an effort abstain from the usual formula in these epistles. On the other hand, it is difficult to account for the absence of so familiar an ending in first-rate witnesses of various ages and countries, and for the express statement of early commentators that it was not found here, if the words be genuine. (Lect. on Phil. and Col., p.86)

Father Λ : [The RV has] a proper omission of "and Lord Jesus Christ" (Bible Treasury 14:13)

1:3 and: [The RV has] a proper omission . . . of "and" — "God the Father," &c. (Bible Treasury 14:13)

1:6 producing fruit and growing: This addition of its growth (καὶ αὐξανόμενον) is lost to the common text, having been omitted in inferior copies. That it is genuine cannot be fairly questioned. (Lect. on Phil. and Col., p.88, and Bible Treasury 6:7) producing fruit and growing: or "bringeth forth fruit [and increaseth]" (Lect. on Phil. and Col., p.89) and growing: the Revisers follow the good authorities in giving "and increasing," or "growing" which the Text. Rec. omits (Bible Treasury 14:14)

1:7 ye Λ : the Revisers follow the good authorities . . . in dropping the expletive "also" (Bible Treasury 14:14)

you: [The Revisers] adopt the absurd reading of many ancient and modern authorities, ἡμῶν "our," instead of υμῶν their marginal alternative. Here however Westcott and Hort had not only Alford, Lachmann, Tregelles, to keep them in countenance, but the Elzevirian Text. Rec. of 1633. This however may have been a mere printer's error, like that of the copyists; for the first (1624) and the latter editions of the Elzevirs adhere to the reading of Erasmus, of the Complutensian, of Colinaeus, of Stephens, and of Beza; as it holds its ground rightly to this day. The ancient versions are unanimous in rejecting ἡμῶν and no wonder: for the sense which would result from this reading is untrue, as it would seem that Epaphras, valued and faithful as he may have been, was in no sense "vice apostoli," as says a Latin commentator contrary to all others, Greek or Latin, who allude to it. (Bible Treasury 14:14)

1:10 increasing in: "growing (not exactly in but) by the knowledge of God" (Lect. Intro. to the Epist. of Paul, p.286) increasing in: "Increasing in" seems a questionable rendering [in the RV]. Is not "growing by" better, as the margin suggests for the last word? (Bible Treasury 14:14)

1:12 qualified us: The Vulgate, followed by Roman Catholic Theologians, &c., is utterly wrong in the perversion "made worthy"; as are most Protestants too in blotting out this blessed standing to make it a gradual process. (Bible Treasury N3:333)

1:14 redemption Λ : "Through his blood" has been inserted in the vulgar text and followed in our version, but it really belongs to Ephesians. I do not doubt the copyists put it in here because it was there. (Lect. on Phil. and Col., p.96) redemption Λ : There is no doubt that "through his blood" should vanish . . . It stands rightly in Ephesians 1:7, whence probably it was introduced here. There person is the point here, not yet the work, which comes afterwards in verses 20-22. (Bible Treasury 14:14)

1:15 firstborn: Hence these [who misunderstand the passage] have changed the rendering to "Born before all creation". It is unnatural to take it so, spite of some ancients and moderns. (Lect. on Phil. and Col., p.97)

1:16 [whole verse]: No notice is taken [by the American correctors of the RV] of the real mistakes in the Revision of 16 and 19, and of the unhappy severance of 24, &c. from the previous verses; by which the double ministry of Paul is cut through, whereas the connexion adds much to the force. (Bible Treasury 14:380)

by: The AV is right: the RV dangerously wrong in giving "in him were all things created." It expresses not the instrumental means . . . but the intrinsic power by which the work was done, here of universal creation. The mystical idea of the Revisers, for which there is no ground, seems refuted also by the tense which points to historical fact, as distinguished from the abiding continuance of the past act in the latter clause. Besides it opens the door of universalism in opposition to all truth. (Bible Treasury N3:333)

by: "in him" . . . [in the RV] appears a bald or mystic expression. It was in His power or in virtue of Him that all things were created. To be in Christ, to walk or dwell in Him, is for believers as intelligible as it is blessed; but for the universe to be created in Him, what is the meaning? It is assumption to say that we are shut up to any such rendering. No doubt ἐν is more than διὰ (the expression of the means or instrument) and supposes intrinsic ability. (Bible Treasury 14:14)

1:17 in: or "by [or in virtue of] him" (Lect. on Phil. and Col., p.98)

subsisteth: [I believe that the earliest notices of the universe are to be sought and found in the records of the angelic kingdoms, which owned Messiah's sway before the world was. All the English translators found in the Hexapla, as well as Luther, have unaccountably followed the gross error of the Vulgate in their rendering of Col. 1:17. A glorious hour has been, and will, I believe, return, when all the works of God stood together in His Son. This has long passed away, and it is not true that they do now consist in Him in their first sense. The perfect tense ἔστακε denies such a present unity and reveals a breach. "Non omnia in ipso constant sed consteterunt;" and therefore has God promised, "per eum reconciliare omnia." (See Vulgate in loco.) The whole context reveals the error of the translators. Let the Greek and the Vulgate be compared, and then the English versions. Richard Greaves.] (Christian Annotator 2:241)

. . . if they are not, it is but intruding into things which he has not seen. I did not feel increased confidence about this mystical reverie when I read, immediately after, an attack upon all the English translations, in the Hexapla, and Luther, who are said to have "unaccountably followed the gross error of the Vulgate in their rendering of Col. 1:17." This I totally deny: the error is in your Correspondent, not in these versions. The special force of συνέστηκεν is exactly what the authorised Bible gives, viz.: the present continuous efficacy of a past action. It does not deny such a consistency as a present thing. This is the well-known distinction between the Greek perfect and the aorist, which last is the regular historical past tense; an instance of which may be seen in the verse preceding, where you have ἐκτίσθη in reference to the past fact simply, and ἐκτισται in reference to the subsisting consequences of that action. Every Greek scholar, critically acquainted with the language, will admit that our translators, &c. are quite right, and Mr. Greaves singularly wrong. Nor should I write thus strongly, if I did not believe it to be a duty to guard Christians against assaults, such as these, on our Bible, which are due, like so many other quasi-emendations, to a want of knowledge, alike of the Scriptures, and of the original. I deny not the breach spoken of in Gen. 1:2; but Col. 1:17 reveals another truth, which is fairly presented in the English Bible. (Christian Annotator 2:285)

1:19 [whole verse]: [See note to Col. 1:16]

all: . . . to put in "the Father" (as is done in the Authorized Version in italics) is to take away from the Son without warrant and dangerously. It was not the Father, but the Godhead. It pleased the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. (Lect. Intro. to the Epist. of Paul, p.293)

all: [In the RV] the old fault of the Authorised Version appears. There the excellent Tyndale led the way in error, Wiclif before and the Rhemish since being nearer the truth. The doctrine is as bad as the version, and derogatory to the Son as well as the Spirit in our epistle, and the very part where the prime object is to assert the glory of Christ in every way. For in Him all the fulness was well-pleased to dwell, and through Him to reconcile all things unto itself, having made peace through the blood of His cross. The margin [of the RV] offers a less offensive rendering than the Revised text; but chapter 2:9 goes far to commend a version which needs no words to be supplied and wonderfully falls in with the grand aim of exalting Christ's person. (Bible Treasury 14:14) [See also Lect. on Phil. and Col., p.99-100, Lectures on the Second Coming, p.300-301]

1:24 [whole verse]: [See note to Col. 1:16]

wanting: Or, "the deficiency." (Lect. on Phil. and Col., p. 80)

1:25 complete: the context suggests "complete" rather than "fulfil." There was a blank left in the revelations of God; and the apostle, as minister not only of the gospel but of the assembly, was given to complete the word of God, who would now manifest to His saints the mystery hidden from the ages and from the generations. Such was the dispensation or stewardship of God given him toward the Gentiles. Compare Ephesians 3. (Bible Treasury 14:14) complete: the word "fulfil" [in the RV] should be "complete." There was a blank page of revelation which Paul was called to fill up. "Fulfil" is another and here erroneous idea. (Bible Treasury 14:380)

1:26 from _Λ . . . from: 1:26 is their [the American correctors of the RV] first suggestion, and the very strange one of ἀπό "for," rather than "from," as of course it means. Perhaps Alford misled them who says it is "temporal," and not "hidden from," which is exactly what it says and is. What do the Americans mean by "for the ages and for the generations"? It is hard to see why the Revisers were not content with the Authorised Version. "All seems a loose way of representing the doubled preposition and article. (Bible Treasury 14:380)

1:28 perfect: "Perfect" in verse 28, as in Philippians 3:15, means "full-grown," as the Revisers, following the Authorised Version "of full age," give in Hebrews 5:14. (Bible Treasury 14:14)

2:2 God _Λ : [See note to Col. 2:3]

2:3 in which: Chapter 2:3 does not exhibit a satisfactory text [in the RV], though there are added and indefensible words in the text which the Authorised Version followed. It is very doubtful whether "and of Christ" should stand any more than "and of the Father," the importance of which omission would be that the version would run "in which." That is, all these treasures are in the mystery. (Bible Treasury 14:14)

2:6 _Λ walk: Nor is there need for "so" (Bible Treasury 14:14)

2:11 body _Λ : "Of the sins" is an error in the common Greek text which the Revisers, with the critics, properly omit (Bible Treasury 14:14)

2:13 in: [is not the RV] adventurous in following the few uncials and cursives, though supported by Greek and Latin ecclesiastics, which drop ἐν and give the force "through" . . . ? (Bible Treasury 14:14)

2:15 stripped: dropping the interpolated copulative, [the Revisers] adhere to the literal or ordinary force of ἀπεκδυόμενος "having put off from himself," with Alford and Ellicott, which results in an apparently fanciful meaning, which it is hard to believe intended by the Spirit of God. Every scholar knows that later usage employed middle forms where a middle sense cannot be recognised, though there is a distinction from the active voice. Hence even Winer does not accept the strict middle sense here, any more than Meyer or others, inclining to some such force as in the Authorised Version. If God be the subject throughout, the Latin application to the Lord's divesting Himself of the flesh or body is out of the question; and certainly the word is rarely if ever used absolutely or with such an ellipsis. Theodoret and Chrysostom are vague, but regard Christ as the subject. (Bible Treasury 14:14) stripped: The Americans [correctors of the RV] are right in preferring in substance the Authorised Version to the Revised Version, though they would put their text in the margin. (Bible Treasury 14:380)

2:18 not: Some of the best authorities omit the negative and are followed by Lachmann, Alford, etc., but in my judgment mistakenly. The sphere of angels was invisible, and the saint is not to pry there but believe in what God reveals. (Lect. on Phil. and Col., p.124-5)

not: [The RV] drop[s] the negative with several of our bolder modern critics, which would thus express the pretension of the mystics whom the apostle is exposing. (Bible Treasury 14:14-15)

2:21 [whole verse]: . . . as every one knows who has considered at all the matter, the climax is really inverted in our common English Bible. The order appears in a way exactly contrary to the truth; for the real thought is, first of all, "handle not;" then, "taste not;" and finally, not even "touch." Thus, it is a descending climax, if I may so say, the most familiar thing of all, the handling, being put first; then the tasting, which might be considerably less; and, finally, not even a touch. This is the manner of human safeguards; this is man's way of preserving flesh in this world. (Lect. on the Holy Spirit, p.116)

2:23 not in any honour: In Colossians 2:23 I am very much disposed to read ἀφειδίχ σώματος (οὐκ ἐν τιμῇ τινι) πρὸς πλ. τῆς σαρκός, neglecting the body (not in a certain honor) as to satiating the flesh. There was, as to satiating the flesh, harshness towards the body, paying it no honor. (Bible Treasury 11:346) not in any honour: [The RV] of the last clause in verse 23 is no less bold, though no doubt it suits the context if it were tenable. But does the preposition πρὸς ever convey the idea of counteraction or adverse aim save from the context, as from any word of fighting or the like, of which there is no trace here? If "against" therefore be improper in this connection, the force would be a warning against ascetic treatment, without a certain honour due to the vessel of the Holy Spirit, which is really for satisfaction of the flesh. (Bible Treasury 14:15)

3:5 Put to death: "Put to death" is best, and marginal 12 [of the RV, "make dead"], uncalled for. (Bible Treasury 14:380)

3:7 ye: The "ye" is emphatic in verse 7. (Lect. on Phil. and Col., p.140)

3:8 whole: "The whole" here (as "the universe" in chapter 1:16,17) not very exactly represents τὰ πάντα, but in my opinion is better than "all." (Lect. on Phil. and Col., p. 82)

3:11 whole: The stronger and more accurate force we saw in Galatians 3 reappears in verse 11. (Bible Treasury 14:15) [See note to Col. 3:8]

3:13 Lord: It is very questionable whether "Christ" is not changed [in the RV] for the worse in verse 13 into "Lord" as in A B D^p F G, &c., Vulgate, &c. The Sinaitic reads "God"; the ordinary reading has ancient and extensive support, especially in versions and citations. (Bible Treasury 14:15)

3:15 the Christ: Here it is the peace, not of God, as such, but of Christ, as is allowed by all critics of note, on the authority of the best MSS. and versions. The general strain of the epistle, and of this verse, is in its favour. (Christian Annotator 1:196)

the Christ: the Revisers, with all critics, on the best authority have the peace "of Christ" (Bible Treasury 14:15)

3:16 richly _A : not improbably the Americans [correctors of the RV, read "richly;" and omit the semicolon after "wisdom",] are right in thus following Alford, Bengel, &c. (Bible Treasury 14:380)

God: [The RV] rightly give[s] to "God," 14:15)

3:17 God _A : [The RV] rightly . . . omit[s] "and" (Bible Treasury 14:15)

3:18 _A husbands: [The RV] rightly . . . omit[s] . . . "own" (Bible Treasury 14:15)

3:22 the Lord: it is rightly "the Lord," not "God," as in the Authorised Version following the Received Text (Bible Treasury 14:15)

3:23 And: the copulative is dropt [in the RV] (Bible Treasury 14:15)

3:24 _A ye: the causal conjunction [is dropt] before the final clause [in the RV] (Bible Treasury 14:15)

4:1 [whole verse]: It is evident that the first verse of chapter 4 belongs to the special exhortations which occupy the close of chapter 3. Consequently, chapter 4 ought, if the division were accurate according to subjects, to begin at the second verse. (Lect. on Phil. and Col., p.153)

[paragraph]: Of course the first verse of chapter 4 is properly connected with chapter 3 as its true close [in the RV]. (Bible Treasury 14:15)

heaven: [See note to Mat. 16:2]

4:5 time: Or, "opportunity." (Lect. on Phil. and Col., p. 83)

4:8 he . . . your: Verse 8 [in the RV] is a plain instance where the influence of most of the oldest copies has misled editors and the Revisers. The Paris rescript and the mass of uncials and cursives and versions are confirmed in their reading as right by the end of verse 9 as well as the beginning of verse 7. (Bible Treasury 14:15)

4:12 all: Or, "every will of God," everything that is such. (Lect. on Phil. and Col., p. 83)

4:13 labour: [The RV] is as in the best copies "labour," not "zeal," the manuscripts differing singularly. (Bible Treasury 14:15)

4:15 their: The main question of verse 15 lies between "their" (⌘ A C P, eight cursives, &c.) and "his" (D E F G K L and the mass with some ancient versions, &c.), "her" (though adopted by Lachmann who reads Νύμφαν after the Vatican and very little more) being given in the Revisers' margin, and not "his," which seems strange. (Bible Treasury 14:15)

Notes for 1 Thessalonians

1:1 peace \wedge : “from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.” Origen expressly noted the words as not read in his day, though they are supported by the Sinaitic, Alexandrian, and many other good MSS and versions &c. B F G and the best versions reject the words. (Bible Treasury 14:15)

1:8 [whole verse]: There are slight corrections [in the RV] in verses 8 and 10. (Bible Treasury 14:15)

1:10 [whole verse]: [See note to 1 Thess. 1:8]
heavens: [See note to Mat. 16:2]

2:2 But \wedge : an expletive καί is expunged [in the RV] (Bible Treasury 14:15)

2:6 burdensome: “burdensome” fails to express the claims of weight, charge, or authority here meant. (Bible Treasury 14:380)

2:9 \wedge working: γάρ [is expunged in the RV] (Bible Treasury 14:15)

2:13 [whole verse]: As to translation, is not verse 13 awkwardly rendered [in the RV]? Translate rather, “When ye received God’s word of message [or report] — God’s word heard — from us, ye accepted not men’s word, but as it is truly God’s word,” &c. (Bible Treasury 14:15)

And: “And,” omitted in Text. Rec., has the highest but not large authority. (Epist. to the Thessalonians, p.21)

And: There is an omission of καί supplied [in the RV] (Bible Treasury 14:15)

2:15 \wedge prophets: There is an omission of . . . ιδίους [in the RV] (Bible Treasury 14:15)

2:18 Wherefore: The right reading is διότι not διό of the Text. Rec., though the sense differs little. (Epist. to the Thessalonians, p.29)

2:19 Jesus \wedge : “Christ” is added in the Text. Rec., but does not appear in the best MSS. and Versions. (Epist. to the Thessalonians, p.29)

Jesus \wedge : There is an omission of . . . “Christ” [in the RV] (Bible Treasury 14:15) workfellow under: Chapter 3:2 brings before us a text variously found in the MSS. But if συνεργὸν τοῦ θεοῦ be read, as in the margin, “fellow-worker with God” will not do, for reasons already stated in discussing 1 Corinthians 3, &c. It is not the thought at all, however pleasing to man’s nature. God employs labourers as work-fellows; but He is no work-fellow of theirs. It is irreverent. In the text . . . [the RV reads] διάκονον, “minister,” as the Vatican copy omits τοῦ θεοῦ, and thus either way the difficulty is avoided. But there is really none when the word is rendered, not as by mere scholarship, but in the knowledge of God. (Bible Treasury 14:15)

3:2 workfellow under: Probably the various forms of the MSS. here are due to correctors who wished to soften what they did not relish or understand. κ omits τὸν συνεργὸν ἡμῶν, B omits τοῦ θεοῦ. The Clermont copy seems to have preserved the true text as given above, though some erroneously here, as elsewhere, render it “fellow-worker with God.” Compare 1 Cor. 3:9; 2 Cor. 6:1. “Under God” may be a paraphrase, but seems in our tongue needed to guard from a mistake against which true knowledge of God and His word ought to have preserved souls. The Greek genitive admits of relations far wider than the English. It is a question of contextual requirement. (Epist. to the Thessalonians, p.31)

3:11 Jesus \wedge : A few lesser points might be spoken of, but the chief is the exclusion [in the RV] of “Christ” which Text. Rec. introduced on insufficient grounds. (Bible Treasury 14:15)

4:1 even as also ye do walk: Text. Rec. omits this grave clause, so encouraging to those addressed. The authority for it is overwhelming. (Epist. to the Thessalonians, p.39)

even as also ye do walk: there is a short clause omitted in Text. Rec. and Authorised Version which is here [in the RV] rightly given, “even as ye do walk.” (Bible Treasury 14:15)

4:3 God \wedge : Some copies insert τό, others admit τοῦ, contrary to the best authorities. (Epist. to the Thessalonians, p.39)

4:4 to possess himself of: The Revisers, I think, aptly render verse 4 “to possess himself of,” (Bible Treasury 14:15)

4:6 [whole verse]: The Revisers, I think, aptly render . . . of course verse 6. (Bible Treasury 14:15)

the: There is no real ground to introduce a new topic here, confounding with Calvin and others τῷ πράγματι with τοῖς πράγμασιν, still less to suppose with Koppe τω enclitic = τινι, “any,” like our own Authorised Version (compare 2 Cor. 7:11). (Epist. to the Thessalonians, p.43)

4:8 gave: Even Dean Alford thinks δόντα was changed into διδόντα, or early ignorance may have done it undesignedly. (Epist. to the Thessalonians, p.40)

you: it is “you,” not “us.” (Bible Treasury 14:15)

4:12 honourably: 4:12 is more “honourably” or “reputably” than “honestly,” or “becomingly,” as suggested [by the American correctors of the RV]. (Bible Treasury 14:380)

4:13 those that fall asleep: The oldest authorities have κοιμωμένων, the class of those that sleep, character, and not time, as in σωζόμενοι, ἀγιαζόμενοι, &c. Later but more numerous copies support κεκοιμημένων which is exactly right in 1 Cor. 15:20, but not required here. (Epist. to the Thessalonians, p.47)

we: it is “we,” not “I” as in Text. Rec. (Bible Treasury 14:15)

4:14 through: It cannot mean “who have slept because of Jesus,” as some have supposed, thereby wrongly confining the first resurrection to martyrs. If so, the Greek must have been διὰ τὸν Ἰησοῦν or ὑπὲρ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ. (Bible Treasury N2:346) through: the margin [of the RV] is right, “through Jesus.” (Bible Treasury 14:15)

4:15 coming . . . precede: The word “coming” means the fact of being present in contrast with absence. . . . I take the liberty of changing the word “prevent,” which is old English, into a phrase which gives the same meaning as “prevent” when the translation was made. (Lect. Intro. to the Epist. of Paul, p.341)

4:16 of command: The peculiarity of the “shout” is left out [in the RV]. (Bible Treasury 14:15)

5:3 \wedge When: the particle “for” disappears properly [in the RV] as it should appear in verse 5. (Bible Treasury 14:15)

5:5 for: [See note to 1 Thess. 5:3]

5:8 being of day: To what is the Christian exhorted? It is not exactly, as in the Authorised Version after the Vulgate, &c., “Let us who are of the day,” which would require the article, but let us as being of the day be sober, having put on a breastplate of faith and love, and hope of salvation as helmet. (It may be worth while here to remark that the reason for the anarthrous structure of the phraseology is not what Bishop Ellicott assigned, following Winer’s Greek New Testament Grammar, namely, that as well-known terms they dispense with the article. Now there may be cases where with a connected word the phrase is virtually a proper name, which is sufficiently designative to do without the article unless special reasons require it. But, as a general rule, the facts do not bear out the conclusion, and the familiar words in question fall under the ordinary principle that, when they are intended to present an object before the mind, the article must be used; whereas it is dropped in order to characterise or predicate simply. The usage is not arbitrary nor careless, but correct in the New Testament and all exact writings. Sometimes the article might or might not be inserted and both be true; but the force is never precisely the same.) (Epist. to the Thessalonians, p.60)

5:22 form: By εἶδος translated "appearance" in the Authorised Version, is really meant kind or form. (Epist. to the Thessalonians, p.73)

form: 5:22 is "form," not "appearance." (Bible Treasury 14:380)

5:27 [holy]: Some have judged "holy" a gloss. For my own part I venture to think it is as appropriate here as in Heb. 3:1, and can readily understand that its absence from "brethren" generally might induce scribes even in early days as in later to omit the term. This was the first letter addressed to the Gentile saints, as the Epistle to the Hebrews lays special emphasis on those of that nation who confessed Christ being now "holy brethren," not such as were only Abraham's seed according to the flesh. (Epist. to the Thessalonians, p.75)

[holy]: There is little else to note [in chapter 5 of the RV] but the omission of ἁγίοις "holy" in verse 27, where if we take MSS, versions and citations into account, external authority is rather evenly balanced. If it were a solitary expression in the Pauline epistles, this would not really weigh against its occurrence in his earliest, and in so solemn a connection. I doubt the wisdom or certainty of casting it out here. It occurs also in Hebrews 3:1. (Bible Treasury 14:15)

5:28 [whole verse]: [W.K.'s translation in The Epistles of Paul the Apostle to the Thessalonians Translated from a Correct Text, and Expounded fails to give this verse although he comments upon it, thus acknowledging its genuineness.]

Notes for 2 Thessalonians

1:8 and to: Then he adds with another article, "and those that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ" (not, as we have it in English here, "and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus;" as if all were one and the same class). There are two classes, and therefore accuracy would seem to call on us to make the sense more definite — "and on them that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." At all events, whatever mode of rendering may be preferred, I have no hesitation in saying that such is the sense of the Greek, and nothing else. They are the Gentiles, who knew not God, (or, as Bengel has it, "qui in ethnica ignorantia de Deo versantur,") and the Jews, who might know God after a sort and to a certain point beyond Gentiles, but who did not obey the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. ("Judaeis maxime, quibus evangelium de Christo praedicatum fuerat.") (Lect. Intro. to the Epist. of Paul, p.353)

Jesus Λ : The addition of "Christ" here is questionable; B D E G K L P, some thirty cursives, half the ancient versions, and many ancients who cite, being adverse. (Bible Treasury 14:15)

and to: The rendering of chapter 1:8 is correct [in the RV], not that of the Authorized Version which overlooks the two articles in the Greek, expressive of two distinct classes of men with whom the day of the Lord is to deal: those that know not God (the nations or heathen); and those that, if they know Him after a sort, obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus (unbelieving Jews). (Bible Treasury 14:15)

1:10 believed: Further, it is interesting to notice the accuracy of the preterite "believed", instead of the "believe" of the Received Text, in verse 10. The former is not only the reading in the Complutensian edition, but that of all the uncials, almost all cursives, as well as the ancient versions and Fathers, unless a Latin copy or two. Erasmus seems to have misled Stephens, Beza, and others, and so our Authorized translators. No doubt the present is much the most frequent; but when the aorist occurs, there is always a special propriety as here. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.94-95) believed: . . . the monstrous error of the Peschito (not the Philoxenian) Syriac, etc., which connect the believing of "our testimony" with that day, and thus make it future, in flat contradiction of the very Scripture before them. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.95) believed: it should be "believed." (Bible Treasury 14:15)

1:12 Jesus Λ : the weight of authority omits "Christ" at the beginning. (Bible Treasury 14:15)

[the]: It is needless to discuss here at length the true bearing of the last clause, which some, out of zeal for the divine glory of our Lord, would have to designate His person only: "of our God and Lord Jesus Christ." But, though this be grammatically a quite possible construction, as it is dogmatically also true in itself, its contextual suitability is another matter. That one article in the singular rightly in Greek designates even distinct persons, if the object be to express their union in a common category (as here in "grace"), ought to be known not only to scholars in general, but familiarly to all students of the later body of revelation in its original tongue. Supposing God the Father to be here meant, as well as the Lord Jesus Christ, the insertion of the Greek article was not required, though English needs "the" before Lord Jesus Christ. On the contrary, its insertion in Greek would have been an intrusive error, if both were expressly to be united in a common object; for the repeated article would have had for its effect to present the persons as separate agents rather than as joined. And the nature of the case, as well as the clearly revealed truth of Scripture, shows abundantly that the joint agency of these blessed persons could not be, save in - that which lies behind all - the unity of the divine nature. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.99-100)

2:1 for [or, for the sake of]: With the strongest desire to avoid exaggeration and, yet more, falsely accusing any soul, one is bound for the truth's sake to record the conviction that grave mischief is here done in the Revised Version, by the introduction of "touching" into their text, and "in behalf of" into their margin (2:1). It will be shown that neither suits the context. We are in no way limited to these reflexions of the Greek, especially where connected with words of entreaty. The Authorized Version, in the main point before us, is substantially better; yet the misrendering has been considered by not a few as a decided improvement: so thoroughly has the aim or argument of the apostle been for the most part misapprehended. . . .

But the great question is, what is the real bearing, in this connection, of that joint object before the reader? and what in particular is the true force of the preposition employed by the Spirit of God? The Authorized Version says "by," the Revisers give "touching" in the text, and in the margin they add "Gr. in behalf of." The usage of $\upsilon\pi\epsilon\rho$ if we come to facts even in the New Testament alone, is pretty wide; but the context as ever has immense and distinct and decisive control in helping us to determine the intended import. There is the difficulty that $\epsilon\rho\omega\tau\acute{\alpha}\nu \upsilon\pi\epsilon\rho$ is only found here, whereas $\epsilon\rho\omega\tau\acute{\alpha}\nu \pi\epsilon\rho\iota$ is of frequent occurrence and unquestioned meaning. Compare John 17 where it is found repeatedly, and can have but one force - to pray or make request for - in the sense of "touching" or "concerning." Is it critical, or reasonable, that $\epsilon\rho\omega\tau\acute{\alpha}\nu \upsilon\pi\epsilon\rho$ should mean the same? It appears to me beyond doubt that it is not. The Revisers themselves give us not only "in behalf of" but "for the sake of," or more briefly and far more commonly "for." Now, "in behalf of" renders no just sense in this context; but what of "for," i.e. "for the sake of?" "Now, we beseech you, brethren, for (or, for the sake of) the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ and our gathering together unto Him," etc.

Here we have a definite sense which fits in admirably with the connexion. . . . How far the Authorized translators may have so regarded the context, it is difficult to say; but the transition from "for the sake of," or "for," to "by reason of" or "by" is easy, and in this case might perhaps be allowed to approximate. Even Bishop Ellicott, who adopted "touching" for want of duly appreciating the contextual bearing if not necessity, admits that an adjectival meaning is grammatically tenable; and certain it is that, from the Vulgate to Erasmus, Zwingle, Calvin, Piscator, Beza, Estius, etc., a crowd of others hold to this as the true scope. Meyer first assumes that it is strange to the New Testament, and then argues against the reasonableness of the apostle's choosing for the object of adjuration the very point he is going to instruct them on. But this is his own oversight. They are distinct and even contrasted objects.

I cannot but think therefore that, while the Authorized Version in substance gives the sense, the Revisers have missed it completely, and substituted a meaning which tends to obscure and falsify the passage. The adjectival force "by" with a verb of entreaty is known from the earliest extant remains of classical Greek; and none can deny that the force of a motive or a plea ("for the sake of" or "for") abode to the last, and is nowhere more usual than in the Hellenistic Greek of the New Testament. So rendered, the phrase runs consistently, and the argument or ground of entreaty yields a meaning in perfect accordance with the verse that follows, and the entire paragraph. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.101-104)

for [or, for the sake of]: Did not the Revisers, like others who have thus translated the clause, assume that the presence (or coming) of our Lord is identical with His day, and render $\upsilon\pi\epsilon\rho$ here "touching," either because they quite identified these events in their thoughts, or because they had no distinct notion of the context? (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.105-106) for [or, for the sake of]: It may be remarked here that not only older scholars like Erasmus and Beza hold to "by" as the true sense in this connection, but Wahl, of recent years adds his high authority, as also Matthiae and Jelf allow the principle, and the late Greek Professor

2 Thessalonians Notes

Scholefield, of Cambridge, though preferring “concerning” from not understanding the argument and context. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.115) for [or, for the sake of]: The authorized version appears to be substantially right in thus translating ὑπέρ, when we bear the context in mind. Such is the rendering of the Vulgate, as well as of Luther. Professor Scholefield also, though choosing the sense “concerning,” because of his interpretation, admits the sense “by” to be “an unquestionable one.” The fact cannot be disputed that “on account of,” “for the sake of,” are most common renderings: this sense of the word, connected with expressions of prayer and entreaty, is pretty nearly equivalent to our “by.” None of the passages, such as Rom. 9:27; 2 Cor. 7:4; 9:3; Phil. 1:7, cited by Rosenmüller, Schleusner, Macknight, Whitby or Elliott, is apposite, because not one occurs after such a verb as ἐρωτάω. Let an instance be produced of ὑπέρ after a word of beseeching, where it can be rendered in any other way. In certain cases, it is used, as Phavorinus says, ὁμοίως τῷ περὶ, but not, I believe, in a connexion parallel to the present, where it assimilates to προς, as Stephanus observes, and translates it “per: ut Greg. ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ δέομαι, rogo te per Christum. Sic. II. ω. Καί μιν ὑπὲρ πατρὸς καὶ μητέρος ἠυκόμοιο Λίσσασο, καὶ τέκεος.” (Prospect 1:167, Bible Treasury N1:367) for [or, for the sake of]: No doubt the preposition may, and does often, mean “in regard to,” or “on behalf of,” a little stronger than περί. But the question is the meaning of ὑπέρ, neither in itself, nor in other constructions, but with such words of entreaty as ἐρωτάω, as distinguished from ἐρωτάω περί, where the sense of “in the place of,” or “instead of” is excluded, as here. To me it appears that the precise meaning of ἐρ. ὑπέρ, in such a case as the present, can only be “by reason of,” or briefly “by,” and, if motive be made more prominent, “for the sake of,” or briefly “for.” (Bible Treasury 11:187)

for [or, for the sake of]: ἐρωτᾶν περί, I submit to the Revisers or any competent biblical scholars, is “to beseech touching” (as in John 17); ἐρ. ὑπέρ has the different sense of giving the motive or ground of the entreaty. (Bible Treasury 18:15) for [or, for the sake of]: I take the opportunity of stating my conviction, which I have reason to know Mr. Birks shares, that the auth. ver. is quite justified in giving “by the coming (or presence) of our Lord Jesus Christ,” rather than “with regard to.” So it is in the Æthiopic probably, the Arabic, Gothic, Syriac, and Vulgate. Mr. Elliott, and the commentators he follows, have overlooked the most important elements for deciding the true meaning. It is not a question of ὑπέρ only, but of ὑπέρ with a verb of entreating, which yields regularly the sense “for the sake of” or “by.” (Matthiae’s Gr. Gram. vol. ii. § 582; Jelf, vol. ii. § 630.)

Bp. Ellicott avoids the error of Mr. Elliott, who doubts whether ὑπέρ ever bears what he calls the “adjurative sense;” but, while admitting that it is “grammatically tenable,” he contends that it is by no means “exegetically probable,” and that it is without precedent in the New Testament. But the latter is an unreasonable objection; because there is no other instance in the New Testament, that I know, of ἐρωτάω, or an equivalent word, with this preposition (save 2 Cor. 5:20, which Wahl takes as = per, Mr. Green as “on behalf of,” which is inapplicable here; but I wave this as doubtful); and therefore we must be regulated by its ordinary force in such constructions. (Lect. on Rev., p. 299-300) for [or, for the sake of]: As some have questioned the exact force of the phrase, ἐρωτῶμεν δὲ ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοὶ, ὑπὲρ τῆς π. κ. τ. λ., let me take this opportunity of remarking that it is an undoubted case of the genitive of relation after a verb of entreaty. This, with περὶ would point to that “in respect of” which one entreated; but with ὑπέρ it is rather the motive “for,” or “for the sake of,” “by reason of” or simply “by,” which the appeal was made. This is so true that we find it in so early a Greek author as Homer, λίσσομαι ὑπὲρ (Il. xv. 660; xxii. 338; xxiv. 467); and in the same sense without the preposition (Il. ix. 451; Od. ii. 68). Liddell and Scott say, even in their seventh edition, ὑπὲρ in Homer only joined with λ.; but even Homer joins it with γυνάξομαι (Il. xv. 665.), another like verb, as they admit was done later. It is certain therefore that “by” as in the A.V. is no desperate shift but justified from the earliest writings in Greek letters. “In the interest of” might pass if it offered a reasonable meaning, but it seems barely intelligible. But to say that “the day of the Lord” was their hope is a pure blunder and untrue. The fact is that this sense is only a case of a far more general principle, as any student can see in Donaldson’s Greek Grammar, § 453 (ee) (a). In the New Testament we have ἐρ. περὶ where a person or thing is in question, touching whom or for which one beseeches, as in John 17 passim; 1 John 5:16. It is natural to suppose, therefore, that the apostle would have used περὶ if he had meant no more here than the subject concerning or touching which he was entreating them. This however he is not doing, but more.

It does therefore seem not quite satisfactory to take ὑπέρ here, with Bishop Ellicott, as involving some traces of the idea of benefit to, or furtherance of, the παρουσία. It was really the “day,” not the presence, which had been misinterpreted or misused, as we see in verse 2; but, had it been otherwise, is it not vague, if intelligible, that the apostle wished to promote its commodum? “On behalf of” is right in 2 Cor. 5:20, but here surely inapplicable. Thus Bp. Chr. Wordsworth develops this idea, as if the apostle here pleaded on behalf of what had been misrepresented by others. But this is just the root error. He is here arguing the presence of Christ as our hope against the misrepresentation. The subject matter of which he had been treating in 2 Thess. 1 was the “day of the Lord”; and of this he again resumes in verse 2 and onward. His “presence” comes in as a distinct though connected point of consolation and joy, by or for the sake of which he besought them not to be troubled by the false alarm about the awful day. He is not conjuring them by that concerning which he was about to explain; nor is it a question of doing justice to a misrepresented subject, but of entreating them by their heavenly hope as a motive why they should not be agitated by the baseless rumor that the awful day of the Lord’s judgment of the earth had arrived.

It seems then that the force of the context, and especially the modification rendered necessary by the verb of beseeching, have not been duly weighed by those who contend for “concerning,” or “touching,” a meaning which here leads to the confounding the ground of entreaty in verse 1 contrasted with the subject the apostle is discussing from verse 2 and onward, after having paved the way for it in chap. 1. Besides, is ὑπέρ ever so used with a verb of entreaty save in this case? The special instance naturally calls for a rendering equally special. No scholar has treated the question with less exactness than the late Prof. B. Jowett; and the reason was no lack of ability or scholarship, but that he had no perception of the apostle’s meaning. He was misled unconsciously by the confusion of that theology for which he had scant respect: this he too often avenged on scripture. The same defect pervades almost all others who had more respect for the written word than that learned man. (Bible Treasury N4:249, N10:232, Three Prophetic Gems (2nd art.) p.28-32.) for [or, for the sake of]: “touching” or “in behalf of” the coming or presence of our Lord Jesus Christ seems to be founded on a misapprehension of the contextual requirement. Nobody doubts that either is a good rendering of the preposition itself. But the connected language may modify, as well as the subject-matter; and all this has to be weighed. Was it not assumed by the Revisers, as in Alford’s Commentary, that the coming of our Lord was the theme which he was about to explain to the Thessalonians? “It is most unnatural,” says the Dean in objection to the rendering of the Vulgate, Authorised Version and many ancient commentators, “that the apostle should thus conjure them by that, concerning which he was about to teach them.” This however is exactly opposed to the fact; for he is beseeching them ὑπὲρ τῆς π. τ. κ. ἡ. Ἰ. Χ. κ. ἡ. ἐ. ἐ. ἁ. not to be quickly shaken by a false impression about the day of the Lord. This, not His presence, is the real subject in hand. They are so distinct, that the apostle entreats ὑπὲρ the one not to be troubled about a wrong view of the other. It is the confusion of the two which led to the wrong rendering, as it also forbids the right understanding of the argument and of the truth in the context. It is impossible to read attentively the chapter before and the following verses without perceiving that the apostle is treating of that day, as the Authorised translators rightly saw in verse 3. And therefore it is that in verse 8 we have, not of the Lord's coming merely, but "of the manifestation of his coming," which really for the sense coalesces with His day. The one is for the gathering to Him of His friends; the other, for the destruction of His foes. Hence it is most intelligible to beseech the brethren, for the sake or on account of that blessed hope, not to be soon agitated nor yet troubled by the error that the day of the Lord was there. He begs them by a motive of deepest comfort not to be upset by the delusion that the day was present. How could this be, as the Lord had not yet come and gathered His own to Himself on high? How could it be, seeing that the apostasy and the man of sin were not yet developed in all their matured and manifested lawlessness, as they must be for the Lord to execute His judgment on them when that day dawns? This may serve to convince serious readers that the actual misunderstanding was about the ἡμέρα or day, not the παρουσία or presence, as has been erroneously taken for granted. Accordingly too the rendering with a verb of entreaty as here, is properly "for the sake of," "by reason of," or, more tersely, "by," as in all the well-known English versions (Wiclif, Tyndale, Cranmer, Geneva, Rhemish, and Authorised Version). It is uncritical to confound ἐρωτᾶν περὶ with ἐρ. ὑπὲρ, as the Revisers have done; when it was a question of beseeching for a person or asking about a thing, the former is the constant and correct phrase. We are therefore entitled to infer that ἐρ. ὑπὲρ has its own distinctive force; and as "on behalf" or "instead of" is excluded by the nature of the case, so the bearing of the context most naturally points to some such rendering as is in the Authorised Version, and beyond just doubt disproves "touching" in the Revised Version or any other rendering of like import. (Bible Treasury 14:15-16)

for [or, for the sake of]: (See also Lectures on Revelation, p. xxviii-xxix, Lect. on the Second Coming, p. 212, Bible Treasury N4:248, N12:15,63, Pamphlets p. 415)

our: In a comparatively minor detail that follows in the verse, the Revisers have shown better scholarship; for neither "by" nor any substitute for it has a right to stand in the last clause. The structure of the phrase not only requires no such insertion but absolutely precludes and condemns any supplement of the kind. . . . The older translation shows that those responsible for it paid no heed to this (the two items as closely associated events), the unequivocal import of the construction; for they have, on the contrary, interpolated a word which, however small, severs the objects, which the form of the original does and could not but intimate to be in the strictest union. The Revisers were therefore at liberty and indeed responsible as faithful translators to expunge the second "by." They thereby represent the coming of the Lord Jesus and our gathering together unto Him as two parts of the joint idea brought before us by the Holy Spirit. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.102)

our: And these two wondrous events are so closely associated by one article in the Greek, that the second "by" in the A.V. is an impertinent and injurious intrusion. (Three Prophetic Gems (2nd article), p.58, Bible Treasury N4:270).

our: The word "by" has no business there at all. It is printed in italics to show you that it is not in the original, but there is even more than that: the original excludes the word, and, therefore, it was really a mistake on the part of our translators to introduce it. The particular form of phrase employed by the Holy Ghost brackets the two ideas, and makes them to be one connected whole. The coming of our Lord Jesus and our gathering are the two parts of one great transaction. Now, if you bring in the word "by," it separates them, instead of combining them together. It is remarkable that the translators, who were real scholars, should have overlooked the point; but any person to whom it is pointed out, who knows the Greek language, will see in an instant what I mean. It is one of the peculiarities of that language that one article is used when it is intended to bring in two things. If they mean to separate the two, they bring in a second article. There is no second article in this case. For instance, where it is said, "Our God and Father" there is one article used, because the same person that is God is also Father, and in order to combine the two the one article is used. (Bible Treasury N12:46)

our: The Revisers however have correctly expunged the "by" of the Authorised Version in the same clause; for the one article of course forms the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ into one closely connected object of thought with "our gathering together unto him," instead of dissociating them as the unwarranted insertion of "by" does. (Bible Treasury 14:16)

our: [See note on 2 Thess. 2:2]

2:2 shaken in [lit., from your]: It would seem scarce credible to intelligent Christians, if happily ignorant of the dreary comments written on Scripture, that Dr. Macknight interprets this as "shaken from any honest purpose which they had formed concerning their worldly affairs." But his translation, popular as the work has been, is as incompetent as his commentary is worldly-minded throughout. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.116) shaken in [lit. from your] . . . the Lord is present: in the endeavor to be literal have they not missed our own idiom [in the RV]? Dr. Angus ought to be able to say whether "shaken from your mind" is good English. The Authorised Version is at least idiomatic. But they have restored the true reading of "the Lord," not of "Christ," and they have given the correct version "is now present" or rather "is present," instead of the misleading "is at hand," which has darkened expositors, preachers, and readers without end. (Bible Treasury 14:16)

by spirit, or by word, or by letter: Even if we punctuate with Lachmann, and Theile, &c., or with Webster and Wilkinson, the only real meaning is the claim of a spirit of communication, oral ministry, and a letter, falsely attributed to the apostle. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.121)

the day of the Lord is present: Here one is obliged to differ from the authorized version. For this I am sorry; but at the same time it is inevitable for the truth's sake.

There are two points erroneously given: one in the common Greek text, the other in the common English Bible. "The day of Christ" is not the right reading in this place. All scholars, let them be who they may, Romanists, Lutherans, Calvinists, high, broad, or low church, in short, every competent person, no matter where he may be, acknowledges the truth of what has just been affirmed, which I state thus strongly that no one present may imagine that I insist on any word as a better reading, for which there is not the most satisfactory evidence. It is "the day of the Lord" in the best MSS., &c. Now the "day of the Lord," although closely connected with the "day of Christ," is not absolutely the same. Not that I propose to discuss nice distinctions now, because this would involve details; I confine myself to the notorious fact. "The day of the Lord" means the time when the Lord will deal judiciously with this world, with nations, with living men, with the earth. . . .

Carefully observe, however, that what they taught was not that it was "at hand," or soon coming, but that it was really come. Such is the unequivocal meaning of the word (ἐνέστηκε). It occurs in the same form in about half a dozen places in the New Testament. I think it may be proved to a plain English reader that what I am stating now is certainly correct. Thus, in Romans 8:38, "things present" (ἐνεστώτα) is the same word. What makes it more striking is that "things to come" (μέλλοντα) is used also, and another word. Now if the former meant "things at hand," there could be no contrast; but this there is very decidedly between "things present" and "things to come." In short, who could set over against each other "things at hand" and "things to come," if the former word signified pretty much the same thing as the latter? In 1 Corinthians 3:22, the same contrast occurs. In 1 Corinthians 7:26, "for the present necessity" is the same word: a necessity "at hand" is not the sense, but one already existing. (Dean Alford says, "Instant, already begun;" for this is the meaning of ἐνεστώσαν, not imminent, shortly to come." But is this sound English? He means what I do; but his expression seems faulty. "Instant" would be generally considered as substantially like "imminent," rather than as "present.") So again with Hebrews 9:9, we have the same word, meaning the time then present, and certainly not a future season. In Gal. 1:4 we read of "this present evil world" or age. The world to come will not be evil but blessed. The present age, and the present age only, is evil. It is abundantly plain that in these cases the word not only means "actually there," but it can mean nothing else. The meaning "at hand," or just coming, would destroy the sense in all these occurrences of the word. I do not recollect any other in the New Testament. I have named five instances, and this in 2 Thess. 2:2 makes six.

2 Thessalonians Notes

Another form of the verb appears in 2 Timothy 3:1, where it is said that in the last days perilous times shall come. But even here, though future, not perfect, it does not mean "shall be at hand," but actually there. The reason why I do not dwell on this last is that the tense is not the same. The same force is found, as far as I know, in every occurrence of the word in other books, as the Apocrypha and the profane authors. I have gone into the matter the more because it used to be alleged, and may be still repeated, that in three or four cases in classic Greek the word has the sense of "at hand." But I have examined those instances carefully, and am prepared to show that there the word does not require, and I think will not even bear, the meaning "at hand" any more than in the New Testament. But it ought to be clear that the word of God does not demand such search into a few stray passages in Greek orators or comedians, even if doubtful, for the purpose of deciding its own meaning. The uniform sense in every other place of scripture ought to prevail, and must, I think, in an unbiassed judgment. Thus, then, as there cannot be a doubt that the true text is "the day of the Lord," so "is present" is the true translation of the last word. (Pamphlets, p.417-20, see also p.436)

the day of the Lord is present: The day of Christ, as in the Epistle to the Philippians 1:10, 2:16, has different associations from the judgment of the quick. . . . I am not aware of any one before Grotius who pointed out the mistranslation. But that learned and able man was too worldly-minded, too disposed to human ideas, in short too unspiritual, to make any effective use of that observation for intelligence of the passage by clearing away the obstruction to the truth created by an error which perverts the true sense.

Here are the two opening verses of the chapter according to the ascertained ancient text, and correctly translated; for in the Text. Rec. and in the A.V. there are faults in both respects: — "Now we beseech you, brethren, by (or, for the sake of) the presence (or, coming) of our Lord Jesus Christ and our gathering together unto him, that ye be not soon shaken in (or, from) your mind, nor yet troubled, either by Spirit, or by word, or by letter as through (or, from) us, as that the day of the Lord is present." As in ver. 1 there is but one article binding together our gathering and the Lord's presence, the second "by" in the A.V. must therefore disappear. Again, in the last clause of ver. 2 "Christ" is read only in inferior copies and versions; "Lord" is incontestable diplomatically, and alone expresses the true aim. Lesser points we may dismiss.

But there remain the grave questions of rendering ὑπὲρ in the first verse, and ἐνέστηκεν in the second. As to the first, the connection with a verb of entreaty has not been adequately considered, and the connection the peculiar one of a motive from joy and hope to counteract a false alarm. As there is no other instance in the N.T., it is not surprising that the rendering "by" or some equivalent should be unexampled there. So therefore all our older English translations, with the Vulgate and most of the other ancient versions. Wahl in his N.T. Lexicon refers to 2 Cor. 5:20 as another instance of "by;" but the context there favours "for," in the sense of "on behalf of" Christ. Here such a force yields not this sense exactly, but "by" or "for the sake of," as it appears to me for good reason.

As to the true and only legitimate meaning of ἐνέστηκεν, there ought to be no doubt. It was a word every day in Attic use, as we may gather from the Clouds (779) of Aristophanes, where it is said of a suit going on, and not merely close at hand.

Can anything be more decisive, outside the N.T. than the technical phrase ὁ ἐνεστὼς χρόνος among grammarians for the "present tense"? Indeed it is the one and only meaning of the word in the known authors of Greece. Thucydides does not employ this form of the word; but it occurs in Herodotus, Xenophon, Polybius, and Dion Cassius; and in no sense save as actually existing or present. It is the same with the orators Isaeus and Isocrates, Aeschines and Demosthenes. So again the philosophers, Aristotle and Plato, employ it, but in this sense only. It would be easy to add more, but is not this enough? Where is a single instance of "imminent"? It does not occur in the Septuagint save in the Apocryphal writings: but there it occurs in 3 Esdras 9:6; 1 Macc. 12:44; 2 Macc. 3:17; 12:3, in all which it can only mean "actually there," nowhere "imminent." (There is a passage in the Epistle of Barnabas, cap. i. § 7, so decisive of the question that it may interest the reader. ἐγνώρισεν γὰρ ἡμῖν ὁ δεσπότης διὰ τῶν προφητῶν τὰ παρεληλυθότα καὶ τὰ ἐνεστώτα καὶ τῶν μελλόντων δοῦς ἀπαρχὰς ἡμῖν. Here we have τὰ ἐνεστώτα between the past and the future definitely appropriated and distinguished by one of the earliest writers after the apostles. But how is this to be if it could by any possibility mean also what was future, however near? But this is not all. Even as late as Hefele's fourth edition of the Apostolic Fathers so called, and others later still, we had only the old Latin interpretation of the earlier chapters, in which the scripture sentence is thus rendered, Propalavit enim Dominus per Prophetas quae praeterierunt, et futurum dedit nobis initia scire. For some reason, or through carelessness, the translator omitted "things present," which the editor explained in a loose bungling way. Tischendorf discovered at the end of the Sinaitic MS. the missing Greek, which enables us to judge the imperfectness of the version. Of this recent editors, as Hilgenfeld, de Gebhart, Harnack, and Zahn abroad, and others at home, have availed themselves to give the full text. But a similar phrase, with ἐνεστώτα for present things invariably, occurs in Theoph. ad Autol. I. 14; II. 39, and in Hippol. de Chr. et Antichr. 2 (Lagarde, 1858). Abp. Wake was therefore not justified in rendering "instantia" "those things which are near to come" (Barn. Ep. iv.); it means "present things" (or N.T. truths), as in the Vulgate of Rom. 8:38; 1 Cor 3:22, &c. In short, it is so used classically. The Latin word was more vague.)

But say Webster and Wilkinson (G.T.), ἐνέστηκεν everywhere else in N.T. means "present"; here, however, it has doubtless (!) the more ordinary classical meaning, "imminence," to be close "at hand." Now not only "the more ordinary" but the invariable classical meaning perfectly agrees with its uniform sense in the N.T. The instances adduced by Liddel and Scott (even in the seventh edition of their Greek Lexicon) for "pending" or "instant" really mean what was actually begun or present. And their vacillation in giving both for the same quotation is just like Bengel's, who here says, "great nearness is signified by this word; for ἐνεστώς is present!" Exactly so; and therefore great nearness is not meant. They seem all to have been misled by taking for granted that here "imminent" must be intended to make any tolerable sense.

In short the R.V. has here corrected a sure and evident misrendering, which owed its origin to theological error ancient and modern: the assumption latent and unsuspected, that the misrendering alone makes sense here; whereas it alters the meaning of the text and throws the reasoning into confusion. The sense it imposes is purely traditional, and opposed to the truth intended. The bad exegesis was probably what led to the unsound philology.

I am aware that the American revisers, though often right, here cleave to the misconception, and render it "is just at hand"; but can they point to a single case where any correct Greek writer ever employs the verb in this tense save for "present"? Long as the notion has prevailed, it is without foundation in fact.

Further, it is notorious that there is a quite different phrase (ἐγγύς) for "nearness" in the N.T. and in all other writings; and if emphasis were sought, the verb in the perfect was used (ἤγγικε); as also ἐφέστηκε (2 Tim. 4:6). But one had hoped that no exact scholar would sanction the laxity of supposing that the apostle confounds the meaning of two kindred words, each of which has its own precise sense, ἐνέστ. "is present," and ἐφέστ. "is close at hand." On the face of it the erroneous rendering makes the apostle contradict himself; for in Rom. 13:12 he tells the saints that the day is at hand, meaning no other than the day of the Lord, as all surely must admit. How could the misleaders in Thessalonica be charged with error, if they had only taught that the day of the Lord is at hand?

It is thus evident that these divines, like others before them, venture to conceive that the errorists gave out the substantially same thing that the apostle urged later as the truth of God. (Three Prophetic Gems (2nd article), p.20-25, and Bible Treasury N4:236,246-247)

the day of the Lord is present: In the first place, it is generally assumed that the day of Christ (or "of the Lord," for that is the true reading) (So all the critical editors known to me, such as Griesbach, Knappe, Scholz, Lachmann, Tischendorf, &c.; and this wholly upon external evidence.) is identical with "the coming (παρουσία, presence) of our Lord Jesus Christ" in the verse before. But it is a groundless idea. If it be affirmed, let proofs be adduced. It is quite clear to me that the day of the Lord is a distinct though connected thing. In its full, ultimate sense, and no one disputes that such is its force here, it supposes the presence of the Lord; it is the judgment consequent upon that. But the presence, or coming of the Lord, by no means necessarily supposes judgment. Is there a word of judgment, or wrath, or destruction, expressed or implied in the full description given in 1 Thess. 4 of the Lord's coming for His own? So when the apostle says, "what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming? For ye are our glory and joy," (1 Thess. 2:19, 20,) where is the word of judgment or evil? On the other hand, when the day of the Lord occurs, it is, whether used in a full or a limited application, habitually connected with judgment and its consequences (compare 1 Thess. 5:2-4; Zeph. 1,2,3; Zech. 14; Mal. 3,4) I conclude therefore that, though the coming of the Lord may include the day of the Lord, as the whole includes a part, the coming of the Lord is in itself presented in an aspect of grace, not of judgment, and that the terms and things are not to be confounded.

In the second place, while it is true that the day of the Lord cannot come before the apostasy and the revelation of the man of sin arrive, which are to be judged in that day, yet is there a serious error in the English rendering of the last clause of ver. 2, "is at hand." The word usually rendered "at hand," "near," or "nigh," is ἐγγύς, or ἐγγίζω "come near," as is known to scholars. The present word ἐνίστημι, on the other hand, is never so rendered in the New Testament, save in the passage before us. On the contrary, occurring several times, it is used invariably in a way which excludes the possibility of such a rendering (more especially when it is, as here, in the perfect tense). The first occurrence is in Rom. 8:38. It is evident that here ἐνεστώτα cannot mean things at hand. It is contrasted with μέλλοντα, i.e. "things to come." It signifies only and emphatically "things present," and is so rendered in the common Bible. See the same words and the same contrast in 1 Cor. 3:22. Again, in 1 Cor. 7:26, διὰ τὴν ἐνεστώσαν ἀνάγκην is properly translated "for the present distress." A distress not actually come, but only at hand or coming, would spoil the meaning. The next is Gal. 1:4, "this present evil world," the only possible meaning of the word here. The next world, or age, will not be evil, and therefore "at hand," or "imminent," is shut out. Compare also Heb. 9:9, εἰς τὸν καιρὸν τὸν ἐνεσθηκότα "for the time then present" (not "at hand," which cannot be the true force). All these, notice, are instances of the same tense as 2 Thess. 2:2. The only other occurrence is 2 Tim. 3:1, ἐνστήσονται, in the future middle. Here the English version renders it, "shall come." Still, the meaning indubitably is not "shall be at hand," which could have no point, but "shall be there." To be impending merely was little: the grave thing was, that perilous times should be actually present. It may be concluded, therefore, from an induction thus complete, that in all the other instances the authorised version is right, but in 2 Thess 2:2 it is wrong. It is not conceivable to uphold both; so that, if right in 2 Thess 2:2, the version must be wrong everywhere else. But as we have seen, from the intrinsic meaning of the word, as well as from the sense imperatively demanded by the context, that in all the other cases the translators are justified. They were therefore mistaken here, and the proper rendering, in conformity with their own translation of the word in the same tense elsewhere, ought to be, "as that the day of the Lord is present." (Since the above was in print, I have had the opportunity of examining "Le Nouveau Testament de notre Seigneur Jesus-Christ, traduit en Suisse, par une Société de Ministres de la Parole de Dieu, sur le texte Grec reçu," (seconde édition, &c., 1849,) where the original is rendered, "Que le jour du Christ est là.") So the Revisers give, "As that the day of the Lord is now present," adding in italics the adverb, which is needless emphasis. The sense is strong and clear without "now."

... Compare, for instance, Is. 13, where God's judgment of Babylon and the Chaldeans is so designated: "Howl ye, for the day of Jehovah is at hand it shall come as a destruction from the Almighty," &c. (The words in the LXX are ἐγγύς γὰρ ἡμέρα Κυρίου. Will men defend a version of 2 Thess. 2:2 which makes the Holy Spirit contradict there what He has unequivocally affirmed in Is. 13:6? The Septuagint and the Greek Testament are in harmony here. It is the English version which is at fault.) (See also Joel 1:15, 2:1-11; Amos 5:18,20; Zeph. 1:7,14,15, &c.) (The Prospect 1:166, Bible Treasury N1:351,365-366)

the day of the Lord is present: Both the Dean of Canterbury and Bishop of Bristol agree with me that ἐνέστηκεν means "is already come," not merely "at hand," as very faultily represented in the English Bible. . . . The criticism and the doctrine of the Horae Apoc. as to this are unfounded.

Others are no better. Schleusner who is quoted writes loosely; and the words of Hesychius (vol. i. col. 1233, ed Alberti) do not warrant the inference that the same word in the same tense means either present or future; for προκείμενον seems only a following up of παρόντα, not another variety of signification. The verb is generally used for what lies stretched before, as (meats) ready laid, the question in hand, things already settled and agreed on. I am not aware of its ever distinctly meaning the future. But so emphatically the contrary is ἐνεστώς that, as is well known, grammarians have selected it as the proper term for the present tense (χρόνος ἐνεστώς). The latest (sixth) edition of Liddell and Scott's Lexicon shews their statement modified as to this; as in fact none of the three instances cited from classical authors (Ar. Nub. 779, Isæus, 88.40, Dem. 896.49) necessarily means impending, Lat. imminens. Dr. Scott has himself acknowledged to me that they may all, as I believe they all do, mean “present,” and thus harmonize instead of clashing with the regular force of the word everywhere else, both in the Sept. (including the Apocrypha) and the New Testament. Thus the passage in the Clouds means “while one suit was still pending,” i.e. actually going on, not impending or future. Again, Mr. E[lliott] does not appear to have hit the force of Isæus on the estate of Hagnias; and here, though I have no doubt whatever, I prefer for obvious reasons to cite from the celebrated Sir W. Jones’s version, p. 139 (London, 1779). “Moreover the inheritance of Hagnias is not yet well secured to me, since some actions brought against the witnesses for perjury will make it necessary for me to obtain a second adjudication.” This is a very different thing from an “impending trial;” and confirms the general rule instead of being an exception for which we have to account. In the demurrer in reference to Apaturius, the third alleged exception, the suits were already begun when they came to arbitration.

2 Thessalonians Notes

So the argument on παρεσιν, John 11:28-30, is invalid for Mr. E[lliott] and rather strengthens what he contends against. For our Lord had actually quitted the place where He was when the news of the sickness of Lazarus arrived, traversed the considerable intervening distance, and was only just outside the village. Πάρεστιν is strictly true there, and in no way modifies ἐνεσθηκεν in our text. If the false teachers at Thessalonica taught that the Lord had left the right hand of God and begun the judgments of “that day,” without having yet caught up the saints in Thessalonica or anywhere else, it would be quite parallel to the case of John 11. The word therefore retains here also and everywhere its characteristic sense. (Lect. on Rev., p. 300-301)

the day of the Lord is present: It is now pretty generally known that the true text and proper translation of the last clause is “that the day of the Lord is present.” I am old enough to remember the time when scarcely a single person in the world seemed to be aware of this; and now, I am thankful to say, there are only a few prejudiced men to dispute it. It can scarcely be doubted that the present revisers will alter the version here, and alter it for the better too. I was agreeably surprised to see an American divine among the first who bowed to the truth in this passage; and now nobody who can pretend to be well informed of the grounds for a sound judgment on it makes any question about it, unless it be a few individuals committed in earlier days to a strong prejudgment against it. (Bible Treasury 9:378)

the day of the Lord is present:

[Dear Mr. Kelly, Sept. 1, 1851

... But what, then, of the ἐνεσθηκεν? Is not its proper meaning, “is present?” No doubt, just as παρεσιν, and such similar words, mean “is present.” But they are words which, in every language that I am acquainted with, are susceptible, if the context requires it, of the meaning, close at hand. I have little doubt that my friend, Mr. Kelly, when looking out from some height in Guernsey [where we both of us were at the time of the correspondence] for the steamer, in which he was expecting a friend, has sometimes, when he saw her steering into port, made use of the common exclamation, “Here she is!” And what would he have thought, had a friend who heard him looked carefully at every part of the ground within twenty yards of the speaker, and said, “She is not here?” “The Master is here” (παρεσιν), said Martha to Mary, in John 11:28; and yet, adds verse 30, “Now Jesus had not yet come into the village,” that is, the village where Martha spoke to Mary. ...

Yours very faithfully,

E.B.Elliott]

... In my opinion his own erroneous system of thought, along with the lack of the habit of expecting in the word of God perfect accuracy and nice shades of difference, apparently made not the style only but the subject and the evidence difficult to his mind. ...

... [Paul] entreats them, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ and our gathering together unto Him (which he presents, not as two distinct objects, but as a united idea before the mind by the one article, τῆς), that they should not be soon shaken in mind (“from their mind” may be literal, but is not idiomatic English), nor yet troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as by us [that is, as if it were by us], as [or to the effect] that the day of the Lord is present. ...

But what strikes one as peculiar is, that Mr. E.’s illustration and use of John 11 proves nothing, save against his argument. For, according to his own shewing, the person or thing had actually removed from the place where either had been, had traversed the space that separated, and had arrived at the place where the person was whom it was proposed to reach, though not to the precise spot on which he stood. To take the case used, my friend would have really steamed from England (or France, as it might be), crossed the sea, and entered Guernsey roads, when one might exclaim of the packet, Here she is! So in the scripture cited: our blessed Lord had left where He staid two days after receiving the message, had traversed the way which constituted the distance thence to Bethany, and had reached the locality or district, though not yet in the village. ... Even if the laxity of common life allowed of our saying, Here he is! when he had not begun to move from a distant land (which is the true way of stating the question, not when he had come to the immediate neighbourhood though not the exact spot), how strange that such looseness of language should be transferred to an apostle’s inspired repudiation of an error! (Bible Treasury 11:186-89)

the day of the Lord is present: I wrote to Dr. Scott, who, after taking time to weigh them [the references in Liddell and Scott], as the point was of evident importance, had the candour to answer in the following terms: “On consideration of them, I am disposed to admit that there is none which seems necessarily to refer to a state of things not yet commenced.” ... [Imminence] is the meaning of ἐφεστώς (as in 2 Timothy 4), not of ἐνεστώς, which Schweighauser (a very different scholar from the slipshod Schleusner) pronounces (in Lex. Polyb., and, of course, in its ordinary classical usage) to mean “non instans vel imminens, sed qui cæptus est, i.e., præsens.” He mentions no exception; nor have I observed one. (Lect. on the Second Coming, p.209-210)

the day of the Lord is present: Again, it is unfounded that σαλευθῆναι ἀπὸ τοῦ νοός and θροεῖσθαι have the most distant reference to the excitement of hope, as the ordinary misinterpretation implies; they mean just such disturbance of mind as in Matthew 24:6; Mark 13:7. Mr. E[lliott] says “not as meaning frightened;” but far better scholars than he say the express contrary. “The verb θροέω, derived from ΘΡΕΟΜΑΙ, and connected with τρέω; compare Donalds. [Cratyl. sec. 272] properly implies ‘clamorem tumultuantem edere’ (Schott), and thence by a natural transition that terrified state (ταραχίζεσθαι Zonaras), which is associated with, and gives rise to, such kind of outward manifestations.” (Bp. Ellicott’s Comm. in loc.) To suppose the Christian’s joy in the anticipation of meeting the Son of God, the Bridegroom of the bride, to be expressible by the same terms as those of perturbation or alarm which might be produced by hearing of wars and rumours of wars, affliction, tribulation, &c., is not to me the evidence of a sound judgment in divine things, but of the reverse. (Bible Treasury 11:189)

the day of the Lord is present: For the Authorized Version is here wholly astray, and even inconsistent with its own rendering of every occurrence of the word elsewhere. The reader can compare Rom. 8:38; 1 Cor. 3:22; 7:26; Gal. 1:4; (2 Tim. 3:1;) and Heb. 9:9, which form the entire range of the word in the New Testament. Not only does it not convey “at hand” in any one of the other cases, but such a sense would be everywhere absurd and impossible. In the first two references “things present” (ἐνεστώτα) are contrasted with “things to come.” This could not be if the word really bore the sense of “just coming, imminent or at hand.” So again in the third instance the distress was actually “present,” not merely threatening but already come. Just as evidently in the fourth it is “the present age, evil as it is,” ὁ αἰὼν οὗτος or ὁ νῦν αἰὼν as the apostle calls it in Rom. 12:2 and 1 Tim. 6:17, contrasted with “that” or “the coming age” (Luke 18:30; 20:35; Heb.6:5), which is the very reverse, being good, righteous, peaceful, and glorious. . . . So even the different and future form in 2 Tim. 3:1, ἐνστήσονται does not mean that difficult or grievous times “impend,” but shall actually “come.” “Shall be soon coming” would altogether enfeeble the sense and ruin its force. Not otherwise is it with the last reference, where the meaning beyond controversy is “for the present time.” One can hardly conceive any reasonable man construing the phrase of the time soon to come or at hand.

Thus, on the ground of the New Testament usage, the weightiest help of all for our guidance in translating a disputed word, there can be no hesitation that the Revised Version is justified, and the Authorized Version at fault, as to the very important word at the end of the verse, the hinge of all sound exposition of the passage. But what of its use in the Septuagint, of such approved and acknowledged value as being the Hellenistic forerunner of New Testament Greek? The first instance, which Tromm (Concord. Gr. LXX. Interp. i.529) cites from Theodotion's version of Dan. 7:5, is a ridiculous blunder, εἰς καίρους ἐνεσάθη. The Aldine text was not so far wrong, yet reading εἰς μέρους which is hardly intelligible; and it has the same error as to the verb. The Complutensian gave it rightly, εἰς μέρος ἐν ἐσάθη as in the Alexandrian and Vatican MSS. The Chisian copy of the true Septuagint gives ἐπὶ τοῦ ἐνὸς πλευροῦ ἐσάθη. But this effaces the only instance save in the Apocryphal books; where Tromm gives 3 Esdras 5, 72[47], 9, 6; 1 Mac. 12:44; 2 Mac. 3:17; 4:43; 12:3; every one of which confirms the Revised Version in all respects, and the Authorized Version in every case save the unfounded “is at hand” before us, which means, and can only mean, “is present.”

It may be added that the word, and in the perfect too, is used in ordinary classical authors precisely as in the New Testament. See Herod. i.83; Isoc. 82B; Polyb.i.71,4; Plut. Lucull. 13; Dem.255,10, cf.274,6. The three instances, like the rest cited by Deans Liddell and Scott in their well-known Lexicon (Aristoph.Nub.779, Isaeus 88,40, Dem. 896,29), are of the usual import, not “imminent” but “present,” actually begun, literally set in. In each the suit was already commenced, even if still pending. It is the same beyond doubt with ὁ δὲ νῦν ἐνεστηκώς ἄγων, Lycurg, 148, 32; τοῦ ἐνεστώτος μηνός, Phil. Ap. Dem. 280, 12 means the present month, not one soon coming; and so does ἐνεστώς πόλεμος in Aeschin. 35,27. And χρόνος ἐνεστώς means the present, not future tense; as τραυμάτων ἐνεστώτων, Plat.Legg.878 B, means wounds inflicted, not merely threatened; and τὰ ἐνεστηκότα οἱ ἐνεστώτα πράγματα, Xen. Hell. 2.1,6; Polyb.2:26,3, means present circumstances, in no case “at hand.” Not any instance has been produced where the word in the perfect can be shown to mean a state of things not yet commenced. The sense, then, in writings as well profane as sacred, is uniformly “present,” not “at hand.” The rendering was therefore inexcusable.

This may suffice in a well-grounded way to assure the reader that the error so unscrupulously taught by fanatics in Thessalonica was, not that the day is “at hand” (for the apostle himself taught this expressly in Rom. 13:12), but that it had “actually come.” (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.110-113) is present: The Americans [correctors of the RV] are here thoroughly wrong in all Greek, profane as well as sacred; for ἐνείσθ. means “is present,” and not “is just at hand” or “impending.” (Bible Treasury 14:380)

the day of the Lord is present: [See also Lect. Intro. to the Epist. of Paul, p.355, Bible Treasury 1:60, 15:167, 17:139, N9:271, N10:224,230-231, and N12:14-15,63, Lect. on the Second Coming, p. 209-213, Christian Annotator 3:402.]

2:3 [it will not be]: Not a hint drops as to “the coming of the Lord.” Tyndale's Version of 1534 and Cranmer's of 1539 are therefore inexcusable in supplying the ellipse with the words, “for the Lord shall not come,” &c. Wiclif and the Rhemish avoid the matter by their usual adherence to the Vulgate, which literally reflects the incomplete structure of the Greek. The Geneva and Authorized Versions so far rightly cleave to “the day”; for it is a question of “the” day of the Lord. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.125)

[it will not be]: “That day shall not come” is an insertion of our translators, marked therefore by italics, though substantially correct. (Three Prophetic Gems (2nd article) p. 45)

the falling away: Our Authorized translators have utterly weakened the sense by rendering ἡ ἀποστασία “a” falling away. Beyond doubt it is “the apostasy,” and there is no ground whatever for depriving the phrase of its intentionally definite force. Nobody can pretend that it is abstract; and a quality would not have the article in Greek more than in English; so that Archbishop Newcome was as wrong in the principle as in the particular case. In the New Testament the word occurs only in Acts 21:21, and there is anarthrous, which testifies to the emphasis here expressed. There, however, it means “apostasy” though not “the apostasy” as here. This is better than softening it to falling away or forsaking. A verbal form occurs in 1 Tim. 4:1, where “apostatise” should have been preserved both for the sake of consistency, and to maintain the definite expression of religious defection. For this it means, not corruption but abandonment, as politically it expresses revolt from authority. See the Septuagint for its use in both these ways. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.126)

the falling away: . . . not a falling away, as substantially in all the well-known English Versions as well as the Authorized. It is not “discencioun” (Wiclif), nor “a departyng” (Tyndale), as Cranmer's Bible repeats in 1539, and the Geneva in 1557, nor “a revolt”, as in the Rhemish of 1582. It is “the apostasy”, and nothing else (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p. 249)

the falling away: Who can wonder that the various translators of old softened it down to “a” departing, revolt, or falling away? or that Wiclif and the Rhemish follow the Vulgate in an un-English slurring over the ellipse? (“The Coming, and the Day, of the Lord,” Three Prophetic Gems, p.48)

the falling away: [The RV] rightly say[s] “the falling away” or apostasy (Bible Treasury 14:16) man of sin: Tischendorf, in his last edition, and Westcott and Hort follow B, some 9 or 10 cursives, and several ancient versions, &c., in preferring “lawlessness” to “sin” in this phrase. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.124)

2:4 he ἅ sitheth: There is no sufficient warrant for the words “as God” in the Received Text as in our Authorized Version. They rather soften the force, where the true text leaves the assumption in its unmitigated arrogance. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.135)

he ἅ sitheth: All editors of note omit ὡς Θεόν: i.e. “as God.” (The Prospect 1:167)

he ἅ sitheth . . . that he is God: [The RV] rightly discard[s] “as God,” though it is hard to tell why they did not render more literally ὅτι ἐστὶν θεός at the end, instead of repeating the English phrase which represents the interpolated ὡς Θεόν. (Bible Treasury 14:16)

2:6 now . . . restraineth: There is no real ground of course for such a solecism as taking νῦν with τὸ κατέχον like Macknight and others. It is simply resumptive with καὶ, a particle of transition and not temporal, which is the less necessary as we have subsequently ὁ κατέχων ἄρτι. Even if “now” were used temporally as to the Thessalonians, it would not imply that there was a time coming when they would cease to know, which is ridiculous, but a contrast of present knowledge with past ignorance. And the logical force of the adverb here, as determined by the order of the words and the context or coherence, does not suppose, more than the false construction, any undue knowledge of God’s ways by His saints. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.146)

2 Thessalonians Notes

Λ restraineth: It is quite a mistake to suppose that verse 6 will bear “and ye know what is now restraining;” for νῦν is here a particle of transition, and fairly enough given in the English version. No more is implied than their general knowledge that there was a some one or thing which restrained; but ὁ κατέχων ἄρτι in verse 7 does mean that he restrains now. Next, ἐκ μέσου is correctly rendered “out of the way.” It is its regular known force in sacred and profane authors, whether connected or not with verbs implying separation, as any good lexicon may satisfy any one. Thus, in ἐκ τοῦ μέσου καθέζεσθαι (Herod. iii.83) the verb has nothing to do with that sense, which the phrase does carry. See also Dem. 323, 327 (Reiske). Accordingly the authorised version rightly connects ἕως ἐκ μ. γ. with ὁ κατέχων, while the beginning of verse 8 answers to the beginning of the 7th. If the phrase ἕως ἐκ μ. γ. applied to the wicked one, and meant “till he appears,” the force of καὶ τότε ἅποκ. would be weakened and useless. (Bible Witness & Review 1:283, Christian Annotator 2:322-323)

2:7 lawlessness: There is a link of importance missed by the English translators between the mystery of lawlessness already working and the lawless one who is yet to be revealed. The germ was there in the midst of professing Christianity, which was at last to issue in so portentous a conclusion. (The Prospect 1:167 and Bible Treasury N1:367) lawlessness . . . restraineth now until he be out of the way: Not “wickedness” or “iniquity,” or “unrighteousness,” still less “transgression of the law,” is the true reflection, but “lawlessness.”

The rendering of ver. 7 in the older English Versions is simply perplexing. (Some years ago use was made of some such version as this, or even the stronger one of “holding fast,” to oppose any application to the Spirit or the church. It was insinuated that the kind of restraint meant is illustrated by Zech. 5:8, i.e., some secret agent of God forcibly constraining, till in his withdrawal the wickedness rises in its strength and the man of sin is revealed. But this sense seems to be changed now.) Wiclif simply reproduces the Vulgate’s error of “hold” twice, for “withhold” which both the Vulgate and Wiclif gave rightly in ver. 6. The Rhemish follows suite with its usual servility. I confess inability even to conjecture W. Tyndale’s meaning, if he meant what is printed, or to correct the misprint if he did not mean it. “For the mystery of that iniquity doeth he all readie worke which onlie loketh, untill it be taken out of the waye.” (Ed.1534.) That of Cranmer (1539) resembles the rendering of Alford and Ellicott, save that “only” with them precedes “until”: “tyll he which now onely letteth be taken out of the waye.” Geneva led the way in substance for the Authorised Version, save that in both “taken” goes too far. “Till he withdraw” is perhaps unobjectionable, or “be out of the waye.”

But this last and very important clause has of late been questioned, though happily by few. It might have been thought that the last words of ver. 7 were too plain to be misconstrued. Nor are they in any version at all known nor even in G. Wakefield’s, or in Gr. Penn’s. The Vulgate takes it, as all the English from Wiclif to the Revised, to indicate the removal of the restrainer, leaving (as the Bishop of Gloucester says) the manner of the removal wholly undefined. So does the Memphitic; so the Pesch. and the Philox. Syriac Versions; so the Arabic and the Aethiopic of Walton’s Polyglott. Alford and Meyer may be adventurous, but here abide with the unbroken column of translators everywhere. Here then is a bold suggestion: “For the mystery of wickedness is already working (only there is at present one that restraineth) until it becomes developed out of the midst” &c. (Since writing these words I find that a Dominican, le Père Lambert (in his “Exposition des Prédications et des Promesses faites à l’Eglise pour les derniers temps de la Gentilité,” ii.314-318, Paris, 1806) resorts to a similar distortion of the last clause, “jusqu’ à ce que ce mystère sorte de son secret, ou paraisse au grand jour.” There is no parenthetic interpolation here, but no less violence is done otherwise to the preceding words, which are actually supposed to mean, “Seulement que celui qui salt maintenant en quoi consiste ce mystère, le retienne bien, jusqu’à,” &c. That is κατέχ. is taken in three distinct senses in order to banish the true meaning which supposes but one: (1) “ce qui empêche” (ver.6), (2) “celui qui salt,” and (3) “le retienne bien,” the understood supply (ver.7). The alternative for ver. 6, “à quoi il tient,” or “ce qui est nécessaire,” would in no way improve matters. Whether the English writer was indebted directly or indirectly to the older French work is of no moment; but it is of interest to see in both how one false step is apt to involve more, and that the truth is both simpler and deeper than either of these incoherent conjectures.) That is, even when abandoning the old “holding fast” for the sense here intended of “restraint,” he dislocates the sentence in order to avoid the truth of its withdrawal, when it will no longer be the secret working of lawlessness as now, but the lawless one displayed, with whom the Lord Jesus will then deal. There is nothing, says he, in the words ἐκ μέσου to signify removal or taking away! which he argues is “derived entirely” from the connected ἀρπάζω, αἶρω, ἐξέρχ. (Acts 23:10; 1 Cor. 5:9; 2 Cor. 6:17); whereas γίν. has not at all the sense of removal, but rather of origin or of existence. Now, waiving the “half” in Thuc. iv.133, and “in common” in Aristides ii.120 (Jebb), Herodotus over and over again refutes the statement that it is only the connected verb that gives, though of course it may strengthen, the notion of keeping aloof or neutral, a wholly different idea from development (iii.83, iv.118, viii.22, 73 twice). The most fanciful cannot attribute movement to ἐξέσθαι or καθῆσθαι, to sit or sit down; yet Wesseling, a competent scholar, properly interprets the phrase, secedere e medio. The truth is precisely opposed to this objector, for it is ἐκ τ. μ. which lends the force of secession to the verb. Compare Eur. Electra 797, where Paley takes ἐκ μ. as meaning apart from the company; but probably it is abruptly or in the midst. Wetstein (ii.311) long ago cited Anton. viii.12, μικρὸν, καὶ τέθνηκα, καὶ πάντ’ ἐκ μέσου I am dead, and all gone. Let me add Dion C. who in his H.R. says of Lucullus (ed. Sturz, i.188) that he kept aloof from both, ἐκ μέσου ἀμφοῖν, and similarly of others (i.686, ii.48, 768), save that in the last the connected word is δυνατός, which is akin to γίν. In i.388 Nepos is said to have withdrawn himself ἐκ τ. μ. away. Now we need not dwell on passages like that of Demosth. de Cor. (Reiske i.323) where ἀνελόντας is connected with ἐκ μέσου, “putting away,” or laying aside; or again yet earlier, ἀν. ἐκ μ. in his Fourth Phil. (i.141) “if we remove or take out of the way.” But two passages of later Hellenistic Greek are the more decisive, as we have the precise phrase contested. Plutarch says of Timoleon (Ed. Bryan, ii.109) ἐγνώ ζῆν καθ’ ἑαυτὸν ἐκ μέσου γενόμενος, he decided to live by himself away from all. Achilles Tatius, ii.27 (ed. Boden, 186) has τῆς Κλειούς ἐκ μέσου γενομένης, submota Clione, “if Clione be removed.” Is it not plain then that the scholarship which could deny to ἐκ μ. γ. the force of removal is as bad as attributing the spurious sense of development to a phrase which never bears it in one single instance, nor, I believe, could bear it? The ordinary version is unquestionably correct.

Thus far was written when a third modification from the same source meets us, somewhat more sober, and mainly brought about by a passage in Aeschines’ Epist. xii. (Reiske iii.695), where is another instance, ἐκ μέσου γενομένων, referring to men dead or exiled. In either case they were “gone away.” H. Stephens need not be summoned to inform us that γερόμενος cannot be rendered “taken away” (sublatus), though this sense he unhesitatingly gives to the whole phrase. Every scholar knows the wide range of meanings γ. derives from prepositional phrases attached to it as here. It is uncritical to cite texts like Exod. 24:16, and Deut. 18:18, in view of a wholly different construction. For in all the Septuagint appears no instance of the phrase used absolutely as here with γ. But even so, calling “out of the midst” of the cloud, or raising up a Prophet “from among” (though here it is probably ἐκ only) Israel’s brethren, is in no way development. Removal, destroying, taking, sending, or going out, are among the frequent associations in the Greek Bible.

Take, however, Amos 6:4 as one not so common, where it is a question of eating, and ἐκ represents “out of” and ἐκ μ. “out of the midst of.” Development is never the connexion there. Does it not then seem strange to extract that idea for the latter phrase from Matt. 21:19, Mark 1:11, 9:7, Luke 3:22, 9:25, Gal. 4:4, 1 Tim. 6:4, Heb. 9:3; when not one has ἐκ μ. γ. but γ. ἐκ which last nobody disputes may mean development? And why cite the identification by Hederich of ἐκ μ. γ. (at least in Eur. Iph. in Aul. 342) with ἐν μ., its regular inverse? It is hard to conceive, if it be not to bring doubt or darkness into the question. Even there is it not meant that A. would secure to himself the object of his ambition “apart from others”? In general the one means “in the way,” &c., the other, “out of the way,” &c., somewhat like the stronger ἐμποδών and ἐκποδών. That mind must be singularly constituted which could regard ἔξ. or καθέξ. in Herodotus as giving the meaning of “secession”! quite as much as αἴρω in Col. 2:14 gives “removal.” If the author had said “session,” it would be true but irrelevant. But it is true that the idea of secession from party really does come from ἐκ μ. and not from the verbs, which mark inaction rather. The passage from Aeschines’ supposititious letter must be added to those from Plutarch and Achilles Tatius, clearly proving that the secession implied in the phrase is intrinsic, not contextual, and due to ἐκ μ. rather than to the associated verb, here the very same as in the clause in dispute.

Again, the inspiring Spirit had the best grounds for avoiding ἀρθῆ here, though Chrysostom, who applied it to the Roman Empire, so paraphrases it; and he surely knew his own tongue. Besides, the preceding clause implies only a present constraint, so that its future withdrawal is the natural sequel; whereas the device of enclosing the central clause of verse 7 in parenthesis is not only harsh and uncalled for, but cuts the thread of the truth. And then, what an insignificant parenthesis when you have made it! If the Thessalonians knew that which restrains, did they not know that there is one restraining now? Tautology might be truly said to attach to the desired parenthesis. One would think that the mystery of lawlessness must have been “developed out of the midst,” in order to be already at work. In short, the idea is at all points unfounded. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.152-8) lawlessness . . . [last half of verse]: [The RV is] quite right in giving us “lawlessness,” and “the lawless one,” instead of the words in the Authorised Version which would answer to ἀδικία and πονηρός. The latter half of verse 7 is also better rendered as a whole; (Bible Treasury 14:16) until he be out of the way: Almost all versions unwittingly add to the word here. For it is not said “taken,” as might well be of an earthly power, or person, that does not vacate but is forcibly removed (ἀρθῆ). Not so the true Restrainer, behind all the visible and varying forms of the restraint; He goes of Himself, and quits the scene, judicially left open for a while to Satan’s abominable pride and mischief. It means “till he become out of the way,” which as I believe precisely suits the Holy Spirit. But it suits no other person so well; still less that traditional impediment, of which some are confident still, though evidently long falsified by the event. Yet the Fathers who furnished that tradition looked for the personal antichrist, whom the Lord Jesus personally is to destroy. And so Dean Alford and Bp. Ellicott, &c., concede in deference to the terms of plain and positive scripture. (“The Coming, and the Day, of the Lord,” Three Prophetic Gems, p. 99, Bible Treasury N4:301) [See note to 2 Thess. 2:6]

2:8 lawless: I quite agree with those who take the word “wicked” as altogether too feeble. (Pamphlets p. 430)

lawless . . . Jesus . . . destroy: [The RV is] quite right in giving us . . . “the lawless one,” instead of the words in the Authorised Version which would answer to . . . πονηρός. . . and “Jesus” is added on excellent authority, of moment to set aside pseudo-spiritual applications of the verse, as “slay” or destroy is better than “consume,” which is popularly employed to aid false interpretation. (Bible Treasury 14:16)

Jesus: . . . the critical addition of “Jesus,” the Lord Jesus, on the authority of A D^{pm} E^{p.m.} F G L^{corr.} P, some cursives, all the ancient versions, and abundant early citations. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.165-166)

Jesus: The critical addition of “Jesus” is put in, because it is certainly genuine; and as it gives more definiteness to the expression, so it excludes any mere dealing in providence. (Three Prophetic Gems (2nd article), p. 57-58) destroy: Neither Daniel 7:26, nor 2 Thessalonians 2:8, implies, as may our English word “consume,” a gradual waning of strength. “Destroy” is the true force of the Chaldee and of the Greek. (Bible Treasury 11:256) destroy: The reading which is so translated here [destroy], even if it really implied gradual waste, which it does not, is very doubtful, and “take away” or “slay” is a variant preferred by many, the Revisers included. But the ordinary text means a sudden consumption, as by fire, in Luke 9:54, and so in our verse, were it certain. Even in Gal. 5:15, it is the result in the climax, not the process. The reader of the Greek Bible can compare Jer. 27:(1,)7; Ezek. 15:4,5; 19:12; 23:25; Joel 1:19; 2:3; where all but the first means destruction by fire. A few other instances more general might be added. But clearly the Sept. refutes the preparatory and slow process no less than the N.T. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.165) manifestation: “A bright coming” is weak and vague, though no one doubts its awful and penetrating brightness. Probably “illustratione” in the Vulgate helped on looseness of interpretation, which first found expression in Wiclif and last in the Authorized Version, all the intervening English Versions being correct like the Revised Version. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.164) coming: The word “coming” here, and frequently elsewhere, is παρουσία, which denotes not barely the arrival, (like the verb ἔρχομαι in Scripture, and like the substantive ἐλευσίς in Greek ecclesiastical writers,) but the circumstance or state of being present; that is, “presence.” Nevertheless, as the presence of a person, who is now absent, necessarily supposes his coming, the latter is often and fairly enough given as its English equivalent, though the former is the full meaning. . . . The recent Swiss version renders the entire verse thus: “Et alors sera révéle l’inique, lui que le Seigneur détruira par l’Esprit de sa bouche, et rendra impuissant par l’apparition de son arrivée (our présence).” (The Prospect 1:167-168, Bible Treasury N1:379-380)

2:10 for: The Received Text has ἐν “in” contrary to the best and oldest witnesses; so also in verse 12, though “in” be meant here. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.170)

those that perish: See Acts 2:47, &c. (Bible Treasury 14:380) perish: How strange that both Bishop Ellicott and the late Dean Alford should so little comprehend the truth here set out as to fancy, because of verse 7 and the present tense, that God’s sending this judicial delusion is now! What about the lawless one's presence in verse 9? It is the ethical, not the historical, present, an usage quite common in all philosophical and indeed other writings, as well as in holy scripture. The error in this case affects, not the translation, but the intelligence of scripture; but it does affect the version in "them that are perishing" as in verse 10 and often in other words elsewhere, where they convert a moral present into a direct or historical one under the illusion that this only is correct. (Bible Treasury 14:16)

2 Thessalonians Notes

2:11 sendeth: Remark here that, though undoubtedly the Received Text is wrong, and the best authorities exclude the future, it is simply absurd to say that the verb is present ("sendeth"), because the mystery of lawlessness is already working. It is ethical, not historic, as often, and indeed like "is" in verse 9. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.178) sendeth . . . falsehood: [In the RV,] "sendeth them a working of error" rightly displaces "shall send them strong delusion" in the Authorised Version. But could they not do better for the force of τῷ ψεύδει than perpetuate the old "a lie"? (Bible Treasury 14:16)

2:12 in: [See note to 2:10]

2:13 from [the] beginning: It is instructive to weigh the alternative "as first fruits" instead of "from the beginning" given by the Revisers on the authority of "many ancient authorities." Indeed, an editor no less celebrated than Lachmann adopted it as the true text in his early as well as his later editions. It differs from that which is generally accepted by but one letter, and is supported by the famous Vatican (B) 1209, the Cambridge (F), the Greek of Boerner's uncial now in Dresden (G) (independent copies probably of an older archetype), and the Porphyrian palimpsest, seven cursives, the Vulgate, and the later or Philoxenian Syriac with several Greek and Latin ecclesiastical writers; as against α D E K L (Alford leaving out E, and adding A which is not legible), the mass of cursives, Syr.Pesch., Memph., Arm., Aeth., with Greek and Latin early citations. And Tischendorf was carried away so as to give ἀπαρχήν in his first edition (Lipsiae, 1841), as well as in the New Test., Greek and Latin, and the smaller Greek text dedicated to Guizot (both of Paris, 1842); but corrected the error in his second of Leipzig (1849) and ever since. I say "error"; for the expression is at issue with the surest facts. Of what could the Thessalonians saints be firstfruits? Not even of Macedonia, the Philippians being earlier. Hence the statement is the more untenable, as the phrase is not even thus qualified, and no agreement of the ancient witnesses could have justified it, for it is opposed to truth. But we learn thereby to estimate more justly the facts: (1) that documents of the highest value may be egregiously wrong, through a clerical slip probably; and (2) that editors of the highest repute are liable to be misled, partly through overweening confidence in favourite witnesses, like the Vatican in combination with the Vulgate, partly through natural love of originality, or rejection of what is common. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.179)

2:14 whereunto ^Λ . . . you: Tischendorf follows α F G P, &c., in adding καὶ "also" as Lachmann reads "us" for "you," with A B D^{pm}. &c., both in my judgment, to the detriment of the force and beauty of the text. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.179)

2:17 stablish ^Λ . . . good work and word: The "you," ὑμεῖς of the Authorized Version as of the Received Text, wants the testimony of the ancient MSS., Versions, &c., which also restore the true order of the last clause, it would seem, though not with the same certainty. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.188) work and word: "Work and word" rightly take the place [in the RV] of "word and work" in the Text. Rec. and Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:16)

3:2 unreasonable: The word here translated "unreasonable," ἄτοποι, meant originally "out of place," and hence strange, marvellous, and in a moral sense worthless, as saying and doing what was unsuitable and out of the way. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.200)

^Λ faith: I know not why "the faith" should be preferred to "faith" in the abstract: the Greek will bear either. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.200)

^Λ faith: [The American correctors of the RV read "Omit mar. ("the faith")":] agreed. (Bible Treasury 14:380)

3:4 charge ^Λ : the "you" of the Text. Rec. disappears [in the RV] (Bible Treasury 14:16)

3:5 the patience: The omission of the article in the Received Text has no known MS. to warrant it. Erasmus, the Complutensian, and R. Stephens rightly read it; Beza seems to be the bad guide who misled the Elzevirs after the Authorized Translators, who may or may not have noticed it. It is strange that Bishop Middleton did not observe the fact. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.197)

3:6 our . . . they: There is a little good authority (B D L, &c.) for omitting "our" Lord Jesus. There is, perhaps, more ground of doubt whether it be "they," "ye," or "he," received; but "they" has unquestionably the best evidence in its favour, "he" of the Revised Text, the least. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.206)

they: There is a conflict of readings at the end of verse 6, whether it be "he" as in the Authorised Version, "they" as in the Revised Version, or "ye" as in the margin. The singular is ill-attested; "they" has the better claim. (Bible Treasury 14:16)

3:8 night and day: It does seem strange that Alford, Ellicott, Griesbach, Scholz, and Wordsworth should cleave to the received reading, which exaggerates, contrary to 1 Thess. 2:9. Lachmann, Tregelles, Westcott and Hort rightly (in my opinion) accept the text of α B F G, etc., against the majority. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.210)

3:12 in [the]: [The RV] rightly change[s] from "by our" to "in the". (Bible Treasury 14:16)

3:13 well-doing: It would be unnecessary to say, but for the misleading of great names, that neither the word καλοποιούντες in itself nor its usage admits of the sense of doing good in acts of beneficence to others. This on the contrary might play into the hands of those the apostle censures. We must not confound τὸ ἀγαθόν with τὸ καλόν. They occur in the proper and distinctive sense of each in the same context of Gal. 6:9,10. Honourable and upright practice is the point here. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.221)

3:14 by the epistle: Further, it might seem incredible beforehand, if one did not know it as a fact, that Luther and Calvin, and men from Grotius down to Winer, though the last hesitatingly and with modification as seeking to heed the article, join in the strange misinterpretation, opposed to ordinary grammar, of taking διὰ τῆς ἐπ. as "by an epistle (to me)!" Bengel with the Aethiopic of the Polyglotts connects the word with σημ. in the sense of stigmatizing him by this letter. But this gives a quite unnatural emphasis to these words, which are thereby severed from the true and weighty connexion with "our word," and lend an unusual and (I think) undue force to σημειώσθε. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.221-222) to keep no company with him: The form of verse 14 "that ye have no company with him" may be right; but in so doubtful a case, does it seem wise or fair to commit the Revision [of 1881] to it? (Bible Treasury 14:16)

3:15 but: Again, Professor Jowett is not justified in taking καὶ here, instead of ἀλλά. Unaccountable it might seem that his nice and ripe scholarship should thus range itself with the older slovenly school which ever imagines that the inspired men use one word for another. But it is mere ignorance; and to treat it as such is the best lesson for the self-exaltation of theologian critics. The copulative [sic] is the true expression; the adversative [sic] would have been a coarse weakening of the love on which the apostle counted. They would know how to temper their correction of the evil-doer. Mr. Jowett would have dealt better with the language of a heathen. His rationalism undermined his respect for Paul, and suggested the self-complacent thought that he knew what the apostle intended to say better than the apostle himself. (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.222)

3:16 way: There is indeed a singular but easily conceived various reading $\tau\acute{o}\pi\omega$ "place," for $\tau\rho\acute{o}\pi\omega$ "way," in the first hand of the Alex. and Claremont MSS., as well as in the Augian copy (now in Trin. Coll. Camb.) and in the Boernerian (now in the Dresden Royal Libr.) and in two cursives. The Vulgate and Gothic versions represent it; and so apparently Chrysostom, as Montfaucon (not Field) has edited the word. The Greek commentator has in fact as unduly narrowed the meaning of "peace" as the word in question; for the apostle does not limit his wish to harmony among themselves, but embraces peace in a far higher sense and in all its force. It is therefore an instance not without its instruction, that critics like Griesbach and Lachmann should have the least hesitation in endorsing the ordinary and best attested text: Griesbach marking $\tau\acute{o}\pi\omega$ as possible; and Lachmann actually adopting it as his text. The apostle prayed that peace might be given them in every way, with no mere outward thought of "place." (Epist. to Thessalonians, p.226)

Notes for I Timothy

1:1 Christ Jesus: Such is the order in κ D F G P, a few cursives, and some of the ancient versions. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.5) command: The Sinaitic gives the stupendous error of "promise" instead of "command," from assimilation perhaps to 2 Tim. 1:1 in a wholly different connection. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.5)

Jesus \wedge : the omission of italics supplied in the Authorised Version brings out better the force [in the RV] "Christ Jesus our hope;" (Bible Treasury 14:29)

1:2 genuine: "true" [in the RV] or "genuine" is better than "own" (Bible Treasury 14:29)

\wedge God: "Our" is not in the more ancient and excellent copies. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.5)

1:3 [whole verse]: [The American correctors of the RV] have nothing to say about the best way of dealing with the anacoluthon or absence of the ordinary consequent clause after 1:3, 4. (Bible Treasury 15:11)

charge: [See note to 1 Tim. 1:5]

1:4 [whole verse]: [See note to 1 Tim. 1:3] dispensation: All the older English Versions are wrong from Wiclif to the A.V., misled by the Syriac and Vulgate. The Clermont uncial is doubly wrong, text and correction; Vat 1761 is the only cursive that supports the error. The Complutensian editors and R. Stephens are right; not so Erasmus, Colinaeus, Beza, and Elzevir. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.7) dispensation: The true reading, represented by κ (Cod. Sin.) and all other uncials save the Clermont, and almost if not all the cursive manuscripts, is οικοδομίαν, dispensation, in the sense of administration, or stewardship. Even Matthæi joins the rest of the critics, with the Complutensian Polyglott, against the received οικοδομίαν, which he considers a mere blunder of δ for ν by Erasmus's printers. But this does not account for the Latin, Syriac (save later), Gothic, &c.; even supposing δ was the slip of the scribe. It is evident that "edification" is not the point in question, but the right order of the house of God, and this in faith. Internal evidence is thus as strong as external as to the true reading. (Lect. Intro. to the Epist. of Paul, p.369) dispensation: The misreading of Text. Rec. in 4 is the source of the wrong thought in 4, where the real point is God's dispensation or administration, not "godly edifying," which ought to be an effect of it. (Bible Treasury 14:29)

\wedge dispensation: Nor do they [the American correctors of the RV] notice the feebleness of "a" dispensation of God (Bible Treasury 15:11)

1:5 \wedge Now: There is not the least need of the parenthesis (here to ver. 17 inclusively) marked by Griesbach, Scholz, Knapp, Lachmann, et al. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.10) charge: [The RV has] well given "charge," as in 3 and 18, where "commandment" misleads, as many ignorantly think of the law, especially as this follows, not seeing the contrast. (Bible Treasury 14:29)

charge: [The American correctors of the RV] were right of course in accepting the Revisers' "charge," as against the "commandment" of the A.V. which confounds the thing meant, either with the "commandment" in ver. 1, or still more fatally with the law treated of in ver 7-10; as did the late Dean Alford in the amazing error of talking about "the law of God in the gospel!!" as the true force of τ . π . in 5 even contradicting the true connexion with π . in 3, taken up again in 18. (Bible Treasury 15:11)

1:7 desiring: [see note to 1 Tim. 2:4]

1:9 \wedge law: It is not "the" nor "a," but "law" as such; and the οὐ negatives any such thing as law being enacted for a righteous person. .

. . . The general form is intended in all cases with or without prepositions, where the article is not. Winer has misled people by his list of words (Pt. iii. sect. 19), which really fall under rule. Bishop Middleton was nearer the truth, though he mistakenly made prepositions exceptional. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.14)

\wedge law: There is no effort [by the American correctors of the RV] to express better than the A. and R. Vv., the anarthrous construction in 9 (Bible Treasury 15:11)

smitters . . . smitters: It seems surprising that the Revisers in 9 should consign "smitters" twice to the margin, and give "murderers" in their text. The simple verb certainly means to thresh, or beat, rather than to kill; and the compound in well-known classic Greek is distinguished, as here, from man-slayers or murders. (See Lysias, 116; Plat. Phaed. 114; Aristoph. Nab. repeatedly.) (Bible Treasury 14:29) smitters . . . smitters: surely the margin² of the RV ("smiter") might have well displaced the text ("murderers"). It can scarcely have been forgotten by classical students that Demosthenes uses the term in the broader application of ill-usage, and that Plato in a dialogue so well known as the Phædo expressly distinguishes man-beaters and man-slayers. (Bible Treasury 15:11)

1:10 the: [The American correctors of the RV] have nothing to say to the strange insertion of the English article because the Greek one is requisite in the $\epsilon\gamma\delta$. in 10, a not unfrequent fault in the R.V. (Bible Treasury 15:11)

1:11 gospel of the glory: For it is the gospel of God's glory, not the "glorious gospel," as the Geneva Version led the way unhappily for the Authorized, but, as Wiclif, Tyndale, and all others, "the gospel of the glory". (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.17) gospel of the glory: [The RV] rightly present[s] the "gospel of the glory," instead of the unmeaning or wrong-meaning "glorious gospel." The glory of God into which Christ has entered is the true and full standard of judgment by which the apostle, who had beyond any other beheld it, measures that which is unsuitable for God and His own. (Bible Treasury 14:29) was entrusted: . . . as in Gal. 2:7 he says it was and is, the abiding state, and not the fact only which here sufficed. The Authorized Version alone of English versions is accurate in this. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.17)

1:12 \wedge I thank: (Most copies, none first-class, add "And" as in Text. Rec.) . . . Perhaps it was the wish to connect these verses with the foregoing, from lack of spiritual insight to discern their intimate connexion without any outward mark, which added the copulative ("And") of the common text (ver. 12). The most ancient copies and versions do not countenance it. Nor is it needful to begin a doxology . . . (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.18) that: [WK's version reads "That" but "that" in the exposition in loco] ministry: Nor do they [the American correctors of the RV] remark on the R.V., worse than the A.V. in unduly defining the general expression with which ver. 12 concludes. (Bible Treasury 15:11)

1:13 \wedge though: The article in the best MSS. goes with $\pi\rho$. which forbids the rendering "him who" or "me who" as with the common text. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.19)

1:16 those that should: [The American correctors of the RV say] for "hereafter" read "thereafter," where in truth neither is called for, τ . μ . "those that should." (Bible Treasury 15:11)

1:17 King of the ages: "King of the ages," in the margin [of the RV], seems preferable to "King eternal" in the text of 17. (Bible Treasury 14:29)

^ God: "Wise" is an interpolation here and in Jude 25. In Rom. 16:27 it is right and most suitable. Its omission here Bengel calls "magnifica lectio"; so the oldest and best MSS. and Vv. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.19)

^ God: The Authorized Version is here inaccurate and so is any commentator that carps at Bp. Middleton's just and necessary correction. The article really goes with θεός "God," binding together all between as descriptive. If ἀφθαρτῶ κ. τ. λ. were in immediate concord with τῷ βασιλεί they could not be anathrous. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.23)

^ God: . . . the word "wise" is brought in again in our Authorised Version. There is no reason for it there. So that there is the same error introduced in Timothy as there is in Jude [25], and both of them brought from what we already have in Romans 16, where it ought to be. Here, we find again, what a dangerous thing it is for man to meddle with the word of God. . . . There might be all these pretenders, these gods many and lords many that Paul knew very well among the Gentiles, and Timothy also, and particularly at this very Ephesus where Timothy seems to have been at this very time. There was the famous temple (one of the wonders of the world), called the temple of Diana. Artemis is the proper word, for Diana was a Roman goddess, and Artemis was a Grecian goddess quite of a different nature, although there were kindred lies about the two.

Here, therefore, in Timothy the apostle presented with great propriety and beauty "the only God." Bringing in the "wise" God introduces quite another idea which does not fall in with the context, it does not agree with it properly. (Lect. on Jude, p.170-1)

^ God: here He is the only God; not "only wise," as in Romans 16, where the mystery is not revealed, but His righteousness in the gospel of indiscriminate grace, and the law is vindicated yet set aside in Christ dead and risen, and all is conciliated with the fulfilment of His special promises to Israel; none but the "only wise God" could. Here He is the "only God;" He may act in creation or in judgment, in promise, law, or gospel, but He is the only God, whatever be the difference of dealing or dispensation. (Bible Treasury 14:29-30)

1:18 charge: [See note to 1 Tim. 1:5]

going before: [The American correctors of the RV] would substitute the margin⁸ for the A. and R. Vv. which seem both wrong in directly connecting προαγ. instead of προφ. with ἐπὶ δέ. The sense is "the foregoing or preceding prophecies as to thee." (Bible Treasury 15:11)

by . . . mightest war: There is no necessity, nor sufficient reason, to understand with the grammarian Winer that in these prophecies lay his spiritual protection and equipment, the armor as it were in which he was to wage his good warfare. This is to narrow and emphasize unduly the force of the preposition. The English Authorized and Revised Versions seem to me more simple and correct. So again the transient form of the verb (adopted by Tischendorf and Tregelles on the meager authority of the first hand of the Sinaitic and the Clermont MSS.) does not commend itself in comparison with the ordinary text (as in all other copies) which has the present. Observe also that "faith" as an inward state is different from "the faith" or truth believed. (Exp. of Two Epist. to Timothy, p.25)

2:1 first of all: The Authorized Version wrongly connects "first of all" with the making supplications, &c., as both the Syriac, Chrysostom, Theophylact, Erasmus, Luther, Calvin, Estius, Bengel, et al. So had Tyndale, Cranmer, and the Geneva; not Wiclif nor the Rhemish (cleaving as usual to the Vulgate) nor Beza. For the apostle means that he thus exhorts, as being first of all in his mind for his present purpose. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.33)

2:3 For: The authority for omitting γάρ "for" is small but ancient — 8 A 17 67^{corr.} Sah. Memph. Cyr. All others accept it. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.30)

2:4 desireth: why should the Revisers give "desiring" (θέλω) in 1:7, and "willeth" (θ.) here, but "desire" (βούλομαι) in 8? In 2 Peter 3:9 they render β. "wishing." Why this looseness and caprice? Buttmann's distinction (Lexil. i. 26), that θ. [ἐθέλω] is not only the more general expression for willing, which is true, but that kind especially where a purpose is included, as compared with β., which implies a mere acquiescence in the will of others, seems to be quite untenable even in Homer. It is β. which is used especially to express mind or purpose if required. Mr. Green is also faulty in giving just the same force to the two different words in 1 Tim. 2:4 and 2 Pet. 3:9; so indeed are the old well-known English versions. (Bible Treasury 14:30) desireth: [The American correctors of the RV] observe "Read who would have all men to be saved," instead of the Revised "who willeth that all men should be saved." It is the expression of desire, not of counsel. (Bible Treasury 15:11) full knowledge: or, acknowledgment (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy p. 34)

2:5 [whole verse]: Is not the rendering of 5 [in the RV] clumsy, though close? (Bible Treasury 14:30)

2:8 wish: [see note to 1 Tim. 2:4]

the: In 8, 11, the twofold mistake of the Authorised Version is rectified. Read "the men" and "a woman." (Bible Treasury 14:30) holy: of pious integrity, not of a person set apart, ὁσίους not ἁγίους (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy p. 45) doubting: or perhaps "reasoning" (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy p. 45)

2:9 ^ women: The Received Text has the article here which all the best MSS. discard; and rightly for "the" women as a class have no such title predicated of them, but they (persons of that sex) are called on individually to please the Lord by heeding His servant's word. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.42)

deportment: it is rather "deportment" than "dress," which follows in 10. (Bible Treasury 14:30)

2:10 good works: not here καλῶν (honorable, right, fair) as in Mat. 5:16; Gal. 6:9; 1 Thess. 5:21; but ἀγαθός as in Gal. 6:10; 1 Thess 5:15, of which we have an instance in Dorcas (Acts 9:36). (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.47)

2:11 a: [See note to 1 Tim. 2:8]

2:12 to teach: The emphatic place is restored in accordance with 8 A D F G P, many cursives, Vulg. Goth. Arm. etc., and so I imitate in English. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.48)

2:14 quite: The best MSS. sustain ἐξᾶπ. for ἅπ. in Text Rec. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.48) quite: the emphasis is not expressed in English [in the RV], "quite deceived." (Bible Treasury 14:30)

2:15 saved in: It is a mistake to refer 15 to salvation through the birth of Christ. Bishop Ellicott has said what he can in detail as well as contextually for that application, as Dean Alford for "the higher meaning" of σωθήσεται as in the Revision, but I think in vain. To compare it with 1 Cor. 3:15 shows a strange cast of mind. (Bible Treasury 14:30) in: The Authorized Version gives substantially the true sense, which is also maintained by the Revisers, although they effect a more literal closeness, which, tempting as it may be, seems really questionable here and unnecessary. For there is no doubt that in the apostle's usage as well as elsewhere, the preposition with the genitive (as with the accusative also) may mean "in a given state," no less than the more common sense of the instrument used or the medium passed through. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.51) in ^ child-bearing: [The American correctors of the RV] would have margin to exchange place with the text. Here again both Revisers and correctors seem at fault, and the A.V. is more accurate; for though the thing child-bearing is well rendered "in childbearing," without "her" which is not intended, still less "the" as if pointing to the virgin Mary's which is wholly foreign to the passage, pace Ellicott after Hammond. (Bible Treasury 15:11-12)

I Timothy Notes

3:1 oversight: "Bishopric," or "office of a bishop," misleads here; because the modern office, with which most are familiar, so greatly differs from the primitive reality. . . . Hence it appears best and wisest, as well as most consistent, to call the function "oversight" and the functionary "overseer," in accordance with the Authorized Version of Acts 20:28, where the elders of the Ephesian assembly (ver. 17), who met the apostle at Miletus, are so designated. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.58)

3:3 not given to wine: But is there no intended reference to disorder through excess of wine in πάρουον, which . . . [the RV gives] simply as "brawler," especially as "striker" follows? (Bible Treasury 14:30) striker _A: Text. Rec. has here the clause, μη̄ αἰσχροκερδῆ, "not seeking gain basely," taken apparently from ver. 8 where it is all right, yet more probably from Tit. 1:7. (Exp. of Two Epist. to Timothy, p.58) striker _A: the Revisers rightly omit "not greedy of filthy lucre," which was introduced from Tit. 1. The caution here follows in "no lover of money." (Bible Treasury 14:30)

3:6 charge [or judgment]: "Condemnation" is too strong an expression and not the sense intended. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.60) charge [or judgment]: Is "condemnation" of the devil correct in 6? κρίμα was either a suit, the matter for it, or the sentence. Mr. Green takes it as "strong impeachment from the devil;" but it seems rather his charge or fault. (Bible Treasury 14:30)

3:8 Deacons: . . . or "ministers" (as some prefer to translate, in order to guard from confounding them with the lower or earlier grade of clergy, so familiar in modern times) (Exp. of Two Epist. to Tim., p.61)

3:15 one: All the English versions from Wiclif to the Authorized refer the call to Timothy only and his personal duty. I cannot agree with the Revisers that the application is purposely left more general. Perhaps however "how men ought to behave themselves" is hardly so happy as "how one ought to behave oneself." It seems too vague, even as preceding English Versions are rather too limited. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.66)

pillar and groundwork of the truth _A: There is not a single good reason to sever the last clause from the assembly, and to connect it with "the mystery of godliness," as is done chiefly by Germans of the 17th and 18th centuries (including even Bengel). Not only do I agree with Alford and Ellicott in their rejection of a dislocation so abrupt and artificial, but I maintain that it would strip the assembly of its essential place which is here defined, and that it would detract from, instead of adding to, the true dignity of the "mystery of godliness." It is a construction therefore burdened with almost every conceivable objection, without one genuine merit, and in my judgment the offspring of not ignorance only but deplorably low and wrong views of the church's place and duty here below. Scarcely better is the reference to Timothy as made by some ancients and moderns. To the assembly alone is the true application. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.70) pillar and groundwork of the truth _A: [Q. — 1 Timothy 3:15,16. Is there any good ground from a critical point of view for the following reading of this passage?

(15) "But if I delay, in order that thou mayest know how one ought to conduct oneself in God's house, which is a living God's assembly".

(16) "Pillar and base of the truth and confessedly great is the mystery of godliness, the which was manifested in flesh, was justified in

[the] Spirit, was seen of angels, was preached among Gentiles, was believed on in [the] world, was received up in glory." [The rendering has been made more exact to avoid repetition and discussion save at the beginning of ver. 16. Ed. B.T.]

It is contended by the adherents to this new rendering that the history of the church has proved that it has not abode in the truth, much less can it be said to be the pillar and base of the truth! and that it is a relief to find that the scripture does not say it is, as has been universally supposed . . . Th. R.]

A. — It is a mistake to consider this clumsy, crooked and wholly unjustifiable form of taking the first clause of ver. 16 as a "new rendering"; for so understood several Protestants, for the most part of dubious faith, as Er. Schmid, Limborch, LeClerc, Schöttgen, Rosenm.(the elder), Heinrich, etc., etc. I do not wonder at Dean Alford's saying "if any one imagines St. Paul . . . able to have indited such a sentence," it were useless to argue with him. "To say nothing of its abruptness and harshness, beyond all example even in these Epistles, how palpably does it betray the botching of modern conjectural arrangement in the wretched anticlimax! . . . If a sentence like this occurred in the Epistle, I should feel it a weightier argument against its genuineness than any which its opponents have yet adduced."

Only less tenable is the absurdity of understanding Timothy (and behind him Paul and the other apostles) as "pillar and basement of the truth."

There is no real difficulty in referring it to God's church, which is not the truth, but pillar and basement of the truth responsibly on the earth. Christ is the truth engraven as it were on that pillar here below. . . . Still less difficulty is there in applying the mystery of godliness to Christ's concrete person . . . So far is the notion of making the church part of the "mystery of godliness" that it would import wholesale and deadly error. It is "who," not "which" as the church is. (Bible Treasury N6:48)

3:16 He Who: (Dr. Scrivener, though with hesitation from his own first impression with that of others in the past, no longer (second Ed. 552-6) denies A to have read ὃς (with κ C F G etc. and almost all the ancient Vv.), rather than θεός "God," as in most copies followed by the Text. Rec.) . . . Some doubtless will cry out as if "He Who," as in the Revised Version, grievously displaces "God," as in the Authorized Version which follows editions formed on the more modern copies. But weigh well the better attested reading, and soon you may happily learn how much more exact is the relative in this connexion, as it also really supposes the self-same truth in the background. For where would be even the sense of saying that Abram or Abraham, that David, Isaiah, or Daniel, or that any other human being, "was manifested in flesh"? An angelic creature so manifested would be revolting for the end in view, and could no more avail than a man. If only a man, no other way than "flesh" was open to him: the mightiest "hunter before the Lord," the subtlest wit, the most consummate orator or poet or warrior or statesman, "he also is flesh," no less the least born of woman.

Not so the one Mediator between God and men; for though He deigned to become man, He was intrinsically and eternally divine. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.72-73)

He Who: Cod. Sin. (κ) agrees with the great authorities which give ὃς "who" (or others, δ, "which") instead of θεός, "God." (Lect. Intro. to the Epist. of Paul, p. 385)

He Who: In the Revised Version they do not say "God," but "He Who." It matters practically little, though one would not say there is not a shade of difference. If we take the reading "He Who was manifested," there is but one person that can answer to it, the Son of God, our Lord Jesus Christ. It could not be either the Father, nor yet the Holy Spirit of God. Without dogmatizing, we may say that the best authenticated reading is ὃς, that is, "He Who" (cf., John 1:1-3). If it be so taken, the person of the Son is implied; whereas if we read "God," this would look at the Godhead as such. But as the Son was God, and Christ the image of the invisible God, it is substantially true, no matter how it be taken, whether as in the Authorised or as in the Revised form. (Bible Treasury 20:331)

He Who: there is little doubt that the true reading is $\delta\varsigma$, He who, rather than $\theta\epsilon\acute{o}\varsigma$, though this be implied. B is wanting, but \aleph A C F G, with some cursives and very ancient versions, support $\delta\varsigma$, as D and the Latins read δ , K L P and most cursives giving $\theta\epsilon\acute{o}\varsigma$. (Bible Treasury 14:30)

Λ Spirit: It is well known that some have thought that $\epsilon\nu$ $\pi\nu$. (in Spirit) here does not refer to the Holy Spirit but to the spiritual principle in our Lord as a man. Now admitting that there was this spirit in Him and that $\sigma\acute{\alpha}\rho\chi$ ("flesh") does not express it, anyone subject to scripture may soon satisfy himself that the phrase here employed is not proper to convey any such thought, which would require the article, as in Matt. 5:3; 26:41; 27:50; Mark 2:8; 8:12; 14:38; Luke 10:21 (in the true text); John 11:33; 13:21; 19:30; Acts (18:5); 19:21; 20:22, et al. These may suffice to prove that where one's own spirit is meant, the article is the correct form of expression. On the other hand, proof is no less abundant that $\pi\nu$. with or without such prepositions as $\epsilon\kappa$, $\epsilon\nu$, $\delta\iota\acute{\alpha}$, $\kappa\alpha\tau\acute{\alpha}$, does express as regularly the state or power of the Holy Spirit characterizing men, in contrast with mere nature, often of course with $\acute{\alpha}\gamma$. which I do not cite, but also without; as Matt. 22:28; 12:43; John 3:5; 4:23,24; Rom. 8:4,9,13; 1 Cor. 2:4,13; 7:40; 12:13; 2 Cor. 3:18; Gal. 3:3; 4:29; 5:5,16,18,25(twice); et al. The real difficulty might rather be when the intent is to present the Spirit objectively, which requires the insertion of the article, as in Matt. 4:1; 12:31; Mark 1:10,12; Luke 2:27 where grammatically Simeon's spirit only might be meant, but we know from the context, as in the other cases very clearly, that the Holy Spirit is the thought. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.74)

4:1 Λ giving: [It appears that in Wecheliu's edition of the Greek Testament, edited, as it is supposed, by Francis Junius, there is the following remarkable addition after the words "some shall depart from the faith," $\epsilon\sigma\sigma\upsilon\tau\alpha\iota$ $\gamma\acute{\alpha}\rho$ $\nu\epsilon\kappa\rho\acute{\iota}\varsigma$ $\lambda\alpha\tau\rho\acute{\epsilon}\upsilon\omicron\upsilon\tau\epsilon\varsigma$, $\acute{\omega}\varsigma$ $\kappa\alpha\acute{\iota}$ $\epsilon\nu$ Ἰσραὴλ $\epsilon\sigma\epsilon\beta\acute{\alpha}\sigma\theta\eta\sigma\alpha\nu$ — "for they shall worship the dead, as in Israel also they were revered;" referring, I suppose, to the worship paid by Israel in the wilderness to Baal-Peor, when, according to the language of the Psalmist, "they ate the sacrifices of the dead," or feasted on the sacrifices offered to the dead and canonized hero. My edition of the Greek Testament (Wetstein's) has a note upon the subject, expressing a doubt as to the MS. on which this additional sentence is grounded. It appears, however, from Macknight's note that the verse is quoted by Epiphanius with this addition; that Beza and Mann thought it a part of the original, but that Mede and Mill view it as a marginal annotation. Perhaps some of your learned readers who are versed in the Codices will say whether it has any claim to genuineness: at all events, Epiphanius's quotation of the passage with this extra clause is curious, and may show that there were those among the Fathers who understood St. Paul as Mede does in his Apostasy of the Latter Times. Arthur Roberts.] (Christian Annotator 2:66)

It must, I presume, have escaped the memory of Mr. Roberts, as well as of the Editor, that we have already had our attention drawn to this gloss of Epiphanius, which has so strangely been adopted into the text of Wecheliu's Greek Testament (See Christian Annotator, 1:94). It can scarcely be doubted that the addition is unauthorised. I am not aware of a single MS., ancient or modern, which contains the words, nor of any version which supposes them. Origen, Hilary, Lucifer, &c. who confirm the readings of the best MSS. as regards the context, are here, I believe, quite silent. In short, I have never heard of any apparent reason for their insertion, save the alleged testimony of Epiphanius, which ought, on such a question, and in the face of a counter evidence, to have no weight. The version of Beza, which contains Tremellius' Latin translation of the Syriac, edited by Francis Junius (folio, Hanovix, 1623), omits all notice of such a clause.

Allow me to take this opportunity of correcting a common misapprehension of this and the following verse, the sense of which is inaccurately rendered in the authorised Bible. Many who read it might suppose the Spirit of God meant, that those who depart from the faith, are the same class that speak lies in hypocrisy, &c. This is not the case. The former are the victims of the latter, who are energised by the seducing spirits of which the passage speaks. Thus, the real force is, that in the latter times some depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of demons, through the hypocrisy of liars having their own consciences seared, &c. (Christian Annotator 2:106)

4:2 legendmongers: The Revisers render aright the beginning of 4:2 so strangely misunderstood in the Authorised Version and elsewhere. Demons might speak lies, of course; but how can we fairly speak of their "hypocrisy," or "of their own conscience?" It is instructive to see that beside the demons there are the misleaders and the misled. Translate, therefore, "in (or through) hypocrisy of men that speak lies, cauterised in their own conscience," &c. (Bible Treasury 14:30)

4:3 [bidding]: This is a case of what the grammarians call Zeugma, where another verb is implied by the context, as in chap. 2:12 of this Epistle. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.78)

4:5 intercession: The word $\epsilon\nu\tau\epsilon\upsilon\chi\iota\varsigma$ is here translated "intercession," in order to keep up its specialty in accordance with its sense elsewhere, as in chapter 2:1. "Prayer," though seemingly less harsh, and as in all the earlier English so still in the Revised, is too vague to express the free intercourse which grace has opened with God for His children. I admit that "intercession" sounds inadequate; but I know no better counterpart in our language and therefore have ventured to explain what appears to be conveyed. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.83) intercession: $\epsilon\nu\tau\epsilon\upsilon\chi\iota\varsigma$ is not the ordinary word for "prayer." There is a reason for that; because in 1 Timothy 4 it is not the expression of mere want. . . . Suppose now it is what we have actually in the house. Common sense would say, "You cannot ask God for what you have got."

The fact is, it is the expression of a heart open, not only for God to speak to us, which was always true, but for us to draw near to God. It is intercourse with God that is the point, and not only the expression of want: free, simple, happy, communication with God — such is the idea. (Bible Treasury N12:35)

4:6 Christ Jesus: The preponderance of ancient and excellent authority favors this order against that of Text. Rec., which has not the support of a single uncial in its primary reading. Other variants in this verse and the three following are not worth recording here. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.83)

4:10 Λ labour . . . suffer reproach: "Both" is not represented in the oldest copies, nor in any ancient versions, contrary to Text. Rec. — But $\acute{\alpha}\gamma\omega\nu\iota\zeta\omicron\mu\epsilon\theta\alpha$ "we strive," or "we combat," is supported by \aleph A C F^g G^g K and eight cursives against the rest which have $\delta\nu\epsilon\iota\delta\iota\zeta\omicron\mu\epsilon\theta\alpha$ as in Text. Rec. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.84)

Saviour: "Saviour" goes too far in 10, which should rather be "preserver" (Bible Treasury 14:30)

4:12 love Λ : "In spirit" stands in the Text. Rec., but against the best MSS. and all the ancient Vv. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.88)

4:14 of: . . . there is a difference in the expression the Spirit of God employs, which shows that the communication of the gift depended for effective agency not in any way on the elders but only the apostle. The particle of association (μετὰ) appears where the presbytery are spoken of, that of instrumental means (διὰ) where the apostle speaks of himself. (Dr. Crawford ("Presbyterianism Defended," pp. 34,35, note) says that the distinction is groundless, and that the one preposition no less than the other often signifies the instrumental cause of a thing! The University of Edinburgh may blush for such a statement from its Professor of Divinity. In Acts 15:4, μετ' αὐτῶν means "in connexion with them," not "by them," like δι' αὐτῶν in verse 12.) (Lect. on the Church, p. 199) elderhood: The Sinaitic has some slight support against all the rest in the strange blunder of "the elder." (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.88)

4:15 to: The Text. Rec. adds "in" as in the margin of the Authorized Version. But "to" is the true reading. Did the Authorized Version owe it to the Vulgate? (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.88)

5:4 descendants, let them learn: Among our English translators Wiclif of course is misled by the Vulgate: "But if any widow hath children of sones, learne she first to gouern her hous . . .". Tyndale translated ἐκγονα "neves"; and so it is in the Protestant versions that followed down to the Authorized; which word at that day seems to have been used for grandsons or descendants generally, though now restricted to the issue of a brother or sister. It is no mistake in the common translation, therefore, but only an antiquated usage which seems best replaced by "descendants." The Rhemish Version, as usual, cleaves to the error of the Vulgate: "let her learn first to rule her own house . . ." The true sense we have seen to be the duty, not of the widow, but of her immediate kin in descent, though as usual the apostle puts it in the largest possible form. If the ἐκγονα or descendants were exhorted, it is not merely the χήρα or widow who is to be cared for, but οἱ πρόγονοι, the progenitors.

Only the Geneva Version among the English ones escaped the strange and general error of confounding piety or godliness with ruling one's own house; for which there is no real ground in the phrase or its content. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.95-96)

Λ acceptable: [The RV has] with good reason omitted "good and." To say "acceptable" is just the truth. (Bible Treasury 14:30)

5:9 Λ wife: I am aware that the modern German editors connect γεγονυῖα with the clause before, and not with what follows, but I am satisfied that they are wrong, and that our version is right, as it is in harmony with the sense here given. (Christian Annotator 1:176)

5:10 good . . . good: These two words are not the same. The first means good in the sense of comely, fair, honorable; the second answers to good in the shape of benevolent acts. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.98)

5:12 as accusation: The old error, "having condemnation," instead of at most "guilt," recurs [in the RV]. (Bible Treasury 14:30)

faith: [The American correctors of the RV] only suggest as to 12 to read "pledge" (with margin Gr. faith) for "faith," a questionable rendering indeed. (Bible Treasury 15:12)

5:14 Λ marry: It seems singular that the English Versions since Tyndale should, after "younger", have supplied "women"; for widows only are meant as Wiclif properly rendered. The Rhemish seems exact by expressing neither; but the Greek form precludes the necessity of adding females, and the context is decisive that the apostle speaks of none but those who had lost their husbands. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.101)

5:16 [man or]: The external authority for the shorter reading (ver. 16), πιστη (≠ A C F G P etc., with some ancient versions and Fathers) is so decided as to sway the chief modern critics, the Revisers, et al.; but the sense resulting is strange and unsatisfactory. Why should the support and relief of a young widow be cast on a believing woman peculiarly? Is this like the sobriety, the largeness, the wisdom, of scripture? That a believing man or woman should be appealed to on the behalf of such a needy connexion is very intelligible; and the text which exhibits this is given by D K L and most of the cursives, with some ancient versions and Fathers. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.101-102)

5:17 Let . . . double honour: : But to make "double maintenance" out of the text is as mistaken as to deduce from it two classes of elders — lay elders that shared the government without maintenance, and clerical or ministerial elders that taught publicly as well as privately. (There are cases where τιμή means price (as Matt. 27:6,9; Acts 4:34; 5:2,3; 7:16; 19:19; 1 Cor. 6:20; 7:23); but these are all in the New Testament. Extend it to "maintenance" in 1 Tim. 6:1 or to the verb in 5:3, and see what would result. "Double maintenance" or "price" here would be a heathen, not a Christian, idea.) The truth conveyed is opposed to both of these contending schemes, as divine truth never can really mix with any polity of human origin. But false interpretation begets and fosters pseudo-criticism. Thus even so ripe a scholar and able a reasoner as Bp. Bilson (The Perpetual Government of Christ's Church, ed. Eden, Oxford, 1842, pp. 9,191), under the influence of a foregone conclusion, would resolve the participles with the article in verse 17, like the participle without it in verse 18, as if they were alike conditional. "Presbyters if they rule well are worthy of double honor, specially if they labor in the word:" or, "Presbyters for ruling well are worthy of double honor, specially for laboring in the word." To bear such a sense the construction ought to have been anarthrous: with the article as it stands in each clause, it is a described or defined case, and not a conditional one, and the true force is given in the Authorized Version as well as the Revised. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.108-109) honour: [Q. It is alleged that in 1 Tim. 5:17 the word "pay" should stand instead of "honour," and that those who were charged with the care of a local church received stipends. Is this correct? S.B.]

A. The word τιμή in the text does not mean "pay," but "honour" as its radical and primary signification, that is, the due expression or payment of esteem or worship as the case might be; hence the dignity, or prerogative, of one so honoured; and even the office, authority, or rank; and the present, or offering, commonly given in such cases. It was also used for the worth or price of a thing; for an assessment or even penalty, compensation or satisfaction. But "pay" in the sense of stipend or wages as expressed in general by μισθός, which, in strict application, would have been scouted by every christian heart, is used in a free or simple way by the Lord in Luke 10, and by the apostle in 1 Timothy 5, not as a standing fee. (Cf. John 10.) Later Greek such as in the LXX or the Greek Testament, gives ὀψώνιον, military pay or rations, as may be seen in Luke 3, Romans 6, 1 Corinthians 9 and 2 Corinthians 11, to which the curious can add Esdras 4:56, 1 Macc. 3:28, and 14:82. As to the phrase, see what Josephus (Antiq. IV., iv. 114) says of Balak, ἀποπέμπει τὸν Βάλαμον μηδεμίαν τιμὴν ἀξιώσας, and in classic Greek we read in Dem. περὶ στεφ., ed. Reiske, 297, 16, ἀπαντας ὁμοίως ἢ πόλις τῆς αὐτῆς ἀξιώσασα τιμῆς.

It cannot then be fairly doubted that the English version is justified, and that salary or pay is not the prominent or even true idea, but "honour." Still that there is included every loving consideration of the elders taking the lead or presiding well seems plain from what follows, but this rather as honorarium than as stipendium. On the one hand it is degrading to the service of Christ when it is made a question of the earnings of a trade or profession; but on the other it is a dishonour to the saints who reap the fruit of unremitting and unselfish care in spiritual things if they do not mark their sense of it, not merely where the servants are needy, but in the reciprocity of loving regard where no such want exists. The payment of "honour," nay, "double honour," might be questioned where there was not the apparent desire to prove it. The apostle had enjoined on Timothy, in the preceding verses, to "honour widows;" here he claims honour doubly for elders that take the lead well. That "double" was used for indefinitely great in good or evil, one sees in Matthew 23, Revelation 18:6, as in Isaiah 40:2. The "especially" (μάλιστα) that follows is incompatible with a fixed salary, as indeed is all scripture. The general principle is equally true of those who teach (Gal. 6:6), and of those who preach (1 Cor. 9). Acts 28:10 seems to distinguish the attentions paid during the stay at Melita from the provision of requisites on departing. (Bible Treasury 11:240)

5:18 an: Why should they not have said "an" ox when treading out corn? The Authorised Version is doubly at fault, "the ox that," &c. (Bible Treasury 14:30)

5:19 at [the mouth of]: The earlier English Versions had "under," probably influenced by the Vulgate. The Pesch. Syriac seems nearer the mark. "Before," as Winer prefers, suits magistrates better than witnesses with whom the accused were confronted. This however is the textual rendering of the Authorized Version, with "under" in their margin, as in Wiclif, Tyndale, Cranmer, and those of Geneva and Rheims, which is at least better. For the point pressed is not "before," or "in presence of" witnesses, though Dean Alford says it is literally, which would be ἐνώπιον, ἐμπροσθεν or ἑπ' ἐναντί according to the shade or emphasis required, and hence not "confronted with" as Mr. T. S. Green has it, but at the consenting testimony of two or three. In Heb. 10:28, it is the dative (not genitive as here), and hence with a slight increase of force, where again the older English Vv. give "under" save Wiclif who has "bi". The sense is that the despising transgressor died without mercy, but on the testimony of two or three. Were it judges, dicasts, or the like (as in 1 Cor. 6:1), ἐπί might well bear the sense of "in presence of," but hardly with "witnesses." "To" Titus well gives the sense in 2 Cor. 7:14. [N.B. — "Dicasts" were Greek officials of the law.] (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.112)

5:20 ^ Those: (Lachmann and Alford insert in brackets δέ "But," with A D, some Latin copies, Gothic, &c.: but all other MSS. and Vv. reject.) . . . It would seem that the conjunctive δέ was inserted chiefly by Western influence under the prejudice that the passage as a whole has that narrow, instead of the general, reference with which last its absence from the best and most authorities falls in. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.113) have: The Authorized Version like the other Protestant English versions weakens the effect by omitting the verb "have," which adds to the permanence of the fear produced. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.113-114)

5:21 ^ God: There is but one article in the first part of the apostle's ground of appeal, not because it is one person, as Gr. Sharpe hastily supposed, but to mark their entire association, which could not be unless they stood on the same level of divine nature and glory. The one article τοῦ simply identifies the two persons in a common object, as the τῶν following marks off the "elect angels," however exalted, as having no title to be so identified. Christ Jesus could be and is put with God as on the same ground: not so the elect angels, though introduced connectedly, yet apart, as witnessing now, not merely in the future scene of glory. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.114) prejudice . . . partiality: It may be well to notice also that the Authorized Version seems to lose the distinction between προκρίματος and πρόσκλησιν, words, as far as the New Testament is concerned, only found here. For the former refers naturally to "prejudice" which condemns a case before hearing or duly hearing it; as the latter expresses an undue inclination or "favor" for one side, even if one should hear both. Timothy is admonished by the most sacred associations to watch against any bias either way. Now "preferring one before another" is partiality; whereas "prejudice" (the marginal alternative of the Authorized Version, not "preference" as in the Revised Version's margin) is the true counterpart. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.114-115)

5:23 Be no longer a water-drinker: [The RV] rightly give[s] "Be no longer a drinker of water." The Authorised Version, "Drink no longer water," goes too far. (Bible Treasury 14:30) use a little wine: Calvin . . . dares to hint that a marginal note may have found its way into this passage through the mistake of transcribers! What! where not a single MS., uncial or cursive, not a single Version of east or west, not a single early ecclesiastical writer, Greek, Latin, or ought else, attests either an omission or an insertion in this passage? It is therefore demonstrably Paul's; or else we have absolutely no certainty for the genuineness of anything the apostle ever wrote. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.118)

5:25 also the good works are openly manifest: ought they not to have rendered it [in the RV] "the good works also [are] manifest" (or evident beforehand, &c.) (Bible Treasury 14:30)

6:1 bondmen under yoke: It is not often the Rhemish Version can justly lay claim to exactness, but here through adhering to the Vulgate it may. All the older English seem to me to have failed, as well as the Authorized Version, in not regarding "servants" or slaves as part of the predicate. And so I understand the Pesch. Syr., though somewhat vague, whilst the Philoxenian reflects the more ordinary view. This gives undue prominence to "being under yoke," whereas the true force is but complemental. . . It is needless to remark that the Rhemish with Wiclif is nearer the truth, not the other English translations which since Tyndale treat the last clause as part of the predicate [i.e. in the end of v.2].

This beyond just controversy the article forbids, the force of which they overlooked. On the other hand Beza, Bengel, et al. are quite mistaken in the thought that the article with ἐνεργείας points to God's beneficence in Christ, which would make here the poorest sense possible. The article is really by implication due, as often happens, to the previous phrase, μάλλον δουλεύετωσαν. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.125-126)

the: "The" teaching or doctrine is right (Bible Treasury 14:30)

6:2 [latter part]: the close of 2 should be, "they that partake in (or profit by) the good service are believing and beloved." (Bible Treasury 14:30)

^ These: But it seems a strange division which severs that which follows from the foregoing, by taking "These things teach and exhort," either as the beginning of a new paragraph, like Green, Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles, Webster and Wilkinson, Westcott and Hort, Bengel, Matthaei, or as the end of the previous one, like Ellicott and the Revised Version. It is better with Alford, Bloomfield, et al., to regard this as an unbroken context; and the more as the denunciatory warning which now commences stands in more evident contrariety to the exhortation just concluded. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.126)

6:3 accede: Bentley's conjecture is singularly confirmed by the Sinai MS. which reads προσέχεται (with an itacism). Still there is no sufficient reason to abandon the common text supported by all other authorities. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.127)

6:5 gain ^: The last clause of verse 5 in the common text and the Authorized Version is rejected by all critics as destitute of adequate authority, though the Syrr. et al., favor the insertion. It seems to correspond with the last clause of 2 Tim. 3:5, which is unquestionably genuine, though not exactly the same terms. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.131) gain _Λ: There need be no question about the last clause. Apart from the following verse, and the bearing of the context, it is impossible rightly to render νομιζόντων πορισμὸν εἶναι τὴν εὐσεβειαν, as the authorised version does. The Greek article requires "that godliness is gain," not the converse. (Christian Annotator 1:207) gain _Λ: The Authorised Version of 5 is opposed to all intelligence of the usage of the article. It should be that godliness is gain, or a way of gain, as in the Revised Version, where "from such withdraw thyself" is rightly omitted. (Bible Treasury 14:30)

6:6 contentment: The Peschito Syr. seems to take ἀνταρκείας in the objective sense of "our sufficiency," or the use of it, a sense no doubt possible, and as in 2 Cor. 9:8 legitimate, but here inconsistent with the scope of this passage. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.133)

6:7 _Λ we: This is urged with such characteristic brevity and compressed ruggedness that one need not wonder if words once brought in to explain have crept into the text of not a few manuscripts. These apparent interpolations differ. In one of the earliest (D. or the Clermont MS.) which contains an addition prevalent in the West, "[it is] true" appears; and so it substantially stands in the Vulgate, Gothic, et al. among the Greek early writers as in several late uncials and the mass of cursives, "(it is) manifest" is the word ("known" in the Syr. being perhaps fairly equivalent). The oldest authorities do not allow καὶ or ἀλλά for ὅτι but give as the text what is here translated; . . . (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.134)

_Λ we: the Revisers are probably right in excluding "it is manifest" (δηλον), or the equivalent, in the various MSS. (Bible Treasury 14:30)

6:8 food . . . covering . . . shall: The words translated food and covering are both in the plural which may indicate the variety in each case provided of God. The "covering" too is not limited to clothing, and should not be so translated, as it takes in dwelling as well. The future seems more forcible than the exhortatory tense, and better suits the passive voice. Little reliance can be placed even on the oldest and best MSS. which too often interchange the long with the short vowels, as in this case. The critics generally of late incline to the future. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.135)

6:9 wish: [The American correctors of the RV] would read "are minded" for "desire." (Bible Treasury 15:12)

snare _Λ: Not a few MSS. (three of them uncials), versions, etc., add "of the devil:" but this is superfluous if not narrow, no doubt due to chap. 3:7. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.138)

6:10 a . . . all: the Revisers properly say "a root of all kinds of evil," or of all evils. "The root," as in the Authorised Version, is good neither in doctrine nor in fact nor in grammar. (Bible Treasury 14:30) a root: Still it is hardly exact, I think, to say "the" root, though one knows what has been pleaded on its behalf; because "the" implies naturally an exclusive force, and the love of money, deep and wide as it may be, is not the only root of all men's evils. But our language hardly admits of a simple anarthrous usage like the Greek, and therefore we make use of the indefinite article, though it may be feeble. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.140-141)

6:11 meekness of spirit: The older reading πραῦπάθειαν seems stronger than the ordinary πραοτήτα meekness. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.141)

6:12 _Λ called: καὶ "also" only in some inferior witnesses. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.141)

_Λ called: "also" only encumbers the sense (Bible Treasury 14:30) didst . . . the: The Authorized Version is doubly wrong in "hast" professed, and "a" good confession. The Vulgate may be supposed to have influenced all from Wiclif downwards. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.143)

6:13 thee: σου "thee" is not in the best copies. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.141) keepeth all things alive: Authorities are divided between two words that are like, the Sinaitic with the less weighty witnesses supporting the Text. Rec., but A D F G P the critical text. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.141) keepeth all things alive: It is surprising that the Revisers should in their text confound the sense of ζωογονούντος (A D F G P, &c.) with that of the Text. Rec. ζωοποι. (K L, the cursives in general, &c.) . "Preserving alive" is admirably in keeping with the Epistle: cf. Ex. 1:17, 18, 22, Jud. 8:19, Luke 17:33, Acts 7:19. To suppose a reference as Alford, to "eternal life" above is outrageous, any more than to resurrection with Chrysostom or others. (Bible Treasury 14:30) keepeth all things alive: Here all the older English versions like most others have followed the received reading; not that which suits the context, which has also the better authorities. How Dean Alford could adopt the right reading but give a rendering which suits the wrong, seems unaccountable; but so it is. The usage in the New Testament as in the LXX distinctly points to saving alive or preserving; and here "all things", not persons, are in question, though some go so far as to teach the contrary. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.143-144)

6:17 on the _Λ God: "Living" is here added by inferior authorities (and so Text. Rec.), which favor ἐν also, rather than ἐπί. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.149)

on the _Λ God: [The RV is] justified in omitting "living" (Bible Treasury 14:30)

6:18 to do good, to be rich in good works: There is an important shade between the two acts, although it is not easy to express the difference except in a paraphrase. By the first (ἀγαθοεργεῖν) is meant doing, works of kindness or goodness to others; by being "rich in good works" (πλουτεῖν ἐν ἔργοις καλοῖς) is meant abounding in fair, upright, works, comely in themselves: the first relatively, and the second absolutely, good works. And very important it is to note how both are pressed in close connexion here and elsewhere, for men in general laud the one which affects man, and forget or disparage what is of yet greater moment, what is good in itself before God. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.152-153)

6:19 real: The ordinary reading is "eternal" as in the lesser witnesses and Text. Rec.; the primary (Vv. as well as MSS.) give "that which is really life." (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.149) real: it is "that which is really life," rather than "eternal life" after the Text. Rec. (Bible Treasury 14:30)

6:21 you: The critical reading (the plural) seems confirmed, contrary to what at first sight would appear natural, by the end of the Second Epistle, where after the benediction to Timothy individually, we certainly close with ἡ χάρις μεθ' ὑμῶν without question of σοῦ. Those with him if not all the saints at large are in view. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.154)

you: . . . so the most ancient copies say, though one might have expected "thee" as in most manuscripts and some of weight. But compare the closing words of the Second Epistle. There it is the more striking, because they follow a strictly individual prayer that the Lord should be with Timothy's spirit. Yet I am not aware of a single MS. there that favors the singular, and scarce any version save the Peschito Syriac. The comparison appears to confirm the judgment of Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles, Westcott and Hort, as to the close of the First Epistle. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.159)

2 Timothy Notes

Notes for 2 Timothy

1:2 beloved child: "Beloved child" in 2 [in the RV] displaces "dearly beloved son," (Bible Treasury 14:30)

1:3 supplications: "supplications" stands in lieu of "prayers" (Bible Treasury 14:30)

1:6 stir up: "Stir up" still appears [in the RV] in 6, instead of "stir into flame" (or "rekindle") in the margin. (Bible Treasury 14:30)
by: [See note on 1 Tim. 4:14]

1:7 sobriety of mind: It is hard to see why "discipline" [in the RV] should supplant "a sound mind" (Bible Treasury 14:30)

1:8 suffer hardship with the gospel: the truer force appears [in the RV], "suffer hardship with the gospel," &c. (Bible Treasury 14:30)

1:9 everlasting: I have given "everlasting" rather than "eternal" as in the Revised Version, because it fairly admits of a modified sense when applied to "times," as in Rom. 16:25, and Tit. 1:2, as well as here; just as "for ever" when spoken of living man on earth is similarly used. Others who hold the same sense prefer "age-times" or "ages of times." "Eternal" though certainly the unmodified meaning, hardly consists with "times." (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p. 163) everlasting: What is the meaning of "before time eternal," in 9? (Bible Treasury 14:30) [See note to Mat. 12:32]

1:10 incorruption: this, as far as "immortality" is concerned, is notoriously a mistaken version, known for many years to all scholars, and now corrected by the Revisers, who properly say "incorruption" for immortality. (Bible Treasury 20:137)

incorruption: "incorruption" is right [in the RV], the body being in question, not the soul, life for the soul and incorruption for the body brought to light by the gospel. (Bible Treasury 14:30) incorruption: [The American correctors of the RV] would reverse the Revised "incorruption" and restore A.V. "immortality" as the rendering of ἀφθαρσίαν. Very probably they were misled by Drs. Alford and Ellicott, or by others who misdirected them. For it is an error that the body is not in question here. Life refers to the soul, as incorruptibility to the body, both brought to light by Christ through the gospel. His resurrection was victory over death, which annulled its power; as the gospel brings us even now by faith into that which will be finally displayed in full at His appearing in glory. "Immortality" is a fatal step backwards. (Bible Treasury 15:12)

1:11 [of Gentiles]: Some few high and varied authorities (¶ A 17) omit "of Gentiles," which from the character of the Epistle seems to be probably right; and the rather as the copyists were profoundly insensible of such a trait but disposed to assimilate the second letter to the first, where "of Gentiles" has its suited and certain place. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.194-195)

[of Gentiles]: The omission of ἐθνῶν Gentiles or nations in 12 rests on the meagre testimony of ¶ A 17, contrary to all other authority; but no doubt the Cambridge professors favoured the omission, though Lachmann read the word in his later edition, while Tischendorf in his eighth edition joined Tregelles, swayed overmuch as usual by the Sinaitic, as well as by the idea that it may have been borrowed from 1 Tim. 2:7. But the context would incline me to its acceptance. In the former Epistle it falls in with the testimony of grace: the glad tidings of a ransom for all could not but go forth to the nations. So here, the power of Christ in death and resurrection gives occasion to the manifestation of eternal counsel, wholly above the course of dispensation to Israel; and accordingly the gospel meets men universally in the grace and power of God, and hence in a life superior to death, and a love which no sufferings could daunt or quench. (Bible Treasury 14:30-31)

1:13 outline: Why should the Revisers repeat the inaccuracy of the Authorised Version in 13? Hold "the pattern" misleads, as if Timothy had some well-known formula distinct from apostolic teaching. (Bible Treasury 14:31)

1:17,18 diligently . . . very well: It is the comparative in both verse 17 and 18, not the positive nor the superlative: a favorite Greek idiom, which if the ellipse were expanded would express, "more diligently than could be expected" (ver. 17) and "knowing better than to require more said of it." (ver. 18). (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.205)

1:18 very well: [See note to 1:17]

2:3 ^Δ Take: The Text. Rec. σὺ οὖν (as in the Authorised Version, "Thou therefore," &c.) crept in early, as it is found in a few uncials, most cursives, and some ancient versions; but it is a mere clerical blunder. (Bible Treasury 14:31)

Take thy share ^Δ of suffering hardship: The best authorities give συν- (or συγ-) κακοπάθησον for the common reading σὺ οὖν. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p. 164)

Take thy share ^Δ of suffering hardship: the Revisers rightly adopt the ancient reading συγκακοπάθησον, but their margin gives a sense preferable to their text. (Bible Treasury 13:31) share ^Δ : Here too, but without any such prominence, Timothy is exhorted to take his share in suffering hardship, but not "with me" as many understand besides the Revised Version. Really it narrows and spoils the force. The Greek warrants only the general thought of sharing ill with his comrades, Paul or any other. It is left purposely large. This association is lost by the false reading of the Received Text, followed by the Authorized Version, as already alluded to. Not personal emphasis but general share is the thought rather than with Paul in particular. Nor does the particular passage in chapter 1:8 warrant "with me," but expressly "with the gospel" which is personified by the great apostle. There is the difference however that our verse does not express with whom he was called to share affliction, nor should we supply it. The construction evidently differs from that in the preceding chapter, and the sense is best left in the vague of the original. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.212)

good soldier: The "fellow-soldier" of the Clement MS. goes too far, if it be not also irreverent. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.212)

2:4 service: Hence the apostle does not speak simply of a "man that warreth" as in the Authorized Version, but of one on actual service, and therefore he can stamp the truth with an absolute negative. . . . It is surprising that the Revised Version follow the Authorized alone of all the English versions in the needless qualification of "this life". It is more improper, because scripture had already appropriated the demonstrative pronoun not to βίος but to ζωή (Acts 5:20). (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.213)

2:6 labouring husbandman must first partake: The notion of a transposition of κοπιῶντα πρῶτον is unworthy of Wakefield's Silva Critica i. 155 and not confirmed by Winer's reference to Xenoph. Cyrop. I.iii.18. And the Ethiopic V. exhibits a loose paraphrase, not a real rendering. The old expositors are as uncertain as most moderns. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.214)

2:7 shall give thee: it is correctly "shall give thee" [in the RV] (Bible Treasury 14:31)

2:13 for: "for" is rightly added [in the RV] (Bible Treasury 14:31)

2:19 firm foundation: The Alexandrian uncial has the strange error of "the foundation of God standeth to the firm." (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p. 165)

firm foundation of God: [Q. A correspondent questions both the translation and the meaning of "the firm foundation of God," as given in the new version published by G. Morrish. He would render it substantially as the Authorized: "yet still the foundation of God stands firm," and argues that it can be nothing else than the resurrection of Christ, because of the contextual reference in verses 8 and seq.]

A. But, in the first place, the proposed rendering, like that of the English Bible which it repeats in its faultiness, offends against ordinary grammar. The position of the article proves that στερεός, "firm," cannot be a predicate, but is an epithet forming an integral part of the definition. The only possible meaning, therefore, is, "the firm foundation of God stands." Secondly, the notion that the fundamental doctrine of the resurrection is meant, was that of Cocceius, as well as of some since his day. Theodore held a similar but wider view, considering the foundation to be the basis of the truth, of which the hope of resurrection is the seal. But I see no reason for giving it a special application, believing, with the translator referred to, that the figure is used abstractedly. (Bible Treasury 5:128) firm foundation . . . [the] Lord: [The RV gives] quite properly, "the firm foundation standeth," and "the Lord," instead of "Christ" in the last clause (Bible Treasury 14:31)

God: Very few and poor cursives give "of Christ." (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p. 165)

2:21 ^Λ serviceable: The copulative is wrongly inserted by many authorities, as in the text. rec. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p. 165)

2:22 peace, : I cannot agree with a German's suggestion (followed by Alford, Ellicott, et al.) to remove the comma after "peace," so as to separate "with those that call . . ." from the verb, "follow", and connect it only with the substantive "peace", immediately preceding. Heb 12:14 has no real analogy with the clause; for to limit the pursuance of peace to those that so call on the Lord would give the poorest possible sense, as being such as presented the least strain. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.238)

^Λ those: Even Lachmann edited "all" here, on considerable authority, but not the best. It is a gloss from Acts 9:14; 1 Cor. 1:2. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p. 165)

2:23 ^Λ foolish: The article is here apparent, though it cannot well stand in an idiomatic English version; it supposes the well-known custom of those alluded to, fruit of their will and self-confidence. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.240)

2:25 ^Λ truth: [see p. 33-34]

2:26 taken as they are by him, for His will: This is a remarkably complicated sentence, and saints eminent in godliness and scholarship have understood it very differently. Thus the Authorized Version stands by no means alone in treating the words as referring only to the enemy; so the Syr. and Vulgate, followed by Wiclif, Tyndale, Cranmer, and the Rhemish. The Revised Version on the other hand, with Wetstein, Bengel, Wakefield, and Mack, though slightly differing otherwise, supposes not one agent to be in question, but three, the devil, the Lord's servant, and God. Their version accordingly of verse 26 is, "And they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, having been taken captive by him (the Lord's servant) unto the will of God." In their margin they give that which appears to be the truer sense, "by the devil" (not the Lord's servant) unto the will of God; and so the Geneva Version, Alford, Ellicott, Hammond, Wells, et al. The two pronouns in the Greek, being different, naturally, though not necessarily, point to two parties: but to bring in "the Lord's servant" here seems as forced as the reference to the enemy is simple and consistent, though Dr. Bloomfield, I see, thinks "so violent a construction is utterly inadmissible"! So Beza prefers (in his note to the fourth edition, 1588), though he translated as others, lest he might seem somewhat bold in the matter so sacred, "ne videri possem in re tam sacra audaculus." In his fifth edition, 1598, he corrects his translation thus, "et sanitate mentis recepta ex diaboli laqueo, ab eo captivi facti, convertantur ad illius voluntatem." All doubt henceforward disappears from his note. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.243-244)

taken as they are by him, for His will: the last verse affords an extraordinary sample of boldness in the Committee [of the Revisers of 1881], which can hardly have been satisfactory to the Bishop of Gloucester and others. It is the sense preferred by Wetstein and G. Wakefield, and, singular to say, Bengel. It seems to me distinctly ungrammatical on the face of it, that a past act in contrast with present state should be represented by ἐξωγρημένοι, which really implies the present result of what has been done. To bear the sense given, the former ought to have been ζωγρηθέντες, as another has justly remarked. Doubtless the pronouns are distinguished, but it seems harsh indeed to refer αὐτοῦ to the Lord's servant with so much intervening. Beza's proposal seems best — "that out of the snare of the devil, having been taken captive by him, they may awake for [or, unto] His will," that is, to do God's will. In the margin they do give substantially this alternative; but does it not seem extraordinary that the Committee was found pliant enough to endorse the actual text? (Bible Treasury 14:31) taken as they are by him, for His will: [The American correctors of the RV], as in the A.V., prefer it all to refer to Satan, "having been taken captive by him unto his will," with the margin slightly modified. The manifest objection to the A.V. lies in the reference of the two different pronouns to God. Hence Beza led the way in taking αὐτ. of the devil, ἐκ. of God. Bengel's notion of spiritual captive by the Lord's servant, adopted by the committee, appears highly unnatural. G. Wakefield has the extraordinary turn "after being rescued alive," and so far differs from the Revisers; but this was to forget the perfect and give an aoristic sense rather to the participles, besides the etymological force. To wake up to God's will after having been captive to Satan is simple enough. (Bible Treasury 15:12)

3:1 [the]: Winer (Greek Gr. N. T. iii. xix.) attempted to account for the omission of the article as usual, by setting it down as one of a most miscellaneous class of words which dispense with its insertion. One is surprised to see how easily men like Dean Alford and Bp. Ellicott are satisfied with an evasion so irrational and transparent. For that long list of words comes under the invariable principles of the language; and insertion of the article in each instance can be shown no less than omission; so that the statement of the case is not only partial, but misleading. The true solution is that Greek regularly, far more than English, exhibits that anarthrous form when the design is to designate a characteristic state rather than a positive fact, place, condition, person, or date. The article here would have made the period too restricted; its absence enlarges the sphere, as the Holy Spirit intended, Who knew the end from the beginning. We in our tongue can hardly avoid saying, "The last days"; but the Greek could express himself more accurately than those who are compelled to use the same expression for what may be less or more definite. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.246-7)

3:2 unholy: not ἀγίος (separate from evil to God), but δαίος (holy in the sense of gracious and merciful) (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p. 266)

3:3 without natural affection: It is singular that the Authorized Version, alone of the old English translations, gives the simple, full, and unambiguous meaning of ἀσποργοι; which in Wiclif's Version and the Rhemish, following the Vulgate as usual, is rendered by the feeble phrase "without affection". Tyndale, followed by Cranmer, has "unkinde", as the Geneva "without charitie". But beyond controversy

2 Timothy Notes

these representatives lack precision of rendering. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.267)

without natural affection, implacable: Some few authorities of all kinds invert their relative order; but this would seem strange disorder morally, compared with the true place of each as represented by the best witnesses, though the Sinaitic is not alone in omitting the first of the pair, nor the Peschito Syr. Version in dropping both: all these variations being plain errata. . . . ἄσπονδοι goes beyond the breaking of truce attributed to the word in the Authorized Version and other translations, and expresses rather the lawless state which refuses to incur any such obligation. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.268)

3:5 from: Yet I am grieved to notice the strange error of one (J. A. Bengel in his Gnomon of the New Testament) who has written on the subject with surpassing ability. He will have it that the apostolic injunction, rightly translated, means that Timothy was to "turn these away." How any one with any real, however moderate, knowledge of the Greek tongue could so misunderstand a very simple phrase, it is hard to explain or conceive; but such is the fact. No version known to me sustains any such view. The Authorized Version is substantially, the Revised Version quite, correct, unless it be in giving "also" for "and", verse 5, as is done here in connexion with "know" in verse 1. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.274-5)

3:6 captive _Λ: The article appears in Text. Rec. on very poor evidence, against the mass of the oldest, best, and even most numerous witnesses. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p. 166)

3:9 folly: The Alexandrian has for ἀνοία the strange various reading of διάνοια "thought," or "purpose." (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p. 166)

3:10 hast followed: The main witnesses \aleph ACFG support the aorist; the majority give the perfect, as in 1 Tim. 4:6 (with but small exception), which has a greater present force. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p. 166,280) hast followed: the Revisers appear to me rightly to read the aorist with \aleph A C F G 17 rather than the perfect of the Text. Rec. with the mass of inferior authority (which probably slipped in through 1 Tim. 4:6): "But thou didst follow up my teaching," &c. (Bible Treasury 14:31)

3:14 whom: τίνων (plural) \aleph AB^{ms}F^{ec}GP, etc.; τίνος (sing.) as in Text. Rec., with the majority of uncials, cursives, versions, and Fathers. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p. 166)

whom: If the plural form (τίνων) be preferred, which certainly rests on very good and ancient witnesses, it was Paul not alone but with the rest of those whom the Lord chose to bear testimony to the grace and truth which came by Jesus Christ. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.287) whom: [The RV decides] for the plural, as the margin explains, and so the most ancient MSS., though the ancient versions lean with slight dissent to the singular "whom," as in the Text. Rec. (Bible Treasury 14:31)

3:15 the: The article does not appear in \aleph C^{corr}D^{ms}FG, etc., contrary to the great stream of authority, Lachmann bracketing, and Tischendorf omitting in his eighth edition. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p. 166)

3:16 [first part]: The version of 16 [in the RV] is questionable. As it stands it might imply that some scriptures are not divinely inspired, which is certainly opposed to the scope. "Every scripture, being divinely inspired, [is] also profitable," &c., differs from the more usual rendering in the margin only in assuming, instead of asserting, divine inspiration. In any case it is "every" scripture, which would apply in due time to what was yet to be written as well as to what had been already. It is purposely thrown into axiomatic form. If assumed to be God-inspired, it seems needless to say that it is useful or profitable. I therefore prefer in this the construing of the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:31)

Every: . . . the apostle, while upholding God's ancient oracles as "sacred writ" (ἱερὰ γράμματα), is careful to affirm in the most comprehensive terms the divine authority of all, or rather "every," scripture, not old merely but new. For he reserves the due appropriated word, γραφή, which he declares in its every part to be inspired of God, or God-breathed, as is no other writing. It runs through the four Gospels, the Acts, and the apostolic Epistles in this sense alone, singular and plural. (God's Inspiration of the Scriptures, p.27) scripture [is] God-inspired, and: The more general sense was expressed by γράμμα, a writing, which might mean a "bill" (Luke 16:6,7), or "letter" in the abstract (Rom. 2:27, 29, 7:6; 2 Cor. 3:6), "alphabetic characters" (Luke 23:38; 2 Cor. 3:7; Gal. 6:11), "epistles" (Acts 28:21), "letters" or learning (John 7:15; Acts 26:24), or "writings" (John 5:47), which needed the epithet ἱερὰ, sacred, &c. to stamp them as scriptures. But γραφή in Greek N.T. usage means nothing else, even without the article here or elsewhere, as our idiom also bears.

. . . The Revisers, like some others, take "inspired of God," not as the predicate but as qualifying the subject; and the clause would then run, "Every scripture inspired of God [is] also profitable." But who will say that this is the natural meaning? who can deny that it involves a twofold awkwardness, . . . both by withholding the understood copula where one cannot but look for it, and by supposing it where it jars with the flow of the sentence? None of the constructions within or without the N.T. cited by Dean Alford approaches the one before us. One near in some respects is 1 Tim. 4:4, where it would be intolerable to make καλὸν (good) part of the subject. Still nearer perhaps is Heb. 4:13, where nobody doubts that "naked and laid open" is the true predicate, if so, "God-breathed and profitable" ought to be thus taken here.

The truth appears to be that the conjunction καὶ though indubitably genuine was overlooked by early versions, as the Memphitic, Peschito-Syr., and many of the Latin copies, besides the Clem. Vulgate: so too some fathers Greek and Latin. This error necessitated, one may say, the view that "God-breathed" belonged to the subject. Other Latin copies, with the Gothic, Harklean-Syr., Arm. and Aeth., interpreted καὶ in the sense of "also" as introducing the predicate. Taken thus, καὶ is here feeble, and so superfluous that it was easily forgotten; whereas, wherever it is correctly so taken, it has an emphatic or supplementary force, as in Luke 1:36, Rom. 8:29,34, Gal. 4:7. It would certainly become those who contend for their construction to produce a sentence where a like severance occurs, or indeed can be, between two adjectives ostensibly connected by a conjunction.

But, if possibly allowed as grammatical, can this rendering be counted tenable on internal grounds? For if θεόπνευστος be treated as part of the subject, it must be taken either as an assumption, or as a condition. If it be assumed that scripture is God-inspired, nothing is gained by those who favour so harsh a construction. The sense is substantially alike, whether you assume or assert the inspiration of every scripture. But if the aim be to understand a condition (i.e. "if divinely inspired," rather than "being divinely inspired"), you are confronted with the acknowledged fact that γραφή in the N.T. is appropriated to scripture and spoken of no other writing. Hence the conditional construction, in order to apply, contradicts the known usage, and would require the wholly unauthorised sense of mere "writing:" "every writing, if inspired of God, is also profitable," &c. If we understand γ., as we must, in the sense of "scripture," and take the epithet with the subject, we gain nothing but a strangely incoherent phrase, yet in substance agreeing with its natural sense: "every scripture, being inspired of God, is also profitable," &c., as in fact Origen long ago took it, but not Athanasius, nor Greg. Nyss, nor Chrysostom, who held as the A.V.

The R.V., whether intentionally or not, is ambiguous: "every scripture inspired of God [is] also profitable," &c. If it was not meant to raise a doubt, why was it so left? If it was, is it possible to conceive an object more opposed to the context? For the Spirit of God is furnishing the invaluable and needed safeguard against the difficult times of the last days; and after dwelling among the rest on the fact of Timothy's privilege in knowing from a babe the sacred writ of the O.T., he crowns all with the universal principle (which applies to the N.T. no less than to the O., and to what might yet be written as well as to what was), "every scripture [is] God-inspired, and profitable for teaching," &c. . . . One can scarce doubt that a rendering so halting and strange tempts to a hesitating interpretation, even though not a whisper be given that they hold any scripture to be uninspired. Yet it is a plain and peremptory utterance of the apostle, calling for a version and a comment of no uncertain sound. (God's Inspiration of the Scriptures, p.27-32)

Every: First, it is important to observe that the subject of the opening sentence is anarthrous. The sense therefore is not "all", but "every", scripture. If the article had been inserted, the words which follow would have predicated that which is said of the known existing body of holy writ. The absence of it has the effect of so characterizing every part of the inspired word to come, as well as extant. Is it scripture? Then it is God-inspired and profitable, etc. This is affirmed of every atom. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.289-290) and: Next, it is known that versions and critics of reputation differ somewhat where the unexpressed but necessarily implied copula should be inserted. It is not always seen that this is a comparatively slight difference. The substantial sense abides. The Revised Version, with several, prefers to render thus: "Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable . . ." The Authorized Version with others have it thus: "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable . . ." I have no doubt it is more correctly translated above: "Every scripture (is) God-inspired and profitable . . ." What is common here to the Authorized Version and mine is that the apostle asserts inspiration to God and profitableness about scripture; whereas, according to the Revisers, divine inspiration is assumed, and its profit seems rather awkwardly asserted, "is also . . ." After all, the difference is practically small. In the Revised Version that is assumed for divine inspiration which in the other is directly affirmed in the first place, with defined and varied profit following after. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.290) [See also God's Inspiration of the Scriptures, p. 598, Bible Treasury 15:120, N6:13, N8:65 and Pamphlets, p. 288] conviction: The Greek witnesses differ slightly as to the form of the word. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p. 167)

4:1 Λ I . . . Christ Jesus . . . and by: Here there is no small discrepancy, not only as to the right reading among the ancient witnesses, but also as to the just reflection of the original text. That text which has been vulgarly received accredited a connecting particle with the preceding chapter, or at least with its closing topic. This, a more careful examination, or certainly a more spiritual judgment, would have shown to be uncalled for and out of place; as well as the personal emphasis of the subject. On the contrary, Paul evidently desired rather to put forward God Himself and the risen Man, Who is to deal with mankind supremely in the coming day. The order of His name, and the omission of "the Lord", are sustained by the best authorities of every kind, and fall in admirably with the context. It would seem also that the conjunction before $\tau\eta\nu$ ἐπιφάνειαν was not understood, and got supplanted by the preposition in order to ease the construction; which really had for effect to alter the connexion of the sentence by severing "His appearing and His kingdom" from the verb at the beginning, and attaching them to the judging of the quick and dead as a date.

So it stands in the Authorized and other Versions; but if we connect "His appearing and His kingdom" with the verb, a choice of version lies open to us. For we may regard the accusatives as the complement of διαμαρτύρομαι and translate as in Deut. 4:26, which some prefer, in the sense of calling Christ's appearing and His kingdom to witness against Christendom. But this seems far from a just analogy. Heaven and earth we can easily apprehend as thus invoked; but how about summoning Christ's appearing and His kingdom? It would be harsh indeed. How could Paul call Christ's future appearance and His kingdom to witness then, as Moses invoked heaven and earth that day to witness against Israel? The construction is therefore not really the same.

Christ's appearance and His kingdom are therefore suited and most impressive grounds of appeal by which he was solemnly charging Timothy, or others like-minded and responsible, to preach the word. The accus. objective appears thus quite untenable. Hence most prefer, with the Revisers, to understand the apostle to testify earnestly, without specifying Timothy, before God and Christ Jesus, and by His appearing and His kingdom, as that which gave the charge incalculable weight and awe. If κατὰ be read, it is hard to see how it can be connected with the verb; for where is the sense of "I charge (thee) at His appearing and His kingdom"? The preposition compels us to make these words dependent on the participle. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.296-7)

Λ I . . . Christ Jesus Λ . . . by: [Q. What is the true text and the right version of this solemn scripture? The explanation even of the wisest seems unsatisfactory in consequence. ENQUIRER]

A. Almost all agree that the οὖν ἐγὼ ("I therefore") of the Text. Rec. is uncalled for accretion, and "the Lord" too before "Jesus Christ" or rather Christ Jesus. The present κρίνειν expresses the long continuity of the judgment, instead of the brief act on the great white throne to which κρίναι would tend to confine the process. But the great defect is not only the allowance of κατὰ "at" (EKLP, 37, 47, and the Syrr.), but the failure to take the accusatives with καὶ repeated as the direct and simple object of the verb. The older Latin copies have no "per," but say loosely "adventum" for ἐπιφάνειαν. "I testify earnestly, in the sight of God and Christ Jesus that is about to judge living and dead, both his appearing and his kingdom." It is a fresh charge in which the apostle urges this twofold, however closely connected, object as the special ground of responsibility for Christian walk and service. Then will shine forth not only the Lord but those that are His, each in the position awarded by the righteous Judge according to the things done in (or, through) the body (2 Cor. 5:10). It is not simply His coming, His παρουσία, to receive us to Himself for the Father's house, which is sovereign grace, but when He appraises the fruit of each one's reward according to his own labour (1 Cor. 3:8). This the apostle earnestly testified, that Timothy too might believe and act on it in preaching urgently, with every duty of ministry, looking for the glorious result, as one who also loved Christ's appearing when righteousness shall reign and therefore His Kingdom. . . . The words are plain. (Bible Treasury N4:160)

Λ I . . . Christ Jesus Λ . . . and by: the Revisers reject οὖν ἐγὼ and τοῦ Κυρίου of the Text. Rec. as well as κατὰ, followed by the Authorised Version, though sustained by the later uncials, almost all the cursives, and all the old versions, even the Latin and Coptic. The testimony of Chrysostom is perplexing, for he seems to support καὶ (N A D F G., &c.) as well as κατὰ. But assuming the critical reading, ought we not to render "I charge both by His appearing and His Kingdom?" (Bible Treasury 14:31)

Λ I . . . Christ Jesus Λ : The Text. Rec. gives οὖν ἐγὼ, as do most cursives, and two or three uncials (D^{corr}KL), etc.; but the great preponderance of authority in MSS. and Vv., not to speak of careful citations of old, excludes the particle of reference as well as the emphatic subject, which really weaken the solemnity of the protest intrinsically.

2 Timothy Notes

So too the order Χριστοῦ, Ἰησοῦ is better supported than the inverse in the Text. Rec., not to speak of the addition τοῦ κυρίου, or, as some in better accordance with usage, omitting the article before κυρίου, while others add ἡμῶν. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p. 167) by: Text. Rec. has κατὰ ^{scot.}D^{scot.}EKLP, most cursives, and ancient Vv. But καί is best sustained, and by the western versions, Aeth. being altogether loose. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p. 167)

4:2 rebuke, encourage: The order in ^{scot.}FG, etc., etc., differs in putting παρακάλεισον, (encourage) before ἐπιτίμησον, (rebuke). (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p. 167)

4:4 will be turned aside: [has the RV] reflected justly or fully ἐκτραπήσονται? (Bible Treasury 14:31)

4:5 sober: Vigilance (γρηγορεῖν) is not the thought as in the Authorized Version, nor yet a sound mind (σωφρονισμός), however nearly allied, but sobriety of judgment. The Greek answers fully to the English usage, and from the primary sense of drinking no wine comes to the ready metaphor of being sober, or wary, in all things. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.311) suffer hardship [evils] . . . fully perform: It is the aorist here and in both the exhortations that follow — the simple act when the occasion arises, not the constant duty as in νῆφε “be sober,” which precedes. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.312) fully perform: To translate with Beza, to “give full assurance of thy ministry,” may sound more literal but hardly suits the subject before us, which wholly differs from faith, hope, or understanding. For these mean subjective enjoyment, the other would be objective proof; neither of which can rightly apply here, but filling to the full the measure of his service. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.314)

4:6 already being poured out: The Authorized Version by no means conveys correctly the form; “now ready to be offered” is in several respects different from “am already being poured out,” which exactly reproduces the original. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.315)

all but come: Again, ἐφέστηκεν is hardly the same as ἐνέστηκεν though the difference be the merest shade, which is sought to be expressed in “is all but come,” as compared with “is present,” or “come”. “Is at hand,” as in the Authorized Version, is the true rendering of neither, but of ἐγγύς or ἡγγικεν. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.315)

4:8 the: Of course they correct [in the RV] “a” into “the” crown, &c. (Bible Treasury 14:31)

4:10 Galatia: And it is well to note now that two of the earliest uncials (the Sinaitic and the Rescript of Paris) read here Gaul for Galatia, as do several cursive manuscripts, the Ethiopic Version of Rome, and other authorities. So early did ignorance or evil intent tamper with the copies of holy scripture. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.321)

4:12 But: The Revised Version is right, the Authorized Version wrong; for the apostle draws a slight distinction here, which is expressed by “but”, rather than by “and”. The others had proceeded on their own responsibility. Tychicus was sent by the apostle to Ephesus. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.323)

4:14 will render: Yet one cannot but feel that the critical text, which follows on the highest authority, is a great relief to the spirit: . . . That this verb should be turned into the optative, as in the common text, with a few uncials, most cursives, and many of the ecclesiastical writers, et al., one can understand; for man readily falls in with Jewish feeling. On the other hand, that the Lord will render him according to his works is a certain truth which every Christian conscience must feel; while it also is truth in special accordance with these pastoral Epistles which bring into distinctness the Lord’s appearing. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.326)

4:15 withstood: [The RV adopts] the reading “withstood” for “hath withstood.” (Bible Treasury 14:31)

4:18 ^Λ The Lord: The copula is not found in the highest authorities, but was probably inserted later to make the passage more flowing. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p. 168)

^Λ The Lord: [The RV drops] the initiatory copulative (Bible Treasury 14:31)

4:22 [Jesus Christ be]: There is good and ancient evidence for “the Lord Jesus Christ” in the last verse (22), the Alexandrian and two cursives adding “Jesus” only. Though one or two cursives may omit the clause as a whole, there is no doubt of the “Lord”, which, it may be noticed, is the prevailing designation throughout, save where special reasons have “Christ Jesus.” (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.334)

[Jesus Christ be]: [The RV reads] only “the Lord” (Bible Treasury 14:31)

you: “grace be with you” for those in general with Timothy, which is marred in the Pesh. Syr.’s making Timothy the only object in the second wish as in the first. (Exp. of the Two Epist. to Timothy, p.334)

Notes for Titus

1:1 according to: There is another peculiarity here which has greatly perplexed the learned. As is too usual in a difficulty, they have departed from the plain and obvious meaning of the text, not by a daring conjecture in the way of emendation as a substitute for it, but by a version, to say the least, of an arbitrary nature, which is quite uncalled for in the context. Two of the ablest recent commentators have joined in discarding "according to," and in adopting "for." But this is to lose the peculiar force of the scripture before us, and to construe κατὰ as equivalent to εἰς. To be apostle of Jesus Christ "for" the faith of God's elect is a commonplace. As in all such proposals, it is no doubt an easy way of understanding the clause; but the truth intended vanishes. "According to faith of God's elect" has the same ground as, and no less reason than, "according to piety" just afterwards, with which these commentators do not all tamper, though one at least deals in the same latitude here also. It is safest to translate correctly, even if one is obliged to feel or own we have no exposition to offer of which we are assured. The Revisers, therefore, as well as the Authorized translators, have acted more faithfully. Very possibly they might not have been able to explain the propriety of the phrase; but at any rate they have done no violence to the text in their respective versions. They have left the word of God for others to explain in due time, according to their measure of spiritual insight. (Exp. of Titus and Phile., p.11-12)

1:2 the ages [or everlasting]: This is a phrase peculiar in itself and difficult to transfuse well and truly into English. "Eternal" is clear, as said of God, life, punishment of sin, &c. But in combination with "times" it appears harsh, as in Rom. 16:25, and still more where πρὸ precedes, as in 2 Tim. 1:9 and here. Mr. T. S. Green gives "in all time" and "before all time" respectively, which seems weak or worse for the first case. Mr. Darby for Rom. 16 prefers "in (the) times of the ages," and for 2 Tim. and Titus "before the ages of time." But why invert thus? Would it not be better to adhere to the same order in all three, "times of ages?" Perhaps indeed "times everlasting" might be admissible; for although the A.V. uses "eternal" and "everlasting" interchangeably, the latter is not necessarily so absolute as the former. We might say "before times everlasting" but hardly "before times eternal," and for more reasons than one. It is unfounded to conceive a difference of sense between its use in 2 Tim. 1 and Titus 1; and the wish springs from misunderstanding of the truth. (Exp. of Titus and Phile., p.15-16)

the ages [or everlasting]: [The American correctors of the RV offer] the strangely loose "long ages ago" for margin [of the RV] "before times eternal," the singular rendering of the Revisers. But it is easier to disapprove than to do well. The meaning is before the ages of time, though it seems not very satisfactory as a version. (Bible Treasury 15:12) [See note to Mat. 12:32]

1:4 grace Λ : According to the oldest MSS. and Versions, "mercy" is omitted in the verse; but Chrysostom is quite wrong, followed by Damasus, in asserting that "mercy" is only spoken of in 1 Tim. 1:2, for it is equally found in 2 Tim. 1:2. Here also Lachmann stands with the Received Text in giving it as found in the mass of the junior MSS. and the Versions, supported by the Alexandrian and a few other uncial copies. It is difficult however to resist the overwhelming external evidence; (Exp. of Titus and Phile., p.25)

grace Λ : the Revisers on first-rate authority read "grace and peace" instead of "grace, mercy, peace," as in Text. Rec. and Authorised Version. "Lord" is also omitted. (Bible Treasury 14:31)

1:5 left: It is remarkable that the form of the word "left" has been changed from rather earlier days; and that this change falls in with permanence. So it stands in the commonly received text; but the best authorities followed by the critics agree that the original form quite coincides with the temporary character of the mission of Titus. (Exp. of Titus and Phile., p.26)

appoint: [see note to Mk. 3:14]

1:8 holy: The overseer, it is added in due course as a higher call, must be "pious," or "holy" in that sense, "δαίος." It is not separate from evil, but gracious and upright, and is so used particularly of Christ in the Old Testament, as well as in the New. (The reader can consult Pss. 16:10, 89:18,19, &c., and Acts 2:27, 13:34,35, with application to others also.) It is the character of piety which appreciates God's mercy, and is itself merciful. This was looked for in an elder, while he and all believers were ἄγιοι or saints. (Exp. of Titus and Phile., p. 36-37)

1:10 many Λ : The first copulative is left out on high authority in 10. (Bible Treasury 14:31)

1:12 Cretans: It is one of the little inaccuracies of the Auth. V. that we find here [in Acts 2:11] "Cretes," and in Titus 1:12 "Cretians" without any reason. The only correct form of course is "Cretans." (Exp. of Titus and Phile., p.26)

2:5 workers at home: The Text. Rec., following many witnesses, and followed by the A.V., &c., has οἰκουρούς, "keepers at home"; which differs only by a letter easily omitted from οἰκουρούς which most of the later critics prefer, as it is apparently the best reading. . . . It cannot be questioned fairly that the most ancient and best MSS. are in favor of this word, though we have no instance of its use in classical or even Hellenistic Greek, and the verbal form occurs only in Clem. Rom., perhaps derived from our text. Still it is a perfectly legitimate formation. The common word "keepers at home" is far inferior in moral force. (Exp. of Titus and Phile., p.58,63) workers at home: [The RV has] "workers at home," not merely "keepers" there, as the Authorised Version following Text. Rec.: a letter easily omitted makes the difference. (Bible Treasury 14:31)

2:7 gravity, Λ : "Sincerity" too appears in the A.V. None should wonder that this is an addition resting upon rather slender authority. (Exp. of Titus and Phile., p.67)

gravity, Λ : the true text is "uncorruptness, gravity," ἀφθορίαν, σεμνότηα, not ἀδιαφθορίαν, σ., ἀφθαρείαν, which last even the Elzevirs and Griesbach, with all modern critics, reject, though Stephanus received it in his edd. of 1546, 1549, and 1550, misled by the Complutensian editors, not Erasmus. (Bible Treasury 14:31)

2:8 us: It will be noticed that the critical reading is "us" rather than "you": a confusion very frequent indeed in the MSS. In this case "you" is out of the question. It would have been "thee," if it had referred to Titus; but the general application to the family of God is the better sense. The vulgar or T.R. reading was a change from "us" to "you," which is wholly unsuitable. "Concerning us" (i.e. Christians generally) seems evidently the word which the apostle wrote and of course meant. (Exp. of Titus and Phile., p.69)

2:13 appearing of: the Revisers translate rightly "the appearing of our great God," &c. (Bible Treasury 14:31)

our great God: [The American correctors of the RV] would make the text and the margin of the Revision exchange places. Either way the person of Christ shines in glory. The context seems here to favour the text as better than the margin. (Bible Treasury 15:12)

3:1 principalities Λ : The more ancient MSS. omit the copulative. (Exp. of Titus and Phile., p.83) to obey: Next, Titus was to remind them to be obedient in a general way. That this is the force of the words is plain from the New Testament usage (Acts 5:29,32; 27:21). There is no sufficient reason to translate "to obey magistrates," as in the A.V. On the contrary this is to lose an exhortation by making it a mere repetition of the former clause. (Exp. of Titus and Phile., p.84-85) to obey: πειθαρχεῖν = obey, in general, and not the particular case supplied by the authorized version, which is rather the bearing of the preceding clause. (Christian Annotator 2:339) to obey: [The RV] is right, "to be obedient," not "to obey magistrates," which is already implied. (Bible Treasury 14:31)

3:3-7 It is impossible to take verses 3-5 as parenthetical, nor 3-7 either, though that might be less difficult. Πιστὸς ὁ λ. refers to what immediately precedes, at least as much as to verses 1 and 2. (Christian Annotator 2:339)

3:4 when: "When" is, of course, the literal rendering of ὅτε; but our translators gave "after that" here, as in Matt. 27:31, to make the sense clearer. (Christian Annotator 2:339)

the . . . the: The A.V. rather fails in that it merges "the philanthropy" of God in His kindness; whereas, by a distinct article to each, the two things are presented separately, however closely associated otherwise. Next, God's love toward man is a single word, φιλανθρωπία, whereas the absence of the article in the English makes its natural meaning to be His kindness toward man in His love. Now this is not really the thought expressed by the apostle, which appears to be as one has here endeavored to represent it. (Exp. of Titus and Phile., p.93)

3:5 washing: It is well known that some are disposed to understand here "the laver of regeneration." The A.V. did not recognize this; the margin of the Revised Version does. It is well that the Revisers did not venture farther. The notion is absolutely unfounded; for λουτρὸν never means laver but washing, or the water for the washing (in the sense of bath), as is notorious. Never in the N.T. occurs λουτήρ which is the proper word for "laver." They are both found in the Septuagint, and even λουτρῶν a place for washing or bathing-room. It is strange indeed that a commentator of learning could say that λουτρὸν is always a vessel or pool in which washing takes place, here the "baptismal font." Liddell and Scott do, it is true, give "a bath, bathing place," but not a solitary instance of such usage. Their abundant references are to hot or cold bathing in the sense of washing, or water for it, or even libations to the dead; but λουτήρ is the tub or laver, as λουτρῶν is the place or bath-room. Bp. Ellicott and Dean Alford misrepresent the LXX., of course only through haste or pre-occupation. The word is correctly translated "washing" in our text. There could be no question about the matter, unless there had been a prejudice to warp the mind. The wish was father of the thought. (Exp. of Titus and Phile., p.102) washing: [The RV] rightly follow[s] the Authorised Version, and give[s] "washing." "Laver ought not to be even in the margin. (See Eph. 5:26) (Bible Treasury 14:31)

Ghost _λ : [See note to 3:3]

3:7 life: [See note to 3:3]

3:8 Faithful [is] the saying: The A.V. like some others is at least ambiguous, if not misleading; for one might infer from it that the faithful saying was merely the call of believers to maintain good works. This however is a rather unworthy sense; which the text, as well as the truth generally, disproves. (Exp. of Titus and Phile., p.114) believed God: Tyndale is right here, and Wiclif, for with the latter "believen to" is equivalent to our "believed" simply. It is strange that the Rhemish did not cleave to the Vulgate which is correct, but errs with the later English Versions. Believing "God" means receiving His testimony, especially in the gospel, as just laid down, no less incumbent on and needed by Jews than by Gentiles. Besides this, we believe on (ἐπὶ) God and in (εἰς) Him, as made known to us in raising Christ from the dead

(Rom. 4:24; 1 Pet. 1:21). But this goes farther, and we have to distinguish things that differ. (Exp. of Titus and Phile., p.113)

3:10 heretical: "Heretic" as in the Auth. V. gives a misleading sense; for in modern usage it means "heterodox." This is not intended, but one forming a party or sect outside to which schism ever drifts. (Bible Treasury N2:63) [see note to Acts 24:14] heretical: "factious" is certainly less equivocal than "heretical," which is apt to be taken as heterodox; whereas a leader of a sect or party outside is meant in contra-distinction from a schismatic within. The true meaning is of moment, as in other ways, so in utterly overthrowing De Wette's unbelieving effort to deny the apostolic and inspired claim of the Epistle by assuming the later ecclesiastical usage for this word. In reality, it proves the contrary, and thus its true Pauline sense here confirms the fact that he who wrote 1 Cor. and Gal. wrote this letter to Titus. 2 Pet. 2 allows of debate as to the precise shade of meaning, but there can be no just doubt of the same sense in the epistles of St. Paul; and it is not the later or ecclesiastical sense. (Bible Treasury 15:12)

3:11 self-condemned: Nor does αὐτοκατάκριτος mean "condemned by his own conscience," but self-condemned, i.e. ipso facto, without saying a word of conscience. (Exp. of Titus and Phile., p.123-124)

Notes for Philemon

v.1 our beloved and: Possibly “the beloved and our fellow-worker” (Exp. of Titus and Phile., p.142)

v.2 the sister: The reading of the Received Text (“the beloved” as in Tyndale, Cranmer, and “our beloved” as in A.V.) rests on inferior witnesses. Wiclif and the English Version of Rheims follow the later copies of the Vulgate, which mix the wrong and the right (“most dere sister,” “our dearest sister”). But ancient manuscripts, followed by such copies of the Vulgate as the Am. Tol. and Harl., give the true and only appropriate reading “the sister.” (Exp. of Titus and Phile., p.143-4) [See also God’s Inspiration of the Scriptures, p. 518]

the sister: ἀγαπητή, “beloved,” of the Text. Rec., followed by the Authorised Version, is properly excluded, and ἀδελφή, “sister,” takes its place on ancient and ample authority. The internal superiority of the critical reading is obvious. (Bible Treasury 14:31)

v.6 fellowship: the rendering of 6 seems very dubious in every English version save Tyndale’s, the worst perhaps being the Rhemish and the Authorised Version, followed by the Revisers for the sense, though with the change of “fellowship” for “communication.” I believe it ought to be “thy fellowship (or participation) in the faith.” (Bible Treasury 14:31)

us: Here the MSS. differ, ὑμῖν “you” in ⋈ F G P, many cursives, and most ancient versions, &c.; while A C D E K L, about 50 juniors, several good ancient versions, and some fathers read ἡμῖν “us.” (Exp. of Titus and Phile., p.146) us: . . . which is [not “in you,” which really gives no sense in the passage, but “which is] in us” (according to the best and most ancient authorities) . . . (Lect. Intro. to Epist. of Paul, p. 446-447) us: [The RV appears] to me no less unhappy in the perpetuating of the Text. Rec. ὑμῖν, “you,” . . . though supported by ⋈ F G P, many cursives, &c.; but ἡμῖν, “us,” has the excellent authority of A C D K L, about fifty cursives, and other authorities. This would involve the alternative rendering of “acknowledgment” rather than “knowledge.” (Bible Treasury 14:31-32)

us: not “in you,” which though true is commonplace and feeble, but “in us” according to the best authorities (God’s Inspiration p. 519)

v.7 we have: I had [the true reading] (God’s Inspiration p. 519) joy: χάριν is the clerical error of K L P, and many cursives and fathers, one of whom says χάριν ἔχομεν τουτέστι χάραν ἔχομεν. Tischendorf only discarded it in his eighth edition. (Exp. of Titus and Phile., p.148) joy: the true reading seems to be, as [the RV prefers] . . . χαράν γὰρ π. ἔσχον, “for I had great joy.” Even the Elz. (1624) has χαράν instead of the Stephanic χάριν, though both gave ἔχομεν, “we have.” (Bible Treasury 14:32) bowels: The Revisers seem to have yielded to bad taste in discarding here and elsewhere the strong scriptural word “bowels” for the feebler “hearts,” which has its own expression. How came they to retain “belly” in the good sense of John 7:38? Had it been the suggestion of the American Committee, it would be less surprising. (Exp. of Titus and Phile., p.146)

v.10 ἅ bonds: The Text Rec. adds μου but the best are adverse. (Exp. of Titus and Phile., p.149)

v. 11 now ἅ : [See note to v. 12]

v.12 to thee . . . ἅ that: The Text. Rec. followed by A.V. as being supported by many copies departs singularly from the older witnesses. It omits καὶ “both” before the first σοι as well as the second σοι itself, and instead of this gives οὐ δέ and adds προσλαβοῦ from ver. 17, whereas αὐτὸν is really in apposition with the object preceding. (Exp. of Titus and Phile., p.149)

ἅ that: The peculiar emphasis of αὐτόν instead of the vulgar οὐ δέ is well given [in the RV]. προσλαβοῦ in the Text. Rec. was borrowed from verse 17, though many good authorities supply it here. (Bible Treasury 14:32)

v. 15 for ever: [See note to Mat. 12:32]

v.19 write: Our idiom can hardly bear “I sent”; so in ver. 19 we must say, “write.” It is the epistolary aorist, as they call it, the writer going on to the time of reading. (Exp. of Titus and Phile., p.153)

v. 20 Christ: “Lord” should disappear from the end (Bible Treasury 14:32)

v.23 fellow-captive: It is not exactly δέσμιος “prisoner,” as Paul speaks of himself in this and in other Epistles. . . . Yet is it a word of force, and means a captive, or war prisoner. Certainly we hear of no external event in the conflicts of the gospel that furnishes a ground for such a title. Meyer after Fritzsche suggests the idea that certain of the apostle’s companions voluntarily shared his prison by turns: and that it was the turn of Aristarchus when he was writing to the Colossians, of Epaphras when he wrote to Philemon. By this he would explain why Aristarchus is here συνεργός and there συναικχμάλωτος, whilst Epaphras is there σύνδουλος and here συναικχμάλωτος. This is ingenious no doubt; but Rom. 16:7 presents no small difficulty to receiving it. (Exp. of Titus and Phile., p.165)

Notes for Hebrews

1:1 in many measures . . . many: "sundry times" . . . "divers". Neither phrase of the A.V. conveys the force of πολυμερῶς καὶ πολυτρόπως. The common translation is borrowed from the Version of Geneva in 1539. Wiclif, in this not faithful to the Vulgate, had dropped altogether the first words, though he rightly gave "in many manners." Tyndale and Cranmer unite in "diversly and many ways," as does the Rhemish with a change in the order. "In times past," or "of old," πάλαι is the sole expression of time. . . . Then He spoke "in many parts." His word was but fragmentary, perfect in its object, but in no wise that fullness which it was in His purpose to bestow when the due moment arrived. (Exp. of Heb., p.2-3) many . . . many: The opening of this Epistle seems to me unworthily represented in the Revised Version. In ver. 1 "Divers" twice is to make bad worse, though not so incorrect as the "diversely" of Tyndale, the one being obsolete for more than one, the other really meaning differently. (Bible Treasury 14:44) measures: [The RV has] avoided the error of "times" instead of parts or portions. (Bible Treasury 14:44)

1:2 [whole verse]: [The American correctors of the RV] say nothing of the Revisers' departure from their rule as to the rendering of the aorist in 1:2 (Bible Treasury 15:29) at [the] end: "In these last years" (as Tyndale began, followed by all the Protestant English) is too vague a rendering, and apt to be confounded with the different phraseology of 2 Peter 3, Jude 18, or even the more distant phrases in 1 Tim. 4 and 2 Tim. 3. Still more objectionable is the Rhemish text following the Vulgate. Wiclif is nearer the mark, "at the last in these daies," though not quite right. "At the end," or (the) last of these days is the literal and true force, the close of these days of the age under the law, when the Messiah comes. (Exp. of Heb., p.3) at [the] end: [The RV has], of course, substituted ἐσχάτου for the Text. Rec., ἐσχάτων, which has not the support of a single uncial (Bible Treasury 14:44)

a [or, the] Son: The omission of the article has to do neither with the preposition going before nor with emphatic position, as many learned men have said. That there was intention is obvious; for ἐν τοῖς προφ. would naturally call for ἐν τῷ υἱῷ. Yet the phrase is anarthrous and does not present the person as an object before the mind, but brings character into prominence. . . . Our language does not so well bear the absence of the article; but it is regular in Greek, and at once the most forcible and the most accurate form of expressing character, which is precisely what was wanted here. (Exp. of Heb., p.3-4) a [or, the] Son: [This] expression is evidently the truth of especial weight; and here the Revisers conspicuously fail. Indeed the anarthrous construction is their habitual stumbling-block, as is the abstract usage of the Greek article, which requires the absence of the definite article in English. Their text is wrong in bringing in "his," which is not at all the idea here, though, of course, true in itself; whilst their margin, "a Son," is yet worse in every way, as being liable to grave misconstruction anywhere, and peculiarly at issue with a context which has for its aim to set forth His sole, intrinsic, and unapproachable glory as son of God. The true idea is as Son, or in the person of Him who is Son, contrasted with His servants the prophets. Our tongue, however, does not admit of this characterising style of speech, like the Greek, after a preposition, but only in the nominative; and hence we must insert our article or even paraphrase it. But can there be any doubt that here, as too often in such cases elsewhere, the Revisers have missed the mark in a very essential point of truth? (Bible Treasury 14:44)

a [or, the] Son: [The American correctors of the RV] say nothing of the Revisers' departure from their rule as to the rendering of the aorist in 1:2, or the remarkable expression ἐν υἱῷ, where "in His Son" gives the idea inadequately, though it is difficult to represent it well in our tongue. For "as Son" is too vague, and "in the person of the Son," or "in the Son," would answer to ἐν τῷ υἱῷ, as in the contrasted phrase ἐν τοῖς προφ., the meaning is that God spoke to us in One so nearly related to Him as Son. Very poor is Chrysostom's comment, Ἰδοὺ πάλιν τὸ, ἐν υἱῷ διὰ τοῦ υἱοῦ φησι, πρὸς τοὺς λέγοντας τῷ πνεύματι τοῦτο ἀρμόζειν. Ὁρᾷς ὅτι καὶ τὸ, ἐν, διὰ ἐστι; (Interpr. Epp. Paul. vii. 9. Field. Oxon. 1862). So among the Latins Primasius, followed by a crowd down to our day, though not without a numerous and weighty protest. 15:29-30) worlds: τοὺς αἰῶνας in general "the ages," but also beyond just dispute used by Hellenistic Jews for the universe (perhaps as the theatre of the divine dispensations or ages) as here and in chap. 11:3. See Eccles. 3:11 in the Sept., and elsewhere. (Exp. of Heb., p.8)

1:3 substance: And it is scarcely needful to say that "person," borrowed in the A.V. from that of Geneva, is a mistake. It is "substance" or essential being, as in Wiclif, Tyndale, Cranmer, and the Rhemish from the Vulgate. (Exp. of Heb., p.9) substance: [The RV gives] rightly the very image, or impress, "of His substance." "Person" is quite wrong, not only in translation, but in doctrine. (Bible Treasury 14:44) made: Nor is there the least hint of the middle voice in the aorist participle, the more striking as the purification made was of the sins of others — assuredly not His own. The favourite Vulgate (factus) is here out of the way false, as it is in the next word, and often to the subversion of the truth in this epistle. (Bible Treasury 14:44)

[by himself]: Nor is the omission of δι' ἑαυτοῦ ["by himself"] by any means so sure as to justify not even a notice in the margin. E K L M are no doubt inferior to A B P, D^m, giving δι' αὐτοῦ, but both the Syriac, the Æthiopic and the Coptic are at least equal to the Vulgate and the Armenian. Indeed, Theodoret in his comment expressly says that δι' αὐτοῦ should be read with an aspirate for δι' ἑαυτοῦ (δασιῶς ἀναγινώσκειν προσήκει, ἀντὶ τοῦ, δι' ἑαυτοῦ, B. Theod. Opp. ed. Sirmond. v. 549). (Bible Treasury 14:44)

[by himself]: . . . the dynamic sense of personal agency in π. is unnoticed [by the American correctors of the RV], if the reading of the three oldest copies prevail against the mass in the omission of "by Himself." It is curious to see how Ebrard over and over discusses π. as if it were active, and the Vulgate renders it as a present, instead of a past and completed act. (Bible Treasury 15:30)

our: For a wonder [the RV is] . . . right about purification "of sins," perhaps to avoid the appearance of reading ἡμῶν as in Text. Rec. contrary to A^m. A B D^m. all and many other witnesses. They ought to have translated similarly in Eph. 1:7, Col. 1:14, where they have ruined the sense by treating the article as a possessive four times in error. (Bible Treasury 14:44)

1:4 having become: the Revisers have improved on "being made" of the Authorised Version, which is very objectionable, but "having become" is not much better. (Bible Treasury 14:44)

1:6 again: As to the second text there has been little discussion among orthodox men. Not so in the third, which stands in our Epistle identical with the Vatican (not the Alexandrian) Septuagintal text of Deut. 32:43, and in substance with Psalm 97:7). But it has been keenly urged as to the prefatory words that "again" (πάλιν) belongs to εἰσαγάγη, and denotes a new and second introduction of the Messiah, instead of being as in the A.V. and many others the mark of another citation. Not a few ancients, mediævals, and moderns have so understood, though they differ widely as to the alleged second introduction. But the Pesch. Syr. found no such difficulty as the Vulgate; nor did Erasmus, Luther, Calvin, Beza, Bengel, Wolf, any more than the fullest of modern commentators, Bleek. It is assumed that πάλη would not stand where it is in the Greek if it introduced another citation; yet the good scholar who so speaks allows that in point of interpretation the rendering of the A.V. is much to be preferred! Is this really safe? That a false version yields better sense than the true? That the true is not justifiable grammatically?

The fact is that the collocation stands alone, as far as I can see, in the N.T., and that there is nothing either way in the LXX. Now in the other instances of the N.T. there is no case precisely like this before us, not only no ὅταν δὲ but nothing analogous. I do not admit (until a real case is produced adverse to what is confessed by a candid and competent man, Canon Humphry, to be a much preferable resulting sense) that we are driven to deny an elasticity to the Greek, of which our tongue is perfectly susceptible. Englishmen are certainly not tied down to such an order, as "Again, when he bringeth in." What proof is there that the far more pliant Greek is more restricted? Not infrequently there are solitary examples of collocation or construction even in the N.T. as in other writings. If we may say, "And when, again, he bringeth in." etc., I know not why the writer may not with equal liberty have adopted a corresponding order, even though there be no other instance of or call for such a variety.

What then is the grammatical principle or the usage which is supposed to be traversed here? "In this epistle, when it is joined to a verb, it has always the sense of a second time, e.g. chap. 4:7, 5:12, 6:1,6." Is it not unfortunate that the very first is adverse? It is no more joined to a verb there than in the verse debated. It means "Again, he limiteth," not, "He limiteth a second time." No one doubts that in verse 12, like 6:1,6, it means iterum (not rursus, particularly when used as a sort of parenthesis, as in Chap. 1 and often elsewhere). Indeed, the very first occurrence in the N.T. refuses this imaginary canon of grammar. Our Lord said (Matt. 5:33) πάλην ἠκούσατε of which the unequivocal and universally allowed sense is, Again, ye heard, and not, because a verb follows, Ye heard a second time. To say "joined to a verb" begs the question. Is it really so? We may be assured it may not be.

The fact is that the apostle's object appears to be, not defining time . . . but . . . proving the universal homage of all God's angels to the glory of the Son. . . . At the same time it is frankly allowed that the fulfillment of Deut. 32 or of Psalm 97 as a whole awaits the Lord's second advent. (Exp. of Heb., p.16-17)

again . . . firstborn: The doubtful point of 6 is the Revisers' adoption of the margin of the Authorised Version, and consigning its text to their margin; the improvement is "first-born" for "first-begotten." (Bible Treasury 14:44)

again: Nor is their a word [from the American correctors of the RV] on the questionable place of "again" in 6 (Bible Treasury 15:30) angels: [Q. Deut. 32:8,43, Ps. 97 (or 6), Heb. 1:6. Are not "angels" in Sept. V. of the first scripture text, and can this stand? Is it not so in the Psalm, cited in the N.T.? How are we to understand all this? H.]

A. The Epistle to the Hebrews quotes verbally from the Greek Version of Deut. 32:43, at least in the Vatican copy. The same truth is revealed in Ps. 96(7):7 substantially but as a direct address. . . . Thus there is no real difficulty. (Bible Treasury N3:32)

1:7 as to: In 7 and 8 and 13 it is better to assimilate if not render the same (for the first πρός is indirect, the second direct), instead of giving "of" and "unto," as in the Authorised Version. Whether "of" in both cases is better than "as to" seems doubtful. (Bible Treasury 14:44)

winds: their first counsel [of the American correctors of the RV] is to omit marginal ("spirits"), which seem to be on just ground; for why "make" angels "spirits," seeing that they are all assumed so to be in 14? The parallelism also points to "winds" here. The notion of making the winds His angels, and a flame of fire His servants, is ungrammatical and inadmissible in both Hebrew and Greek. The Lord really causes His angels to assume the shapes He sees fit. (Bible Treasury 15:30)

1:8 as to: [See note to Heb. 1:7]

O: [Q. . . . Which is more exact, in Hebrews 1:8, "Therefore God, [even] thy God," &c.; or, "Therefore, O God, thy God," &c.? And why? C.]

As far as grammar is concerned, I think there need be no question that both the Hebrew and the Greek are capable of either construction. Compare Ps. 50:7; 67:7 for the nominative; and Psalm 43:4 for the vocative, as noticed by another. In verse 8, ὁ θεός is unquestionably used in a vocative sense; but this is no way necessary here. The context must decide; and to my mind the anointing would not be congruous with the vocative force in verse 9, so that I incline to the Authorized Version. (Bible Treasury 7:271)

1:9 lovedst: [The RV has] not adhered to the preterite rendering of the aorist, though there seems no reason why they might not have said, "Thou didst love righteousness and hate iniquity (or lawlessness). Therefore God, thy God, anointed," &c. And so in 10 "didst say," &c. (Bible Treasury 14:44)

God, thy God: [Ought not the 9th verse to end thus: —

Therefore, O God, thy God has anointed thee, &c.

It is almost impossible for the Greek to bear the present meaning of "even thy God." Such a meaning would require ὁ σὸς θεός. While in the present text we find ὁ θεός σου. σου here being merely enclitical, and the emphasis on God, not on thy. C.H.W.] (Christian Annotator 1:272)

It is evident from his punctuation, that Tischendorf must have taken the clause as C.H.W. proposes; for he has ἐχρίσεν σε, ὁ θεός, ὁ θ. σου, κ. τ. λ., as also Kunivel, Rosenmuller, and Stuart, not to speak of translators such as Beza, Osterveld, &c. It is, however, too strong to say that the Greek will not bear "God, (even) thy God," &c. The fact is, that either construction is allowable grammatically: the question is really one of the sense best suiting the context. (Christian Annotator 2:352)

God, thy God: "or, O God." Certainly many have so supposed, though Ps. 50:7 proves the analogy to the A.V., and the context (to my mind) is consistent with this alone. It is as man, not as God, that the Lord could be said with any propriety to be anointed. . . . The Authorised and Revised Versions were right as they are. (Bible Treasury 15:30) companions: In the aspect of divine glory we should not hear of "Thy fellows." The Authorised and Revised Versions, were right as they are. (Bible Treasury 15:30)

1:12 thou shalt roll: It is a wonder that they [the Revisers of 1881] did not heed Tischendorf's reading ἀλλάξεις for ἐλίξεις, which adheres to the Hebrew, though resting only on ḥ^{am}. D^m, Latin auxiliaries, &c., "as a vesture wilt thou change them, and they shall be changed," but the Vatican does not favour this. (Bible Treasury 14:44) up _A: it does seem strange that the advocates of the Vatican and a few others (MSS. κ A D^m. &c.) should have induced the Company [of Revisers of 1881] to adopt ὡς ἱμάτιον, which reads so unmeaningly in the second clause of 12. Even Tregelles bracketed, and Lachmann alone adopted the gloss. (Bible Treasury 14:44)

1:13 as to: [See note to Heb. 1:7]

a: why not "a" rather than "the" footstool? (Bible Treasury 14:44)

2:1 carried [or, slip]: The real force of the verb is intransitive, not transitive as in the A.V. Prov. 3:21 (LXX.) means, "Do not slip away," not "Let them not pass from thee." Though the context modifies that rendering a little, the usage is uniform. Wiclif seems nearest ("Fleten meie"), Tyndale and Cranmer "peryshe," Geneva the worst of all. The margin is far from satisfactory. (Exp. of Heb., p.25) carried [or, slip]: "lest haply we drift away" is a better rendering than in either the text or the margin of the Authorised Version, both of which are ungrammatical. (Bible Treasury 14:44)

2:2 retribution: is "recompense of reward" well here, because it suits, though cumbrously 10:35, 11:26? Would not requital or retribution in our text, and recompense elsewhere be better English? The Authorised Version misled the Revisers' Version in this unusual excess of sameness. (Bible Treasury 14:44)

2:4 [whole verse]: it is hard to see why the Authorised Version should be followed in the text and the margin [of the RV]. (Bible Treasury 14:44)

2:6 [whole verse]: The version of Ps. 8:4 is kept in 6 [of the RV], not quite in unison with 13:3; but the preterite which prevails in 7 was forgotten in 6. (Bible Treasury 14:44)

2:7 [and didst set him over the works of thy hands]: B, etc., omit this clause, for which \aleph A D P etc. vouch. (Exp. of Heb., p.30)

2:9 [whole verse]: It will be observed that they [the American correctors of the RV] do not comment on the concatenation of 9, where the Revisers join some of the moderns against the ancients, nor on its close where an interesting question arises, excluded by all the English Versions; though it is well-known that the Greek fathers take it as neuter, which enlarges the scope and is in keeping with what has gone before, whereas we hear of "many sons" in what follows, not all mankind. (Bible Treasury 15:30)

Λ angels: why should we have "the" angels in 9 as in 7, where it is no question of the whole class but of beings thus characterised? Our language allows of corresponding precision. (Bible Treasury 14:44)

thing [or, one]: And is it certain that $\acute{\upsilon}\pi\epsilon\rho\ \acute{\alpha}\nu\tau\omicron\varsigma$ means "for every man?" Why not for every [thing]? We have just heard of $\acute{\alpha}\nu\tau\alpha$, $\tau\acute{\alpha}\ \acute{\alpha}\nu\tau\alpha$, $\tau\eta\nu\ \acute{\omicron}\iota\kappa.$, and afterwards in ver. 10, but these of men also, not as $\acute{\alpha}\nu\tau\alpha\varsigma$ but as $\pi\omicron\lambda\lambda\omicron\upsilon\varsigma\ \nu\iota\omicron\upsilon\varsigma$. It is not that there is the least dogmatic difficulty as to all mankind, at least for one who applies Christ's death for all in 2 Cor. 5:14, as His death through and for sin, rather than to it, which last is exclusively true of believers. It is a question only of what best suits the context. (Bible Treasury 14:44-45)

2:11 sanctified: It may be well to observe how that $\omicron\iota\ \acute{\alpha}\gamma\iota\alpha\zeta\acute{\omicron}\mu\epsilon\nu\omicron\iota$ here does not mean the process going on, although the phrase in itself is quite capable of such force. The present in Greek, as in other tongues also, can express character apart from time, as every scholar knows and every person of intelligence must own on reflection. This is rendered certain of "the sanctified" here by comparing Heb. 10:10,14, which could not be said at the same time if sanctification were here viewed as only in progress. . . . It is not true, as Dean Alford said, that the perfect expresses God's purpose respecting these objects. It is on the contrary present standing, the actual result of a past action. (Exp. of Heb., p.39)

sanctified: I would add that it is incorrect to say that the present ($\omicron\iota\ \acute{\alpha}\gamma\iota\alpha\zeta\acute{\omicron}\mu\epsilon\nu\omicron\iota$) means necessarily a process going on, the perfect God's purpose respecting them. The present participle is often used with the article for a person or persons in any given way designated, apart from the question of time. But when the perfect is employed, as $\acute{\eta}\gamma\iota\alpha\sigma\mu\acute{\epsilon}\nu\omicron\iota$ in Hebrews 10:10, it is expressly not future purpose or potentiality, but present application and character founded on a past fact — in this case the actual result of the finished work of Christ to the believer. Dean Alford is in every respect mistaken here. (Bible Treasury 6:79)

all of one: "All of one" is purposely abstract ($\acute{\epsilon}\xi\ \acute{\epsilon}\nu\omicron\varsigma\ \acute{\alpha}\nu\tau\epsilon\varsigma$). The phrase is fairly rendered in the Authorized Version. The reference to God the Father is set aside by what follows; for if the point were a common Fatherhood in the higher sense, where would be the propriety of adding, "on which account he is not ashamed to call them brethren?" It would then be a necessity of relationship. On the other hand, there is the most careful guard throughout against such an undue enlargement of the sphere as would associate Christ with all the human race in its actual state. It is a question of real humanity in both the Sanctifier and the sanctified, not of the state in which He took it or they had it. They were "all one-wise," but not all in a condition exactly identical. (Bible Treasury 6:79)

2:12 congregation [or, church]: "the congregation" is decidedly [in the RV] better than "the church," as in the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:45)

2:13 gave: [The RV deserts] their preterite, perhaps owing to the Authorised Version of Is. 8:18. (Bible Treasury 14:45)

2:14 blood and flesh: The great weight of the best MSS. supports the less usual order (\aleph A B C D E M P, some cursives, and many ancient versions and fathers). The same order occurs in Eph. 6:12, and even in Polyaeen. Strag. iii. 11. (Exp. of Heb., p.37) blood and flesh: [In the RV,] is it not strange to consign the true order "blood and flesh" to the margin, and to adopt the other and commoner order in the text? (Bible Treasury 14:45)

in like manner: "Likewise," "in like manner," "similarly" (as I have rendered it), is the true force of $\pi\alpha\rho\alpha\pi\lambda\eta\sigma\acute{\iota}\omega\varsigma$. It is not correct to say that the rendering in our common Bible is not sufficiently strong. Bengel gives similiter and remarks, not that it is equivalent to but "idem fere atque mox κατὰ πάντα per omnia v. 17, c. iv. 15." The Docetae may have perverted the word to their own wicked folly; but no scholar who examines the matter can deny that $\pi.$ does not go as far as ὁμοίως or ἴσως; but as Alford justly remarks, it expresses "a general similitude, a likeness in the main: and so not to be pressed here, to extend to entire identity, nor on the other hand to imply, of purpose, partial diversity; but to be taken in its wide and open sense — that He Himself also partook, in the main, in like manner with us, of our nature." The Docetae did not believe that Christ really μετέσχευεν τῶν ἀνθρώπων, which words do predicate sameness in essence. It is ignorance to found this on $\pi\alpha\rho\alpha\pi\lambda\eta\sigma\acute{\iota}\omega\varsigma$, which simply asserts similarity of manner: while on the other hand, even this could not have been truthfully said, had not the Word been made flesh $\omicron\upsilon\ \delta\omicron\kappa\eta\tau\acute{\omega}\varsigma\ \acute{\alpha}\lambda\lambda\prime\ \acute{\alpha}\lambda\eta\theta\iota\nu\acute{\omega}\varsigma$, $\omicron\upsilon\ \phi\alpha\nu\tau\alpha\sigma\tau\iota\kappa\acute{\omega}\varsigma\ \acute{\alpha}\lambda\lambda\prime\ \acute{\omicron}\nu\tau\omega\varsigma$. (Comp. Phil. 2:27.) (Bible Treasury 6:79)

2:16 For: "For" is the only right sense, not "moreover" as Macknight says, nor "besides" with M. Stuart. The word $\delta\acute{\eta}\pi\omicron\upsilon$ was quite mistaken by those that followed the laxity of the Vulgate. The Syriac Versions early and late pass it by altogether. It occurs nowhere else in the Greek Testament nor yet in the Septuagint, But its force is unequivocally in the ordinary usage of the language, as "doubtless," "I presume," "forsooth." We have already seen that "to take up" or "undertake the cause" is the meaning of the verb. . . . (Exp. of Heb., p.46)

doth . . . take hold: Wiclif, following the Latin, says simply "He took"; Tyndale, better still, "He taketh on Him," though wrongly giving "in no place": so Cranmer. The Geneva V. gave the past tense and "in no sort" wrongly. The A.V., though right as to "verily," went farther astray by inserting "the nature of." (Exp. of Heb., p.44) doth . . . take hold: The rendering of verse 16 is faultily given in many versions, in none perhaps worse than our own A.V. The sense is totally changed, and a preterite form assigned to the verb, instead of the present tense, the natural consequence of such a change of sense. "He took not on Him the nature of angels, but He took," etc. This, it is evident, $\acute{\epsilon}\pi\iota\lambda\alpha\mu\beta\acute{\alpha}\nu\epsilon\tau\alpha\iota$ cannot bear. It is expressly a present. Again the word means to lay hold of, especially when with a genitive as here in the middle voice. Such is its force, even when uncompounded; and the preposition defines or emphasizes. Never does it mean to take a nature, though the A.V. seems to have been led into this, partly by Beza, chiefly by certain Greek commentators, for whose mistake no excuse can be made. (The substance of his annotation I transcribe from the fifth and last edition of his N.T., dedicated to Queen Elizabeth, 1598. "Angels, that is, angelic nature. . . He a little before said κεκοινῶνῃκε instead of κοινωνεί!, so now on the other hand he employs the present for the past!! which exchanges of tenses everywhere occur with Hebrews. Vulg. apprehendit not badly, but a word unusual in setting out the hypostatic union of the two natures. Abraham's seed, that is, the real nature of man, especially of Abraham's family. . . Wherefore the more to be execrated is the audacity of Castalio, who renders ἐπιλαμβάνεται by opitulatur [helpeth], an interpretation not only false but irreverent, since ἐπ. never expresses this among the Greeks," etc., etc. Now it is true that Dean Alford, etc., who agree with C., go too far. With the dative the verb does mean to help. But the fact is that the French divine was blinded by theological prejudice, to say nothing of feeling against a rival translator, who here, if not quite accurate, was nearer the truth, would not swerve from grammatical requirement, and gave the sense substantially. There is on the one hand no enallage, as Beza says, but a clear and correct statement of a manifest and indisputable truth; on the other, it is untrue that Castalio invented a meaning new and unheard of, but pertinent to the unfolding argument of the chapter, whereas Beza offends against correct language, and destroys the truth here intended, confounding it with what was already laid down.) They were occupied with controversies which misled them to catch at straws. (Take the best of them, J. Chrysostom, who comments as follows on the passage: "What is this he says? He took up an angel's nature, not a man's. But what is, He layeth hold? Not that nature of the angels, says he, did He seize, but ours. And wherefore did he not say, He took up, but employ this expression, He layeth hold? From the metaphor of those that pursue persons that turn away and do everything so as to catch them though they flee, and lay hold of them though bounding off. For He pursued closely and caught human nature in its flight from Him and flying far, for we were far off. He showed that this He has done by kindness to man alone, and love and guardian care" (In Epp. Paul. vii. 63, ed. Field, Oxen. 1862). Theodoret adds nothing of real value, as he repeats the same exegetical mistake. He notices the peculiarity of Abraham's seed in such a connection, and tries to explain it as a reminder of the promise. Quite true; but incarnation and promise are wholly distinct, though this could not have been without that.) . . . The uncertainty that has prevailed is extraordinary as to almost every word. (Exp. of Heb., p.45-46) doth . . . take hold: The English version of verse 16 is false in itself and destroys the connection. For of course (δῆπου) it is not angels He takes up (i.e. helps), but He takes up Abraham's seed. It is not a question here of assuming a nature, but of the reason why He did so; and this is His undertaking the cause of the seed of Abraham — not of Adam, as such. The ancient expositors (Chrysostom, Theodoret, Ambrose &c.) and "great divines" (as Luther, Calvin, Beza, &c.) misled the authorised translators and the error in sense led to the further error in form; for they could not adhere thus to the present tense of ἐπιλαμβάνεται and hence were forced into the monstrous blunder of rendering it, "He took," &c. Next, the thread of sense is cut, and a mere and feeble reiteration of the truth of verse 14 is imported into verse 16 — a needless denial that angelic nature was assumed. Whereas, the affirmation of His special interest in Abraham's seed links on with the previous statement of His incarnation and His death for redemption purposes, and most fitly leads into the inference that follows. (Bible Treasury 6:79) doth . . . take hold: . . . that is, He does not espouse their cause, which is the true meaning. (Bible Treasury N1:44) [See also Bible Treasury 20:220) doth . . . take hold: there is a well-known correction of the Authorised Version adopted [in the RV]; for it is a question not at all of having taken the nature of man, but of interest and succour for Abraham's seed, not angels. (Bible Treasury 14:45) doth . . . take hold: [The American correctors of the RV] propose for the text, "doth he give help to," instead of "take hold," which they would relegate to the margin. It comes really to the same sense, the one being the literal meaning, the other derivative. . . . The Authorised Version was a huge blunder — physically, grammatically, contextually, and dogmatically. . . . So that Chrysostom who made a similar mistake had to desert the text, and puts it as the nature not of angels but of men that He took up; just as King James' translators got farther away from the truth than the versions which preceded theirs. (Bible Treasury 15:30)

2:17 be: Their [the American correctors of the RV] only reference is to 17, where they with Alford, Green, the Rhemish, &c. prefer "become" to "be" a merciful &c. Those who adhere to "be" as in the Authorised and Revised Versions, do not differ in sense, believing that our Lord only entered on His proper priestly functions when He ascended on high. If He were on earth, He would not even be a priest, there being those who offered the gifts according to the law. His is a heavenly priesthood. (Bible Treasury 15:30) to make propitiation: The English versions are various, and none of them exact, yet there is no uncertainty as to the sense. Wiclif is the most paraphrastic — "that He schulde be made merciful and a feithful bischop to God, that He schulde be merciful to the trespassis of the puple." Tyndale is closer, "that He myght be mercifull, and a faythfull hye preste in thynges concernynge God, for to pource the peoples synnes." And so Cranmer and the Geneva Bible. The Rhemish has the barbarous latin servilely reproduced, "that He might repropitiare," etc. The A.V. gives "to make reconciliation for the sinnes of the people": an awkward misrendering. (Exp. of Heb., p.48) [See note on Rom. 5:11, and Bible Treasury 6:79, N1:45] to make propitiation: "reconciliation" gives place [in the RV] very properly to "propitiation" (Bible Treasury 14:45)

3:1 Jesus χ : "Christ" of the Authorised Version, following Text. Rec. disappears [in the RV] rightly. (Bible Treasury 14:45)

3:2 as he was: why in 2 "who was" or "who is"? "As being" is more correct. It is hardly to be supposed that Mr. Green meant to omit ὅλω with the Vatican, especially as he gives "all" in his version. (Bible Treasury 14:45)

3:6 α Son . . . the . . . the: surely it is Christ as "Son over His house," not "a Son." Nor is there ground to say "our," but "the" boldness and the boast, rather than boasting and glorying, which would be rather καύχησις. (Bible Treasury 14:45)

α Son: Had they [the American correctors of the RV] remarked on the too common dilution of the Revisers which re-appears in 6, there would have been true ground for exception; for surely "as Son" is the sense, not "as a son." (Bible Treasury 15:30)

3:7 Wherefor: Is not the connection of διό (7) with βλέπετε (12)? If so, it is neglected in the Revised as much as in the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:45)

3:9 when . . . [me], proved [me]: [The RV has] "wherewith," not "when," or "where," also "by proving," ἐν δοκιμασίᾳ, rather than ἔδοκ. as in the LXX. and Text. Rec., which adds με twice. (Bible Treasury 14:45)

when: the points noticed [by the American correctors of the RV] are of the slightest, "where" for "wherewith" (9) as in margin¹⁸ [of the RV] . . . It is curious that all the older English versions were right and had "where" till the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:30)

[me], proved [me]: Text. Rec. follows the later copies, as they with the Septuagint add με and read ἐδοκιμάσάν με. The more ancient give the text adopted in this version ["tempted (me) by proof"]. A similar remark applies to "this" rather than "that" as in the common text. (Exp. of Heb., p.56)

3:10 this: [The RV has] ταύτη, "this," not ἐκείνη, "that." (Bible Treasury 14:45)

this: [See note to 3:9]

3:11 as: the points noticed [by the American correctors of the RV] are of the slightest, . . . "so" of the Authorised Version (as an alternative in the margin, in 11 where the Revisers have "as" — in 4:3 also. (Bible Treasury 14:30)

3:12 See: [See note to Heb. 3:7]

3:14 companions: The word often translated ["partakers"] is the same as is quoted from the Greek version of Psalm 45 in chap. 1:9. "Companion" would be more modern English . . . (Exp. of Heb., p.61) companions: as "partakers of Christ" has quite a different meaning, would it not have been better to have adopted throughout, as in 1:9, a more suitable rendering? "Fellows" from Ps. 14 is scarcely desirable. Partners or companions might be used. (Bible Treasury 14:45) companions: [The American correctors of the RV] might have well pointed out also the loss of connexion in 14 with 1:9, which all the old English Versions fail to keep up; not to speak of marking in the best way the links of the closing verses. (Bible Treasury 15:30)

3:16 who: The A.V. followed the indefinite pronoun, not the interrogative as is here preferred with the R.V. (Exp. of Heb., p.63) who: for τινές of the Text. Rec., they read [in the RV] with most critics τίνας. For who when they heard, or in hearing, did provoke? (Bible Treasury 14:45)

3:19 unbelief: the disobedient means those who did not listen to the word. Hence in 19 it is "unbelief." (Bible Treasury 14:45)

4:2 not having been mixed with faith in: I am aware that the mass of ancient MSS. favors the strange reading adopted by the Revisers, as well as by most modern critics, "because they were not united by faith with them that heard." So almost all the uncials and cursives and many ancient versions. Here I cannot but agree with Tischendorf that the Sinai MS. (8) is right, as are a few cursives, the Peschito Syriac, and some good copies of the Vulgate, etc. The externally best-supported reading seems hardly sense, if not wrong doctrine. And this is no solitary instance. (Exp. of Heb., p.67) not having been mixed with faith in: [The RV of] 4:2 presents a notable instance of temerity. I do not speak of the clumsy literalism of the word "of hearing," but of what follows, "because they were [in the margin it was according to some] not united by faith with them that heard." No doubt Alford, Tregelles and Lachmann were blinded by their fidelity to the more ancient MSS. Tischendorf, strengthened by the Sinaitic which rejects the pl. acc. form, corrected his early change from the Text. Rec. because of the paucity of witnesses in its favour, save the Syriac and some of the Latin. But a more monstrous result than the sense flowing from that which pleased the ancient copyists and the modern critics, as well as the Revisers, it is hard to conceive. Besides, even the marginal alternative fares hardly at their hands. What is the sense from "it was?" "Because the word was not united by faith with them that heard." How greatly inferior to the Authorised Version! If the ordinary reading, or its form in 8 had a place in the margin, the Revisers ought to have given it a decent rendering, not one which sounds almost ridiculous. Nothing can be more confused and incoherent with the argument than the sense attached to the favourite reading; and even most modern commentators who adopt it on diplomatic grounds give it up, save the late intrepid Dean of Canterbury, who will have no special reference to Caleb and Joshua, yet fairly owns that his own interpretation does not satisfy himself. (Bible Treasury 14:45) not having been mixed with faith in: (No wonder that [the American correctors of the RV] . . . would have the text and marg.⁵ [of the RV] change places, reading in the margin, "many ancient authorities," &c.) [The American correctors] are right about the singular text of the critics, adopted indeed on most ample diplomatic authority but with the strangest resulting sense, in the face of the great corroboration of the common text lent by the Sinaitic copy to the three known cursives, backed up by the Vulgate and other Latin MSS., the Pesch. Syr. &c. (Bible Treasury 15:30)

4:3 enter: The present tense of verse 3 is not historical but absolute, a usage most frequent in Scripture and in ordinary speech too, especially as to principles of truth. Believers are the enterers into the rest of glory: not all men, nor yet all Israel, but "we that believed." (Exp. of Heb., p.68)

the rest: [The American correctors of the RV] do not object to the unfounded emphasis given to "that" rest in 3 [in the RV] (Bible Treasury 15:30)

as: [See note to Heb. 3:11]

4:7 [middle of verse]: [The American correctors of the RV] would read in 7, "To day, saying in David, so long a time afterward (even as hath been said before), To-day if ye," etc. (Bible Treasury 15:30)

4:10 rested: It is an error that the aorist has really a perfect force in [v. 10]. It is ethical and suitable as an aphorism. (Exp. of Heb., p.72) rested: Without dwelling on minor points, 10 [in the RV] appears to be only in part corrected. The Authorised Version was misled by Tyndale and that of Geneva, and the rendering falls in with the evangelical misapplication of the chapter to a present rest for the soul by faith, instead of the rest of God, which we are to enter at Christ's coming, a stimulus to present labour and to fear of taking our rest now. It ought to be "ceased from his works as God from His own." It is clear that it can be no question here of Christ giving rest to all those that labour and are heavy-laden, but to those who already believed in, or at least professed, His name; else they would have been called to believe, not to fear, still less to diligence in every good work. One need say nothing of Owen's wild idea adopted by Ebrard and Alford that so describes Christ. No so; it is the general statement that he who has entered into God's rest has himself to rest from his works — a truth which applies even to God, who rested after His works in creating. It is no question of bad works: God's own were certainly good. It is a mistake that this view converts the aorist into a perfect or present. For if any tense but the aorist were used in Greek, it might, nay must, have misled. Believers now are viewed as εἰσερχ. and in no way as εἰσελθόντες, and the finite verb is properly in the same tense. It is the case supposed when the rest is entered, not at all the present result of a past act in the perfect. If the present had been used, as often expressive of a general principle, it was obviously liable to mislead the reader, for the entrance is unquestionably future. (Bible Treasury 14:45) own: [The American correctors of the RV] do not object to the enfeebling of 10, by withholding "own" at the end. (Bible Treasury 15:30)

4:14 passed as he hath: ["passed as he is":] I know not how better to represent two things apt to be overlooked; the absence of the article and the perfect tense of the participle. "Who," or "That" hath passed implies the article and is designative; "Passed" simply would answer to the aorist. (Exp. of Heb., p.76)

the [or, our]: is not "the" better than "our" confession? (Bible Treasury 14:45)

4:15 [^] apart: Here the introduction of the word “yet” into the clause (printed in italics) is a very great blemish, calculated to ruin the sense. If you read it without that addition, you may apprehend what the Holy Ghost means a great deal more distinctly and correctly. As it stands now in the Authorised Version (and also in the work of the Revisers too, certainly of many individuals in our own day), the deduction is that the Lord was tempted, but never yielded, never sinned. This is not at all the point. The Holy Spirit was teaching quite another truth, more worthy of Christ’s glory, and needed by the believer. Of course, it is true that Christ never did sin; but it is far below the truth here intended. What is revealed goes a great deal farther. (Bible Treasury N1:61) [See also Bible Treasury 20:222]

[^] apart: But the close of 15 [in the RV] is more serious. To say “yet” as in the Authorised Version, following others since Tyndale, leaves the door open to misconstruction of the true meaning and even to heterodoxy. Indeed, not a few have drawn, what they scarcely could have done from χωρίς ἁμαρτίας, that it means the Lord, however tempted, never sinned; whereas the true sense is that He has been in all things tempted in like sort, sin excepted. He never had our sinful temptations from a fallen nature such as James (1:13-15) speaks of. For this He suffered on the cross, and now sympathises with us in our dangers, difficulties, and weakness. He knew these trials incomparably more than we; but there was no sin in Him, no evil proclivities in His nature as in ours. (Bible Treasury 14:45)

[^] apart: Not even the serious error of “yet” in 15, imported from the Authorised Version into the Revised, draws out a word of remonstrance [from the American correctors to the RV]. “But yet” in Tyndale was a slight guard; the Rhemish is the best, for it has no supplement, as none is needed, and any such as is here insinuates the heterodoxy of its merely meaning that He did not sin. The statement however goes farther incalculably, and teaches that He was tempted, or tried, in all things in like manner, or according to our similitude, sin excepted — not sinning merely but “sin” excepted. In Him was no sin: it is that not only He did not sin, but there was nothing of the kind in Him. He knew no sin. (Bible Treasury 15:30)

4:16 seasonable: why not “for seasonable help”? “Time of need” limits the succour too much to the moment of trespass; the former is the larger and more worthy sense, as it is the most faithful version. (Bible Treasury 14:45)

seasonable: [The American correctors of the RV] are silent as to the last verse where “to help us in time of need” is freer even than the Authorised Version which omits the “us:” “for seasonable help” is surely better than Alford’s “for help in time.” To limit it to “to-day” is not warranted. (Bible Treasury 15:30-31)

5:4 but [^]: the first thing we would note is the right omission of ὁ in 4, which would make it not hypothetical, but actual, which really is in the clause following. It is not therefore “he that is,” as in the Authorised Version, following the Text. Rec., but, “as” or “when” called. (Bible Treasury 14:45-46)

5:7 having offered up: In 7, as in 11:17, προσφέρω is confounded [in the RV] with ἀναφέρω, which does mean offer up as well as bear. (Bible Treasury 14:46)

because of his godly fear: Not only Calvin and Beza of the Reformed, but the old Latin versions, followed by Ambrose, and by moderns, especially Lutherans, strangely render this “delivered from fear,” or the like. (Exp. of Heb., p.93)

5:8 though being [^] Son: “though He were Son,” or “Son as He was,” is better than “a” Son (Bible Treasury 14:46)

[^] Son: we have again [with the American correctors of the RV] the worse than needless “a” Son after the quotation in 5 (Bible Treasury 15:31) learned: Dr. Whitby fell into the perversion of rendering the verb “taught”! (Exp. of Heb., p.93)

5:9 there is no need of “the” before “author.” (Bible Treasury 14:46)

5:12 have become dull of hearing: not simply “are” as in the A.V. (Exp. of Heb., p.95) beginning: “the rudiments” do not go well with “the first principles” as may be made plainer by 6:1, where our Revisers [of 1881] give us “let us cease to speak of the first principles of Christ.” There is nothing better than “the beginning.” First principles are never to be left; but the word of the beginning of Christ might safely be left to go on to the knowledge of His redemption and glorification, which are the true power for acting by the Holy Ghost on the new man. Without this is no “full growth” to which one is pressed on in 6:1. (Bible Treasury 14:46)

5:14 perfect [or, full-grown]: The word translated “full-grown” is literally “perfect,” and given in the A.V. so repeatedly that some lose the true force, which is simply those come to maturity. (Exp. of Heb., p.97) perfect [or, full-grown]: Solid food is for “full-grown men,” (Bible Treasury 14:46)

6:1 [first part of verse]: The various English versions are disappointing. Wiclif seems to have read or mistaken “immittentes” for “intermittentes” in the Vulgate, for he has the strange error of “bringing in,” etc., instead of leaving off. And Tyndale is loose indeed: “let us leave the doctrine pertaining to the beginning of a Christen man.” In result it is not far from the general sense, though intolerable as a translation. Cranmer’s Bible and the Genevise followed Tyndale less or more closely. The Rhemish, save in its servile adherence to the Latin, is more exact than any; for even the A. and the R. Vv., as we have seen, might mislead in the text, though precise in the margin. The Revisers rightly gave “full grown” for perfect in chap. 5:14; consistency would therefore demand “full growth” here. For it is not the quite ignorant who fail to understand that “perfection” means only this, the adult standing of the Christian as compared with the infancy before redemption. But the enemy has a hand in keeping believers back now, while this Epistle chides the Hebrews for the same culpable dullness in early days. (Exp. of Heb., p.101-102)

[first part of verse]: It is an unhappy rendering to say “first principles:” for these we never “leave.” It is really “the word of the beginning of Christ” — what was known before His death, resurrection and ascension. (God’s Inspiration of the Scriptures, p.524)

[first part of verse]: we have again [in the American correctors of the RV] “first principles” instead of simply “beginning.” We may and ought to go on to full growth or “perfection,” but should never leave first principles.

Hence in 6:1 they fail to put the case in its full force, though quite justified in rejecting the strange paraphrase of the Revised text. The margin⁷ is preferable; and “full growth,” or margin⁸, should have displaced “perfection” in what follows, for it is equivocal if not misleading, and 5:14 should have prevailed with the Revisers as to our verse. (Bible Treasury 15:31)

6:2 washings: [“washings (not baptisms — see Greek) . . .” . . . the doctrine of cleansings and of transfer of sinfulness to the sacrificial victim. . . . W.P.]

I do not accept the proposed rendering and still less the exegesis. There is no allusion, so far as I see, to the washings of and laying hands on the victim, but to the ordinances of purification and the imposition of hands in the case of men. (Bible Treasury 3:16)

6:6 and have fallen: "If they shall fall" in the Authorised Version is brought back to the true and literal force [in the RV], "and have fallen." It was a fact described. (Bible Treasury 14:46)

6:7 ground [or, land]: It is not "the earth" as a whole as in A.V., nor yet as in R.V. "the land," etc., as that particular one objectively viewed, but characteristically "land"; for here English idiom as often coincides with Greek. (Exp. of Heb., p.108) ground [or, land]: it is ground, or land, not "the" land. (Bible Treasury 14:46) ground [or, land]: was it not worth their [The American correctors of the RV] notice that, it is "land," not "the" land? (Bible Treasury 15:31)

6:9 connected with: "Next" is a frequent sense of the term (ἐχ.) employed. Here it is modified by the context, as often in ordinary Greek, and means not "following," but "pertaining to" or "connected with" salvation. (Exp. of Heb., p.109) connected with: [The American correctors of the RV] are warranted (9) somewhat more than marg.¹ "near to" and preferring "belong to" perhaps. (Bible Treasury 15:31)

6:10 ^Λ love: The Text. Rec. adds "labour of," probably from 1 Thess. 1:3. The best authorities (A B D S P 6, 17, 31, 37, 47, etc., and almost all ancient Vv.) are adverse. (Exp. of Heb., p.108)

^Λ love: [The RV omits] "the labour" on high and ample authority. (Bible Treasury 14:46)

6:11 desire earnestly: Is not "desire" defective unless more strongly qualified in 11? (Bible Treasury 14:46) assurance: [See note to Heb. 10:22]

6:20 ^Λ forerunner: There is no need of "a" forerunner (Bible Treasury 14:46)

7:1 the: I know not why Dean Alford spoke of the second article here omitted "with B"; for the Vatican gives it as all do, save a few cursives. The Complut. omitted it, followed by Beza and the Elzevirs; but Erasmus, Colinaeus, and R. Steph. duly inserted it; and so the modern editors. (Exp. of Heb., p.115) that: Ὅς is read by the great Uncials, and so one cursive known to us; yet ὁ seems right (C L and most) and to have got the σ from the word following. The relative supposes a needless anacoluthon. No wonder that Tischendorf and Westcott and Hort here desert Lachmann and Tregelles. (Exp. of Heb., p.115)

7:2 also: The "also" or "even" is doubtful, though it has good and ancient evidence. (Exp. of Heb., p.120)

7:3 continuously: not a word [from the American correctors of the RV], not even on the interesting difference of εἰς τὸ διηνεκές, here and in 10:1 rendered "continually," in 10:12, "for ever," as compared with εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, "for ever," Heb. 5:6, 6:20, 7:17,21,28. It means without interruption or break, continuously, or in perpetuity whether relative or absolute; a precision of the utmost moment both as to Christ and as to the Christian, as may appear farther on. The difficulty raised by Commentators as to eternity has no real ground in the phrase. (Bible Treasury 15:31)

7:4 a: there is extremely little to criticise [in Heb. 7 of the RV]: a particle struck out in 4, the article in 5, 10, change of form in 11, 16, 18, and priests instead of priesthood in 14, a quotation curtailed a little in 21, and a particle added in 22, are almost all. (Bible Treasury 14:46)

7:5 have ^Λ: [See note to Heb. 7:4]

7:10 [whole verse]: [See note to Heb. 7:4]

7:11 [whole verse]: [See note to Heb. 7:4]

said: "called" [or "said to be"]. (Exp. of Heb., p.124)

7:14 priests: [See note to Heb. 7:4]

7:16 [whole verse]: [See note to Heb. 7:4]

7:18 [whole verse]: [See note to Heb. 7:4]

7:19 [first part of verse]: Only it is well to observe that the A.V. of the passage is untenable, and so are the various antecedent translations. Thus Wiclif muddles the entire context, though he is right as to the last clause. It is the more curious as the Vulgate is correct, which helped the Rhemish, though their English is here clumsy and their punctuation cuts all thread of sense. Tyndale, by failing to see the parenthesis, led the way into the strange error of understanding (seemingly, for it is preposterous) that "the law made nothing perfect: but was an introduction," etc. Cranmer followed in his wake. The English version of Geneva erred in another way of like misapprehension by giving, "the law made nothing perfect: but the bringing in of a better hope made perfect," etc. The A.V. followed this by inserting "did". The truth is that no verb is needed other than the text supplies in the beginning of verse 18, which stretches over to verse 19 also. (Exp. of Heb., p.131-2)

[first part of verse]: . . . in verses 18, 19 of our chapter, we must take "for the law made nothing perfect" parenthetically, and suppose an ellipse of γίνεται (not of ἐτελείωσεν) with ἐπεσαγωγῇ. In other words, "did" ought to be left out of the authorised version. (Bible Witness & Review 1:263, Christian Annotator 2:28-29)

[first part of verse]: Of course, the mistranslation in the Authorised Version of ver. 19 is avoided by the Revisers [of 1881]. The Old English Versions in general treat it wretchedly, from Wiclif down, Rhemish and all. Not one seems to have heeded the plain fact that 19 is the correlative of 18, marked carefully by the regular μὲν . . . δέ, with the first parenthetic clause at the beginning of 19, which explains why the foregoing commandment was annulled. Think of Tyndale making 18 a period, so as to predicate of the law, that it not only made nothing perfect, which is true, but was the introduction of a better hope, which is not only untrue but utterly false. Cranmer follows him in this; but even Wiclif had avoided it, as the Geneva Version more. The Rhemish is, as often, ambiguous, and suggestive of wrong more than of right, probably the fruit of sheer blank ignorance of the truth. If the Authorised Version kept clear of positive error in the text, they brought it into their margin. The parenthesis of which they did not think would have proved a safe-guard, as well as seeing the contrast between the fore-going commandment and the better hope, the one abrogated and the other brought in. Of the ancient version[s], the Peschito Syriac is perhaps the nearest, save the Philoxenian, which is closer still. Lachmann, in his early and later editions, punctuates the Greek correctly, but not the Vulgate, which may, if rightly divided, intend the true thought. Theophylact is more distinct than Theodoret or Chrysostom. (Bible Treasury 14:46)

7:21 oath-swearing: The very term employed in this case, swearing of an oath, is more full and formal than the short and familiar word previously and generally used. It would seem that the utmost weight of solemnity is expressed thereby. The only occurrence in the Septuagint is in Ezek. 17:18,19, where was decided the lot of the profane prince. The Apocrypha has it once (3 Esdr. 8:93(90)). In Acts 2:30 the phrase is composed of the two words here combined. The critic Julius Pollux has the word in his Onomasticon (1:38), not Plato, who uses the plural form differently accentuated therefore, for asseverations on oath (Phaedr. 241 a, ed. H. Steph.), a form also expressive of the accompanying sacrifice among the heathen like ὀρκία as the Lexicons cite. (Exp. of Heb., p.132-3)

[according to the order of Melchizedek]: The best copies and versions omit the rest of the citation here; as κ B read $\kappa\alpha\iota$ in 22. (Exp. of Heb., p.132)

[last part of verse]: [See note to Heb. 7:4]

7:22 much \wedge : [See note to 7:21]

\wedge surety: [See note to Heb. 7:4]

covenant: "Testament" is here quite out of place; for what has a giver of security to do with making a will? Heb. 9:16, 17 is the sole passage of scripture which requires or even admits of such a sense; and it is there due to "eternal inheritance" in the verse immediately preceding. The word in itself is capable of either sense, meaning in human relations a disposition, especially of property by will, and in divine things a covenant, which naturally predominates in the LXX. and the N.T. The context decides with certainty. Thus in Matt. 26:28, Mark 14:24, Luke 22:20, remission of sins is expressly bound up with the "new covenant" (not testament) as in Jer. 31:31-34. Even the Vulgate has here "novum foedus," not testamentum, which ought to have sufficed to have kept Jerome right in the Gospels. And what has "blood" to do with a "will"? That it should be the basis of a covenant is a familiar truth. A will or testament is unknown to the O.T. Not less clearly is it the God of Israel's "holy covenant," as it is rightly rendered in Luke 1:72: testament can have no relation to the oath sworn to Abraham; though the Vulgate gives that word followed by Wiclif and the Rhemish translators, as it misled all the English in the three texts first referred to in the synoptic Gospels. Acts 3:25, 7:8, are equally plain for "covenant"; and there all the English versions are correct, save Wiclif and the Rhemists, servile as usual to the Vulgate. But they were all inexcusable, particularly as to Acts 7:8, which directly alludes to Gen. 17, where the Vulgate has uniformly "pactum," never once "testamentum."

The Epistles are just as unambiguous. Thus in Rom. 9:4, "the covenants" (cf. Gal 4:24 and Eph. 2:12) can be the only right sense, referring to Jer. 31:31 for the new, and to Exod. 24:8 for the first or old. Here the Vulgate follows the erroneous singular, as in BDEFG, etc., against the true text in κ and the mass of uncial and cursive copies, etc. (save that A and L omit so as to be out of court), and all critics except Lachmann, who, great a scholar as he was, can never be reckoned on for a spiritual judgment. The English are right, save Wiclif and the Rhemists and the margin of the A.V. In Rom. 11:27 the meaning is beyond doubt "covenant," as in the English with the same exceptions; where the error of the Vulgate is the more flagrant, because in Isa. 59:21 it gives "foedus" rightly, yet mistranslates as usual in the N.T. citation. 1 Cor. 11:25 falls under the remarks on the Lord's Supper in the Gospels, as already seen. 2 Cor. 3:6-14 can only mean "a new covenant" and "the old covenant," the reference being indisputable; yet here the influence of the Vulgate misled all the English discreditably. Even Beza had corrected himself; for while wrong in his editions of 1559, 1565, and 1582, he abandons "test." and substitutes "pactum" in his last two editions of 1588 and 1598, though without a reason given in his notes. The connection of Gal. 3:15 is conclusive for the more general "covenant" even though human only, rather than the narrower "testament," which is here more excusable in the Vulgate, Wiclif, Tyndale, Cranmer, and the version of Rheims, while the Geneva rendering of 1557 led the A.V. to "covenant," with "testament" in the margin. This is confirmed by verse 17, where a last "will" or "testament" cannot rightly be understood, though here again we have the same parties similarly ranged. In chap. 4:24 the A.V. alone of English is correct, with the marginal alternative for which there was no good reason. In Eph. 2:12 the Geneva V. was the forerunner of the A.V., Beza being right all through.

This brings us, according to the usual arrangement, to our Epistle, and to this the first mention of the word, where "covenant" has been shewn to be right. In Heb. 8:6,8,9 (twice), and 10 it is unmistakably and uniformly "covenant"; for what has a "mediator" to do with a testament? Other proofs are so obvious as to need no further pointing out. So in chap. 9:4 the ark was of the "covenant," with which a will or testament had no congruity: and with the "tables" too in the same verse. It has been remarked also that "a mediator" goes with "a covenant," not a testament (verse 15), and the bearing of the "first covenant" is determined by the O.T. reference. "Testament" it cannot be. But the inspiring Spirit, in the parenthesis of verses 16, 17, avails Himself of the signification so familiar to all who spoke or read Greek, in order to impress the place that death has for introducing and giving effect to the blessing of the Christian. A covenant does not imply in any case the death of the covenanter to give it validity; a testament invariably supposes the testator's death to bring it into operation. All learning or argument to set aside "testament" and "testator" here is but beating the air. Equally vain is it to establish "testament" in verse 15, or in 18 and 20, where "covenant" alone suits and [is] alone warranted by the O.T. God enjoined a covenant, not a testament, and that by blood. The same proof applies no less stringently to chap. 10:16-29, 12:24, and 13:20; as also to Rev. 11:19.

Now these are all the occurrences in the N.T.; and the sum is that "testament" is out of place everywhere save in Heb. 9:16, 17, where alone special contextual bearing gives occasion to that sense; whereas the universal O.T. force prevails in every other. The question is here gone into fully, that no reader may allow the unbelieving notion of the least uncertainty hanging over the usage. It is in vain and even injurious to parade a crowd of the learned men opposed to another crowd not less learned, save to prove that our faith ought in no case to rest on man but on God's word and Spirit. Thus regarded, the uncertainty of men confirms the believer in the value of the provisions of God's grace and word. (Exp. of Heb., p.134-136)

7:24 untransferable: It is ἀπαράβατος. Theodoret and other Greek fathers interpret it as "unsuccesional," which makes excellent sense. But usage points rather to "unchangeable" or intransmissible, untransferable. (Exp. of Heb., p.136)

7:26 priest \wedge . . . us: A B D E, and both Syriac versions, add $\kappa\alpha\iota$ "also." It may be noticed that by a misprint Tischendorf gives ὑμῖν "you," instead of ἡμῖν "us." By a similar inadvertence heaps of various readings arose among the copyists of old. (Exp. of Heb., p.139) holy [or, pious], guileless, undefiled, separated from sinners: The word "holy" should be considered. In Greek as in Hebrew two expressions are employed: one (ἅγιος) to imply separateness for God from evil, the other (δσιος) graciousness, which said of God means His mercy, said of man means his piety. It is the latter term which is here rendered "holy," a holiness full of loving-kindness. Next, ἄκακος is poorly translated "harmless" as in the A.V.; and "guileless" as in the Revision answers to ἄδολος . . . Appropriately therefore is He next said to be "separated from sinners," not from sins only, as the Pesch-Syriac says, but from sinners. (Exp. of Heb., p.140)

7:28 Son perfected: "Son" is characteristic, and hence has not the article. . . . Its insertion would make Himself prominent rather than His near relationship to God. The perfect participle passive here as in verse 26 points to the permanent character acquired, and not to the simple fact as the aorist would express. . . . it is the lasting result of . . . [a] terminated act. (Exp. of Heb., p.141)

8:1 [first clause]: "as a summary on what is being said" (Exp. of Heb., p.142)

a: there is no need to say more than "a" chief point or summary. (Bible Treasury 14:46, cf. Bible Treasury 15:31)

8:2 the holies: why "sanctuary" in text or "holy things" in margin [of the RV]? Surely it should be uniformly the holy [place] or holies here, 9:8, 12, 24, and 10:19. (Bible Treasury 14:46)

Λ not: A needless "and" is rightly excluded [in the RV]. (Bible Treasury 14:46)

8:4 then: the γάρ, "for," of the Text. Rec. and Authorised Version yields to the οὖν of the Revisers, or rather of the best ancient witnesses. (Bible Treasury 14:46)

then . . . those . . . Λ law: The Text. Rec. has γὰρ but the critics οὖν on ancient authority: so also τῶν ἱερῶν is rightly dropped, and the article before νόμον. (Exp. of Heb., p.145) those: It will be noticed that τῶν ἱερῶν of the Text. Rec. with its counterpart in the Authorised Version disappears [in the RV] as the mere gloss of inferior and later copies. (Bible Treasury 14:46)

Λ law: here again the article is no more desirable in English than in Greek, though it might have been used in both. It is not that it is optional for the same shade of sense; on the contrary, it is due to exactness in expressing character rather than mere fact. But the Revisers seem not at all alive to this refinement in either language. (Bible Treasury 14:46)

8:8 to them: 8:8 [as given by the American correctors of the RV] has little to recommend it; for among the ancients it was expressly noticed that the apostle spoke of blaming, not it, but them; and it seems the natural construction to take αὐτοῖς with μ. rather than λ. (Bible Treasury 15:31)

days come: "days" are coming. (Bible Treasury 15:31) covenant: Why "Testament" should be given in the margin of 8, 9, 10 is inconceivable, since the context, as well as the Hebrew, point only to "covenant." It is quite a different case in 9:16, 17; but even there neither before nor after, "testament" there too being quite wrong in the margin of 15 and 20. (Bible Treasury 14:46)

8:9 covenant . . . covenant: [See note to Heb. 8:8]

8:10 covenant . . . covenant: [See note to Heb. 8:8]

8:11 fellow-citizen . . . Know . . . inwardly know: citizen or "fellow-citizen" is right on the best authority. There is no attempt [in the RV] at distinguishing the call to objective knowledge from the promise of inward knowledge or consciousness, though it has been often pointed out. (Bible Treasury 14:46)

Know . . . inwardly know: Nor is there an effort even [in the RV] to express the different words for "knowing" (Bible Treasury 15:31)

8:12 and their lawlessnesses: (A few of the most ancient MSS. and Vv. support this as the true text, many later copies adding "and their lawlessnesses" as in Text. Rec.) . . . It will be noticed that the words "and their lawlessnesses" disappear. They are not in the Septuagint any more than the original Hebrew, which indeed has also the singular form, where the Greek gives the plural. It would seem that the words in question were inserted from chap. 10:17, where beyond doubt they occur, but without "their unrighteousnesses." (Exp. of Heb., p.156) and their lawlessnesses: The omission of "and their iniquities" or lawlessness is supported by but two great uncials (8th B.) and two cursives (17, 23), but by almost all the ancient versions. (Bible Treasury 14:46)

9:1 first Λ . . . sanctuary worldly: the Authorised Version did not follow the Text. Rec. in acknowledging σκηνή, Tabernacle. Like the Revisers, it supplies "covenant." No doubt the former was mistaken from 2. The rendering at the close in the Authorised Version is untenable; it should be, "the sanctuary a worldly one," rather than the Revisers' form "its sanctuary, a sanctuary of this world." Mr. Green takes it as "the holy garniture," which is at least grammatical. (Bible Treasury 14:46)

9:4 censer: [The American correctors of the RV] would have the margin ⁶ of 4 change place with the text; that is, they would read in the text "altar of incense," and in the margin censer. The ancient Versions, including the Memphitic of Wilkins, save the Latin of the Clermont MS. (avrem habens altarem) and the Aethiopic which is here nil in its vagueness, are decidedly in favour of the Revised text, not of the margin. The word as in Philo and Josephus might express either; but the connexion of the censer with the high priest's action on the Day of Atonement obviously strengthens its case against the golden altar. It is plain that in 2 Chron. 26:19 θυμιατήριον "censer" in the king's hand is distinguished from θυσιαστήριον τῶν θ. "the altar of incense." Compare also Ezek. 13:11 in the LXX with Luke 1:11; Rev. 8:3; 9:13, which seem conclusive against the identification, and sustain the Authorised Version against Smith's Dict. of the Bible, i. 58, 288. (Bible Treasury 15:31)

9:6 enter: It will be noticed that it is the present, which the Vulgate and the A.V. alike neglected, though Beza rendered it correctly; yet the present is not historical, but ethic; for the tabernacle in the wilderness is before the writer, not the temple. (Exp. of Heb., p.163) enter . . . services: In 6-9 the present form is rightly given by the Revisers, "go in," "offereth," "hath not yet," &c., "is yet," "which (or "the which") is," "are offered," "that cannot." Again, is it correct to confound λατρεύειν with προσκυνεῖν? No doubt λ. is not δουλεύειν, but divine service is the idea and this whether of the Jew as here or of the Christian as in 14, 10:2. (Bible Treasury 14:46)

9:7 offereth: [See note to Heb. 9:6]

9:8 the holies: [See note to Heb. 8:2]

hath not yet . . . hath: [See note to Heb. 9:6]

9:9 which [is] . . . are offered . . . unable: [See note to Heb. 9:6] parable . . . Λ present: For "parable" in 9 they [The American correctors of the RV] would render π. "figure" and so in 11:19, as in the Authorised Version for both. This is no great matter, and rather a question of linguistic taste than of substantial exactitude. It is agreed that "now" present is needless, as "then" in Authorised Version is erroneous. (Bible Treasury 15:31) to which: Text. Rec. has δν with several later uncials and most cursives, etc., meaning "in which" time; but the critics read ἦν with 8 A B D^m many cursives, etc., as in the version. (Exp. of Heb., p.162)

9:10 [whole verse]: In verse 10 the Text. Rec. or even B is unreliable. (Exp. of Heb., p.162)

9:11 to come: Some ancient witnesses have already "come," γενομένων which seems a correction to make the phrase exclusively Christian. (Exp. of Heb., p.165)

In the margin . . . [the RV gives] that strange reading of some old witnesses, "that are come," the spiritual sense of most, no doubt, controlling the hard drivers of diplomatic authority. (Bible Treasury 14:46)

the: We may make allowance for the difficulty of presenting the force of both this clause and the preceding one in Latin, which wants the definite article; but Tyndale, Cranmer, the Geneva, and the Authorized ought to have adhered to the sense. The Rhemish, singular to say, has "the" good things to come, but "a" more ample and more perfect tabernacle: why they should have thus halted it is hard to conceive. "The" greater and more perfect tabernacle is in contrast with the earthly one reared by human hands. (Exp. of Heb., p.166-7) creation: [The RV gives] properly "creation," instead of "building," as in the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:46)

9:12 by: It may be added that there is no good reason here to give the preposition translated "by" the mere local (10) or instrumental (12) notion of "through," though capable of either when contextually required. But διὰ may and does when needed express the circumstantial condition, as in Rom. 2:17, and elsewhere. So it is best understood here. (Exp. of Heb., p.168)

by: have they seized the true force of διὰ in 12 [of the RV]? No one denies that the preposition from a local and temporal rises to a causal force, and so to accompaniments, mode, or manner, &c. (Bible Treasury 14:46)

by: Much more important is διὰ in 12, which the Authorised Version renders "by," the Revised Version "through," probably in the same sense. It is a total mistake to limit the preposition even with a genitive to the instrument or means, for it also expresses time or state; as here how Christ entered heaven, not whereby. "With," as in Rom. 2:27, is the more correct, intelligent, and reverent sense, as there the Revisers properly say in contrast with the Authorised Version which has no just meaning, in Heb. 9:12 a possibly improper one. It was the way of atoning efficacy in which He entered, not the medium. Compare 1 Tim. 2:15 for another shade of thought, "through" or "in," not "by." (Bible Treasury 15:31) entered: There is a curious erratum (almost certainly the printer's) in the middle of Tyndale's version of verse 12: "we" entered, for "he," as it unquestionably should be. The error involves the deplorable connection of our having "founde eternall redemcion," an idea as remote as possible from that faithful translator's mind. Of course no ancient reading, or version, led to it, but a mere slip of typography overlooked in revision of the proof. (Exp. of Heb., p.167)

the holies: [See note to Heb. 8:2]

redemption Λ : "For us" is the gratuitous addition of the Geneva Version, followed by the Authorized. (Exp. of Heb., p.167)

9:14 [the]: [The American correctors of the RV] would add as a margin "Or, his et. sp.," I presume, to exclude the Holy Ghost from this offering, or at least to predicate it of His own spirit, as Alford &c. understand without "his." But this is to miss the great truth on which christians even from the most ancient times fell so soon away to their great loss; they failed to see His perfection as man in thus ever acting in the Spirit even to the closing and crowning fact that by the Spirit He offered Himself spotless to God. And if called here "eternal," it is in exact keeping with the character of this Epistle where the christian Hebrews are taught to view all their blessings thus, in contrast with the temporal standing, privileges and hopes of the earthly people in its best estate, salvation, redemption, inheritance, and covenant. (Bible Treasury 15:31)

your . . . living Λ : Some authorities add "and true"; but this appears to be imported from 1 Thess. 1:9, where it is quite appropriate for souls once heathen, while those who had been Jews needed to think of God as "living." Copyists and Editors are divided between "our" and "your." (Exp. of Heb., p.166)

9:15-17 covenant . . . covenant . . . testament . . . testament: [Is Professor Scholefield's explanation of these verses the best? if not, where is a better to be found? It satisfies me completely; I once discussed the question fully with him, and he was not quite satisfied with himself. See his "Hints for an Improved Translation of the New Testament." He was one of the best translators of the New Testament I ever knew. Can his view of διαθήκη be improved? Thos. Myers.]

Professor Scholefield's view is one which, in substance, has been held by many before him, as Doddridge, Macknight, Michaelis, Parkhurst, as well as be Barnes, Tait, Green, and other well-known contemporaries. They take διαθήκη all through in the sense of "covenant," which involves our viewing διαθέμενος as = "covenanting victims," and ἐπὶ νεκροῖς as = "over dead [sacrifices]." Respectable as may be the opponents of this sense, the context is, to my mind, decisively in its favour. I understand it thus: —

"For where a covenant is, there must necessarily be brought in the death of the covenanting [victim]. For a covenant is sure over dead [victims], since it is never valid while the covenanting [victim] liveth." (Christian Annotator 1:109,176) covenant . . . covenant . . . testament . . . testator . . . testament . . . testator: It will be observed, that notwithstanding the doubt cast on the rendering of "testament" in the last two verses [16,17] by many eminent Christians and able scholars, there need be no hesitation in deciding for this sense, as here the sole tenable one. That "covenant" is meant everywhere else in the N.T. as in the O.T. is clear from contextual requirement. The same reason of the context here excludes "covenant" and demands "testament," but here only. As there has already [see note to Heb. 7:22] been given a general view of the other occurrences throughout the later scriptures, it is not needful to repeat it. Let it suffice, without a shade of disrespect for other commentators, to examine these three verses [15,16,17], with what follows them immediately, and judge if there be not proof, that the meaning in either case is certain from evidence as it were on the spot, ample and convincing for every soul subject to Scripture.

For as to verse 15 there ought never to have been a question that "a new covenant" is the real sense, not only because "new" is beyond controversy a reference to the prophecy of Jeremiah, who speaks of a "covenant" and not a testament, but without going from the same clause, because it has a "mediator." Now a mediator was familiar to the Hebrews in connection with a "covenant." Nobody, in any people, place, or age, heard of a mediator to a "will." There is the further disproof in the same verse that we hear of "the first covenant," which furnishes the reason for an explanation of "a new covenant," if there was to be redemption from the guilt and misery under the first. For the first covenant, as we are elsewhere taught, was a ministration of death and condemnation, as the new is of the Spirit and righteousness (2 Cor. 3).

On every ground "testament" would be here out of place, indefensible, and misleading. "Covenant" alone satisfies every condition of the verse. Death (and what a death!) met "the transgressions that were under the first covenant," and effected a redemption that answered to the glory of His person and the efficacy of His sacrifice. . . .

No less determinate is the meaning of what follows in verses 16, 17, the idea of the inheritance naturally suggesting a will, which comes into force by the death of him who made it. The general principle is laid down in the broadest terms; and these can only mean, without strain of known phraseology, a "testament," not a covenant. "For where a testament [is], the testator's death must be brought in; for a testament [is] valid in case of dead persons, since it is never of force while the testator liveth." Now this, which is an axiom and universally applicable to a will, is notoriously untrue of covenants in general; so much so, that it would be hard to point out a single covenant so established among men. For it would assume the necessity of everyone's death who made a covenant to ensure its operation. Who ever heard of such a covenant? Yet the rendering would imply that it is true of any covenant, and of all. Hence to understand "covenant" in these verses has led many from the appropriate sense of "the testator" to substitute for "the covenanting" (here obviously impossible) "the covenanting victim," or some equivalent phrase; a sense which appears in no writing sacred or profane, and is easily shewn to be ungrammatical, especially as being inconsistent with the middle voice. Quite as great violence is done to ἐπὶ νεκροῖς in verse 17, which cannot express "over animals slain," but "when men are dead," or the like meaning.

Now our Lord in Luke 22:29 (to say nothing of John 14:27) prepares the way for the technical term here twice given us as "testator." There He was in the act of devising; here it is in its regular form and force, though of course not that exclusively. But no Greek, if he read the sentence simply as it stands in these two verses, would hesitate to take it substantially as given in the A. and R.Vv. It is the equally sure sense of "covenant" in verse 15, as before also; and no less clearly is "covenant" understood in verse 18 and expressed in verse 20 (as it should be) and in 10:20. "Testament" here is through neglect of the context, which in every other place of Scripture, save verses 16, 17, needs "covenant." What has a testament to do with blood-shedding? A hard and fast uniformity has its snares as well as a too great facility of change; both are to be shunned as unfaithful to the written word, which is as profound as it is simple, being God's word. (Exp. of Heb., p.169-171) [See note to Heb. 7:22 and Bible Treasury N7:236-7, 248-251, Lect. on Rev., p. 251, Lect. Intro. to Epist. of Paul, p. 512-515, Lect. Intro. to Heb. and Phile., p. 46-47]

covenant . . . covenant: [See note to Heb. 8:8]

death: it seems very questionable to say "a" death (Bible Treasury 14:46)

9:16 testament: The famous passage in 16, 17, is fairly rendered [in the RV], though not so close as might be, and with an interrogation at the end which had better not have been. "Doth it ever avail," &c., is poor. The validity or force is more suitable here. That the alternative of "covenant" in the margin should not enter this parenthetical digression is to my mind plain from the fact that death of the covenanter is needless to a covenant's validity, whereas it is essential to the operation of a will that the testator die; as is here expressly argued by the inspired writer. Before and after these two verses it is a question only of "covenant." (Bible Treasury 14:46-47)

testament . . . testator: [See note to Heb. 9:15]

9:17 testament . . . hath force: [See note to Heb. 9:16]

testament . . . testator: [See note to Heb. 9:15]

hath force while the testator liveth: There is no need in Hellenistic Greek to make the last clause a question, as Bengel, Lachmann, and Delitzsch; still less should one misconstrue the adverb like the Vulgate, Erasmus, Luther, Cranmer, the Genevese, and the Rhemish versions. (Exp. of Heb., p.169) hath force: Their [The American correctors of the RV] last point is merely to substitute the categorical for the interrogative form in 17 by substituting margin⁵ for the text. It is possible, though unnecessary: the sense amounts to the same. (Bible Treasury 15:31)

9:20 covenant: [See note to Heb. 8:8]

9:21 the: the Revisers rightly say with "the" blood, whereas in a general statement, as in 22, it is in English as in Greek anarthrous. (Bible Treasury 14:47)

9:22 blood: [See note to Heb. 9:21]

9:24 holies: [See note to Heb. 8:2] to: "before the face of God" [in the RV] is more energetic (Bible Treasury 14:47)

9:26 on consummation of the ages: "In the end of the world" is surely as misleading as unwarrantable. All older English versions are vague, if not precisely alike. Wiclif and the Rhemish would have done better if they had adhered yet more closely to the Vulgate; though it is pretty clear that Jerome did not understand the sense more than they. The Revisers have rightly given "of the ages." (Exp. of Heb., p.175-6) of the ages: it is the consummation "of the ages," not the equivocal and misleading end "of the world" as in the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:47)

9:27 judgment: 27 is feebler in the Revised than in the Authorised Version, "cometh" being quite uncalled for; judgment is as much the portion of men as once to die. (Bible Treasury 14:47)

10:1 the . . . the same . . . offer: several obvious blunders of the Authorised Version are corrected [in the RV]: "the" coming good thing, "the same" sacrifices, they "offer." (Bible Treasury 14:47)

can: how rash to endorse in such a work [as the RV] "they can"! It is known that this plural form is supported by \aleph A C D^{corr} P, and probably thirty or more cursives, &c., whereas the singular as in the Text. Rec. and with most critics has the suffrages of D^{ms}. E H K L and a fair number of cursives, some of the most ancient versions &c. (Bible Treasury 14:47) can: it is a pleasure to agree heartily with the Americans [correctors of the RV] in refusing "they" can (\aleph A B D^{corr} P and some 30 or more cursives) against the rest of the uncials and cursives, confirmed by the ancient versions, which connect "can" with the law. "They" cannot be said to be in analogy with the Epistle: if defensible, it must be by making it in sense impersonal. And then follows the Lachmannic oddity of a period after πραγμάτων, and beginning a new sentence "They can never by the same sacrifice," etc. Therefore it is here proposed to read margin⁹ "many ancient authorities read they can." (Bible Treasury 15:31) continuously: [Q. 1. Do the words, εἰς τὸ διηνεκές, in Hebrews 10:1, refer to the sacrifices as continually offered, or to the inability of such sacrifices to perfect in perpetuity those who offered them; that is to say, Do the words relate to the offerings, or to the offerers? W.L.P.]

A. The connection of εἰς τὸ δ. is not the same in verses 1 and 12. In the former it is with the Jewish ritual, and means that they kept offering unbrokenly the same sacrifices year by year, sacrifices unable at any time to perfect those that approached. In verse 12 the connection is with the continuous, or unbroken, session of our Lord at God's right hand, as having offered one sacrifice for sins. It is well known that Lachmann punctuated so as to connect εἰς τὸ δ. with the clause after in verse 1, and with the clause before in verse 12; but I am satisfied that he unwittingly perverted the sense in both. "Continuously" can run well in the first with "every year," not with "never," or "not at any time;" as, again, in the second it is only possible to take it with the preceding clause by supposing some such ellipsis as ἀσκοῦσαν ἡμῖν, with (Ecumenius and Theophylact, which is not only needless, but weakens what follows. Tischendorf has evaded the difficulty by inserting a comma in neither. (Bible Treasury 11:288) continuously: it is a pleasure to agree heartily with the Americans [correctors of the RV] in refusing "they" can (\aleph A B D^{corr} P and some 30 or more cursives) against the rest of the uncials and cursives, confirmed by the ancient versions, which connect "can" with the law. "They" cannot be said to be in analogy with the Epistle: if defensible, it must be by making it in sense impersonal. (Bible Treasury 15:31)

10:2 would: Of course, in 2 οὐκ is read with an interrogation on the best and fullest authority: so Erasmus, Stephens, and all the modern critics, contrary to the Complutensian editors, Beza, and Elzevirs, who omit it with H^{ms}, some cursives, some Latin copies (not the oldest), the Syriac, &c., which Wiclif and the Rhemish follow. (Bible Treasury 14:47)

10:3 in these: "In them" would be quite enough in 3, and better than "in those sacrifices," as in the Authorised and Revised Versions. (Bible Treasury 14:47)

10:4 blood: "blood," not "the" blood. (Bible Treasury 14:47)

10:5 a body thou preparedst for me: Dr. Randolph, unless memory fails me, in his elaborate examination of quotations from the O.T. in the N.T. gives up the attempt to account for the change in the LXX from the Hebrew form of the last clause in verse 5; and so does the late Dean Alford "leave the difficulty an unsolved one." There is no sufficient reason to suppose a misreading gave rise to that Greek version, with Abp. Ussher (vii. 517) followed by Ernesti, Michaelis, Semler, etc., down to Bleek in our day. That the Epistle to the Hebrews adopts it, not as the literal rendering but as the substantial sense, is of deep instruction and interest; and this has commended itself to the most reverent and competent readers to the present time. The allusion is neither to Exod. 21:6, nor to Isa. 50:5: Psalm 40:6(7) is distinct from both, though all three center in Messiah. (Exp. of Heb., p.181-2) thou preparedst: [In the RV it is] rightly "didst thou prepare" (Bible Treasury 14:47)

10:6 [sacrifices]: But why in 6 [of the RV] "sacrifices for sins?" Why not adhere to the Old Testament familiar "sin-offerings?" So of course in 8. In both the Peschito shows how soon the knowledge of scripture evaporated after the Apostles, for that venerable version actually confounds the burnt-offering with that for sin. I purposely quote from Etheridge, "entire burnt-offerings for sin Thou hast not required . . . entire burnt-offerings for sins Thou hast not willed." No offerings stood in more complete contrast than the holocaust and that for sin; and by this confusion also one loses the four classes here distinguished — burnt-offering, the minchah or unbloody corn oblation, the sacrifice of peace-offering, and the sin-offering. (Bible Treasury 14:47)

10:7 am: [See note to Heb. 10:9]

10:9 am . . . will: In 9, as in 7, it is "I am come," not "I come" as in Authorised Version, and "O God" from the Text. Rec. is rightly dropped on the best authority [in the RV]. (Bible Treasury 14:47)

10:10 have been sanctified: It is evident that the Authorised Version is not justified in giving the same force "are sanctified" to ἡγιασμένοι ἐσμέν in 10 and to τοὺς ἀγιαζομένους in 14. The Revisers rightly say in the one case "we have been sanctified," and in the other "them that are sanctified," not those that are (or were) being sanctified as in the analogous case of Acts 2:47, 1 Cor. 1:18, which we saw they happily forgot in 1 Cor. 15:2. There is a moral present, and not merely an historical one of actual time. O si sic omnia. The late Dean Alford was consistently wrong in saying even here, in the face of 10, "them who are being sanctified." (Bible Treasury 14:47)

Jesus: [See note to Mat. 1:18.]

once for all: [The RV corrects] the blunder of the Authorised Version, and read[s] "once 'for all'" without italics. (Bible Treasury 14:47)

10:12 he: it is rightly "he" (though it be οὗτος not αὐτός), not "this man" as in the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:47) continuously: But εἰς τὸ διηνεκές is not the same as ἀπαξ or ἐφάπαξ, as M. Stuart says. "Once" or "once for all" might have been joined with προσενέγκας θυσίαν but not "in perpetuity" which demands to go with ἐκάθισεν, "sat down." There the sense fully applies; whereas by the loose rendering "for ever," followed by a comma as in the Auth. and Rev. versions, the true force is lost, and help given to the falsehood of a mass going on for ever, though this would require προσφέρων to make it accurate. (Exp. of Heb., p.187) continuously: I am of opinion that εἰς τὸ διηνεκές, "for ever," ought to be construed in this verse, not with προσενέγκας θυσίαν, but with ἐκάθισεν κ. τ. λ. (i.e. with "sat down"). It is not exactly a question of the general sense, for there is good sense either way; and still less does it turn upon Greek construction, for the words might be taken before or after the verb or participle, as it seems to me. The real point is the special contrast of vers. 11, 12. Instead of offering oftentimes the same sacrifices, Christ has offered once. . . . As for the abuse, justly objected to, the aorist cuts off the force which Papists, and those who think with them, might give it, for where continuous offering is intended the present tense is employed, as in verse 1. (Bible Witness & Review 1:308, Christian Annotator 3:193) continuously: Εἰς τὸ διηνεκές does not express eternity (which would be εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, or some such form of words) but "for continuance." (Lectures Introductory to the Epistles of Paul, p.522) continuously: But the connection of "for ever" with the offering one sacrifice for sins, instead of with "sat down," is an error of the first magnitude, common to Wiclif, the Rhemish, the Authorised Version, and the Revised Version, but not Tyndale, Cranmer, or Geneva. The sense of the phrase εἰς τὸ διηνεκές being continually or in perpetuity, rather than "for ever," is in its own nature incapable of being combined with the aorist, and can only go with such tenses as the present and perfect, which suppose continuance. To make the present construction orthodox, one must conceive some such ellipse "as [the efficacy of which last] for ever," which would be intolerable. The only party which the misrendering can serve is the sacerdotal one, which pretends to offer a continual sacrifice for the living and the dead; but in order to have the least real weight the Greek should have been προσφέρων, and we should have been landed back into the Judaism of verse 11, with which the Apostle is contrasting Christianity, which mainly depends on the completed act taught by προσενέγκας as in our verse. It is hardly possible to conceive a blunder in more direct issue with the entire teaching of this Epistle. (Bible Treasury 14:47) continuously: But not a syllable of protest do they [the American correctors of the RV] utter against the error of the Authorised Version repeated in the Revised Version which takes ver. 12 εἰς τὸ δ., continuously, with Christ's having offered one sacrifice for sins, whereas its true connection is with His session at God's right hand. Wiclif alone exhibits the same mistake, not Tyndale nor Cranmer nor the Geneva V. nor the Rhemish, strange to say. If it were indeed a principle present, it might go to prove the theory of the mass as a continual offering from the cross for the sins of the living and dead. But the aorist falls in naturally with the contextual argument on the unity of the sacrifice because of its perfect efficacy; and the "continuously" goes with the utmost propriety and characterizes Christ's seat on high, though only stated as a fact. There He took His seat, not precisely "for ever," but "uninterruptedly" in witness of His completed and accepted sacrifice, instead of standing day by day to renew the same ineffectual offerings, — not "for ever" but henceforth expecting till His enemies be set a footstool of His feet. It may be of interest to note that the same phrase is used just after, in 14: by one offering Christ has perfected uninterruptedly the sanctified. His saints have been perfected without a break to disturb their acceptance, as freed from their sins by His blood. Their communion may be interrupted and is by every sin allowed: their clearance from guilt is as perfect as His work can effect. Out of communion we are powerless and fail to enjoy; and His advocacy restores our souls by the washing of water by the word which gives self-judgment. But the standing of the believer is in Christ and according to the value of a work which has so purged the worshipper that they have, as 10:2 says, no more conscience of sins. The conscience is so purged as to know that all one's sins are gone before God. (Bible Treasury 15:31-32)

10:14 sanctified: . . . the present participle may be used abstractedly apart from the question of the action or the passion. But the perfect tense could not be used as it is in verse 10 about the same persons at the same time, if the object were to define by ἀγιαζόμενοι that we are only under a process of sanctifying now going on, but as yet imperfect. For while the present may express either the actual time or the abstract character and object of the operation, the perfect necessarily gives the permanent result of a terminated action, and therefore affirms that we have been and are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all. It is no question of God's counsel respecting us, but of a present abiding effect of Christ's finished work. Hence to lay stress on ἀγιαζόμενοι as if it must needs indicate a process going on is not only arbitrary, because the present participle does not always convey this force, but even negated by ἡγιασμένοι which decides the time and excludes what is imperfect. It is not potentiality, but a present fact and a continuous character acquired by Christians through the accomplished and accepted sacrifice of Christ. To translate therefore in verse 14 τοὺς ἀγιαζομένους as "them who are being sanctified" is, under the appearance of literal precision, to prove that we have never seen the true spirit of the passage, and that we do not understand the apostle's doctrine on this great head; and the rather too as τετελείωκεν ("he hath perfected") in the same clause is irreconcilable with this effort to get rid of sanctification here as a standing condition, by denying the abstract force of the present participle as used in this case. It is interesting to observe that in the same chapter (ver. 29) the Spirit employs the aorist ἡγιασθη to describe him who had once been a baptised confessor of Christ crucified, but afterwards turned out an apostate. That tense simply states the fact historically; whereas the perfect, adding to it the idea of an existing result, could not properly be used of one who had spurned Christ and counted the blood of the covenant a common thing. It is not true that he had advanced so far in the spiritual life that this blood had been applied by faith, or that its hallowing or purifying effects were visible in his life. Such talk is merely imaginative, not only without scripture, but neglecting the obvious intimation of that which is said; for the passage says nothing of spiritual life, or of applying the blood by faith, or of purifying effects visible or invisible, but only of sinning wilfully after having received the knowledge of the truth. Be it ever so exact and full, this in no way implies in itself a divine work in the conscience so that the person was born again and converted to God, but such a clear full and certain knowledge as many unconverted men possess who nevertheless hold fast the truth in unrighteousness. Very different is the statement in Heb. 9:14 where the blood of Christ is said to purify the conscience from dead works in order to serve (i.e. religiously) the true God. (Bible Treasury N11:335) [See also note on Acts 20:32]

the sanctified: [See note to Heb. 10:10]

10:15 said Λ : "Before" is certainly wrong (Bible Treasury 14:47)

10:16 understanding; Λ : Is there any need for marking the apodosis, formally at the end of 16, "then saith he?" (Bible Treasury 14:47)

10:18 offering: [Q. . . . Why is it we have in this chapter (passim) προσφέρω, to offer, and προσφορά, an offering, and not ἀναφέρω, to offer up, especially as we find from verses 10,11,12, that is attributed to the offering, προσφορά, which we should have supposed could only be by ἀναφέρω, offering up, when only it would be a sacrifice (θυσία)? We have both, "no more offering for sins" (προσφορά), verse 18, and "no more sacrifice for sin" (θυσία), verse 26. W.L.P.]

The reason why προσφέρω is employed in Hebrews 10 seems to me the need of a more general word than ἀναφέρω, which had been used in chapter 9 in distinction from προσφ. wherever it was intended to express the actual bearing of sins. Where a substantive is wanted for this, θυσία is used, which is as specific as προσφορά is general. Hence, where προσεύχας is defined by ὑπὲρ ἁμαρτιῶν and θυσίαν, it is as strictly sacrificial as if it had been ἐαυτὸν ἀνερέγκας, or τὰς ἁμαρτίας ἡμῶν ἀνερέγκας. (Bible Treasury 11:288)

10:19 the holies: [See note to Heb. 8:2]

10:20 Λ a new: And why in 20 "by" the way? Why not "the new and living way which he dedicated for us," &c.? (Bible Treasury 14:47)

10:21 priest: a great "priest" is right [in the RV] (Bible Treasury 14:47)

10:22 assurance: But why "fulness" here and in 6:11, when they gave [in the RV] in their text of Col. 2:2 "full assurance?" (Bible Treasury 14:47) washed: In 22, 23 the Americans [correctors of the RV] prefer margin ⁷ to the Revised text, but without sound reason, it seems to me; for the three verbs of call in the three verses are connected in due order, the approach being as simply strengthened by the two perfect participles which follow, as the holding fast the confession of our hope is sustained by the faithful promise of God, and the considering one another to provoke to love and good works, carried out especially in this habitual gathering together and by exhortation in view of the day approaching. Why sever "our body washed with pure water" from the foregoing? and why connect it particularly with what follows? Each of the subjunctives introduces a new scope, and has its own supports adjoining, and in no case preceding. (Bible Treasury 15:32)

10:23 hope: In the A.V. of verse 23 "faith" is a strange if not unaccountable mistake. "Hope" is here right as "faith" in verse 22. Promise connects with the future, and hence calls for hope. (Exp. of Heb., p.191) hope: It is of course "hope" [in the RV] (Bible Treasury 14:47)

10:25 the gathering of ourselves together: The superiority of "our own assembling together" is not obvious. (Bible Treasury 15:32)

10:26 sin: The reader should observe that "sinning" in verse 26 is the present participle and does not relate to an act or acts of evil (as in the last text referred to [1 John 2:1,2]), but to the habitual or continuous habit of the person. And this is strongly pointed out in a Greek Scholiast which Matthaei quotes. It supposes souls not born of God; which is in no way inconsistent with "we" or with having received objective knowledge, however accurate, full, or certain. On the contrary, both here and in 2 Peter 2:20, this is expressly allowed to be within the range of flesh's capacity. (Exp. of Heb., p.193)

no longer: It is evident that "no more sacrifice," and "no longer a sacrifice," are rather differences of expression than of idea. Either of them fairly represents the phrase. "No other," seems to be a needless change, though probably intended to convey substantially the same thought. It is the sin of apostasy from Christ and His sacrifice which is here warned against. (Christian Annotator 3:178)

10:28 Any one if he set: Would not 28 open more correctly thus, "When one set at nought Moses' law," &c.? "A man that hath set," &c. offends against more than one point of importance. (Bible Treasury 14:47)

10:34 prisoners: All the old English versions save that of Rheims (1552) narrow their sympathy according to the Text. Rec. to the bonds of him who now wrote; but the better reading seems to be "the prisoners" i.e. those of the Lord in general. (Exp. of Heb., p.195-6) prisoners . . . for: it is not as in Text. Rec. "of me in my bonds," but on good authority "on those in bonds;" also ἐν of the Text. Rec. disappears, and the true force is either "that ye yourselves," &c. or "that ye have for yourselves," according to the reading preferred. (Bible Treasury 14:47)

for: it is a question between "ye yourselves have" κ A H, some cursives, ancient Vv., &c.), — or "ye have for yourselves" (D E K L, the mass of cursives, &c.). Margin¹ [of the RV] seems to me to be a mere blunder; and I could not say that any ancient authority countenances it, or if so, what matter? There are foolish enough things beyond doubt in the fathers. (Bible Treasury 15:32) for . . . substance ^Λ : "In heaven" appears to be a copyist's addition, as is "in" (ἐν) just before. (Exp. of Heb., p.196)

10:38 he [or, one]: [The RV] is correctly "any righteous (or just) one." It may not be needful to interpolate "one" or "any man;" but there is no real ground for inferring that the same man is meant. The Hebrew and the Septuagint exclude such a thought, and certainly the Apostle did not intend differently. But the form differs according to Divine wisdom to warn the Jewish professor who professed faith but might not live by it. (Bible Treasury 14:47-48)

11:1 [whole verse]: The suggestion [of the American correctors of the RV] on 11:1 is unobjectionable. Here is the sense: — "Now faith is confidence (3:14) in [things] hoped for, conviction of things not seen." (Bible Treasury 15:32) substance [or, substantiating]: It is a nice question as to 11:1 whether ὑπόστασις here means grounded assurance as in 3:14, or substantiating which more approaches the older view. The Peschito's "realisation" might express it best in this, as demonstration in ελεγχος. (Bible Treasury 14:48)

11:3 the [things] beheld: the perfect is twice misrendered by the Authorised Version. It should be "have been framed," and "What is seen hath not come into being;" the true reading is τὸ βλ. with the best authorities, not τὰ βλ. an accommodation to φ. which is in the plural. (Bible Treasury 14:48)

11:5 the . . . hath been witnessed . . . had: "he hath had testimony" . . . "that he had," not "he had" . . . "that he," as in Authorised Version. It is also before "the" translation, not "his" as in Text. Rec. (Bible Treasury 14:48)

[last half of verse]: The rendering proposed [by the American correctors of the RV] for the text in 5 seems a mere twist without adequate ground. If no more than this could be questioned, the Revisers had small reason to fear criticism. (Bible Treasury 15:32)

11:6 approacheth: it should be "draweth near" (προσερχ.), as usually, not "cometh" as in Revised Version, following Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:48)

out: [See note to Heb. 11:14]

11:7 for: Prepared "for" seems in our day better English than "to" (Bible Treasury 14:48)

11:8 went out: "was going" is preferable to went, especially after ἐξῆλθεν just before. (Bible Treasury 14:48)

11:11 also: "Even" in 11 seems out of place; is it not "Sarah herself also"? Is not this a common mistake of the Revisers? "Even" is used properly where one means to express anything strange, as in 19; is this the idea here? (Bible Treasury 14:48)

11:13 afar ^Λ . . . greeted [or, embraced]: The additions of "and were persuaded" in the Received Text has scanty support of no account, though Dr. J. Owen makes much of it in his Exposition as have many others since. It really enfeebles the truth. It is a delicate question whether the next clause keeps up the figure of "greeting" as well as seeing from afar, or adds the different side of truth in their warmth of taking their hope by faith. (Exp. of Heb., p.213) afar ^Λ : [The RV is] right in excluding "and been persuaded of them," an addition of Text. Rec. in 13 on the slenderest testimony. (Bible Treasury 14:48)

11:14 seek out: the Revisers render ἐπιζητοῦσιν, "seek after," which is all well; but would it not have been better to have given "seek out," not "after," to ἐκζ. in 6? (Bible Treasury 14:48)

11:15 called: Tischendorf and Tregelles read the present, others the imperfect. (Exp. of Heb., p.212)

11:17 offered up . . . was offering: It is difficult to express in English the force of the Greek perfect and imperfect. The one gives the result of the act as if accomplished, the other the historical fact that it did not actually take place. "Hath" here (in the first clause) is not really admissible in our tongue; yet it may be in a bracket to enforce the truth. (Exp. of Heb., p.215) offered up . . . was offering: we have twice over [in the RV] the confusion of προσφ. with ἀναφ. offering, and not offering "up." (Bible Treasury 14:48)

11:19 parable [or, figure]: [See note to Heb. 9:9]

11:21 on . . . staff: [Q. Heb. 11:21. What ground is there for the Rhemish version and note?

A. The difference between the Hebrew copies and the sense given by the Septuagint is simply a question of the points (i.e., between מַטֵּה, a staff, and מִטָּה, a bed, both being derived from the root מָטָה, which means to lead as well as to stretch.) There is no reason to doubt the accuracy of the "bed" in the Old Testament, nor of the "staff" in the New Testament. The staff was in his hand while he bowed himself upon the bed's head. Aquila and Symmachus gives κλινης, while the LXX. have βᾶβδου. Indeed, so far there is a difference; the Rhemish is stronger than the authorized in excluding from Gen. 47:31 anything but the absolute and supreme worship of God. "Israel adored God, turning to the bed's head," whereas the English Bible simply states that he bowed himself, doubtless in worship, upon the bed's head. This then, is not the question, which is, whether the Septuagint, or rather Heb. 11:21, intimates that Jacob also paid relative honour to Joseph's sceptre, as a figure of Christ's royal dignity. Now, waiving for the moment the question to whom the rod belonged, it is admitted in the Rhemish note to Gen. 47:31, that "Jacob, leaning on Joseph's rod, adored, turning towards the head of his bed." This shows that the Rhemish translators perfectly understood the real force of προσεκύνησεν ἐπὶ τὸ ἄκρον τῆς βᾶβδου αὐτοῦ. How came they to know that Jacob so leaned? The Hebrew does not say so, but the Greek. How came they, then, to misunderstand the same Greek words in Hebrews, quoted from this very passage? The only true answer is, that they sought the appearance of Scripture sanction for their idolatry. But God has caught them in their own craftiness; for the words cited prove that they knew the real meaning of the Greek, justify the authorized version, and retort the charge of corruption on their own heads. The truth is, that the Greek will not bear "worshipped the top," but "upon the top," as every version known to me has it, save the Vulgate, or those made from it. As to the meaning, it is clearly leaning on it, as the Rhemish Annotator himself confirms in his note to Gen. 47:31. The reader may compare 1 Kings 1:47, where the Septuagint has προσεκύνησεν ὁ β. ἐπὶ τὴν κοίτην, the Vulgate, adorat in lectulo suo, and the Douay "adored in his bed." Now, the construction is precisely the same as in Heb. 11:21.

Another thing seems plain — that if by leaning on the top of the rod is meant that Jacob worshipped the rod, equally so by turning to the bed's head must be meant that he worshipped the bed. But, as in the latter case, (Gen. 48) the Douay version understands that Jacob adored God, turning to the bed's head; so in the former case, (Heb. 11) they ought to understand that he adored God, [leaning] upon the top of the rod. But it would be intolerable, even to the Romanist, to suppose that Jacob adored the bed. Consistency, however, requires it. The grammatical construction is imperative. Either he adored both rod and bed; or he worshipped God, leaning upon the top of the staff and turning toward the bed's head. (Bible Treasury 3:112)

11:26 of: It is scarce needful to point out how superior in moral force is the critical reading "of Egypt" (ⲁ ⲉ ⲕ ⲗ ⲡ) to the Text. Rec. or Lachmann's strangely elliptical form. (Exp. of Heb., p.223) of: it is "of," not "in" Egypt; Lachmann with the Alexandrian copy reading Αἰγύπτου as the Text. Rec. has ἐν — φ. (Bible Treasury 14:48)

11:32 David ⲁ : ["too, and"]: Later editors reject the copula after David on small but ancient authority. (Exp. of Heb., p.229)

11:35 Women: Lachmann adopts here the evident blunder of AD^{ⲁⲙ}. (to which we can now add ⲁ^ⲙ) which strangely made "women," not the subject as it is, but the object, and, stranger still, in apposition with "their dead." (Exp. of Heb., p.229)

11:37 they were tempted: (The order differs in MSS. ⲁ ⲉ^ⲙ. L P, etc., have "tempted" before "sawn," the rest in the more common way.) . . . "Tempted" has perplexed the commentators. Some, in the face of overwhelming evidence for the text, have dared to invent readings out of their own heads; as the Syriac (pesch.) has wholly dropped it. (The Philoxenian Syr. Version fails after verse 27.) (Exp. of Heb., p.231-232) us ⲁ , . . . apart: ["Old Testament Saints", Quarterly Journal of Prophecy, April, 1857] proposes a new version of the passage altogether. "But if the central clause be placed, as it should be, in a parenthesis, and if the ellipsis be supplied, then all appearance of ambiguity is removed. These all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise, (God having made a better provision for us than that, viz., that they should at present receive the promise,) in order that they, apart from us should not be perfected." This is, indeed, a bold proposal. To insert the demonstrative pronoun "that" and then explain it, as though it were a part of the passage, inserting the explanation also, as a mere supplying of an ellipsis, is to use a liberty with God's word by which it might be made to say anything. In this instance it is used to make the passage say the very opposite of what is said by the words actually found in the Greek. But let us hear what is said in favour of the change.

11:40 concerning: It was not needful to alter "for" into "concerning" in 40, as the Revisers render περὶ in 13:18. (Bible Treasury 14:48)

"The substantive instruction of the passage is contained in the first and last clauses: — 'they received not the promise, in order that they might not be perfected apart from us.' (χωρίς ἡμῶν.) The central parenthetic clause does not teach that God had provided something better for us than for them; (that would contradict the word χωρίς, apart from;) but it teaches that He had provided for us a better thing than to allow that they should be perfected apart from us. The word χωρίς (apart from) could not, on the other supposition, have been used; for if we had the calling and glory of the Church, and they not, then, indeed, they and we should be perfected "apart" one from the other, the very thing which this verse declares to be impossible." On all this we remark: — 1. that to read the central clause parenthetically is purely gratuitous change, uncalled for by anything in the passage, which makes good sense just as the translators have left it. 2. To read it parenthetically creates the ellipsis which the writer supplies, and which exists not as the passage stands. 3. The construction of the passage is against the reading the central clause as a parenthesis. The words περὶ ἡμῶν and χωρίς ἡμῶν so connect the two phrases, "a better thing for us," "that they without us," as to make the latter dependent on the former. But if so, how could the former be part of a parenthesis? 4. So far is χωρίς from excluding the idea of their perfection (that of Old Testament saints) being different from ours, that it is used in passages where similar differences are undeniably recognized. "Without (χωρίς) me, ye can do nothing." Does the word here exclude all difference of dignity or glory or power between Christ and His disciples? "The man is not without (χωρίς) the woman in the Lord." Does this mean that they are in all respects equal? Why, the whole drift of the passage is in proof of the man's superiority. That is, the word is used in scripture in a sense quite different from that which this writer wishes to fix upon it absolutely in the passage under consideration. (Bible Treasury 1:231)

12:2 [or, the] . . . is set down: "faith," or the faith, seems to be the thought not our faith as in the Authorised and Revised Versions. The Revisers say "hath sat down" for κεκ., having given "sat down" for the ἐκάθ. in 1:2, 8:1, 10:12. The Authorised Version had said "is set" in 8:1 as well as in the passage before us, so that they do not seem to have distinguished on principle. (Bible Treasury 14:48)

12:3 himself: But how was the Company [of Revisers of 1881] persuaded into deserting ἐαυτόν or αὐτόν, accepted even by Alford, Lachmann, Tischendorf, and Tregelles, on ample authority? Was it not by the strong pressure of Cambridge admirers of paradox if it be only ancient? No doubt they can cite ⲁ ⲉ ⲕ ⲗ ⲡ, all^{ⲁⲙ} with the same old Latin copies, the Pesch., &c. The resulting sense in this connection is not only inferior beyond comparison, but intolerable. (Bible Treasury 14:48) himself: [The American correctors of the RV] draw attention to the strange want of judgment in the Revised text of 3. There are a few ancient and excellent authorities which read the plural in one form or another; but the singular "himself" or "him" is the reading of Alford and Lachmann, of Tischendorf and Tregelles, none of whom lacked boldness in acting on a few old copies. The learned editors of Cambridge adopt it in their Gr. N. T. and were probably the chief influence in bearing down the opposition of others in the Committee. (Bible Treasury 15:32)

12:6 Jehovah: "Lord" here means Jehovah, and therefore excludes the article in Greek. (Exp. of Heb., p.239)

12:7 For: (εἰς A D K L P and some 50 cursives (the Vat. B. and Rescript of Paris, C, failing); εἰ has but some cursives, Euthal-Cod. and Theophylact, all the ancient Vv. and Ff. being adverse.) . . . The commonly received text which substitutes the conditional "if" (εἰ) for the preposition "for" (εἰς) is an unquestionable mistake, resting on few and late witnesses opposed to weight and antiquity, and due apparently to a presumed simplifying of the clause. Tischendorf who had wavered returned to the true reading, as do all critics who adhere to diplomatic evidence, unless a motive for change were probable. Here the motive wrought the other way in the modern copies; for it seemed to balance the seventh verse better with the eighth. Whereas in fact the ancient reading preserves the application of the O.T. citation simply and with far more directness and energy. Erasmus led the way wrongly, following a Greek MS. of not much value, and others followed the Dutch scholar. The Vulgate too had the mistranslation of "in disciplina," which should of course have been the accusative as in its Fulgentian copy. The Veselian forgery made the Greek to match the error. (Exp. of Heb., p.239-240)

For: [The RV] affords a remarkable departure from the Text. Rec. εἰ "if" for εἰς in the sense of "for." "For chastening endure (or, better, ye are enduring); as with sons God is dealing with you." The ancient MSS., and Versions remarkably consent against the text adopted by Erasmus, the Complutensian editors, Colinaeus, Stephens, Beza, Elzevirs. Bengel, whose critical insight was great, here failed, thinking the true reading to be the slip of a Greek pen, though he was well aware that the widespread testimony of the old version told a different tale. Even Matthæi, who loved to fight Griesbach, was here compelled to reject the few minuscules and accept the united voice of antiquity; and of course Alford, Lachmann, Scholz, Tischendorf, and Tregelles follow. Is it sound to say that if ye endure chastening God dealeth with you as with sons? Does His fatherly course depend on our patience? On the other hand, it is important to feel that we endure as chastening, not as punishment: οὐκ εἰς κόλασιν, οὐδὲ εἰς τιμωρίαν, as Chrysostom pertinently observes. It is as certain as such a thing can be that the text of his comment (Epp. Paulin. vii. 330, ed. Field, Oxon.) has been tampered with to make it accord with εἰ. (Bible Treasury 14:48)

[is he]: In ᾧ A P, etc., ἐστὶν is not expressed. (Exp. of Heb., p.239)

12:10 chastened ἅ . . . ἅ profit: The version of 10 [in the RV] is properly cleared of obsolete speech, save that "us" and "our" rather enfeeble the form. (Bible Treasury 14:48) holiness: It may be noticed that Hellenistic literature, in none of its copious and varied remains, uses this word ἁγιότης. Yet is it the simplest derivative that expresses quality from ἅγιος, holy. It occurs in the apocryphal second book of Macc. 15:2, but is not correctly rendered in the Vulgate, followed by Wiclif and his follower, and the Douay, etc. For "with holiness" qualifies "him who beholds all things," rather than the day forehonoured by Him. Some may not be aware that Alford, Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles, Westcott and Hort adopt it in the text of 2 Cor. 1:12, where others have ἀπλότητι, a word easily confounded with it by a hasty eye. It is adopted without even a marginal question by the Revisers. (Exp. of Heb., p.243)

12:11 no chastisement: Ought not 11 to be "No chastening," &c.? (Bible Treasury 14:48)

12:15 [the]: A few very ancient witness give "the" many: so in Mark 6:2; 9:26. (Exp. of Heb., p.244)

[the]: "The" many in 15 is a doubtful reading sustained by two great uncials and as many cursives, &c., against all the other authorities. Cf. Mark 9:26. (Bible Treasury 14:48)

12:17 (for . . . repentance): [Q. — Is it the blessing or repentance Esau sought carefully? F.H.]

A. — Gen. 27 is explicit. Esau sought importunately the blessing of his father and with tears. He was a self-willed, profane, and unclean man. Not a word is breathed of repentance. He had already despised his birthright heartlessly. God was in none of his thoughts, but he counted on Isaac's carnal partiality; as Jacob, misled by Rebecca, trusting to cunning, instead of crying to God and resting on His purpose, which, spite of their low state, both believed in. Hence the R.V. joins J.N.D.'s, and very properly in parenthetically marking the clause, "for he found no place of (or, for) repentance." One fails to see any sufficient reason for taking μετανοία in any other than its uniform sense elsewhere in the N.T. To make it here only equivalent to μεταμέλεια demands at least the strongest proof, and seems to be uncalled for, though an expositor second to none appears to have been of that opinion for this place. (Bible Treasury 20:176)

(for . . . repentance): the Revisers have by the parenthesis set out duly the true meaning. It was not repentance, but the inheritance of blessing which Esau sought out with tears. (Bible Treasury 14:48)

[parentheses] it is important to observe that what Esau sought diligently to obtain with tears was the coveted blessing. To have sought repentance with tears yields no good sense. (Bible Treasury 15:32)

12:18 thing: The best and most ancient witnesses omit ὅρει here, which is understood from verse 22, where the positive object is found. But Mr. T.S.Green goes so far as to give up the contrast of the two mountains, and has, "you have come to a fire touched," etc. (Exp. of Heb., p.246) thing: the Revisers omit ὅρει on fuller evidence than their insertion in 15; but they supply it from 20 in the general sense instead of adopting Mr. Green's singular turn, "to a fire to be touched and glowing." (Bible Treasury 14:48)

12:19 deprecated: If the true meaning of παρητήσαντο in 19 had been borne in mind [in the RV], "deprecated," "declined," "excused" (see 25), it would perhaps make the absence of μή more probable as in ᾧ P, 10,73, &c. (Bible Treasury 14:48)

12:20 stoned ἅ : Of course the last clause of 20 in the Text. Rec. is dropt. (Bible Treasury 14:48)

12:22 and . . . and: the Revisers have failed to give the true connection, καὶ really indicating each new object, and consequently misrepresented the sense of this weighty passage. The myriads of angels are the general assembly, and "church of firstborn ones" are a new and wholly distinct group, here confounded with παρηγύρει, which really goes with ἀγγέλων. (Bible Treasury 14:48) and . . . and: It is to be regretted that the Americans [correctors of the RV] seem as far as the Revisers from correcting the vicious arrangement in 22, 23, where they all failed to see that καὶ defines each new clause after the first in the sentence from 22-24. . . . "To the general assembly and the church" &c. is a muddle, the first term of which should end the previous object enumerated; the second begins a new one with the conjunction prefixed. (Bible Treasury 15:32) and [7 times]: No mountain named in the Bible suited the aim here so admirably as Zion, the Zion of scripture, not the whimsical substitute of theology, "the catholic church" as even Cromwell's Vice-Chancellor of Oxford University, the able and excellent J. Owen makes it to be, militant and triumphant, and to this end omits the copulative (Works, xxiv. 329, Goold's Ed.). But here we may add that almost all editors of the Greek Test. as well as the commentators almost universally fall into error sometimes repeatedly, by not heeding the plain and sure fact that the conjunction (καὶ - and) connects with Zion each new and distinct link in the chain of glory. In the next page after, as in the text of the page before, it is given correctly; but such laxity makes sound exegesis impossible. The most prevalent instance is in joining "general assembly" (as in the Auth. Ver.) with "the church of the firstborn;" of which Dr. Owen of course is also guilty, to the destruction of all right intelligence of the context. The least skilful of handlers could not have the hardihood to construe "God the judge of all," "Jesus the mediator of the new covenant," and "the blood of sprinkling" etc., as the further description of the catholic church; but they do strive hard to merge "the spirits of just men made perfect" in the same object.

Even J.A. Bengel (Gnomon ii. 467, Ed. 1836) lumped "myriads of angels and firstborns" in one category, so as to make out his double sevenfold; whereas the latter consists really of eight, not of seven. Yet in the next p. 468 he properly asks, who would join together as synonyms the church of the firstborn with the general assembly of angels? Nevertheless, who knows not that able men of research like Dean Alford, and Bp. Chr. Wordsworth, and Bp. Westcott, persist in the same false punctuation, and in joining more or less two categories so different as the angels and the church; as the erudite Bp. J. Pearson laid down in his famous exposition of the Creed since 1658? The perplexities of the learned are great and varied, as F. Delitzsch here speaks of three closely connected questions, and among the hardest in our Epistle. But, whatever the connection, the difficulty is largely due to overlooking the help rendered by the conjunction as the introduction of each added object after the first, or Zion. The neglect of this threw even so eminent a preacher and teacher as J. Howe into confusion like almost every other, as we may see in his use of this scripture everywhere, particularly in his sermon, or part of it, dedicated to Lady Russell. Lesser lights we need not notice. (Bible Treasury N5:107-108) and [7 times]: The conjunction simply and effectively introduces and connects each of the objects in a remarkable order after the first, as we shall see. This was overlooked in the A.V. following other translators, to the ruin of the meaning between the latter clause of verse 22 and beginning of verse 23. (Exp. of Heb., p.248)

a universal assemblage: The phrase “general assembly” (πανηγύρει) is clearly, in my judgment, exegetical of the preceding words, “the innumerable company of angels,” just as, in the clause before, “the heavenly Jerusalem” is a further explanation of “the city of the living God.” The conjunction καί introduces each new clause, which arrangement is destroyed in this particular instance, but observed in all the other parts of the sentence in the English Bible. The same confusion appears in Beza, Diodati, the Dutch, Martin, Ostervald, the Lausanne, etc. Bengel rightly objects to this construction. “Nam et polysyndeton retinendum est; et aliorum sine dubio est panegyris: aliorum, ecclesia, quis enim conjungeret synonyma, panegyris et ecclesia? Ecclesia, primogenitorum est; panegyris igitur, angelorum.” But then he falls into the mistake of making, not only the angels, but the church of the first-born ones refer to the myriads, which is equally, as it seems to me, contrary to the linking of each separate term by the conjunction, not to speak of other objections. The Syriac and Vulgate, with those who follow them, Luther and the Elberfeld, avoid either error, and give the true sense with more or less clearness. (Bible Witness & Review 1:316)

12:23 and [3 times]: [See note to 12:22]

assembly: [See note to Acts 19:32]

heavens: [See note to Mat. 16:2]

12:24 and [2 times]: [See note to 12:22]

covenant: How absurd to connect, as the margin does, a Mediator with a testament! With a covenant it is all right. (Bible Treasury 14:48)

^ Abel: And why “than that of Abel”? According to 11:4 it is Abel, as it were, speaking in his blood or death; παρὰ τὸ in L. and others, but it seems a mere gloss for facility. (Bible Treasury 14:48)

12:25 heavens: [See note to Mat. 16:2]

12:26 will: it should be “I will shake” instead of the present in the Text. Rec. (Bible Treasury 14:48)

12:28 we may [or, let us] serve: there is strong and abundant testimony for “we serve,” where the Revisers rightly cleave to the common text. (Bible Treasury 14:48)

13:3 [whole verse]: the Revisers correctly in general render a verse probably mistranslated through anti-Romanist zeal. (Bible Treasury 14:61)

13:4 [Be] . . . in all [things]: The A.V. is faulty in two respects. It is not a mere affirmative sentence stamping the relationship with dignity, but an exhortation in the imperative calling us to carry it on worthily, and to guard it from all taint of unchastity or impurity. And we are bid to set it in honor; not in this respect or in that, but “in all things.” . . . To say it is honorable “in all men” overlooks, if it does not destroy, the force of the scripture for the Christian’s conscience. (Exp. of Heb., p.259-260)

[Be] . . . undefiled: The imperative is right, and “undefiled” a predicate as “in honour.” (Bible Treasury 14:62)

in all [things]: The true rendering is, Let marriage be honourable (not “among all” as the Revisers say, but) “in all things,” and the bed be undefiled. The construction is alike before and after. It is an injunction, not an affirmation as in the A.V. with Wiclif, Cranmer, and the Geneva translators. The Rhemish is an ungrammatical evasion, meant to correspond with the Vulgate, which would seem to take the Greek like the Peschito, Wiclif, &c. Tyndale alone was right. (Bible Treasury N4:162-3) in all [things]: ἐν π. may, and probably does, mean “in all things,” or every way, as in verse 18, and often elsewhere; whereas the masculine sense, though popular among Protestants, is here harsh in construction and can hardly be laid down absolutely if we bear in mind 1 Cor. 7. (Bible Treasury 14:61-62)

13:5 course of life: The beginning of 5 [in the RV] is loosely translated. Surely ὁ τρόπος is the way of dealing without going further to make a smooth construction with the following clause. (Bible Treasury 14:62)

13:6 say . . . ? : It is not “may” but do say; and the interrogative is not only correct, but gives real point. (Bible Treasury 14:62)

13:7 leaders: [It] is calling to mind those apt to be forgotten who had passed away. Hence the text of the A.V. is not in accordance with the truth; nor is the margin though more literal. But in this case we must say were, not “are,” your guides, for their course was closed, as the verse itself intimates. (Exp. of Heb., p.260-261)

the which: [The RV has] correctly treated the words as referring to their guides, not “who” but “the which” or such as spoke to them the word of God, whose faith they were to imitate, contemplating the issue of their career or behaviour. (Bible Treasury 14:62)

13:8 [parentheses]: “Jesus Christ” is the subject of the distinct proposition that follows. Indeed verse 8 might fittingly open a new parenthesis which would close with 16, though it is no bad transition from the teaching of the deceased leaders to the abiding sameness of the Lord Jesus. But the apposition insinuated in the punctuation of ordinary English Bibles is false. The unchangeableness of Christ is the guard against being carried away. (Bible Treasury 14:62)

13:9 carried away: the received reading followed by the Authorised Version περιφ. rightly gives place to παραφ. as in the Revised Version. It is not carried about as in Eph. 4:14, but carried away out of the straight course. (Bible Treasury 14:62) divers: the Authorised Version has misled the Revisers into “divers,” not now for “many” but for various, ποικίλαις. “Diverse” would at least approximate, and perhaps the Revisers meant this, for their spelling is peculiar. As they interpolate an “e” into judg[e]ment, they may cut off an “e” from “divers.” But the word really means motley or various. (Bible Treasury 14:62) doctrines: “Teachings” [in the RV] is unusual as a plural in our tongue, though in the singular it is all right. Probably Dr. Angus found it hard to resist the innovators. (Bible Treasury 14:62)

13:14 the coming one: “One” to come as in the Authorised Version is too vague, and incorrect. (Bible Treasury 14:62)

13:15 confessing his name: Why would the Revised Version of 15 be more remote from the Greek than the Authorised Version in the last clause? (Bible Treasury 14:62)

13:17 [whole verse]: Does the punctuation of 17 help the sense? “That they may do this” refers to the watching. The chiefs or leaders are to give account of their own duty, not of others’ souls. (Bible Treasury 14:62)

give account: But it is well to note that the Vulgate has fallen into the perversion, so natural to the official mind, that the guides will have to give account of the souls under their supervision. Such is the strange reading of the Alexandrian MS. followed by Lachmann in his Greek Testament of 1831. Tischendorf who noticed this should have seen that L. corrected the error in his larger ed. of 1840-50. Certainly there is no excuse for anyone failing to recognize the overwhelming testimony in favor of the ancient copies as well as of the Received Text which speak of the guides exercising their wakeful care on behalf of the souls of the saints, as having to render an account. (Exp. of Heb., p.267)

13:18 persuade ourselves: The common reading πεποιθᾶμεν, followed by the Vulgate, Armenian, the A.V., etc., has numerous support, but of inferior antiquity and weight as compared with πειθόμεθα which is more suited to a subjective state. (Exp. of Heb., p.266)

well [or, honourably]: "honourably" or "rightly" is better than "honestly" as now limited in English. (Bible Treasury 15:32)

13:20 in virtue of: [The RV gives] "in the" instead of "through" for ἐν. It expresses the power or virtue in that blood in which God brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus. (Bible Treasury 14:62) in virtue of . . . an everlasting: "an" eternal is very much to be doubted. They [the American correctors of the RV] did not suggest "an" eternal Spirit in ch. 9. Our tongue does not always admit of the characterizing power of the anarthrous Greek construction, as may be seen in almost every salutation of the Epistles and often elsewhere. Hence we are forced sometimes to use our definite article where Greek has none. More noteworthy than any of these three is the true bearing of ἐν in 20, where the Revisers do not improve on the Authorised Version rendering of "through" by theirs of "with," for which they add the margin, "or, by Gr. in." It is to be feared that our American friends with the Committee at home hold Calvin's strange idea, which Bleek of late defends though one hardly likes to put it on paper, of Christ's taking the blood with Him to heaven. It is really and simply, in virtue, or in the power, of His blood. (Bible Treasury 15:32)

13:21 work: the omission of ἐργῶ is precarious, even Alford, Lachmann, and Tregelles accepting it. On the authority of A C D^{corr}. K M P, the cursives, Syriac, Æthiopic, Armenian, &c., sustain it against ⲛ D^{p.m.}, the Vulgate, which none follow but Tischendorf abroad, and Westcott and Hort at home. The difference, however, seems slight as to sense. (Bible Treasury 14:62) in you [or, us]: There is rather better evidence in favour of ἡμῶν instead of ὑμῶν as in the Text. Rec., though none but the same editors [Tischendorf, Westcott and Hort] adopt the change. Lachmann had in his early edition added αὐτόν, and in his later αὐτῶν before ποιῶν, the latter of which has ⲛ A C to support it, though manifest glosses. (Bible Treasury 14:62)

13:24 They: it seems needless to add the margin, "or, the brethren from." It was implied, though Wiclif and the Rhemish have supplied it, following the Vulgate as usual slavishly. (Bible Treasury 15:32) from: it is "from," not "of," Italy. (Bible Treasury 14:62)

Notes for James

Title ^Λ: Why should the Revisers perpetuate the traditional blunder of “The General Epistle of James”? The best critics drop καθολική, following B K, A C being defective, but A also dropping it at the end: so many Latin copies, and the Pesch. Syr. It is not “general,” but specially addressed to the twelve tribes. (Bible Treasury 14:62)

^Λ: It seems surprising that the Americans [correctors of the RV], less bound as they are by traditional bias than most in the old world, should heed the title given in the Authorised Version where it is clearly opposed to truth like this of our Epistle. Had “General” been applied only to the First of John and to that of Jude, every thoughtful person would have seen it to be true in fact. For the title is no part of the original text and differs in the ancient copies. The δωδεκάφυλον, or whole nationality, of Israel was before the inspired writer’s mind, not the church at large as the term Catholic or General supposes. If any were disposed to the notion of a spiritual Israel, “that are in the dispersion” ought to dispel it. One has only to examine or think of the extra-Pauline Epistles to see how absurdly they are designated the Seven Catholic Epistles, though they were from a date early enough to satisfy those who prefer post-apostolic antiquity to scripture. (Bible Treasury 15:47)

1:1 [whole verse] . . . in: [The RV] has neither the closeness of a literal rendering, nor the freedom of the Authorised Version. If we are to adhere to the letter, it is in, not “of,” the dispersion. (Bible Treasury 14:62)

1:3 proving: “proof” or proving is better than “trying” in the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:62) proving: the Americans [correctors of the RV] are not wrong in preferring “proving” to “proof” in 1:3, as Dean Alford also felt. (Bible Treasury 15:47)

1:4 a ^Λ perfect: “her” has properly given way [in the RV] to “its.” (Bible Treasury 14:62)

1:5 freely: For both Wiclif and Purvey give the primary meaning “in simpleness,” Tyndale, Cranmer, and the Geneva, “with singleness”; Rheims “in simplicity,” and the Auth. “with simplicity.” Again, Wiclif, and the Wicliffe have in our text “largeli,” Tyndale and Cranmer “indifferently,” Geneva “freely,” Rheims “abundantly,” and the Auth. “liberally”: all of them a secondary meaning. Of these “freely” seems to suit God best, as flowing readily from the primary force which hardly befits Him, while it well becomes us. (Bible Treasury N1:48, Exp. of James, p.13-14)

1:6 doubting . . . wave: “doubting,” “doubteth” are better than “waver,” though κλύδων seems rather “a wave” or billow, than “the surge.” (Bible Treasury 14:62)

1:7 [parentheses]: The punctuation, as expressive of the connection of 7,8, is questionable [in the RV], though the Authorised Version is hardly correct either in its representation of 8. It is rather a description of him that doubts. (Bible Treasury 14:62)

[parentheses]: [The American correctors of the RV] do not question the arrangement of 6-8; but is it not simpler and truer to take verse 7 as parenthetical, and 8 as a description of the doubter figuratively set forth in 6, rather than in apposition with “that man” in 7? (Bible Treasury 15:47)

1:9 [whole verse]: Verses 9, 10, are given somewhat loosely [in the RV], and with uncalled for neglect of the anarthrous construction. Why not as “flower of grass”? (Bible Treasury 14:62)

1:10 [whole verse] . . . ^Λ flower of ^Λ grass: [See note to James 1:9]

1:11 scorching . . . goings: the Revisers depart from the simple “scorching heat,” not “wind,” given to the word in Matthew 20:12 and Luke 12:55; but “goings” is better than “ways.” (Bible Treasury 14:62)

1:12 put to the proof: it should be not “tried,” but the result “proved,” or as the Revisers say “approved.” (Bible Treasury 14:62)

He: The later uncials and almost all the cursives, &c., read “the Lord.” (Bible Treasury 14:62)

1:13 by evils: Why not in 13 “by evils” or evil things, rather than “with evil” as in the Authorised and Revised Versions? (Bible Treasury 14:62)

by evils: Did they [the American correctors of the RV] not feel the importance of the plural form relegated from the text of 13 to the margin? God tries faith and patience, He never tempts to lusts, which are from within. (Bible Treasury 15:47)

1:15 ^Λ sin: the Revisers overlook the abstract force of the article in Greek, where we leave it out in English. The Authorised Version is right. (Bible Treasury 42:62)

1:17 giving: [The American correctors of the RV have] no notice beyond a return from the Revised Version “boon” to the Authorised Version “gift.” Now we all know that the first of the two words, though properly expressive of the act of giving may be and often is used for a gift or present; but is it conceivable that we should have the two terms without a distinction other than brought together and differently qualified? Ought we not to allow that “every good giving” is here distinguished from “every perfect gift?” The character of the act good, the result in the thing given perfect, the Father of lights is the source, in contrast with evil in act and result flowing from self. (Bible Treasury 14:47)

from above, coming down: They follow [in the RV] nearly the Authorised Version in separating ἀνωθεν ἐστι from καταβαίνον, but the Authorised Version in 3:15 seems just as correct, which they do not follow. (Bible Treasury 42:62)

1:19 Ye know [it]: It is known that in the oldest uncials, supported by the Latins, the reading is ἴστε, “ye know,” not ὥστε, “so that.” Then we would proceed, “But let,” &c. (Bible Treasury 14:62)

1:20 man’s wrath . . . God’s righteousness: The anarthrous form of 20 is ill reflected in the Revised Version, as in the Authorised Version. 42:62)

1:21 implanted: “implanted” is correct [in the RV] (Bible Treasury 14:62)

1:23 considering: In 23 and 24 it is to “consider” or contemplate, rather than “behold.” (Bible Treasury 14:62)

1:24 considered: [See note to James 1:23]

does not ὁ π. mean more than “he that looketh”? (Bible Treasury 14:62)

1:26 one ^Λ: θρ. “among you” (ἐν ὑμῖν) is rightly rejected. (Bible Treasury 14:62) [See note to James 1:27] thinks: . . . the form is hardly “seemeth” but “deemeth,” or “thinketh himself.” It is not what appears to others that is in question, but his thought of himself. Wyclif and the Rhemish are right, following the Vulgate; Tyndale misled Cranmer, the Geneva V. and the Authorised. (Bible Treasury N1:172, Exp. of James, p.49)

1:27 religious service: But as distinct from εὐσεβεία, piety, it [θρ.] means the outward service of God, which “religion” inadequately expresses, though it is hard to find a better. — In 27 it is well to note this, lest ignorance should treat the verse as a definition of true “religion,” as men speak. The meaning is, that this is a pure and unsullied service before Him who is God and Father: to visit orphans and widows, &c. (Bible Treasury 14:62-63)

^ God: (There is ancient and excellent authority \aleph^m KL and more than 50 cursives, &c., for omitting the article, which would give a characteristic force, "before a God and Father." In either case "our" goes too far.) . . . Wiclif has it thus: — "There is a clene religioun and unwemmyd anentis God and the fadir, for to visite pupilles, that is fadirles or modirles, or bothe, and widewes in her tribulacioun, and for to kepe him silf undefoulid fro this world." The Wiclifite gives, "A clene relegioun and an vnwemmed anentis God and the fadir, is this, to visite fadirles and modirles children, and widewis in her tribulacioun, and to kepe hym silf vndefoulid fro this world." "Pure devocion and vndefiled (says Tyndale) before God the father, is this: to vysit the frendlesse and widdowes in their adversite, and to kepe him silfe vnspotted of the worlde." Cranmer and the Genevese V. follow Tyndale save the latter in the word "religion" for "devocion," and for "frendlesse" both giving "fatherlesse." That of Rheims has, "Religion cleane and vnspotted vvith God and the Father, is this, to visite pupilles and vvividovves in their tribulation; and to keepe him self vnspotted from this vvorld." (Bible Treasury N1:185, Exp. of James, p.51-52)

^ God: But the article is omitted before θ . $\kappa\alpha\iota$ π . in \aleph^m . C^{corr}. K L, very many cursives, &c.; it is read in other MSS. of the highest authority, as also in Text. Rec. (Bible Treasury 14:63)

2:1 [whole verse]: It is agreed that they [the American correctors of the RV] rightly cleave to the Authorised and Revised Versions of 1, and reject the unsatisfactory alternative of Bengel, Calvin, Gataker, or others. (Bible Treasury 15:47)

2:2 meeting [lit. synagogue]: One can easily understand "synagogue" used by the writer to those addressed, not literally, but as applied by a ready transition to a Christian company. It is therefore here rendered "meeting" as perhaps the nearest analogue. (Bible Treasury N1:219, Exp. of James, p.61) meeting [lit. synagogue]: 2:2 of the Revised Version has rightly "synagogue," according to the peculiar bearing of the Epistle. (Bible Treasury 14:63)

meeting [lit. synagogue]: So also the bringing in of "synagogue" for the more general "assembly" as in the Authorised Version is a sound correction for reasons which may not have occurred to the Committee on either side of the Atlantic. (Bible Treasury 15:47)

2:4 make a difference among yourselves . . . of: "partial" in yourselves of the Authorised Version goes too far; but "divided in your own minds" in the Revision scarcely hits the mark. The true force seems that they became divided, or made a difference "among themselves." For judges "of" evil thoughts, which is the literal rendering of the Authorised Version, the Revisers give "with." Of course the meaning is that they had evil thoughts, according to an idiom found sometimes in English. (Bible Treasury 14:63)

make a difference among yourselves: One can understand also the text and margin of 4 [in the RV], though it be questionable if either side be the best rendering of the word δ . (Bible Treasury 15:47)

2:5 the: The poor "of this world" of Tyndale, Cranmer, Geneva, and the Auth. V. supposes a text which extant MSS. do not warrant, unless it be the exaggerated rendering of the article, without the demonstrative pronoun. This "of the world," has considerable support of both uncials and cursives, as well as ancient versions, &c., and is the text of Griesbach, Matthaei (both edd.) and Scholz. They were probably misled by the Vulgate, followed by Wiclif who preceded them, and by the Rhemish that came after them, "in this world," which has one cursive (29) to this effect with the venerable Bede. "In the world" has the support of three junior MSS. (27,43,64). The true reading adopted by the latest critics is that of the most ancient and best uncials, though neglected by the ancient versions save the later or Philoxenian Syriac. It is $\tau\hat{\omega}$ $\kappa\acute{o}\sigma\mu\omega$, and appears to be the dative of reference, i.e. poor in respect of, or as to, the world, a not uncommon usage. (Bible Treasury N1:236, Exp. of James, p.67-68) the: the true reading on the best authority is $\tau\hat{\omega}$ κ . ("as to the world"), not $\tau\hat{o}\tilde{\upsilon}$ κ ., still less τ . κ . $\tau\acute{o}\upsilon\tau\omicron\upsilon$, as in Text. Rec. followed in the Authorised Version "of this world." (Bible Treasury 14:63)

2:7 that was called on you: In 7 [of the RV] is not the literal force preferable "that was called upon you"? (Bible Treasury 14:63)

2:11 commit . . . killest: The Revisers rightly follow ancient authority in "dost" not and "killest," contrary to Text. Rec. (Bible Treasury 14:63)

2:12 a law: ought they [the American correctors of the RV] to have passed by the needless introduction of the English indefinite in 12 [in the RV]? (Bible Treasury 15:47)

2:13 ^ showed: Nor is "hath" called for in 13. (Bible Treasury 15:47)

2:14 ^ faith: There is no need, however, to give the Greek article with Wakefield the force of "this," nor with Bede and the Revisers the emphasis of "that," nor yet the more legitimate possessive sense of "his." Faith is entitled, even apart from previous mention, to the article in Greek as an ideal object, the thing faith, or as we in English say "faith," as much as if it expressed the different sense of "the faith" required in many scriptures. The context can alone decide in which shade it is employed. Hence also we may observe that in ver. 17 scarce any person thinks of translating the same words, η $\pi\acute{\iota}\sigma\tau\iota\varsigma$, save as faith; and rightly so, for it is still used in the same general sense. This is not at all invalidated by the anarthrous form in ver. 14, where the insertion of the article would be improper. For in such cases the accusative is complementary to the transitive verb, and expresses the character of the action that resulted, unless it be intended to denote that which through some reason becomes a specific object before the mind; both of which cases may be seen again in ver. 18. (Bible Treasury N1:295-296, Exp. of James, p.87-88)

^ faith: it is a nice question whether the true thought be "faith" as in the Authorised Version, or "the faith": the Greek admits of either, and it becomes a question of contextual propriety. But "that faith" of the Revised Version is strong beyond warrant. It is the more strange, as in the same connection (17,20,22) they give "faith" as an abstraction or personification, and quite rightly. (Bible Treasury 14:63)

^ faith: It is more surprising that they [the American correctors of the RV] should consent to "that" faith of the Revisers in 14. Even Dean Alford would regard the Greek article as only that of previous mention. Its emphatic force is quite unnecessary. (Bible Treasury 15:47)

2:18 ^ works: σου of R. Steph. ("thy," Authorised Version) is well omitted: why then should the Revisers interpolate "thy"? It was this feeling, no doubt, which led the scribes of C K L, and most of the cursives to insert the word. (Bible Treasury 14:63)

^ works . . . my faith: the literal sense seen in the Revised margin seems better than their text and as in the Authorised Version, which is substantially Tyndale's. It appears to me that "the" is more forcible than "thy" with "works" and "faith" at the close: "Shew me thy faith apart from the works [i.e. produced by it], and I will shew thee by [or from] my works, the faith" [i.e. which produces them], neither carrying the English article without some such paraphrase. See the Revisers' own rendering in 26. The article here means the works proper to faith, the works one has a right to expect from faith. (Bible Treasury 15:47)

my: The real question [in this verse] is as to a final μὴ which B C and a few cursives omit. (Bible Treasury 14:63)

2:19 God is one: It seems extraordinary that the English Versions at 19 should have deserted the text before their various translators and given what answers only to the Cambridge Greek Text of 1881, as well as the Reviser's margin, no doubt greatly due to the learned Editors' influence. For though the uncials and cursives in general differ greatly in the order of the words, the sense is the same as is represented in the Revised text; and so the mass of ancient versions. Their margin has only the Vatican, backed up by Scrivener's a c l m and Theophyl. All other critics justly insert the article, which makes the textual rendering imperative. (Bible Treasury 14:47)

2:20 dead [or, idle]: As to the difference of reading . . . , the great majority of MSS. gives "dead"; but the witness for "idle" is ancient and excellent. The shade is slight, the substantial sense remains as before. Only there was here as elsewhere the danger of assimilation, for the chapter ends with the conclusion that faith apart from works is "dead." If "idle" were the true text in ver. 20, the language of ver. 26 would not be a repetition but a striking and effective climax. Hence Alford, Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles, with Westcott and Hort, prefer it. (Bible Treasury N1:329, Exp. of James, p.93-94) dead [or, idle]: ἀργή, "barren," as against ν., "dead" of the Text. Rec. and Authorised Version, is supported by B C^m. 27, 29, the best Latin copies, the Sah., and Arm. of Zohrab: slender in number, but grave, especially as assimilation easily accounts for the more popular reading. (Bible Treasury 14:63)

dead [or, idle]: Very likely ἀργή "barren" in 20 has a claim of superiority over νεκρά dead (which may well have slipped in from the context); but was it not incautious [of the American correctors to the RV] to support the Revised Version in ignoring even in the margin what cannot be denied to have the great preponderance of ancient evidence? (Bible Treasury 15:47)

2:21 when [or, in that]: would it not be less cumbrous to take ἀν. as on, or in, offering up? Compare 25 also. (Bible Treasury 14:63)

2:22 [whole verse]: [The RV is] right in preferring the margin to the text of Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:63)

2:23 ^Λ Friend: there is no reason to say more than that A. was called "friend of God." (Bible Treasury 14:63)

^Λ Friend: "friend" of God is much more expressive, as well as more strictly correct, than "the friend." (Bible Treasury 15:47-48)

2:24 faith only: why be parties to severing μ. "only" from "faith?" The connexion with substantives is common and well-known. (Bible Treasury 15:48)

2:26 a: "The" is needless before spirit in 26, and of course its omission more exact. (Bible Treasury 14:63)

a: why "the" Spirit, when our idiom here admits of close adherence to the Greek? (Bible Treasury 15:48)

^Λ faith . . . ^Λ works: The last clause illustrates . . . that in Greek the article may be with "faith" if not with "works," where the Revisers properly enough have it not in English. Indeed with "works" the witnesses very generally insert it, save two great uncials and two cursives. Origen can scarcely be reckoned in; for he makes both "faith" and "works" here to be anarthrous. (Bible Treasury 15:48)

3:1 many ^Λ: 3:1 appears to be encumbered rather than helped by the proposed supply "many of you," as G. Wakefield had suggested long ago; it is sufficiently implied in the phrase itself. (Bible Treasury 15:48) teachers: . . . "teachers," as it unequivocally ought to be. The connexion with speaking confirms the required meaning, independent of philology, though this of course admits of nothing else. It would seem however that, in stages of our tongue now obsolete, "master" had not only the general sense of "superior" which is here quite out of place, but the special force of "teacher." So it was used in the English versions of the Gospels as the counterpart of the Hebrew "Rabbi." And so it is rendered here by Wiclif and a Wicliffe (Oxford, iv. 599), Tyndale, Cranmer, Geneva, Rheims, as well as the A.V. (Bible Treasury N2:9, Exp. of James, p.108) teachers . . . judgment: [In the RV] "teachers" is correct, and "judgment." (Bible Treasury 14:63)

3:3 [whole verse]: [See note to James 3:5]

Now if: In the received text we appear to have an error exceedingly frequent among the copyists, who are apt to confound εἰ and ὅτε where it does not affect the sense, and where here it does. Probably ὅτε in the beginning of verse 4 led to the idea of commencing verse 3 with ὅτε; but it ought rather to have induced hesitation, for why then vary the adverb? It would seem that εἰ δέ was thus mistaken, and the more because the apodosis might easily be overlooked by being made part of the conditional protasis. (Bible Treasury N2:39, Exp. of James, p.117-118)

Now if: [The RV] rightly read[s] εἰ δέ "now if," probably changed into ὅτε, through 4. (Bible Treasury 14:63)

3:4 ^Λ though . . . helmsman: the Authorised Version needlessly adds "which," corrected by the Revisers, and "steersman" displacing "governor." (Bible Treasury 14:63)

3:5-6 [whole passage]: the confusion of the copies and the editors is great; so that one may judge the more moderately of the Revisers' text and margin. "A" world, &c. of the Authorised Version is clearly wrong, and here set right. (Bible Treasury 14:63)

wood: It may be observed that the word ὕλη (here as generally translated "wood" or "forest") is often in philosophical writings used to express "matter," and by historians or others, like "materia" in Latin authors, the stuff or material of anything, timber &c. The A.V. had ground for its rendering, even if the preponderance lean to that view which is presented here. (Bible Treasury N2:54, Exp. of James, p.121)

3:6 [whole verse]: Yet there are delicate questions, especially in 6, while there is little doubt of the critical readings in 3, 6, and 9. (Bible Treasury 15:48)

the: "A" world, &c. of the Authorised Version is clearly wrong, and here set right. (Bible Treasury 14:63)

^Λ the tongue: . . . The best witnesses, both MSS. and Vv., omit the "thus" [or, "so"] which smooths the way for the second time "the tongue" is introduced. It is most forcible as it stands simply. "The tongue cometh to be in our members that which defileth the whole body," and this is a sense which, prevailing in the best authors so that no detailed justification is necessary, seems to suit the clause, better than the bare "is" of the A.V. or "is constituted" as it frequently means. Here it is liable to give the erroneous notion of being divinely arranged to so evil an end; which is a thought impossible to a good conscience and wholly opposed to the truth. (Bible Treasury N2:54, Exp. of James, p.121) [See note to 3:5]

3:8 unsettled: [The RV rejects] "unruly" of the Authorised Version for "restless." (Bible Treasury 14:63)

3:9 [whole verse]: [See note to James 3:6]

the Lord . . . [the]: There is the article, and but one, to "Lord and Father." Grammatically therefore the phrase admits of meaning "Him Who is Lord and Father," no less than "the Lord and (the) Father" brought together under that link of objects united here expressly though in themselves distinct. This they could not be fittingly unless there were a common nature and glory. So we may see in such a phrase as "the kingdom of God and Christ." Far be it from the heart or mouth to question in the least that Christ is God, which is declared comparatively so often. But ask for instance if we must, whether Eph. 5:5 means this, though the single article brackets together both terms. So we may see in "the apostles and prophets" of Eph. 2:20, combined for the foundation, but given separately in Eph. 4:11.

The idiom is common enough even with proper names, as when the man in Acts 3:11 held fast "Peter and John" thus united, though in vers. 1 and 3 both names are presented historically without the article to either. Such is the reading of ample and good authority. But the Sinai, the Vatican and the Alexandrine with half-a-dozen cursives insert the article before John, which if right would individualise, instead of combining in a special way, the two apostles. In chap. 4:13,19, there can hardly be a doubt that they are thus joined together. Both cases occur with Paul and Barnabas in chaps. 13, 14. Chap. 15 is instructive from varieties of form, each employed with exquisite propriety. Ver. 2 presents Paul and Barnabas, first severed, and then without emphasis as simple fact, as also in ver. 12. But in ver. 22 they are expressly combined in unity as in 25 (the order changed), as in ver. 35 the fact is merely stated historically.

There seems no sufficient ground then for doubting that "the Lord" in the usual acceptance of the term is here combined with "the Father" as objects united in our praise. That it is unusual, all admit; but so it is in many a phrase of holy writ, that our narrowness of thought may be corrected and enlarged out of the fulness of divine truth. On the other hand no one should stumble at predicating "Lord" of the Father, if such were the aim of the inspiring Spirit here. For though the crucified Jesus was made by God both Lord and Christ (Acts 2:36), and He is in distinctive office one sole Lord, as the Father is simply in His nature one sole God (1 Cor. 8:6), it does not follow that "Lord" may not be applied to the other Persons in the Godhead. Thus in 2 Cor. 3 it is predicated of the Spirit in the last clause of the last verse; as it is of God rather than of Christ (Who is distinguished as His Anointed) in Rev. 11:15. It was the rarity of the combination, however taken, which no doubt led to substituting "God" as in the common text, following the more modern MSS. for "the Lord." But if we accept the ancient reading, our language, we must bear in mind, does not, like the Greek, admit but one article. (Bible Treasury N2:87, Exp. of James, p.126-129)

Lord: [The RV accepts] "Lord" for God of the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:63)

3:11 the . . . out of . . . opening: It is "the" fountain in 11 [in the RV], and "from" the same "opening," not place merely. (Bible Treasury 14:63)

3:12 a . . . [can] Λ : it is "a" fig tree, and the last clause does not speak of a fountain, like Text. Rec. and Authorised Version, but says, with the Revisers, neither can salt water yield sweet. (Bible Treasury 14:63) figs? Λ . . . Λ salt: It is possible that the first word of the last clause ($\text{o}\tilde{\upsilon}\tau\epsilon$, neither) may have through hasty misapprehension given rise to the added $\text{o}\tilde{\upsilon}\tau\omega\varsigma$ ("so" ["thus" - Bible Treasury]) of the Text. Rec. Then came an effort to make the phrase more pointed by reading $\text{o}\tilde{\upsilon}\delta\epsilon\mu\acute{\iota}\alpha$ $\pi\eta\gamma\eta$ (no fountain). The Sinaitic Uncial has $\text{o}\tilde{\upsilon}\tau\omega\varsigma$ $\text{o}\tilde{\upsilon}\delta\acute{\epsilon}$. But even Tischendorf, and Westcott and Hort decline to follow; for they with Alford, Lachmann, Tregelles, and Wordsworth, read the text which yields the translation given above. There is, it would seem, a certain strangeness in reading $\text{o}\tilde{\upsilon}\tau\epsilon$ rather than $\text{o}\tilde{\upsilon}\delta\acute{\epsilon}$. But this appears to be explicable by the writer's carrying on in his mind the preceding clause. The insertion of the conjunction ($\text{k}\alpha\iota$, "and") in the last clause is opposed to the weightiest of the ancient witnesses, both MSS. and Vv. and loses the point of the true text, which varies the figure by a negation which is indisputable. (Bible Treasury N2:104, Exp. of James, p.133)

3:13 Λ Who: It is the opening of a new paragraph which continues to the end of this chapter, and passes indeed into the following one by way of contrast. (Bible Treasury N2:120, Exp. of James, p.134)

3:15 [whole verse]: [See note to James 1:17]

[whole verse]: The Authorised Version of 15 appears to me quite as exact as the change here [in the RV]. Compare 1:17. (Bible Treasury 14:63)

[whole verse]: Elsewhere the cumbrous rendering of the Committee [of Revisers of 1881] in 15 has been noticed, which we do not repeat (Bible Treasury 15:48)

3:17 impartial [or, unfeigned]: There is much difficulty in deciding the true force of $\alpha\delta$., whether it be without doubt, variance, or hypocrisy; as the verb of which it is compounded admits of a great variety of meaning. (Bible Treasury 14:63)

3:18 in peace is being sown: The question in 18 is whether "in peace" should not, as in the Greek, precede "is sown." (Bible Treasury 14:63)

in peace is being sown: it is a grave question whether "in peace" should not be connected with "fruit of righteousness" rather than with "sown" as in the Authorised and Revised Versions. G. Wakefield made it qualify "fruit," as if equivalent to Heb. 12:11. (Bible Treasury 15:48)

4:1 [whole verse] . . . pleasures: 4:1 has in the Revised Version the more vigorous, critical text, but hardly in as terse English as is desirable. "Whence [are] wars, and whence fighting among you? [Are they] not hence, from your pleasures that war in your members?" For the margin of the Authorised Version is right in giving "pleasures." (Bible Treasury 14:63)

4:2 Ye lust . . . are jealous: ζ . when used in a bad sense, is "ye envy," or "are jealous." The first word means "ye lust," or "covet." (Bible Treasury 14:63)

4:3 ask [1st]: it is difficult to distinguish in our tongue the active and the middle of $\alpha\iota\tau$. Dean Alford went too far in calling it "an unaccountable interchange;" whereas it is really an intended, though delicate, and, of course, intelligible difference. The middle as often has an intensive force. In 2 they did not ask with earnestness; in 3 they asked with indifference, and received not; or, if there was any earnestness, it was of an evil kind to spend in their pleasures. (Bible Treasury 14:63)

4:4 Adulteresses: (So run κ^m AB 13, and, only in the masc., Syr^{sch}. Copt. Aeth. Arm.) . . . The shorter text as given here is attested by the great witnesses, both manuscripts and versions. The addition in later copies we can understand from the temptation to round the phrase and comprehend men and women; and this has tended to a literal sense instead of understanding it as a forcible and solemn appeal, the gender being easily apprehended from the nature of the offence. (Bible Treasury N2:220, Exp. of James, p.155-156)

Adulteresses: [The RV is here] an instance of valuable correction. The weighty authorities, both MSS. and Versions, reject $\mu\omicron\iota\chi\omicron\iota$ $\text{k}\alpha\iota$. The one designation, though in the feminine, embraces all men or women who sought the world in unfaithfulness to God and their own relationship of privilege. (Bible Treasury 14:63)

Adulteresses: In 4:4 [of the American correctors of the RV] there is but a marginal explanation suggested of "adulteresses," "That is, who break your marriage vow to God," without a word on ch. 5. There is no sufficient reason to doubt the soundness of the critical change, which all accept save that Tischendorf strangely connects the word μ . with the sentence before (3), not with 4. But the feminine only and fully expresses the corruption of all who tamper with the world, instead of keeping themselves unspotted from it. (Bible Treasury 15:48)

with: both the Authorised and the Revised Versions failed to give the full force; for it is really friendship with the world as distinctly as enmity with God, which they rightly say. (Bible Treasury 14:63) shall be minded: is there sufficient energy in the Revision, any more than the Authorised Version of βουληθῇ? It is "shall have chosen," or be minded. (Bible Treasury 14:63) enemy: both the Authorised and the Revised Versions failed to give the full force; for it is really friendship with the world as distinctly as enmity with God, which they rightly say. None of our English versions is right, though none is here so wrong as the Rhemish, which following the Vulgate, confounds ἐχθρὰ with ἐχθρά. (Bible Treasury 14:63)

4:5 [whole verse]: The punctuation and translation of ver. 5 may be questioned; but I have faithfully given what seems best. (Bible Treasury N2:220, Exp. of James, p.155)

Λ Doth: 5 seems in the Revised Version rightly divided, as had been long suggested. There are two grave objections to the more ordinary division: (1) Who can tell the Scripture alleged to be in view? (2) Where else is φθ. used in a good sense? I think, however, that the margin of the Authorised Version gives the best sense of π. φθ., "enviously." (Bible Treasury 14:63)

Λ Doth: Need it be told you that this verse has been a matter of much difficulty to many minds? Although I am not at all prepared to dogmatize about its force, it appears to me a harsh expression to suppose that the spirit here described means no more than man's spirit. I do not know how a man's spirit can with propriety be said to dwell in a man. One can understand "the spirit of a man that is in him;" as the apostle Paul, when describing the human spirit, does put it in 1 Cor. 2, but hardly the spirit that dwelleth in a man. But if here it be not the spirit of man, the only spirit elsewhere said to dwell in man (i.e., the believer) is the Spirit of God. But herein is just what causes the difficulty. How, if it be the Spirit of God, can He be put in such a connexion here? Must we translate and punctuate as in the common Greek Testament and English Bible?

Hence many are of the opinion (and to this I am rather disposed, though I would not venture to say more) that the verse ought to be thus divided: — "Do ye think that the scripture speaketh in vain? Does the Spirit that dwelleth in us lust unto envy?" (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist. and Rev., p.211-212)

Λ Doth: It appears to me more natural to suppose that the Spirit of God is in question, not the spirit of man, which would of course modify the translation. Indeed, it would seem that our translators, assuming that the unregenerate will, or what is elsewhere called the flesh, was meant, adapted their version of πρὸς φθόνον ἐπιποθεῖ to that idea. For certain it is, that everywhere else ἐπιποθέω means "longing," or "earnestly desiring," and always in a good sense; which, if applicable here, would require us to take πρὸς φθόνον as "against envy," which beyond doubt is legitimate. This is to my mind confirmed by the description of the spirit, ὃ κατῴκησεν ἐν ἡμῖν, which could scarcely be predicated of what pertains to man necessarily in his present fallen state, but is very suitable to the Holy Ghost, who has taken up his abode in us who believe. (Christian Annotator 3:50) took: In 5 the Americans [correctors of the RV] rightly endorse the double query that divides the verse; but is it by any means sure that the Revisers are right in adopting the transitive form of the verb according to A B 101. 104. in the latter half? It is precisely a case where the most ancient MSS. are least reliable; for they often interchange η with ι, ο with ω, when the self-same thing is really meant. Of course the resulting difference of sense amounts to little; for according to the great mass of copies, versions, and early citations, it attributes to the Spirit Himself His dwelling in us; according to the favourites of the critics, it means God's causing Him so to dwell, which certainly agrees well with the words that follow. (Bible Treasury 15:48)

4:6 he: And why bring in "the scripture" into 6? (Bible Treasury 14:63)

4:7 [whole verse]: It is of interest to notice the aorists in 7-10, as compared with the presents in 2-6 (excepting of course God's gift of the Spirit), though difficult to express in English. (Bible Treasury 15:48)

4:8 [whole verse]: [See note to James 4:7]

4:9 [whole verse]: [See note to James 4:7]

Sorrow: Have the Revisers done well in adhering to "Be afflicted" in 9? Surely "Be miserable" would be more in keeping with their own version of Rom. 3:16, and our next chapter, 5:1, as well as with the deeper expression of wretchedness in the word. (Bible Treasury 14:63)

4:10 [whole verse]: [See note to James 4:7]

4:11 or: In 11 [of the RV] is the correction "or" judgeth his brother; for an evil feeling might work in this rather than in speaking against him: either was to judge the law. (Bible Treasury 14:63-64)

speaketh: in 11 we return to the present [tense], where continuance is meant to be laid down, rather than the urgency of having it done, duration being merged. (Bible Treasury 15:48)

4:12 but: the Revisers rightly say, One is the lawgiver, &c.; but why "only" or "even"? They rightly give "but" in the last clause on authority ample as well as ancient, and "thy neighbour" instead of "another," as in Text. Rec. (Bible Treasury 14:64)

4:13 this . . . traffic: it is not "such a" but "this" city, this city here, and "trade" or "traffic" is better than "buy and sell." (Bible Treasury 14:64)

4:14 Λ of . . . is Λ: Strange it seems that the Americans [correctors of the RV] had not a word of question on the omission of the first γάρ "for" in 14. Even Tregelles only brackets the word. On rather less evidence Lachmann omits the second, the presence of which I presume, led the copyists of ⁸ B &c. to omit the former. B omits the article before ζ. also, as well as (with P its companion) in the second clause. (Bible Treasury 15:48)

it is: "ye are" a vapour seems the best attested by far, if the copies be allowed to have misspelt; and, Bengel and Griesbach notwithstanding, ζσται seems simply intolerable. It was probably meant for εστε, a much more emphatic phrase than εστιν, as in L, some cursives, and the Latin copies. (Bible Treasury 14:64)

4:15 will: in spite of B P &c. θελήσῃ "shall have willed" is better than θελή or -ει (Bible Treasury 15:48)

shall both: if we are to read ο (not ω), the balance inclines to taking καὶ ζ. κ. π. together. (Bible Treasury 15:48)

[shall both]: Does not the text of 15 [in the RV] begin with obsolete English? The margin is not according to the Greek only, but intelligible according to our present speech. In this verse the reading strangely differs. The Revised Version bows to the general judgment of the critics, who follow A B P, &c. in adopting ζήσωμεν instead of ζήσωμεν with K L, the mass of cursives, the Latins, &c. There is no doubt among unbiassed minds that the interchange of the long and short vowels is very common in the oldest MSS., which are, therefore, to be trusted in such a question less than in any other. I, therefore, incline to "If the Lord will, and we live, we shall also do this or that." R. Stephens even read π. in the subjunctive, but this appears to yield no sense, though read by many authorities. (Bible Treasury 14:64)

4:16 all: "every" rather than "all." (Bible Treasury 15:48)

4:17 a sin: is there to be no difference caused by the anarthrous form? "To one therefore knowing how to do right, and doing [it] not, to him it is sin." (Bible Treasury 15:48)

5:1 [whole verse]: Have not the Revisers, by too close adherence to the Authorised Version, lost some of the graphic force of verse 1? "Weep, howling over your miseries that are coming on." (Bible Treasury 14:64)

weep howling: 5:1 gives the aorist with the present participle, so as to combine instant weeping with habitual howling, because of their sins and the Lord's speedy judgment. But nobody is blamed for what is so hard to express suitably. (Bible Treasury 15:48)

5:3 laid up: Why, however, is the last clause of 3 "have" laid up? "Ye laid up" &c. seems more concentrated and graphic. The Americans might have recalled the British Committee to their own rule; but it is hard to rid the mind of habit and prejudice; and the true form sounds somewhat harsh to an English ear. The perfects are used with such propriety in 2, 3, and 4, that it is idle to suppose the aorist is used in vain between them. (Bible Treasury 15:48)

5:5 [whole verse]: it should be "Luxuriously ye lived on the earth and indulged yourselves; ye nourished . . . condemned . . . killed," &c. All is summed up conclusively in the view of the writer; who nevertheless guards against possible misuse by his transition to the present in the closing words, "he doth not resist you." (Compare also ver. 7-10). (Bible Treasury 15:48) in: "as" of the Text. Rec. is rightly excluded, though not a few authorities favour its insertion. (Bible Treasury 14:64)

5:6 [whole verse]: [See note to James 5:5]

not: Bentley's conjecture (Phil. Lips I. 34) of ο κς, or ὁ Κύριος, for οὐκ was as unworthy as needless. (Bible Treasury 15:48)

5:9 Murmur [or, groan] . . . judged: [In the RV] it is rather "groan" or "complain" than "judge;" and certainly it is "judged," not "condemned." (Bible Treasury 14:64)

5:11 endured: [In the RV] it is "endured," not "endure." (Bible Treasury 14:64)

5:12 under judgment: [In the RV] it is not "into condemnation," but "under judgment." (Bible Treasury 14:64)

5:13 praise: is it not praise, not psalms, that the cheerful soul was to sing? (Bible Treasury 14:64)

5:15 save [heal]: "healing," which is, perhaps, in this case and the like the less equivocal word. (Bible Treasury 14:63)

5:16 therefore: "Confess," therefore (omitted in Text. Rec.), your sins one to another is the remarkable conclusion. (Bible Treasury 14:64)

A righteous [one's] supplication: "A righteous man's supplication" is sufficient and exact. (Bible Treasury 15:48) work: The question as to the last word is whether it means fervent or in its working. The Authorised Version seems to have conveyed both, the Revised Version the latter. (Bible Treasury 14:64)

5:19 My . . . truth: The omission of the pronoun, as in the Text. Rec. according to the more modern copies, against the ancient and best authorities, both MSS. and Vv., detracts from the tenderness of the appeal. "The way of" the truth seems an enfeebling addition, as in the Sinaitic and good cursives, besides venerable Versions. The weight of testimony is adverse. (Bible Treasury N2:373-4, Exp. of James, p.189)

My: the Revisers properly add "My," (Bible Treasury 14:64)

5:20 let him know: The Vatican Uncial &c., give the plural "Know ye." (Bible Treasury N2:374, Exp. of James, p.189)

a [or, his]: ⲁⲢ, some good cursives, and ancient Versions give "his." (Bible Treasury N2:374, Exp. of James, p.189)

a [or, his]: it seems arbitrary to omit in the margin a notice of "his" soul, supported as it is by ⲁⲢ more than half a dozen cursives, and all the ancient versions save Sah. Arm. of Zohrab, and adopted by, and two such editors as Lachmann, and Tischendorf in his last and eighth edition. Neither Erasmus nor Alford nor Compl., neither Stephens nor Beza nor the Elzevirs read the pronoun, but Colinaeus does. (Bible Treasury 15:48)

a [or, his]: [The RV properly] say[s] "a," not "the," sinner (Bible Treasury 14:64)

Notes for 1 Peter

1:1 [whole verse]: 1:1,2 in the Revised Version, may be given in a form that suits English readers; but the strict force is, "Peter, apostle of Jesus Christ, to pilgrims (or sojourners) of dispersion, of (or in) Pontus &c. elect according to foreknowledge of God [the] Father, by sanctification of [the] Spirit, unto obedience and blood-sprinkling of Jesus Christ." The absence of the article is intended, though no doubt our tongue does not admit of the omission so uniformly as the Greek. These are the Israel of God, not Gentiles (to correct a frequently perverted scripture), however truly the latter may partake in the same blessing; but Gentiles are not addressed in the greeting only the christian remnant of Jews in the designated quarter of Asia Minor. (Bible Treasury 15:62)

Λ apostle: Our language is not so lacking in power to characterise that it should be necessary to introduce "a" or "the" where Greek does not. Thus Peter, "apostle of Jesus Christ" is really more expressive and correct than "an" apostle. Of course a similar remark applies to 2 Cor. 1:1, Gal. 1:1, Eph. 1:1, Col. 1:1, 1 and 2 Tim. 1:1, Tit. 1:1, Phil. 1:1, Jas. 1:1, if not to Rom. 1:1, and 1 Cor. 1:1, where the context modifies. 2 Peter 1:1 and Jude 1 have nothing to render the indefinite article needful. (Bible Treasury 14:78)

Λ elect Λ: "to the elect who are sojourners" is surely to go beyond the text which speaks only of "elect sojourners" dispersed in Pontus, &c. (Bible Treasury 14:78)

1:2 [whole verse]: [See note to 1 Peter 1:1]

in [or, by] . . . unto: Now sanctification in the ordinary sense cannot be said to be for or "unto obedience," seeing that it very largely consists of obedience, and cannot exist without it; but sanctification of the Spirit as here spoken of is for (εἰς) obedience, and such as Christ's in contrast with a mere Israelite's. . . . The want of seeing this has greatly embarrassed the commentators, and has even led to positive falsification, as in Beza's Latin Version and the Geneva English Version, which render the clause unto (ἐν) sanctification of the Spirit through (εἰς) obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ! This is to sacrifice, not grammar merely, but God's word to a defective system of theology, which only acknowledges the sanctification that is consequent on justification, and ignores the primary setting of the person apart to God by the Spirit, which is true of every saint from his conversion, when he may not yet rest by faith in Christ's blood. Erasmus, though perplexed, is nearer the truth than the Vulgate, followed by the Rhemish, which yields no just sense whatever. Archbishop Leighton is one of the few who saw that sanctification here does not mean inherent, gradual or practical holiness, but that work of the Spirit which from first to last separates from nature and the world to God (compare 2 Thess. 2:13). (Epistles to the Thessalonians, p.24-6) in [or, by] . . . unto: . . . but the theological systems omit the very important bearing in scripture, and therefore to real faith, of sanctification before justification. . . . Hence the difficulty both for Roman Catholics and for Protestants. The Vulgate gives "in sanctificationem Spiritus, ad" &c., which the Rhemish version (1582) reproduces "into sanctification of the Spirit, unto the obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ," as the Geneva version (1557) had yet farther strayed in saying "vnto sanctification of the sprite, through obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ."

It was the influence of Theodore de Beze, which acted so banefully on the English exiles; for he in his just preceding version (1556) had ventured to translate "ad sanctificationem Spiritus, per obedientiam et aspersionem sanguinis I. C." and even to argue for this perversion in the notes of his subsequent editions. In his first Greek and Latin New Testament (Tiguri, 1559, as in all for later) he boldly says, "Ad sanctificationem Spiritus, ἐν ἀρχαίῳ πνεύματος. Id est εἰς ἀρχ Erasmus, Per sanctificationem Spiritus; non satis apposite. Per obedientiam, εἰς ὑπακοήν. Id est δι' ὑπακοῆς, &c." Now it was not ignorance of either Latin or Greek which led the French Reformer into these stupendous mis-renderings; it was a defective though presumptuous theological system which still exercises a similar tyranny over men's minds. For, learned or unlearned, they go to scripture, not to learn in simplicity what God has there revealed to His children, but to get proof if they can of tenets they have imbibed from the nursery and never think of bringing to the absolute test of the scriptural standard. Thus it is plain that the prevalent error as to sanctification led Beza, who assumed it to be the truth, to change the force of the inspired words doubly. Erasmus may not have hit the mark in "per sanctificationem Spiritus," but he is incomparably nearer than his critic. For ἐν must often be and is rightly rendered "by" or "with," not "through" like διὰ of agency or means, but expressing a characteristic cause or abiding state, where "in" would scarcely suffice or suit.

It is therefore a question here between "by" or "in," but "to" or "unto" is positively and inexcusably false, and can never be in such a context the meaning of ἐν . . . By the obedience and blood of Jesus may suit Protestant confessions of faith, but it is a painful inversion of the apostle's language; as to say εἰς ὑπ. = δι' ὑπ. is unworthy of a scholar far beneath the erudite and able successor of Calvin. (Epistles to the Thessalonians, p.183-186) in [or, by] . . . unto: And Mr. [Teulon] ought to have learnt, from one of the papers he cites, the hopeless difficulties into which the prevalent ignoring of sanctification in its primary New Testament sense brings even able and pious men. Take for instance Beza's version "ad sanctificationem spiritus, per obedientiam et aspersionem sanguinis I. C." To what was such a perversion due? Certainly not to lack of scholarship, for none of the early Protestants was a better Greek and Latin scholar than the successor to Calvin. It was owing solely to the same mischievous tradition which blots out the fundamental and primary New Testament sense of sanctification, seeing scarce anything more than the secondary progressive sense which nobody combats. It is worse even than the unmeaning Vulgate version, which makes ἐν and εἰς equivalent; for Beza renders ἐν ad and εἰς per! If he had known the truth to which Brethren have recalled attention, the difficulty would have vanished. (Bible Treasury 14:333) in [or, by] . . . unto: It may help souls if I give a few proofs, not from persons of extreme views, but from the most intelligent among the Reformers, of their looseness on this subject and their divergence from scriptural truth. It is needless to speak of Romanists; for they are too stupefied by tradition to afford the least hope of finding real and intelligent subjection to the teaching of the apostles.

The plainest conceivable instance of the way in which popular error works may be seen in the following extract from Beza's Version and Annotations. I quote from the latest edition (1598) during his life, where his thoughts are given most fully and correctly. "Electis ex præcognitione Dei Patris ad sanctificationem Spiritus, per obedientiam et aspersionem sanguinis Jesu Christi." Such is his version: of the note this will suffice. "Ita complexus fuerit Petrus omnes proprias salutis nostræ causas quæ a Deo manant, nempe efficientem summam causam, Dei Patris præscitiam, id est decretum æternum: Formalem, vocationem efficacem, quam electionis nomine intelligit: (nam ut alibi diximus, tum demum re ipsa eligimur quum Deus æternum suum decretum in nobis per vocationem exequitur) Finem, sanctificationem electorum: Materiam ipsam, Christi justitiam, cujus imputatione justi coronamur."

First his version is as unfaithful as one can imagine. He not only departs from the necessary force of the apostle's words in two most weighty particulars, but inverts the prepositions employed so as to alter completely the revealed mind of the Spirit. It is true that in one of these errors the Vulgate had led the way; for it is impossible fairly to render ἐν ἁγιασμῷ by "in sanctificationem." Beza should have been rather warned by such a flaw, especially as Erasmus from the first had correctly given "per sanctificationem," as none could justify the taking ἐν and εἰς as both = "in" with the accusative. But Beza allowed his system of doctrine so completely to warp his mind that he proceeded to the still greater error of representing εἰς by "per," a rendering which not only falsifies the meaning but has not the smallest shadow of justification from the Greek idiom in any work of any author from Homer down to the fall of Constantinople. And, secondly, this bold and excessive perversion is the foundation of his comment; which, being wholly unfounded, calls for no remark further than that it is just the common notion on the subject. For, spite of the English Bible, which is in the main right, people continue to fancy that the Lord means here that the Christian is elect according to God the Father's foreknowledge unto sanctification of the Spirit by the obedience of Christ and the sprinkling of His blood.

Much more right was his leader, J. Calvin, though he speaks hypothetically. "If there be parts or effects of sanctification, then sanctification is to be taken here somewhat differently from what it means when used by Paul; that is, more generally. God then sanctifies us by an effectual calling; and this is done when we are renewed to an obedience to his righteousness, and when we are sprinkled by the blood of Christ, and thus are cleansed from our sins." Even he is mistaken in thinking that Paul does not use sanctification in this more general way, as I have shewn on 1 Cor. 6:11. But plainly the Genevese chief owns a sense of sanctification different from that which is ordinarily seen and admitted. 2 Thess 2:13 appears to me another clear witness of Calvin's limiting this more general usage to Peter. For there the apostle speaks of God's having chosen the Thessalonian saints from the beginning unto salvation by sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth. It was in virtue of the Spirit's setting them apart and their faith in the truth of the gospel that God thus chose them to salvation: doctrine strikingly in analogy with the statement of Peter, if we allow for the difference in presenting the thought to Jewish and Gentile Christians.

Again, the excellent Archbishop Leighton, in his well-known Commentary upon the first epistle of Peter, is perplexed by this obedience. He rejects Beza's application to Christ's obedience actively (though he took it as His obedience unto the death of the cross); and he himself thinks that it is contained in (yea, chiefly understood to signify) that obedience which the Apostle in Romans 1 calls the obedience of faith, by which the doctrine of Christ is received, and so Christ Himself. When he adds that "by obedience sanctification is here intimated," it appears to me that he gets confused by not holding fast the more general sense of sanctification. The apostle certainly treats of obedience in this place as flowing from the setting apart to God or sanctification which precedes it. Besides, I think he mistakes the nature of the obedience by understanding it as the obedience of faith when a soul receives the gospel. In my judgment the phrase means that we are thus set apart to obey as Christ did, in the consciousness of our sonship, and with the assurance of being purged by blood. Much more correctly does he say later (Works, vol. i. pp. 15,16, Jerment's edition) that "sanctification in a narrow sense, as distinguished from justification, signifieth the inherent holiness of a Christian, or his being inclined and enabled to obedience mentioned in this verse; but it is here more large, and is co-extended with the whole work of renovation, and is the separating of men to God by His Holy Spirit, drawing them unto Him; and so it comprehends justification (as here) and the first working of faith, by which the soul is justified through its apprehending and applying the righteousness of Jesus Christ." (Pamphlets, p. 174-176) in [or, by] . . . unto: I regret to add that none has more impudently tampered with this scripture, to suit his ignorance of it and his desire to uphold mere dogmatic views, than the famous translator and commentator, Beza, or Théodore de Bèze. Dean Alford was bold enough sometimes in squeezing the text and its translation through too much confidence in German critics, and his own real desire to be candid, without sufficient knowledge of the truth or subjection to the divine authority of the written word. But even his occasional temerity shines in comparison with Calvin's successor in the college of Geneva. For I ask any competent scholar whether the ill-regulated wit of man could devise a worse or more shameless perversion of our text than his rendering, "ad sanctificationem Spiritus, per obedientiam," &c. ἐν = ad! εἰς = per! Were it in Homer or Herodotus, one might smile at lapses so absurd on the part of a learned, able, and zealous Christian. But such a dealing with God's word is atrocious. Yet this flagrant error stands uncorrected in all the five folio editions of his Greek and Latin N.T. from 1559 to 1598. (Epist. of Peter, p.13) in [or, by] . . . unto: What is the meaning of "in" sanctification of the Spirit? The Revisers have misrepresented the truth in several instances of dogmatic moment through a fancied accuracy, but mere literality, condemned by their own practice elsewhere. We have seen this in Col. 1:16 and Heb. 1:3, where "in" gives a false sense or nonsense, opening the door to grave error, which, where positive truth is lost, enters in often under cover of the vague or obscure. Now the Revised Version of Matt. 3:11, 5:13, 6:34,35,36, 6:7, 7:2,6, 9:34, suffices to show that the Revisers knew they were in no way limited to "in," for they admit freely "with," "by," &c. But they too often overlook this, where their rendering yields no just sense or opposes other Scriptures. It was the more desirable to be right here, because some early Protestant translators had grievously failed as to it. Take Beza, who, swayed evidently by his theological views, gives us "ad sanctificationem Sp. per obedientiam," &c. which is doubly a falsification of God's word. Him followed our Geneva Version of 1555, "unto sanctification of the Spirit through obedience," &c. The Rhemish says, "unto sanctification of the Spirit, unto the obedience," &c. This would be inexplicable, as being destitute of just meaning, if we did not know that the Vulgate has "in sanctificationem Sp. in obedientiam," &c. The Version of Rheims of course follows it dutifully. The late Dean Alford seems to have been the most influential offender in this assumption of accuracy, adhering to "in" for ἐν, when the Authorised Version had idiomatically and correctly "by" or "with." To talk of the conditional element as environing, or the like, is mere jargon to excuse a translation which conveys no sound meaning. It is cloud and not light. Here the apostle lets the dispersed believers of the circumcision know that, instead of being externally separated in the flesh by rites as the chosen people of Jehovah, they were elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, by sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ. The contrast is with Exod. 24:7,8, when Israel stood to obey the law under the blood which threatened death as the penalty, instead of cleansing from every sin those whose one desire was to obey as Christ obeyed. Compare 1 Cor. 6:11, where "sanctified" is before "justified," as here sanctification is before obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus. It is the absolute setting apart of the soul to God from the first. Practical holiness is relative, and is pressed lower down in this very chapter, ver. 15, 16. (Bible Treasury 14:79)

in [or, by] . . . unto: ἐν assuredly does not mean "through;" but "by" may sometimes represent it better than "in," which of course is the common equivalent in English. To assume that it should always be "in," is ignorance of or inattention to the usage: see 5 for the difference of "by" and "through." (Bible Treasury 15:62)

^ obedience: Some, again, would limit "of Jesus Christ" at the close to the blood-sprinkling; but this is unfounded and obscures the great truth that the christian is set apart to Christ's obedience as truly as to the application of His blood. The anarthrous form quite falls in with this: had the article been there, it would have pointed to Him personally; as it is, we have Him giving character to obedience and blood-sprinkling, in contrast with law-obedience and blood of victims which confirmed the old covenant as a penal sanction. The idea is neither obedience of faith (or believing with the heart the gospel), nor obeying what our Lord enjoined; but as He obeyed in the dependence and living confidence of sonship, so we now practically as under grace and possession of eternal life in Him. The strange mis-translation through misunderstanding of the latter words is even more striking among some of the Reformed than in older translations or comments (Bible Treasury 15:62-63)

1:3 living: "Lively," though due to Tyndale and followed by Cranmer, Geneva, and even the Rhemish, is inadequate and misleading. Wiclif alone was right. (Epist. of Peter, p.17) living: [In the RV] it is "living," not lively, hope (Bible Treasury 14:79)

1:4 heavens: [See note to Mat. 16:2]

you: There are but few cursives which read ἡμεῖς "us," as do Steph. edd. 3 and 4, and Beza edd. 1 and 2, and Elz. It is in none else even of the earlier editions, as Erasm. Complut. Ceph. Beb. Colin. Steph. 1 and 2. Beza is right in edd. 3, 4 and 5. No uncial is known to sanction "us," which seems due to assimilating ver. 4 to 3, in disregard of what follows. (Epist. of Peter, p.20)

1:6 in: "in" here also is very doubtful in the "manifold temptations" or "trials," though quite right at the beginning of the verse. ἐν in such cases expresses way and character, which "by" suits English; not the instrument identified with the agent like the simple dative, still less the means distinct from the agent like διὰ. I do not see how talking about "the element and material" helps intelligence. (Bible Treasury 15:63)

1:7 ἄ gold: "of" gold is rightly dropt [in the RV] (Bible Treasury 14:79)

at: In 7, as in 13, the Revisers rightly translate, like the Authorised Version, ἐν "at" the revelation. What is the use of following the foreign fashion, and saying "in" the element, in time, in which it shall be manifested? It is to lose English in a childish literality of Greek. (Bible Treasury 15:63)

1:8 having not seen: is 8 in the Revised Version as accurate as in the Authorised Version? The Americans [correctors of the RV] have not observed, more than the British Revisers, that theirs would answer to μὴ, not to οὐκ. It should be "having not seen." (Bible Treasury 15:63)

in: the Revisers [of 1881] rightly correct "in" to "on," for the connexion of εἰς ὅν is not with ἄγ. but with one or both participles; but, if with both, the Revised Version fails by supplying an object to the first and so connecting the words with π. only. Translate therefore, "on whom though now not looking but believing ye exult" &c. Were the connexion with the verb as in the Authorised Version, ἐν ᾧ would be the construction required. The ancient versions appear to be for the most part singularly loose and unsatisfactory, as the Pesh. Syriac and Vulgate, which omit and add wildly. The Philoxenian Syriac is correct. The older English are inexact, Wiclif and Rhemish being the worst. (Bible Treasury 15:63)

1:9 salvation of souls: Mr. T. S. Green rightly adheres to "salvation of souls," or in a general form soul-salvation. (Bible Treasury 15:63)

1:10 ἄ prophets: It is not "the" prophets as a body, but persons so characterized. Hence the article follows, "that" prophesied concerning the grace that was destined for those that now believe. Prophetic character is all the more brought into prominence by omitting the article before προφηταί. Class is in view rather than the persons as an entire and definite object before us. (Epist. of Peter, p.43)

ἄ prophets: it should be "prophets," not "the" prophets, as in the Authorised and Revised Versions, not the class viewed in their totality, but persons coming under that category. (Bible Treasury 14:79)

1:11 for: it is hard to convey some little intimation of the phrase, which marginal³ (Gr. unto) [of the RV] scarcely meets, "the sufferings [that came] unto Christ," or "of Christ" as in the Authorised and Revised Versions. (Bible Treasury 15:63) glories: [The RV] rightly say[s] "glories" (Bible Treasury 14:79)

1:12 you: "To us" (ἡμῖν) seems so natural that one need not be surprised that this reading should appear in K, many cursives, and some ancient versions, more than even in ver. 10. but there is no sufficient ground to doubt that ὑμῖν ("to you") is the true text, as attested by the best and oldest copies, with the bulk of juniors and with good and ancient versions. Text. Rec. presents the record rather unnaturally in giving ἡμῖν and ὑμᾶς in ver. 12. (Epist. of Peter, p.57)

you: "you" displaces "us" [in the RV] with reason as being more homogeneous: one way or another a common confusion in the MSS. (Bible Treasury 14:79)

by: The preposition is not read by A B, some cursives, and Greek and Latin fathers. Ancient versions are in such a case uncertain. The great mass favor ἐν which would mean "in the power or virtue of," or "by" as we say briefly. (Epist. of Peter, p.57)

by: Whether ἐν be or be not read in 12, the right version is "by" (hardly "with" as in the Authorised Version alone of English versions), the Rhemish treating the dative as a genitive absolute! in collision with all grammar, doubtless in subserviency to the Vulgate. I am disposed to take ἐν on full external evidence backed up by the usus loquendi already explained, notwithstanding A B and three cursives, meaning "in virtue of [the] Holy Spirit," who is looked at, not as a distinct personal object as in 11, but as a characteristic power for preaching the gospel. Only ignorance of the truth would therefore deny His presence personally in those who thus preached. The anarthrous form is the only correct one for expressing character, as here intended. (Bible Treasury 15:63)

1:13 perfectly: "To the end," as in the A.V. and so understood by many, seems short of what is intended by the adverb; nor does any sufficient reason appear to make us swerve from the simple meaning. It is likely that translators shrank from connecting perfection with a hope which too often fluctuates, if it be not also rather indefinite and feeble. They preferred "to the end." (Epist. of Peter, p.68)

1:15 according to: why pass over the mistaken text of the Revisers, following the Authorised Version in 15? The marginal⁴ is more right, Ἄγ. being not a predicate but the virtual substantive of the phrase, "after the pattern of," or according to, "the Holy one that called you." (Bible Treasury 15:63) conduct: "Conduct" answers to the early meaning of "conversation," which is antiquated and nearly obsolete, being now confined to free interchange of speech. It is strange that Johnson, Richardson, &c., ignore this, the uniform sense in the A.V. of O. and N.T., i.e. "behavior," "conduct," "course," or "practical life." Webster edited by Goodrich and the Century Dict. give it as the first sense of the word. (Epist. of Peter, p.73)

1:17 as Father . . . each . . . sojourning ἄ: [The RV corrects] the Authorised Version, [which has] "the" Father for "him as Father," and "every," for "each," man's work, "here" being quite an expletive. (Bible Treasury 14:79)

1:19 of Christ; as of a lamb: The order of the Greek, which some prefer in English also, is "by precious blood as of a Lamb . . . Christ," followed closely by "fore-known" &c. in ver. 22. The truth in substance remains the same. (Epist. of Peter, p.90-91)

1:20 ^Λ foreknown: Tyndale and others since say “foreordained,” but this goes beyond the word which ought to be rendered faithfully. A commentator cites Rom. 8:29 to justify the change; but the text is adverse, because it distinguishes the two. . . . All the older English versions, save that of Rheims, add “who was” foreknown. But the absence of the article forbids. It is assumed rather than asserted. (Epist. of Peter, p.92)

^Λ foreknown: It seems peculiar that 20 [in the RV] should have passed muster with its uncalled for, not to say incorrect, “who was,” as if the article were there. The force is rather, if we must supply anything for English ears, “foreknown as He was,” and omitting “was” before “manifested.” (Bible Treasury 15:63)

last of the times: The most ancient and best MSS. (A B C), many good cursives, and old versions give this sense; not “at the last time” according to earlier editors. (Epist. of Peter, p.94)

1:21 believe: There is a difference in the reading but not in the truth. Three MSS. (A B 9), supported by the Latin Vulgate, say “that are through him ‘faithful’.” The great weight of copies, uncial and cursive, with the ancient versions generally, support the usual text “that through him believe.” Faithful often says more than believing, in no case less. The substance remains the same. (Epist. of Peter, p.97)

1:22 the truth ^Λ . . . pure: The most ancient and best MSS. do not read διὰ πνεύματος “through the Spirit,” the Latins strangely giving charitatis “of love,” instead of veritatis “the truth” which is certainly right. A few omit καθαρῶς “pure.” (Epist. of Peter, p.100) pure: the omission of “pure” rests on A B and the Vulgate, a feeble basis as against ⁸ C K L P, all the cursives, and the mass of ancient versions and ecclesiastical writers, one perhaps excepted. (Bible Treasury 14:79)

truth ^Λ : “by the Spirit” is an addition without due warrant (Bible Treasury 14:79)

1:23 word ^Λ : an addition without due warrant . . . is “for ever” (Bible Treasury 14:79)

1:24 its: an addition without due warrant . . . is . . . “of man” for “its” (Bible Treasury 14:79)

2:1 malice: is not “malice” (marg.⁸ [of the RV]) better than the Revised text “wickedness”? It is allowed that the latter more general term may be well in such texts as Acts 8:22. (Bible Treasury 15:63)

2:2 intelligent: The general sense is quite plain. The only question is how to represent best the language of the apostle. That which in the A.V. is translated “of the word” occurs only in one other passage of the N.T., Rom. 12:1; and there it is rendered “reasonable,” as it is frequently employed by ordinary writers of the Greek tongue. “Intelligent” seems well to express its force in both texts, a better word than “rational.” Why Beza who held this as to the text in the Epistle to the Romans changed it to “sermonis” (of the word) here does not appear, as he regarded them both as alike in sense. The Peschito Syriac has here “of the word”; the Harclean Syr. “rational,” as both give “rational” in Rom. 12:1. But it is hard to understand on what principle it can bear both meanings together. (It is very conceivable that the Spirit of God may have warranted the sense “of the word” among the Christians; for in the nature of things this meaning could not have existed among heathen Greeks; yet if required, it is formed quite legitimately. In this way it would well apply to both passages; and I am disposed to believe it.)

This we may leave, as it is merely the delicate point of a rendering, where the substantial truth remains untouched. (Epist. of Peter, p.118-9) intelligent: 2:2 affords some difficulty for translation in the word λογικόν, unless we take it with the Authorised Version as “of the word.”

“Reasonable” as in the Authorised Version of Rom. 12:1 falls too low, but is not the Revisers’ “spiritual” too high? At least, it is not inherent in the word nor necessitated by its usage. (Bible Treasury 14:79) intelligent: it seems to me that λογ. is one of those words which the christian revelation wanted and modified for its own purpose, elevating it from “reasonable” as in margin⁹ [of the RV] or “belonging to the reason,” as the Americans [correctors of the RV] suggest, to “of the word.” (Bible Treasury 15:63) unto salvation: “To salvation” you will not find in your common Bibles, but it is none the less true for all that. . . . It is not often that words are thus left out. The more usual fault of those who copied the scriptures was that they added words. They assimilated passages one to another; they thought that what was right in one case must be right in another; and thus the tendency was to blunt the fine edge of the sword of the Spirit which is the word of God. But in this case they omitted. At first sight, perhaps, these words may be startling to some, that is, to such as think that the sense of “salvation” is weakened thereby. But you need never be afraid of trusting God or His word. Never fear for the honor of the scripture, never shrink from committing yourself to what God says. I have no hesitation in saying that this is in my judgment what God said, if we are to be guided by the most ancient and best authorities. (In fact but one uncial (Cod. Angelicus Romanus) of the ninth century with many cursives warrants the omission; but ⁸ A, B, C, K, more than fifty cursives, and all the versions but the Arabic of the Parisian Polyglot support the words. The early quotations, Greek and Latin, save of Oecumenius, point to the same reading.) (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist. and Rev., p.252-253) unto salvation: But a strange omission has prevailed since the Complutensian Edition and that of Erasmus, followed by Beza, Stephens, the Elzevirs, and Mill, to say nothing of others. Colinaeus (1534) is the only one of the early editors who adheres to the great body of the oldest and best MSS., versions, and Patristic quotations, and reads (εἰς σωτηρίαν). It may have been dropped either as a supposed scholastic addition or by those jealous of trenching on sovereign grace toward sinners. But here it is a question of saints growing in grace and in knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ according to the terms of the Second Epistle (3:18). Certain it is that any difficulty, in receiving the words so fully attested, is solely due to ignorance of our apostle’s doctrine. (Epist. of Peter, p.121) unto salvation: “Unto salvation” at the end is sure on ample authority; for salvation, in Peter’s writings — save in one exception that proves the rule, by the modification of the phrase to ensure a difference of meaning — looks onward to the final victory at Christ’s revelation. (Bible Treasury 14:79)

2:4 precious: One might have rendered ἐντιμον prized, or held in honor, to distinguish it from τίμιον, but for τιμῇ in ver. 7 which inclines me to “precious.” (Epist. of Peter, p.123)

2:5 yourselves also . . . are being builded up: is it not loose to render the text, “ye also . . . are built,” as in the Authorised and Revised Versions? Read “yourselves also . . . are being built” &c. (Bible Treasury 15:63)

^Λ a: εἰς, “for,” is read by high and ample authority, and adopted by the Revisers in their phrase “to be.” (Bible Treasury 14:79)

2:6 Because: Verse 6 begins with “Because” on almost universal suffrage, “wherefore also” as in Text. Rec. has scarce a shadow of authority. (Bible Treasury 14:79)

2:7 [is]: what is more important, the beautiful force of the first clause of 7 was lost in the Authorised Version, and even the marginal alteration was a mistranslation. Tyndale unhappily misled, and all the public English versions followed. Faith sees according to God. Christ is in

1 Peter Notes

God's eyes a chief corner stone, elect, precious. "To you therefore that believe [is] the preciousness." (Bible Treasury 14:79)

[last half of verse]: why not say, "A stone which the builders rejected, this was made head corner-stone"? (Bible Treasury 15:63)

2:9 Λ possession . . . excellencies: Was it needful to define the general phrase εἰς π. in 9 by interpolating God's own? In the same verse "excellencies" is right. (Bible Treasury 14:79)

Λ possession: it ought to be more general, "a people for a possession," though doubtless God's possession is meant. (Bible Treasury 15:63)

2:10 God's people: "God's people" suffices: and at the end "obtained" without "have," the fact now simply, in contrast with the previous state of Lo-ruhamah. (Bible Treasury 15:63)

2:11 [you]: It is not that "you" (ὁμοῦς) is expressed, as Lachmann ventured to do on the erroneous impression that the Rescript of Paris so reads. It is implied at most. But that MS. and many more, uncial and cursive, do read the verb in the imperative. (Epist. of Peter, p.144)

as: Here it is not αὶ but αὐτινες as I attempt to express. (Epist. of Peter, p.145)

2:12 observing: Not the aor. part. as in many good MSS., but the present. (Epist. of Peter, p.145)

observing: "which they behold" [in the RV] is not much advance of the lax Authorised Version, "which they shall behold," as a reflexion of ἐποπτευοντες. "Being spectators" would seem more correct. (Bible Treasury 14:79)

2:13 subject Λ : The great uncials, with some cursives and ancient versions, do not read οὖν "therefore." The connection with the foregoing is quite indirect. The verb is not only reflexive, but aorist; and so the meaning is, Be ye those who once for all submitted yourselves. (Epist. of Peter, p.151)

a king: "to king" is best. (Bible Treasury 15:63)

2:15 senseless: here it may not be un instructive to note the weak and unsound attempt of the same dignitary [Dean Alford] to account for τῶν ἁφρ. ἀνθρ. in 15, as limited to such as reviled Christ as evil doers. For the apostle really speaks of men as a whole, and declares the race as such senseless. The phrase imports nothing less. (Bible Treasury 14:79)

2:16 having liberty: "having freedom," — the thing freedom as a cover of the thing malice. Even the Revisers do not say "your" wickedness; nor should they with freedom. The article is with both in Greek, not as a possessive, but because contrast makes the two objects, or in a measure personifies them. (Bible Treasury 15:63)

Λ malice: If "your freedom" be the necessary force of τῇν ἐλ., why not "your" wickedness, or malice, of τῆς κ. in 16? They are really common cases of abstracted usage. Dean Alford is more consistent in claiming the same passive or quasi-passive force for the articles with both words. (Bible Treasury 14:79)

2:17 [whole verse]: The difference of aor. and pres. in 17 it is difficult to convey tersely in English. (Bible Treasury 15:63)

2:19 grace: The A. V. renders it "acceptable," and this is a fair sense in this place, and capable of defence. But it appears to me simpler and more forcible to adhere to the ordinary meaning, bearing in mind of course that it is not grace as in God which is in question, but the answer to it in those who believe. They were in this and in their measure imitators of God as beloved children, and walking in love as Christ loved them.

An effort has been made to translate the word "thankworthy" here as in Luke 6:32-34. but this seems short-sighted, because there is no ὑμῖν (to you) here as there, which makes a sensible difference. We can readily perceive the propriety of "thanks to you," where "grace to you" could not stand. (Epist. of Peter, p.161)

2:21 suffered . . . you . . . you: There is the too usual discrepancy of copies and critics. Carelessness may have misled some of the scribes, or perhaps the assumption of mistakes which they claim to correct. Erasmus erred in giving "us" twice in ver. 21, the Complutensian ed. also in "us" and "you", Colinaeus following the former, Stephens the latter. Beza and Elzevirs were right and chose the text as translated above; so did Bengel, Griesbach, Lachmann, Alford, Tregelles, Westcott and Hort, but not Matthaei or Scholz nor even Tischendorf till his eight or last edition. Indeed the great MSS. (⌘ A B C), not a few cursives, the ancient versions though not the Peschito, the Memph., or the edited Vulg. against the best copies, give here the true text. Even the unlearned Christian may be assured that this best agrees with the clauses succeeding, and that "us" would clash. Yet scholars who trust overmuch their zeal tempered by the fact that the false reading ἀπέθανεν, "died," is read instead of ἐπαθεν "suffered," by the Sinaitic (⌘), as well as by many cursives in the same verse; and the same false reading recurs in 3:18 supported by ⌘ A C., at least a dozen cursives, and almost all the old versions, though the context requires the ordinary reading supported by B K L P, and the mass of cursives. Here Tischendorf right at first, got wrong at last. (Epist. of Peter, p.162)

you . . . you: [In the RV] it is "you" twice, not "us" as in Authorised Version following Steph. (not Elz.). The last clause supports the reading of the ancient MSS. (Bible Treasury 14:79)

2:23 gave over: It has not been shown as far as I am aware that the word παρεδ. admits of the reflexive sense, good as it would seem in itself, that is, of meaning "gave himself over." Hence various modes of supplying the ellipse have been proposed. But why should it not be rendered, though a little rugged, as it seems used, absolutely? So we find in Mark 4:29, where there seems no need of rendering, "is brought forth" or "provided." Why not "should permit"? See Pind. P. v.4; and Demosth. 1394.23 even for the aorist; which A. Buttmann oddly denies. The present, &c. are common as in Herod. vii.15; Xen. Anab. vi. 4,34; Isocr. 106C.; Polyb. xxii.24,9, as given by Liddell and Scott. (Epist. of Peter, p.165) gave over Λ : The Americans [correctors of the RV] rightly reject the supply "of them" (with Alford) or "things" (with Huther, &c.), and adhere with the Revisers to the Authorised Version with Wiclif and Rhemish. Tyndale gave here "the cause" (Pesh. Syr.), Cranmer "the vengeance," Geneva "the punishment." (Bible Treasury 15:63)

2:24 bore . . . on: Both our text and the Epistle to the Hebrews (9:28) make certain the strict sacrificial sense of ἀνήνεγκεν ("bore") when connected with the object, "our sins." (Thus with "spiritual sacrifices" "offer" is right, as in ver. 5 of this chapter and in Heb. 13:15. So it is with "Himself" in Heb. 7. as well as with "sacrifices" in the same ver. 27. With other objects, it is rendered "carry, bring, or lead up;" and it may elsewhere mean to bear or undergo.) So joined, this is the simple and sole sense of the word. Such too is the regular, if not invariable, employment by the LXX, as any scholar may satisfy himself. The notion of a pregnant sense "bringing up to," and "bearing on" the tree, equivalent to the altar, is as certainly a mistake as any thing can be. For to express the former, the usage is προσφέρειν or προσάγειν, as opposed to ἀναφέρειν. Thus we read in Lev. 1:2,3,5 (as in the corresponding cases), with the distinct term ἐπιτιθεῖν which answers to the latter in 9. The same fact occurs in Lev. 2:1 compared with 2, as in 16 ἀνοίσει is given, the exact term instead of its substitute. Compare also Lev. 3:1 with 5; 6,7,9 with 11, and 12 with 16. The Hebrew is always exact, and does not warrant the weak confusion of the LXX. in 14. The due distinction reappears in Lev. 4:1 contrasted with 10, though the high priest himself was in question; and so for the whole congregation, 14 with 19; again the ruler, 23 with 26; and one of the people, the simple οἷσαι being used in this case, and the proper ἀνοίσαι in the other. In the intermediate mixture of sin and guilt, as well as the full guilt-offering, there is at least no violation of the usage, though other terms displace the latter; and so it might be shown from Genesis to Ezekiel that ἀνέγκειν ("bore") expresses the final sacrificial act, and not the preparatory "bringing up" which also some have sought to attach to it. This, as we have seen, has its own distinct and appropriate expression.

Our apostle and the still greater one to the Gentiles cite Isa. 53:12; which stamps these words of the Septuagint with divine authority. Heb. 9:28 has the deeper use of exhibiting in the same verse the exact distinctiveness of the two words (προσφέρειν and ἀναφέρειν), which many scholars have confounded, and incomparably more who were far from being scholars. In the Epistle to the Hebrews is no wavering, as in the Septuagint though generally correct. Both terms are used with strict accuracy, as for instance Heb. 7:27 for the closing act, and 9:14 for what preceded it. Heb. 11:17 beautifully shows the proper word in the great trial of Abraham's faith, and with the added exactitude of the perfect and imperfect tenses, of which none perhaps but the inspiring Spirit would have thought, but which when revealed is appreciated by every Christian who understands it. (It may interest the Hebraist to note that it is not the technical term referred to which God used in addressing Abraham in Gen. 22:2. The LXX. therefore may have gone here beyond the word. Yet James (2:21) when he uses the figure "on the altar" says ἀνέγκας. But fine as much is in their rendering of Isa. 53 (especially so long before the Advent, and revealing a portion so foreign to Jewish expectation), there are evident flaws. For who can defend μεμάλαισται in ver. 5? Even if it could express adequately the Hebrew for "bruised," the perf. is quite out of place. It ordinarily would mean "is" or "has been reduced to effeminacy." Even "the chastisement of our peace was upon him" is not cited here, but the last clause only. But the 9th verse is not well rendered, still less the 10th and 11th save the last clause. It is the 12th however which the N.T. cites for the atonement; and there the Hebrew verb is nasa, not yisbol. These verbs for "bore" occur in reverse order in ver. 4, where we have the invaluable light of the Spirit through Matthew (8:17), who applies the quotation, not to His expiatory sufferings as in ver. 5, 6, 8, 10, 11 and 12, but to the depth of the sympathy which characterized His spirit whilst acting in divine power toward the sick and suffering in Israel. With this does not agree the rendering of the Septuagint. Hence the Evangelist was led to a more correct rendering; for it is about griefs or sicknesses, not "sins" directly nor "selves" vaguely as the object. And this is the more important, because of the tendency to distract the attention of the faithful from apprehending the immense theme of Christ's moral glory, through fixing it only on what immediately ministers to peace for souls not well grounded in it. Another evil consequence is that making all the entrance of Christ's spirit to be only into what atones for the sinner not only detracts from Him much else to His praise, but it causes the testimony to the work of redemption virtually to lose its distinctiveness, and the word of God its definiteness. Thus the unwise effort to concentrate all on atonement cannot but enfeeble its own proper character and defeat itself.)

Does it surprise any reader that so plain a point should be proved so elaborately? Look at the margin of the A.V. and especially of the Revisers. And who does not know the bitter zeal of too many in our own day to found, on the gross ignorance of that mistranslation, the dangerous misconception of Christ's work involved in Christ's bearing "our sins in His body to the tree?" To translate competently one must know a great deal more than a grammar and dictionary; one needs to consider the varied usages of the language as modified by its application, and especially the scope and requirement of the context. Who but a tyro could write, "It is the same word that in the verse before us is rendered on, that in the following verse is rendered to, 'Ye are returned to the Shepherd and Bishop of souls?' this, then, we apprehend, is the apostle's statement, 'He himself bare our sins in his own body to the tree.'" (John Brown, D. D., on 1 Peter (i. 453, Sec. Ed. 1849).) The blunder led him and many another to the utterly false doctrine, that Christ "as really, though not so obviously, bare our sins when he lay a helpless infant, in the manger in Bethlehem, as when he hung, an agonized man, on the accursed tree."

O foolish theologians, who bewitched you? One may not expect all to read the Greek Testament with intelligent and reverent care, especially if persons doubt that "every scripture is inspired of God." A single word of the text before us upsets bushels of essays, sermons, and expositions. The dark and perilous hypothesis would require the imperfect tense to give continuity of bearing our sins, which men have imagined and reasoned on. It is the aorist, on the contrary, which above all shuts out relative duration, continuity, repetition, or action commenced and not accomplished. Here it is a simple fact of the deepest moment for God and man, for time and eternity.

The hypothesis is incompatible, not merely with the word used by the Holy Spirit here and everywhere else, but with the broadest and most solemn facts which the most unlettered of believers, taught of God, receive with awe and adoring gratitude. What meant that supernatural darkness which in the hours of broad daylight wrapt up the cross from a certain point? What the cry of Him who had ever, in the fullest enjoyment of love, said "Father," but now "My God, my God, why didst thou forsake me?" Had He not, when His baptism might have raised a question, received the testimony of the Father's absolute complacency in Christ as His beloved Son? How strange bearing up our sins in His body to the tree! Undoubtedly Christ did never so profoundly glorify God; but His bruising, His stripes, His being made sin and curse, were they all while He was enjoying His Father's love? His suffering for our guilt, and God's face shining at the same time! If He had been all His life bearing our sins, He must all His life have been abandoned by God who cannot look on sin with the least allowance. But no: Isa. 53:6 attests that Jehovah laid our iniquity on His Anointed when He hung on the tree: nothing more characteristic of the atonement, or more opposed to the perfectly enjoyed communion of His life.

Christ's work on the cross, then, is here before us, the answer of divine grace to man's need and danger, and the base of divine righteousness; but this last was left for another, Paul, to treat formally and fully. The practical aim was that which fell to the fervor of Peter, "that, being dead to sins, we should live to righteousness." Both apostles delighted in these wondrous antitheses which gave glory to God and to the Lord Jesus, His Son. (Epist. of Peter, p. 166-170) bore . . . on: It is not "up to" the tree. The margin, after many others, so gave it; but this was an ignorant and total oversight of the sacrificial language in the Old Testament. There are two forms employed in the LXX., and always distinctly. When it is a question of "up to," or "to," another different preposition is compounded. Where the one found here is expressed, it invariably means "upon," and not "to." It is allowed that in other connections this may not always hold; but in sacrificial language the distinction is certain and constant. Now it is plain that here the apostle Peter is referring to the sacrificial language of the Old Testament. All his Epistle indeed abounds in allusions of a similar kind. . . . It is sadly plain that there is, at the bottom of all these efforts to mystify, a want of faith in the true inspiration of God's word as well as in the perfect efficacy of Christ's work. But let me refer to another point showing how unfounded is the idea that our Lord was bearing sins all His life. The word "bare" excludes the desired notion. "Bare" (ἀνέγκειν) does not convey continuity but a transient act. The aorist is the definite expression of such a fact. It expresses therefore what took place on the cross, certainly not what was in process before, any more than after. . . . The form of speech excludes anything begun before that solemn epoch, and it implies a completeness on the cross, where it began. Therefore the notion "up to" is false, not perhaps in the form of the word itself, but in its contextual and sacrificial usage. (Bible Treasury N4:4-5) [See also Bible Treasury 14:79, 16:50, N7:235-6] died: The word ἀπογενόμενοι, "being dead," is so uncommon in the N.T. that this is its only occurrence. It occurs in the best classic authors, and answers to our "deceased," rather than the ordinary word for "dead." This the apostle Paul used for the privilege into which the Christian is let in order to know his deliverance from sin, as distinguished from the remission of his sins. The further privilege he treats from chap. 5:12 of his Epistle to the Romans to the end of chap. 8. It is too often confounded with what goes before, though it is clearly a grave question of the Christian's state which arises generally for the soul when he knows his sins forgiven. But our apostle speaks of "having died to sins," which is quite another thing from Paul's doctrine. It is simple and practical (having done with sins), as was his province generally. It is true that the word sometimes means "having taken no part in," and "being absent or aloof from"; but the context even of a correct writer always suffices to fix what is intended. Here it proves that death spiritually is meant, because it is that we may live to righteousness. No other sense would apply here. It never implies "being freed from," as some have said. (Epist. of Peter, p.171)

2:25 ye were: The famous Vatican MS. (1209) omits strangely the opening words, but is joined by א A, 5, 40, and some good Latin copies in reading πλανώμενοι as represented here; not "as sheep going astray" as in most, and the Text. Rec. In the LXX. of Ps. 119:176, and of Isa. 53:6, it is the aorist expressive of the fact. Here the present participle looks at the habit rather than the fact. (Epist. of Peter, p.172)

3:1 [whole verse]: [In the RV] 3:1 shews a rendering similar to 2:18, and slightly different from 2:13, where it is the aorist, expressive of once-for-all action, as the need presented itself; here it is the present as expressing continuance or habit. (Bible Treasury 15:63)

without: [See note to Mat. 10:29]

behaviour: In 1 and 2 "behaviour" is no doubt more intelligible English for our day than the obsolete "conversation" for manner of life in the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:79)

3:2 having beheld: is it correct to soften the force of the past participle in 2 in this case? (Bible Treasury 14:79) behaviour: [See note to 1 Peter 3:1] in: [In the RV] it is remarkable that those who contend for "in" almost to nausea abandon it here, where it might be, for the freer version of "coupled with fear," which has descended and prevailed since Tyndale. (Bible Treasury 15:63)

3:3 [whole verse]: complication might be avoided by "On whose part let there be, not the outward ornament of" &c. . . "of the meek" &c. (Bible Treasury 15:63)

gold: [The RV has] "jewels of gold," not gold merely (Bible Treasury 14:79)

3:4 of the meek: [See note to 1 Peter 3:3]

3:8 humble-minded: The last word of 8 should be not "courteous," but "humbleminded," on ample authority, an evident link of connection with the gracious endurance which knows how to bless in presence of injury. (Bible Treasury 14:79-80)

3:12 [the] Lord's . . . [the] Lord's: it is "Jehovah's eyes," and "Jehovah's face." (Bible Treasury 15:64)

3:13 zealous: ζ. is more than "followers" or "imitators" (as in the Text. Rec. μ.) meaning neither, but zealous or emulous of good. (Bible Treasury 14:80)

3:15 the: it is "the Christ," not God as such, who is to be sanctified as Lord in their hearts. (Bible Treasury 14:80)

as Lord: It is not in 15 "Lord Christ," but Christ as Lord as in the Revised Version. (Bible Treasury 15:64)

3:17 [for] well-doing than [for] evil-doing: "to suffer doing well than doing ill," i.e. for the one rather than the other. (Bible Treasury 15:63)

3:18 suffered: [See note to 1 Peter 2:21] suffered: ἀπέθανεν ("died") is the reading of א A C, more than a dozen cursives, Vulg., Syrr., Memph., Arm., Aeth., with several Greek and Latin fathers; while the common text is supported by B K L P, the mass of cursives, and some of the same fathers. (Preaching to the Spirits in Prison, p.4) in flesh . . . in [the] Spirit: τῷ before πν. is the received reading on the strength of a few cursives, contrary to all the uncials, the great majority of the cursives, and all the Greek fathers, not even excepting Epiphanius who elsewhere does give the article. There need be no hesitation in accepting the anarthrous form, which cannot mean His Spirit. (Preaching to the Spirits in Prison, p. 4) in flesh . . . in [the] Spirit: The article is certainly to be eliminated: what is the bearing of its absence on the meaning? If the articles were inserted, τῇ σαρκὶ and τῷ πν., these would be the contrast of the two parts of our Lord's being as a man, the outer and the inner; were it τῇ σ. and τὸ πν., it would be the utterly false thought that His Spirit as man was the object of quickening. The anarthrous form points to the character of the acts specified; but so far is it from denying the agency of the Holy Ghost in the quickening spoken of, that the presence of the article would be more consistent with Christ's Spirit as a man. No doubt, when it is intended to present the Holy Spirit objectively or extrinsically, the article is required and, as far as I can mark the usage, the prep. ἐν or ὑπό; it is excluded where the manner of His action is meant. On the other hand, wherever the spirit either of Christ as man or of any other is to be expressed, the article is indispensable, as may be seen in Matt. 5:3; 26:41; 27:50; Mark 14:38; Luke 10:21; John 11:33; 13:21; 19:30; Acts 19:21; 20:22; 1 Cor. 5:3,5.

Again, the following cases without the article clearly mean the Holy Spirit, but characterising the action rather than specifying the person, though He must ever be a person: Matt. 22:43; John 3:5; 4:23,24; Rom. 8:1,4,9,13; 1 Cor. 12:13; Gal. 3:2,15,16,18,25; Eph. 2:22; 3:5; 5:18; Col. 1:8; 1 Tim. 3:16; 1 Peter 4:6; Rev. 1:10; 4:2; 17:3; 21:10. The attentive reader of these instances will see that the turning-point is not the presence or absence of a preposition, as some scholars have thought. Words after a preposition follow the ordinary rules. Only, after prepositions capable of usage with a statement of manner (as κατὰ, ἐκ, ἐν, κ.τ.λ.), the anarthrous form is of course more common. Thus ἐν πνεύματι would mean in the power of the Spirit, the manner of being, or of being carried, built, justified, or of blessing, preaching, or whatever else may be in question. (Preaching to the Spirits in Prison, p. 9-10) in flesh . . . in [the] Spirit: It may be doubted then whether quickened "by the Spirit" best gives the meaning of the apostolic statement: for that would most naturally suppose the Spirit as an exterior agent. Still the anarthrous construction, as is certain from the numerous places cited, does not at all exclude the Holy Spirit: only it expresses the manner of the quickening, not the personal agent. But the thought of His power is conveyed by the phrase that follows, ἐν ᾧ, wherein Christ is said to have gone and preached, etc. Thereby it is pointedly contradistinguished from πορευθεὶς in verse 22, which is not qualified by ἐν ᾧ or ἐν πνεύματι, but left in its strict sense of a personal change of locality to heaven. Thus it is excessively rash to say that the rendering of the English version here is wrong either grammatically or theologically, though it is more correct to cleave as closely as our language permits to the Greek style of expressing "Spirit" as the character rather than agent of the quickening of Christ, though agent too He was beyond doubt.

Bishop Middleton wrote with great force on the insertion of the article, but he was not equally successful in accounting for its omission. Prepositions he treated as exceptions to rule, and anarthrous cases like σαρκί, πνεύματι, as practically adverbial. Hence in our passage, he held the apostle to mean that "Christ was dead carnally but alive spiritually"; as indeed he thought would flow from τῷ πν. if the article had been authentic. (Doctrine of the Greek Art., p. 430, Rose's Ed., 1855) The only difference is, he thought, that by retaining the article we destroy the form of the antithesis between σ. and πν. But instances already given show how imperfect this able treatise is in requiring either the article or a preposition to accompany πν. in the gen., dat., or accus., in order to mean the Spirit of GOD. Romans 8:13, to which he himself refers, refutes his position.

Here Dean Alford, who is so strong against "by the Spirit" in 1 Peter 3:18, translates the same word exactly in the way condemned: "but if by the Spirit ye slay the deeds of the body, ye shall live. For as many as are led by the Spirit of GOD, these are sons of GOD." So on Gal. 5:5, Alford expressly remarks on πνεύματι "not 'mente' [Fritz] nor 'spiritually,' Middleton, al., but by the [Holy] Spirit, [reff.] as opposed to σ.," the very rendering he afterwards treats as wrong grammatically and theologically. Again, on verse 16 he particularly observes that πν. without the article may and does here mean "by the Spirit" [i.e. of GOD]. His reason, probably after Winer or the like, is invalid; for it is not because it is a sort of proper name, but because it is employed characteristically. There is no need to multiply proofs against the comments on πν. in 1 Peter 3:18 — proofs equally at least against Middleton. Consequently Barrow, Hall, Leighton, Pearson, Ussher, etc., the divines who denied the applicability of the passage to Christ's descent to hades, were not mistaken, as thinks Dr. E.H. Browne, sometime Bishop of Ely. They contend that the true meaning of the text is that our Lord by the Spirit in Noah preached to the antediluvians, who are now for their disobedience imprisoned in hades.

"This interpretation of the passage," says the Bishop, "depends on the accuracy of the English version. That version reads in the eighteenth verse, 'quickened by the Spirit.' It is to be noted, however, that all the versions except one (the Ethiopic) seem to have understood it 'quickened by the Spirit': and it is scarcely possible, upon any correct principles of interpretation, to give any other translation to the words. If, therefore, we follow the original, in preference to the English version, we must read the passage thus: '... but quick in His Spirit; ...' (An Exposition of the Thirty-nine Articles, etc., 1868, pp. 94,95.)

... the Bishop of Ely (see note, p. 94) knows that the best critics reject the article before πν. If absent, it is impossible for πν. to mean "in His Spirit."

Besides, the resulting theology is as strange as the grammar ... (Preaching to the Spirits in Prison, p. 11-14) in Δ flesh ... in [the] Spirit: ... when Bishop Middleton considers the true meaning to "be dead carnally, but alive spiritually," almost every word is misrepresented. For, to bear such a translation, the sentence should have been θανόντων μὲν σαρκικῶς, ζῶν δὲ πνευματικῶς, though one might call such a statement absurd and heterodox. I deny that we must or can render θανατωθεὶς μὲν σαρκὶ ζωοποιηθεὶς δὲ πνεύματι in any such fashion. Bishop Browne is as wrong in adopting such a thought in the note to p. 95, as he is in giving "quick in His Spirit" in the text of p. 95, or in expounding it as Christ alive in His soul, in or by which He went to the souls ἐν φ. All this in my judgment is as loose in grammar as in philosophy, if they allude to this; and as faulty also in theology, as it has not the least coherence with the context or the scope of the apostle's reasoning.

... Bishop Horsley's Sermon on the passage, which is so warmly commended in Bishop Middleton's Treatise and in Bishop Browne's Exposition, appears to sober minds little worthy of confidence. Thus he affirms strongly that the English translation of ζ. δὲ πν., though "a true proposition, is certainly not the sense of the apostle's words. It is of great importance to remark, though it may seem a grammatical nicety, that the prepositions, in either branch of this clause, have been supplied by the translators and are not in the original. The words 'flesh' and 'spirit,' in the original, stand without any preposition, in that case which, in the Greek language, without any preposition, is the case either of the cause or instrument by which — of the time when — of the place where — of the part in which — of the manner how — or of the respect in which, according to the exigence of the context; and to any one who will consider the original with critical accuracy it will be obvious, from the perfect antithesis of these two clauses concerning flesh and spirit, that if the word 'spirit' denote the active cause by which Christ was restored to life, which must be supposed by them who understand the word of the Holy Ghost, the word 'flesh' must equally denote the active cause by which He was put to death, which therefore must have been the flesh of His own body — an interpretation too manifestly absurd to be admitted. But if the word 'flesh' denote, as it most evidently does, the part in which death took effect upon Him, 'spirit' must denote the part in which life was preserved(!) in Him, that is, His own soul; and the word 'quickened' is often applied to signify, not the resuscitation of life extinguished, but the preservation and continuance of life subsisting(?). The exact rendering, therefore, of the apostle's words would be, 'Being put to death in the flesh, but quick in the spirit,' that is, surviving in His soul the stroke of death which His body had sustained, 'by which,' or rather 'in which,' that is, in which surviving soul, 'He went and preached to the souls of men in prison or in safe keeping.'"

I have given this long extract, which clearly puts this able divine's objections to the Authorised Version. Now without committing myself to the defence of what is not quite correct, I have no hesitation in asserting that Horsley, by his own mistaken view, has diverged incomparably farther from the truth. We need not go beyond the Bishop himself and the passage in debate, where he gives a difference of shade to the two participles, which are quite as much contrasted with each as their complementary datives. According to his own principle therefore, as the first means "put to death," the other should be "made alive," even if its uniform usage by inspired writers did not force one to the same conclusion. Why then did not H. carry out fairly and fully his own reasoning? Because it would have involved him in the result that Christ was not only put to death in the flesh, but made alive in His own soul or spirit. The good Bishop of course shrank from so portentous an inference, and was therefore driven to modify the antithesis, not in πνεύματι, but in an unnatural and unfounded interpretation put on ζωοποιηθείς, which even Dean A. explodes, who insists justly on "brought to life," instead of "preserved alive."

The truth is that Horsley did not himself seize the exact force of σαρκὶ καὶ πνεύματι, still less the difference produced by ἐν in the beginning of verse 19. Christ was put to death in (i.e. in respect to) flesh, as a living man below; He was made alive in (i.e. in respect to) Spirit, as one henceforth living in the life of resurrection, characterised by the Spirit as the other by flesh, though Christ was not a spirit only but had a spiritual body. It is not His own spirit as man, which is far worse than the English Version here, both grammatically and theologically. Grammatically it would demand τῷ πν., which is a reading unknown to the best copies and scouted by all competent critics; but even if diplomatically and grammatically legitimate, it would land us in the frightful heterodoxy that Christ died not merely in flesh but in spirit, and had to be quickened in the human spirit, which dies not even in the lost. Only the materialist conceives that spirit, if he at all allows of spirit, can die.

Further, if ζ. δὲ πν. refers to the resurrection of Christ, it is harshness itself and out of all reason to suppose Him back in the separate state in the verse following, where Horsley takes ἐν ᾧ to mean in which surviving soul He went and preached to the souls of men in prison. But understand it as ἐν means we should, that Christ also went ἐν πνεύματι, not merely in character of Spirit, but in His power when He preached through Noah; and all is precise in grammar, correct in doctrine, clear in sense, and consistent with the context. When we are raised by-and-by it will be διὰ τὸ ἐνοικῶν αὐτοῦ πνεύμα, because of His Spirit that dwelleth in us. It was not suitable to Christ, so to speak of His resurrection. He was, when put to death, quickened πνεύματι, denoting the character of His life in resurrection (not merely the agent), ἐν ᾧ καὶ marking the Spirit's power in which, before He was thus put to death and raised, He went and preached to the spirits in prison, disobedient as they were once when, etc. (Preaching to the Spirits in Prison, p. 20-25) in ^Δ flesh . . . in [the] Spirit: The spirit which is here distinguished against seems as if it could not possibly mean anything else than the soul, says [Cardinal Bellarmine]. . . . If the article of the vulgarly received text before πνεύματι possessed any real weight of evidence, the phrase might well, if not certainly, convey the sense of Christ's spirit as man; but all the copies of value concur in the anarthrous form, which cannot bear the meaning for which [Bellarmine] contends. . . . (Preaching to the Spirits in Prison, p. 63) in ^Δ flesh . . . in [the] Spirit: There is no such statement as that Christ's Spirit was the subject, recipient, or vehicle of restored life, for this would require the article to convey such a sense. Yet were the article genuine and such a sense necessarily taught, it is hard to see how one who held to the text thence resulting could deny the monstrous inference that His spirit had previously died — at least, if the case connected had been the direct complement, not the indirect. (Preaching to the Spirits in Prison, p. 71) in ^Δ flesh . . . in [the] Spirit: Commenting on the Authorised Version [Dr. J. Brown] says (168,169), "the words flesh and spirit are plainly opposed to one another. The prepositions in and by are not in the original. The opposed words [σάρκι — πνεύματι] are in the same case; they stand plainly in the same relation respectively to the words rendered 'put to death' and 'quickened' [θανατωθεῖς, ζωοποιηθεῖς], and that relation should have been expressed in English by the same particle. If you give the rendering, 'put to death in the flesh,' you must give the corresponding rendering, 'quickened in the spirit,' which would bring out the sense, either 'quickened in His human spirit or soul,' a statement to which it is difficult to attach a distinct meaning; for the soul is not mortal. Christ's spirit did not die, and to continue alive is not the meaning of the original word; or 'quickened in His divine nature,' a statement obviously absurd and false, as implying that He who is the life, the living One, can be quickened, either in the sense of restored from a state of death, or endowed with a larger measure of vitality. On the other hand, if you adopt the rendering of our translators in the second clause, 'quickened by the Spirit,' then you must render in accordance with it the first clause, 'put to death by the flesh.' If by the Spirit you understand the divine nature of our Lord, by the flesh you must understand the human nature, which makes the expression an absurdity. On the other hand, if you understand by the Spirit the Holy Ghost, then by flesh you must understand 'mankind,' put to death by men, but restored to life by GOD the Spirit. This interpretation, though giving a consistent and true sense, the sense so forcibly expressed in Peter's words to the Jews, 'whom ye crucified; whom GOD raised from the dead,' is forbidden by the usage of the language. Then there can be no doubt that there does appear something very material in introducing our Lord in what is plainly a result of His atoning sufferings, as having in the Spirit, by which He was quickened after He had been put to death, gone many centuries before, in the antediluvian age, to preach to an ungodly world; and there is just as little doubt that the only meaning that the words will bear, without violence being done them, is that it was when He had been put to death in the flesh, and quickened in the Spirit or by the Spirit, whatever that may mean, He went and preached; and that 'the spirits,' whoever they be, were 'in prison,' whatever that may mean, when He preached to them."

This is no unfair specimen of what one cannot but characterise as daubing with untempered mortar. It is but a balancing of probabilities or rather of improbabilities, and recalls the passage of Isaiah, who tells us of the judicial sleep poured out on Israel; so that the whole vision became to them like the words of a sealed book. For this, if delivered to the learned man with the request to read it, elicits the reply, I cannot, for it is sealed; or, if delivered with the same request to the unlearned, he excuses himself as unable because of the want of learning.

It is confessed by Dr. J. B. that the sense brought out is self-consistent and not incompatible with any of the facts or doctrines of revelation. He only complains of the mode of interpretation as liable to objections. I shall show, however, that, far from being really insurmountable, every one of these objections is destitute of weight.

Flesh and spirit are opposed; though in the same case it does not follow that they must have the same preposition supplied in English. This would not be necessary if the same Greek preposition (which is far stronger or more precise) accompanied each of the two opposed terms. Thus in Romans 4:25 two clauses stand in antithesis with one another, whence many have been allured to argue, like our author here, for a necessarily similar force of διὰ with each accusative. But this is an error. For the former clause means that our Lord Jesus was delivered because of our offences; the second, that He was raised again on account of the justifying of us (that is, in order to it); for justifying cannot be severed from faith, as the very next verse proves (Rom. 5:1). Indeed the notion of justification before faith would introduce nothing but confusion and false doctrine, not to speak of the evil in practice which naturally results. The Authorised Version however has not rendered ill in giving "for" with both clauses, the English preposition "for" being as flexible as the corresponding Greek one.

Similarly here there is no necessity to vary the English by supplying in the flesh and by the Spirit; but, if there were, it was open to the translators to have done so. The relation of the dative is not so contracted or consequently so uniform as to demand the exactly same form of representing it. Besides we have to take into account the idiom of the English tongue, which does not by any means conform always to the Greek. The reader is already aware that "in" or "in respect of" may be given equally in both clauses; but the translators might legitimately enough have given "in" and "by" as they have done. Hence the reasoning which develops the objection is invalid. "In His human spirit," if it were ever so proper in itself, would require the article τῷ (as in the common text). But as the best MSS. expunge it, so the sense resulting from its presence would have been really an insurmountable objection, for it is impossible to apply "quicken" to the spirit of Christ any more than to His divine nature. But as we have seen, if one translates the latter term "by the Spirit," it is not correct to assume that we must translate the former "by the flesh." The alleged necessity is just the mistake which falsifies the reasoning of many interpreters, and has mystified more readers.

Strictness of parallelism is to my mind more common in the limited scope of human thought than in the word of GOD, which habitually (I believe), while thus comparing or contrasting, gives a further and varying side of truth in the fulness of divine wisdom. Hence the mere technicality of the schools is sure to err in interpreting scripture. It does not follow therefore, that, when we see two datives balanced against each other, they must both be expressions of element, agency, or instrument, though it may be wise to avoid a greater precision in the rendering than the inspired original itself carries. At the same time such a difference is not advocated in the present instance; but, as the authorised translators rightly enough elsewhere represent διὰ twice by an English “for,” so “in” or “in respect of” will be found to suit both here. Consequently there is no such difficulty connected with the version or with the interpretation already given as to weaken it; still less, as some easily frightened have supposed, to convince us that it is untenable. (Preaching to the Spirits in Prison, p. 89-93)

in Λ flesh . . . in [the] Spirit: [In] Dr. E.W. Bullinger’s pamphlet (fifth edition revised, 1898) . . . in p. 8 we come to the question, and first the fact that $\tau\tilde{\omega}$ before $\pi\nu$ is rejected by the best critics, though read by perhaps all the editions before the A.V. of 1 Peter 3:18. But in p. 9 “Holy Spirit” is repeatedly given as the sense. This is erroneous, for it would require the omitted article. The rendering of the A.V. is not so far wrong, though it is better to avoid “by” with “spirit” if we have “in” with “flesh.” They are antithetical, and if we say “in respect to” we can say it of both. But it is not possible to justify the inference from the true text, “that though as regards His flesh Christ was put to death, yet as regards His Spirit He was quickened or made alive” (p. 9). It is as unsound philologically as in theology. In no way is it justifiable. Undoubtedly the second member refers to resurrection; but how can any legitimately draw “the body” from “His Spirit”? This is an error which the anarthrous construction repels; for $\pi\rho\epsilon\upsilon\mu\alpha\tau\iota$ without $\tau\tilde{\omega}$ cannot mean “His Spirit.” The true text points to the Spirit of GOD, as I have already shown, and Dr. B. can verify it in his own dictionary, in Bruder’s Concordance, or in any good text of the Greek N.T.

Our tongue does not always admit of the Greek anarthrous expression. If it did, we might say, “Put to death indeed in flesh, but made alive in Spirit.” But English requires for most ears “in [the] Spirit.” It is a simple difference of idiom, and does not affect the sense intended. . . . Thus, though the A.V. varied the preposition needlessly, their version is right in substance, and Dr. B. is clearly wrong. (Preaching to the Spirits in Prison, p. 116-118) in Λ flesh . . . in [the] Spirit: . . . Nor does the R.V. decide anything against referring to the Holy Spirit, save perhaps by their small “s.” (Preaching to the Spirits in Prison, p. 128) in Λ flesh . . . in [the] Spirit: to print “spirit” without a capital initial is a matter for regret, if there be no real ground to doubt that the Spirit of God is meant. Had the phrase been as in the Text. Rec., $\tau\tilde{\omega}$ $\pi\nu$, there might so far have been a better ground for supposing the spirit of Christ as man, though it would not have been decisive against the Holy Spirit. But the anarthrous phrase distinctly points to that Divine Person, though presented in character rather than objectively; and what is added conclusively proves this — “in which (or in the power of which Spirit) also he went and preached to the spirits in prison,” &c. (Bible Treasury 14:80)

3:19-20 [whole verses]: Though the original text is not doubtful but sure, the interpretations of ancients and moderns are for the most part precarious and misleading. Why was this? It may be helpful, and it is instructive, to note the unusual uncertainty of the ancient versions. The Greek is linguistically plain, the construction grammatically clear: why, then, should the rendering be variant and confused but by ideas imported from without? So early was the tendency to bad interpretation instead of faithful translation. Thus the Vulgate has, without authority, “erant” in verse 19, and “qui” in 20, but the atrocity of “expectabant Dei patientiam,” which led so many Romanists into error in the Middle Ages and to the present day; for so it stands in the Tridentine standard of authentic Scripture, impudently false, yet unabashed in its open inconsistency with the passage itself. The Pesch. Syr. was similarly unfaithful in the first errors of the Latin, renders ϕ . by “Sheul,” and falsely paraphrases the rest thus, “while the long-suffering of GOD commanded that he (Noah) should make the ark upon the hope of their conversion, and eight souls only entered therein and were saved in the waters.” The Philox. or Harcleian Syr. is much nearer the truth, as it avoids the error in 19, as “In this to the imprisoned spirits also He went, He evangelised,” which is sufficiently loose, though not in quite the same way. But verse 20 is well translated except in giving a finished instead of a continuous force to the preparation of an ark. Again, the Aeth. adds “Holy” to “Spirit” in 18, and like Pesch Syr. adds “held” or “shut up” to 19. The Erpenian Arabic is everywhere free, and seems peculiar in “departed to the spirits which were shut up,” which goes beyond and verges into interpretation, if not mis-interpretation. One may remark here that $\pi\sigma\phi$. in verse 22 has $\epsilon\lambda\varsigma\ \sigma\upsilon\beta\rho\alpha\nu\acute{o}\nu$, whereas in verse 19 there is a careful avoidance of $\epsilon\lambda\varsigma\ \xi\delta\omicron\nu$ or any equivalent, which has been overlooked by those who have argued for the force of 19 from 22. In the Armenian there is little or nothing that calls for notice here. (Preaching to the Spirits in Prison, p. 5-6)

[whole verses]: . . . the ancient versions are too loose to render any help worth naming. Without discussing now whether the Peschito does (as Bode and others assert) or does not use scheiul for the grave as well as hades, it is plain that “lived” in spirit is faulty for $\zeta\omega\sigma\pi\omicron\upsilon\eta\theta\epsilon\iota\varsigma$, and that to leave out “in [or in the power of] which,” substituting a mere connective particle “and,” is far from the truth. “To the souls which were kept” may after a fashion represent $\tau\omicron\iota\varsigma\ \epsilon\nu\ \phi$. $\pi\nu$, the addition of “in hades” or “scheiul” being unwarranted. There are other inaccuracies; but let this suffice. Far better here is the Philoxenian Syriac, which is thus rendered by White, “morte affectus quidem carne, vivificatus autem spiritu. In quo et spiritu, qui in domo custodiæ sunt, profectus prædicavit: Qui non obdormierant aliquando, quum expectabat longanimitas Dei in diebus Noe,” etc. The Arabic (Pol.) and the Vulgate alone give correctly the beginning of the verse, the Erpenian Arabic and the Aethiopic being as loose as the Peschito Syr. The Aeth. adds “holy” to “Spirit”, but it does not follow, as Bishop Middleton seems to think, that the other ancient versions did not understand exactly the same sense, though they very properly did not add the word “holy” so as to define their rendering more than the original text. The Memphitic, according to Wilkins, is no better than the rest. This is his version: “mortuus quidem in carne, vivens autem in Spiritu. In hoc Spiritibus [S. sic] qui in carcere abiit evangelizavit. Incredulis aliquando,” etc. (Preaching to the Spirits in Prison, p. 37-38)

3:19 preached: . . . “cried aloud” is an impossible rendering of $\epsilon\kappa\eta\rho\nu\epsilon\nu$. The passage quoted from the Hecuba of Euripides (145) proves nothing of the sort. To invoke is not to “cry aloud” as a sufferer. In the very few classical instances where the word bears the peculiar meaning of invocation, κ . has an object which determines the sense, whereas here it is without one. But its New Testament meaning is to preach or publish; and the reason alleged for a variation here (that it is the only place in which it refers to one who was in a state of suffering) is a mere and unfounded assumption. There is no more real ground to deny an active subject here than anywhere else in the New Testament. . . .

The attempt also to gather support from the supposed derivation of $\kappa\eta\rho\upsilon\sigma\sigma\omega$ from the Chaldaic ܩܪܝܢܐ proves rather the contrary, for Daniel 5:29 in no way supports the notion of crying out in suffering. Nor is it true that the word $\epsilon\kappa\eta\rho\nu\epsilon\nu$ should be followed by an objective case, if the apostle had been desirous of impressing on our minds the definite notion of publishing the gospel; for if Mark 16:15 expresses the gospel, Mark 1:38 leaves it out, and yet who can doubt the meaning? So does Mark 3:14, nay, even chapter 16:20 — the very context to which Dr.

[Bartle] appeals to the contrary. The rest of the New Testament would still more fully disprove the notion, but what we have referred to is surely enough. . . .

Now it is obvious that the Greek does not intimate that Christ cried aloud (even if the word could bear this meaning, which would rather be ἐκράξεν) in prison; it tells us of the imprisoned spirits of those contemplated in Christ's κήρυγμα or rather κήρυξις by the Spirit. To bear the desired meaning ἐν φυλακῇ must have been put with ἐκήρυξεν, instead of being entrenched in its present position apart, as it is most firmly. Further, it is equally an error to suppose that the original text can possibly mean "among the spirits," etc. Were the words "ἐν φ. μετὰ τῶν πνευμάτων, κ.τ.λ.," there would be something answering to what is set out in his English: as it is, there is not even a distant resemblance. (Preaching to the Spirits in Prison, p. 102-104)

The collocation of the Greek (τοῖς ἐν φυλακῇ πνεύμασιν) is decisive, that the true connection is not between the preaching, but the spirits and the prison. (Christian Annotator 1:255) spirits in prison: . . . it is certain that τοῖς ἐν φυλακῇ πνεύμασιν can signify "that are in prison" as naturally at least as "that were" there: only the necessity of the context could really justify the latter sense. But if the context favour "that are," it is the simple unforced bearing of the phrase. And that it does favour it should be plain from ἀπειθήσασιν ποτε ὅτε, κ. τ. λ., which points to an antecedent time of guilt as the ground of their being now imprisoned. (Preaching to the Spirits in Prison, p. 11; see also p. 21) spirits in prison: Now what are the facts of the usage of φυλακῇ? Primarily it means the act of watching; hence (2) the persons that watch or guard (as in Latin and English); (3) the time; (4) the place, not only where those watching are posted, but (5) where others are kept as in ward or prison. Such (with the moral application of taking heed, and being on one's guard, from keeping in ward) are the chief senses in which the word was employed by the Greeks. The New Testament has it once in the first sense (Luke 2:8), once in the second (Acts 12:10), five times in the third (Matt. 14:25; 24:43; Mark 6:48; Luke 12:38 twice), and forty times in the fifth sense, including not only 1 Peter 3:19 but Rev. 18:2, where it is in the Authorised Version translated "the hold of every foul spirit and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird," all evidently equivalent to the meaning of "prison," which is used even of Satan's place of temporary detention. Never elsewhere does the Holy Spirit use it in the more general signification of a mere "place of safe keeping." Is there any special reason in our text why it should here be so rendered? The assigned ground of custody being the former disobedience of the spirits thus restrained, there ought to be no hesitation in accepting the English Version as fully justified. . . . (Preaching to the Spirits in Prison, p. 34-35) spirits in prison: It is a strange notion, adopted by Calvin (it is to be hoped, without a single intelligent follower), that φυλακῇ here means a watch-tower, whence he supposed the saints to have been awaiting the Messiah. (Preaching to the Spirits in Prison, p. 45)

3:20 [whole verse]: "Let us see, however" (continues [Calvin]), "why he mentions only unbelievers; for he seems (!) to say that Christ in Spirit appeared to those who were formerly disobedient. But I distinguish otherwise; that then also the pure servants of GOD were mixed up with unbelievers and were almost hidden by their multitude (!). Greek syntax (I confess) is at variance with this meaning (!); for Peter, if he meant this, ought to have used the genitive absolute (!). But because it was no new thing for the apostles to put one case instead of another (!), and we see Peter here heaping together many things confusedly (!) and no other suitable sense can be elicited (!), I have no hesitation in thus explaining an intricate passage; so that readers may understand that those called disobedient are different from those to whom the preaching was made (!).

After then he said that Christ manifested Himself to the dead, he immediately adds, 'when there were formerly disobedient men'; by which he means that the holy fathers sustained no harm from being almost overwhelmed by the multitude of the ungodly." How sad this perversion of the text.

. . . it would not be easy to discover a match for the hardihood of the words just cited, and the utter want of self-distrust in thinking and speaking as he does of an inspired man. The Greek construction, he admits, is adverse to the sense he would impose. This is enough for one who believes that the Holy Spirit perfectly guided Peter. Certainly the dative ἀπειθήσασιν is in agreement with the πνεύμασιν just before, which demolishes the imaginary distinction of GOD's servants mixed up with the unbelieving. It is impossible to construe or even conceive the meaning Calvin would insist on, without giving up the claim of the Epistle to be divinely inspired. Again, it is as false that the apostles elsewhere put one case instead of another as that Peter here heaps anything confusedly together. The most suitable sense has been shown to be the strictest according to grammatical considerations. Calvin therefore would have been much wiser if he had hesitated about his own explanation, which in fact brings intricacy into a passage by no means obscure, either in syntax or in scope. (Preaching to the Spirits in Prison, p. 55-56)

disobedient: Is it not strange, first, that the Revisers should have perpetuated the error of the Authorised Version in 20, "Which . . . were," as if the Greek had been τοῖς, and next, that the Americans [correctors of the RV] should be insensible to the mistake? The absence of the article proves the participle to be part of the predicate and assigns the reason for their present imprisonment, "disobedient as heretofore they were when" &c. (Bible Treasury 15:63) disobedient aforetime . . . through: Is it accurate to render the beginning of 20, ἀπ. π., "which aforetime were disobedient"? Would not this require τοῖς ἀπ.? Is not the force rather "disobedient as they once proved when," &c.? Their being in prison was in consequence of their previous disobedience to God's patient warning. At the close of the verse "through water" is right, not "by" it. Water was the destructive element, through which grace saved Noah and those with him in the ark: cf. 1 Cor. 3:15. (Bible Treasury 14:80) aforetime: The careful student will notice that the original is not exactly rendered by the English translators and most others in this respect, that ἀπειθήσασιν from the omission of the article must needs be a predicate, and not an epithet describing or defining the spirits. The meaning therefore is not "which were," etc., for this requires τοῖς, but "disobedient as they once were when," etc. (Preaching to the Spirits in Prison, p. 22) was waiting: ἀπεξεδέχετο is unquestionably correct, of the uncials K alone being adverse according to Matthäi, and of the cursives not one supporting the reading of Stephens, Beza, and the Elzevir editions. It seems to be a mere conjecture of Erasmus, who in his first edition gave ἀπαξ ἐδέχετο (so K), in the rest ἀπαξ ἐξεδέχετο. In fact, it is hard to comprehend how the adverb could be used with the imperfect, though it might with any other tense. It is remarkable that though Erasmus read the blundering ἀπαξ in the text of all his five editions, he gave the correct word in his notes, even before it was published in the Complutensian Polyglott. (Preaching to the Spirits in Prison, p. 4-5)

few: The question between δλίγοι (A B, six cursives, Origen, Cyprian, Augustine) and ὀλίγοι (C K L P, most cursives and fathers) is more delicate, and less decided. It is the only case in which the text as given above differs from the Complutensian edition. (Preaching to the Spirits in Prison, p. 5)

3:21 figure [or, antitype]: The Elzevir Edd., like Beza's, and before all, the Complut., followed indifferent MSS., in giving ψ, which the Auth.

V. adopted; but Erasmus, Colinaeus, Stephens, with whom agreed Wells, Lachmann, Griesbach, Scholz, and all modern critics, give δ on fuller and better authority. Revisers of course correct accordingly; but they are not very consistent in their rendering of ἀντίτυπον. For the only other N.T. use of the word is in Heb. 9:24, there “like in pattern,” here “after a true likeness.” There seems no sufficient ground to translate differently in the two cases. “Figure” is the sense in both, as the A.V. conveys. Also κ A B P, many cursives, and the ancient versions have ὑμᾶς, “you,” instead of ἡμᾶς, “us.” There are curious omissions in the witnesses; as the Sinaitic, the cursive 78, and Aeth. omit δ . Again νῦν “now,” is dropped by several cursives, the Pesch. Syr. and Arm., as well as Cyprian. Of lesser aberrations we need not speak. The true text emerges with certainty. (Epist. of Peter, p.205)

you . . . request: the Authorised Version followed Beza (as did Elz.) in rejecting Stephens’ reading, which is the ancient one, the Sinaitic cutting the knot by rejecting both. “You” is probably right; but ἐπερώτημα is rather “demand,” anything interrogated, than the interrogation which suggests a dubious or misleading sense. (Bible Treasury 14:80)

not a putting away of filth of flesh, but a request: “not putting away of filth of flesh, but demand” &c. (Bible Treasury 15:64) request: They inquired for a good conscience; for this is the true force of the expression in 1 Peter 3: not “the answer” as in the Authorised Version, but the inquiry (ἐπερώτημα) for a good conscience. In Acts 2, they inquired for and got it. (Bible Treasury 9:16)

4:1 [whole verse]: the anarthrous construction is little heeded here by the Revisers or the Americans; see also 5,6. (Bible Treasury 15:64)

[for us]: κ 31 and a few other cursives with Syr. Pesch., read ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν, “for you;” as κ A K L P and many more, Memph. and other ancients give ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν, “for us.” B C &c. omit either, and this most critics prefer. (Epist. of Peter, p.213) sin: Nor is the plural unintentional which has been relegated to the margin [of the RV]. (Bible Treasury 15:64)

4:2 [whole verse]: [See note to 1 Peter 4:1]

4:3 time \wedge : The more ancient MSS. omit τοῦ βίου, “of life,” and have βούλημα not θέλημα as in ver. 2. (Epist. of Peter, p.213)

4:5 \wedge living and \wedge dead: why more than “living and dead?” Why “the?” Is it not equally good in English as in Greek? It is not the same sense. “The” makes judgment universal; whereas Scripture contrasts it with eternal life and salvation. See John 5 and Heb. 9. (Bible Treasury 14:80)

4:6 also: Why “even” to dead? Why not “also”? As in 3:19,20, the apostle spoke of wicked dead, so does he here of righteous dead, as is implied in living according to God in the Spirit? Here also we have good news brought, not preaching only. (Bible Treasury 14:80)

4:7 prayers: The true reading is the plural, and without the article as in Text. Rec. (Epist. of Peter, p. 221)

4:8 covereth: “covereth” is right, not “shall cover” (Epist. of Peter, p. 221)

4:9 without: [See note to Mat. 10:29]

murmuring: the singular “murmuring” [is right] rather than the plural (Epist. of Peter, p. 221)

4:11 [whole verse]: Ver. 11 is given fairly well [in the RV]. The meaning is that when one gifted of God speaks, it should be as oracles of God; not according to the oracles of God, the Scriptures (which is not in question, though in itself of course most right), but as expressing God’s mind on that before us, as His mouthpiece: a serious, but not too serious, consideration; for has He not also given us His Spirit? And wherefore? Truly it supposes dependence on and confidence in God. Ministry also, it is well to remark, is distinguished from speaking, which is apt to become everything among idle people or the active-minded, and knowledge taking practically the place of faith as well as of love. (Bible Treasury 14:80) (See Exp. of 2 Tim., p. 49)

[let it be]: there is need of little, if any, supply: “Let it be” would make the sense plain to the dullest. (Bible Treasury 15:64)

4:12 [count not strange] the fire among you that cometh for your trial: “count not as strange the burning [i.e. of persecution] taking place among us for trial, as though” &c. It is not “has taken place” nor “which is to.” The Revised Version is fairly good. (Bible Treasury 15:64)

4:14 God \wedge . . . [last part of verse]: The latter part of the verse is quite true, and said in substance elsewhere; but omitted as the words are by the best MSS. and most ancient Vv. and looking like a gloss, they are here bracketed as of doubtful authority. There is an addition also to the Spirit of glory and of God, “and of power” in A P, more than 30 cursives, some ancient versions, &c., even expanded in κ ; but the Vatican MS. and other good witnesses oppose; and indeed it seems still less in accord with the context. (Epist. of Peter, p.228)

4:19 well-doing \wedge : The most ancient authorities omit ὥς “as.” (Epist. of Peter, p.230)

5:1 \wedge Elders [therefore]: As the Revisers adopt οὖν “therefore,” they have no right to “the” elders. It would be general in that case. (Bible Treasury 15:64)

5:2 Tend [or, shepherd]: “Tend” is better, as being more comprehensive, than “feed,” cf. John 21. — never to be forgotten by Peter any more than by John. (Bible Treasury 14:80) exercising oversight . . . willingly \wedge : κ B here as remarkably omit ἐπισκοποῦντες as κ A P add after “willingly” κατὰ θεόν. The Revisers follow the latter in their text, the former in the margin. (Epist. of Peter, p.235) willingly \wedge : the weight of authorities is rather equally divided for and against the words “according to God,” in the Revised Version but not in the Authorised Version. The Rhemish has the phrase following the Vulgate, and so Wiclif (“bi God”) and Cranmer (“after a Godly sorte”) in a parenthesis of italics. The Complutensian editors have it not, any more than the Vatican MS. and others; the Sin., Alex., and Porph. uncials give it. But there need by no hesitation in rejecting the American (correctors of the RV) preference of the error of the Authorised Version in Rom. 8:27, which our translators never ventured to repeat as to the same phrase in 2 Cor. 7:9,10,11, Eph. 4:24, or 1 Pet. 4:6, which is in contrast with κατ’ ἄνθρωπον and really is a far different idea from and far larger than κατὰ τὸ θέλημα τοῦ θεοῦ with which they would identify it. Beza influenced the Authorised Version, and Wetstein sought vainly to defend it; but the heathen, who are so unwisely quoted in that defence, could hardly be expected to understand “after a divine sort” or “character,” in contrast with what suits a man. It is nature and mind rather than “will.” (Bible Treasury 15:64)

5:3 your allotments: τῶν κληρῶν the clergy, for so all the flock was then named. The distinction of people and clergy, is essentially a Jewish element, which afterwards crept into and undermined the Church. (The “Brethren” with an Appendix containing Some Notice of the Mention made of Them in Mr. Winslow’s Silver Trumpet.)

\wedge allotments: Here it is a pain to be obliged once more to make a depreciatory remark on our common English version. It is indeed a forcible and, in general, a faithful version, but it not seldom fails in accuracy. . . It will be observed that “God’s” is inserted in italics. Now there need be no hesitation in declaring that the phrase does not mean

God's heritage at all, but another idea wholly different. The true drift is this — "Nor as lording it over your possessions." (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist. and Rev., p.269-270)

Λ allotments: You observe the word "God's" is put in by the translators. It does not mean God's heritage at all. The flock is God's flock, but the point in the third verse is not at all that question, but what they were not to do. They were to feed the flock of God. That is the positive side. But here we have the negative side. "Neither as lording it over their own heritage" would be really the idea: that is, not treating it as a thing belonging to them: "neither as being lords over their own belongings," — if I may paraphrase the verse — "but as being ensamples to the flock." That is, they were not to treat them as their own. This gives the force of the exhortation to the elders. (Bible Treasury N10:115)

Λ allotments: But is the rendering of 3 [in the RV] exact? It is incomparably better than what the Authorised Version here gives, but "over the charge allotted to you" might be construed into one's church or chapel, one's congregation or parish or diocese. Now τῶν κλ. very simply means the (i.e. your) possessions; and the point is that the elders should not lord it over the saints as their belongings, but ever tend them as the flock of God. (Bible Treasury 14:80)

5:4 the: [In the RV] it is of course "the" unfading crown of glory. (Bible Treasury 14:80)

5:5 all of you bind on: The more numerous authorities read "all of you, being subject to one another, bind on humility," but some of the best MSS. and versions drop "being subject," which results in what has just been given. "Clothed" is too vague here. It is a word unique in the N.T. usage, and occurs but rarely elsewhere. The figure is taken from the apron a slave girt on to do his work earnestly without soiling his dress. (Epist. of Peter, p.247)

Λ bind: the needless addition of ὑποτ. "be subject and" in the Authorised Version, following the Text. Rec., is with reason excluded to the unimpeded and energetic flow of the exhortation. (Bible Treasury 14:80)

5:8 Λ your: The best authorities do not support the "because" of the Text. Rec. followed by the A.V. (Epist. of Peter, p.254)

Λ your: the added ὅτι of the Text. Rec. clogs the vigour of words clear and ringing as a trumpet call. (Bible Treasury 14:80)

5:9 in faith: the difficulty of the article reappears, with the unhappy result of the old rendering put in the margin, and a worse adopted in the text. The real question seems to be between "in" or "with" faith. Take Rom. 14:1: have not the Revisers rightly said "weak in faith"? It is the counterpart of the phrase before us. Here, not content with "the," they descend to "your." These things ought not so to be. (Bible Treasury 14:80)

5:10 you: [The RV] rightly give[s] "you" for "us" in 10, as the context ought to have shown, in confirmation of the best external authority. (Bible Treasury 14:80) shall: it is "shall," not the opt. as in Text. Rec., with a few copies of slight account. (Bible Treasury 14:80)

5:11 the glory: Assuredly "the glory" is His also; but the connection here seems to strengthen the testimony of the few witnesses (A B 23, ancient Latin copies, &c.) which express only His "might" in the face of the adversary. The great majority however read "the glory and the might," which was a frequent phrase, as in 1 Peter 4:11, Jude 25 enlarged, and Rev. 1:6. But "dominion" answers to κυριότης, rather than to κράτος as to which translators vacillate. (Epist. of Peter, p.261)

5:12 as I account: "as I suppose" or "account" is no slight or doubt of Silvanus, but the contrary. (Bible Treasury 14:80) stand [or, ye stand]: "Stand" is the reading of high authority, uncial and cursive, instead of the more popular "ye stand." (Bible Treasury 14:80)

5:13 She: (It is interesting and fair to note that the Sinaitic Uncial does read here ἐκκλησία or "church." In this it stands alone among primary authorities: a thing almost impossible, if true; but easily accountable, if spurious. Old versions in such a question count little or nothing, as probably but expressing an ellipse.) . . . It was an oversight, therefore, to interpolate "the church," even in italics. We have no ground to think there was an assembly there, and can readily conceive that the apostle (with his wife, and Mark caring in love for them both in advanced age) should yearn to impart the gospel to the benighted Jews, so dear to him in that distant quarter, far away from the fabulous Episcopate of which tradition dreamt in the West. (Epist. of Peter, p.264-265)

She: . . . all concede that the terms "the church that is" have been put in by the translators: they have no authority whatever. It was an individual and not a church that was referred to. It was probably a well known sister there; and therefore it was enough simply to allude to her. (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist. and Rev., p.224)

she: It is singular that the Sinaitic is not without a slight support in the margin of two cursives, and some of the oldest Latin copies say expressly what the Authorised Version gives in italics. But the Revisers seem justified in holding it to be some well-known sister, perhaps Peter's wife: the salutation of Marcus that follows confirms this. Dogmatically too it is difficult to suppose elect, or co-elect, said after Christ came otherwise than of individuals. In the Old Testament we have it said corporately or nationally; in the New Testament individually. (Bible Treasury 14:80)

she: "She that is joint-elect" appears to be the true force (God's Insp. p. 546).

Notes for 2 Peter

1:1 Simon: Yet on its face the writer declares himself with yet more carefulness than when he wrote before, not "Peter" only but "Symeon Peter," name and surname. So, at the Jerusalem conference on the Gentile question, James speaks of him (Acts 15:14) as "Symeon" (the Aramaic form of "Simon"), though historically designated "Peter" just before (ver. 7). A forger would have strenuously avoided any such shade of difference, superficial though it be; as he never would have conceived still greater care to attest thus minutely the Peter who added this Second Epistle. (Epist. of Peter, Part 2, p. 3)

Λ bondman . . . [the]: no notice is taken [by the American correctors of the RV] of that common fault in the Revisers, the needless enfeebling indefinite article of ours twice over. Our tongue does not require "a" before "servant" or "bondman"; yet it seems harsh to omit in English "the" before "righteousness," though Mr. Green does so. (Bible Treasury 15:80) in virtue of: 2 Peter 1:1 does not touch on the ground of justification, but asserts that the saints he addressed obtained like precious faith with the apostles, in virtue of the righteousness of God and our Saviour Jesus Christ. Even if we adopt the marginal suggestion, it would mean that our God and Saviour Jesus Christ took care, according to His faithful regard to the promises, that there should ever be a remnant according to the election of grace. Hence He, in His righteousness, secured that they should get faith. Christ's law-keeping is not a question: introduce it, and you spoil the sense. For how could His legal obedience bring any one to faith? But verse 2 confirms the English Bible against the margin. If the former be correct, there would be no possible place for the desired result; for nobody believes that God and Jesus kept the law either to make up a legal righteousness for others, or to give them faith. The later Puritans were the chief promoters, though not the authors, of the scheme which conceives our justification to consist of Christ's observance of the law imputed to us; but even their chief theologian, Dr. John Owen, renounced the sense which modern Evangelicals try to fasten on 2 Peter 1:1. (Bible Treasury 20:281)

in virtue of: [The RV] has the great defect of an equivocal or erroneous rendering of ἐν (that frequent stumblingblock of the Revisers), and this in a text so much the more important as it is often pressed dogmatically, not seldom wrongly, owing to this very error. I do not dwell on "a" more than once used needlessly here, as this has been frequently noticed elsewhere; but "faith with us in the righteousness" suggests in our idiom the object believed in. This is not the aim of the passage. The Apostle means that the Christian Jews, to whom he is for the second time addressing himself, obtained like precious faith with us "your apostles" (3:2) in virtue of (or through) the righteousness of our God and Saviour Jesus Christ; as the Revisers rightly give the last words in their text, though not in the margin. There were special promises to the fathers about the blessing of their seed, and God was righteous in fulfilling them. There has always been a believing remnant of that people, if of no other continuously. Jesus, not more truly man than the Lord God of Israel, has been faithful to that word of distinguishing favour; and if those Jews to whom Peter was writing received faith, like precious faith with the apostles, it was in virtue of His making good the promise to them and their children by giving them to believe. Such is the righteousness here meant. Hence "through" in the Authorised Version is substantially correct, as being less ambiguous than "in" of the Revised Version, which is apt to mislead by suggesting His righteousness as the thing believed in, instead of pointing out His fidelity to promise in bestowing faith on them. (Bible Treasury 14:94)

in virtue of: "In" the righteousness might mislead, because here it would tend to convey the idea of righteousness as the object of faith, according to a favourite dream of Calvinistic theology, which is in no way meant, as even the Puritan Dr. John Owen candidly acknowledges. (So it is in the misreading of the Sinaitic MS. εἰς δ. and in some Latin copies, contrary to the unquestionable stream of testimony.) God was righteous in giving them faith no less precious than the apostles' according to His promise to the fathers. "By" in the Geneva V. is legitimate, or even "through," though this last might be taken as the mere means (διὰ); whereas it is their God and Saviour's fidelity to His word, in virtue of which He secured their believing. If "in" were thus understood, it would be all right, as in ver. 2, where the form of the phrase is not quite the same as in 1 and is correctly given in almost all versions. (Bible Treasury 15:80) and Λ : [The American correctors of the RV] prefer marg.⁴ [of the RV] to the text, and therefore would have them exchange places. Is not this a singular choice? Even G. Wakefield, heterodox as he was, translated as the Revisers. No scholar who has adequately weighed the construction contests that the omission of the second article admits of two persons strictly united in joint agency, where the phrase does not describe a single person. Contextual scope must decide which is intended; but even where it is a unity of two before the mind rather than one person, which is expressed by the one common article, the phrase seems impossible unless both stood on precisely the same platform of nature or position. Now I am disposed to believe that in the Epistles of Peter, as in that to the Hebrews, the inspired writer meant to strengthen those addressed in the great truth that Jesus was the Jehovah of Israel, the true God, no less than the Father. (Bible Treasury 15:79-80)

1:2-5 [whole passage]: It may be well to make no abrupt severance of 3 from 2; but surely it is still more requisite not to mar the connection of 3, 4, with 5, the former being a sort of protasis, as the latter is an apodosis in sense. Hence, if it be right to close 2 with a semicolon, it is intolerable to put a period after 4, and to begin 5 as a new sentence. . . . All our old English Versions fail in this; none more than the Revised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:94)

1:3 his own: The Vatican supports most copies in reading "through glory and excellence," as in the Text Rec. But Ɑ A C P and other good witnesses warrant what is here given, and followed by the better critics save Westcott and Hort. (Epist. of Peter, Part 2, p.35)

his own: There is, however, an important correction which closes verse 3 (the margin of the Authorised Version being better than its text), as it had been in Tyndale and Cranmer. But the Geneva Version went all wrong, following Beza who knew the true reading but slighted it for an inferior one, and even mistranslated the inferior one through his inability to make out its meaning: "ἰδίᾳ δόξῃ καὶ ἀρετῇ, quae lectio in paucis admodum codicibus, iisque dubiae fidei, a nobis est inuenta: neque mihi sane probari potest." Now there are a dozen cursives at least, not to speak of four of the great uncials, in favour of ἰδίᾳ δ. κ. ἀ.; so that there is ample and excellent authority. And any reasoning on God's being denied elsewhere to call us to His glory cannot swamp the clear force here of being called by it. Then follows fresh reasoning on ἀρετῇ, the upshot being "mihi quidem multo probabilius uidetur, διὰ praepositionem pro εἰς usurpatam, sicut etiam annotatuimus Rom. vi. a 4, et ἀρετῇν idem atque ἀγιασμὸν declarare," &c. No doubt the majority of copies support διὰ δ. κ. ἀ. In meaning the only difference that results is that the more ancient text adds "His own," but in any case it is "by," not "to." Adam innocent enjoyed the good around and gave God thanks; Israel was governed as well as tested by the law. God called us "by His own glory," outside and above all that is seen, and "by virtue," the spiritual courage that refuses the snares which would entice us from the path that leads there. Compare Rom. 3:23, 5:2. (Bible Treasury 14:94)

his own: The reading in 3 is not altogether sure, B K L and the great majority sustaining the common text, Erasmus and the Compl. edd., Stephens, Beza, Elzevirs, &c. whilst Ɑ A C P, a decent little corps of cursives (at least 12), and a very weighty portion of Vv. support ιδίᾳ ("by His own"). The difference in result is however much less than it might seem at first; for what after all is the dogmatic distinction between "through glory and virtue," and "by His own glory and virtue?" Little or nothing beyond emphatic appropriation of glory to God, in order to enhance its bearing on the believer's call by it. But how came the Authorised Translators to make so stupendous a blunder as to render διὰ δ. "to" glory? They were misled by the Geneva V., as it was by Beza, who knew the reading approved of by most modern critics, yet rejected not it only but the unequivocal meaning of his own text in deference to his theological idol. Hence he sets Rom. 9:23; 15:7; 1 Cor. 2:7; 1 Thess. 2:12, &c. against διὰ here in its regular sense, and will have it used for εἰς! as in Rom. 6:4! — both, it need scarce be added, baseless and very reprehensible blunders, to the ruin of the truth conveyed by the Holy Spirit. (Bible Treasury 15:80)

1:4 hath granted . . . greatest and precious . . . ye: In 4 [of the RV] is corrected the error of Tyndale, &c., and of the Authorised Version following them. They ought to have gathered from the preceding verse that δεδ. is, if not a deponent, middle in sense, not passive. The change of order in "precious and very great promises" is abundantly sustained; indeed the precise form in the Text. Rec. has scarce any support, but a slight change many copies give it, some however having ὑμῖν for ἡ. mistakenly. (Bible Treasury 14:95) partakers: The shade of different meaning in κοινωνός and μέτοχος is, I believe, just; but it is a question of adequate observation of its New Testament use in Greek, and any adequate proof would make one abandon it. Κοινωνοί is really partners in Luke 5, then, μέτοχοι the fact of taking part; but I have no anxiety to insist on this.

Φύσις is moral in 2 Peter from the force of what is said in the passage. In divine things this is everything, as holiness, love, &c.; but the point to be insisted on is, that there is more than mere moral effect, though there be this — that Christ is for us a life-giving Spirit; as born of flesh involves a like nature. (Bible Treasury 9:128) [see note to 2 P. 1:2]

1:5 But for this very thing also: The first question is as to the right readings. B.C., G.J., and the mass of cursives, have καὶ αὐτὸ τοῦτο δὲ, followed by the Text. Rec., Griesbach, Knappe, Scholz, and Hahn. Tischendorf had edited, in his first Leipsic edition, κ. ἂ. δὲ τ.; but in the second he restores the common reading. Lachmann gives κ. αὐτοὶ δὲ on the authority of A. (vulg. vos autem), the sense of which is plain. Griesbach commended αὐτῷ δὲ τοῦτῳ, which has the support of two MSS. and also αὐτοὶ δὲ τοῦτῳ, which is a mere conjecture of his own. I do not doubt that the ordinary text is the true one. If so, it would seem that there is an ellipse of διὰ, or κατὰ, and the sense is, "but also for, or in respect to, this very thing" (i.e. referring to the verse before.) Such is the grammatical construction, confirmed by the best versions save that of Jerome. Thus, in the most recent German we have "und eben deshalb fűgt aber auch," &c. Such an adverbial accusative is not unusual in the pronouns, as any one can see in good lexicons and grammars. The Lausanne ministers appear to connect the pronouns, as well as σπ. π. with παρεῖσιν, but the sense is not materially altered. (Christian Annotator 3:117)

But for this very thing also: "And beside this" of the Authorised Version is as untenable as any other of the older English. The Revised Version is much better, save as we have seen the dislocation by their punctuation. (Bible Treasury 14:95) in . . . supply . . . in _Λ [six times]: "in" your faith is right [in the RV], as well as "supply," not "as to" or "as regards," and so throughout 6 and 7. Only the italic "your" six times over is needless. (Bible Treasury 14:95)

in _Λ [six times] . . . brotherly affection: The "your" is uncalled for six times in 5-7, while the small point is noticed [by the American correctors of the RV] of changing "love of the brethren" into "brotherly kindness" as in the Authorised Version, and the former is relegated to the margin. (Bible Treasury 15:80)

1:6 in _Λ [3 times]: [See note to 2 Peter 1:5]

1:7 in _Λ [2 times]: [See note to 2 Peter 1:5]

brotherly affection: [See note to 2 Peter 1:5]

1:8 idle: It was a change for the worse when the A.V. for "idle" rendered the word "barren," and led so many readers and preachers to guess what the difference could be between "barren" and "unfruitful." But there is no room for doubt or difficulty. The first word is properly translated "idle" elsewhere in the A.V., as it should be here; and so Tyndale, Cranmer and the Geneva V. had given. Wycliffe and his follower, as well as the Rhemish, have "voide" or "vacant" (as the last), which can hardly be said to have any just sense. (Epist. of Peter, Part 2, p.58-9)

_Λ not idle . . . for: "idle (marg. Authorised Version) nor unfruitful" is an improvement without "to be;" but surely εἰς here means "as to" or "as regards," not "unto" of the Revised Version any more than "in" of the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:95)

1:9 [whole verse]: The Revisers give, like the Authorised Version, rather a paraphrase of 9 than a close version. (Bible Treasury 14:95) forgotten: λήθην λαβών here may be compared with 2 Tim. 1:5 and the simpler cases of Heb. 11:29,36. It occurs in both classical and Hellenistic Greek, as in Jos. Ant. ii. 9,1 is precisely the same phrase. (Epist. of Peter, Part 2, p.57)

1:12 I shall be ready: the true reading is μελλήσω, "I shall be ready," (≠ A B C P &c., with the most ancient versions), not οὐκ ἄμ. as in the Text. Rec. and the Authorised Version, "I will not be negligent." The change [in the RV] at the close seems uncalled for, due probably to Dean Alford. (Bible Treasury 14:95) present: The change at the close [in the RV] seems uncalled for, due probably to Dean Alford. (Bible Treasury 14:95)

1:16 [whole verse]: The rendering of 16, 17, is loose [in the RV], not only in general form but even to the diluting ὑπὸ "by," to ἀπὸ "from" at the close. (Bible Treasury 14:95)

1:17 [whole verse] . . . by: [See note to 2 Peter 1:16] borne . . . uttered [or, brought]: Of still less significance seem the suggestions [of the American correctors of the RV] as to 17, 18, of "was borne" and "borne" for "came" and "come," though of course the literal meaning, with the omission of the marg.^{12 13}. Without doubt the Authorised Version is less accurate than all its predecessors in 18. This voice we (emphatically) heard come, "borne," "uttered," from heaven, not "which came," merely. It is better it should be, as the Americans suggest, "by the Majestic glory"; so Winer had long ago remarked (Moulton's ed. 462), "all other explanations being arbitrary." Luke 1:26 means "by" or "of" God, not "from," if the reading were certainly ὑπὸ. (Bible Treasury 15:80)

1:18 uttered [or, brought]: [See note to 2 Peter 1:17]

1:19 [whole verse]: 19 is given much better by the Revisers, the inspired contrast of the lamp of prophecy with daylight dawning and the day or morning star arising in the heart being clearly given. (Bible Treasury 14:95)

in your hearts: It was lack of understanding the apostle, which led two men of learning in our day to subject his language to a violence repudiated by all the versions ancient and modern of any worth at all known. Both boldly strove to cut the connection of the words which have been specified as giving the true force, but each in a different way: one, by a parenthesis, so as to bring "ye take heed" into line with "in your hearts"; the other, by joining "in your hearts" with "knowing this first." There is no need to expose particularly the absurdity of either device, which most readers of intelligence will not fail to judge as equally unfounded, as they are due to inability in their authors to enter into the mind of the Spirit in the passage. Nor was that inability confined to those who invented their respective beds of Procrustes for torturing the text into the sense of their preference. One has only to glance over the conflict of opinion among the commentators of note to convince any enquirer that the key was quickly lost; and that neither hoary tradition nor modern pretension offers any satisfactory solution. ("The Heavenly Hope," Three Prophetic Gems, p.44-45) in your hearts: Therefore I do most strenuously oppose the petty efforts that have been made to sever the expression "in our hearts" from this verse. It is a sorrow to see them, and to know that any Christians could be influenced by them. Only this morning I was looking at a book in which there was a most misleading parenthesis introduced, as if the meaning were, "Ye do well to take heed in your hearts" from "the day dawn and the day—star arise." What can one call this but abominable?

There is another way also in which I have seen the truth sought to be destroyed, by connecting "in your hearts" with "knowing this first," contrary to all analogy of Peter or any one else, and in fact without the smallest reason, but with the evident object of obliterating for the heart the value of the heavenly hope. Such dealings with the text I cannot characterize as mistakes only, but as unwarrantable meddling with the word of God. There is not the slightest foundation for either the one punctuation or the other. The English version is perfectly correct in this at least. (ref. missing) in your hearts: It seems due to truth to guard the unsuspecting reader, that he cannot trust the text of this important scripture (2 Pet. 1:19), given as that of Scholz either in the beautifully printed English Hexapla, Bagster's 1841, or in their Critical New Testament, Greek and English, without date. Here lies Dr. F.M.A. Scholz's own edition, 4to Lipsiae, 1836, which presents the words of the apostle Peter, as they are in every other Greek Testament known to me from Erasmus and the Complutensian down to the Critical Edition of Westcott & Hort, and the manual of Dr. Sanday's Lloyd, and of Eberhard Nestle. The punctuation is the same in all. Scholz's text is wholly departed from by parenthetical marks, which force a meaning strange to every editor save him who invented it. For he thus compels the sense, if it has any sense, of a parenthesis beginning with ὥς and ending with ἀνατίγγη. The consequence is to dislocate the immediate link of "in your hearts" with the day star "arising" there. This is destructive, as others have judged, to the express aim of the Holy Spirit, and completely mars the feeling so eminently in keeping with the writer's fervour. Every spiritual mind, one might think, must answer to the apostle's meaning as usually read, and as it is explained above. What at present could move the affections like the gospel's daylight dawning, and the heavenly hope, Christ as day star arising in the heart? What a bright object to win and fix the soul on! What is the effect of the violence done to this passage? To substitute the heart's attention to the prophetic word, distracting it from the gospel daylight, and from the Lord Himself as our hope. Now the saints do well in paying heed to prophecy; but the heart's allegiance and love are due to Christ Himself; and this is exactly annulled by the strange severance here perpetrated. The doer of it falsified, in my judgment, the truth of God, as decidedly as he played false by giving a turn to Scholz's text quite foreign to it. He might at his own peril so deal with his own Edition of the Epistle; but he had no honest title to falsify another man's.

Another, who naturally seemed dissatisfied with this effort, suggested a different manipulation, and would join "in our hearts" with the words that follow. His sense therefore runs, "in your hearts knowing this first, that no prophecy," &c. But who does not perceive the incongruity of the connection, especially in giving this emphasis from so unusual a collocation to "in our hearts" for such an object? Both went out of the plain path of truth to a ditch on either side, and, in equal insensibility to what they did not appreciate, give us nothing but barrenness instead of the rich fruit of the Spirit to fill our hearts with food and gladness.

Presumably either change sprang from the desire to divert the passage from the heart's enjoyment now, which was not understood, to the actual fulfilment of the day of the Lord. But this is to alienate its real character and aim, and to lose what God has given: the heavenly light in general and the Christian's hope meanwhile, truths which had never been learnt from God. ("The Coming, and the Day, of the Lord," Three Prophetic Gems, p.7, Bible Treasury N4:232, see also Bible Treasury 18:286-7)

1:20 prophecy: Permit me briefly to show why I consider the common view to be erroneous. In the first place it gives no reason for taking προφητεία as equivalent to an inspired declaration, predictive or not. Indeed, I am not aware that the word in the New Testament ever has this loose meaning, and I am quite clear that the verb from which it is derived countenances nothing of the sort in 1 Cor. 14:3, but simply contrasts prophesying with speaking in a tongue. In other words, that verse in no way defines prophesying, but compares its character with the gift of tongues. But, even if it were ever so used beyond a doubt in the New Testament, I am of opinion that the context here decidedly restricts προφητεία to the revelation of future events. (Bible Witness & Review 1:296, Christian Annotator 3:35) prophecy . . . is [or, becometh]: [Q. What is the proper force of γίνεται in 2 Peter 1:20? Is it true that the verse refers to the coming of prophecy, whence it draws its origin, rather than how its meaning is to be interpreted? Is it true of all prophecy alike (for example, 1 Tim. 4:4) that it is not of self-interpretation?]

A. I take prophecy in this passage to mean the subject matter of the prophecy when the actual declaration of the mind of God in the revelation made to the mind of the prophet is given, which is the force of ἐπιλύσεως. But this cannot be gathered like the words of an oracle merely from the words not carried on beyond their own force on the subject of which the utterance speaks. Coming from the Holy Ghost, the words are a part of the great scheme of God with His ends always in view. Hence I apprehend prophecy of scripture. A particular prophecy may be recorded in scripture, not in the sense of a prophecy of scripture. Thus when Pharaoh's servants dreamed it was not a prophecy of scripture. Joseph gave the ἐπιλυσις (the word used in Aquila), and they were as thus interpreted a prophecy of the fall of the two servants; but could not come under the character of prophecies of scripture. They ended through bringing about God's purpose as to Joseph in diverse fate of the two servants. In prophecies of scripture the Holy Ghost gives as from one mind, though partially revealed what is in that one mind, what is a link in the chain of all the counsels and purposes of God. Γίνεται is practically tantamount to ἐστι. Still there is more thought of result. The prophecy (that is, the mind of God in what is said) does not derive its being from a particular interpretation of an isolated communication, like the servants' dreams.

Prophecy among the heathen was not in the proper sense of the word the revelation itself, but the carmen which expressed the god's mind. That is, it expressed the import of the revelation as expressed in the language into which it was put for the inquirer; only, as the word of God, He took care that the communication should be as divine as the revelation. (1 Cor. 2:13; 2 Peter 1:21)

So I should not call Agabus' prophecy a prophecy of scripture, though it be more connected indeed with the scheme of God in Christianity. Thus the prophets sought what the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand, and the prophecy to ἐπιλελυμένη gave the mind of God as to its place in the divine plans. Prophecy is not properly the revelation of the thing to the prophet, but the communication of it by the prophet as the Holy Ghost moved him to speak. This, when a prophecy of scripture, was not an isolated communication which began and ended in itself in what it had to tell. Ἰδία ἐπίλυσις does not characterize a scripture prophecy. (Bible Treasury 8:239—40) its own: The main question remains as to the force and reference of ἴδιος. One critic reasons from its frequent opposition to κοινός. But this is too narrow a foundation, because each of these words possesses significations not thus opposed. The fact is that, beside the elliptical κατ' ἰδίαν, ἴδιος occurs near a hundred times in the New Testament, and always means "own" (his, her, its, etc., according to the case). I have little doubt, both from general usage and from the verses before and after the passage under debate, that ἰδίας here refers to the subject of the sentence, προφητεία, and that the meaning is, "No prophecy of Scripture is (or is made) of its own interpretation." Taken by itself, it is not its own interpreter, but must be viewed as part of a grand whole, whereof Christ's glory is the centre. I must be excused, therefore, if I believe the idea of some to be as thorough a perversion of the text as the Romish one. One contends for the general right of man, they for the exclusive prerogative of the church so-called — both, in my judgment, dangerous errors, however concealed or explained. The Holy Ghost leads us to connect facts with God's purposes in Christ, and thus to understand and expound prophecy, which taken by itself is never rightly known. Even Rosenmuller, Wahl, etc., seem to agree with the view here contended for. (Bible Witness & Review 1:296, Christian Annotator 3:35) its own: "Its own," which is the simplest and the strictest and the most frequent usage of the disputed word, alone satisfies the context. It is hard to see why the A.V. and the Revision adopted "private" except that they did not know what to make of it. So does Dean Alford, following in his commentary Luther's idea "that prophecy springs not out of human prognostication." . . . Dean A. says "two references seem to be possible" (to us, and to the prophets themselves). He has overlooked a third, which is even grammatically the most exact, the prophecy itself. (Epist. of Peter, Part 2, p.107-8) its own interpretation: It is not "our," viz., the readers', any more than "of one's own," viz., the prophet's solution; for neither is here in question. Not the prophet but the prophecy had as yet been before us. Nor again does ἐπίλυσις mean production but "interpretation." The verb γίνεται here translated "is," does not warrant any such thought. Even if we plead for its primitive force of becoming or coming, the meaning is that no prophecy of scripture becomes a matter of its own solution. It is by its nature such as to exclude isolated interpretation. It belongs to a vast system which has Christ and His kingdom for its object. (Bible Treasury N13:2) own: it may be doubted whether the textual "private" or the marginal "special" of 20 [in the RV] gives the true force of ἰδίας. Divine prophecy is a vast connected whole, and none of it comes of its own or an isolated solution. (Bible Treasury 14:95) own: no remark is made [by the American correctors of the RV] on the vagueness of "private" interpretation, any more than on the dubious text of 21. (Bible Treasury 15:80)

own: or, isolated (God's Inspiration p. 550) interpretation: There is this great difficulty in the way of the view proposed by Φίλος, that he assumes ἐπίλυσις to be "ability to reveal things," "the exposition of the previously unknown, unrevealed mind of God." It really means solution, or explanation; and so our translators probably understood the term. No prophecy of Scripture is (or is made, γίνεται) of its own solution; it was so originated, and formed of the Spirit, as not to be self-interpreted: it must be taken, in order to be understood, as part of a grand scheme which attests the glory of Christ; and this sense, which results from a close examination of the verse, is entirely confirmed by the context. (Christian Annotator 1:198—9)

interpretation: It is agreed that ἐπίλυσις means interpretation, or the act of interpreting, though some, as Calvin and Grotius, have been rash enough to venture on the conjecture ἐπηλύσεως, and many more have given the force of "movement" to ἐπίλυσις, while it would really require ἐπήλυσις (= approach), or some such word. (Bible Witness & Review 1:296, Christian Annotator 3:35)

1:21 [whole verse]: [See note to 2 Peter 1:20]

^ by: "in old time" was the error of Beza, &c. (Bible Treasury 14:95)

[holy] men: The MSS. are here very confused, both in order which is of less importance, and in words added or omitted. Yet all the uncials omit the article before ἀνθρώποι (men) as the best do ἅγιοι (holy). (Epist. of Peter, Part 2, p.113)

[holy] men: There is no doubt a serious conflict of readings: ἅγιοι (Text. Rc. oi ἅ.) instead of ἀπὸ ἡς K L &c., ἅγιοι τοῦ A. ἀπὸ θ. ἅγιοι C. &c. But the critics generally prefer the text of B and several cursives supported by the Bodleian Syr. and the Coptic, which omit ἅγιοι. (Bible Treasury 14:95)

2:1 Master: the Revisers give rightly "the Master" (δεσπότην) that bought them; for it is purchase, not redemption, which is in question. Purchase is universal; not so redemption, which is inseparable from faith in Christ and the forgiveness of offences. It is clear from the passage before us that the most wicked are "bought" by the Master, whom they deny to their own swift destruction; that they were "redeemed" is mere assumption, and, in fact, a grave error. (Bible Treasury 14:95) bought: [Q. T.E. asks if it is right to say of those who die in their sins, that they were redeemed by the blood of Jesus. The purchase of a slave, he remarks, is never called his redemption, unless he is bought for the express purpose of being set free.]

A. T.E. is arguing from the application of our English word "redemption;" not from the meaning of the original, which simply means "bought," and is so translated in 2 Peter 2:1, of the lost and in 1 Cor. 6:20, 7:23, of the saved. The same word occurs upwards of twenty times in the gospels, and is applied to the purchase of land and cattle, food and raiment, &c. In fact, only in the Revelation is it rendered "redeemed;" and even there, the same word bears the sense "buy" exactly the same number of times. It will thus be seen that the argument fails. For if in Greek the same word is translated either way, it is clear that the term in itself does not involve the ultimate destiny of the purchased, or the purpose of the purchaser. But the passage already referred to in 2 Peter is decisive, that false teachers, enemies of the flock of God, are said to deny the Lord (δεσπότην) that bought or redeemed them. The difficulty is owing to a not sufficiently large view of God's ways and of Christ's work. The reader will do well to weigh John 17:2, and Heb. 9, 10. (Bible Treasury 3:48, see also Bible Treasury 3:111 and Bible Treasury 16:277)

2:2 dissolutenesses: There is no doubt that the Text. Rec. must here yield to much better authority, and the intrinsic sense. (Epist. of Peter, Part 2, p.118)

the: [In the RV] it is "the" truth (Bible Treasury 14:95)

2:4 when they: it is "angels when they sinned," not "the angels that sinned," which would require τῶν ἁ. τῶν ἁ. and then would mean the whole; whereas the apostle speaks only of a part even of those that fell. (Bible Treasury 14:95) cast . . . down to lowest hell: Ταρταρώσας is the word translated "cast down to hell," and occurs here only in the New Testament. It means hurling into the lowest abyss. (Bible Treasury 14:95) chains [or, pits]: It is a question between σιροῖς or σειροῖς (⌘ A B C) and σειραῖς (K L P and the cursives). Here τηρουμένων has better support than τετηρουμένων. (Epist. of Peter, Part 2, p.126) chains [or, pits]: there is a question of reading on which turns either "pits" or "chains," the more ancient copies inclining to the former, while the expression of Jude may have suggest the latter. (Bible Treasury 14:95)

2:5 an eighth [i.e. with seven others]: "N. an eighth" means with seven others. (Bible Treasury 14:95)

2:9 to be punished: If the Revisers render τηρουμένων in 4 "to be reserved," and in 3:11 λυομένων "to be destroyed," why not κολαζομένους in 9 "to be punished"? Does not this suit εἰς ἡμ. κρ. better than "under punishment"? It is a class so characterised. (Bible Treasury 14:95)

2:11 being greater: it is not "which are greater," &c., but "greater as they are," &c. (Bible Treasury 14:95)

2:12 shall also perish in their corruption: In 12, 13 are hazardous changes [in the RV], not "shall utterly (or, also) perish in their own corruption," as in the Authorised Version, but "shall in their destroying surely be destroyed," and "suffering wrong as the hire of wrong-doing," instead of "receiving as they shall wages of unrighteousness." (Bible Treasury 14:95)

2:13 receiving as they shall wages of unrighteousness: [See note to 2 Peter 2:12]

unrighteousness: Here the Revisers have been induced, probably by Drs. Westcott and Hort, not without other support, of course, to accept the reading of B ⌘^m. ἀδικούμενοι. But will the reading even if feasible on so slender a basis, bear the version? (Bible Treasury 14:95) ephemeral: "In the day time" is a questionable reading of ἐν ἡμ. in this connection, and, as has been remarked, hardly consistent with τροφήν, delicacy or indulgence of life, which might be by day quite as much as by night. Hence interpreters who differ widely in general, Calvin, Estius, Grotius, C. à Lap., De Wette, &c., prefer "ephemeral." (Bible Treasury 14:95) love feasts [or, deceits]: There is no small diversity and correction in the readings here. Compare Jude 12. (Epist. of Peter, Part 2, p.137) love feasts [or, deceits]: There is another singular choice, not of rendering but of reading in the verse, ἀγάπαις A^{corr}. B against the overwhelming evidence of ⌘ A^m. C K L P, almost all the cursives, and most ancient Versions, not to speak of early citations, for ἀμάταις followed by the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:95) love feasts [or, deceits]: [The American correctors of the RV] would for "love-feasts" read "deceivings" and say in marg.¹² "Some ancient authorities read love-feasts." Assuredly it is strong, in a New Testament that aspires to universal use (dislodging the Authorised Version) to adopt a reading on the very slender testimony of A^{corr}. B and a cursive, with perhaps the Vulgate and some other ancient versions, vague enough in all conscience, as against all other authority, and hence adopted only by Lachmann, Tregelles, and the recent Cambridge editors. (Bible Treasury 15:80)

2:16 forbade: Is "stayed," in 16, a real improvement [in the RV] on "forbad" of the Authorised Version, as rendering ἐκώλυσεν? "Withstood" might represent it better than either, or Mr. Green's "checked." (Bible Treasury 14:95)

2:17 and mists . . . reserved ⌘: For "clouds," the best authorities give "and mists," and omit "for ever." (Epist. of Peter, Part 2, p.139) reserved ⌘: the evidence in favour of "for ever" is strong. (Bible Treasury 14:95)

2:18 just escaping: "Those just (or, a little) escaping," not "those clean (or, really) escaped," as in the Text. Rec. In ver. 20 it is the aorist participle, not the present as in ver. 18. (Epist. of Peter, Part 2, p.139)

just escaping: τ. ὀλίγως ἀποφεύ. is the true text, not τ. ὄντως ἀποφν. They were just escaping, not "clean escaped," or even "just fled." (Bible Treasury 14:95)

2:20 is become: γέγονεν "is become," not merely "is" (Bible Treasury 14:95)

2:21 back: ὑποστρέψαι B C P &c. ἐπιστρέψαι K L &c. (Epist. of Peter, Part 2, p.143)

2:22 [But] . . . [whole verse]: the Revisers may rightly omit the copula, but there is the usual laxity in expressing both the presence and the absence of the article: there hath happened to them the [import, pith, spirit] of the true proverb, A dog turned again to his own vomit, and, A sow washed to wallowing in mire. (Bible Treasury 14:95)

[whole verse]: one might have expected that the anarthrous form of the Greek in the last verse might have had a notice [from the American correctors of the RV], "A dog" returned, &c. and "A sow" when washed &c. (Bible Treasury 15:80)

[But]: δέ is not in ⌘ A B &c., but in ⌘ C K L P etc. Lesser flaws we may leave. (Epist. of Peter, Part 2, p.145)

3:1 [whole verse]: On 3 they [The American correctors of the RV] are wholly silent. Yet the first verse seems to invite correction. "This [is] now, beloved, a second letter I am writing to you." (Bible Treasury 15:80)

3:2 your: The uncials give ὑμῶν the cursives ἡμῶν as in the ordinary text. It does not seem that any of the ancient versions support the former. No doubt the peculiarity of the phrase accounts for this. But we may be assured that, as it is overwhelmingly attested, so we do well to receive it, and learn the special ground for the unusual expression. It was a reminder of their near and dear relation to Christians. (Epist. of Peter, Part 2, p.149)

your: the Revisers rightly read and translate "the command of the Lord and Saviour through your apostles," ἡμῶν having quite considerable support, even if it could then bear the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:95)

3:3 with mockery: the Authorised Version after Text. Rec. wrongly omits "with mocking." (Bible Treasury 14:95)

3:5 [whole verse]: The rather difficult verses 5-7 seem to be fairly given [in the RV], though connecting πυρί with τεθη., rather than τη, as in the Authorised Version and most others. (Bible Treasury 14:95)

3:6 [whole verse]: [See note to 2 Peter 3:5]

3:7 [whole verse]: [See note to 2 Peter 3:5]

the same: Of course, "his" supplants "the same" (Bible Treasury 14:95)

3:8ff [whole passage]: [The translation of 2 Peter 3 was interrupted by the death of WK in 1906, leaving several verses missing.] (Epist. of Peter, Part 2, p. 173)

3:9 towards you: it is rightly "to you" on preponderant authority; but there is some question between δι' or εἰς, the former of which Tischendorf adopts in his last edition with ⌘ A, half a dozen cursives, and the ancient Versions generally. It would mean "on your account." (Bible Treasury 14:95) willing: [see note to 1 Tim. 2:4]

2 Peter Notes

3:10 thief _Λ: the Revised Version omits rightly "in the night." Here again we see how lax are their views of the article. (Bible Treasury 14:95-96)

3:11 thus: "there," not "then," is preferred by the Revisers on small but good authority, the copies greatly differing. (Bible Treasury 14:96)

_Λ holy: "All" is an effort in the Revised Version, as in the Authorised Version, to express the plural which expresses every form of behaviour and godliness. (Bible Treasury 14:96)

3:12 hastening: [The RV] justly discard[s] the influence of the Vulgate in "hasting unto" (as indeed the margin of the Authorised Version suggests); but whether "earnestly desiring," as in the Bodleian Syriac, adequately conveys the meaning is another matter. If they mean hastening the coming of that day in heart, for aught more seems far-fetched or worse, I believe them right; but this is rather exposition or application than rendering. (Bible Treasury 14:96)

by reason of which: Nor is [the RV's] . . . version of δι' ἧν, "by reason of which," though of course correct grammatically, the only one that is sure. The temporal sense is no less just. It is a question of context which suits best here. Bengel construes it with παρουσία. (Bible Treasury 14:96)

3:14 by Him: The Revisers scarcely seem justified in giving αὐτῷ (14) so defined a force as "in His sight." Even Winer does not go so far. It might be "for" no less than "of" Him. (Bible Treasury 14:96)

3:18 in grace and knowledge: The Revisers translate ἐν χ. κ. τ. γ. (18) no better than the Authorised Version. They have no right to say "in the grace," &c., any more than the Authorised Version "in the knowledge." The insertion of our definite article here misleads. It is more correct to say "in grace and knowledge," &c. (Bible Treasury 14:96) eternity's day: I apprehend that εἰς ἡμέραν αἰῶνος is in allusion to, and in contrast with, "the day of judgment," (verse 7,) "the day of the Lord" or "of God," (verses 10,12) in the chapter which the phrase closes, and that the idea is the eternal day, which succeeds all previous days of sin and judgment. The words in John 6:51 (εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα) are the commonest possible expression of eternity, or "for ever," whether absolute or relative, which of course depends on the context and nature of the case. See Matt. 21:19; Mark 3:29, 11:14; Luke 1:55; John 4:14, 6:58, 8:35,51,52, 10:28, 11:26, 12:34, 13:8, 14:16; 1 Cor. 8:13; 2 Cor. 9:9; Heb. 6:20, 7:17,21,24,28; 1 Peter 1:23,25; 1 John 2:17; 2 John 2; which are, I think, all the occurrences in the New Testament. Εἰς αἰῶνα (in 2 Peter 2:17) has been dropped by some editors, though even they admit the same phrase in Jude 13. The omission of the article implies, that the phrase is characteristic, i.e. adjectival of the sense; and "everlasting," as "for ever," pertains to τοῦ σκοτους, rather than to the verb. The plural form often occurs, as in Rom. 1:25, 9:5, 11:36, 16:27; 2 Cor. 11:31, &c.; or with πάντας, as in Jude 25; or yet more emphatically εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων, as in Gal. 1:5, and often elsewhere. The idea here is, not so much one unbroken eternity, (expressed by the singular, simple or complex, as in Heb. 1:9,) as the constant succession of age upon age, which is pretty well given in the English "for ever and ever." Ephes. 3:21 is the most peculiar of all; for γενεάς expresses ordinarily human generations, τοῦ αἰῶνος of itself would convey the thought of an undivided everlasting; and τῶν αἰώνων closes the series with successive ages sweeping on. The whole phrase intimates, I suppose, a future beyond the bounds of every measure of time. The anarthrous form εἰς αἰῶνας αἰώνων occurs in Rev. 19:11, (where, however, C. has αἰῶνα αἰῶνος) which, as we have seen, modifies the sense so far as to present no positive object before the mind, as in Rev. 19:3, and simply in this case characterises the action of the verb. (Christian Annotator 3:243, Bible Witness & Review 1:317-318)

Notes for 1 John

1:1 [whole verse]: 1:1 stands better in the Revised Version, which not only makes each [verb] more distinct, but correctly distinguishes the tenses. It is in each "that which;" whilst the two later are not perfects, but simply preterites. (Bible Treasury 14:110)

Word of life: G—y asks whether περὶ τοῦ λόγου τῆς ζωῆς should not be translated, "of the word, the life," rather than "of the word of life." He refers to Phil. 2:16, where λόγον ζωῆς occurs without the article, and in the sense of the quickening testimony of God. Here it is the person of the Son, who is so often called the Word, and the Life, but not (save here) the Word of life.

A. It is obvious, however, that this proposal would give a phrase still more remote from the language used elsewhere in Scripture; so that the usual version seems preferable. (Bible Treasury 2:32)

1:2 and . . . the which: there is no need for the awkwardness of "the life, the eternal life" in 2, any more than for "that eternal life" in the Authorised Version. Nor should the verse open with "For," but "And." (Bible Treasury 14:110) report: Why "declare" [in the RV] in 1:2 and again in 3? The Revisers had already given like the Authorised Version "declared" to ἐξῆγγ. in John 1:18. They are quite right in discriminating ἀμαγγ- from ἀγγ-. But why not adhere to its strict sense "report"? They correctly cleave to "message" for the uncompounded substantive in 5. — "Report" for ἀπαγγ. in 2,3 is just as suitable as in its ordinary usage. The Revisers have shown undue deference to the Authorised Version in contenting themselves from the beginning of the New Testament with "tell" or "shew," "bring word" or "report" being better in the first occurrence (Matt. 2:8). There are cases where the context makes "report" harsh; but here, so far is this from being so, that no word appears so appropriate to my mind. It admirably suits the peculiar relation of the apostle to Christ on the one hand and to the saints addressed on the other. It imports the authority that sent the message, or at least the source whence it was brought. (Bible Treasury 15:95) eternal life: Again, is it not peculiar to give here only "the life, the eternal life?" Though the precisely same structure occurs in 2:15 they are content with "the life eternal". One need not adduce other phrases to shew how little it was called for. (Bible Treasury 15:95)

1:3 report: [see note to 1 John 1:2]

report . . . yea: is not the true force "report" rather than "declare," or "show"? "Yea," &c., well represents καὶ δέ. (Bible Treasury 14:110)

also . . . [we] . . . [to you]: The unlearned reader may be assured that there is no variant in the ancient and best authorities of the least significance doctrinally here. "Also" is added after "to you" in ver. 3, not because it is certain, but in deference to the Uncial MSS. and some of the Old Versions. But it affects emphasis only, as it may be due to the same form in the next clause. There is more doubt as to the emphatic "we" and "to you" in the beginning of ver. 4; but the more common "to you" is retained in the last clause with excellent witnesses (and the Text. Rec.), though recent critics lean to the well-supported "of us" (with the text of Stephens). Both are certainly in sense true. The question is which suits best the context as helping to decide where the external evidence is nearly balanced. But these pronouns are sometimes confused in the best copies, as they differ by one letter only. — The italics express, not a supplied word (as in the A.V.), but the personal pronoun used with emphasis. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.1)

1:4 [we] . . . [to you]: The first serious difference of reading [in the RV] is in 4, ἡμεῖς, "we," (A^{pm} B P &c.) for ὑμῖν, "unto you" (A^{corr} C K L &c.); and again, ἡμῶν, "our" (B L., many cursives and versions), for ὑμῶν (A C K P, the majority of cursives and many ancient versions). R. Stephens followed the Complutensian editors in preferring "our," Elzevir followed Erasmus and Beza in adopting "you;" and so respectively the Revised Version and the Authorised Version. If "our" be right, it would join the believers with the apostles in the same joy through fellowship with the Father and with His Son. (Bible Treasury 14:110)

[we] . . . [to you]: it is well known what conflict there is in the readings and the editions, and this in a twofold question. Should it be ἡμεῖς or ὑμῖν? and again ἡμῶν or ὑμῶν? If apparent difficulty will have weight, as goes the familiar maxim of all textual critics, the first person must be allowed to be the less obvious; a corrector's hand would probably bring in the second. Even Stephens and Elzevir do not agree as to the last pair, the Compl. edition joining the former, as did Beza in his first edition, but not in those subsequent. So Tischendorf wavered in both clauses, his eighth edition adopting the first personal pronoun. Both MSS. and Vv. of the highest character have additions unmeaning or worse. (Bible Treasury 15:95)

[we] . . . [to you]: [See note to 1:3]

1:5 this is the message: is it not strange that the Revisers adopt a text so ill supported as αὕτη ἐστίν (A, &c.), when there is such strong and united authority for the more emphatic ἐστὶν αὕτη (B C K L P, the mass of cursives, &c.), "And there is this message," &c.? Certainly the early editors, Erasmus, the Complutensian, and Colinaeus all give the emphatic form according to ancient authority, but not R. Stephens, Beza, and Elzevir. Was it Beza that influenced the Authorised translators in "This then?" He ventures in his notes to take καὶ as equivalent to οὖν where it is clear that it merely adds an entirely new subject; and this a "message," not "promise," as would be true if the text of all the older editors could stand. But it is really ἀγγελία, not ἐπαγγ., in spite of C P and some cursives. It is remarkable that our translators, in misrendering their text, stumbled on the version of the right text. (Bible Treasury 14:110) this is the message: the true word is ἀγγελία "message," which all critics endorse, though excellent authority sustains the unquestionable error of ἐπαγγ. imported here from ch. 2:25 where it is certainly right. That this is so finds confirmation in ch. 3:11, where ἐπαγγ. occurs again in some first-rate authorities, though it really is nonsense. This is one of the cases where Colinaeus alone presents the true reading. Did the Authorised translators know this? It is curious that they should give the true sense from the false text of all the other old editions. (Bible Treasury 15:95)

1:6 ^ darkness: we see as elsewhere, "the" darkness [in the RV]. Perhaps the abstract use of the article was forgotten. It is a question of specific darkness in contrast with "the" light, which would give the article. (Bible Treasury 15:95)

1:7 [Christ]: Testimony of weight casts doubt on reading "Christ" here; the usage of John rather favours it. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.20)

[Christ]: There is good authority (B C P, &c.) for omitting "Christ" in 7, though most witnesses insert it: which one would think should have been stated in the margin [of the RV]. (Bible Treasury 14:110)

[Christ] . . . cleanseth . . . all [or, every]: "Christ" has not only many suffrages but some authorities of weight; yet there can be little doubt that the Revisers have rightly dropt it. In the same verse it is surely open to question at least whether "every" sin be not more exact than "all." To this may be opposed "all" unrighteousness in 9; but there is meant "every" kind of act, though it be less easy to say so in English of these moral ideas where "all" is on the whole best. To the repentant believers God is faithful and just, not only in remitting their sins as a whole but in cleansing them from every shade of unrighteousness. It is the principle in all its absoluteness, as John loves to speak. See again the force of the present in 7, not mere historic actuality, but the abstract truth, which from the first abides true for the believer. (Bible Treasury 15:95-96) cleanseth: It is sad ignorance of Greek, or English, to think that this tense only expresses historically present time. It has, where required, its abstract sense independently of time. This is what the apostle means in all the three clauses of ver. 7, and in this, the last as well as the rest; it is what Christ's blood does. It cleanses from every sin. It is no question here of the time when. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.33) cleanseth: [Q. Is it true that the last clause of this verse teaches us that the blood of Jesus cleanseth the sins of believers as a present process (that is, is actually cleansing)?]

I John Notes

A. It is always a serious thing when an effort is made, on grammatical grounds, to overthrow a plainly revealed truth of the gospel. Now, there is not a single fact more certain than that in Christ we have redemption through Christ's blood, the forgiveness of sins or offences. (Eph. 1; Col. 1.). . .

How, then, did the apostle use the present? Was there laxity in his expression, when he said, "The blood of Jesus his Son cleanseth us from every sin?" On the contrary, the tense is just as exact in 1 John 1:7, as his use of distinctive participles in Revelation 1:5. A little learning is proverbially dangerous; and in the exegesis of scripture voluminous commentators are apt to go astray, no less than their followers. But to give an opinion on such a question hardly becomes people ignorant of the fact, that the present in Greek, as in most languages, is in no way limited to an incomplete action yet in course of performance; for it no less correctly expresses an absolute present, as in general propositions, doctrinal statements, apothegms, and descriptions of manners, customs, or matters of frequent occurrence. Just so, in English, we say, "Food nourishes the human body; poison kills." The idea intended is not the continuance of the act, but the quality of each material, or their opposite effects on man. Almost every chapter in the epistles furnishes instances. Take a plain and kindred statement from 1 John 2: "He is the propitiation for our sins." Does the present here mean that He is actually now atoning for our sins? Clearly not; such an interpretation of the present would incontrovertibly overthrow the atonement. It is here evidently used in its absolute sense, without reference to any definite moment, for expressing the great and blessed truth of His propitiation. Just so in our text the notion of continuous cleansing would distinctly contradict the grand doctrine of the Epistle to the Hebrews, and of the gospel in general. It is therefore the gravest error.

Further, it is inexcusable ignorance to assume that the present tense must be so taken; for the present may convey an absolute or abstract statement, and not continuance only. Let the reader take the Epistle of James, or the Book of Proverbs, and observe how often the absolute present occurs in every chapter. The same thing will be found in Paul's epistles, and especially in John. The sense and the context must decide which is meant in each case; and the selfsame principle applies to every book which lays down general maxims as truly as to the Bible. (Bible Treasury 12:239)

all [or, every]: "Adelphos" reasons from the Authorized Version, which may be correct enough for ordinary use. But it is as bad scholarship as it is bad doctrine to apply it to ridding the believer from indwelling sin, or giving him practical power against it. The true force is, "the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from every sin" (ἀπὸ πάσης ἁμαρτίας). (So I believe it is rendered in the recent and exact version of Mr. T. Sheldon Green, who will scarcely be charged with "Exclusive" proclivities. The only wonder is that any scholar should have taken the passage otherwise.) No unbiassed scholar who weighs the passage will deny this; as no person open to the bearing of truth will deny that the truth here laid down connects itself with Romans 5 and the passover, rather than with Romans 6 and the Red Sea. (Bible Treasury 8:176)

1:10 [whole verse]: Even in 10 the aorist is avoided, as being the tense of narrative; it is the question of our being no sinners, the denial of our being in that position, which gives God the lie. This is a bolder evil and more flatly opposes His word than saying we have no sin, bad as this self-deception is. The perfect presents the general truth of a continuous state resulting from past acts. (Bible Treasury 15:96)

2:1 [whole verse] . . . [the]: none would gather [from the RV] that "righteous" at the end is anarthrous. Bp. Middleton need not excuse the writer; who means to draw attention especially to that quality "as righteous." The general sense, however, of 1,2 is accurately given in the Revised Version where the Authorised translation had greatly failed. (Bible Treasury 15:96)

Advocate: "Advocate" is the same word (παράκλητος) that the apostle John applies in the Gospel to the Holy Spirit, which is conveyed not so correctly there as "the Comforter." This would require παρακλήτωρ as in the Sept. Version of Job 16:2. Whereas the very formation of παράκλητος, and above all its meaning as understood from its application in Scripture, rather signify one called on our behalf who can perfectly do for us what we are and must be incapable of doing. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.56)

Advocate: It answered (as has been often shown as far as a poor earthly illustration might furnish it) to the "Patron" among the early Romans, when they were not so selfish, luxurious, and corrupt as they became afterwards; but when there was among them at any rate a moral feeling strong for heathen people. Their clients could look up to their chiefs, the various members of the family, of the "clan," as they call it in another part of our country [i.e. Scotland. Ed.]. The "clan" could claim the aid of the "Patron," and he was bound, by the very fact of being their chief, to take a personal and active interest in every one needing his help that belonged to the clan. At any rate this was the theory; for we must not expect it fully in practice, which is quite another thing in man and this world. But advocacy was the idea. And now in the Lord Jesus, what was an idea greatly failing among men, the Christian finds its perfection. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.58)

Advocate: [See notes to John 13:33 and 14:16.]

2:2 [whole verse]: [See note to 1 John 2:1]

for Λ : It is not correct to say that the propitiation of Jesus is here stated to be for the sins of the whole world. The English version says so, I know, but it is by inserting words which are better left out. He is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but also for the whole world. There is provision for it to the uttermost; but Scripture never speaks of the sins being borne away, save of believers. And it is to me as plain as possible that this very passage discriminates between "us" and "the world," even as to expiation; while advocacy with the Father is in no way connected with the world, but with the family of God. (Christian Annotator 2:273) for Λ : It is not said "for (the sins of) the whole world." There the translators were rash. (The Revisers give the difference correctly.) There is the danger of adding to Scripture, and the duty of believing Scripture only. Man's addition makes the difficulty; adhering to God's word solves it, while it says enough to proclaim divine mercy to the whole world. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.65-66)

for Λ : It cannot be urged too plainly or often that "the sins of" is an interpolation, not only uncalled for, but an addition which goes beyond the truth and is therefore false, as all exaggerations must be. (Bible Treasury N2:303) for Λ : Do you observe that certain words, printed in the italics of the Authorised Version, are here left out? The reason is, because they ought never to have been in. It is no pleasure to make such a remark on the common English Version. They are the words of one who values as a whole the plain English Bible beyond any other version in general use. But let God be true Who did not write those words. (Bible Treasury N3:248) for Λ : I leave out "the sins of." It is clear enough that they ought never to have been inserted in the common English Bible. Not only are they not required for the sense, as words generally are, but they injure the sense, and really insinuate erroneous doctrine. If the sins of the whole world were met by the propitiation of Christ, the whole world would be saved. No such statement occurs anywhere in the word of God. (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist. and Rev., p.301-2) for Λ : [The RV] is a great improvement on the Authorised Version, where the words added in italics overstep the truth, and unwittingly imply a serious error. If "the sins of" the whole world were expiated, what would there be to judge? Never does Scripture so teach, save as to believers. Yet Christ died for every man — gave Himself a ransom for all; but only of believers is it said that He died and suffered for their sins, or bore them in His body on the tree. But He is the propitiation for the whole world, as well as for our sins; and so the gospel can go forth freely to all the creation. (Bible Treasury 14:110)

2:3 [whole verse]: Is 3 adequately rendered by the Revisers? Who could gather the difference between the present and the perfect in the opening clause? Even the Authorised Version makes a faint effort; the Revised Version none. Surely $\epsilon\gamma\gamma$. (the second "know") means "we acquired and possess the knowledge of." So it is at the beginning of 4 also. (Bible Treasury 14:110) have known [or, have the knowledge of]: The first "know" is in the present, this (the second) in the perfect, $\epsilon\gamma\gamma\omega\kappa\alpha\mu\epsilon\upsilon$, which means (not "have known," but) "have the knowledge of." (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist. and Rev., p.303)

2:3-6 [whole passage]: is it an intelligent division of the Epistle to make 3-6 a part of the paragraph beginning with ch. 2? To my mind verses 1,2, form the necessary supplement to the doctrine of chapter 1 in both its parts (1-4, and 5-10), intimating not only the responsibility of the family of God, but the provision of grace to restore in the case of sin. Then 3 begins to unfold the qualities or characteristic ways of the life given us in Christ, the eternal life of the believer: obedience (3-6) and love (7-11), with their opposites. But this points to two paragraphs to be marked accordingly, which the Revisers have utterly missed by grouping 2:1,2 with 3-6 as if they were continuous; whereas the great break is after 2; and 3-11 might better have gone together, though it is perhaps more strictly correct to give first 3-6, and then 7-11 as distinct. (Bible Treasury 14:110)

2:4 have known: [See note to 1 John 2:3]

2:6 [paragraph]: [see note to 1 John 2:3]

2:7 beloved Λ : The best authorities in every kind warrant this reading, not "brethren," as in many later manuscripts. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.90)

Beloved Λ . . . heard Λ : the true reading "beloved" is rightly followed [in the RV], as fitly introducing the commandment — love. Also the Revisers as rightly expunge "from the beginning" at the end of the verse, however important these words are in the middle of it. (Bible Treasury 14:110) heard Λ : The preponderance of weight rejects the addition [of "from the beginning"]. The sense is implied as in the previous clause. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.90)

2:8 [whole verse]: [The RV is accurate] where the Authorised Version exaggerates while it is also feeble. (Bible Treasury 15:96) passing: the rendering of the Revised Version is correct — "passing away," not "past," as in the Authorised Version. Past it will never be till Christ reigns in power and glory. Yet the same thing being true in Him and in the saints (whatever the difference of measure), the darkness passes away, and the true light does now shine. (Bible Treasury 14:110)

2:11 Λ blinded: Why the Revisers say "hath" blinded in 11 does not appear. The fact was enough for the Spirit of God. (Bible Treasury 15:96)

2:12 write: there is no doubt that the weight of external evidence is greatly in favour of $\epsilon\gamma\gamma\alpha\psi\alpha$, but there is sufficient testimony in support of $\gamma\gamma\alpha\phi\omega$. This, in my judgment, is demanded by internal considerations, easily mistaken by superficial scribes who in all probability changed the form of the verb to suit their perversion through ignorance. The complications of commentators are as helpless as those of the critics. Hence Dr. Wordsworth joins with those whom he often opposes. The truth intended is perfectly clear, though ancients and moderns agree in missing it. There is first the $\gamma\gamma\alpha\phi\omega$, "I write," to the little children or entire family; the apostle writes to all because their sins are forgiven them for His name's sake. Then follows to each section, fathers, young men, and babes, thrice $\gamma\gamma\alpha\phi\omega$, "I write." But next is thrice repeated the form $\epsilon\gamma\gamma\alpha\psi\alpha$, "I wrote," which goes over the ground again, with increasing enlargement to the "young men" (14-17) and to the "babes" (18-27), after which the comprehensive τ . "little children" is resumed in the Epistle, as it had preceded. I presume that the scribes did not observe this, and imagined the threefold connexion lay in the end of 13 with 14, and so assimilated the form of the verb. They ought to have seen the threefold exhortation of 13, taken up again and expanded in 14-27. (Bible Treasury 15:96)

2:12-29 [whole passage]: Is not the arrangement of 12-29 [in the RV] objectionable? It gives evidence that the structure of the Epistle was not understood. For 12 is the comprehensive address to all the family of God ($\tau\epsilon\kappa\nu\acute{\iota}\alpha$) on the ground of their sins forgiven for Christ's name. Then 13 divides the family into the three classes of (1) fathers, (2) young men, and (3) babes ($\pi\alpha\iota\delta\acute{\iota}\alpha$), respectively and specifically addressed again in (1) 14, (2) 14-17, and (3) 18-27; 28 and 29 resuming the general designation to the entire family as in 2:1, 3:7, 18, 4:4, and 5:21. Clearly therefore, if this be true as I feel assured, a new paragraph should not begin at 18 as in the Revised Version; as it might also have conduced to clearness if 12 had stood alone, and a new paragraph had begun with 28. No doubt the Revised Version has sought to distinguish $\tau\epsilon\kappa\nu\acute{\iota}\alpha$ from the class contained under it ($\pi\alpha\iota\delta\acute{\iota}\alpha$) by adding "my;" but is this the best way of marking this distinction? (Bible Treasury 14:111)

2:13 write: It is extraordinary that any Christian of the least intelligence should blunder, as Dean Alford did here. In the third edition of his last volume p. 440, he still talks of "three classes of readers, denoted the first time by $\tau\epsilon\kappa\nu\acute{\iota}\alpha$, $\pi\alpha\tau\acute{\epsilon}\rho\epsilon\varsigma$, $\nu\epsilon\alpha\nu\acute{\iota}\sigma\kappa\omicron\iota$ and the second time by $\pi\alpha\iota\delta\acute{\iota}\alpha$, $\pi\alpha\tau\acute{\epsilon}\rho\epsilon\varsigma$, $\nu\epsilon\alpha\nu\acute{\iota}\sigma\kappa\omicron\iota$." But this is mere oversight of the common portion of the $\tau\epsilon\kappa\nu\acute{\iota}\alpha$, followed by the three divisions into $\pi\alpha\tau\acute{\epsilon}\rho\epsilon\varsigma$, $\nu\epsilon\alpha\nu\acute{\iota}\sigma\kappa\omicron\iota$, $\pi\alpha\iota\delta\acute{\iota}\alpha$, which is repeated with greater detail (except for the $\pi\alpha\tau\acute{\epsilon}\rho\epsilon\varsigma$) in verses 14 to 17 for the $\nu\epsilon\alpha\nu\acute{\iota}\sigma\kappa\omicron\iota$, and in verses 18 to 27 for the $\pi\alpha\iota\delta\acute{\iota}\alpha$. Afterwards $\tau\epsilon\kappa\nu\acute{\iota}\alpha$ is the address to all from verse 28, as he addressed all in verse 12. What misled Alford was one of those mistakes (too often in the oldest uncials, \aleph A B C L P, etc.) which give $\epsilon\gamma\gamma\alpha\psi\alpha$ in the last clause of verse 13, from the scribe's confusion with what follows. It is not even true in fact; for the apostle had not written yet to the $\pi\alpha\iota\delta\acute{\iota}\alpha$. The true reading, though not so well supported, is $\gamma\gamma\alpha\phi\omega$ for all three on the first mention, $\epsilon\gamma\gamma\alpha\psi\alpha$, for all three on the second. Muddle is the result for the exposition founded on an evident misreading. To say that παῖδια is here “addressed to all the readers” is to ignore words, context and sense. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.119) write: There is preponderant witness for “I wrote” here, as there is occasionally for as evident blunders of early date in copyists. So it is here, where the context utterly forbids it, and its introduction brings in nothing but confusion, as is abundantly clear from the commentary of Dean Alford swayed by it. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.109)

write: It is granted that diplomatic evidence is decidedly in favour of the misreading ἐγ. in the end of 13. In fact, only K, a Moscow uncial, with a fair amount of cursives and some ancient versions, stands opposed to the great mass of ancient authority. It is one of the very few cases where a few witnesses of less value contain the true reading disfigured from an early date, so that the error was widely diffused. The effect is most disastrous on the interpretation, as any English reader may see in Dean Alford’s work, where we are thereby landed in the bewildering conclusion that we have three classes of readers, denoted the first time by τεκνία! πατέρες, νεανίσκοι, and the second time by παῖδια, πατέρες, νεανίσκοι: a strange confusion, where the fathers are made the central group, first introduced by τ. and then by π. as if these were identical, whereas there is the necessity of admitting that τ. and π. are differently addressed; a singular thing if they were the same class, to the loss of the truth that the first is the general designation, as the latter described particularly the youngest class. The inference is that τ. and π. address all the readers alike! and that “nothing satisfactory” comes out, which is very true. If γράφω be accepted all through 13, light dawns, and the beautiful order of the truth shines unmistakably. After speaking of all in 12, the writer first briefly addresses each of the three subdivisions, and then a second time more fully, as need required, which gives so much the force to the “fathers” where he could only repeat, without adding one word more; for Christ is all. (Bible Treasury 14:111) write: Is it not due to the same lack of appreciating the truth intended that the Revisers like others adopt the well nigh absurd variant ἐγραψα instead of γράφω in the last part of 13? It is contrary to the plain facts of the context, and the necessary bearing of the verse. The Apostle had not written before to the babes; he was now writing to them as such for the first time, as in the same verse to the fathers and to the young men. Then he goes over the ground again to the three in 14-27, where ἐγραψα is requisite, not γράφω. (Bible Treasury 14:111)

2:18 [paragraph]: [see note to 1 John 2:12]

have come . . . hour: “there have arisen” or “come” is better than the Authorised Version, as last “hour” is more vivid. (Bible Treasury 14:111)

2:19 none are of us: This last is a very strange and incorrect rendering: “they were not all of us.” But really it has no just meaning whatever. It should be regarded as only a slovenly translation, or rather mistranslation. For what the Greek text actually says is that “they all were not of us”; and the English idiom of this is that “none of them were of us.” But if you say, “they were not all of us,” it would imply that some were. Some of these antichrists were of us! This the apostle expressly contradicts. The fact is that we see in this how the most learned men, when they come to the Bible, seem to close their eyes. It might be interesting to search into the cause which exposed men of piety and learning to so strange an error. But it suffices to say positively that the only right sense is the quite different thought that none of them — none of these antichrists — “were of us.” The unlearned reader may be assured that such is the true meaning on the strictest grammatical ground, which scholars certainly ought not to fail in, as they sometimes do and have ever done. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.146) none are of us: it is rightly “they all are not of us,” i.e., none are of us. The margin, like the Authorised Version, is in error, if not nonsense. (Bible Treasury 14:111)

none are of us: The version of 19 is literally correct [in the RV] (not margin²); but is it a good idiomatic rendering? It is not the universality that is denied, but its predicate: “none are of us;” or “all are not of us.” The Authorised Version or the margin² is not sense. Compare the end of ver. 21 and the points may be left. (Bible Treasury 15:96)

2:23 [last part of verse]: It may here be added that the words printed in italics (in the latter half of ver. 23 [in the KJV]) are authentic and genuine scripture. (The oldest MSS. (technically designated α B C P), and some 35 cursives with the better ancient versions, and ample citation by the early ecclesiastical writers, leave no doubt as to it.) It is more remarkable, because, in chap. 5:7,8, the words from “in heaven” to “in earth” have no real warrant, as is well known to those versed in the grounds of the text. Thus the Epistle suffered doubly from the faulty text which our translators had before them; for they did not know the true readings here when they made the Authorized Version of 1611. The italicized words in this verse are real scripture; whilst the words indicated in chap. 5 have no authority worth notice and are beyond doubt spurious. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.153)

[last part of verse]: The last clause is unquestionable scripture, and sustained by the best witnesses. It was probably omitted from having the same ending as the clause before; a common error in the MSS. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.131)

[last part of verse]: the true text is reinstated from the ignominy of italics on ample and unimpeachable authority (α B C P, about thirty-five cursives, Vulg. Cop. Syrr. Arm. Aeth. &c.). (Bible Treasury 14:111)

2:24 let α: “Therefore” should here be dropped, as relying on inadequate testimony. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.131)

let α: οὖν, “therefore,” is rightly dropt. (Bible Treasury 14:111)

2:27 the same: “the same” or “his” is a rather evenly-balanced question (Bible Treasury 14:111)

ye [or, do ye, or, ye shall]: The best MSS. and Vv. give “abide ye,” or “ye abide,” rather than “ye shall abide.” (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.131)

true . . . ye [or, do ye, or ye shall] abide: it is “true,” not “truth;” and it is a question between “abide,” or “shall abide,” at the end. (Bible Treasury 14:111)

2:28 [paragraph]: [see note to 1 John 2:12]

dear children: [See note to John 13:33.]

if: “if” is better than “when,” as the question is one of contingent consequence, and not exactly time. (Bible Treasury 14:111)

from before him: The margin has to be brought in to supply the deficiency of the Revised Version in rendering ἀπ’ αὐτοῦ. “From before Him” has been suggested. (Bible Treasury 14:111)

2:29 know . . . know . . . one α: the imp. form of the margin is better than the ind. of the Revised Version; but there is no indication of the difference between the two words for “know.” “Also” is by the Revisers adopted in the last clause; but in this epistle we have the older authorities agreeing in strange readings. (Bible Treasury 14:111)

2:29; 3:9; 5:1,4,18 hath been begotten . . . hath been born . . . is begotten . . . is begotten . . . is begotten: It is the same word γεννημενος which is indifferently translated “born,” and in ver. 1 “begotten,” save in ver. 18 where γεννηεις occurs. The old lexicographers think that the only difference is that the perfect is μεγα, the aorist μικρον, and strange to say Bengel attaches some importance to this small remark, “Praeteritum grandius quiddam sonat, quam aoristus.” The true distinction, I apprehend, is that the aorist is purely the historical fact, the perfect adds the idea of a certain condition or state resulting from that fact. In this instance, it seems to me, that both could be and are said of the same persons. (Christian Annotator 3:342-3)

3:1 [whole verse]: On the whole the Revised Version of ch. 3 is good; so that criticism is justly disarmed. Important errors in the Authorised Version are corrected in 1, 2, 3, and 4. (Bible Treasury 15:96)

children: [See note to John 1:12.]

[and we are]: Perhaps it is well to say that some of the oldest manuscripts that are known agree in the addition "and we are" after "we should be called God's children." This small clause is not given in the Authorized Version, nor am I prepared to speak with decision about it. Of many things one may judge with certainty; but I do not presume to speak so in this case. Only we may note this, that these very old manuscripts occasionally join in what is certainly wrong. There is however a peculiarity in this clause unlike their erratic readings. What they convey here is "that we should be called children of God; and are (so)." Now this last is in itself certainly true, and in fact said with emphasis at the beginning of verse 2. Sometimes their readings, where they differ from others, are certainly false; but this at least is true. The only question is whether it is drawn from the next verse and put in here as a gloss of man.

But there seems enough importance in it to deserve a notice. It is remarkable enough that the Latin Vulgate, which, you may know, is accepted by the Romanists as authentic Scripture though only a translation, is here in error. It gives the clause like the old Greek Uncials, but goes wrong where they speak consistently with truth. But in this case it gives a natural thought "That we should be called the sons of God, and should be" (or, may we be). The Latin is not "we are," but that we "may, or should, be." Now this is not true; because it denies that we are now children of God, and seeks it as a future thing (perhaps it is to be supposed dependent on our good behavior), inconsistent with what follows, and intrinsically indefensible and untrue. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.170-171)

[and we are]: 3:1 is an instance of what appears to be an enfeebling gloss appended to the first part of the verse. ἔσμεν is admirable in 2; but here καὶ ἔσμεν seems justly questioned, though attested by \aleph A B C P, many cursives, and the Vulgate with other ancient versions. The Revisers rightly say "children," not "the sons" as in the Authorised Version. The apostle John brings out eternal life and to be born of God; not the position of sons in contrast with slaves. Compare John 1:12,13. (Bible Treasury 14:111)

3:2 [whole verse]: [See note to 1 John 3:1]

children: [See note to John 1:12.]

Λ We: "But" here lacks authority. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.157) not yet was it manifested . . . Λ We . . . he: [The RV has] corrected "it doth not yet appear" into "it is not yet made manifest," though it does not accord with their claim of precision for the aorist, which Dean Alford would render "it never yet was manifested." Of course actual appearing is meant, not making known by the word to faith, for this is already and clearly made; as the next clause indeed declares, without the copula of the Text. Rec.: "We know that, if He shall be manifested, we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is." The "it" of the margin for "He," though approved by Tyndale, &c., seems uncalled for. (Bible Treasury 14:111)

3:3 [whole verse]: [See note to 1 John 3:1]

hope Λ : there is a strong effort [in the RV] to guard against the misconstruing of ἐπ' αὐτῷ, "on him," by the italic addition of set. (Bible Treasury 14:111)

3:4 [whole verse]: [See note to 1 John 3:1]

sin is lawlessness: It is also a mistake that ἀνομία lawlessness, is never in the New Testament the condition of one living without law, but always the condition or deed of one who acts contrary to law; for this would be παράνομία (as the verb in Acts 23:3 and the noun in 2 Pet. 2:16). The usual terms for such a violation or transgression of law is παράβασις (Rom. 2:23; 4:15; 5:14, &c.) The truth is that ἀνομία is both a wider and deeper word, as we learn from 1 John 3:4, where the Revisers have at length vindicated the mind of God from the darkening cloud with which theology had too long veiled the truth. Sin is not transgression of law but lawlessness, and lawlessness is sin. It is a convertible or reciprocating proposition, the subject being identified with the predicate. Hence it is exactly where there is no law, that ἀνομία (properly speaking) is found. (The Epistles to the Thessalonians, p.149-150) sin is lawlessness: One hardly knows a verse of the New Testament more perverted if one may so call it, or more productive of widespread misapprehension. Take the generally excellent Authorized Version for a plain and painful departure from the evident mind of God in its only legitimate meaning. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.175) sin is lawlessness: There is no allusion to transgressing the law. Perhaps there is hardly a worse translation than this in the New Testament, nor one as to which even scholars seem duller. Sin is declared to be lawlessness. Beyond a shadow of doubt it may be asserted that the apostle does not define sin as "the transgression of the law." It is a false version which nothing can justify, and I am perfectly persuaded the more any man understands either the word of God in general or the language in which John wrote, with the less hesitation he will confess this. That a person who is only spelling out his Greek, and learning to render by the help of the Authorized Version, may make difficulties about the matter is intelligible; but it is hard to see how an unbiassed honest man who knows the language could have the slightest question about it. Do I insinuate that our translators were not men of integrity, able, erudite, and pious? They were under no small difficulties, but they tried to do their best. Possibly their attention was never drawn to the point. Even intelligent men were considerably muddled as yet from the past as well as the actual struggles of that day. But instead of either finding fault with them or endorsing all they said, what we have to do is to profit by whatever is good and true, and at the same time to be warned by whatever mistakes others have made.

Now I maintain, not only that the word (ἀνομία) will not bear such a meaning, but that it is altogether foreign to the scope of the passage and the drift of the apostle's reasoning. . .

What makes it of practical as well as dogmatic importance is, that the common view entails the accompanying error that the law is always in force for all the necessary expression of God's mind and will. But this we know from many scriptures is not true. The Bible is thoroughly explicit, that one particular nation was said to be under law, and that the rest of mankind had no such position, though responsible on their own ground. (See Rom. 2:12-15; 3:19.) Here, therefore, the translation cannot be correct which contradicts other passages of undoubted holy writ; for if the common version of 1 John 3:4 held good, the rest of mankind outside the Jews could not have been sinners at all, because they were not under law. Thus, evidently, this error throws the whole doctrine of what sin is and of God's dealings with men into hopeless confusion. It necessarily darkens some vitally momentous parts of God's word as to past, present, and future. . .

Again, taking Romans 4:15; and 5:13,14, it would perplex all to bring in the common version of 1 John 3:4; for it would follow thence that there was no sin, because it had not the form of a transgression of law between Adam, who had a law, and Moses, by whom the law was given. So fatal may be a mis-translation of scripture. In fact, practically, it lowers the sense of what sin is throughout the length and breadth of

1 John Notes

It necessarily darkens some vitally momentous parts of God's word as to past, present, and future. . . .

Again, taking Romans 4:15; and 5:13,14, it would perplex all to bring in the common version of 1 John 3:4; for it would follow thence that there was no sin, because it had not the form of a transgression of law between Adam, who had a law, and Moses, by whom the law was given. So fatal may be a mis-translation of scripture. In fact, practically, it lowers the sense of what sin is throughout the length and breadth of Christendom, others having fallen into an error similar to that of our own translators. It is therefore as certain as it is important to see that sin embraces much more than a transgression of the law. (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist. and Rev., p.312-15) sin is lawlessness: Sin is not at all limited to crime, or to glaring evil. It is a mischievously and unequivocally false version which is given in the A.V. of 1 John 3:4, where we read that "sin is the transgression of the law." Millions have thence derived their notion of sin, and have thereby been misled into the great errors, on the one hand, of ignoring a vast deal of real sin, and on the other of arguing that all men must be under the law, inasmuch as it is certain that all sinned. But any such reasoning proceeds on a false principle. For the true meaning of the apostle's statement is, that "sin is lawlessness," the far wider and subtler evil of doing one's own will without the check of divinely imposed authority. In the R.V. it is properly rendered, "sin is lawlessness," which is absolutely true, and applies to all mankind whether they did or did not know the law. All transgression of the law is sin, but all sin is far from being transgression of the law. Hence the Jews are called "transgressors," for they distinctively were under law; whereas scripture speaks of the Gentiles as "sinners," not as "transgressors," which they must have been if all men were alike under law. (Bible Treasury N3:244) sin is lawlessness: Few mistranslations have wrought wider or more profound mischief than that which represents 1 John 3:4. The real sense is, "Every one that doeth sin doeth also lawlessness; and sin is lawlessness." Violation of a positive command is not merely ἀνομία, but παράβασις νόμου, a wholly different and sometimes contrasted idea, as in Rom. 2:12. 'Ανομία of course includes all infraction of law, but it goes incomparably farther, and takes in every exercise of self-will, where and when there may be no promulgated requirement. This explains the universality of sin since the fall according to Scripture; as the apostle proves of those who died between Adam and Moses, though they had no known code or command from God. Thus, where there is no law, necessarily no transgression can be; yet it would be erroneous and evil thence to infer that, where there is no law, there is no sin. (Compare Rom. 4:15, and chap. 5:13,14.) As to all this the moderns are as dark as the Fathers or the Schoolmen. The common error as to the law naturally led to an erroneous system as to both justification and the standard of Christian walk. (Bible Treasury 20:328) sin is lawlessness: At length [in the RV] there is an adequate public version of 4, so long misrendered to the inculcation of endless error in theology: "Every one that doeth [or, practiseth] sin doeth [or, practiseth] also lawlessness; and sin is lawlessness," not the transgression of the law, which is not imperfect only but false. Compare Rom. 2:12, 4:15, 5:13, 14; and 1 Cor. 9:20, 21. (Bible Treasury 14:111)

3:6 known: "knoweth" in the text [of the RV] is a loose rendering of ἐγνώκεν, inferior to the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:111)

3:7 dear children: [See note to John 13:33.]

3:9 hath been born: [See note to 2:29]

3:10 [last part of verse]: [The last sentence of this verse is missing in W.K.'s version, perhaps by an oversight.]

3:13 ^Λ brethren: "My," of the common text, is wanting in the best copies. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.203)

^Λ brethren: "my" is rightly omitted; but the omission of τὸν ἀδελφόν near the close is questionable, the general truth being reserved for a later statement. (Bible Treasury 14:111)

3:16 we know: again we have the perfect έγνω, rendered "know;" but while permanent effect is meant, a past act ought also to be implied: "We have known" or "have come to know." (Bible Treasury 14:111)

3:18 ^Λ Dear: The Text. Rec. adds μου in 18: why should the Revisers supply "my"? (Bible Treasury 14:111)

Dear children: [See note to John 13:33.]

3:19 shall know: [In RV] it is "shall we know," not "we know" as in the vulgar text followed by the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:111) him,: [See note to 1 John 3:20]

3:20 him, . . . [whole verse]: the Americans [correctors of the RV] would read and punctuate "him: because if our heart condemn us, God" &c. (with the present text in the margin). It appears to me that neither is right, and that God being greater than our heart, and knowing all things, is brought in, not for consolation where our heart condemns us, but to deepen self-judgment. It is state, not standing, that is in question. The construction is peculiar from the double οτι, which is not without example in the New Testament without construing it as "because," but referring to the opening words. (Bible Treasury 15:96)

[it is]: I doubt greatly the soundness of the rendering of 20 [in the RV], though it is plain that the Authorised Version is rather free and breaks the connection. Some critics and grammarians are much perplexed to find or make the construction smooth, as omission seems to have been resorted to with the same purpose by the copyists. (Bible Treasury 14:111-112)

3:21 [no paragraph]: That Lachmann and Tischendorf should make a new paragraph after this verse, breaking the manifest and weighty link between 20 and 21, might seem incredible if it were not before our eyes. (Bible Treasury 14:112)

3:23 believe: There is a difference of reading nearly balanced that is worthy of notice. The form of the word "believe" in the ordinary text with high authority implies continuance in faith; in others of great weight, it is believing once for all, the fact summed up in its conclusion. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.241) believe: I do not see how one can evade rendering 23 as in the margin [of the RV], not as in the text, however unusual it may sound, which no doubt led to the tampering in 5, 58^{text} εις τὸ ὄνομα. Compare John 5:24, and other instances of like construction. (Bible Treasury 14:112)

3:24 abideth: It is one of the drawbacks of our beautiful authorised version that the translators cannot let the same word go on unaltered even in the same context; so fond are they of ringing the change on the same word. Most who know only the English version would suppose that there must be some shade of difference between "dwell" and "abide." But the Greek gives only the same word. It is the more regrettable, because there is a distinct word for "dwell" which has its own propriety of application. Is it not far better for the English reader also to have the same word? Here it signifies little save to remember that the "dwelling" and the "abiding" mean the same thing. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.242-3)

4:2 [whole verse]: [The American correctors of the RV] might have noticed failure in reflecting the force of the text in 2, 3, which, it appears to me, would not prove a barrier insuperable to an evil spirit animating a false prophet. Nay, some of these insist with great force on the Lord's coming in flesh, as Irvingites, &c. Wherein then lies the ground? It is in the confessing of the person, not of the bare fact. It should be therefore: "every spirit which confesseth Jesus Christ come in flesh is of God; and every spirit which confesseth not Jesus is not of God." It is the divine One come in flesh that is confessed or not. The evil spirit might urge that He came in flesh, to deny His deity or to insinuate the fallen character of His humanity, which last in effect denies His Godhead and makes the atonement impossible. Indeed this is the great root-lie of Satan against the truth among nominal christians. (Bible Treasury 15:96)

^ Jesus Christ ^ : What confirms the shorter reading here is the article before "Jesus" in the latter clause. It is in its common usage of reference, and can hardly be expressed in English translation. But the explanation is clear and sure: "Every spirit which confesseth not (the) Jesus (already described)." . . . It may be of interest to know that manuscripts are not wanting which departed from the right text in ver. 2 and made it to express simply a fact, and that the Latin Vulgate followed that error, with a few early fathers Greek and Latin. But no editor of the slightest weight follows their mistake. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.249,254)

^ Jesus Christ ^ : The true force of the Greek is, I believe, "every spirit that confesseth Jesus Christ come in the flesh is of God," not the fact merely, but the person. (Christian Annotator 2:341)

^ Jesus Christ ^ : As it reads in the Authorized Version, it is altogether inadequate. It may be in the recollection of not a few here that a generation ago there were manifestations of spirits (evil, I doubt not), which did not deny that Jesus came in the flesh. On the contrary, they seemed to lay the greatest stress on the fact of His incarnation, and chided the orthodox for want of heed to this truth if not of faith in it. The point of their own false doctrine lay in maintaining that Jesus took the flesh in the same condition of corruption in which all others are born, and that Jesus showed His perfection in subduing and purifying the flesh. Of course you will understand that my reference is to the Irvingite movement. To confess therefore that Jesus is come in the flesh is not satisfactory.

What then does the apostle say and mean here? Every spirit that confesseth Jesus Christ come in the flesh is of God. This is to confess His person; not His deity alone, still less His humanity alone, but Him who thus came. (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist. and Rev., p.322-323)

^ Jesus Christ ^ : [See notes to 2 John 7, 8.]

4:3 which confesseth not ^ Jesus ^ : On ample ground of external witness, backed up by internal considerations, almost all the later critics seem to be right in dropping the words here omitted, which were probably inserted from the clause before. The MSS. differ much as usual in such cases. — There is a reading, alluded to by ancient writers δ λυει instead of δ μὴ ὁμολογεῖ. But it is authenticated by neither ancient MS. nor Version, save the Vulgate's "qui solvit." (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.245)

^ Jesus ^ : "confesseth Jesus Christ come in flesh" . . . is confirmed in the most direct manner, if we accept (as most modern critics do) the words τὸν Ἰησοῦν without further addition in 3. It is easy to understand in copies accretion more or less from the preceding verse. (Bible Treasury 14:112) [See note to 1 John 4:2]

4:4 dear children: [See note to John 13:33.]

4:5 [as]: there is an effort [in the RV] by inserting "as" to guard against the inference which the Authorised Version might convey, that it is about (περὶ) the world, whereas ἰ means out of it (ἐκ): a worldly source rather than subject. (Bible Treasury 14:112)

4:9 in us [or, in our case]: But "in us" will never do for 9 [in the RV], though a seemingly faithful or literal rendering, as in the Rhemish alone of English Versions. It either deprives of all sense, or conveys a false idea. The true force of ἐν ἡμῖν in this connection is "in regard to us," or in our case. The Authorised Version renders as if the Greek were εἰς ἡμᾶς the converse of their error in Rom. 8:18, where from the English we might suppose ἐν ἡμῖν must have been in the text. (Bible Treasury 14:112)

in us [or, in our case]: "in us" of the text is liable to misunderstanding [in the RV], margin' being far better; so in 16 also. (Bible Treasury 15:96)

4:16 in us: [See note to 1 John 4:9]

4:17 with us: the Revisers of course rightly say "with us," nearly as in the margin of the Authorised Version, instead of their barbarous textual rendering "our love," which is the destruction of the truth intended. Our love could never give us boldness in the day of judgment (Bible Treasury 14:112) with us: 4:17 [in the RV] is an important correction, we may say by the way. (Bible Treasury 15:96)

4:19 ^ because: And it appears to me that the natural mind would have been more ready to insert "Him" than to leave it out. If "Him" was there originally, it would have been a daring act for any even nominal Christian copyist to have struck it out; but if the omission preferred now on sufficient external grounds be correct, we can easily understand a well-meaning scribe conceiving the first clause sounding rather lame for want of an object, and venturing to insert "Him," because it is without doubt intrinsically true.

On the whole then it appears to me that the reading left absolutely is both impressive in itself, and gains rather than loses by the absence of an expressed object which would tend to limit rather than enlarge the sense. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.334)

4:20 how: There is in 20 [of the RV] a rather bold adoption of οὐ on small but good authority, instead of πᾶς, but doctrine is not affected by it. (Bible Treasury 14:112)

5:1 is begotten: [See note to 2:29]

5:4 is begotten: [See note to 2:29]

5:5 ^ Who: In 5:5 the Revisers may be justified in introducing the copula, for which there is good authority. (Bible Treasury 14:112)

5:6 [whole verse]: So, as we all know, in 5:7,8 not to speak of 6, as in 13, the true text is correctly represented in the Revised Version. (Bible Treasury 15:96)

through . . . by [or, in the power of] . . . ^ the blood: It is not easy to render adequately the two prepositions in ver. 6, which are nevertheless alike rendered "by" in the Authorized Version. For the first used once (διὰ) is here given "through," in order to distinguish it from the second (ἐν) which has a stronger force expressed fully by "in the power of," but perhaps sufficiently as "by." (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.365) through . . . by [or, in the power of] . . . ^ the blood: there is a difficulty in fitly representing the change from δι' ὕδατος καὶ αἵματος to ἐν τῷ thrice in the latter clauses (ἐν being omitted in the last instance in Text. Rec. with most copies, but not the oldest save α). (Bible Treasury 14:112)

5:7 [whole verse]: [See note to 1 John 5:6]

witness ^ : It is well known that there are passages printed as scripture which have no real title to be in the Bible, as the three heavenly witnesses, for instance, in 1 John 5. This also, I think, was then referred to; where every serious and unbiassed student would agree with him, because it is only ignorant prejudice that accepts these verses. Men versed in the diplomatic evidence of the New Testament know that the same grounds which demand our reception of the apostolic prophetic writings in general compel us to reject those clauses as an interpolation. Besides, I am assured that internally they weaken the truth, and do not help but hinder the effect of the full light on the capital truth of the Trinity. Testimony in heaven (to whom, and for what end?) is a strange doctrine. Again, the phraseology is unexampled in scripture; there is never such a correlation in it as "the Father and the Word." When the "Father" is spoken of, we hear of "The Son," if named in the same context; never of "The Father and the Word." For this answers not to "Father" but to "God." Wherever scripture treats of these terms, the true correlates are "God and the Word," or "The Father and the Son;" never, as in the spurious insertion, "The Father and the Word." I am not reasoning now on mere à priori grounds; for if a passage comes with sufficient outward authority, whether understood or not, I hold myself bound to receive it. Where there is evidence that it was originally given and received as an inspired document on God's authority, I receive it without dispute, question, or reasoning whatever. But in this case the fact is that the only Greek manuscripts known to support this particular portion are proved to be either forgeries or valueless from their want of antiquity. There is not one ancient Greek copy that contains the passage. Hence it was very properly left out in Luther's translation of the Bible into German, as also in the first Greek Testaments edited by Erasmus. That it was subsequently brought in was mainly due to the clamour of Roman Catholics, who were naturally anxious to have it accredited in Greek, because the Latin Vulgate, with some Latin ecclesiastical witnesses, vouches for it; and especially since the Council of Trent pronounced the Latin version to be authentic scripture. Consequently, if we are compelled by truth to give it up, their authentic scripture is seriously wrong. Thus Romanists have a palpable interest ecclesiastically in supporting it, whereas nobody else ought to have. (Lect. Intro. to the Minor Prophets, p.415-6) [See also note to Mat. 1:18.]

witness Λ : It is plain that "the Spirit" ($\tau\omicron\ \pi\nu\epsilon\upsilon\mu\alpha$) means the Holy Ghost. He only is truth (ver. 6). Allow me to take this opportunity of expressing my regret that Prof. Gaussen (Plenary Inspiration, pp. 192,193) should venture to defend the text. rec. of the two preceding verses, and in doing so to misstate, of course through inadvertence, the evidence. He ought to have known that the alleged testimonies of some early Latin fathers are very questionable, and that the most ancient MSS. of the Latin Vulgate are against the insertion of the disputed clause, not to dwell on the fact that the three Greek MSS. containing it, against near 150 which omit it, are not older than the fifteenth or sixteenth century; at least, if the Cod. Neapol. belong to the eleventh century, the reading here is a correction made 500 years later.

As to the two grammatical considerations which he borrows from Bishop Middleton, I would briefly reply: —

1. That the words $\tau\rho\epsilon\iota\varsigma\ \omicron\iota\ \mu\alpha\rho\tau\upsilon\rho\omicron\upsilon\nu\tau\epsilon\varsigma$, and $\omicron\iota\ \tau\rho\epsilon\iota\varsigma$ (verses 7,8) are no insuperable difficulty. They are masculine, it is true, while the words to which they relate are neuter; but the difficulty is nearly if not altogether the same, if the passage remained entire, as in the common text. If in that case the principle of attraction is used to justify this irregularity, the principle of rational concord applies to the correct text; and the more especially, as $\tau\omicron\ \pi\nu\epsilon\upsilon\mu\alpha$, that well-known personal object whose power wrought in the saints, is the first of the three witnesses who are specified immediately after. They are, as it were, personified as witnesses, and the gender is accommodated to the sense rather than in strict grammatical form.

2. The next objection is founded on the article being coupled with $\epsilon\nu$, as if it necessarily supposed a previous mention, which only occurs in the retrenched clause. But this is so far from being necessary that, even if $\epsilon\nu$ were rightly read in verse 7, the object and force of $\tau\omicron\ \epsilon\nu$ in verse 8 is wholly different. In other words, supposing the passage in question to be spurious, the anarthrous form would be an error, and the article is required (i.e. $\tau\omicron\ \epsilon\nu$) in verse 8; for the idea intended is not the numerical unity, but the uniform testimony of the Spirit, the water, and the blood.

It may be added, that all three, I believe, of these MSS. which contain the passage, omit the article before $\pi\alpha\tau\acute{\eta}\rho$, $\lambda\omicron\gamma\omicron\varsigma$, and $\tau\nu\ \acute{\alpha}\gamma\gamma\epsilon\lambda\omicron\varsigma$, which I venture to say is not even correct Greek, but just such phraseology as might come from an unlearned forger translating from the Latin. It was Erasmus who supplied the article to each of these words, with no other warrant than his own erudition. (Bible Witness & Review 1:271-2) witness Λ : But the text here has suffered, whether by inadvertence or by design. Be it said briefly that from "in heaven" in ver. 7 to "on earth" in ver. 8 is not scripture but an interpolation. It may have been at first a mere marginal note, copied afterwards as the text by men that did not understand the truth. The history of the case has been fully and minutely traced, the result of which is that the same grounds which make the New Testament text certain elsewhere prove this insertion as certainly to be a human accretion. Let me however shew that any Christian who does not know one Greek word ought to be satisfied that it is spurious. Such a one requires neither men of learning nor even the fruit of their researches to decide the question for himself. The word of God itself is amply sufficient and perfectly conclusive.

First, what is the meaning of bearing witness "in heaven"? When you weigh the thought, is it not (I will not say unscriptural only, but) rather folly? How could there be such a need or fact as to "bear witness in heaven"? The natural denizens in heaven are angels who never needed witness borne to them . . . (There is another internal proof that the three who bear witness in heaven is human error, and not the revealed truth of God. No inspired man ever wrote, "The Father, the Word." They are not correlative terms. In scripture we have the "Word" with "God," and the "Son" with the "Father." The editors of the Complutensian Polyglot first printed the unauthorized words from some recent MS. of no account, even if not written since printing came into use, and perhaps to authenticate the Latin Vulgate for Romanists' use against its old and best MSS. One of the Greek MSS. represents it in such bad Greek as only an ignorant and non-Hellenist can have written, omitting the article where required.) . . . (It was a blundering idea after all to make six witnesses, three for heaven and three for earth. It supposes the Spirit in heaven answering to the Spirit in earth. It is as awkward to conceive the Holy Spirit an earthly witness also, as to imagine Spirit in the second triad to mean another, as some defenders of the importation contended. But it is needless to say more than that the Codex Ravianus as well as one of the Wolfenbüttel copies (in Berlin), is an evident forgery which copies the Complutensian Polyglot in its misprints and the peculiar letters. The Codex Regius Neapolitanus (173 in Scholz' list) confirms the true text, and gives the clause in a correct shape only in the margin. The other two (Codd. Ottob. or Vat. 298, and Cod. Montfort. or Trin. Coll. Dubl. G. 97) grossly omit the article and are otherwise quite in error.) (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.367-369) witness Λ : It is much to be regretted that excellent persons in all ages have been prone to rest some of their defenses of the truth on untenable ground. The danger is that when any of these mistakes in proof are set aside, especially by foes of the truth, not only are such uninformed and incautious disputants apt to fight stubbornly for what is indefensible (i.e., really for self), but others, partly through timidity, partly through ignorance, may dread that the truth itself is imperilled, or be even disposed to stand in doubt of it, confounding the ill-conduct of its advocates with its own impregnable evidence.

Thus one hears with humiliation that any man of learning should seek to shelter the famous passage of the three heavenly witnesses from the reprobation which to say the least an interpolated gloss deserves, and from none so heartily as from pious men jealous for the divine glory of the Lord Jesus. Truth is itself too sacred to admit of giving quarter to that which is spurious, the continued sanction of which is hostile to the authority of the Bible, and in particular to the very point which the suspicious article is meant to support. Let us remember that the study of the authorities on which the Greek Testament rests has greatly developed during the last seventy years, and especially perhaps the last thirty.

During this time many fresh manuscripts, some of great value and antiquity, have been brought to light, along with a fuller and more exact collation of all that had been previously known; and this makes an error of the kind less excusable and more painful, if it be in a quarter one respects.

I will not cite, however, from any volume of the day, but confront a sentence of the famous J. Calvin with the facts, that every intelligent Christian who may want information, but values nothing but the truth, may be enabled to judge for himself. "Since, however, the passage flows better when this clause [from "in heaven" to "in earth" inclusively] is added (!) and as I see that it is found in the best and most approved copies (!) I am inclined to receive it as the true reading." (Calvin, Translation Soc. Comment. on the Cath. Epistles, p. 257. Edinburgh, 1855.) ("Quia tamen optime fluit contextus si hoc membrum addatur, et video in optimis ac probatissimis fidei codicibus haberi, ego quoque libenter amplector." — Comm. in loc. Ed. Genev. p. 74.) Then, again, Beza, who ought to have known more of the manuscripts, follows in the wake of his leader. Such statements, I confess, are inexplicable, save on the supposition both of strong prejudice and of surprising inattention to the facts of the case. For so decisive is the testimony of ancient documents (whether manuscripts, versions, or citations by the earliest ecclesiastical writers), that if this portion can be allowed to be scripture against their testimony, a fatal blow is inflicted on all certainty of evidence for the rest of the New Testament; for all the uncials preserve a dead silence as to it, more than 160 cursives, all the lectionaries, all the ancient versions except the Latin, and even of the Latin more than fifty of the oldest and best copies, and of the rest it is in some cases inserted by a later hand, and with that uncertainty of position which often accompanies an interpolation; while it is not once quoted in any genuine remains of the early Greek or even Latin fathers, even where the occasions seem most to call for it. Its supposed citation by Tertullian, Cyprian, Jerome, &c., is an illusion.

Hence Erasmus, in his first (1516) and second (1519) editions of the Greek New Testament, so far faithfully followed his MS., and did not print verse 7. It would seem that the Complutensian editors must have boldly translated the Latin version as it stands in the majority of the extant copies; for in the captious attack now before me (Annotationes Jacobi Lapidis Stunicae contra Erasmus Rot. in defens. translationis N.T. Complut. 1520), the ablest of them does not pretend to diplomatic authority for the Greek they venture to print, but arraigns the Greek MSS. as corrupted, and backs up the common text of the Vulgate by a quotation from Jerome's (?) Prologue to the Canonical Epistles. "Sciendum est hoc loco graecorum codices apertissime esse corruptos: nostros (!) vero veritatem ipsam ut a prima origine traducti sunt continere. Quod ex prologo beati Hieronymi super epistolas canonicas manifeste apparet. Ait enim Quae si sic ut ab eis digestae sunt ita quoque ab interpretibus fideliter in latinum verterentur eloquium: nec ambiguitatem legentibus facerent: nec sermonum sese varietas impugnet illo praecipue loco ubi de unitate trinitatis in prima Ioannis epistola positum legimus. In qua etiam ab infidelibus translatoribus multum erratum esse a fidei veritate comperimus trium tantummodo vocabula hoc est aquae sanguinis et spiritus in ipsa sua editione ponentibus et patris verbique ac spiritus testimonium ommittentibus in quo maxime et fides catholica roboratur et patris et filii et spiritus sancti una divinitatis substantia comprobatur." [I give the quotation as S. cites it, not as it stands in the Benedictine edition of Jerome's works.]

Erasmus had already replied to our notorious countryman, Edward Lee (afterwards Popish archbishop of York), that he did not find in the Greek what was so common in the Latin, and edited accordingly, without expressing approval or blame; that he had at different times seen seven manuscripts, in none of which was anything that answered to the ordinary Vulgate. "Porro quod Hieronymus in Praefatione sua testatur hunc locum ab haëreticis depravatum, si velim uti jure meo, possem appellare ab Hieronymi auctoritate, quod Leus facit quoties ipsi commodum est." And then he proceeds to expose the exaggeration of Lee, and to propose a conjectural correction in the citation from the prologue. (Desid. Erasmi. Opp. tom. ix., coll. 275, 276.) The truth is, that, by the common consent of the learned, including the Benedictine and other editors of Jerome's writings, this prologue is confessed not to be his production, but of a much later age, and by an inferior hand. To his Spanish critic he answers, "Hic ex auctoritate Hieronymi [which we have just seen is no authority at all, being a forgery], docet Stunica Græcos codices palam esse depravatos. Sed interim ubi dormit codex ille Rhodiensis? Porro nos non susceperamus negotium emendandi Græcos codices, sed quod in illis esset, bona fide reddendi." Then, after a long argument intended to neutralize the alleged statement of Jerome's (which Erasmus says, and no wonder, he does not quite understand), he adds, "Cum Stunica meus toties jactet Rhodiensem codicem, cui tantum tribuit auctoritatis, mirum est, non hic adduxisse illius oraculum, praesertim cum ita fere consentiat cum nostris codicibus, ut videri possit Lesbia regula. Veruntamen ne quid dissimulem, repertus est apud Anglos Græcus codex unus, in quo habetur, quod in vulgatis deest. Scriptum est enim hunc ad modum: 'Ὅτι τρεῖς εἰσὶν οἱ μαρτυροῦντες ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ, Πατὴρ, Λόγος, καὶ Πνεῦμα [ἀγιον is omitted], καὶ οὗτοι οἱ τρεῖς ἐν εἰσίν. καὶ τρεῖς εἰσὶν [οἱ is omitted] μαρτυροῦντες, ἐν τῇ γῇ, πνεῦμα, ὕδωρ, καὶ αἷμα, εἰ τὴν μαρτυρίαν τῶν ἀνθρώπων, &c. Quanquam hand scio an casu factum sit, ut hoc loco non repetatur, quod est in Græcis nostris, καὶ οἱ τρεῖς εἰς τὸ ἐν εἰσίν. Ex hoc igitur codice Britannico reposuimus, quod in nostris dicebatur deesse: ne cui sit causa calumniandi. Quanquam et hunc suspicor ad Latinorum codices fuisse castigatum. Posteaquam enim Græci concordiam inierunt cum Ecclesia Romana, studuerunt et hac in parte cum Romanis consentire" (Ib. coll. 351-353.)

Therefore Erasmus in his third edition (1522) inserted verse 7, correcting two errors and supplying the omission at the end of verse 8 in what he called the Cod. Brit. (or Montfort MS.), which probably had the Acts and Epistles added about this very time to the Gospels written a few years before, as the Revelation was added by another hand later still — copied, it would seem from the well-known Leicester MS. Erasmus put in the passage to keep his promise, not because he counted it genuine. Is it too strong to fear that a document so framed, which cannot be traced beyond a friar named Froy, and which came in so opportunely to supply an apparent authority for a Greek text (of which more presently) for the three heavenly witnesses, points to a dishonest source?

It is remarkable too, as Sir I. Newton noticed long ago, that there is a marginal note by the side of this passage in the Complut. Polyglot, as in 1 Cor. 15:51 and Matt. 6:13, where the Vulgate is in conflict with the Greek MSS. It is a pity, however, that they were not as explicit on 1 John 5:7 as there, and that they did not cleave to the Greek against the Latin, as they did in rejecting its absurd misrepresentation of 1 Cor. 15:51. They do indeed cite Thomas Aquinas for 1 John 5:7. "Now to make Thomas thus in a few words do all the work was very artificial" (says Sir. I. N., Works, vol. v. p. 522); "and in Spain, where Thomas is of apostolical authority, it might pass for a very judicious and substantial defence of the printed Greek. But to us Thomas Aquinas is no apostle. We are seeking for the authority of Greek manuscripts."

To what then is the passage due? It is as clear as anything of the sort can be, that what we call verse 7 sprang from Augustine's remarks on what now stands as verse 8, possibly suggested by words of Cyprian to a similar effect. Compare his treatise contra Maximinum Arian, Episcop. 1. ii. c. 22. (Tom. viii. col. 725, ed. Ben.) Not that the celebrated bishop of Hippo cites the passage: what he says is professedly his comment or gloss on the words spirit, water, and blood. "Si vero ea, quae his significata sunt, velimus inquirere, non absurde occurrit ipsa Trinitas, qui unus, solus, verus, summus est Deus, Pater, et Filius et Spiritus sanctus, de quibus verissime dici potuit, Tres sunt testes, et tres unum sunt: ut nomine Spiritus significatum accipiamus Deum Patrem: de ipso quippe adorando loquebatur Dominus ubi ait, Spiritus est Deus. (Id. iv. 24.) Nomine autem sanguinis Filium quia, verbum caro factum est. (Id. i. 14.) Spiritum sanctum," &c. From the reputation of Augustine this fanciful idea at first gained currency and acceptance, though not always in precisely the original shape; then it seems to have been inserted in the margin as a gloss, till at length, through the ignorance of the transcribers and the clergy in general, it positively crept into that text which the Council of Trent, with a temerity as amazing as the lack of knowledge it betrays, pronounced authentic. (Jerome (Epist. cvi. ad Sunn. et Fret.) speaks of a similar course of mistake in copying his own version. "Et miror quomodo e latere Adnotationem nostram nescio quis temerarius scribendam in corpore putaverit, quam nos pro eruditione legentis scripsimus hoc modo," &c. (S. Hieronymi Opp. tom. i. p. 659, Ed. Ben.) But we need not go outside the commonly received text of the Greek New Testament in order to find another instance of what was first a marginal gloss, which at length crept into the text; for such seems to be the history of Acts 8:37. It is curious that here the conditions are reversed as between Erasmus and the Complutensian editors; for he owns the verse wanting in his Greek copies, yet inserts it in deference to the Latin, whilst they follow the Greek spite of the Latin.) Hence the danger of demoralising Roman Catholic scholars, some of whom, like R. Simon, were deemed to do a perpetual violence to their conscience, while others, bolder in evil, misdirect every weapon that ingenuity can devise to make the worse appear the better reason. Most, no doubt, intrench themselves with a sort of blind honesty in their last stronghold: they believe what the church believes — a pitiful answer where it is a question of revealed truth.

As to internal evidence, it is equally conclusive against the passage foisted in. To bear witness "in heaven" is nonsense; to say "on earth" is superfluous; for earth is the constant scene of testimony. Again, the Father and the Son are the true scriptural correlatives — never the Father and the Word, which last is in correlation with God, as we see in John 1. Further, since Pentecost the Holy Ghost is distinctively said to be sent down from heaven, and this with a view to the testimony of the gospel, instead of bearing record in heaven with the Father and the Son. Lastly, those who adopt the passage as it stands in the vulgar Latin copies are led to lower the character of the witness borne; for as they of course treat the first three as divine, so they regard the last three as earthly and created witnesses, making the πνεῦμα to be no other than "the created soul of Christ which he breathed forth on the cross, thus witnessing that he was true man." It would be awkward to make the same Spirit witness both in heaven and on earth.

Objections to the omission of verse 7 have been imagined, as many are aware, for various reasons, all of which seem to me weakness itself. 1. As to the supposed breach of connexion, one has only to read verse 6 in order to be convinced that, on the contrary, the three heavenly witnesses come in most strangely between the water and the blood and the Spirit, of which that verse treated, and verse 8, which pursues the same subject. Internally therefore, as much as externally, verse 7 can only be viewed as an intrusion. The Trinity (fundamental a truth as it is, and without it Christianity is a myth) has no possible link with the context. Christ in death, yet withal life eternal, is the point of which the three witnesses converge with their one testimony. 2. The expression οἱ μαρτυροῦντες, said of the Spirit, the water, and the blood, is no difficulty without verse 7, because they are evidently personified. 3. The wonder is great how Bishop Middleton, the able investigator of the usage of the Greek article, could have so palpably erred as to say that the τὸ before ἐν in verse 8 presupposes ἐν in verse 7, and therefore that both verses stand or fall together. Previous reference is only one of the sources of the article. 'Εν, I grant, might be used of the persons in the Trinity (compare John 10:30 for the Father and the Son); but τὸ ἐν is absolutely necessary for the Spirit, the water, and the blood, where identity of nature is not in question but unity of scope. Compare Phil. 2:2. Other arguments, such as that founded on two editions of the Epistle, or on the influence of Arians, or on the negligence of transcribers, do not call for a detailed consideration in this place if at all.

Of the state and manner in which the passage is found in the few real or factitious Greek manuscripts that contain it, we may observe, (1) that both in the Græco-Latin Cod. Ottobon. (Vat. 298) and in the Greek Cod. Montfort. (Trin. Coll. Dubl. G. 97) the three heavenly witnesses are set down without the Greek article to any one of them (πατήρ, λόγος, καὶ πνεῦμα ἅγιον)! — a construction which indicates not obscurely the hand of one used to Latin (which has no article) and grossly ignorant of Greek; (2) that the same Cod. Ottobon. gives ἀπὸ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, translated in the corresponding Latin by in celo, though not ἀπὸ, as Scholz has strangely read, but, ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς; (3) that whilst the Cod. Ottobon. represents that the Father, Word, and Holy Spirit (εἰς τὸ ἐν εἰσὶ) "are to one purpose," or agree in one, (translated by itself unum sunt!) the Cod. Montfort. says ἐν εἰσὶ, "are one;" and both (like the Complut. Polyglot) leave out the grand point of the genuine scripture; for neither gives the smallest hint of the revelation that the three witnesses, the Spirit and the water and the blood, conspire in one testimony. I may say that the Montfort MS. unquestionably Latinizes elsewhere in 1 John, and in the immediate context, in opposition to all other Greek manuscripts.

As for the only other documents as yet produced in favor of the amplified text, suffice it to say that the Codex Ravianus of Berlin is now (as well as one of those at Wolfenbüttel) acknowledged to be a forgery, copying the very characters (in themselves peculiar) of the Complutensian Polyglot, and even repeating some of its misprints! That which Scholz cited as 173 in his list is the Codex Regius Neapolitanus, which in the text really confirms the truth, but adds on the margin in more recent characters the disputed clause. Here only, as compared with Codd. Ottobon. and Montfort., the article is duly inserted; but there is this unfortunate flaw in its value, that while the manuscript was written in the eleventh century, the addition cannot claim a higher antiquity than the sixteenth, if indeed so high. Such evidence as this might be easily multiplied by dishonest hands; but the weight of it all would be nil.

It may be worth while to mention, as corroborating the testimony to the source of this mistake, not without fraud, that its earliest known occurrence in Greek is in the Greek version of the Acts of the fourth Lateran Council (in 1215) where it stands thus: οἱ τρεῖς εἰσὶν οἱ μαρτυροῦντες ἐν οὐρανῷ ὁ πατήρ, λόγος, καὶ πνεῦμα ἅγιον καὶ τοῦτοι (sic!) οἱ τρεῖς ἐν εἰσὶν. εὐθύς τε προστίθησι . . . καθὼς ἐν τισὶ κώδεξιν (sic! = ἀντιγράφοις) εὐρίσκεται. So the passage stands both in Hardouin's Collection (tom. vii. p. 18) and in Mansi's (tom. xxii. p. 984). I can hardly doubt that this it was which encouraged the Complutensian editors to venture on the daring importation into the Greek New Testament of a passage which, however well meant doctrinally, bears the indelible trace of human infirmity, even after Stunica and his companions did their best to make decent Greek of it by inserting τῷ before οὐρανῷ, ὁ before λόγος, and τὸ before (not πν. but) ἅγιον πνεῦμα, correcting also τοῦτοι, which was no doubt a blunder for οὔτοι. (Hence Calecas in the fourteenth century, and Bryennius in the fifteenth, as Bishop Marsh noticed, being native Greeks, and feeling the deficiency of the Lateran Acts in Greek, wrote ὁ λόγος καὶ τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον. The copyist of the Montfort MS. omitted the article even before πατήρ, not to speak of the other words which require it.) But they went a little too far when they changed ἐν into εἰς τὸ ἐν after the first three, and left out εἰς τὸ ἐν after τὸ πνεῦμα καὶ τὸ ὕδωρ καὶ τὸ αἷμα where these words beyond controversy ought to be. No doubt they were guided by Latin copies made since Th. Aquinas' day and that council. They refer in their marginal note to the perverse doctrine of Joachim on the Trinity, which was condemned at this very council of the Lateran.

If we turn to Thomas Aquinas, as referred to, the erroneous statement is sufficiently startling. He cites verse 7 as it stands in the later Latin copies, and reasons on the heterodoxy of Joachim, who applied the unity there, not to essence, but to affection and consent. Then, quoting verse 8, he says, "In quibusdam Libris attexitur: et hi tres unum sunt; sed hoc in veris exemplaribus non habetur(!), sed in quibusdam Libris dicitur esse appositum ab hæreticis Arianis ad pervertendum intellectum sanum auctoritatis præmissæ de unitate essentiali trium personarum (!)." (Divi Thomæ Aquinatis. Opera, tom. viii. p. 83, Venetiis, 1776.) This probably accounts for the omission of the clause that concludes verse 8 in the Complutensian Polyglot, as well as in some of the Greek copies manufactured after the fourth Lateran Council. Some excuse may be allowed for one like the "angelic doctor," who was unacquainted with the Greek scriptures; but why then did he dogmatise on so serious a subject? Total ignorance is the only conceivable palliation of his assertions, which are notoriously opposed to truth. And what can one think of the deliberate sanction given to all this by Cardinal Ximenes and his editors in the renowned Polyglot of Alcalá? Are we to shelter them also under such a plea? If not, what then?

Again, what can one judge of the knowledge or the moral integrity of keeping up such an note to 1 John 5:7 in modern reprints of Jerome's works (e.g. the Abbe Migne's, Paris, 1845) as the following? "Cæterum nota sunt pro ejus versiculi germanitate testimonia Patrum Africanorum, Tertulliani, Cypriani, Eugenii, Fulgentii, Vigili, Victoris, e[t] quatuorcentum Episcoporum in fidei professione, quam Vandalorum regi obtulerunt. Major omni exceptione est Cassiodorus," &c. (Patrologiæ Curs., tom. xxix., coll. 846.) Not to speak of the silence of the Greek fathers on a question of the Greek text, it has been proved repeatedly and minutely that not one of these could have read the passage in the Greek as it now appears in the Vulgate. All that can be fairly drawn from Victor Vitensis' story of the symbol of faith presented by the African bishops to Hunneric is that the three heavenly witnesses must have been then read in their Latin copies. But it is certainly not so in the oldest and best Latin manuscripts that are extant, as all intelligent Romanists must know. (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist. and Rev., p.337-347)

witness A : It is needless to discuss verses 7, 8, as it is clear and known that the last half of the former and the first half of the latter are spurious: three (not six) witnesses, and one testimony. (Bible Treasury 14:112) [See note to 1 John 2:23]

5:8 [whole verse]: [See notes to 1 John 5:6 and 1 John 5:7]

5:13 [whole verse]: [See note to 1 John 5:6]

know that ye that believe: There is needed correction in the text and translation of 13, which is encumbered in the Text. Rec. and Authorised Version, where there ought to be nothing about "and that ye may believe," &c. (Bible Treasury 14:112) have life eternal: The reader has a close rendering of the best text ascertainable of what the apostle here wrote. As ver. 12 [13?] stands in the Text. Rec. and the A. V., it is deplorably confused and even misleading. Here it is as simple as it is important, so much so that there is no need to criticize what any Christian reader can do for himself by the bare comparison of the two. The Revisers give what is substantially correct. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.383)

5:18 is begotten: [See note to 2:29]

himself: There remains in 18 the American [correctors of the RV] preference of margin² himself for "him" in the text on the slender witness of A^{am} B 105. as opposed to all other authority). Dean Alford went so far indeed as to translate "it keepeth him" i.e. the divine birth pointed at in the aor. part. γεννηθείς, "he that was begotten." Mere theory, it seems to me, would deny the reflexive pronoun here. (Bible Treasury 15:96)

5:21 Dear children: [See note to John 13:33.]

Notes for 2 John

v. 1 elect lady: There have existed from post-apostolic times till our day all sorts of differing views as to this address: Some for Eclecta as a proper name; others for Kyria; a third class for "the church" in more senses than one adumbrated thereby, to say nothing of the Virgin Mary. It appears to me that it was a living sister in Christ to whom the Holy Spirit would have the apostle write without giving her name; and that her "elect sister" in the last ver. (13) strongly confirms this, as it explodes the notion of "the church," which pleased Jerome (Ep. 123 ad Ageruchiam), the Schol. i., in Matthæi and Casiodorus; and among moderns, Calovius, Hammond, Michaelis, &c. I am disposed even to think that the more literal rendering was really intended "to an elect lady," &c., though I shrank from acting on what seems not to have occurred to any one else. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.393-4) elect lady: It is well known what doubt exists among the learned, and from early days till the present to whom the Second [Epistle] was written. (Thus, Capellus, Grotius, deLyra, Bp. Middleton, Wetstein, Wolff, &c. took Eclecta for the proper name, as Bengel, Benson, Carpov, deWette, Fritzsche, Heumann, Jachmann, Lange, Lücke, Rosenmüller, with the Peschito Syriac, took Kyria (lady), while Beza, Aretas, Baum-Crusius, Corn-a-lap, Doddridge, Lardner, Mill, like the A. & R. Vv., Heidegger, Luther, Piscator, Wells, &c. preferred "to the elect lady," some suggesting Drusia, Martha, or the Lord's mother Mary. Greek and Latin fathers inclined to the church in general; as moderns to a particular one here or there. Even Dean Alford in his third edition gives "lady" in his notes, but in his Prolegomena gives his suffrage for Kyria. J. D. Michaelis suggested the wild idea of elect church assembling on a Lord's day!) And no wonder. God no more meant us to know the name of the lady here than of the sinful woman in Luke 7 on which so much foolish conjecture has been spent. It is as plain Greek as could be written for "an elect lady," whom with her children the apostle loved in truth. (God's Inspiration of the Scriptures, p.91) elect lady: The Authorised and Revised Versions are questionable as to "lady." Kyria is not without claim as a proper name instead of the appellative "lady"; while the idea of some that Eclecta is meant seems unfeasible, and indeed refuted by 13. (Dean Alford's reasoning (Prolegg. 186, vol. iv. ed. 3) seems open to exception, as he argues from the usage in the LXX. and New Testament as to Κύριος said of Jehovah to κυρία said of a woman.) (Bible Treasury 14:126) elect lady: All the notice taken of the Revisers' work [by the American correctors to the RV] is to say "1 (and 5) 'lady' add marg. Or, Cyria." Either the British Committee have been remarkably successful, or the American company have not been clearsighted, or some one else is disposed to be fastidious, which in any unfair sense I abhor. For there seem to be graver questions than of Cyria for "lady," though so understood from Athanasius (not to speak of Syrr.) down to Bengel, Griesbach, De Wette, Lachmann and Tischendorf. Wetstein, Grotius, Bp. Middleton, like R. Stephens in his third edition of 1550 (not in those of 1546 and 1549), decided for Eclecta as the proper name. This however seems disproved by the last verse of the Epistle, where it would be equally harsh to consider that her sister bore the same name, or that the epithet should be used so equivocally, if it be a proper name in the first verse. There remains the more generally accepted sense given in the Authorised and Revised Versions and all the older English, save the Rhemish; whereas the Vulg. and Aethiopp. (if not the Sah. and Memph., which seem ambiguous) support "elect lady," which Jerome took as symbolic of the catholic church, an alternative meaning of Cranmer's Cat. Pat. Gr. viii. 146, as it was held by other ancients. It was an error no doubt, as was the application to Corinth, Philadelphia, Jerusalem; not less than the tradition which gave it to Drusia, Martha, or the Virgin Mary, each of whom has had a defender. But one sees not why in this case the anarthrous construction in 1 should be unheeded, "to an elect lady" &c. Where the sense requires the article as in 13, it is duly inserted. Some for another purpose have reasoned on the greeting, not of the elect sister, but only of her children, forgetting that she might be deceased or absent from the place whence John wrote, and in either case could not be included in the salutation sent. But the entire phrase, as it forbids the symbolical interpretation, general or particular, corroborates most simply the ordinary view, only with our indefinite article; which phrase may have been employed to veil the name of the lady, while the fact and duty are carefully recorded. (Bible Treasury 15:110-111)

in truth: the Revisers rightly say "in truth" as characteristic of the apostle's love. Loving in truth supposes the truth known, but it goes farther and so stamps the love. Thus in fact the Authorised Version renders the same phrase in verse 4. (Bible Treasury 14:126) known: Again, it is not well to confound ἐγν. with γιν., the perfect with the present part. (Bible Treasury 14:126)

v. 3 you: [The RV gives] correctly the future: "Grace shall be with us," &c. For ἡμῶν (≠ B L P &c., and so Stephens) they read here, instead of ἡμῶν as in K, must cursives, and so Elz. followed by the Authorised Version. Undoubtedly "you" is the more usual wish; but this is rather an assurance, and the peculiar form well admits of the apostle's putting himself with those addressed, as in the preceding verse. (Bible Treasury 14:126) from: no notice is taken [by the American correctors of the RV] of John's peculiar phrase παρά, "on the part of God," not ἀπό, "from God" as in the Pauline Epistles. It is more intimate (cf. 4). That Cod. Sin^{am} and more than ten cursives read the more distant preposition ἀπό cannot shake the ordinary text, either here or, in some of them, the omission of the second παρά. (Bible Treasury 15:111)

^ Jesus: "The Lord" (κυρίου) is doubtful, though strongly supported, as some of the best uncials, cursives, and versions do not sanction it. (Bible Treasury 14:126)

^ Jesus: It is a much more doubtful question whether κυρίου "Lord" should be inserted . . . High authorities plead for and against. It would be the solitary case, if genuine, of so designating Christ in John's Epistles; but then it is the solitary case of a full and solemn salutation. Still I cannot but regard it as no less questionable than other assimilations to the style of the apostle Paul. (Bible Treasury 15:111)

v. 4 I rejoiced . . . I have found: [In the RV] "I rejoice" is a dubious rendering of the aorist, though I presume its adoption was mainly grounded on the perf. that follows, εὑρ., which certainly must mean, not "I found" only, as in the Authorised Version, but "I do find." The Revisers rightly give "we received." (Bible Treasury 14:126)

I rejoiced . . . I have found: But had our American friends [correctors of the RV] no compunction at the introduction into the version of the epistolary aorist or English present in 4, without even an intimation in the margin? In 3 John 3 they on the contrary give the proper aoristic sense to the text but the epistolary in the marg. which involves the rest of the verse rather harshly in the same form. The perfect εὑρ. "I have found" does not prove it even in this Second Epistle. He only intimates the permanence of the discovery, while he does not go beyond the expression of a definite time of joy. (Bible Treasury 15:111)

v. 5 we had . . . that: On the question of εἶχαμεν or εἴχομεν in 5 we need not enter now, nor the true connexion of ἵνα. (Bible Treasury 15:111)

v.7 went forth: The received text εἰσῆλθον, though supported by most, and in the Authorised Version, must yield to the more ancient and truer ἐξῆλθον. (Bible Treasury 14:126) went forth: The Revisers did well in abandoning the Text. Rec. and Authorised Version in 7; for "entered" (εἰσῆλθον), though supported by K L P and many cursives, &c. has no just sense, but ἐξῆλθον "went," or are gone, "forth." Compare 1 John 4:1, where there is no various reading in the corresponding word. (Bible Treasury 15:111)

^ Jesus . . . coming: Christ's coming is now expressed in the abstract present, rather than as the perfect of 1 John 4:2 (the present result of a past action). This makes no difference practically for the truth, which in both cases is the confession of His person thus qualified. Accordingly, as there so here, to leave out the words "that is" gives the force better than in the Authorised and the Revised Versions. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.403) coming: Here, too, it will be noticed that those who so wrongly contend for a continuous force in σωζόμενοι and ἀγιαζόμενοι, the Revisers included, are obliged to own that the present part. is timeless in this instance. Compare 3 John 3, where it is really no question of epoch. At any rate the late Dean Alford very properly shows that in these cases the present has nothing to do with time, but represents the great truth of the Incarnation itself, as distinguished from its historical manifestation (ἐλθών, 1 John 5:6), and from the abiding effect of that manifestation (ἐληλυθότα, 1 John 4:2); as all three are confessions of the Person Ἰησοῦς χριστός, distinguished from the accus. with infin. construction, which would have reduced the confession to simply the fact announced; whereas in each case it is the PERSON who is the primary predicate, the participle carrying the attributive or secondary predicate. (Bible Treasury 14:126) coming: On the other hand the same objection applies here as in 1 John 4:2,3. It is not the bare fact that Jesus was to come in flesh, but His person as so coming, which the deceivers do not confess. The participle, it will be noticed, is abstract or, as Alford says, altogether timeless. (Bible Treasury 15:111)

the . . . the: Of course the last clause should be "the" deceiver and "the" Antichrist." (Bible Treasury 14:126)

v. 8 we . . . we: . . . old copyists and modern editors and translators lost its point, and reduced it to a common-place. The Authorised Version, after the commonly received text, has excellent support, and yields an eminently touching reference. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.403)

we . . . we: The various readings here in ancient and good MSS. are due to a misunderstanding of the sense: "ye" was adopted to make it easier. Compare 1 John 2:28, which has the same sense; and here all agree to "we". (God's Inspiration of the Scriptures, p.567)

we . . . we: There has been sad tampering with the MSS. in 8, and the text accordingly varies in the hands of the editors also. Thus Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles, and Wordsworth follow κ A, eight cursives, and other good authorities, in the reading εἰργάσασθε, which gives the at best commonplace sense "ye wrought." These and others also, as Colinaeus and Alford with the Revisers, give "ye lose not" and "ye receive," but "we wrought." The text adopted by Erasmus and the Complutensian editors, by Stephens, Beza, and Elz., yields a touching appeal to those addressed, that the apostles and all who labour in the truth and for Christ might receive full recompense. Copyists, commentators, and critics missed the meaning, which is as delicate as it is forcible, though Beza was dull enough to say, in alluding to the text with the uniform second person, that the sense is the same. The Complutensians interpolate καλὰ after εἰργ., as does the Antwerp Polyglott; but not Goldhagen's edition, which some have supposed a reprint of the Greek Testament in either. Romanist theology sought to draw from the verse a Scriptural ground for their Pelagian notion of the meritoriousness of good works. Its real drift was as one might expect, generally misunderstood. (Bible Treasury 14:126)

we . . . we: In 8 reigns great confusion of copyists, who did not like the first person here, as being unusual and tampered with more or less from early times. The common text appears to be right. (Bible Treasury 15:111)

v. 9 onward: The correction in 9 is most important, "Whosoever goeth onward," προάγων (κ A B 98^m the best Latin, Sah. Aeth.), not παραβαίνων, as in the Text. Rec. and the more ordinary copies. "Transgression" is not the point, but development as to Christ, instead of abiding in the doctrine of Christ, His deity and humanity. (Bible Treasury 14:126) onward: But the Text. Rec. of 9 is utterly wrong in παραβαίνων "transgressing," which flowed from prevalent feeling and ignorance, instead of προάγων, going forward or taking the lead, the contrast of abiding in the teaching or doctrine of Christ — the truth of His person. "Going before [you]," as Alford suggests, like John 10:4, is ridiculously poor and wrong. It is rather development, so characteristic of the school of tradition which deifies the church, or the yet more irrelevant invention of heresiarchs impatient to advance beyond the limits of revelation. Neither prizes the truth and nothing but the truth, both go outside the truth to its destruction, utterly ignorant of the whole truth, which Christ is at least as much as what He taught. (Bible Treasury 15:111) doctrine ^ : It is really more forcible to omit the second τοῦ χριστοῦ or αὐτοῦ, and so the oldest MSS. and versions, &c. (Bible Treasury 14:126) doctrine ^ : The repetition of τ. χ. "of Christ," in the latter half of the verse is superfluous. The oldest and best authorities not only omit this, but adhere to the order of "the Father and the Son," contrary to A and Latin copies. (Bible Treasury 15:111)

v. 10 ^ home: "your" is uncalled for. Had more definiteness been intended it was open to the writer to have said τῇ or even to have added the pronoun: εἰς οἰκίαν is intentionally characteristic, or as we say "at home," and all the more forcible in certain cases. (Bible Treasury 15:111) greet: "Greeting" is the better rendering in 10, 11. (Bible Treasury 14:126)

v. 11 greeteth: There is nothing about "God speed" in the word (χαίρειν), though "good speed" might be tolerable. The stronger terms are merely put in by the English translators. It was the ordinary form of courteous greeting every day . . . Let me here repeat that it is not "God speed," for this might give a false idea. It sounds as if we were wishing him well in his work. This would be commonly inferred by one unaccustomed to read the language of the Holy Ghost. But it conveys nothing of the sort — merely a Greek "good morning" — what would pass in the current language of the day among one's fellows. (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist. and Rev., p.362-3) greeteth: [See note to 2 John 10]

v. 12 I would not: our "I was not minded" fairly meets οὐκ ἐβ. (better than ἦβ.) (Bible Treasury 15:111)

mouth unto mouth: [See note to 3 John 14]

our: κ confirms K L P with most cursives in reading ἡμῶν, "our," with Erasmus, Compl., Steph., Elz.; but ὑμῶν, "your," has good and ancient authority. (Bible Treasury 14:126) our: It is surprising that ἡμῶν "our" should not be preferred [by the American correctors of the RV] to ὑμῶν, "your." If A B, a good many cursives, and most ancient Vv. sustain the latter, κ K L P, many cursives, and ancient Vv. support the former, as the critics are rather evenly divided, Griesbach, Scholz, Tischendorf, and Wordsworth for ἡ. as Alford, Lachmann, Tregelles, and the Cambridge Editors for ὑ. But the first person couples the apostle with those he is writing to, a weighty element in the joy of those concerned, which the second person leaves out, in my judgment to the weakening of the truth here conveyed. (Bible Treasury 15:111)

2 John Notes

Notes for 3 John

v. 1 in truth: A similar remark applies here as to 2 John 1. (Bible Treasury 14:126) in truth: In 1 (and 3) the exclusion of the article is exact and not without its importance in this as in the previous Epistle, character, and not objectiveness, being intended. Compare this with the end of 4 (Bible Treasury 15:128)

v. 2 in: There is in 2 [of the RV] the better rendering of "in (lit. concerning) all things," not "above all things" as in Homeric usage. Thus simply is a strange difficulty, as others before had shown it ought to be, banished from our version. (Bible Treasury 14:126)

in: the poetic sense of περὶ π. is quite untenable here, though adopted by Beza and in the Geneva Bible before the Authorised Version. It is contrary to all sound doctrine that John prayed "in primis" or "above all things" for Caius' prosperity. As to, about, or in all things he prays that he may prosper and be in health, even as his soul prospers — this last the hinge on which he could pray that he might fare well in circumstances and bodily health. To make either or both his especial prayer is not unscriptural only but unreasonable, and below a Jew if not a heathen. Is it not startling that so flagrant a fault should have got in, and since the Reformation too? Certainly Wiclif is loose ("of all things I make preier that thou enter and fare wilfulli?" &c.), as he overlooked apparently the first "prospere" of the Vulgate, to speak of no other flaw. Tyndale, though right in his version of π. π., strangely deals with ὅγ. as "faredest well" which would answer better to εὐοδ., and so the Rhemish. Erasmus, though right where Beza led the way in error, extinguished all the touching grace of the verse by his impersonal vagueness, de omnibus opto, ut prospere agant et recte valcant, sicut &c. (Bible Treasury 15:128)

v. 3 ^Λ brethren . . . thy truth: [In the RV] it is rightly "brethren." Compare 2 John 7. The literal rendering "thy truth" would hardly convey the meaning, and "the truth that is in thee" as in the Authorised Version is not quite the thought, but "thy [abiding in the] truth, even as thou walkest in truth." (Bible Treasury 14:126) [See note to 3 John 1] came . . . bore: Had our Trans-Atlantic friends [the American correctors of the RV] nothing to say of the marg.¹ to 3? To take it as present was in no way due to the participles following the verse; and less, if possible, to the purposely general statement in 4. (Bible Treasury 15:128)

v.4 joy: The marginal alternative of "grace" for "joy" would scarcely have received notice if the combined Vatican and Vulgate had not stood so high with the Cambridge school. (Bible Treasury 14:126)

joy: In 4 the marg.² [i.e. "grace"] seems extravagantly wrong, even though B 7. 35. Vulg. in its best copies (save Tol. &c.) Memph. favour it. Wiclif ("I have not more grace of these things than that" &c.) and the Rhemish ("Greater thanks have I not of them than that" &c.) help to expose its hopeless unsoundness. The error for a scribe was easy, but hard for a sober and intelligent believer. Some have a morbid partiality for a singular variation; but none as yet had the hardihood to adopt it save the learned editors of Cambridge in their recent work. (Bible Treasury 15:128)

these things: an omission is supplied [in the RV], "these things," or "this." (Bible Treasury 14:126) the: Only here Text. Rec. omits τῇ, which is read by A B C &c., and this the Revisers rightly follow, "in the truth." (Bible Treasury 14:126) the: in "the" truth is right, though the article is omitted by ^κ C^{corr}. K L P. (Bible Treasury 15:128)

v. 5 and that, strangers: The correction in 5 is important, for the ordinary text is almost senseless, "to the brethren and to strangers." It is really "toward the brethren, and that, strangers," τοῦτο instead of the second εἰς τοὺς. Gaius, or Caius, was thus open-hearted toward the preaching or teaching brethren, and this if strangers; and John would have him go on in that faithful work of love. (Bible Treasury 14:126-127)

thou mayest do: Is not the rendering of the Revised Version in 5 likely to support Lachmann's reading ἐργάζῃ rather than the unquestionable ἐργάσῃ, not to speak of failing to distinguish ἐργ. and ποι.? (Bible Treasury 15:128) and this strangers: In the last clause of ver. 5 the common text as presented by the A.V. is not only defective but contrary to sense. For it conveys the notion of two objects given, "to the brethren and to strangers." The true text, as attested by the best MSS., is "and this strangers". (Exp. of Epist. of John, p.414) and this strangers: (The reading of the most ancient and best MSS. and Versions is τοῦτο (and not as in Text. Rec. εἰς τοὺς) ξ.) . . . The common text and our English version seem a little peculiar in the phraseology here, conveying the idea that these strangers were not brethren. This clearly was not the intention. (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist., and Rev., p.369)

v. 6 love: "Charity" has another meaning quite unknown to Scripture, wholly alien from the case before us, and beneath the divine affection here contemplated. No doubt its use in the English version of 1 Cor. 13 elevates it not a little above conventionalism, but "love" is unequivocal save to the base. It is a good word of our mother tongue, whereas "charity" came in through the Latin. The Spirit of God uses a word which in a heathen's mouth had a sensual force, gave it a blessed and holy direction, christened it and thus hallowed it for ever. (Exp. of Epist. of John, p. 414)

the: let me say that, though we cannot well express the anathorous ἐν ἐκκλ. as here meant, Winer has no better reason than elsewhere to account for the omission by any peculiar property in the word or any license in its usage. Such explanations spring from mere defect of analysis. Nor is the sense before "a" church, as translates Mr. T. S. Green; though grammatically possible, the sense is unsuitable. The absence of the article is to express character; they witnessed of Caius's love before (the) assembly, not man nor yet God only, but ecclesiastically as such. Compare Acts 9:15; 19:19; 28:35; Rom. 12:17; 2 Cor. 8:21; 1 Tim. 5:20; 6:12. It is rigidly accurate, though English does not appear capable of well expressing the nice shade. (Bible Treasury 15:128)

v.7 for: one might say "for on behalf of the Name, they went forth," rather than "because that for the sake of" &c. ὕπερ τ. ὄν. here hardly imports the same as διὰ τὸ ὄν. αὐτοῦ in 1 John 2:12. (Bible Treasury 15:128)

Gentiles: "the Name" is the true reading on almost all authority worth speaking of, without "his" (αὐτοῦ), which is due to the Complutensian editors (not to Erasmus), followed by Beza and Elz. The best authorities give, not ἐθνῶν, but ἐθνικῶν, "of those of the nations" or Gentiles. (Bible Treasury 14:127)

v. 8 receive [or, welcome]: it is ἀπολ., as in Text. Rec., but ὑπολ., to bear up or welcome. . . . [The RV has] done well to mark ἐπιδέχεται as distinct from ὑπολ. in 8. It is used for recognition or admission of authority, and sometimes for entertaining people. (Bible Treasury 14:127) receive [or, welcome] . . . with: "Welcome" in 8 [of the RV] is a reading differing from the Received Text and should be noted. The word means to "take up" or "sustain" and should be distinguished from "receive" in 9, 10, the first use of which seems not recognising the apostle's authority in what he wrote, or rejecting him virtually, the second not admitting, to fellowship rather than hospitality, the visiting brethren, but casting out of the church those who would do so. "For" was Dean Alford's notion; but "with" as in the Revised Version and others seems more forcible. (Bible Treasury 15:128) truth: It may be well to mention here that $\aleph^{p.m.}$ and A join in the absurd misreading $\epsilon\kappa\kappa\lambda\eta\sigma\acute{\iota}\varsigma$, instead of $\acute{\alpha}\lambda\eta\theta\epsilon\acute{\iota}\varsigma$. This error may have been through the words that follow. How vain to idolize these venerable documents! Had B instead of A been one, we might have heard more on behalf of the variant. (Bible Treasury 14:127)

3 John Notes

v. 9 something: there is a common short but weighty omission in the common text in which the Revisers reinstate $\tau\iota$ "somewhat" on the authority of \aleph A B C 7. 68. Sah. Memph. & Arm. $\aleph^{corr.}$ with more than ten cursives &c. join K L P and most cursives in omitting the indef. pronoun, but the former add $\acute{\alpha}\nu$ which gives to the verb the force of "I should have written to" &c. And this appears to be the ground of the Vulgate's extraordinary "forsitan," the "peradventure" of Wiclif, and the "perhaps" of the Rhemish; which any christians should have felt and known to be out of harmony with divine truth, and simply impossible: I mean, not the reading $\acute{\alpha}\nu$, but the Latin rendering followed by its English reproducers. (Bible Treasury 15:128) something: the Text. Rec. drops $\tau\iota$, "somewhat," which the Revisers of course accept on excellent authority. (Bible Treasury 14:127)

v. 10 bring to remembrance . . . wicked: "bring to remembrance" is more correct than "remember," as "wicked" is preferable to "malicious." (Bible Treasury 14:127)

v. 11 imitate . . . Λ the: Gaius was not to "imitate" the evil but the good (11). The copula of Text. Rec. should disappear. (Bible Treasury 14:127)

v. 12 thou knowest: it is rightly the sing. "thou knowest," not "ye know" as in the Authorised Version following Text. Rec. (Bible Treasury 14:127)

v. 14 mouth unto mouth: It seems strange that in 14, as in 2 John 12, the margin does not represent, as in the Authorised Version, the literal rendering "mouth to mouth." (Bible Treasury 14:127)

the: we find "the" friends rightly in the Revised Testament on both occasions [i.e., in 2 John also]. (Bible Treasury 14:127)

Notes for Jude

v.1 Jude: The Americans [correctors of the RV] in 1 would (like the Geneva, Rhemish, and Authorised Versions) read “Jude” for “Judas,” adding in marg. Gr. Judas: a remarkable note, especially from those who do not value current customs like the old world. Yet they adopt “Judas,” not Jude, in Matt. 10:4, &c. passim 13:55; Mark 6:3; Acts 5:37; 9:11; 15:22, &c. In Matt. 1 &c. they do not object to “Judah” for the same word. Such variety in English seems undesirable. The Revisers, with Wiclif, Tyndale, and Cranmer, seem to me fully justified in giving “Judas,” save in citations from the Old Testament where they perpetuate the Hebrew form. (Bible Treasury 15:144)

^ servant: [see note to 1 P. 1:1]

^ servant: As usual we have no notice [from the American correctors of the RV] of the Revisers’ failure to deal with anarthrous description, which they have represented aright in the second member, not in the first. Was it not as easy to have said, “servant of Jesus Christ,” as “brother of James”? “A” was uncalled for in either case. (Bible Treasury 15:144) them that are called: It has also been remarked (in B.T. Aug. 1882, p. 127) that τοῖς κλ. should not be confounded with τ. κεκλ. as the Revisers do, whereas the Holy Spirit pointedly employs the perf. part. in the two included words of predication, but the verbal adj. with the more direct address. (Bible Treasury 15:144) beloved: This may surprise many who have been accustomed to the Authorised Version, but it is not a question of what we have been accustomed to, but of what God wrote. The Authorized Version is an admirable one. Our translators did not mistake the meaning of the Greek word in the text before them; but the text which they had was the common text, and this text is as faulty in its way as the common English Version. This text was transcribed by a number of different hands, and if the writing was not very clear there was always a tendency for the copyist to make mistakes.

I have had a deal of writing pass through my hands, but I hardly have seen any, where there is not some mistake made. Particularly when the writing is a copy of another, it is almost always so, and more particularly when the man whose thoughts and words are copied is above the common people. The way to find out the best Greek text is to go up to the oldest of all, and to compare the oldest of all with the different translations made in ancient times, and if these agree, then you have the right one. But they often disagree, and then comes the question, Which is right? Here the all important question is the guidance of the Spirit of God. We can never do without Him, and the way in which the Spirit of God leads persons who really are not only indwelt by Him, but led by Him, is — does it express the current of the Epistle? Does it fall in with the line of the apostle’s writing?

Well, you see the word “sanctified” may be correct in itself, but the word here should be, “to those that are called, beloved,” etc. You observe that the word “called” occurs at the end of the verse. This word “called” is very emphatic. Then he describes them in two different ways. First, here, in the A.V., it is “sanctified,” but as now generally accepted by those who have studied the text fully, it is “beloved in God the Father.” (ἡγαπημένοις (beloved) ≠ A B and several cursives, all the Ancient Versions, Origen, &c. ἡγιασμένοις (sanctified) K L P &c.) “In” is very often equivalent to (indeed, it is a stronger expression than) “by.” But I now give it literally, “beloved in God the Father.” I confess myself that not only is this reading the most ancient, the best approved by the highest witnesses that God has given to us of His word, but it is beautifully appropriate to the Epistle. (Lect. on Jude, p.21-3) by [or, for]: It is not exactly “preserved in.” It may be “by” or “for.” These are the two alternatives for that word. I do not see how it can be “in”; so that you see it little differs from what we read here. It brings in another idea, and it is perfectly true either way. We are preserved by Christ, and we are preserved for Christ. I have not made up my mind which of the two in this instance is right, because they cannot both be the intention of the Spirit of God. One must be right rather than the other, but I cannot say that my judgment is yet formed as to the choice of these two prepositions, whether it should be “preserved for Jesus Christ,” or “by” Jesus Christ, He being the great One that does keep us. But in either case, how beautifully it is suited to a time of extra danger, and of danger too that he was not warranted to say would pass! (Lect. on Jude, p.26)

^ servant . . . them that are called . . . beloved . . . by [or, for]: The Authorised Version has “the,” the Revised Version “a,” servant. Judas, bondman, &c., is best, as often pointed out. “To them that are called” would answer to τοῖς κεκλημένοις rather than to τ. κλητοῖς, the called. But “for” Jesus Christ, though grammatical, is open to question; “in” as parallel would seem better, or perhaps “by.” “Sanctified” in the Authorised Version is the right version of a wrong reading displaced on good authority by “beloved.” (Bible Treasury 14:127)

the: [the] (God’s Inspiration p. 574)

by [or, for]: But it is questionable whether “for” is right with “kept.” That the saints are and were both beloved and kept has great force in so solemn a sketch of imminent apostasy as is here portrayed. (Bible Treasury 15:144)

v.3 ^ common: It seems strange that Lachmann should by punctuation so divide the sentence as to impair or destroy what is otherwise simple and weighty. He puts a comma after the twofold ὑμῖν, the effect of which is to falsify the epistle; for it does not treat of the common salvation, but is an earnest contention for the faith once for all delivered to the saints. Mere scholarship without a spiritual mind is untrustworthy in divine things. (Bible Treasury 14:127)

you: In Text. Rec. followed by the Authorised Version ἡμῶν is wrongly omitted: the Revised Version inserts it correctly on high authority, and renders the text better in more than one word. (Bible Treasury 14:127)

once: . . . not “once on a time,” but “once for all.” . . . “Once” is an equivocal word. It might mean “once on a time,” once at a particular moment; but this is not the force of the word here at all. It means “once for all.” (Lect. on Jude, p.38-39)

v.4 of old were ordained: the Americans [correctors of the RV] would have “written beforehand,” and put “set forth” into the margin: a doubtful interpretation, as it assigns but a secondary place to the well-known technical force of προγ. (Bible Treasury 15:144) sentence: κρίμα is rather the “charge” for which they were to be judged than “condemnation.” Hence it came to mean the sentence or doom, as with us crime. (Bible Treasury 14:127) sentence: [The American correctors of the RV] overlook also the old inaccuracy of taking κρίμα as “condemnation” which is rather κατάκρ. In effect, it becomes this; but we ought always to translate correctly. (Bible Treasury 15:144)

Master ^ : θεόν (God) though added (after “Master”) by K L P 31 Syrr., is omitted by ≠ A B C 13 Vulg. Copt. Sah. Arm. and Æthiopic Versions. (Lect. on Jude, p.46)

v.5 once: Here we have again the same word “once,” which as we have already seen is equivocal. It might mean formerly; but that is not the meaning at all, no more than that the faith was formerly given. It means given “once for all.” (Lect. on Jude, p.48-9) once for all knowing all things: The Revisers correct the double error of the Authorised Version in 5, “once knew.” It should be “know once for all.” “This” is an error, not of rendering as those just named, but of the Text. Rec. followed by Authorised Version. It should be πάντα, "all things," not τοῦτο, "this," as in the later copies. (Bible Treasury 14:127)

all things: πάντα (all things) & A B C² 13 Vulg. Copt. Syr. Arm. and Æthiop. Vv. instead of τοῦτο (this) K L 31 and Sah. Version. (Lect. on Jude, p.48-9)

Lord _Λ: It is a mercy that the love of paradox with deference to A B &c. did not as in Lachmann and Alford introduce Ἰησοῦς here [in the RV], where Κύριος without the article, Jehovah, is the true reading. (Bible Treasury 14:127)

Lord _Λ: if some wonder at "Jesus" there [in the Rhemish], let them remember that excellent authority supports this word, though κύριος, Jehovah, (or ὁ κ. "the Lord," in the Text. Rec.) has perhaps stronger claims on our acceptance. (Bible Treasury 15:144)

Lord _Λ: the marginal rendering [of the RV] appears to be better than that of the text; but θεόν of the Text. Rec. is rightly rejected on ample authority. (Bible Treasury 14:127) in the second place: why τὸ δ., "afterward"? Why not "in the second place"? (Bible Treasury 14:127) in the second place: [The American correctors of the RV] have allowed to pass the feeble rendering of the Authorised and Revised Versions, "afterward;" whereas its force seems to be to mark "the second time" of divine action: first, He saved a people out of Egypt; in the second place, He destroyed them. Still wider of the mark were Tyndale and Cranmer who connected τὸ δ. with "those that believed not." The Rhemish follows the Vulgate in the true sense (Bible Treasury 15:144)

v. 6 _Λ angels: "angels" rightly in the Revised Version, not "the" as if all were concerned. It is a defined set among the angels. (Bible Treasury 14:127) hath kept in: [The American correctors of the RV] do not notice the scarcely English phrase "hath kept . . . unto," though one may shrink from G. Wakefield's "keepeth" as hardly a right rendering of the prf. But "hath in keeping" might suffice. (Bible Treasury 15:144) unto: But is "hath kept . . . unto" good English? "He hath in keeping" might do better perhaps; and so I see, nearly, Mr. T. S. Green. (Bible Treasury 14:127)

v. 7 _Λ judgment: And why in 7 should not "the" have been avoided with δίκ. as well as "a"? (Bible Treasury 15:144)

v.8 Yet . . . _Λ dreamers: the Revisers rightly give us "yet," and drop "filthy," which is implied in the context, as they represent well the anarthrous force of οὗτοι ἐνυπν., which can hardly bear "these dreamers," but means rather "these in their dreams," or "dreaming as they do." (Bible Treasury 14:127)

_Λ dreamers: I do not know any reason for putting in the word "filthy." You will see the word is in italics. (Lect. on Jude, p.68)

_Λ flesh: It is not spiritual defilement, but fleshly. "The" makes it too concrete, as in all the old English versions. (Bible Treasury 15:144)

v. 12 _Λ spots [or, hidden rocks]: I think there cannot be a doubt of the article as the genuine reading, which gives vividness and objectivity to the σπιλάδες, whether sunken rocks or blots be meant. (Bible Treasury 14:127)

fearlessly pasturing themselves: But it is not correct to impute to Beza simply the Authorised Version which construes ἄφ. with ἐν. τ., inasmuch as the Syriac and ancient versions in general so take it, except perhaps the Vulgate followed by the Rhemish alone of English versions, which takes it with εὐωχοῦ. (Bible Treasury 14:127)

fearlessly pasturing themselves: And had they [The American correctors of the RV] no question about the rendering of ἐὰν ὅτι ποι. in 12, even if ἄφ. be severed from the preceding and connected with the following, as the Revisers prefer, with the Authorised Translation after

Erasmus and Beza? "Shepherds that . . . feed" is a fertile if legitimate rendering of ποι., if "deluding" is a wild suggestion of Wakefield, though he sends us for confirmation to a lengthy note on Luke 17:7,8, in his Silva Crit. ii. 85-90. (Bible Treasury 15:144)

v. 13 shames: it should be the plural form "shames" or "disgraces," which is more usual in English, to guard from the equivocal; for they can clearly have no sense of shame. It means shameful things. (Bible Treasury 14:127)

v. 14 as to: Do not the Revisers furnish an unnatural and misleading version of τοῦτοις in 14? What is the sense of "to these?" One can imagine a far-fetched way of supposing that Enoch prophesied to the corrupting apostates who shall meet their doom when the Lord is come in judgment. But a dative of reference is far simpler, "for," "as to," "of" as in all English versions like others. (Bible Treasury 14:127) came amid: [The RV] of course give[s] "came" as in prophetic vision, not "cometh," which is to confound the tense system; and they translate ἐν here rightly with (i.e. amidst) His holy myriads. (Bible Treasury 14:127)

v. 15 [of them]: Tischendorf retains αὐτῶν after ἀσεβεῖς as in the Text. Rec., contrary to his critical note (Ed. viii.), which rejects it on the highest authority (Bible Treasury 14:128) things: [Tischendorf] reads λόγων against weighty witnesses. (Bible Treasury 14:128)

v. 18 in [the] end of the time: In 18 there is a question of text and of translation. Text. Rec., in accordance with the majority, reads ἐν ἐ. χ., in the last time; but the ancient copies give ἐπ' ἐσχάτου [τοῦ] χ., &c. attesting the article, B C &c. omitting it, which the Revisers follow. Compared with other varieties of the phrase, it would seem to mean "at the end of the time." (Bible Treasury 14:128)

v. 19 make _Λ separations: the true reading is ἀποδ. without ἐαυτούς, as Eras. Compl. and Stephens edited, but Colinaeus even before Beza and Elz. added it. The Rescript of Paris supports it and a few cursives, which may have been Beza's three old copies. But this sort of separatist is not to be confounded with the αἰρετικός in Tit. 3, 1 Cor. 11, Gal. 5, for the mischief was according to the context from their being within, not from their going out. They were certainly far from the mind and grace of Christ; but if they separated the saints from themselves or themselves from the saints, it was not, it would appear, by an outward breach: they carried on their deadly and corrupting work inside. (Bible Treasury 14:128) make _Λ separations: But "themselves" as in the Elzevirian text of 19 is an addition to that which is attested by the most reliable witnesses, and looks as if meant to clench the ecclesiastical meaning given to ἀποδ. which means separatism, but of a definite kind within rather than without. To treat it as schism, or rather "heresy" in its scriptural force of a party gone outside, is quite at issue with the intimations of this Epistle. (Bible Treasury 15:144) natural [or, soulful]: They were "sensual," as the Authorised and Revised Versions say, or rather "natural" men. Dean Alford reasons from the words, not from the written word, when he treats ψυχικοί as midway between πν. and σαρκικοί. For 1 Cor. 2, 3, plainly prove that σ. is the true midway term, and means one unduly deferring to intellect or fleshly feeling, but a saint (like the Corinthian believers); whereas ψ. means man in his natural and absolutely unrenowned estate, as indeed here described πν. μὴ ἔχ. (Bible Treasury 14:128)

v.22 [whole verse]: On 22 the Americans [correctors of the RV] would add a not very important marg. note. (Bible Treasury 15:144)

when contending: Now we come to a passage which I feel to be unusually difficult to expound; and the reason is this. The original authorities and the best authorities are all in confusion about it. This is very rarely the case in the New Testament, but it is the case here. All the great authorities are at sixes and sevens in the testimony they give of these two verses (22,23). And, to show you how great that is, our Version — the Authorized, so-called — looks at two cases only, “And of some have compassion, making a difference” — that is one class; “and others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire; hating even the garment spotted by the flesh” — this is the second class.

Now I believe there are three classes, and not two only. That will show how uncertain it is. Although, as I have said, I am very far from presuming to give more than my judgment as far as the Lord enables me to form one. I am certainly open to anything that might be shown to the contrary, but as yet no one has shown it. No one at all. I think that those who know best about it are those that have spoken most cautiously as to it. Many who trust themselves are apt to speak more confidently.

First of all Jude says, “And some convict when contending.” (ἐλέγγετε A C*, the best cursives, and Vv., διακρινομένους κ A B C, good cursives, Vulg., Syrr., Arm. — Text. Rec. ἐλεείτε διακρινομένοι K L P, etc.) That is the idea — “when they dispute”; not, “making a difference,” as of the man that shows compassion. The fact is, compassion belongs to another class, not to this one at all, as far as I am able to judge, which depends upon looking at all the authorities and using one to correct another. That is what it comes to in this singular case, which is a very exceptional thing in the great original witnesses; but God has been pleased in this particular instance not to hinder their difference.

Some then “convict when they dispute.” I think that is the meaning of it. “Making a difference,” as in the Authorized, should rather be, “when they dispute.” It is the people that are being convicted who of course make the dispute, instead of the person that shows compassion making a difference among them. It is quite a different idea. The first class, in this twenty-second verse, has been given (in my belief) very wrongly indeed. (Lect. on Jude, p.152-3) when contending: the authorities are most conflicting. Some like the Text. Rec. make but two classes, others three. One could not gather from the Greek or the English of the Revisers that some of the most venerable and best documents, supported by the oldest versions and other witnesses, point to ἐλέγγετε (A C, many cursives and versions), not ἐλεείτε (or ἐλεάτε), in 22; or yet more to διακρινομένους (κ A B C &c.), which they rightly follow. The Vulgate represents the ancient text fairly, save that it deserts its own rendering of δ. in verse 9, which substantially suits 22 far better than “judicatos.” Dr. Wells and Bengel first vindicated the true text, in which the critics wonderfully agree. Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles, Wordsworth, Griesbach and Scholz are poor enough, Westcott and Hort worst of all; for what can be more absurd than for scholars to present, as an inspired text, such a jumble of readings as οὗς μὲν ἐλεάτε διακρινομένους σώζετε ἐκ π. ἀρπά., κ. τ. λ.? For to construe this at all we must take the first words as a strict relative, and the first verb as an indicative, to the utter dislocation of the rest of the sentence, and the destruction of any just sense from it as a whole. The twofold ἐλεάτε of κ B cannot stand, nor the omission of οὗς δέ in 13 before σώζετε. The Revisers did adopt unhappily the first ἐλεάτε, but the rest of their text is all right. It seems surprising that they should not have named in their margin the good and ancient evidence for ἐλέγγετε. (Bible Treasury 14:128)

v.23 pulling them out of [the] fire: σώζετε ἐκ πυρὸς ἀρπάζοντες κ A B C, best cursives, Vulg., Memph., Arm., Aeth., οὗς δὲ ἐλεάτε ἐν φόβῳ κ A (ἐλεείτε) B, Vulg., Memph., Arm., Aethiop. — Text. Rec. ἐν φόβῳ σώζετε ἐκ τοῦ πυρὸς ἀρπάζοντες K L P, etc. (Lect. on Jude, p.154) pulling them out of [the] fire. And others pity with fear: It is right to notice, if only in a note, that the manuscripts here are singularly in conflict as to the readings. The Sinai and the Vatican, with the corrector of the Rescript of Paris, read ἐλεάτε, which is only another form of the common reading ἐλεείτε, “compassionate.” But there is the awkward repetition of the same word again as a later clause; for the older manuscripts present a threefold division in the sentence. According to the weightiest authorities, it would seem, on the whole that it should stand thus: καὶ οὗς μὲν ἐλέγγετε διακρινομένους, οὗς δὲ σώζετε ἐκ πυρὸς ἀρπάζοντες, οὗς δὲ ἐλεάτε ἐν φόβῳ, μισοῦντες καὶ τὸν ἀπὸ τῆς σαρκὸς ἐσπιλωμένον χιτῶνα. “And some convict when contending, but others save, snatching them from the fire, and others compassionate in fear, hating even the garment that is spotted by the flesh.” It is curious that Dr. E. Wells, in his “Help for the more easy and clear understanding of the Holy Scriptures” (the part containing these Epistles being published at Oxford, in 1715), adopted this text substantially, which he thus translated: “And some being wavering, rebuke; and others save, pulling them out of the fire; and of others have compassion with fear,” &c. He rejected the twofold division, and corrected the form of single words mainly on the authority of the Alexandrian MS., with some others of less weight, confirmed by the Vulgate, the Syriac, and the Ethiopic Versions. With the exception of the error already pointed out, the oldest uncials agree, we may say, in the text here presented, save that the Vatican makes, to my mind, a mess by omitting the first οὗς δέ, which seems to have been an unintentional slip, as the clause is thereby rendered scarce translatable or intelligible. Insert the words with the Sinai and other ancient MSS., and all is plain. Hence this is the form of the sentence preferred by Tischendorf and other modern editors. The nom. διακρινομένοι of the received text (which the English Version follows) can hardly be traced higher than the ninth century: if it were preferable, the meaning would be as given there. But if the more ancient reading in the accusative stand, verse 9 of this Epistle supplies the probable sense here. (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist. and Rev., p.384-5) [see also note to Jude v. 22]

v.24 you: Those who idolise a few of the most ancient MSS., to the practical exclusion of other witnesses and internal evidence, would do well to ponder the fact that the Sinai MS. here joins the Parisian Rescript, and the Passionei MS. with very many cursives and most versions in reading ὑμᾶς, “you;” whilst the Alexandrian reads ἡμᾶς, “us,” and the Vatican and the Moscow MS. of Matthaei with more than thirty cursives give αὐτούς, “them,” to which modern editors incline. (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist. and Rev., p.385)

you: both Authorised and Revised Versions agree in adopting “you” as in κ B C L, many cursives, and all the versions of note, though Eras., the Compl., Colinaeus, Stephens, Bengel, &c. preferred αὐτούς, “them,” with K P and some forty cursives. (Bible Treasury 14:128)

v.25 Ἄ God: (σοφῶ (wise) is omitted by κ A B C Vulg., Copt., Arm., Aethiop. and Syrr. Vv. — T.R. inserts with K L P and many cursives.) . . . The word “wise” has crept in here. In all correct texts the word “wise” disappears in this place. It is perfectly right in Romans 16:27. And I refer to that text to show its appropriateness there: “To God only wise.” I presume that it was this passage that led the ignorant monk, or whoever he was that was copying Jude, to (as he thought) correct it. But we cannot correct. All these human corrections are innovations, and our point is to get back to what God wrote and to what God gave. Everything except what God gave is an innovation, but God’s word is the standard, and all that departs from, or does without, it is an innovation. (Lect. on Jude, p.166,168-9)

Ἄ God: there is no reasonable doubt that σοφῶ in the Text. Rec., followed by the Authorised Version, is well left out by the superior authority of the older MSS. and versions. It probably crept in from Rom. 16:27, where it is as perfectly in place as here superfluous. (Bible Treasury 14:128)

Ἄ God: [See note to 1 Tim. 1:17]

^ God . . . through Jesus Christ our Lord . . . before all times: In verse 25 μόνῳ (without σόφῳ brought in from Rom. 16:29) is the right reading, with the very important additions of δ.ὰ Ἰ.Χ. τ. κ. ἡ., and πρὸ π. τ. αἰ. Copyists are apt to enlarge and assimilate; they do not so often, as here, omit. (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist. and Rev., p.385) through Jesus Christ our Lord: διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν κ A B C L Vulg., Copt. and Syrr. Vv. — T.R. omits with K P. (Lect. on Jude, p.166)

through Jesus Christ our Lord . . . before all times: But there are two omissions also of the Text. Rec. which are properly supplied by the Revisers, διὰ Ἰ. Χ. τ. κ. ἡμῶν and πρὸ π. τ. αἰῶνος, which rest on ample and sure authority, giving of course additional force and beauty to this solemn yet comforting epistle, with its closing doxology. (Bible Treasury 14:128) before all times: (πρὸ παντός τοῦ αἰῶνος κ A B C L Vulg., Copt., Arm., and Æthiop. Vv. — T.R. omits with K P and most cursives.) . . . It is much more precise than what we have in our Authorized Version; and is here given according to the reading of the best authorities and rightly adopted by the Revisers. (Lect. on Jude, p.166,175)

Notes for Revelation

Title Ἀποκάλυψις Ἰωάννου appears in C.; A. probably had the same, if we may judge from the close, for the title is lost. B. has ἀπ. Ἰ. τοῦ θεολόγου καὶ εὐαγγελιστοῦ. I have preferred adhering to the inscription of the best authorities, though it is only human and jars somewhat with the opening words of the text. Others have given simply ἀποκάλυψις, but this apparently without authority of MSS. "Revelation of John" may have been said, as Bengel suggests, to distinguish the book from apocryphal rivals. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.2)

1:1 him: ἀντὶ B., a slip for ἀντὶ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.2)

Λ things: Chapter 1:1 affords an early specimen of rash innovation effected by punctuation, which has not commended itself generally, no not even to Lachmann. It was probably due to the influence of Drs. Westcott and Hort, who adopt it in their Greek text. Wiclif's is the only English version which preceded them in so strange a view; but J. H. Heinrichs contends for it in the tenth vol. of Koppe's edition, and wrongly, as I cannot but think with Dean Alford. (Bible Treasury 14:142) angel Λ: τοῦ δούλου A., probably δι' ὁμοιοτέλειαν for τῷ δ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.2)

angel Λ: The Alexandrine MS (A) reads τοῦ δούλου (i.e. "by the angel his servant"); the editors (edd.) prefer the common reading. (Prospect 1:153)

1:2 Λ whatsoever: τε Rec. (on the authority of several cursive mss. &c.) is not found in ABC., more than forty-five cursives, (Compl.) the Vulgate, Coptic, Syriac, Æthiopic, &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.2)

Λ whatsoever: The "Received Text" (Rec.) has ὅσα τε but the edd. drop the latter word, which is omitted in the three uncial and forty-two cursive MSS., as well as in many versions. (Prospect 1:153)

Λ whatsoever: How could any one, unless barely reprinting the received text or the Authorized Version, intelligently keep τε in the Greek text or the last "and" in English? The best MSS. and versions are unanimous; and so are all careful editors. The erroneous addition falsifies the sense; for it makes of John's visions a third division of his testimony, instead of representing them as qualifying the word of God and the testimony of Jesus which he testified. (Lect. on Rev., p. xxxiii)

Λ whatsoever: But there can be no doubt that they [the RV] are justified with almost all critics and on ample authority, in excluding τε "and" in the closing clause of 2. (Bible Treasury 14:142)

he saw. Λ: ἶδεν AB., 7.* 98. (Verse 12, ἶδον BC., 7. 14. Verse 17, BC., 7. Verse 19, ἶδες AB., 7. and 20., B., 7.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.2)

he saw: Nineteen mss., Compl., Arm., &c., add (after εἶδεν) καὶ ἄτινα εἰσίν, (ἔστιν,) καὶ ἄ (some ἄτινα) χρὴ γενέσθαι μετὰ ταῦτα (evidently added and altered from verse 19 seq.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.2)

1:3 the words: τοὺς λ. τούτους C. τὸν λόγον B. But A and the mass of mss. give the common reading. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.2) the . . . the: there is no need as in the Authorised Version to say "this" and "those," but "the" in both instances. Some of the ancients and even a pair of cursives (7. 16.) give the demonstrative; but there is no real ground. (Bible Treasury 14:142)

1:4 from him: ὁ ὦν AC., sixteen cursives, Compl. θεοῦ is prefixed by B., thirty-five mss., Arm., (κυρίου 31.) and τοῦ by other witnesses of less weight. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.2)

from him: Matthiae reads ἀπὸ θεοῦ with an uncial MS. in the Vatican (B) and more than thirty others; Rec. has ἀπὸ τοῦ; edd. ἀπὸ ὁ ὦν a plain Hebraism, as in Ἰησοῦ, ὁ μάρτυς ὁ πιστὸς, in the verse that follows. (Prospect 1:153) who are: Rec. Knappe (Kn.) Griesbach (Gr.) and Scholz (Sz.) read ἃ ἔστιν, Tischendorf (Tisch.) and Lachmann (Ln.) read τῶν, Tregelles (Treg.) ἃ. (I refer to the first edition in 1844. That of 1848 differs in many places, . . . As no text accompanies the translation of 1848 I cannot cite it, but make this explanation to avoid mistake.) (Prospect 1:153) who are: ἃ BC., forty cursives, &c. (ἔστιν, or εἰσιν being added by some,) τῶν A. 47. (80. omits). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.2)

1:5 of: ἐκ Rec. is wanting in ABC., forty-five mss., and many versions and fathers. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.2)

prince . . . loveth: the change from "prince" to "ruler" [in the RV] is not much; "loveth" for "loved" is good (Bible Treasury 14:142)

loveth: ἀγαπῶντι ABC., more than forty cursives, the Syriac, while ἀγαπήσαντι is read by many later mss. (δς ἡγάπησεν 87.), the Vulgate, Coptic, &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.2)

loveth: Rec. ἀγαπήσαντι, the edd. ἀγαπῶντι. (Prospect 1:153) washed: λούσαντι B. and the mass of copies, (ἐλουσεν 87.) versions, &c. λύσαντι AC. 6. 7. (which prefixes a long gloss) 12. 28.* 36. 69. versions &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.2) washed: Another reading λύσαντι, "loosed," is supported by the three best uncials A C, a few good cursives, the Syriac, some Slav. copies, and early writers. But ου might be easily merged in υ and the idea of washing seems most in keeping with the style elsewhere. The common reading is supported by B P, the vast majority of the cursives, versions, and citations. Doctrinally the difference of sense is unimportant. (Lect. on Rev., p.10) washed: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. and Treg. λούσαντι, Ln. and Tisch. λύσαντι. (Prospect 1:153) washed: "loosed" for "washed" is hazardous, though here Tischendorf too was swayed by the Sinaitic in addition to A C, &c., to give in to Lachmann and Tregelles. The vowel might easily have displaced the diphthong, especially as the rendering is thereby easier, though less akin to the Johannine style. (Bible Treasury 14:142)

from: ἀπὸ B. and the great majority, ἐκ AC. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.2-3)

our: ἡμῶν, omitted by . 12. 16. Er., is to be read with BC. and the rest. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.3)

1:6 made: ἐποίησεν AC. and the mass, ποιήσαντι B. and nine more. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.3) us: ἡμᾶς B. and most others, ἡμῖν A. 13. 23. 27. 31. 55., ἡμῶν C. and some good copies of the Vulgate. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.3) us: Here the ancient MSS. are conflicting; A exhibiting ἡμῖν, and C ἡμῶν. Griesbach, Knapp, Scholz, and Tischendorf, rightly (I think) prefer ἡμᾶς, as did Mr. [Tregelles] in 1844: recently [1848], he has adopted ἡμῖν, with Lachmann. (Prospect 1:86) us: Ln. ἡμῖν, the others ἡμᾶς (Prospect 1:153)

a kingdom, priests: βασιλείαν AC., forty-six cursives, Compl., versions, &c., βασιλειον B. with five others which add ἱεράτευμα, βασιλεῖς καὶ some cursive mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.3) a kingdom, priests: Rec. βασιλεῖς καὶ ἱερ., the edd. βασιλείαν. (Prospect 1:153)

a kingdom, priests: It is a clear allusion to Exodus 19, and follows the Hebrew idiom in the true reading, not exactly kings and priests here, but "a kingdom, priests." (Lect. on Rev., p.9) a kingdom . . . the: the Revisers rightly say "a kingdom," and "the" glory (Bible Treasury 14:142) and the might . . . of the ages: καὶ τὸ κράτος omitted by 97. and τῶν αἰώνων by A. 9. 28. 97., the Coptic and some Slavonic mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.3)

1:7 with: For μετὰ C. (Æth.?) reads ἐπί. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.3)

the . . . earth: [The RV] purposely give[s] “the” clouds, but might well have put “land” for earth in the margin. (Bible Treasury 14:142) him: 46. 88. Er. drop αὐτόν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.3) earth: The force is probably “all the tribes of the land”, τῆς γῆς meaning either; but I leave it as in the common Bible with this note. (Prospect 1:153) on account of him: ἐπ’ αὐτόν is wanting in 47.* Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.3) on account of him: The wailing described in Zech. 12:10 is different, but the phrase in the LXX is similar: ἐπὶ for ὑπὲρ, the object at, on, over, or because of which the emotion is felt. (Prospect 1:153)

1:8 Alpha: ἀλφα ABC. and very many more. Compl., for A (Rec.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.3)

Omega _Λ: ἀρχὴ καὶ τέλος [beginning and ending] omitted by ABC. and above forty cursives, Compl., besides ancient Vv., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.3)

Omega _Λ: Rec. has ἀρχὴ καὶ τέλος, (and so the authorized version); but the best MSS. and edd. omit the words. (Prospect 1:153)

Omega _Λ: [The RV has] also omitted the clause “the beginning and the ending,” brought in from the end of the book, though the Sinaitic, &c. support it here. (Bible Treasury 14:142-143)

the Lord _Λ God: For ὁ κύριος (87. Rec.) ABC., more than forty-five cursives and nearly all versions support κ. ὁ θεός. So the Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.3)

_Λ God: [The American correctors of the RV] merely propose the omission of two marg. notes, in 8 of marg.⁸ [“the Lord, the God”], and in 13 of marg.¹¹ [“the Son of man”]. There are insertions of less account than the former; and few of greater moment than the latter. (Bible Treasury 15:176)

1:9 John_Λ: καὶ disappears before ἀδελφός in ABC., more than forty-five cursives, Compl., and almost all the versions. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4)

John_Λ: Rec. ὁ καὶ “who also am,” but the older MSS. want the conjunction. So ἐν τῇ β. rightly omitted. (Prospect 1:153)

John_Λ: The καὶ with ἀδελφός in verse 9 is contrary to the best authorities, and even to Erasmus’ Cod. Reuchlini, though he (not the Complut.) inserted it in his text. It is a manifest clog to the sense. (Lect. on Rev., p. xxxiii)

John, _Λ . . . _Λ the kingdom: [The RV omits] “also” of the Authorised Version following the Text. Rec., and “in the” before kingdom, to the great detriment of the force. (Bible Treasury 14:143) joint-partaker: ABC., &c., read συν. or συγκοινωνός (for which thirty-eight cursives, Compl., give κοιν.) and omit ἐν τῇ (with the best cursives) before βασιλείᾳ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4) patience in Christ [Jesus]: For ἐν Χριστῷ we have A. and a Vatican cursive (25.) collated by Birch; for ἐν Ἰησοῦ C. 38. with several of the best copies of the Vulgate, the Coptic, &c., and for ἐν Χρ. ‘I., B. forty-seven cursives, Compl., Vulg., Syr., Arm., and Arr., Are., cat., Prim. The common text Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ is supported by a good many cursives. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4) patience in Christ [Jesus]: The evidence is conflicting as to what follows: ὑπομονὴ Ἰησοῦ X. is the ordinary reading, and so Gr. Kn. and Sz. But Tisch. Ln. and Treg. ἐν Ἰ. There is ancient authority for ἐν X. Matthiae edits ἐν X. ‘I. following many MSS. (Prospect 1:153) patience in Christ [Jesus]: In Rev. 1:9, the reading [of ἐν] is, in my opinion, the most doubtful, though it has the excellent support of Codex Ephræmi (C.) and its cursive colleague, Vat 579 (38.), with several ancient copies of the Vulgate (Amiatinus, Demidovianus, Toletanus, Lipsiensis,^{5,6} &c.), the Coptic version, and Origen. Dionysius Alex. (ap Euseb. H. E. vii. 25) has ἐν ὑπομονῇ Ἰησοῦ, which may be a lapse for

ὑπ. ἐν Ἰ. On the other hand, Codex Alexandrinus (A.) and Palatino-Vat. 171 (25.) give ἐν Χριστῷ, which appears to me commended among other considerations by these. First, it is not like the hand of a corrector to introduce different expressions for the same person in the same verse. The obvious tendency in such cases, whether by accident or design, is towards uniformity. Next, ὑπομονὴ ἐν Ἰησοῦ is a phrase unexampled in Scripture. The only passage likely to be brought as parallel is Eph. 4:21, ἀληθεὶς ἐν τῷ Ἰησοῦ. (1 Thess. 4:14, “Even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him,” may occur to the English reader. But if we examine the Greek, there is nothing in common. The meaning of τοὺς κοιμηθέντας διὰ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ is not = ἐν Ἰησ., as a recent Oxford Professor asserts, but, with Mr. Elliott, “those laid to sleep by Jesus.”] But they are not analogous, for the sense here is in the person of Jesus. The presence of the article distinctly intimates that it is not a mere characteristic of truth which is intended, for this regularly would be anarthrous. Hence, Ἰησοῦς being a name, Scripture idea and expression invariably, I believe, require ἐν Χριστῷ or ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. The last formula has, in the present instance, the suffrages of the Vatican Uncial 2066, the great majority of the junior Greek copies, the Complutensian, the Vulgate edition (Cod. Harleianus also), the Syriac, Armenian and Arabic, Arethas, the Catena and Primasius. To it there could be no objection on the score of scriptural usage. It is very conceivable that, if it were the primitive reading, it might give rise to the two varieties ἐν Χριστῷ and ἐν Ἰησοῦ, and that, if an erratum, it might have been compounded of the others, both of which are unquestionably ancient. On the whole, I have judged it best after ὑπομονὴ to give ἐν Χριστῷ, with the addition of Ἰησοῦ in brackets; (Rev. of John, 1860, p. xv-xvii)

patience in Christ [Jesus]: “Of Jesus Christ” as in the common text cannot stand; but “in Jesus,” though highly supported, is unexampled as to usage, which would seem rather to require “in Christ,” or “in Christ Jesus,” with excellent authority, and in the latter case very large. (Bible Treasury 14:143) is called: Er. omits τῇ καλουμένῃ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4) because of: C. reads καὶ for the first διὰ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4)

[because of]: The second διὰ omitted by AC., 4. 9. 28. 31. 34. 35. 37. 38. 48. 87. Er., Vulg., Cop., Arm., Dion., Prim., &c., is read by B. and very many cursives, the Syriac and other Vv. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4)

[because of]: διὰ . . . in the last clause [is] omitted in some of the later editions. (Prospect 1:153)

Jesus [Christ]: Ἰησοῦ is the reading of AC., 12. 28. 36., and some of the best copies of the Vulgate. B. and other authorities add Χριστοῦ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4)

Jesus [Christ]: Χριστοῦ in the last clause [is] omitted in some of the later editions. (Prospect 1:153)

Jesus [Christ]: . . . after μαρτυρίαν [I have judged it best] to insert Ἰησοῦ (on the authority of AC. 12. 28. 36., the best mss. of the Vulgate, Dionys. Alex. ap Euseb., &c.) as undoubtedly genuine, whether or not we prefer (with B. and the great mass of copies, many versions and Fathers) to add Χριστοῦ, which may have been from verse 2. The vulgar reading Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, though not without the support of some modern copies, cannot resist the weight of the older MSS. and other authorities. It is, besides, the easier reading, whereas the general truth of the Bengelian maxim is unquestionable — “proclivi lectioni præstat ardua.” (Rev. of John, 1860, p. xv-xvii)

Jesus [Christ]: “Christ” should disappear from the end of the verse, on the authority of ⲛ A C P, &c. (Bible Treasury 14:143)

1:10 I was: A. begins with ἐγώ, probably from ἐγεν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4)

the: The criticism [by J. Kelly, The Apocalypse Interpreted, 1848] on ἐν πνεύματι is a mistake from inattention to the idiomatic differences of the two languages. The authorized version is quite right, "in the Spirit," not "in spirit;" see on a different theme 1 Cor. 12:3,13. Ephes. 2:22, &c. On the other hand, if the Greek had been τῷ πνεύματι, it might have been rendered "in spirit," as it is very properly in the authorized version of Matt. 5:3, &c. i.e. "in their spirit." The presence of the article, as another has ably shewn, does not prove the Holy Ghost to be in question: it may or may not be. In this the article is supplied or omitted, according to the general laws of its usage. (The Prospect 1:184)

Lord's: I am aware that the late Dr. S. R. Maitland, followed by a very few others, ventured to deny that the expression ἐν τῇ κυριακῇ refers to "the Lord's day," and to argue that it means "the day of the Lord," into which he supposed the prophet was carried forward in spirit. The fact is, however, that, first, the expression is pointedly distinct from the prophetic phrase, ἡμέρα κυρίου with or without the article (for it is used either way according to the exact shade of thought intended); secondly, it is the form constantly and regularly used from the earliest ages to express, according to Christian feeling, the first day of the week, as Jews would say, or Sunday, as Gentiles said. Hence Justin Martyr, wishing to defend Christians and their faith before heathen, uses their term, but in a sort of apologetic way, τῇ τοῦ ἡλίου λεγομένη ἡμέρα. (Apol. i. 67, ed. Otto, 1842, i. 268-270). Where no such motive operated, the phrase of St. John is employed, as in the alleged Epistles of Ignatius to Magnesians, ix., μηκέτι σαββατίζοντες, ἀλλὰ κατὰ κυριακὴν ζῶντες; so also in Clem. Alex. Strom. v. vii. 12; in Iren. Fragm. vii., ed. Bened. 342, and in Euseb. H.E. iv. 23, 26; v. 23. There is no need to multiply later references, nor to prove that it was so understood by the Latins or by those who spoke in other tongues. It is as certain as any such matter can be that the meaning is "the Lord's day," and nothing else. (Bible Treasury N9:375) behind me a loud voice: The order in the text is that of C. and many others; B. and above thirty cursives, Compl., have φ. ὀπ. μ. μ., and A. has φ. μ. ὀπισθεν μ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4) behind me a loud voice: The order of the words is a little different in the MSS. The sense is unaffected. (Prospect 1:153)

1:11 saying, ἄ: ABC., more than forty cursives, Compl., and almost all the Vv., with the old Greek and Latin commentators, omit ἐγὼ εἰμι τὸ Α καὶ τὸ Ω, ὁ πρῶτος καὶ ὁ ἔσχατος, καί. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4) saying, ἄ: The clause ἐγὼ εἰμι τὸ Α, (in some Ἄλφα,) καὶ τὸ Ω, ὁ πρῶτος καὶ ὁ ἔσχατος, καί is rejected by most, as also ταῖς ἐν Ἀσίᾳ. (Prospect 1:153) saying, ἄ: It is well known that the words in the common text here, "I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last, and" have no sufficient authority, and were evidently inserted by the mistake of some scribe. Admirable where God inserts them repeatedly in this book, they only mar the connexion here when man added them wrongly. (Lect. on Rev., p.20) saying, ἄ: All the best MSS., versions, &c. reject [the words of the common text]. (Lect. on Rev., p. 15) saying ἄ . . . churches ἄ: a long interpolation after the first word in the common text disappears [in the RV], and another after "churches." (Bible Treasury 14:143) churches, ἄ: The best authorities read ἐπτά, and omit ταῖς ἐν Ἀσίᾳ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4)

Thyatira: There is much discrepancy in the uncials, cursives, &c., as to the orthography, particularly of Θυάτειρα. ABC. = -αν, majority = -α, some -ας, -ισα. [I] was disposed at first to regard the uncial reading as a mere orthographical error; but a comparison of the case of Thyatira with that of Lystra, in Acts 14:6,8,21; 16:1,2; 2 Tim. 3:11, satisfied me that this seemingly improbable variation in our text is the true reading. Θ., like Α., has two forms; a fem sing. and a neut. pl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4)

1:12 And, ἑκεῖ B. and thirty-eight cursives, Compl.; after the first καί. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4) was speaking: For ἐλάλησε of the common text, BC., fortytwo cursives, Compl., read ἐλαλεῖ (A. λαλεῖ). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4) was speaking: Rec. and Gr. ἐλάλησε. Sz. Kn. Ln. Tisch. and Treg. prefer ἐλάλει with most MSS. A. reads λαλεῖ. None of these forms is free from Hellenism. (Prospect 1:153)

1:13 in the midst: AC. have ἐμμέσῳ, B. and most others ἐν μ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4)

[seven]: AC., 12. 28. 38. 45. Er., several Vv. and Ff. omit ἐπτά, which B. and most others insert. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4)

[seven]: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. read ἐπτά ἄ., Ln. Tisch. and Treg. omit. (Prospect 1:153) like: For ὅμοιον A. has ὁμοίωμα, (and so one Latin and two Slavonic mss.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4) the: The article is wanting in Greek to indicate the character in which Christ was seen: "a son of man" therefore is too vague and not the sense. If the article had been inserted, it would have conveyed the idea of Him as the known person whom John loved and followed on earth, rather than the character in which he appeared now. (Lect. on Rev., p.21)

the: though the text ("a son of man") seems literally faithful, John 5:27 ought to have made not only the Revisers [of 1881] hesitate as to their text but our Transatlantic friends [American correctors of the RV] still more doubt the wisdom of their rejecting the marg. note. The Greek, like the Chaldee of Dan. 7, has not the article as is notorious, because the aim is to describe the human character of the glorious person that was seen, rather than to point to Him as a known object. Our language fails to reflect this characterising force of the anarthrous phrase; for if we say "the," it makes the person as such more prominent than the original warrants; if we say "a," it excludes Him who was well understood to be seen in the character of Son of man, which we can express better in the Gospel than here. The Father gave Him authority to execute judgment, because He is Son of man, though He is also Son of God and as such gives life to every one that believes. Here, in John's great prophecy, it is more difficult to set it out adequately in English, and one can hardly avoid saying "the" Son of man, though in italics or brackets or some such expedient, to show that it is not in Greek but due to the exigencies of our tongue. But as "a son of man" in the Revised text falls short of the truth, so the omission of the marg.¹¹ in 13 by the Americans is a bolder departure still as giving up a truer alternative. The insertion of the article in Greek would have spoiled the real bearing of both passages. How to give the best possible English equivalent may be questionable; but "a son of man" is not the sense meant either in Dan. 7 or Rev. 1 any more than in John 5. (Bible Treasury 15:176)

Son: νῖϙ is read by AC. and many more, νῖόν by B. and about thirty cursives. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4)

the Son of man: [See note to Rev. 1:8] down to the foot: A. and 11. give ποδῆρην, BC. and the rest ποδῆρη. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4) paps: μαζοῖς A. and eight cursives, Compl.; BC. and the rest μαστοῖς (μασθοῖς 7. 29. 97.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4)

golden: χρυσῆν B. and most, -άν AC. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4)

1:14 as . . . as: C. and others ὡσεῖ, A. and sixteen ὡς, B. and nineteen καὶ ὡς, others ὡσπερ, 8. Cyp. omit (after λευκαί). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4) as . . . as: "white as white wool" is self-evidently the sense intended; "white like wool" as in the Text. Rec. and Authorised Version is not intelligible. (Bible Treasury 14:143)

Revelation Notes

1:15 fine brass: The word χαλκοβάνω seems compounded of χαλκός copper, and לבן, white — a compound of Greek and Hebrew, which has been conjectured to harmonize with the book. Compare in this chapter ναὶ ἁμήν ver. 7; also chap. 9:11; and perhaps elsewhere. (Lect. on Rev., p.21) glowing: B. and most πεπυρωμένοι, -νης AC. -νω (or -η) some cursives, with Vulg., Cop., Syr., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4) glowing: Ln. πεπυρωμένης, and some MSS of no great weight πεπυρωμένω, which the Vulgate and other versions follow. (Prospect 1:153) glowing: [Q.: why should πεπυρωμένος be translated “burning” in the first text [1:15], and “refined” in the second [3:18]? Other versions, down to the most recent, vary the rendering in the two places, so that there most likely is a modifying cause which forbids the same force to be given to the word in both cases. May we have this cause explained, unless we can get a rendering that suits the Greek word in both texts? M.]

A. The contextual aim differs like the phrase, though the same remarkable word reappears. But in chap. 1:15 it is part of the Lord’s judicial attributes, not only “eyes as a flame of fire,” but “feet like brilliant brass (or, copper), as though they glowed in a furnace,” penetrative and firm unsparingness to the last degree in judgment of responsible man. They were as though red-hot in a furnace. In chap. 3:18 the scope is wholly different; for there the Lord counsels the angel of the church in Laodicea to abandon his self-satisfaction in their empty riches and acquisitions, and to buy of Him what is alone genuine wealth before God, “gold tried by fire,” His own righteousness to suit His nature and presence; as also the white garments figure the practical righteousnesses which become the saint. The justified must be righteous. But so distinct is the connexion that it is extremely difficult to suggest one English counterpart to both. For it is ἐν καμίνω in the one text, and ἐκ πυρός in the other. This modifies the rendering of πεπυρωμένος. It is true that copper or brass, as in the altar of Burnt-offering, also represents divine righteousness; yet this, not as meeting God’s nature on high, but rather as dealing with man’s responsibility on earth. “Fired” as in a furnace or out of fire is literal, but would be somewhat harsh. (Bible Treasury N3:256) glowing: It would seem from 3:18 that red hot, and so “refined” is meant in 15 also. (Bible Treasury 14:143)

1:16 had: A. 41., with the Æthiopic, want ἔχων, BC. and the mass support it (87. εἶχεν). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4) had: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. and Treg. καὶ ἔχων, Ln. and Tisch. omit ἔ. (Prospect 1:153) in his right hand: For δ. χ. αὐ. which AC. and fifteen cursives give, B. has χ. αὐ. τ. δ., very many cursives δ. αὐ. χ., and 10. 28. 95. omit χεῖρ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4) stars: With the former [i.e., A. 41] goes the reading ἀστέρες, instead of ἀστέρας. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4) in_Λ: Er. omits τῇ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4)

1:17 when: ὅτι Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4)

I fell: For ἔπεσα twelve mss. have ἔπεσον. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.4-5)

he laid: ABC. and upwards of thirty cursives read ἔθηκεν for ἐπέθ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.5) hand . . . saying_Λ: The best authorities omit χεῖρα and μοι. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.5) the first: For πρῶτος, A. has πρωτότοκος. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.5)

1:18 and the living one: and I was dead . . . ages_Λ . . . death and of hades: “And the Living One and I was dead,” opens 18 rightly [in the

RV]. “Amen” should vanish, and Hades follow death. (Bible Treasury 14:143) ages_Λ: ἁμήν, read by B. and most, is wanting in AC. 36. 38. Er., Vulg., Cop., Æth., Arm., Ar^p. &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.5) ages_Λ: The “Amen,” though read by B and most of the cursives, seems due to the copyists making the phrase a doxology, either through unconscious habit, or designedly adding ἁμήν as a correction. (Lect. on Rev., p.22, Christ and the Seven Churches, p. 34) ages_Λ: Ἀμήν is not found in the more ancient MSS., which also support the order τοῦ θ. καὶ τοῦ ἁ. (Prospect 1:153) keys: AC. many mss., Compl., have κλεῖς, B. and thirty others κλείδας. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.5) of death and of hades: τ. θ. κ. τ. ᾗδου ABC., near fifty mss. Compl., with most of the Vv. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.5)

1:19 therefore: ABC., forty-seven cursives, Compl., and most Vv., read οὖν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.5) therefore: Οὖν ought to be inserted, and so Gr. Kn. Sz. Ln. Tisch. and Treg. (Prospect 1:153) thereafter: it should be “Write therefore” as is generally known (Bible Treasury 14:143) which: Singular to say, an effort has been revived which never ought to have been made to explain its force, especially in light of what goes before and of what follows. The Greek, except in very careless style, cannot bear “and what they signify”; for this would require τίνα (or ἅτινα) instead of ἔ thus giving a different force to the second ἔ from the first and third. N. T. phraseology allows no such laxity; and the context, being dislocated thereby, totally forbids it. Others seek to attain the same result by the plea that εἰσὶν may practically mean “signify” here, as sometimes elsewhere. But there is no analogy here with any such cases; and for the plain and conclusive reason, that in none of them is there a distinction compared with the past and the future. The only sound and satisfactory rendering, therefore, is that adopted in the A. and R. versions, and indeed in almost all others, modern as well as ancient. (Rev. Exp., p.37-8)

the things which are about to come to pass after these: The version “hereafter” is vague, for it might mean thousands of years after. “After these” expresses the sense of the phrase much better. It means what was about to happen immediately after “the things which are” now — i.e. after the church-condition. (Lect. on Rev., p.20, Christ and the Seven Churches, p. 31)

the things which are about to come to pass after these: “What is about to take place after these” is the exact translation of the next phrase. Even “afterward” would be here equivocal. “After these things” gives the true sense required, as it is the closely literal rendering. Not another instance in the Revelation can bear the vague “hereafter,” or even “afterward” which is meant in John 13:7. Here again the context fixes the precision of its general usage, and forbids the looser application, which might be, where no line of distinction is drawn between past and present. The beginning of chap. 9 confirms fully the exact rendering “after these things.” (Rev. Exp., p.38)

the things which are about to come to pass after these: why the vague “hereafter,” at the end, and in 4:1, instead of the more precise “after these things,” which is favoured by the context? John was to write (1) the things which he saw, (2) the things which are, and (3) the things which are about to happen after these (i.e., the seven churches as set out in the seven letters of our Lord): not, as Dean Alford so strangely says, the things seen supplemented by what they mean, which would demand τίνα instead of ἔ. In this, however, the Revised Version is right, like the Authorised Version and almost if not all others. (Bible Treasury 14:143) which are: C. reads ἔ δεῖ μέλλ. γέν. (in the last with B. and seven cursives, Compl.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.5)

1:20 the mystery: Some suppose that the regimen passes on from γρ. (verse 19) in a kind of unconscious Apocalyptic way. This is grammatically easy. But the sense is better, in my judgment, if we take verse 20 as an independent sentence, opened by the accus. absolute, and followed by an explanatory clause. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.5) which: B. and most read ὧν, AC. and five others (Er.) οὗς. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.5) on my right hand: A. ἐν τῇ δ. BC. and perhaps all others ἐπὶ τῆς δ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.5) on my right hand: Tisch. without comment reads, on the authority of A., ἐν τῇ δ. instead of ἐπὶ τῆς δ. as almost all others do. (Prospect 1:153)

the seven golden lampstands: For τὰς ἐπ. λ. τ. χρ. 97. has τῶν ἐπτὰ λυχνῶν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.5) angels . . . seven: is not our tongue capable of reflecting the anarthrous usage of "angels," no less than of "seven churches"? If there is a defining genitive in the one case, there is a numeral in the other, which renders the predicate sufficiently definite without the insertion of our article in the one more than in the other. (Bible Treasury 14:143)

the seven lampstands: ABC. and twenty mss. αὶ λ. αὶ ἐπτὰ for αὶ ἐπ. λ. (ἐπτὰ λ. 22. Er.) in the common text, which also adds δς εἶδες on the authority of many recent mss., Cop., &c., in opposition to ABC., thirty-seven mss., and most Vv. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.5)

the seven lampstands: Ἄς εἶδες are omitted by all recent critics, following the best MSS. and versions. (Prospect 1:153)

2:1 of the: For τῆς, as B. and almost all others, AC. read τῷ (i.e. the church's angel who is in Ephesus). So A. (not C.) has in verses 8 and 18. 36. gives τῷ τῆς in verse 1. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.5) of the: Tisch. τῷ for τῆς in verses 1, 8, and 18. (Prospect 1:153) in Ephesus: ABC., above forty mss., Vulg., Syr., Cop., And. Are. cat. substitute ἐν Ἐφέσῳ (Compl. omits ἐν) for Ἐφεσίῃς. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.5) in Ephesus: Rec. Ἐφεσίῃς, but ἐν Ἐφεσῷ is without doubt the reading. (Prospect 1:153) in Ephesus: of course the Revisers correct "of" to "in" Ephesus, following a better text than the received one. (Bible Treasury 14:143) in the midst: AC. read ἐμμέσω, B. and the rest ἐν μέσῳ. (Erasmus ἐπὶ μέσῳ, with no extant witness.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.5) golden: AC. have χρυσεῶν, B. and most other authorities χρυσῶν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.5)

2:2 [thy]: AC., ten cursives, Compl., Vulg., Syr., Arr., Arm., omit σου, which B. and the mass, Cop., &c., add after κόπον. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6)

[thy]: Valuable MSS. τ. κ. σου. (Prospect 1:153) and: A., &c., omit καὶ before ὅτι. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6) and: A. omits καὶ before ὅτι. (Prospect 1:153)

thou has tried: ἐπείρασας for the common ἐπειράσω ABC., forty-eight mss., Compl., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6)

call themselves apostles: λέγ. εἰναι. ἀπ. is the reading of ABC., near fifty mss., &c., to which B. and about forty-five, Compl., add εἶναι, omitted by AC. and three others. The common text is φάσκ. εἶναι ἀπ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6)

call themselves apostles: All the oldest λέγοντας εἰναι τοὺς ἀποστ. Gr. and Sz. add εἶναι, with many MSS. and versions. Rec. ἐπειράσω τ. φάσκοντας εἶναι ἀ. (Prospect 1:153)

2:3 hast patience, and hast borne: ὑπ. ἐχ. κ. ἐβαστ. ABC., thirty-six mss., and many Vv. Many invert the order and add καί. (Er. ἐβάπτισας) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6) hast patience, and hast borne: Rec. ἐβ. κ. ὑπ. ἐχ. κ., but the best editors ὑπ. ἐχ. κ. ἐβ. (Prospect 1:154) and hast borne . . . and: The confusion and addition in 3 are corrected [in the RV] on good authority. "And thou didst bear" shifts from being the first member to the second place, and is connected with "for My name's sake," "and hast laboured" being expelled. (Bible Treasury 14:143) and art not wearied: καὶ οὐ κεκοπίακας (or -ες) is given by AC. and five others, κ. οὐκ ἐκοπίασας by B. and forty-seven, Compl. The ordinary reading κεκοπ. καὶ οὐ κέκμηκας is a mere gloss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6) and art not wearied: For Rec. κεκοπ. κ. οὐ κέκμηκας, Gr. Sz. Tisch. κ. οὐκ ἐκοπ. Kn. Treg. κεκοπίακας, Ln. (with A. and C. (Regius, or "Codex Ephraemi," a valuable but defective MS.)) κεκοπίακες. (Prospect 1:154) and art not wearied: The common text, followed by the Authorized version, is in some respects corrupted. — Their toil was known, and endurance they were not only eminent for, but they had it still. They had proved intolerant of evil persons and especially of such as falsely claimed high ecclesiastical authority; whilst they had manifested their willingness to bear wrongs or afflictions for Christ's sake; and in all this they were not weary. Such is the sense of the right readings and the true order. For οὐ κεκοπίακας (or οὐκ ἐκοπίασας) Erasmus adopted, from his copy which had got mixed up with the comment of Andreas, κεκοπί. καὶ οὐ κέκμηκας. A few mss. (16. 37. 38. 69.), and Vv. drop οὐ before κεκοπίακας, perhaps to seem verbally consistent with κόπον in the verse before; but the evidence for what I have given seems overwhelming. (Christ and the Seven Churches, p. 45. See Lect. on Rev., p.32)

2:4 But: ἀλλά B., &c. (So verse 14.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6) against: πρ. σ. ἀγ. A. . . ἀφῆκος C. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6) against: [In the RV] there is rightly the omission of "somewhat," but why [insert] "this"? It is better without addition. (Bible Treasury 14:143) hast relaxed thy first: Let me just remark that the word "somewhat," in verse 4, seems to weaken the sense. It might convey the idea that the Lord had but little against them; whereas, in truth, He was exceedingly grieved. (Lect. on Rev., p.33)

2:5 thou art fallen: ABC. and forty cursives, &c., πέπτωκας for ἐκπέπτ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6)

[quickly]: ταχύ is not in AC., Vulg., Cop., Æth., and many Latin fathers. τάχει Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6)

[quickly]: I doubt, on grounds both external and internal, that "quickly" should be in ver. 5. For when He thus comes to judge the ways of His own people can it be so said? (Lect. on Rev., p.33-4)

[quickly]: Erasmus edited τάχει from his faulty MS. ταχεῖ, but the Complutensian editors, Colinæus, and others read ταχύ, which is as right in ver. 16, as it is here inappropriate. For there is no "quickly" in the Lord's coming to remove the lamp, though He does come quickly to fight with the corruption of the church. (Rev. Exp., p.44)

[quickly]: Still more important is the exclusion of "quickly" from 5 on the authority of A C P, the Vulgate, Memphitic, and Æthiopic, though the Basilican Vat. and perhaps all the cursives support it as did the earlier editors. It was an addition of the copyists, perhaps from 16. (Bible Treasury 14:143)

2:6 which: A. omits & (as do the Coptic and other versions), contrary to BC. and the rest. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6)

2:7 churches: A. has τ. ἐπτὰ ἐκκλ., C. τ. ἐκκλ. ταῖς ἐπτὰ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6) him: Ten cursives, Compl., omit αὐτῷ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6) in Λ . . . [my]: ABC., thirty-eight cursives, and several versions, &c., support $\epsilon\nu\ \tau\hat{\omega}\ \pi\alpha\rho$. instead of the common text $\epsilon\nu\ \mu\acute{\epsilon}\sigma\omega\ \tau\hat{\omega}\ \pi\alpha\rho$. . . B., forty cursives, Compl., Vulg., Cop., Syr., &c., add $\mu\omicron\nu$ which AC. and the rest reject. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6) in Λ . . . [my]: Rec. $\mu\epsilon\sigma\hat{\omega}\ \tau$. π . All the critics $\epsilon\nu\ \tau\hat{\omega}\ \pi$. to which Gr. Sz. Kn. and Tisch. add $\mu\omicron\nu$, but Rec. Ln. and Treg. omit. (Prospect 1:154)

in Λ . . . my: it is not in "the midst of" the paradise of God, but "in" it, "my" being probably a gloss. (Bible Treasury 14:143)

2:8 in Smyrna: For $\epsilon\kappa\kappa\lambda$. $\Sigma\mu\rho\nu\nu\alpha\acute{\iota}\omega\nu$, ABC., fifty mss. Compl., Vulg., Æth., Syr., Arm., Arr., &c., represent $\epsilon\nu\ \Sigma\mu$. $\epsilon\kappa\kappa\lambda$. ($\sim\eta\varsigma$ A). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6) in Smyrna: Rec. $\Sigma\mu\rho\nu\nu\alpha\acute{\iota}\omega\nu$: but $\epsilon\nu\ \Sigma\mu\acute{\upsilon\rho\nu\eta}$ is preferable. A has $\epsilon\nu\ \Sigma\mu\rho\nu\nu\eta\varsigma$ which appears to be a slip. (Prospect 1:154)

the first: $\pi\rho\omega\tau\acute{o}\tau\omicron\kappa\omicron\varsigma$ A. (as in ch. 1:17). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6) who: Nineteen cursives omit $\delta\varsigma$. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6) lived: the Revisers correct "is alive" to "lived." (Bible Treasury 14:143)

2:9 [thy works and]: B. and the mass of cursives, Syr., and other authorities, add $\tau\acute{\alpha}\ \epsilon\rho\gamma\alpha\ \kappa\alpha\acute{\iota}$, contrary to AC. 19. 47. Vulg., Cop., Æth., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6)

[thy works and]: Rec. Gr. Sz. σου $\tau\acute{\alpha}\ \epsilon\rho\gamma\alpha$. Tisch. and Treg. reject. (Prospect 1:154)

[thy works and]: [The RV omits] "works and." (Bible Treasury 14:143)

(but thou art rich): ABC., above fifty cursives, Compl., have $\acute{\alpha}\lambda\lambda\acute{\alpha}$ $\pi\lambda$.; many cursives $\pi\lambda$. $\delta\acute{\epsilon}$. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6)

(but thou art rich): Read $\acute{\alpha}\lambda\lambda\alpha\ \pi\lambda$. for $\pi\lambda$. $\delta\acute{\epsilon}$. (Prospect 1:154)

of: $\acute{\epsilon}\kappa$, given by ABC., thirty-one cursives, Vulg., Cop., Syr., Arm., &c., is omitted by a good many cursives, &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6)

Jews: C. Ἰουδαίων . (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6)

2:10 not: ABC., 8. 49. 95. Cop., Æth., $\mu\acute{\eta}$; all other cursives, Vulg., Syr., &c., $\mu\eta\delta\acute{\epsilon}\nu$. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6)

not: Read $\mu\eta\ \phi$. (Prospect 1:154) not . . . the: for "none" they [the RV] have "not," and "the" (not "a") crown of life. (Bible Treasury 14:143) to suffer: AC. and many cursives $\pi\acute{\alpha}\sigma\chi$. B., twenty-nine cursives, $\pi\alpha\theta\acute{\epsilon}\iota\nu$. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6) to suffer: Matthiae with many MSS. reads $\pi\alpha\theta\acute{\epsilon}\iota\nu$. (Prospect 1:154)

Behold: B., above thirty cursives, Compl., add $\delta\acute{\eta}$ after ἰδοῦ , AC. and the rest omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6)

Behold: Matthiae with many MSS. reads . . . $\text{ἰδοὺ}\ \delta\acute{\eta}$ (Prospect 1:154)

the devil . . . of you: ABC., forty-two cursives, Compl., $\delta\ \delta$. $\acute{\epsilon}\xi\ \upsilon\mu$., many cursives $\acute{\epsilon}\xi\ \upsilon\mu$. $\delta\ \delta$. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6) to cast: $\beta\alpha\lambda\acute{\epsilon}\iota\nu$ B. and the great majority, $\beta\acute{\alpha}\lambda\lambda\epsilon\iota\nu$ AC. and fifteen cursives. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6) ye shall have: B. and most authorities $\acute{\epsilon}\chi\epsilon\tau\epsilon$, A. 36. Cop., $\acute{\epsilon}\chi\eta\tau\epsilon$, C. 11. 12. $\acute{\epsilon}\chi\epsilon\tau\epsilon$. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6)

ye shall have: Ln. $\acute{\epsilon}\chi\eta\tau\epsilon$ for $\acute{\epsilon}\chi\epsilon\tau\epsilon$. (C. $\acute{\epsilon}\chi\epsilon\tau\epsilon$.) (Prospect 1:154) days: Matthiae with many MSS. reads . . . $\acute{\eta}\mu\acute{\epsilon}\rho\alpha\varsigma\ \delta$. (Prospect 1:154) days: AC. and many more $\acute{\eta}\mu\epsilon\rho\omega\nu$; B., thirty-two mss., and the Vv., $\alpha\varsigma$. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6) [see note to Rev. 17:12]

2:13 [thy works, and]: B. and most others have $\tau\acute{\alpha}\ \epsilon\rho\gamma\alpha\ \sigma\omicron\upsilon\ \kappa\alpha\acute{\iota}$, which are omitted by AC. 38. Vulg., Cop., Æth., Slav. copies, &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6)

[thy works, and]: Compare on verse 9 $\tau\acute{\alpha}\ \epsilon\rho\gamma\alpha\ \sigma\omicron\upsilon\ \kappa$. (Prospect 1:154)

[thy works and]: [The RV leaves] out "thy works and" (Bible Treasury 14:143)

even: $\kappa\alpha\acute{\iota}$ is inserted before $\epsilon\nu$ by AC. and very many mss., Vulg., Cop., &c.; omitted by B., forty-three mss., Compl., Syr., Arr., Æth., Arm., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6) wherein: B., thirty-three mss., and several Vv., support $\alpha\acute{\iota}\varsigma$; $\epsilon\nu\ \alpha\acute{\iota}\varsigma$ (Er. $\acute{\epsilon}\mu\alpha\acute{\iota}\varsigma$) very many mss., Compl.; AC., Vulg., Cop., &c., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6) wherein: In Rev. 2:13, κ^* after $\acute{\eta}\mu\acute{\epsilon}\rho\alpha\iota\varsigma$ gives the singular reading $\epsilon\nu\ \tau\alpha\acute{\iota}\varsigma$. κ^{} furnishes a confirmation, as far as it goes, of the reading which, following B. and many excellent witnesses, I consider best. On the contrary, AC., omit $\alpha\acute{\iota}\varsigma$ or $\epsilon\nu\ \alpha\acute{\iota}\varsigma$. (Rev. of John, 1860, p. xvii) wherein: Gr. Kn. Sz. $\epsilon\nu\ \alpha\acute{\iota}\varsigma$ with Rec., but Matthiae and Tisch. reject $\epsilon\nu$, and Ln., and Treg. reject $\epsilon\nu\ \alpha\acute{\iota}\varsigma$. (Prospect 1:154) wherein: [The RV] leave[s] out "thy works and"; but they refer in their margin to the uncertainty of the Greek text in the clause about Antipas; and assuredly, as it stands in the Alexandrian and Parisian or even Sinaitic Uncials, it is hardly translatable. The later Vatican, and many cursives add $\alpha\acute{\iota}\varsigma$ as the Porphyrian and others have $\epsilon\nu\ \alpha\acute{\iota}\varsigma$ which removes the difficulty. I do not dwell here or generally on the effort to avoid the English perfect indefinite where the aorist occurs in Greek, as it is of such frequent occurrence. (Bible Treasury 14:143)

Antipas: Some of the versions (as the Cop., Syr., Ar.) seem to have understood not a proper name but a verb, and so 97. gives $\acute{\alpha}\nu\tau\epsilon\acute{\iota}\pi\alpha\varsigma$ (and some $\epsilon\acute{\iota}$ - and others $\epsilon\acute{\iota}$ -). Thus Mr. J. H. Godwin understands the passage: "And in the days thou wast arraigned, he was my witness, faithful to me, who was slain among you, where Satan has his dwelling." (Rev. of John, 1860, p.6-7)

Antipas: In one instance (Rev. 2:13) [Mr. Godwin, in The Apocalypse of Saint John, 1856] has gone beyond all, and ventures to give a verb, instead of the proper name Antipas, and to render the clause, "and in the days thou wast arraigned." He says that in this he follows some of the oldest MSS. and Versions. Now it is true that the Coptic diverges in one direction, the Syriac, &c. in another, and that the Alexandrian copy, followed by some later ones, spells the word so as possibly to mean a verb; but we are not aware of any authority for Mr. G.'s version, and we have no doubt that a man's name is intended. (Bible Treasury 1:198)

Antipas, κ : After Ἀντ. 87. has $\kappa\alpha\acute{\iota}$. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.7)

my: Besides, κ strengthens the evidence against receiving $\mu\omicron\nu$ (2nd) after $\pi\iota\sigma\acute{\tau}\omicron\varsigma$, which AC. 14. 92. insert. (Rev. of John, 1860, p. xvii) my: AC. 14. 92. Syr., add $\mu\omicron\nu$, which B. and almost all others omit, after $\delta\ \pi$., as 12. 36. Cop., Ar. omit before. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.7)

my: Ln. π . $\mu\omicron\nu$. (Prospect 1:154) who: ABC. with most mss. and Vv. have $\delta\varsigma$, which is dropt by 6. 31. 87. and a few other authorities. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.7)

Satan dwelleth: ABC. and most others (Compl.) have δ . σ . κ ., not κ . δ . σ ., with many mss., Syr., Æth. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.7)

2:14 [because]: C., and some of the oldest Latin copies, Cop., Syr., omit $\delta\tau\iota$, which AB. and most others insert. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.7)

[because]: Tisch. omits $\delta\tau\iota$ on the authority of C. and some versions. (Prospect 1:154)

some: "some," or persons, that hold is better than them that hold; and a similar remark applies to 15, which closes with "in like manner" [in the RV] instead of "which thing I hate," a mere blunder of some copies. (Bible Treasury 14:143) taught: AC. and many more, Vulg., Latin fathers, &c., $\acute{\epsilon}\delta\acute{\iota}\delta\alpha\sigma\kappa\epsilon\nu$; B. and thirty-eight mss. Compl., $\acute{\epsilon}\delta\acute{\iota}\delta\alpha\chi\epsilon$. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.7)

^Balak: τῷ AC. 11. (B. omits); ἐν τῷ 18. 92. Er., Steph.; τόν most cursives, Compl., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.7) to cast: A. has βασιλεῖ for βαλεῖν. This reading is followed by A. Rilliet, in his recent French version, "lequel enseignait au roi Balak, comme pierre d'achoppement devant les fils d'Israel, à manger," &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.7)

^ to eat: καὶ φ. B., twenty-five mss., &c.; five mss. read τοῦ φ., AC. and many, with Vulg., Cop., Syr., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.7)

2:15 some . . . in like manner: [See note to Rev. 2:14] of the: ABC., and twenty-four mss. drop τῶν before Νικ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.7) in like manner: ABC., forty-nine mss. Compl., Vulg., Syr., &c., read ὁμοίως instead of ὁ μισῶ, with many mss., the Arr. &c.; 38. and the Æth., if not Cop. omit. Three mss., 12. 13. 17., and perhaps more, combine both readings. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.7,8) in like manner: Rec. ὁ μισῶ, but the editors read ὁμοίως, with A.C. &c. (Prospect 1:154) in like manner: The true reading of verse 15 is "likewise," instead of "which thing I hate," which was probably copied from 2:6. The sense is, that there were such as held the Nicolaitan doctrine, as well as those who held that of Balaam. (Lect. on Rev., p.43, Christ and the Seven Churches, p. 58)

2:16 ^ Repent: [Vulg., Syr., Latin fathers] join ὁμοίως with μεταν., and so Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8)

therefore: ABC., forty-one mss., Cop., Arm., Arr., Æth., &c., read οὖν, omitted by very many mss., and by the Vulg., Syr., Latin fathers. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8) therefore: Gr. Kn. Sz. Tisch. &c. read μεταν. οὖν. (Prospect 1:154)

2:17 ^of: Very many mss. insert φάγειν ἀπό, contrary to ABC., thirty mss., Vulg., Cop., Æth. (B reads τό, and so the Latins). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8)

^of: Rec. φάγειν ἀπό, but the MSS. of greatest authority want the words. (Prospect 1:154) hidden . . . stone . . . knoweth: C. has κεκρυμένον, (so 28.) ψῆμον, and κενόν, (so 95.) which last is edited in Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8) knoweth: οἶδεν ABC., forty-eight mss., Compl., for ἔγνω in many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8) knoweth: there is a curious fact of a reading (ἔγνω) introduced by Erasmus, whose MS. here failed, without one known witness, followed in the Greek Bible of Aldus (1518), Cephalæus (1524), and by Colinæus (1534); as also in the editions of R. Stephens, of Beza, and of the Elzevirs. In the Complutensian it is of course οἶδεν, and so in all critical editions, Gratz following it, but not Goldhagen. Bengel avoided the error. Yet it is remarkable that all the English translations are right in giving "knoweth," which answers not to ἔγνω which they read, but to οἶδεν, a reading which few of them saw, or thought of. (Bible Treasury 14:143)

2:18 of the: C. omits τῆς, A. reads τῷ, 28. 31. have τοῖς. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8)

church: A. omits ἐκκλησίας (= "to the angel that is in Th.") (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8)

Thyatira: Θυατείροις AC. and the mass, -ρη B. and fifteen mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8) his: αὐτοῦ (1st) wanting in A. 36. 38. Vulg. and some Gr. and Lat. Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8)

2:19 thy works and: τὰ ἔργα καὶ omitted by 12. Cop. &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8) faith and service: ABC., thirty-eight mss., Compl., most Vv., with Gr. and Lat. Ff., read π. κ. τ. δ. (C. omits τῇν before π., A. 36. before ὑπ.) while 53. Vulg. (not Am. Fuld. &c.) put ἀγ. after κ. τ. π.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8) faith and service: This is the true order. (Lect. on Rev., p.49) faith and service . . . last clause: a better text is followed by the Revisers, which the reader may see by comparison. "Service" should follow "faith," and the closing clause should be "and thy last works [to be] more than the first." (Bible Treasury 14:143) and: καὶ before τὰ ἔσχ. is supported by few authorities and rejected by ABC., thirty-five cursives, Compl., almost all the old Vv., with the Gr. and Lat. Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8) and: Gr. Sz. Tisch. and Treg. omit καὶ before τὰ ἔσχ. (Prospect 1:154)

2:20 ^against: ABC., forty-six mss., Compl., nearly all Vv., &c., omit ὀλίγα (πολλά 28. πολὺ 12. 17* 36., &c.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8)

^against: Rec. ὀλίγα, δ. ε. τ. γ. I. τ. λ. Editors of note omit ὀλίγα. (Prospect 1:154)

^against: The words "a few things," in verse 20, must disappear. It was not a little complaint, but one of unusual gravity and complication. The phrase crept in, I conceive, from verse 14, as there is otherwise resemblance enough to suggest such an assimilation to a copyist. But on a closer inspection the difference, as we have seen, is great, especially if we are to read "thy wife Jezebel." [But see below.] (Lect. on Rev., p.53, Christ and the Seven Churches, p. 72)

^ against: "a few things" is all wrong, and on slender ground. Indeed π and some cursives give "much," some others "many things"; but the weight of authority is decisively against any qualifying term here. (Bible Treasury 14:143)

thou lettest alone: ἀφείς, -είς, or -ίης, (for ἐὰς) ABC., forty-two mss., Compl., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8)

the woman: In Rev. 2:20, [π] joins C. 38. and many other cursives, with all the versions save the Syriac, in omitting σου after τ. γυν., as I have done, contrary to AB. and most mss., Compl., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p. xvii) the woman: τ. γ. σου AB., thirty-eight cursives, Compl., Syr., &c. C. and very many mss. with most of the Vv. omit σου. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8) the woman: Gr. Sz. Tisch. τ. γ. σου ("thy wife"): Treg. omits σου, reading with them ἡ λ. for τῇν λ. (Prospect 1:154) the woman: The Sinai and Porphyrian uncials lend their strong support to the Paris palimpsest, with many cursives and versions, against the insertion of σοῦ, as read in Codd. A.2, and many cursives, &c., which would require the rendering of "thy wife." (Lect. on Rev., p.52)

Jezebel: Ἰεζάβελ (A., Compl., prefix τῇν) ABC., more than thirty mss., Er., Compl., And., Are., cat.; -βηλ many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8) that calleth: ἡ λέγουσα AC., ἡ λέγει B., forty-four mss., Compl. τῇν λεγ. many mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8) herself: B. 7. 16. 40. 69. αὐτήν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8) a prophetess: B. 7. 87. 96.* προφήτην. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8) and she teacheth and deceiveth: ABC., fifty mss., Compl., many Vv., &c., καὶ διδ. κ. πλ. τοὺς for διδάσκειν κ. πλ., many cursives, Rec., Vulg., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8) to eat things sacrificed to idols: φάγ. εἰδ. ABC., thirty-nine mss., Compl., all the Vv. and Greek and Latin Ff., for εἰδ. φ., on the authority of many mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8)

2:21 she willeth not to repent of her fornication: καὶ οὐ θέλ. (A., &c. οὐκ ἠθέλησεν) μετ. ἐκ τ. πορ. αὐτ. ABC., fifty mss., Compl., almost all

Revelation Notes

Vv., &c. A very few mss. have ἐκ τ. π. αὐτ. καὶ οὐ μετεν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8) she willeth not to repent of her fornication: Read with Gr. Kn. Sz. Tisch. &c. καὶ οὐ θέλει (A. ἠθέλησεν) μετανοῆσαι ἐκ τ. π. ἁ. for Rec. ἐκ τ. π. ἁ. κ. οὐ μ. (Prospect 1:154)

she willeth not to repent of her fornication: the Revisers rightly say "willeth not to repent." Tyndale misled the English who followed him into the feeble, if not false, "repented not." (Bible Treasury 14:143)

2:22 I: ABC., forty-seven mss., Compl., most Vv., omit ἐγώ, which many mss., Ar^p, Slav., add. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8)

I cast . . . her works: "I cast," not merely "will," as it is also "her" works. (Bible Treasury 14:143) cast: B. and other mss., with Vv. βαλῶ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8) a bed . . . they repent: A. reads φυλακὴν for κλίνην, and μετανοήσουσιν for -ωσιν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8) her: αὐτῆς B.C., forty-five mss., Compl., Am. Fuld. Tol. Harl., Æth., Cop., Syr., &c.; αὐτῶν A. 12. 36. and other mss., Rec., Vulg., Cyp., Prim., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8) her: Rec. αὐτῶν: for which the editors read αὐτῆς. (Prospect 1:154)

2:23 And: A. and Cop. omit the first καὶ contrary to all others. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8) your: B., 38. Vulg. (not Am Demid. Harl. &c.), and some Latin fathers αὐτοῦ, the rest have ὑμῶν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8)

Λ works: C. omits last τά. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8)

works: ἐραυνῶν AC. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.8)

2:24 the rest: καὶ before τοῖς λ. is omitted by ABC., forty-three mss., some Vv. (and by seven other mss. which omit τοῖς also.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.9)

the rest: Rec. καὶ λ. καὶ οἷτ. but the better editions omit καὶ in both places, and for the first read τοῖς. (Prospect 1:154)

Λ the rest . . . Λ which: "and" if not "unto" also should vanish: an error in the Text. Rec. as in the Authorised Version. So the "and" before "which" is spurious. (Bible Treasury 14:143)

Λ which: καὶ is wanting before οἷτινες in ABC., forty-nine mss., Compl., most Vv., &c., contrary to many mss., Vulg. (save Am. Harl.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.9) depths: βαθέα for βάθη ABC., forty-eight mss., Compl., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.9) put: βάλλω AC., forty-one mss., Syr., And. Are., Cat., &c.: βαλῶ B., very many mss., and many Vv., Prim., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.9) put: Rec. and Gr. βαλῶ: others βάλλω. (Prospect 1:154)

2:25 till: ἄχρις (96. adds οὖ) B. and the mass, And. Are. cat., &c. ἄχρι C., 15. 31. 82. and other mss. ἕως A., 47. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.9)

I shall come: ἀνοιξω (seemingly a slip for ἀν ἤξω) B. and twenty-six mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.9)

2:26 he that . . . authority: "authority" is better than "power"; as it should also be "he that" keepeth my works. (Bible Treasury 14:143)

2:27 Λ are broken to shivers: συντρίβεται AC., very many mss., Slav. mss., &c. συντριβήσεται B., forty-five mss., Compl., Vulg., Cop., Syr., Æth., Arm., Arr. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.9)

Λ are broken to shivers: Good MSS. and versions, which Matthiae follows read συντριβήσεται, "they shall be broken to shivers." Most prefer συντρίβεται. (Prospect 1:154)

Λ are broken to shivers: the highest witnesses support the present, not the future, "are broken to shivers," and "they" of the Authorised Version and the margin is questionable as the subject, instead of the vessels of pottery as in the Revised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:143)

2:28 morning: προῖόν AB., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.9)

3:1 church: ἐκκλησίαις C. (err.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.9)

seven: 12. 28. Er. omit the first ἐπτά. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.9) a: ABC. and forty mss., Compl., And., Are., omit τό before ὄν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.9) a: Rec. τὸ ὄνομα, but the editors rightly omit the article. (Prospect 1:154) that: For ὅτι ζ., B. and twenty four mss., &c. read καὶ ζ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.9)

3:2 strengthen: στήρισον AC., fifteen mss., τήρησον eleven mss. στήριξον B. and the majority, And., Are. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.9) were about: ἐμελλον A C., 12. 21. 28. 34. 35. 36. 38. 87. (7. 16. -λλεν) Vulg., Cop., Syr., Ar^c; ἐμελλες B. thirty-two mss., (ἐμελες Compl.) Ar^p; μέλλει very many mss., Æth., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10) were about: Rec. μέλλει, but Gr., Kn., Sz., Tisch. and [sic] ἐμελλον, for which Matthiae on good authority has ἐμελλες ἀποβάλλειν, ("thou wert ready to cast away"). (Prospect 1:154) were about to die: the Revisers give "was" ready to die, reckoning from the time of strengthening, as "are" would be from the epoch of writing. (Bible Treasury 14:143) to die: ἀποθανεῖν AC. and the mass (a few mss. ἀποθνήσκειν); ἀποβάλλειν (or -αλεῖν) B. and more than thirty-five mss., Compl., Ar^p. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10)

Λ works: AC., &c., omit τὰ before ἔργα. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10)

Λ works: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. τὰ ἔργα. The oldest MSS. omit τὰ (Prospect 1:154)

Λ works: [The RV] omit[s] the article on the testimony of A C and the margin of the Codex Reuchlini, which Erasmus too followed; but all others are adverse, including B P and the body of cursives, &c. Hence the Revisers translate "no works of thine." (Bible Treasury 14:143) complete: [The American correctors of the RV] for the Revisers' "fulfilled" read "perfected." But is not the true version "complete" rather than either? "Perfected" is appropriated by the Revisers, and without objection on the part of the Americans, to another word and for another thought, as in the Epistle to the Hebrews. (Bible Treasury 15:176)

my: θ. μου ABC., about forty-five mss., Compl., Vulg., Syr., Cop., Æth., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10)

my: The oldest MSS. . . . insert μου after Θ. where it is left out in Rec. (Prospect 1:154)

3:3 and heard; and keep: B. and nearly thirty-five omit καὶ ἦκ. καὶ τήρ. (Æth. drops κ. τ.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10)

[upon thee]: After the first ἤξω, B. and most, Vulg. (Am.), Syr., &c., read ἐπὶ σε, while AC., 12. 28. Fuld. Demid. Harl. Tol., Cop., &c., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10)

[upon thee]: Ἐπὶ σε not found in many ancient MSS. and versions. Tisch. omits. (Prospect 1:154)

[upon thee]: "On thee" in 3 after "come" has very good authority, if not the best. (Bible Treasury 14:143) thou shalt . . . know: For γνῶς, B. and twenty-six mss. read γνώση. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10)

what hour: [See note to Rev. 17:12]

3:4 But: ἀλλ' (or ἀλλά AC., 14., &c.) B. and most mss., Compl., and Vv., &c., omitted in the received text on slight authority. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10)

But: Most read ἀλλ' ἔχεις. Tisch. αἰ for ἄ, following some MSS. (Prospect 1:154)

But . . . ^Λ in: "But" should surely open 4, and "even" retire, both on excellent ground, Cod. Reuchl. misleading in both. (Bible Treasury 14:143) thou hast a few: ^εχ. ^δλ. AC. and most mss.; ^δλ. ^εχ. B., twenty-one mss., Compl., And. Are. &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10)

^Λin: ABC., forty-five mss., Compl., Vulg., Cop., Æth., Syr., Arr., And., Are., &c., omit ^{καί} before ^{ἐν} Σ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10)

which: ^α ABC. and the mass; ^{οἱ} 17. 28. 37. 38. 46. 88. Er.; & 98. Vulg., Cop., Arr., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10) their: For ^{αὐτ.} C. has ^{ἐαυτῶν}. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10)

3:5 he: ^{οὗτος} B. and most (53. ^{οὗτος οὕτως}), some Vv., And. Are.; ^{οὕτως} AC. and nineteen mss., Vulg., Cop., Syr., Arm., Ar^h. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10)

he: ^{Οὕτως} has better authority than ^{οὗτος}, the reading of Gr. and Sz. (Prospect 1:154)

he: The Alexandrian and Paris uncials with a fair support from cursives, and especially from versions, read ^{οὕτως} "thus;" but the Basilian, Vat. and Porphyrian uncials, and most of the juniors with some versions read ^{οὗτος}. Cod. Sinaiticus gives the former first, and then corrects it by the latter, and perhaps by the original scribe. Externally therefore the balance is nearly even. But in the older MSS. especially the interchange of ^ο and ^ω is so common as to make their evidence in such cases of slight value. Internal consideration greatly inclines in my opinion to ^{οὗτος} as in the text. (Lect. on Rev., p.65-6)

he: The ^{οὕτως} ("thus") of some ancient MSS. and versions has needlessly perplexed critics and expositors. No error is more common than the confusion of ^ο and ^ω in the old copies, as here for ^{οὗτος} ("he"). It is emphasized for good reason. (Rev. Exp., p.64)

he: for "the same" read "thus," the adverb, not the pronoun. (Bible Treasury 14:143) shall be clothed: ^{περιβάλλεται} C. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10) will confess: ^{ὁμολογήσω} ABC., forty-four mss., Compl., And. Are., for ^{ἐξομολογήσομαι}, supported by many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10) will confess: So ^{ὁμολογήσω} rather than ^{ἐξομολογήσομαι}. (Prospect 1:154)

3:7 [whole verse]: there is a measure of uncertainty in the readings, but the sense is only affected in a slight degree. (Bible Treasury 14:143)

Philadelphia: ^{Φιλαδελφείας} A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10)

Philadelphia: Ln. reads ^{ἐν Φιλαδελφείας}, which seems an erratum of the Alexandrian transcriber for ^{Φιλαδελφεία}. (Prospect 1:154)

he that is holy, he that is true: ^{ὁ ἅλ. ὁ ἄγ} A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10)

key: ^{κλείν} ABC., thirty-five mss., Compl.; ^{κλείδα} very many others. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10)

^ΛDavid: B. and nearly all the cursives prefix ^{τοῦ} to Δ., AC. omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10)

David: For ^{Δανείδ}, ^{Δαυίδ}, (or, as most cursives, ^{Δαβίδ}.) Codd. ap. And. 7. * 16. 33. 45. (and Cop.) read ^{ᾄδου}. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10) that openeth: In Rev. 3:7, the only difference, between the readings of ^κ and my text, is ^{καί} for ^ὁ before ^{ἀνοίγων}, and there, as far as I am aware, ^κ stands alone. Otherwise, the confirmation is striking and complete. (Rev. of John, 1860, p. xvii) shall shut: ABC. ^{κλείσει} (B. and thirty-six adding ^{αὐτήν}) for ^{κλείει}, supported by many mss., Vulg., Syr., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10) and that shutteth: ^{καὶ κλείει} C., Vulg. (save Fuld. Lips^d, &c.), Syr., &c. ^{κλείων} A., Hil. (^{καὶ κλείων} 5. 7. 13. 37. 45. 47. 49. 87. Orig., And., &c.; ^{οὐδεὶς κλείσει εἰ μὴ ὁ ἀνοίγων καὶ οὐδεὶς ἀνοίξει εἰ μὴ ὁ κλείων} Are. and cat.) B. with thirty-six mss. adds ^{εἰ μὴ ὁ ἀνοίγων}. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10) shall open: ^{ἀνοίγει} AC., very many mss., Vv., and Ff.; ^{ἀνοίξει} B., about forty mss., Cop., Orig., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10)

3:8 [whole verse] . . . hast not denied: There seems no change of moment in 8, though a marked literality of rendering in the Revised Version, save that they depart from their usual preterite for the aorist at the close. (Bible Treasury 14:144) which: ^{ἦν} ABC., forty-seven mss., Compl., (a few omitting ^{αὐτήν}.) almost all the Vv. and Ff., for the common ^{καί}. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10) which: Rec. ^{καὶ οὐδεὶς}, the editors ^{ἦν οὐδεὶς}. (Prospect 1:154)

for: But surely in 8 the latter half gives the reason "because," not "that" as the Revisers say, connecting what follows with "I know thy works," and treating the intervening words as a parenthesis. (Bible Treasury 14:144)

a: is not "little power" more suitable to the context than "a" little, meaning some? Weakness characterised the Philadelphian assembly, but they kept Christ's word and denied not His name. (Bible Treasury 14:144)

3:9 I give: ^{διδῶ} AC., contrary to B. and almost all the mss., And., Are., and cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10)

I give: For ^{δίδωμι}, Ln. reads ^{διδῶ}, seemingly a slip in the transcriber. (Prospect 1:154) them to come and do homage: AC., 2. 14. 28. 31. 36. 94. Compl., support ^{ἔξουσιν}; and AC., 2. 13. 25. 31. 94. ^{προσκυνήσουσιν} instead of ^{-ωσιν}, as B. and the rest have. The former would seem Hebraistic, cf. Deut 29:13. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10) know: ^{γινῶσιν} ABC. and the mass; a few read ^{γινώσκονται} (and so Vulg., Cop., Syr.), and ^{-ωνται} and ^{-ση} (Prim. scies, thou shalt know). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.10-11)

I: B. and thirty-four mss., Compl., &c., omit ^{ἐγώ}. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.11)

3:10 because: ^{καί} A. for ^{ὅτι}, ^{καὶ ὅτι} 38. and Arm. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.11, see also Prospect 1:154)

because: [The RV], with the critics, reject[s] the opening "Behold" on ample and ancient authority. (Bible Treasury 14:144) trial: Such a verse as Rev. 3:10 would seem more appropriate for "try" and "trial," like 1 Pet. 1:6. (Bible Treasury 14:335)

3:11 ^ΛI am: Many cursives, Vulg. Fuld. Demid. Lips^s, Æth., &c., add ^{ἰδοῦ} before ^{ἔρχομαι}, contrary to ABC., forty-five mss., Compl., Am. Tol., Cop., Syr., Ar^c, &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.11)

^ΛI am: The best MSS. omit ^{ἰδοῦ}. (Prospect 1:154)

^ΛI am: "Behold" is not warranted by the best authorities. (Rev. Exp., p.70)

3:12 temple: the Received Text, Elzevirs' second edition of 1633, like the first, had ^{λαῶ} (people) for ^{ναῶ} (temple) in Revelation 3:12. The Dutch printers who claimed an exorbitant value for their Greek Testament had not a single manuscript or ancient version to support their preposterous reading. They probably adopted it from R. Stephens' fourth edition of 1551; for he had given the right word — ^{ναῶ} — in his three previous issues of 1546, 1549, and 1550. Who had misled Stephens at last? Not Beza, as far as I know; for after giving ^{ναῶ} rightly in his first edition of 1559, he printed ^{λαῶ} in 1565 and in 1582, but corrected himself in 1588 and in 1598. It was probably a misprint, but it influenced not a few because of his reputation as a scholar and a divine. He makes no comment either when he went wrong or when he got right. But the misreading spread beyond Stephens, Beza, or the Elzevirs. (Rev. Exp., p. v-vi) temple: I am not aware of any authority for the curious slip here in the Elzevir editions of the New Testament which read λαῶ people, for ν., temple. (Bible Treasury 14:144) upon him: C. omits ἐπ' αὐτόν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.11)

upon him: C. omits ἐπ' αὐτόν. (Prospect 1:154) of my God, and the name: B. passes from the first ὄνομα to the next. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.11) that cometh down: For ἡ καταβαίνουσα, (the reading of AC., 2. 15. 25. 28. 37. 38. Er.) B. and the majority, &c., read ἡ καταβαίνει. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.11) that cometh down: Ἡ καταβαίνουσα is better than ἡ καταβαίνει. (Prospect 1:154) out of: ἀπό for ἐκ is read by twenty mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.11)

my: B., thirty mss., &c., omit the last μου. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.11)

3:14 in Laodicea: ἐν Λ. ἐκκλ. ABC., forty mss., Compl., many Vv. and Ff. Few support ἐκκλ. Λαοδικέων, which was borrowed probably from Col. 4:16. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.11) in Laodicea: Rec. Λαοδικέων, but the best MSS. ἐν Λαοδικείᾳ. (Prospect 1:155)

in Laodicea: Of course the error in 14 is corrected [in the RV], and "in Laodicea" takes its place. (Bible Treasury 14:144)

in Laodicea: . . . the commonly received reading "of Laodiceans" rests only, as far as is known, on the Codex Reuchlini, which Erasmus used, out of some 110 MSS., five uncials, and 105 cursives. (Bible Treasury 14:205) and true: ὁ ἀληθ. C., 2.(7. 14. 28. omitting καί.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.11)

3:15 I would thou wert cold or hot: From ὄφελον (B. ὥφ-) to ζεστός is omitted by A., 47. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.11)

thou wert: ἦς (B. εἷς) C. and thirty-eight mss., Compl., for the common εἷς. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.11)

thou wert: Rec. εἷς for ἦς which seems the right reading. (Prospect 1:155)

3:16 hot nor cold: καὶ οὔτε (near twenty-five οὐ) ζ. οὔτε ψ. BC., twenty-seven mss., Compl. Cop., Syr., Arr., &c.; κ. ο. ψ. ο. ζ. A. and very many mss. The clause is omitted in 10., Harl., * Æth., Prim., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.12)

hot nor cold: the true order is "hot nor cold." (Bible Treasury 14:144)

3:17 Ἄ: ὅτι before πλ. is not in B., thirty-one mss., Compl., &c., but appears in AC. and very many more. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.12) of nothing: AC. 12. have οὐδέν for οὐδενός as B. and nearly all. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.12) of nothing: Rec. Gr. Sz. οὐδενός. Tisch. &c. (with A. and others) οὐδέν. (Prospect 1:155)

the pitiable: For ἐλ. the reading of C. and most, AB. and more than twenty-five mss., Compl., ὁ ἐλ. (AC. 7. and others giving ἐλεεινός for ἐλεεινός as most.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.12)

the pitiable: The critics receive the article before ἐλεεινός. (Prospect 1:155)

the . . . the: there is good authority for repeating the article before "miserable," which certainly gives marked emphasis; but the chief MSS. omit, which makes the construction regular, as in the Revised Version. There is no doubt the Authorised Version erroneously omits it before "wretched." (Bible Treasury 14:144)

3:18 of me gold: χρ. π. ἐμ. B., twenty-five mss., &c.; π. ἐμ. χρ. AC. and the rest, save a few which omit π. ἐμ., or put before ἀγορ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.12) purified: [See also note on 1:15.]

thou mayest be clothed: B. 14. 28. 87. and others περιβάλλῃ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.12) and: Compl. omits καί. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.12) eye-salve: κολλύριον B. (κολυρ.), C., twenty-eight mss., &c.; κολλούριον (κολούρ. Compl., κουλ. 29. &c., κουλλ. Er.) A. 30. 95. 98. and many more. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.12) eye-salve: Rec. Gr. Sz. and Tisch. κολλούριον. Treg. and Matthiae, κολλύριον. (Prospect 1:155) to anoint: ἐγγρίσαι AC. 7. 16. 18. 28. 36. 45.; ἴνα ἐγγρίσῃ B. and about thirty-five mss. (some omitting ἴνα, others -ει or -ης); ἐγγρίσων Rec. with few witnesses, Compl. adding ἐπί with 10. 36. 96. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.12) to anoint: Most prefer ἐγγρίσαι to ἐγγρίσων. Matthiae ἴνα ἐγγρίσῃ. (Prospect 1:155)

3:19 be zealous: ζήλευε ABC., thirty-six mss., for ζήλωσον which very many (Rec.) read. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.12) be zealous: Matthiae Tisch. and Treg. ζήλευε. Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. ζήλωσον. (Prospect 1:155)

3:20 I will [both] come in: B., thirty-two cursives, Compl., add καί before εἰσελ., contrary to A., very many mss., Vv., and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.12)

I will [both] come in: Sz. on the authority of many, but not the most ancient, MSS. καὶ εἰσελεύσομαι. Rec. Gr. Tisch. Treg. omit καί. Throughout the book, however, there is a frequent recurrence of the conjunction, strikingly akin to the Hebraistic usage of the analogous word. (Prospect 1:155)

4:1 I saw: ἴδ. (-ων B.) AB. 7. 14. 92. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.12) opened: ἡνεωγμένη A. and very many mss.; ἀν- B., twenty-seven cursives, Compl., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.12) opened: Gr. Sz. Ln. ἀνεωγμένη. Tisch. Treg. ἡνεωγμ. (Prospect 1:155)

Λ opened . . . heard Λ . . . after these: a door "opened" is correct, as in 3:8. The double "was" of the Authorised Version is not necessary any more than "a voice" of the Revised Version. Compare 1:19 for "hereafter." (Bible Treasury 14:144) said: λέγων AB., thirty-one mss., for λέγουσα, the common reading; 14. omits; 93. (καὶ λ. 7.) λεγούσης. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.12) said: Rec. λέγουσα, the editors, λέγων. (Prospect 1:155) come up . . . the things which: A. has ἀνάβηθι and ὅσα, for ἀνάβα and ἄ with B. and perhaps all others. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.12) come up . . . the things which: Ln. ἀνάβηθι, and ὅσα δεῖ with A. (Prospect 1:155)

4:2 [And]: καί is omitted by AB., twenty-five mss., Am. Fuld. Harl. Lips.^{5,6} Syr., Prim., &c., but supported by many mss., Vulg., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.12)

[And]: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. καὶ εὐθέως. Matthiae, Tisch. and Treg. omit καί. (Prospect 1:155)

[And] immediately: Ln. γενέσθαι. μετὰ ταῦτα εὐθέως ἐγ: "After these things straightway." (Prospect 1:155)

[And]: The copulative disappears rightly [in the RV]. (Bible Treasury 14:144)

the throne: τὸν θρόνον AB., thirty-one mss., for τοῦ θρ. as most have. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.12)

4:3 and he that sat: More than thirty mss., Compl., Æth., Arr., Arm., Slav. ms. omit καὶ ὁ καθήμενος, contrary to AB. and many cursives, Vulg., Cop., Syr. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.12) and he that sat: Matthiae omits καὶ ὁ καθήμενος. (Prospect 1:155) sat_λ: AB. 7. 13. 19. 26. 41. 42. 92. (besides those that drop κ. δ. κ.) omit ἦν, which Rec. adopts on the authority of a few mss., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.12)

sat_λ: Rec. ἦν. (Prospect 1:155)

sardius: σαρκίω AB. and forty-two mss., Compl., (B. and five others prefixing σμαράγδιω καὶ) for the common σαρκίνω. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.12) sardius: Rec. σαρκίνω. The older edd. in general had ὁμοία. Matthiae ὁμοίως ὁρασις σμαραγδίνων. Gr. and following editors ὁμοιος δράσει σμαραγδίνω. (Prospect 1:155)

a rainbow: For ἱρις, A. 28. Æth., Arm., have ἱερεῖς. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.12)

a rainbow: A. ἱερεῖς for ἱρις, but it seems a transcriptural error, though followed by some versions. (Prospect 1:155) round: There is no effort made [in the RV] to distinguish κυκλόθεν from κύκλω. Yet distinction it is hard for any one to believe not intended, if one compare 3, 4, 8 with 6, 5:11 in the true text, and 7:11. Another has suggested "round" for the first, and "around" for the second, which admits more of detached objects surrounding, while the first may apply to connected objects though not exclusively. (Bible Treasury 14:144)

in appearance . . . an emerald: B. and twenty-five mss. have ὁρασις σμαραγδίνων. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.12)

like: ὁμοιος A. and six cursives; -ως B. and twenty-five mss., Are., and cat.; -οια many cursives and And. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.12)

4:4 And: B. and many others, with Syr., drop the first καὶ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.12)

twenty-four: Very many mss. have εἰκ. καὶ τ. (B. and many more, Er. κδ') instead of εἰκοσιτ. as A. and seventeen mss., Compl. (τεσσαρ. here and elsewhere, appears in some mss.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.12-13) twenty-four: Rec. καὶ twice between εἰκ and τ. (Prospect 1:155) thrones: θρόνους A. 34. 35., the rest θρόνοι. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.12) thrones: Ln. θρονοῦς. (Prospect 1:155) thrones: the Revisers rightly give "thrones" not "seats," as in the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:144)

the: The second τοῦς is attested by B. and most, omitted by A. and fourteen cursives (A. 17. 18. 19. putting εἰκ. τ. before θρ., which makes the same sense; B. κδ'). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.13)

I saw: εἶδον a few mss. add, contrary to AB., about thirty-three cursives and most Vv., And., Are., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.13)

I saw: Rec. εἶδον τοῦς. (Prospect 1:155)

in: A. 28. omit ἐν, contrary to B. and the rest. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.13) in: Ln. omits ἐν. (Prospect 1:155) upon: ἔσχον with many mss., Rec.; but AB., the majority of mss. and Vv., &c. omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.13)

upon: Rec. ἔσχον. (Prospect 1:155)

4:5 voices and thunders: φ. κ. βρ. AB. and the mass, all Vv. and Ff., Compl.; βρ. κ. φ. very few mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.13) voices and thunders: Rec. β. κ. φ. (Prospect 1:155) before the throne: ἐνώπ. τ. θρ. B. and thirty mss., Compl., Syr., add αὐτοῦ, which A. and a good many reject, nearly all the Vv., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.13) before the throne: Sz. αὐτοῦ. (Prospect 1:155) which are: & ἔστιν A. 94. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.13)

which are: Ln. & ἔστιν. (Prospect 1:155)

the: τὰ omitted by B. and thirty-two cursives, contrary to A. and the majority. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.13)

4:6 as: ὡς θ. AB., forty-three mss., Vulg., Cop., Syr., Ar.^c, Are., cat.; omitted by many cursives, Ar.^p, Prim. Tich. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.13)

as: Rec. omits ὡς. (Prospect 1:155) glass: Some mss. give ὑέλ. (Compl.) here and elsewhere. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.13) glass: "Glassy" is a mistranslation. The structure of the Greek word points to the material in contrast with water. It was symbolic of fixed purity, not of purifying as now by the word (John 15, Eph. 5). The saints in both cases, though otherwise distinct in relationship, time, place and circumstances, were beyond the need of the process. It was done and their course on earth closed. (Bible Treasury 14:252-3) glass: [In the RV] why a "glassy" sea? Does not ὑαλίνη point to the material in the vision, and not to its mere smoothness? "Glassy" answers to ὑαλοειδής or ὑαλώδης or ὑαλώπης. It is the more important, because its force symbolically depends on its true meaning; and those who miss that meaning slip into all sorts of aberrations from the truth intended, as one may see in Elliott's Horæ Apoc. and other works. (Bible Treasury 14:144)

in the midst: ἐμμέσῳ A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.13) in the midst: what they [The American correctors of the RV] mean by "'of the throne' add marg. Or, before" seems unintelligible. I can only conjecture that they propose "before" as an alternative for "in the midst of." If so, it is plainly untenable; for in the same verse, and distinguished from ἐνώπιον τ. θρ., is ἐν μέσῳ τ. θρ. which can only be rendered "in the midst of the throne," an idea quite different from "before." The proposal is still more mystified by referring us to the comparison of 5:6, and 7:17, where we have the Lamb, not "before," but "in the midst of the throne." (Bible Treasury 15:176) living creatures: Of course by "living creatures" [in the RV] is justly displaced the strange "beasts," which, given by Wiclif, survived in all the successive English versions down to the Authorised Bible. (Bible Treasury 14:144)

4:7 had: ἔχων AB. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.13)

the: B. and twenty-three mss. omit τό before πρόσωπον, contrary to A. and the rest. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.13) as of a man: [B. and 23 MSS.], with four more, omit ὡς before ἀνθρώπου, which A. 11. 13. 36. Vulg., Cop., Syr., Arr., insert. Rec. and very many cursives read ὡς ἀνθρώπος. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.13-14) as of a man: Rec. Kn. ὡς ἀνθρώπος. Ln. Treg. ὡς ἀνθρώπου. Matthiae, Sz. Tisch. ἀνθρώπου. (Prospect 1:155) living creature: B. and twenty-two mss. omit the last ζῶον. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14) living creature: Matthiae omits ζῶον after τέτ. (Prospect 1:155) flying: πετομένῳ AB., at least twenty-one mss., And., Are., cat.; but most cursives have πετωμένῳ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14) flying: Rec. πετωμένῳ. Edd. πετομένῳ. (Prospect 1:155)

4:8 the: τὰ τ. A. and above twenty mss., omitted by B. and many more. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14)

the: Rec. omits τὰ. (Prospect 1:155) having: ἔχων A. 7. 13. 16. 30. 32. 36. 39. 87. 93. 98.; ἔχον B., more than twenty-four mss., Compl., And.; εἶχον many cursives, Are., cat. (some ἔσχον and ἔχοντα.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14) having: Rec. εἶχον. The editors prefer ἔχον (Treg. ἔχων). (Prospect 1:155) each of them: καθ' ἐν αὐτῶν A., seventeen mss., Compl., most Vv., And., Tich.; without αὐτῶν B. twenty-seven mss., Are., cat., &c.; καθ' ἐαυτοῦ Rec. on slight authority. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14) each of them: Rec. καθ' ἐαυτοῦ . . . The editors prefer ἐν καθ' ἐν αὐτῶν. (Prospect 1:155) wings: B. ἀνὰ πτερύγων. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14) round about and within: Gr. and Tisch. punctuate κυκλόθεν καὶ ἔσ.

 γ. "are full round about and within." (Prospect 1:155) ᾠwithin: B. with some mss. and some Lat. Ff. put καὶ ἔξωθεν before καὶ ἔσωθεν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14) ᾠwithin: B. κυκ. καὶ ἔξωθεν καὶ ἔσωθεν. (Prospect 1:155) full: γέμουσιν AB. and about forty-five cursives, Compl., Vulg., And., Are., cat.; γέμοντα many mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14) full: Rec. γέμοντα. The editors prefer γέμουσιν. (Prospect 1:155) saying: λέγοντες AB., about thirty-five more, Er., And., Are., cat., Prim., for λέγοντα as many mss. Rec. have. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14) saying: Rec. . . . λέγοντα. . . . The editors prefer . . . λέγοντες.
 (Prospect 1:155)
 Holy, holy, holy: ἅγιος three times A., most mss., and all Vv.; six times in three mss.; nine times in B. and more than twenty-five mss., Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14)
 God: For ὁ θ., σαβαώθ is read by 7. 17.* 28. 36. 39. Ar.^p, Slav.
 ms. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14)
 ᾠwas and that is: καὶ ὁ ὢν omitted by two mss. Four others put ὁ ὢν καὶ before ὁ ἦν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14)
4:9 shall give: δώσουσιν A., very many mss., Rec.; δώσωσιν B. 7. 12.
 14. 16. 32. 39.; δώσει twenty-eight mss.; δώσει 13. 27. 31. 40. Compl.
 (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14)
 shall give: δώσουσι, some MSS. δώσει, which Matthiae reads; some δώσει. (Prospect 1:155) shall give: In 9 and 10 the future form is correct, not the English present as in the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:144) thanks: A. εὐχαριστείας. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14) the throne: τῷ θρ. A.; τοῦ θ. B. and all others, And., Are., cat.
 (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14)
 the throne: A. reads τῷ θ. which Tisch. follows. Others τοῦ, as most do in 4:2, where Tisch. τὸν θ. (Prospect 1:155)
4:10 twenty-ᾠ-four: εἰκ. τ. A. and many cursives, And., Are., cat., Compl.; κδ' B. and many mss., Er.; εἰκ. καὶ τ. many mss., Rec. (Rev.
of John, 1860, p.14) twenty-ᾠ-four: The edd. drop καὶ between εἰκ. and τ. (Prospect 1:155)
 shall worship: προσκυνοῦσι 91. Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14) shall worship . . . shall cast: [See note to Rev. 4:9] shall cast: βάλλουσι B. and about ten mss., Er., Compl.; contrary to A. and the great majority, Steph., Rec., which have βαλοῦσιν. (Rev.
of John, 1860, p.14)
4:11 O Lord [and our God]: ὁ κύριος καὶ ὁ θεὸς ἡμῶν AB. and thirty-nine mss., Compl., Am., Syr., Ar.^p, &c. (B. and more than thirty-seven mss., Compl., Syr., Ar.^p, adding ὁ ἅγιος); eight mss., Vulg., Cop., Æth., Arm., Ar.^s, Slav. mss., read κύριε ὁ θ. ἡμ. But few mss. support the received reading κύριε. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14)
 O Lord [and our God]: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. κύριε, but later edd. ὁ κύριος καὶ ὁ Θεὸς ἡμῶν. Many add ὁ ἅγιος, and so Matthiae. (Prospect 1:155)
 the: A. omits the last τῇν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14)
 the: Ln. omits τῇν before δ. (Prospect 1:155) ᾠall: τὰ omitted by B. twenty-three mss., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14)
 of thy will: διὰ θελήματί σου A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14) they were: ἦσαν AB., more than thirty mss., Vulg., Cop., Syr., Arr., &c., Are., cat., Tich. (B. 14. 38. prefixing οὐκ). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14)
 they were and: 36. omits ἦσαν καί. Many mss., And., Rec., εἰσι.
 (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14)

they were and: Rec. εἰσι, but the critics ἦσαν on the authority of A, B, &c. (Prospect 1:155)
 they were: "were," not "are," is the right word (Bible Treasury 14:144) and were created: A. omits καὶ ἐκτίσθησαν. (Rev. of John, 1860, and were created: A omits the words καὶ ἐκτίσθησαν. (Prospect 1:155)
 p.14)
5:1 I saw: ἴδ. AB. 7. 14. and so in verse 2. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14) book: The reader scarcely needs perhaps to be reminded that, as to form, the βιβλίον was a roll, as was usual among the Jews. Compare ch.
 6:14. (Prospect 1:155)
 on the back: ὀπισθεν A. and very many mss., Syr., Orig.; ἔξωθεν B.
 more than thirty-seven mss., Compl., Vulg., Cop., Æth., Arm., Arr., Slav., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14)
 on the back: Sz. καὶ ἔξωθεν. (Prospect 1:155)
5:2 I saw: [see note to Rev. 5:1] with: ἐν AB., more than thirty-six mss., &c.; omitted by very many cursives, Vulg., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14) with: The edd. ἐν φ. μ. τ. ᾠ. (Prospect 1:155) is: Many mss., Vulg., Prim., &c., add ἔστιν after τίς, B., twenty-six mss., And., Are., cat., after ἄξιος; contrary to A. 10. 12. 13. 28.
 36. 37. 49. 91. 96. Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14)
 is: The edd. . . . omitting ἔστιν. (Prospect 1:155)
5:3 no one: "no one" is better than "no man," as in the older versions
 (Bible Treasury 14:144)
 heaven: ἄνω added to οὐρ. B., twenty-eight mss., Cop., Syr., Ar.^p
 (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14)
 nor . . . nor: οὐδέ (twice,) A. and most mss.; οὐτε B. and very many cursives, And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14) nor under: καὶ ὑποκ. Er. with the authorities for οὐτε twice. (Rev.
of John, 1860, p.14)
 was able: ἦδ. AB., most mss., Orig., &c.; ἔδ. 8. 29. 31. 87. 93. 94.
 96. 97. 98. Compl., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14) neither: οὐτε βλ. A. 7. 8. 14. 16. 29. 30. 31. 32. 87. 93. 95. 97.
 98., οὐδέ most cursives. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.14) neither: Matthiae and Ln. οὐτε βλ. (Prospect 1:155)
5:4 [whole verse]: A. 98. omit the verse probably δι' ὁμοιοτέλετον.
 (Rev. of John, 1860, p.15)
 [whole verse]: The whole verse is omitted by A. (Prospect 1:155)
 I: ἐγὼ is wanting in 12. 28². 36. Er., Cop., Æth., Arm., Orig., &c.
 (Rev. of John, 1860, p.15)
 much: πολὺ (πολύν B.) above forty-five mss., Compl., And., Vulg., &c.; πολλά many mss. (Orig., Hil., &c. omit); Æth., &c. = πολλοί;
 Cop. = πάντες. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.15) much: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. πολλὰ, Tisch. &c. πολὺ. (Prospect 1:155) ᾠneither: καὶ ἀναγνῶναι (Rec.) with some cursives, Arm., Slav., contrary to B. and the mass of mss., Vv., and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860,
 p.15)
 ᾠneither: Rec. ἀνοῖξαι καὶ ἀναγνῶναι: the edd. omit κ. ᾠν.
 (Prospect 1:155)
 ᾠneither: "And to read" in 4 is a gloss. (Bible Treasury 14:144) neither: οὐδέ 28. Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.15) 5:5 of: Er. Are. omit ἐκ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.15) is: ὢν, added before the second ἐκ by some cursives, Rec., is wanting in AB., more than forty-five mss., Compl., Vulg., Gr. and Lat.
 Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.15) is: Rec. ὁ ὢν ἐκ τ. φ. (Prospect 1:155) that openeth: ὁ ἀνοίγων B., about thirty-five mss., &c. (some ὁ ἀνοίξας); ἀνοίξει (some -ει) A., very many cursives. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.15) that openeth: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. Ln. Treg. ἀνοίξει. Matthiae and Tisch. ὁ ἀνοίγων with B. and many others. (Prospect 1:155) the seven: Many mss., Vulg. (Demid. Lips.), Cyp., &c., support λῦσαι, contrary to AB., about forty-five cursives, Compl., most Vv., Orig., Hil. It was probably drawn from verse 2. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.15)

the seven: Edd. omit λῦσαι. (Prospect 1:155)

the seven: "to loose" [is a gloss] (Bible Treasury 14:144)

5:6 And I saw: A. omits καὶ εἶδον, contrary to B., thirty-six mss., Vv., and Ff.; and, with many mss., Vulg., reads καὶ ἰδοῦ (+ καὶ Α.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.15)

And I saw: Edd. omit καὶ ἰδοῦ, as A. omits also καὶ εἶδον (Prospect 1:155) in the midst: their [the American correctors of the RV] marg. addition seems quite unfounded and apparently due to Dean Alford's strange note, probably misled by the Germans, one of whom is so ignorant of the elements of Apocalyptic imagery as to conceive the Lamb on the sea of glass! Perhaps the American Committee may have slipped into this notion. Certainly that sea was "before" the throne. How dangerous is this guess work! (Bible Treasury 15:176) slain: ἐσφραγισμένον Compl., ἐσφραγισμένον 7. 29. 32. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.15) having: ἔχων AB. 7. 28. 30. 32. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.15)

having: A. . . . reads ἔχων (Prospect 1:155)

which: δι A., very many cursives; & B., thirty-nine mss., Compl. (ἀτινα 47. 97.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.15)

[seven]: ἐπτά B., nearly all mss., Vv., and Ff.; but A. 12. Er., Am. * Harl. Fuld. Æth., Tisch., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.15)

Spirits of God: πν. τ. θ. AB. and most other authorities, Compl., for τ. θ. πν. Rec., with a few cursives. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.15) sent forth: ἀποστελλόμενα B., near thirty-five mss., Compl. (τὰ ἀπ. 6. 7. 8. 9. 13. 16.); ἀπεσταλμένοι A., -να 38. 49., and so Rec., prefixing τὰ with many mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.15) sent forth: A. reads . . . τὰ πν. τ. θ. ἀπεσταλμένοι. Matthiae ἀποστελλόμενα. (Prospect 1:155)

5:7 [the book]: τὸ βιβλίον, omitted by AB. (which adds τῇν), nearly forty mss., Vulg. (oldest copies), Arm., Æth., is read by very many cursives, Cop., &c. (Compl. omits τό, and, with 3. 6. &c., inserts β. after θρ.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.15)

[the book]: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. τὸ βιβλίον. Ln. Tisch. Treg. omit, with A. and many other MSS. (Prospect 1:155)

[the book]: "the book" is not duly authenticated; so that the Revisers rightly supply "it." (Bible Treasury 14:144)

5:8 the: 30. 98. Compl., omit οἱ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.15) fell: ἔπεσαν A. 7. 9. 26. 27. 42. Er., -ον B. and the mass. And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.15-16)

a harp: κιθάραν AB., about thirty-five mss., Cop., Syr., Æth., Arm., Ar., Hil.; -ρας very many cursives, Vulg., Cyp., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16)

a harp: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. κιθάρας. Matthiae, Ln. Tisch. Treg. κιθάραν. with A. and many MSS. and versions. (Prospect 1:155) bowls: The reviewer in Evangelical Christendom, August, 1860, p. 451, objects, among other departures from "the time-honored expressions of our venerable Saxon Bible," that I have given "bowls" instead of "vials." But surely he must be aware that "a small bottle" is not intended by φιάλη here, or anywhere else in the book, but rather a broad open vessel or basin. Compare in the LXX., Exod. 27:3; 38:3; Num. 7.

passim: also answering to other Hebrew words, Num 4:14; 2 Chron. 4:16, &c. We ought not to sacrifice the sense to sound. The English word "vial," though derived from the Greek, really misleads. Habit or the ear may account for such a preference. (Lect. on Rev., p.117)

the: αἱ before πρ. is omitted by many cursives, some of which give προσευχῶν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16)

the: [In the RV] it is "the" saints. (Bible Treasury 14:144)

5:9 sing: [In the RV] it is "sing," not "sung." (Bible Treasury 14:144) bought: "Purchase" is right, not "redeem." (Bible Treasury 14:144) [See note to 2 Peter 2:1]

[us]: A. reads ἡμῶν, and, with 41. (adding ἡμῶν) Æth., omits ἡμᾶς, contrary to B. and the mass, six of which, &c., give ἡμᾶς before τῷ θεῷ, while Er., some Vv. and Ff., omit τ. θ. altogether. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16)

[us]: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. Ln. Treg. ἡμᾶς. Tisch. rejects (with A.) (Prospect 1:155)

[us]: Now, I am of opinion that both external and internal evidence would lead a competent judge to the conclusion that the word "us" should be absent from the ninth verse. It would seem probable that copyists inserted ἡμᾶς ("us") there — not that this is at all necessary or peculiar to any views I hold. (Some years since Professor Tischendorf reported to me, among other Apocalyptic readings, that the Sinai MS. omitted the pronoun ἡμᾶς in Rev. 5:9. This I printed on his authority, which was followed by Dean Alford and others. But when the great uncial was published, I immediately perceived either that the printed text was here wrong, or that the discoverer had led me into an error, awkward to many more though to none so painfully as me. But he had the candour immediately to re-examine the MS. on my appeal to him, and to confess frankly that he had misled me. Very different was the feeling of a scholar in this country from whom better things might have been expected. He had the temerity not alone to charge me with the fault but to mix up with it the doctrine of the rapture of the church, as if this had influenced the erroneous report. The truth is, that the weighty evidence lies in the fact that, according to the best authorities, followed even by my censor himself, it should be "them" and "they" in verse 10 (as required by the true Greek text). The elders and living creatures are praising the Lamb in that verse for others made kings and priests, not for themselves. This is incontestible. The point debated is whether ἡμᾶς should or should not be read in the preceding. Even if it ought certainly to be read, it would rather strengthen the distinction between the saints represented by the elders and living creatures. But I was willing to waive what would rather fortify my position, as honestly believing with the best critics that it is a most suspicious reading, if not certainly on external evidence an intruder. And I was convinced, as I am still, that its insertion presents a sense (when the two verses are taken together) so strange that nobody has yet offered a tolerable explanation. It is therefore still more objectionable on internal grounds. But the question is really independent of doctrine, and is much more one of critical acumen and of spiritual judgment.) The most competent enquirers who have no settled interpretation of the book or schemes opposed to mine, agree in omitting it. Thus the most famous editor of the day holds it — the Lutheran Tischendorf. Another excellent scholar, who was when living rather more of a rationalist, holds the same thing — I allude to Lachmann. Again, Dean Alford, of this country, and many more, accept the same reading, agreeing as far as this is concerned. I refer to these various well-known names openly, that none may allow the groundless thought that there is anything peculiar or individual in this judgment. These matters are the common heritage of the church of God; they rest on facts that cannot be gainsaid by anybody except the ignorant. (Pamphlets, p.368)

[us]: Supposing we do not accept the reading ἡμᾶς or "us" (which I am quite willing, with Lachmann, Tischendorf, and others, to allow may not be genuine), still they are clearly saints who thus address the Lamb. (Pamphlets, p.388)

[us]: In chap. 5:9 it is the worth of the Buyer, and consequently the value of the price paid, that is celebrated, not the liberated state of the redeemed. Hence in the text ἡμᾶς is not found — an omission as hard to account for, unless it be the truth, in A., 44, Aeth., as it is easy to understand its insertion in all the other witnesses. (Bible Treasury N6:282, Bible Treasury 16:280)

[us]: [Q. Do not the best readings give an entirely different meaning to Rev. 5:9,10, from than represented by the Authorized Version? A SEEKER AFTER TRUTH.]

A. The only question as to readings of importance in verse 9 is the insertion or omission of ἡμᾶς. The Sinaitic and Vatican (2066, not 1209), with the great majority of minuscules insert; the Parisian Rescript is defective; the Alexandrian and a minuscule in the Propag. at Rome (44) omit. To this last, though the evidence be small, recent editors (Alford, Lachmann, Tischendorf, &c.) incline. It seems to me confirmed by the true text of verse 10, which exhibits, without question, the third and not the first person (“they,” not “we”). . . . If ἡμᾶς be, as I suppose, rightly omitted (the insertion being due to an early corrector who could not account for the absence of an object after the verb, from ignorance of such an ellipsis, which is not uncommon with John), there is no necessity for taking the ζῶα as the redeemed; for the song would then simply celebrate the Lamb’s worthiness and His efficacious death in purchasing a people to God, priests and kings to reign over the earth, without here defining who they are. (Bible Treasury 6:288)

[us]: A very important change occurs in this verse, well known to every person tolerably acquainted with the original scriptures. Persons who have studied the most ancient manuscripts and other witnesses of this book all agree that it is, “and hast made them to our God kings (or a kingdom) and priests” (ver. 10). . . . Indeed, I am prepared to go farther, and am bound to state my firm impression that in the ninth verse the word “us” was put in by copyists who supposed that the elders were celebrating their own blessing. (It cannot be denied that the true readings of Rev. 5:9,10, are some of them unusually hard to be decided. Out of five there are four uncial MSS. available, one of the oldest being deficient from Rev. 3:19 to 5:16. The versions too are conflicting, and so are the editors. There is no doubt, however, that we are obliged to read αὐτούς, “them” (and not ἡμᾶς, “us”) in verse 10, on the authority of the four uncials (the palimpsest of Paris being here deficient and so leaving us one short), forty cursives, and many ancient versions. But evidently that substitution, true and certain as it is, of them for “us” in verse 10, obscures or destroys the connexion with the preceding verse, if “us” is supposed to hold its ground in verse 9. And this is the more noticeable, as both clauses form part of the same song in the mouth of the same personages. For what more incongruous than “redeemed us . . . and made them,” when no other class has been referred to between the clauses? Hence the strangest solutions of the difficulty have been proposed. Thus Prof. M. Stuart, who takes for granted the correctness of the text of Griesbach and Scholz, refers the αὐτούς of verse 10 to φυλῆς, γλώσσης κ. τ. λ. i.e. “thou has made every tribe,” &c., “to be kings and priests.” Now, limit this as you may, it is a construction awkward in the extreme, and without parallel in St. John, or perhaps in any other author. Besides, it ignores, instead of solving, the enigma. For ἡμᾶς ἐκ is left out of the result, and if the same party is intended (as Prof. S. thinks), the question is, why should “us” be used in verse 9, and “them” in verse 10? The alternative to which the Professor is reduced, of portioning out this short song between the living creatures and the elders, and thus accounting for the change in the pronouns, strikes one as an evidence of the difficulty rather than of its removal. Singular to say, he alludes to the true key, as it seems to me, as if it had no authority beyond the conjecture of an eccentric German. The truth is that in one of the best manuscripts (A or the Codex Alexandrinus) which contain the passage, ἡμᾶς in verse 9 does not appear; nor is any equivalent given in one of the oldest extant versions, — the Aethiopic of the fourth century. It is also wanting in a cursive MS. known as Codex Borgiae. I admit that in this case the amount of testimony is far from being considerable. Nevertheless the omission seemed probable to Griesbach; and in fact it is dropped in some of the latest editions of the Greek Testament, which appeal to ancient authority. Tischendorf omitted it from the first, as he does still: Lachmann had it in his earlier manual, but erased it in his second and more correct edition: and the younger Buttmann has it not in his recent manual Greek Testament (Leipsic, 1856): so Dean Alford. These critics have arrived at that conclusion on independent principles, and on purely external grounds. If it be sound, the construction is elliptical but frequent, especially in the writings of St. John (compare John 16:17; 2 John 4; Rev. 2:10; 3:9; 11:9). There can be no objection, therefore, on the score of phraseology, but, on the contrary, the sentence runs quite in his style without ἡμᾶς. Some scribe, ignorant of this, and supposing that the saints in heaven must needs sing there of their own redemption, as they had done on earth (chap. 1:5,6), may have inserted the first ἡμᾶς. This, in turn, producing a jar with the αὐτούς in the following verse, would naturally require the further demand of taking its place there; and that again would lead to the change in the person of the verb in the last clause. The internal considerations I believe to be very weighty in favor of the omission; but these have been, perhaps, sufficiently given above in the text. The reading ἡγόρασας τῷ θεῷ ἡμῶν (as in Cod. 44) appears to be the original text. The Alexandrian MS. which is the nearest among those that diverge, followed pretty closely by the Aethiopic, omits ἡμῶν in verse 9 and τῷ θεῷ ἡμῶν in verse 10. But these words are unquestionably genuine, and add much to the proof that the elders praised the Lamb for His redemption of others, distinct from themselves. . . .

It is also a serious mistake to say that the sense is “substantially the same,” whether we have us or they in verse 10. Again, the Sinaitic and Porphyrian MSS. turn the scale in favor of the twenty-two cursives, and the better ancient versions, which support βασιλεύσουσιν against A B, eighteen cursives, &c., exhibiting the present tense. But ἡμᾶς and βασιλεύομεν are indefensible and manifestly the work of a meddling corrector. It is strange too that the question of the ellipse in verse 9 is passed over in silence, seeing that there “us” is, to say the least doubtful; and if spurious removes the main reason for viewing the ζῶα as redeemed. (Lect. on Rev., p. 118,119,121)

[us]: The true reading of these verses is a most difficult question, as to which MSS. and versions, fathers and editors, are conflicting enough. There is no doubt that we ought to read αὐτούς (and not ἡμᾶς) in verse 10, on the authority of the Alexandrian, Vatican, and forty other MSS. not to speak of many ancient versions. As to βασιλεύουσιν, it is a mistake of your Correspondent, no doubt, for βασιλεύουσιν, which is supported by about twenty cursive manuscripts, &c. The two uncial MSS, with fifteen others, give βασιλεύουσιν. The valuable Codex Ephraemi Rescriptus affords no light on this passage, as there is a lacuna from Rev. 3:19 to 5:14. My opinion is, that the internal evidence is decidedly in favor of the former reading (i.e. shall reign), which differs by a single letter, that is often and easily dropped by a copyist. Assuming this, we have as the best approved text of verse 10, ἐποίησας αὐτούς . . . β. κ. ι. καὶ βασιλεύουσιν, “thou has made them . . . and they shall reign.” But this preferable reading of αὐτούς in verse 10 sounds strangely with ἡμᾶς in the preceding verse, “redeemed us, and made them.” In the two Leipsic editions of Tischendorf the difficulty disappears, for ἡμᾶς is omitted in verse 9, and the ellipse evidently refers to τῶν ἀγγέλων in verse 8, while it is referred to in αὐτούς (verse 10). This omission is made on the authority of the famous Alexandrian MS. and another generally known as Codex Borgiae, as well as of the Æthiopic version. Lachmann follows them in his edition of 1850, though he had given ἡμᾶς in that of 1831. Adopting the same, the text would be ἡγόρασας τῷ θεῷ ἐν τῷ αἵματι σου ἐκ πάσης φ. κ. γ. κ. λ. κ. ε. καὶ ἐποίησας αὐτοὺς κ. τ. λ. "Thou hast redeemed to God by thy blood [a people] out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, and hast made them," &c. This elliptical construction is frequent in St. John. . . . So far, therefore, from objection on the score of ellipse, it is plain that the text without ἡμᾶς adopted by Tischendorf and Lachmann, and considered probable by Griesbach, runs quite Johannically as to style. The internal evidence pleads strongly, I think, in the same direction. (Christian Annotator 1:324)

[us]: In Rev. 5:9,10, we have an exhibition of the text [in ⲛ] which commends itself strongly. I had bracketed ἡμᾶς in verse 9, as beyond a doubt suspicious, though unwilling to remove it absolutely from the text, as Lachmann and Tischendorf had done on the authority of A. 44. and the Æthiopic. The cursive, which was only written A.D. 1284, contained a point of difference from its venerable allies, which drew out no particular remark before. This may furnish a profitable reflection to such as despise the later mss. For it seems that in this very point it coincides with ⲛ, perhaps the oldest Uncial extant, as it is certainly for the New Testament the most complete. In a word, ⲛ and 44. confirm A. and the Æthiopic in omitting ἡμᾶς, and differ from these, but agree with each other, in giving τῷ θεῷ ἡμῶν. 'Ἡμῶν was very naturally changed into ἡμᾶς by copyists who did not understand the elliptical construction of the passage. This insertion, not at all agreeing with αὐτοὺς and βασιλεύ. in the following verse, gave rise to further tampering there, where changes of αὐτοὺς into ἡμᾶς and of the verb βασιλεύ. were made to yield a sense consistent with the correction or interpolation of verse 9. Several cursives, as 7. 16. 31. 34. 35. 39. . . . 87., have ἡμᾶς τῷ θεῷ, which order seems to be supported by the Vulgate, Syriac, Armenian, and Arabic, and by the Western Fathers, — all marking uncertainty here. It will be observed, also, that Codex Sinaiticus supports the twenty cursives and some of the best Latin mss. in βασιλεύουσιν, contrary to AB. and eighteen juniors, which read βασιλεύουσιν. The omission of σ was easy in the middle of a word; and, in fact, A. omits it in the same word in Rev. 20:6, where beyond question it should be read. (Rev. of John, 1860, xvii-xviii)

[us]: the very material change [in the RV] is the quasi-absolute use of ἡγόρασας by the omission of "us," for which the Revisers substitute "men." This is not only sustained by A 44, Aeth., but confirmed in the strongest way by the verse following (Bible Treasury 14:144)

5:10 them: αὐτοὺς (which Arm. and Slav.⁴ omit) AB. forty-seven mss., Compl., and most Vv.; ἡμᾶς many cursives, Vulg. (Fuld., &c.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16)

them: Rec. ἡμᾶς: all the edd. αὐτοὺς on unquestionable authority. (Prospect 1:155) them: Anyone who knows anything about the sacred text must be aware that in verse 10 "them" and "they" should take the place of "us" and "we." I do not deny that this is a considerable change of sense; but the evidence is so overwhelming that no one who respects the witnesses God's providence has preserved can hesitate. The sense resulting is excellent, save in the retaining of "us" in the verse before, which would present a harsh and unprecedented change of persons, which nobody, as far as I know, pretends to understand or account for. Here, therefore, one ought to speak with still greater assurance than as to verse 9; though I believe that the change required in verse 10 makes verse 9 uncorrected to be hardly intelligible, and adds much internal force to the few witnesses for its correction. . . . The importance of this, the true text, is very great, because it shows that besides the twenty-four elders who have this glorious and heavenly place as chiefs of heavenly priesthood, there are others bought by His blood who, although not in the place of such exalted dignity, either now or at any later time put among the twenty-four elders, are celebrated as made kings and priests, and shall reign over the earth. (Pamphlets p. 369-371) [See also notes to 5:9] to our God: τῷ θεῷ ἡμῶν is wanting in A. (and ἡμ. in 31.*), but read by B. and all the other mss., Vv., &c. Cyp., Prim., and apparently Æth., put the clause after βασι. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16) to our God: Tisch. omits τῷ θεῷ ἡμῶν with A. (Prospect 1:155) kings: βασιλείαν A., Vulg., Cop., Cyp., Prim.; -λείς B. and all others, with most Vv., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16) kings: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. Treg. βασιλεῖς. Tisch βασιλείαν with A. (Prospect 1:155)

they shall reign: βασιλεύουσιν AB., eighteen cursives, Compl., Syr., Ar.^p, Slav.^{3,4} -σουσιν twenty-two mss., Am. Harl. Tol. Lips.⁵ Cop., &c.; -σομεν many cursives, Rec., Vulg. (Demid. Lips.^{4,6}) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16) they shall reign: Rec. βασιλεύσομεν. Gr. Kn., Sz. βασιλεύουσιν. Tisch. Treg. βασιλεύουσιν. (Prospect 1:155)

they shall reign: The evidence of [the relative claims of the readings βασιλεύουσιν and βασιλεύσομεν] . . . is this. 1. Externally, the present tense is given by the Alex. and Vat. MSS. (i.e. A and B) and by fifteen MSS. in cursive characters, and by several versions. Lachmann and Tischendorf adopt it. On the other hand, Griesbach, Scholz and Knapp prefer the future following eighteen MSS. in cursive characters, and two Latin MSS. C has not the passage. Internally, I apprehend that the harmony of the passage is decidedly in favour of the future tense. (Prospect 1:87) they shall reign: [Dr. Chr. Wordsworth] tells us in a note that the best MSS. of Rev. 5:10 have the present tense. But the fact is that the most ancient extant (ⲛ) has the future, and so has the Porphyrian uncial of cent. ix., with some 30 cursives, and the best Latin copies, Coptic, &c.; whereas the Alex. and the Basilian uncial (of cent. eighth) support the present with less than 30 cursives, &c. Of these the Alex. might have greater weight, but that it alone reads the present in chap. 20:6; all else give the future. (Bible Treasury N1:317-8)

they shall reign: That the church now reigns in Christ, all things being put under her as under His feet, is Popery, not Christianity. True doctrine therefore confirms ⲛ P and some thirty cursives, some of the best versions and early comments, as against A B, some twenty-six cursives, &c., especially as it is but the question of a central letter easily dropt. This can be readily seen in Rev. 20:6, where the Alexandrian alone has the present against all other authority and the context, though it is not really so absurd there as in 5:10. Yet the Revisers have introduced this violent and really unreasonable change, without even a marginal note to record the protest of one dissenting voice that understood its bearing. The Americans (correctors of the RV) are equally silent. (Bible Treasury 14:158) over: Supposing the Church to be meant by Rev. 5:10, the verse does not state that the Church shall be upon the earth, but that these saints shall reign over it. 'Επὶ τῆς γῆς after a verb of reigning, governing, &c., means not the locality where the ruler resides, but the sphere of government. The authorised version conveys a wrong idea, which, to this day, misleads many students of prophecy. (The Prospect 2:36, see also Bible Treasury 16:128) over: . . . By the way it may be just observed that the rendering to "reign on the earth" is also erroneous. When the verb "to reign" is put along with the preposition ἐπὶ, it invariably means the sphere of the reigning and not the place where those who reign dwell. There is another word (ἐν) that is used invariably for the latter idea. (Pamphlets p. 369-371) over: [Q. — It is alleged that the Sept. Psalms 46:8, and Matt. 6:10, render doubtful the view that the text in the Revelation means reigning over, rather than on, the earth. Is it really so? S.]

A. — The accusative is used for the object where activity was to be expressed. The propriety of this as to the nations is plain. The dative (among other senses) is employed for fixed relationship where it is not condition, occasion, or circumstance. The genitive expresses rather the simple fact. But there is another element in the text, which distinguishes it from Matt. 6:10, the usage of the preposition with verbs of governing; and the Septuagint abounds with proofs that as ἐν is used for the locality where the king lived, ἐπὶ is for the sphere of his reign. (Bible Treasury 20:352) over: . . . the change of rendering in the last clause [in Tregelles' edition of 1848] seems remarkable. In the Authorized Translation, β. ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς is rendered "reign on the earth." So long as this was understood in a vague way, but little evil resulted; but at length some began to press the text so strongly, as to obscure and deny the proper heavenly seat of the Church, blessed in the heavenly places in Christ. This and other questions led to the careful sifting of the passage, and to the discovery that the phrase had been inaccurately translated, inasmuch as it really imports not the locality in which the kings reside, but the sphere of their rule. The only precisely parallel construction in the New Testament seems to be, Matt. 2:22, where the Authorized Version is equally loose as in the text before us, the force being that Archelaus was reigning over Judea. The question of his being in the country is not touched. It might or might not be. So it is with the passage in Rev. 5:10. Reigning over the earth (whether on it or not) is the thing which they sing.

Mr. [Tregelles] knew the bad consequences which had flowed from the mistranslation of the clause, and so long ago as 1836, in a paper entitled "Connected Passages in the Revelation," he quoted these words, altered the version from "on" to "over," and inserted the Greek word ἐπὶ for the sake of precision. Then he adds the comment: "It has been supposed from this passage, and others like it, that the home of the saints is described as on the earth; and this has, I believe, very much tended to cause some to look upon the reign of Christ and His Church as an earthly hope." Quite true: few passages have been so perverted to this end as the present. Eight years after, the Greek and English edition appears, and the correction is adhered to — "reign over (not on) the earth." It is somewhat surprising to find that the present [1848] version recurs to the error which its author had long seen and repudiated.

If it be said, Does not the expression ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς mean simply and strictly "on the earth?" I answer, that this is not the question. There is no doubt that in themselves the words bear such a meaning naturally and fairly, and are rightly so translated in a host of passages throughout the New Testament. But the question is, whether the force be not modified by the word βασιλεύω, for, in translating, we have to consider not only the intrinsic meaning of words, but whether and how the context may affect them. Nor are any words more decidedly qualified by those associated with them than prepositions. As to ἐπὶ with the genitive, dative, or accusative, need it be proved that it is habitually used with words expressive of authority, as the link with things or people ruled? Nay, it has even this force in itself, without an associated verb or participle, as οἱ ἐπὶ τῶν πραγμάτων, the persons set over such and such matters. There is a passage in the Revelation (17:18, ἡ ἔχουσα βασιλείαν ἐπὶ τῶν βασιλέων τῆς γῆς,) which Mr. [Tregelles] translated in 1844, "which holdeth the rule," and, in 1848, "which holdeth sovereignty;" but in both, "over the kings of the earth." There, indeed, he is forced to do so; otherwise, the passage would not be sense. Now, this clause is surely analogous, in point of construction, to that in the fifth chapter, save that the one is persons, and the other a place under rule. But is a translator to translate accurately merely where, if he mistranslated, the absurdity would be manifest? And if confessedly it be rule "over the kings of the earth" in the one verse, why should it not be rule "over the earth" in the other? (Prospect 1:87) over: . . . the misrendering of Rev. 5:10, where it is painful to see the error of the A.V. reproduced by the Revisors. For the usage, as far as appears, is that with words of authority or rule ἐπὶ indicates the sphere ruled over, ἐν the place in which the ruler lived. There is a shade of difference between gen. dat. and accus., but none as to the general fact that they express the subject, not the place, of rule. It will be seen, in the Books of Samuel, Kings, and Chronicles, for instance, that the locality of the king is regularly expressed by ἐν, the sphere by ἐπὶ. This being so, the true rendering is "over," not "on." Those who have given the latter have adopted a legitimate force of the preposition generally, not its meaning when modified by the connected βασιλ. The millennial reign then is heavenly, but over the earth . . . (Bible Treasury 17:172) over: I am aware of the reading of A B and some 26 cursives in Rev. 5:10. But undoubtedly the external counter-evidence of 8 P and 30 cursives, some of no common weight, and of the best Latin copies, preponderates. If it were otherwise even, the believer standing on the analogy of the faith can distinctly pronounce present reigning an error. Compare the absurd reading of the excellent Alex. MS. in Rev. 20:[3]. We must beware of idolizing the witnesses. "On" the earth too is not grammatically sound after βασιλ. It should be "over." (Exposition of Hebrews, p.129) [See also Bible Treasury N7:352 and 14:158]

5:11 heard A : AB.* with most others, Vulg., &c., omit ὡς, which B. thirty-five mss., Compl., Cop., Syr., &c., add. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16)

heard A : Some MSS. ὡς φ. (Prospect 1:155) around: κύκλῳ AB., forty-five mss., Compl., And., Are., cat.; κυκλόθεν Rec. with a few cursives. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16) around: Rec. κυκλόθεν. Edd. κύκλῳ. (Prospect 1:155) riches: Et. omits τῶν before πρεσβ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16) and the number of them was myriads of myriads: Et omits . . . καὶ ἦν . . . μυριάδων, and so Steph., but not Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16)

5:12 Worthy: ἄξιος A., Er. (who also drops the first τό.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16)

the: τὸν πλ. B., thirty cursives. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16)

5:13 which is: ὁ ἐστίν is omitted by 16. 39., and ἐστίν read by most, Vulg., &c., contrary to AB., twenty-nine mss., Tol., Cop., Arr., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16) which is: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. ὁ ἐστίν ἐν. Tisch. Treg. ὁ ἐν. (Prospect 1:155) on the earth: ἐπὶ τῆς (16. 28. omit) γῆς AB., more than forty mss., Compl., Vulg., Cop.; ἐν τῇ γῇ (Rec.) many cursives, Syr., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16) on the earth: Edd. ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς for Rec. ἐν τῇ γῇ. (Prospect 1:155) under the earth: Every creature "under the earth," ὑποκάτω τῆς γῆς, must be carefully distinguished, notwithstanding Bengel, from the κατοχθονίων in Phil. 2:10. The former, I suppose, means the things, animate or inanimate, beneath the earth's surface which anticipate in the vision, their deliverance from corruption into the liberty of the glory of the children of God. They cannot of course share the liberty of grace which we enjoy; but when we are in the glory, it will be the pledge of their glorious change speedily to follow. The latter in Philipians means the infernal beings, who must bow with every knee elsewhere at (or in) the name of Jesus. I am aware that Dean Alford, with Theodoret, &c., takes καταχ. as the dead; but this, though a classical usage of the word, seems to be far from the scope of the passage. (Lect. on Rev., p.122)

[such as are]: ἃ (after θαλ.) is omitted by A., more than thirty mss., Are., cat.; but inserted by B. and most mss., Vulg., &c. 87. has ὅσα for ἃ, and three mss., Syr., &c., omit ἃ ἐστίν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16)

[such as are]: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. ἃ ἐστι. Tisch omit ἃ. (Prospect 1:155)

on . . . the: Naturally they correct in 13 [in the RV] the singular confusion of the Authorised Version, and give "on" the sea. They also mark the article "the" blessing, &c. (Bible Treasury 14:158)

all: πάντας B. and more than thirty mss. (several of which add also πάντα before τὰ ἐν αὐτοῖς), Compl.; but A. and the majority have πάντα (some adding and others prefixing καὶ) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16)

all . . . saying: Rec. Gr. Sz. τ. ἐ. αὐτ. πάντα, ἡκ. λέγοντας. Ln. πάντα ἡκουσα λέγοντα. Tisch. πάντας ἡκ. λέγοντας. (Prospect 1:155) saying: λέγοντας B. and almost all mss., Vulg.; -τα A. 12. Cop., Syr.; -τες Er.; -των 87. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16) the throne: τῷ θρ. AB., more than twenty mss.; τοῦ θρ. most cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16) and: A., Slav.^{3,4} omit καὶ before τῷ ἀνρίφ, which Cop. also omits. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16) ages. ἅ : ἀμήν B., thirty-seven mss., Compl. Æth. Slav.^{3,4}&c.; contrary to A. and very many mss., Vv., and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16) ages. ἅ : Some MSS. and versions add ἀμήν. (Prospect 1:155)

5:14 And the four living creatures said, Amen: 95. omits καὶ . . . ἀμήν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16) said: ἔλεγον A. some cursives (-εν 87.), Rec., Vulg., Syr., Æth., Are., &c.; λέγοντα B., thirty mss., Compl., Cop., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16) said: Some MSS. which Matthiae follows λέγοντα τὸ ἄμ. (also omitting τό.) (Prospect 1:156)

Ἄ Amen: B. and most cursives add τό, which A. and many omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16)

Ἄ elders: AB. and near fifty cursives, Compl., most Vv., And., Are., cat., omit εἰκοσιτέσσαρες, as in Rec., following some cursives, Vulg. (Demid. &c.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16)

Ἄ elders: The most ancient MSS. omit εἰκοσ. τέσσαρες and so the edd. Rec. and Kn. (with brackets) admits these words, . . . There is little doubt that we ought to reject . . . (Prospect 1:156)

Ἄ elders . . . worshipped. ἅ : Another important correction long known is the omission not only of "twenty four" in the middle but of the object at the close of 14, the effect of which is to imply that the elders fell down and did homage to the Lamb as well as to Him that sitteth on the throne, in accordance with the verse before. (Bible Treasury 14:158) fell down: ἔπεσαν A. and very many; ἔπεσον B. and about twenty-five, Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16) worshipped. ἅ : ABC., forty-five mss., Compl., most Vv., And., Are., cat., omit ζῶντι εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων, contrary to some cursives, Vulg., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16) worshipped. ἅ : Rec. and Kn. (with brackets) admits . . . ζῶντι εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων. There is little doubt that we ought to reject. (Prospect 1:156) worshipped. ἅ : It is well to note that all the reliable authorities, including all the five uncials, a vast body of cursives, and most versions, &c., omit ζῶντι εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων. How admirably this omission coalesces with the context and maintains the glory of God and the Lamb as the common object of homage on the part of the elders is evident. (Lect. on Rev., p.123) worshipped. ἅ : It is well to note that Rev. 5:14 ends, according to the best authority, with "worshipped." "Him that liveth for ever and ever" is a spurious addition. In fact, the elders worshipped both. (Pamphlets, p.390) worshipped. ἅ : The omission of "him that liveth unto the ages of the ages" is fully established, and finely illustrates how a spurious clause takes away from the truth. For as read by the best copies the homage was to the Lamb as well as to God as such. It is attested more fully than the omission of ἡμᾶς in ver. 9, though for this sufficient is given, and required by the context. (Rev. Exp., p. 93) worshipped. ἅ : "Him that liveth for ever and ever" has not a known Greek copy to warrant the addition, which is due to Western influence. It is noted as singular that Ewald in his Comm. (Lipsiae, 1828), after drawing out well the critical correction of 9, 10, should have wound up his remarks by an irreverent and heterodox note on the verse before us, based on this unfounded reading due to Erasmus, who translated Primasius or a later copy of the Vulgate, and translated it ill, for he omitted the article before ζῶντι. The Complutensian text printed before Erasmus's first edition rightly omits the words. (Bible Treasury 14:158)

6:1 when: ὅτε AC., many cursives, and most Vv.; ὅτι B., thirty-three mss., Compl., Vulg. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.16)

one: For μίαν Er. has ἓν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.17)

seven: ἑπτὰ ABC., thirty-five mss., Compl., Vulg., Æth., Syr., Ar.^p, And., Are., cat.; though many cursives, Rec., Cop., &c., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.17)

seven: Rec. omits ἑπτὰ, but the three uncial and twenty-eight other MSS. contain it. (Prospect 1:156) seven . . . as: it is hard to see why the Revisers should render their correct text "with" a voice, as it is a nom. pend. They rightly read "seven," (Bible Treasury 14:158-159) saying: λέγοντος after βρ. A., Slav.⁴ (and so Arm., omitting the previous λέγ.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.17) voice: φωνή (or -ῆ) ABC., near forty mss., Compl., Are., cat.; -ῆς many cursives, Rec. (some -ήν, and -ῶν.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.17) voice: Rec. φωνῆς, Gr. Kn. Sz. Ln. and Tisch. φωνῇ, Treg. φωνῇ. (Prospect 1:156)

Come. ἅ : καὶ βλέπε is wanting in AC., twelve mss., Compl., Am., Ar.^s, &c.; contrary to many mss., Rec.; καὶ (omitted by five mss.) ἰδε B., thirty mss., most Vv., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.17)

Come. ἅ : Rec. reads at the end of the verse καὶ βλέπε, Gr. Kn. and Sz. καὶ ἰδε, as does Matthiae; (see verse 5.) Ln. Tisch. and Treg. insert neither here, nor in verses 3, 5, and 7. (Prospect 1:156)

Come. ἅ : It may be well to mention in this note my opinion that the words "and see" (which, according to the common text and the authorized version, follow "Come" in the call of the four living creatures) appear to be an interpolation. In the case of the second (verse 3) there is no difference of judgment among critical editors of the least note; but, strange to say, Griesbach and Scholz retain the ordinary sense in the last two, and, in the first case of all, Knapp along with them. Buttmann, Hahn, Lachmann, Tischendorf, and Tregelles omit the words uniformly, and, as I think, with reason. The difference as to interpretation would be this: as the text. rec. stands, it is a call from each living creature to John; but if they merely cry "Come," it would seem to be a direct address to the riders on the several horses, who accordingly come forth at their bidding. (Lect. on Rev., p.139-140)

Come. ἅ : Surely it is plain enough that we ought not to have here, and after the other three horses, the words "And see." They are wanting in the best text for all these passages. (Yet in every instance the Sinai MS. supports the inferior copies against the Alexandrian, the Rescript of Paris, and the Porphyrian Uncial, with the better cursives, etc. The Sinaitic is often careless, especially in the Revelation.) In every one of the cases the sentence ought only to be "Come." The difference comes to this, that "Come and see" would be addressed to John; whereas according to the better MSS. "Come" is addressed by the living creature to the rider upon the horse. Clearly this makes all possible difference. (Rev. Exp., p.95)

Come. Λ : [The RV] rightly omit[s] "and see," though κ B and near forty cursives support the sense, not one known MS., the precise form ($\beta\lambda\epsilon\pi\epsilon$, a conjecture of Erasmus) of the Text. Rec. The correction here is valuable; for the call of each living creature is not to the prophet or any other than to each horseman, who thereon does come. Some have thought that the copyists were influenced by Ezek. 8:9; possibly it was John 1:39: if so, it was a strange blunder. Even if $\kappa\alpha\iota$ $\epsilon\dot{\iota}\delta\epsilon$, as is most like, was inferred from the immediately following $\kappa\alpha\iota$ $\epsilon\dot{\iota}\delta\omicron\nu$ ($\tau\dot{\iota}\delta\omicron\nu$), it was a baseless and fraudulent addition. A similar remark applies to 3, 5, 7. (Bible Treasury 14:159)

Come. Λ : [See also Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist. and Rev., p.453]

6:2 And I saw;: $\kappa\alpha\iota$ $\epsilon\dot{\iota}\delta\omicron\nu$ (AC. 7. $\tau\dot{\iota}\delta\omicron\nu$) AC., most mss. and Vv., And.; but B., thirty mss., Demid. Harl. Tol. Lips^s Slav^{3,4}* Are., cat., Prim., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.17)

And I saw: The edd. $\kappa\alpha\iota$ $\epsilon\dot{\iota}\delta\omicron\nu$. Treg. marks the words as doubtful here, and in verses 5 and 8. (Prospect 1:156) him: $\alpha\upsilon\tau\acute{\omicron}\nu$ ABC., upwards of forty mss., Compl., for $\alpha\upsilon\tau\acute{\omega}$ 1st, as in many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.17) him: Rec. $\epsilon\pi'$ $\alpha\upsilon\tau\acute{\omega}$, the edd. $\epsilon\pi'$ $\alpha\upsilon\tau\acute{\omicron}\nu$. (Prospect 1:156) him: there is no more to remark in the text [of the RV] than $\alpha\upsilon\tau\acute{\omicron}\nu$ instead of $\alpha\upsilon\tau\acute{\omega}$, as in 4, 5 also, which is required by ample authority. The differing form can be a good deal better felt than expressed. The genitive would be the fact simply; the dative, a permanent relation; the accusative, activity on the part of the sinner. Here it is of course no question of a state or fixed position as in Matt. 16:18, Mark 6:35, Luke 12:44, John 8:7, but there is an object actively in view. All three occur in connection with the throne in Rev. 4:2 (acc.), 10 (gen.), 5:1, 7 & 13 (dat.) as in 4:9, 6:16, used with marked precision, the more remarkable as in a book abounding with anomalous Hebraistic forms, yet disproving any imputation of ignorance. Dean Alford, in a note on the first, notices how the acc. is used uniformly on the first mention, thus bearing trace of motion toward; but then at sight of 11:16, where it is not a first mention, he wavers, and gives up the gen. and dat. as seeming to have no rule at all: a conclusion due to his own defect of analysis. (Bible Treasury 14:159)

Λ conquering: δ ν . A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.17) conquer. Λ : Some mss., as 32. 36. add $\kappa\alpha\iota$ $\epsilon\nu\acute{\iota}\kappa\eta\sigma\epsilon$. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.17)

6:3 Λ opened: In 3, 5, 7, 9, 12, and in 8:1, "had" should be omitted as in Authorised Version of 1. (Bible Treasury 14:159)

the second seal: $\sigma\phi$. τ . δ . AC. 6. 12. 34. 35. 49. ... 87. Et.; δ . $\sigma\phi$. B. and most mss., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.17)

the second seal: Rec. $\tau\dot{\eta}\nu$ $\delta\epsilon\upsilon\tau\acute{\epsilon}\rho\alpha\nu$ $\sigma\phi\rho\alpha\gamma\acute{\iota}\delta\alpha$, the edd. $\tau\dot{\eta}\nu$ $\sigma\phi$. $\tau\dot{\eta}\nu$ δ . and so in verse 5, $\tau\dot{\eta}\nu$ $\sigma\phi$. $\tau\dot{\eta}\nu$ $\tau\acute{\rho}\iota\tau\eta\nu$. (Prospect 1:156)

Come. Λ : $\kappa\alpha\iota$ $\beta\lambda\epsilon\pi\epsilon$ many mss., Rec., Are., cat.; $\kappa\alpha\iota$ $\tau\dot{\iota}\delta\epsilon$ 34. 35. 39. 40. 43. ... 87. 94. Vulg., Cop., And., Vic., Prim.; but ABC. with the body of cursives, Compl., Am. Fuld., Syr., Arm., Ar.^c (which apparently = $\kappa\alpha\iota$ $\epsilon\dot{\iota}\delta\omicron\nu$ for $\epsilon\rho\chi\omicron\nu$), omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.17) [See note to 6:1]

Come. Λ : Rec. $\kappa\alpha\iota$ $\beta\lambda\epsilon\pi\epsilon$, omitted by the edd. (Prospect 1:156)

6:4 red: $\pi\upsilon\rho\acute{\omicron}\varsigma$ AB., twenty-nine mss.; $\pi\upsilon\beta\rho\acute{\omicron}\varsigma$ C. and the mass. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.17) to: κ . $\epsilon\nu$ τ . κ . A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.17) upon him: $\alpha\upsilon\tau\acute{\omicron}\nu$ ABC., most mss., Compl.; $\alpha\upsilon\tau\acute{\omega}$ many cursives, Rec.; $\alpha\upsilon\tau\acute{\omicron}\nu$ 18. 29. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.17)

upon him: Rec. $\epsilon\pi'$ $\alpha\upsilon\tau\acute{\omega}$, the edd. $\epsilon\pi'$ $\alpha\upsilon\tau\acute{\omicron}\nu$ (and in verse 5). (Prospect 1:156)

it: "power" of the Authorised Version is needless. (Bible Treasury 14:159) given him: $\alpha\upsilon\tau\acute{\omega}$ after $\epsilon\delta$. is omitted by A. 8. 14. 28. 29. 31. ... 87. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.17) from: $\epsilon\kappa$ BC., near forty mss., And., Are., cat.; $\alpha\pi\acute{\omicron}$ many cursives, Rec.; but A. 7. 16. 39. 46. ... omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.17)

from: Rec. $\alpha\pi\acute{\omicron}$ $\tau\dot{\eta}\varsigma$ $\gamma\dot{\eta}\varsigma$, Ln. and Tisch. $\tau\dot{\eta}\varsigma$ $\gamma\dot{\eta}\varsigma$, others $\epsilon\kappa$ τ . γ . (Prospect 1:156) and: $\kappa\alpha\iota$ before $\tau\dot{\iota}\nu\alpha$ is omitted by B., thirty-six mss., Compl., Cop., Arm., Arr., Are., cat.; contrary to AC., some cursives, Vulg., Syr., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.17) and: Matthiae omits $\kappa\alpha\iota$ before $\tau\dot{\iota}\nu\alpha$. (Prospect 1:156)

they should slay: $\sigma\phi\acute{\alpha}\xi\omicron\upsilon\sigma\iota\nu$ AC.; $\sigma\phi\acute{\alpha}\xi\omega\sigma\iota$ (or $-\iota\nu$) B. and the mass, &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.17) they should slay: Rec. Gr., Kn. and Sz. $\sigma\phi\acute{\alpha}\xi\omega\sigma\iota$, Ln. Tisch. and Treg. $\sigma\phi\acute{\alpha}\xi\omicron\upsilon\sigma\iota$. (Prospect 1:156) great sword: $\mu\epsilon\gamma$. $\mu\acute{\alpha}\chi$. A., Cop., Æth. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.17)

6:5 Λ opened . . . saw: [See notes to Rev. 6:3 and 6:8]

the third seal: $\sigma\phi$. τ . $\tau\rho$. ABC., mss., most Vv., FF.; $\tau\rho$. $\sigma\phi$. very few mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18)

Come. Λ : $\kappa\alpha\iota$ $\beta\lambda\epsilon\pi\epsilon$ many cursives, Rec.: κ . $\tau\dot{\iota}\delta\epsilon$ B., about thirty mss., and most Vv.; while AC., sixteen mss., Compl., Am., Arm., Ar.^c, omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18) [See note to 6:1]

Come. Λ : Compare verses 1,2,3, and 4. (Prospect 1:156) [See note to 6:1]

And I saw: $\kappa\alpha\iota$ $\epsilon\dot{\iota}\delta\omicron\nu$ AC., most mss., Am. &c., Arm., Ar.^c; but B. and very many mss., most Vv., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18) him: $\alpha\upsilon\tau\acute{\omicron}\nu$ ABC. and upwards of thirty mss., Compl.; $\alpha\upsilon\tau\acute{\omega}$ many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18)

a balance: [In the RV] "a balance" is right (Bible Treasury 14:159)

6:6 [as]: $\omega\varsigma$ AC. 6. 12. 17. Vulg., Slav.³; but B. and almost all other authorities omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18)

[as]: Ln. and Treg. read $\omega\varsigma$ $\phi\omega\nu\eta\nu$, following A., C. and other MSS. Other edd. omit $\omega\varsigma$. (Prospect 1:156)

[as]: "as it were" a voice is required by the most ancient witnesses, though ancient versions, save Vulgate, omit it like our Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:159)

choenix: [The American correctors of the RV] would append an explanatory note in the margin, instead of the more vague words of the Revisers. (Bible Treasury 15:176) of barley: $\kappa\rho\iota\theta\acute{\omega}\nu$ AC. 12. Syr.; $-\eta\varsigma$ B. and the rest. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18) of barley: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. $\kappa\rho\iota\theta\acute{\eta}\varsigma$, Ln. Tisch. and Treg. $\kappa\rho\iota\theta\acute{\omega}\nu$. (Prospect 1:156) a: $\tau\acute{\omicron}\nu$ before the last $\delta\eta\nu$. A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18) wine: In Rev. 6:6, $\omicron\iota\nu\omicron\varsigma$ is used, by metonymy, for the vine-fruit. (Just so, we speak of "a wine-grower," instead of employing the more literally correct phrase, "a grower of vines." But no sensible person would say, on this account, that "wine" means "vine fruit." The same principle applies to the figurative usage of vinum (for grapes) in Plautus, or Varro, and to vinum pendens in Cato; it explains the remark of Gesner, that vinum, vitis, uvæ, and vineæ, as kindred terms, are sometimes used synonymously. If unlimited, there is no sense in it, but this the learned critic never meant. — While upon the point, it may be observed that Livy does not speak of any invaders being "captivated by the lusciousness of the fruits, especially of the grape." His real words are: "Eam gentem, traditur fama, dulcedine frugum, maximeque vini nova tum voluptate captam, Alpes transisse, agrosque ab Etruscis ante cultos possedissee: et invexisse in Galliam vinum illiciendae gentis causa," &c. No scholar can have the least hesitation as to the meaning of the historian. By vini and vinum, he means "wine," and nothing else. Dr. Lees has no warrant for asserting that "the grape" is meant in Livy v.33. Compare ix.30; x.23; xxv.23; xxvi.14; xxix.8; xxxvi.11,14; xl.19; xli.4; xlv.30, where, as in the passage so needlessly questioned, the word has its ordinary sense.) But such a case affords not the slightest ground for the notion that it ever does or can denote, properly, any thing else than wine, i.e. fermented grape-liquor. Such reasoning would unsettle the basis of all language. (Pamphlets, p.280-281)

6:7 ^Λ opened: [See note to Rev. 6:3]

fourth seal: τετ. σφρ. 38. &c., Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18) the fourth living creature's voice: φωνήν A., very many mss., Vulg. &c., BC. (τὸ τέταρτον ζῶον C.), with about thirty-five mss., Cop., Syr., Arr., Slav.^{3,4} omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18) the fourth living creature's voice: Gr. Kn. and Tisch. omit, and Rec. Sz. Ln. and Treg. insert φωνήν. (Prospect 1:156) saying: λέγοντος ABC., most mss., Vv., and Ff., Compl.; λέγουσαν very few mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18) saying: Rec. λέγουσαν, the edd. λέγοντος. (Prospect 1:156)

Come_Λ: καὶ βλέπε some cursives: κ. ἰδε B. and about thirty mss., most Vv., &c.; but AC., thirty cursives, Compl., Am., Ar.^ε, &c., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18) [See note to 6:1]

6:8 And I saw; καὶ (C. omits) εἶδον (AC. 7. ἰδ. as often) AC., most mss., and most Vv.; but B. and more than twenty-five mss., Vulg., &c., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18)

And I saw: Compare verse 2. (Prospect 1:156) saw . . . by: The Revisers are right in 8 as in 5 giving "saw," not "beheld" and "looked," as in the Authorised Version of 1 and 9. "By" is right in indicating direct agency, not "with," a general character of destruction. (Bible Treasury 14:159)

him: [See note to Rev. 6:17] him: αὐτοῦ after ἐπ. is omitted by C. 12. Er., *Demid. Harl. Tol. Lips.*⁵ (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18) him: Ln. omits αὐτοῦ after ἐπάνω. (Prospect 1:156) death: ὁ θάν. (ἀθ. A.) AB., most mss., Orig.; but C. 16.* 37. 49. 91. 95. 96. Compl., omit ὁ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18) death: A. ὁ θάνατος, and C. omits the article before θ., but both are manifestly wrong. (Prospect 1:156) followed: ἀκολουθεῖ (A. uncertain) more than twenty cursives, Cop., Syr., &c., Orig., Vic; ἡκολ. B., thirty-five mss., Vulg., Æth., Arr., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18) followed: Rec. has ἀκολουθεῖ, the edd. ἡκ. (Prospect 1:156) with him: μ. αὐτοῦ AC., very many mss.; αὐτῷ B., upwards of thirty cursives, &c. (μ. αὐτῷ 33. 35.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18) with him: Μαθθαῖα αὐτῷ, (with B. and twenty-seven MSS.) instead of μετ' αὐτοῦ. (Prospect 1:156) given him: αὐτοῖς AC., very many cursives; αὐτῷ B., more than forty mss., Compl., Vv., Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18) given him: Rec. and Ln. αὐτοῖς, Gr. Kn. Sz. Tisch. following B. and many MSS. and versions, αὐτῷ. (Prospect 1:156) over the fourth part of the earth, to kill: ἐπὶ τὸ τ. τ. γ. ἀπ. C., about forty-five mss. Compl., Vv., and Ff.; ἀπ. before ἐπὶ τ. τ. γ. some cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18) over the fourth part of the earth, to kill: The most ancient MSS. place ἀποκτείναι after γῆς, instead of before ἐπὶ. And so the edd. save in Rec. (Prospect 1:156) fourth part: Here the case is simple enough. There are five uncial MSS. of the Revelation, and upwards of a hundred cursives, in not one of which has there been found the smallest ground for justifying Jerome's "quatuor partes." Two or three later Latins who used the Vulgate, not always without discrepancy, give the same very naturally; but neither Greek ecclesiastical writer nor Oriental, nor any version save the Vulgate, countenances the change. In my judgment it is critically discreditable and doctrinally dangerous to adopt such a change on such a precarious footing. Nothing like it can be produced from the entire New Testament. Why should it be here? How much better to leave the difficulty unsolved than to adopt a resource so desperate. Mr. [E. B. Elliott] refers to my own principle of using internal evidence. Certainly I do to decide between readings with good external support on both sides, never where all the direct witnesses are on one side, and you have hearsay evidence of one type on the other side. (Lect. on Rev., p. xxi-xxii) fourth part: I take this opportunity of saying that, invaluable as the best Latin copies are as a support of ancient and excellent readings, it seems a perilous thing to throw aside all the MSS. and every other version, and all the early writers save those who merely echo the Vulgate, as Mr. Elliott does in following its "quatuor partes" (verse 8). There is really no ground but the exigencies of his system. To square with facts, according to his application, it should have been not the fourth, but the whole of the Roman empire. Hence Jerome's manifest oversight is adopted, and it is argued that he must have had ancient witnesses now lost! But this is most unreasonable when we see that Jerome is often loose. To take this chapter alone, is it pretended that "vocem," in verse 1, the omission of "et," in verse 2, "singulae," in verse 9, "insulae," in verse 14, rest on original authority? Are they not evidently due to mere laxity of rendering? And why impute "quatuor partes" to a higher source? The wonder is that we have not some of the later Greek manuscripts influenced by the Latin in verse 8, as perhaps 26 was in verses 1 and 2. We know there are stupendous blunders occasionally in the best copies of the Vulgate, as in 1 Cor. 15:51; Heb. 11:21. Why give it a place in this verse, which is not claimed for it in any other verse of Old or New Testament? Besides, is it according to the analogy of this book, or of any other book, to speak of "four parts," if the entire empire were intended? The attempted historical answer of quadripartition seems to me extremely meager. This, of course, is matter of opinion. But it is serious when the author is so enamored of his theory as to bid his readers "well mark that if the prophecy here differ from the history, it differs from, and is inconsistent with, itself also: seeing that the whole horse is depicted with the pale death-like hue, not its fourth part only." — H.A., i. 201. This is bolder than man ought to be with God's word, unless there were infinitely graver grounds against the text. The inference from the horse I have, I think, shown to be unsound. (Lect. on Rev., p.146)

and by_Λ: Er. wants καὶ before ὑπό, and A. omits τὸ τέταρτον after it. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18)

6:9 ^Λ opened: [See note to Rev. 6:3]

saw_Λ: C. 14. add καὶ after εἶδον. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18) souls_Λ: ψ. τῶν ἀνθρώπων 10. 12. 17. 36. 37. 46. 49. 91. 96. Compl., Cop., Æth., Arm. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18) slain: the perfect participle, expressive of a permanent character or state, ought not to have been as in the Authorised Version merged in a simple preterite. For "were" read "have been." (Bible Treasury 14:159)

because: διὰ 2nd, omitted by A., Tol., Cop., Cyp., Prim., is given by BC. and perhaps all others, Vulg., Syr., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18) because: Tisch. drops and the others receive διὰ before τὴν μ. (Prospect 1:156) testimony_Λ: τοῦ ἀρνίου is added after μ by B., more than thirty-six mss., Compl., Syr., Ar.^p (57. and others having ἐν χυῖ); but omitted by AC., many cursives, Vulg., and other Vv. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18)

testimony_Λ: Μαθθαῖα adds τοῦ ἀρνίου with B., and upwards of thirty MSS. (Prospect 1:156)

6:10 they cried: ἔκραξαν ABC., thirty-seven cursives, Compl., Are., cat., Cyp., Prim.; -ζον many cursives, Rec., Vulg. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18)

they cried: Rec ἔκραζον, the edd. ἔκραξαν (Prospect 1:156) voice: φωνήν μ. B., twenty-eight mss., contrary to AC. and the majority. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18)

O Master: [In the RV] it is rightly, "O Master, the" &c. (Bible Treasury 14:159) and_λ: κ. ἀλ. ABC., thirty cursives, Compl., Are., cat.; but very many mss. give ὁ ἀλ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18) and_λ: the edd. . . omitting also the article before ἀληθινός. (Prospect 1:156) on: ἐκ ABC., thirty-eight mss., Compl., Are., cat.; ἀπό very many cursives. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18) on: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. ἀπὸ, later edd. ἐκ. (Prospect 1:156)

6:11 [whole verse]: [See note on 10:8]

was given . . . a white robe: ἐδόθη . . . στολή λευκή ABC., forty-five mss., Syr., Arm., Ar.^e, Clem., Al., And., Are., cat., Cyp. (ἐδόθη Compl., but omitting στ. λ. καὶ ἐβρέθη αὐτοῖς); -σαν . . . -λαὶ -καὶ many cursives, Vulg., Cop., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18) was given . . . a white robe: Rec. ἐδόθησαν ἐκάστοις στολαὶ λευκαί, Gr. and Sz. ἐδόθη αὐτοῖς στολή λευκή, Ln. Tisch. and Treg. (doubtfully) add ἐκάστω σ. λ. (Prospect 1:156) them [each]: αὐτοῖς B., about twenty-four mss., Compl.; with ἐκάστω AC., more than twenty cursives; ἐκάστοις many mss., Rec.; ἐκάστω 2. 4. 11. 12. 19.; ἐκάστω αὐτῶν 28. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18) them [each] . . . a white robe: "a white robe was" given is alone true according to the MSS., and αὐτοῖς ἐκάστω is probably if not certainly right. For one could readily understand one or other left out by design as if needless, and the omission of ἐκ. would next lead to the plural form in the versions. It has been thought that ἐκάστοις as in Text. Rec. had the support of many cursives; but not one is known as yet. There is a curious lacuna in the Complutensian edition, marked in the Greek text in the way so characteristic and common in their accompanying Vulgate, so that we cannot cite that work as to the point. They have marked the defect wrongly however, for their line should have been after καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτοῖς and before ἵνη ἀναπ. κ. τ. λ., not before all. It was Erasmus probably who invented the plural, as well as ἐκάστοις. The marginal rendering of the Revised Version answers to the reading of κ B P and some fifty cursives; that of the Text. Rec. is probably Erasmus' guess once more, as we know of no Greek copy that warrants it. We know from Dr. F. Delitzsch's collation that Cod. Reuchlini, the great Rotterdam scholar's MS., has a lacuna similar to that which the Complutensian edition must have had, (doubtless from the ὁμοιοτέλετον of αὐτοῖς), and that it gave πληρώσωσιν and not πληρώσονται. The active sense is unsuitable. The Authorised Version is right; but how they drew it, unless from the Complutensian, it is hard to conceive, as the ordinary text conveys no such reading. The critical reader can compare a similar conflict of readings in 9:5, as to ἵνα β. where the Complutensian editors give βασανίσωσι. (Bible Treasury 14:159)

they should rest: ἀναπαύσονται AB. 7. 8. 13. 28. 30.* 32. 36. 98.; -σονται C., most cursives, And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18)

they should rest: Rec. and others read ἀναπαύσονται, Ln. and Tisch. ἀναπαύσονται. (Prospect 1:156) for a [little] space: χρ. ἔτι (ἔ. χρ. A., Am. Fuld.) B., forty-two cursives, Compl., &c.; but AC. with very many mss., most Vv., &c., add μικρόν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18) for a [little] space . . . should be completed: Rec. μικρόν ἔ. οἱ. πληρώσονται, Gr. Sz. χρ. ἔ. πληρώσωσι. Ln. χρ. ἔι. μικρόν, Tisch. and Treg. ἔ. χρ. (Treg. inserting μικρόν doubtfully) ἕως πληρωθῶσι. (Prospect 1:156) until_λ: ABC., about thirty mss., omit οὐ; contrary to very many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.18-19) should be completed: πληρωθῶσιν AC. 29. Compl., Vulg., Cop., Æth., Syr.; -σωσιν B., more than forty-five cursives. Ar.^e, And. (-ον four other mss.); -σονται many cursives, Rec., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.19) should be completed: "completed" appears once more to be best; or, "complete" their course, if the active form is to prevail as in many, and some ancient authorities. (Bible Treasury 15:176)

_λthat: καὶ is added before οἱ μ. by B., twenty-five mss., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.19) to be killed: ἀποκτένν. AC., ten cursives; -ν B., sixteen mss.; -εἰν-many mss., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.19) to be killed: Rec. and Gr. ἀποκτείνεσθαι, others ἀποκτεννεσθαι. (Prospect 1:156)

6:12 I saw: ἶδον ABC. 7. 14. 32.; εἶδον almost all cursives; 18. 29. 30. 40....90. 93. 95. 98. with Æth., Ar.^p, &c., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.19)

_λwhen . . . and: Many mss. with Compl. add καὶ before ὅτε, but some omit the following καὶ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.19)

_λopened: [See note to Rev. 6:3]

_λthere: κ. σεισμός BC., upwards of forty mss., Compl., most Vv. and Ff.; κ. ἰδοῦ A., many cursives Vulg. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.19) _λthere: The edd. omit ἰδοῦ, which Rec. exhibits, and read ἡ σ. ὅλη where Rec. wants the latter word. (Prospect 1:156)

_λthere . . . whole: "lo" rightly vanishes, and the "whole" moon is read, on excellent authority. (Bible Treasury 14:159)

there was a great: ἐγ. μέγ. A. 31. Vulg., mss., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.19) became black: ἐγ. μέλ. (μέγας A.) AC., most mss. and Vv.; μ. ἐγ. B., twenty-five mss., Compl., Cop., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.19) the whole moon: ἡ σ. ὅλη ABC., most mss., Vv., Are., cat., &c.; but many cursives omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.19)

6:13 [whole verse]: There are changes in 13, 14 [in the RV], but too slight to detain us. (Bible Treasury 14:159) heaven: θεοῦ for οὐρ. (omitted by Fuld. and other Lat. mss. and Ff.) A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.19) fell: ἔπεσαν AC. and probably most mss.; -σον B. and upwards of twenty-five mss., Compl., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.19) shaken: σειομένη BC. and almost all the rest, And., Are., cat.; σαλευομένη A. 12. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.19) shaken: Ln. has σαλευομένη, the others σειομένη. (Prospect 1:156) a great wind: άν μ. ABC., near thirty mss.; μ. άν. very many cursives. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.19)

a great wind: Rec. μ. ά., the edd ά. μ. (Prospect 1:156) casteth: βαλοῦσα nearly thirty mss. (seven more cursives, &c., βάλλουσα), Æth., Syr., Ar.^p, Slav. ms. (ἀποβαλοῦσα 38.); βάλλει ABC., very many cursives (ἀποβάλλει 28.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.19)

casteth: Matthiae reads βαλοῦσα, where Rec. and others have βάλλει. (Prospect 1:156)

6:14 [whole verse]: [See note to Rev. 6:13]

the: ὁ before οὐρ. ABC., most mss., Compl., And., Are., cat.; which a few cursives omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.19) the: The edd. insert the article before οὐρανός. (Prospect 1:156) rolled up: ἐλ. or ἐλ. ABC., fourteen mss., Compl., And., Are., cat.; εἰλ. or εἰλ. very many cursives (others -ος) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.19) rolled up: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. ἐπισσόμενον, Treg. ἐλ. Matthiae reads ἐπισσόμενος. (Prospect 1:156) island: νῆσος BC. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.19) were moved: ἀπεκείνησαν A., ἐσαλεύθησαν 95. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.19)

6:15 the chiliarchs and the rich: χ. κ. οἱ πλ. A. (omitting καί before οἱ πλ.), BC., most mss., Vv., and Ff., Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.19)
the chiliarchs and the rich: Rec. πλ. κ. οἱ χ., the edd. οἱ χ. κ. οἱ πλ. (Prospect 1:156)

the chiliarchs and the rich . . . caves: "the rich" properly follows the chief captains or chiliarchs; and the "caves" is better than "dens." (Bible Treasury 14:159)

the mighty: ισχυροί ABC., upwards of forty mss., Compl., And., Are., cat.; δυνατοί very many mss. (12. 36. omit) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.19-20)

the mighty: Rec. δυνατοί, the edd. ισχυροί. (Prospect 1:156) freeman: ABC., about thirty-five mss., Vulg., Æth., Syr., Arr., &c., omit πᾶς before ἐλ.; which very many cursives, Cop., &c., add. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20) freeman: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. πᾶς ἐλ. Ln. Tisch. and Treg. omit πᾶς. (Prospect 1:156)

6:16 say: "said" was the mere carelessness of Tyndale, followed by the other Protestant English translations, Wiclif and the Rhemish being right. (Bible Treasury 14:159)

Fall: πέσατε A. 7. 28. and probably others; -σετε B. and the great majority. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20)

Fall: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. and Treg. πέσετε, Ln. and Tisch. πέσατε. (Prospect 1:156)

the throne: τῷ θρ. B., twenty five cursives, &c.; τοῦ θρ. AC. and most mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20)

the throne: Matthiae edits ἐπὶ τῷ θρ., others ἐπὶ τοῦ θρ. (Prospect 1:156)

6:17 his: αὐτοῦ AB. and almost all cursives, Cop. and other Vv., And., Are., cat., Prim.; αὐτῶν C. 38. Vulg., Syr. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20) his: Tisch. αὐτῶν, the others αὐτοῦ. (Prospect 1:156) his: The Sinai MS., the palimpsest of Paris, and the excellent Vatican cursive, conventionally known as 38, with the Vulgate and Syriac, read αὐτῶν, "their:" which admirably fits in with the context. (Lect. on Rev., p.147) his: The Vulgate with good authority, as we have seen, has "their" wrath (ipsorum, not ipsius). (Lect. on Rev., p.146) his: "their" or "his" wrath in 17 is a nice question, for high authorities support each, as in the case of "them" or "his" in 8; and it does seem singular that the Revisers do not notice the alternative in their margin. (Bible Treasury 14:143)

7:1 [And]: καί is omitted by AC., Vulg., Cop., Prim.; contrary to B. and the rest of the MSS., Vv., and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20)

[And]: Rec. Gr. Kn. read καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα, Sz. κ. μ. τοῦτο, and later edd. μετὰ τοῦτο, omitting καί. (Prospect 1:156)

[And]: the omission of "and" is a strong measure, resting on A C and the Vulgate against all other authority; and here again no notice in the margin [of the RV]. (Bible Treasury 14:159)

this: τοῦτο ABC., about forty cursives, Compl., Cop., Are., cat.; ταῦτα very many mss. and most Vv., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20) this: Rec. Gr. Kn. read καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα, Sz. κ. μ. τοῦτο, and later edd. μετὰ τοῦτο, omitting καί. (Prospect 1:156)

this . . . upon: "This," not "these things," is right. "At" instead of "upon" as at the end of this verse, is questionable. (Bible Treasury 14:159)

I saw: ἶδον 7. 14. 32. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20) of the earth: τῆς γῆς 2nd, omitted by 38. Vulg., mss., Cop., Ar.^c, &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20) wind: ὁ ἀν. C. 14. 26. 30. 93. 95. 98. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20) on the earth . . . the: A. omits ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς and τῆς before θ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20)

nor: C. has μή for the first μήτε. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20) any: τι δ. BC. and near forty mss., Vulg., Cop., Ar., Prim.; πάν many cursives; δένδρου A. (-ων Syr., Æth.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20) any: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. πάν δ., others τι δ. (Prospect 1:156)

7:2 I saw: ἶδον ABC. 7. 14. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20) rising up: ἀναβαίνοντα ABC., upwards of forty mss., Compl., Orig., And., Are., cat.; -βάντα not many mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20) rising up: Rec. ἀναβάντα, the edd. ἀναβαίνοντα. (Prospect 1:156) the east: ἀνατολῶν A. 90. BC., and the rest -ης (98. prefixing τῆς). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20) the east: Ln. and Tisch. ἀνατολῶν, others ἀνατολῆς. (Prospect 1:156) the east: [In the RV] we have "sunrising" for "east." (Bible Treasury 14:159)

he cried: ἐκραξεν BC. and most others, -ξεν A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20)

7:3 Hurt: ἀδικήσατε Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20)

nor . . . nor: μήτε BC. and almost all others, Orig., &c.; καί A. 37.

41. 42. Vulg., Cop. (twice). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20) nor . . . nor: Ln. καὶ τ. θ., others μήτε. (Prospect 1:156) till: ἄχρι AC. 12. Orig; ἄχρις οὗ B. and most mss. (a few ἄν). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20) till: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. ἄχρις οὗ, others ἄχρι σφ. (Prospect 1:156)

we have sealed: σφραγίζ. Er., Steph. (Arm. = -σω.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20)

our: For ἡμῶν some read μου, others omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20) on: [In the RV] "in" is changed rightly to "on." (Bible Treasury 14:159)

7:4 And I heard the number of the sealed: A. omits κ. ἡκ. τ. αρ. τ. ἐσφ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20) the number: τῶν ἀριθμῶν 7. 28. Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20) a hundred and forty-four: ἐκ. καὶ τ. C., ten cursives, Compl. A. and most omit καί. B. and very many, Orig., ρμδ' (seven cursives omit). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20) sealed: ἐσφραγισμένοι AC. and most; -νων B., nineteen mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20) sons: "children," not "sons," is still the word [in the RV] (Bible Treasury 14:159)

7:5-8 [whole passage]: The orthography differs in the uncials, cursives, Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20) twelve: δώδεκα AC. with many cursives, Compl., And., Are., cat.: ιβ' B. very many mss., Orig. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20) thousand sealed/thousand: ἐσφραγισμένοι (-ων B. and near twenty-five mss.) twice, ABC., about forty mss., Harl., * Cop., Æth., Syr., Ar.^c; twelve times, many cursives (some differ in number and form). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20) thousand sealed/thousand: A. C. and more than thirty other MSS. want ἐσφραγισμένοι, in ten places (i.e. in all save the first and last), and are followed by Ln. and Tisch. Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. insert, as does Treg. hesitatingly; Matthiae ἐσφραγισμένοι in the first and last. (Prospect 1:156)

Revelation Notes

thousand λ : In 5-8 [in the RV] “sealed” disappears rightly, save at the beginning and at the end. (Bible Treasury 14:159)

7:5 Gad: For Γάδ 9. 13. 16. &c., read Δάν; contrary to the rest, and Orig., And., Are., expressly. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20)

7:6 twelve thousand λ : [See note to Rev. 7:5-8]

7:7 twelve thousand λ : [See note to Rev. 7:5-8]

7:8 twelve thousand λ : [See note to Rev. 7:5-8]

7:9 these things . . . out of every nation . . . standing: “these things” we find [in the RV] correctly for “this”; “out of every nation”; and “standing.” (Bible Treasury 14:159)

I saw: ἰδ. AB. 7. 14.; 98. omits. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20) and, behold, a great multitude: καὶ ἰδοὺ (C. omits) ὄχλος πολὺς BC. and all other mss., Syr., Arr., And., Are., cat., Tich.; ὄχλον πολὺν A., Vulg., Cop., Æth., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20) and, behold, a great multitude: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. κ. ἰδοὺ ὄχλος π., Tisch. omits ἰδοὺ, Treg. inserts it with doubt, and Ln. drops καὶ, and reads ὄχλον π. (Prospect 1:156) which: For δὲ A. has καί. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.20) could: ἑδ. ABC., nineteen cursives, Compl., Are., cat.; ἡδ. most cursives, And. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.21) number λ : αὐτὸν AC. with most mss.; but B. and about thirty cursives, Compl., And., Are., cat., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.21) and tribes: Er. omits καὶ φυλῶν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.21) standing: ἐστῶτες A. and most mss.: -τας B., twenty four mss.; -τῶν C. 38.; -τα 11. 19. 93. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.21) standing: Matthiae ἐστῶτας and φοίνικας. (Prospect 1:156) before: ἐνώπιον τ. θ. A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.21) clothed with: περιβεβλημένων (-ας 95.) ABC., upwards of thirty-five mss., Are., cat.; -νοι many cursives and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.21) clothed with: Rec. περιβεβλημένοι, but the edd. περιβεβλημένους. (Prospect 1:156) palms: φοίνικες AC., many mss. and Vv., And.; -κας B., thirty-six mss., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.21)

7:10 they cry: κράζουσιν ABC., forty-four cursives (κράξουσι 87.), Compl., Vv.; -οντες many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.21)

they cry: Rec. κράζοντες, the edd. κράζουσι. (Prospect 1:156)

they cry: [In the RV] it is “they cry,” not “cried.” (Bible Treasury 14:159) to our God that sitteth on the throne: τοῦ θεοῦ A., Cop. (τῷ κ. ἐπὶ τ. θ. τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμ. Er.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.21) the throne: τῷ θρ. AC., about thirty mss., And., Are., cat.; τοῦ θρ. B. with very many cursives. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.21) the throne: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. τοῦ θρόνου — Matthiae, Ln. Tisch. and Treg τῷ θρόνῳ. (Prospect 1:156)

7:11 stood: ἐσ. or ἐστήκεισαν (-κισαν) C. with more than twelve cursives; εἰσ. or εἰστήκεισαν A. (ιστ.), B. (κησαν), 7. 14. 21. 29. (30. has εἰ before ἐστ.) 31. 47. 48. 49. 50. 87. 90. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. Compl.; ἐστήκεισαν many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.21) stood: The older edd. ἐστήκεισαν, the modern are divided between ἐσ- and εἰστήκεισαν. (Prospect 1:157) fell: ἔπεσαν AC., many cursives, Er.; -σον B. with most mss., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.21)

λ throne: B. and more than twenty-five mss. add αὐτοῦ after the 2nd θρ., contrary to AC. and most. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.21) faces: τὰ πρ. ABC., forty-three mss., Compl., Vulg., Syr., Æth., Arm., Arr., Are., cat., Prim.; πρόσωπον many cursives, Cop., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.21) faces: Rec. τὸ πρόσωπον, the edd. τὰ πρ. (Prospect 1:157)

7:12 and the wisdom: A. omits καὶ ἡ σοφία. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.21) the: 95. Compl., omit ἡ before ισχύς. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.21)

[Amen.]: C. 28. 25. omit ἀμήν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.21)

[Amen.]: Rec. Gr. and Sz. add at the end ἀμήν, but Tisch and Treg. omit it. Kn. brackets the word. (Prospect 1:157)

7:13 answered: ἀποκρίθη Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22)

are clothed with: . . . when Mr. [Tregelles] in 1844, rendered οἱ περιβεβλημένοι, “which are arrayed,” he was right, as was the Authorised Version before him: now that, in 1848, he renders it “that have been arrayed,” he is wrong. Such inaccuracies require to be met firmly; for though, in some cases, they may not affect the interpretation of the book, in others they do, as e.g. in Rev. 9:14 and 19:7. (Prospect 1:87)

λ white: C. 28. omit 2nd τάς. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22) are they: 12. Er., omit εἰσίν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22)

7:14 I said: ἔρηκα AC., very many mss.; εἶπον B., thirty-seven cursives, Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22)

My: μου, omitted by A., many cursives, Æth., Prim., is read after κύριε by BC. and most mss., Compl., Vulg., Cop., Syr., Ar.^p, Slav. mss., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22)

My: Rec. and Tisch. omit μου after κύριε, (Ln. with brackets), the others add. (Prospect 1:157) come out of the great tribulation: [In the RV] it is rightly “come out of the great tribulation.” (Bible Treasury 14:159) out of the: ἐκ τ. θλ. τ. μ. B. and all others, And., Are., cat.; ἀπὸ θλ. μ. A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22) out of the: Ln. ἀπὸ θλ. μ., the rest ἐκ τ. θλ. τ. μ. (Prospect 1:157) out of the: Next, in the edition of 1844 [of Tregelles], “out of the great tribulation” is given unhesitatingly as the force of the words ἐκ τῆς θ. τῆς μ. Lachmann alone, I believe, reads ἀπὸ θ. μ. But Mr. T. properly adhered to the more usual and best supported text, and he translated accordingly. In 1848, he brackets the definite article, and appends a note to this effect: “The articles in this passage are of doubtful authority; but, even if genuine, little could be rested on the insertion; for θλίψις, like ὑπομονή, and all similar words, would take the article in Greek, where we should not insert it in English.” Now, first as to the doubt, is the Alexandrine MS. to invalidate the mass of consenting authority which is in favour of the received text? Does Mr. T. himself permit it to weigh so strongly elsewhere? I find, on the contrary, that he rejects its readings in about ten cases in this very chapter (as in omitting τῆς before θαλ - δένδρον - ἀνατολῶν - καὶ - the omission of καὶ ἡ κ. τ. ἀ. τ. ἐσφ - ὄχλον πολὺν καὶ - ἐπὶ - τοῦ θ - the omission of καὶ ἡ σ - μῆ). Why should A impugn the text in the present instance? This reading is singled out as suspicious, though resting on as solid a basis as the other ten which have escaped his brackets. — But, not content with this, Mr. T. seems resolved, by his next words, to get rid of his own emendation of 1844: “Even if genuine,” says he, “little could be rested on the insertion.” His reason is, that θλίψις would take the article in Greek, where we should not insert it in English. What has this to do with the question here, which is, Would this phrase be fairly Englished by “great tribulation?” Is there no meaning, no certainty, in the insertion or omission of the article? I answer, without the smallest hesitation, that the drift of the editor’s note is clearly erroneous. That there are cases where θ, and all words capable of an abstract sense, take the article in Greek, where the corresponding English terms do not, is certain. Compare Rom. 5:3, 12:12, where ἡ θ. and τῇ θ. mean, I suppose, the abstract thing, tribulation, and therefore the article is necessary. The only other case where the article is or can be used with θ. is when there is a reference to some tribulation (or tribulations), rendered specific by previous mention, or otherwise. If neither be the case, the word is invariably anarthrous, as in Matt. 13:21; 24:9,21; Mark 4:17; 13:9; John 15:33; Acts 7:11; 14:22; 20:23; Rom. 2:9; 8:35; &c. But in Matt. 24:29, θ. necessarily becomes a definite object — that particular tribulation which had been named previously, as also Mark 13:24. In John 16, the joy and the sorrow are special, and therefore demand the article; and so the reader may pursue the point throughout Scripture. I admit, therefore, that ἡ θλίψις may, and in some cases does, mean “tribulation,” because the term is used abstractedly in its full extent. But I affirm that ἡ μεγάλη θλίψις, or ἡ θ. ἡ μ., does not, and cannot, mean any thing but “the great tribulation,” because the adjunct μεγάλη of necessity destroys the abstractness of the thought, and no other case of the employment of the article is admissible, save that of a certain defined tribulation — in this instance, “the GREAT tribulation.” (The Prospect 1:87,88)

out of the: . . . the true reading here is “They which come out of the great tribulation.” The omission of the article is wrong in the common text, and must be given in English to represent fairly the sense given by the best authorities. It is not always so; but it is needless to say that there are definite means of judging, and there is no question at all about its necessity here. To those who know these matters this is a ruled point, not without the effort of prejudice in some to resist the conclusion, but in vain. (Bible Treasury N9:253-254) out of the: Here let me correct what I presume must have been a very unintentional error in our common version. It is universally admitted by every one entitled to speak with weight on such a point, that the true, plain, and only meaning of the text is “out of the great tribulation.” The difference is immense. If I simply look at the throng, and say, “They come out of great tribulation,” I may spiritualize and say, “Here is the Church: they have always been in great tribulation in the world, and will emerge from it at last into heavenly glory.” The moment you render it as it ought to be — “the great tribulation,” this vague way of understanding it drops as inapplicable. (Lectures on the Second Coming, p.272) they washed: ἐπλάτυναν 2. 9. 13.* 29. 30. 41. 42. 50. 93. 94. 95. 97. 98. Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22) them: αὐτάς after ἐλ. A. 10. 12. 19. 37. 46. 49. 91. 96. Compl., Vulg., Cop., Syr., Ar.^p; στολὰς αὐτῶν (2 prefixing τάς) many cursives, Rec.; but B., more than thirty mss., omit (28. κ. ἐλ. τ. στ. α. κ. ἐλ. α.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22) them: Rec. ἐλεύκαναν στολὰς αὐτῶν, Gr. Sz. Ln. and Treg. (with brackets) ἐλεύκ. αὐτάς. Tisch. omits altogether. (Prospect 1:157)

7:15 on the throne: ἐπὶ τοῦ θρ. A. and most cursives, And.; ἐπὶ τῷ θρ. B., more than thirty mss., Compl., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22) on the throne: Matthiae ἐπὶ τῷ θρ. Others read ἐπὶ τοῦ θρ. (Prospect 1:157) shall tabernacle over: “dwell among” is very properly changed [in the RV] into “shall spread his tabernacle over.” (Bible Treasury 14:159)

7:16 no more: The first ἐτι is omitted by 36. Vulg.; and the second by 34. 35. 36. 38. 40. 87. Er., many Vv. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22)

neither . . . nor: The first οὐδέ has μή added by A. 14. 92.; the second has οὐ added by B. and near forty mss., Compl., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22) neither . . . nor: Matthiae οὐδὲ οὐ μὴ π. Others οὐδὲ μὴ π. (Prospect 1:157) fall: πέσει Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22)

fall: “strike” or “fall” is better than “light.” (Bible Treasury 14:159)

7:17 [center of verse] . . . every tear: we have very literally [in the RV] “be their shepherd and shall guide them unto fountains of waters of life,” as also “every tear.” (Bible Treasury 14:159)

shall tend . . . shall lead: More than twenty-seven mss. read ποιμαίνει and ὁδηγεῖ; contrary to AB., most mss., Vv., and Ff., which support the common text ποιμανεῖ and ὁδηγήσει. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22) shall tend . . . shall lead: Matthiae reads ποιμαίνει and ὁδηγεῖ, the rest ποιμανεῖ and ὁδηγήσει. (Prospect 1:157) of life: ζωῆς AB., most cursives, Compl., Vulg., Æth., Arm., Ar.^c; ζώσας many mss., and perhaps Cop., Syr. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22) of life: Rec. ζώσας ἀπὸ, the edd. ζωῆς ἐκ. (Prospect 1:157) and God shall wipe away every tear from their eyes: 38. Er., omit καὶ ἐξαλ... αὐτῶν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22) from: ἐκ ABC., thirty-five mss., Compl., Are., cat.; ἀπὸ many cursives, and seemingly Cop., Syr. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22)

8:1 when: ὅταν AC.; ὅτε B. and the rest (98. omits), And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22) when: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. ὅτε . . . Ln. Tisch. and Treg. ὅταν. (Prospect 1:157)

Λ opened: [See note to Rev. 6:3]

was: “Followed” in 8:1 seems taken from the Authorised Version of 7. (Bible Treasury 14:159) half an hour: ἡμίωρον AC. 97.; -ριον B. and the rest, And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22) half an hour: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. . . . ἡμίωριον, Ln. Tisch. and Treg. . . . ἡμίωρον. (Prospect 1:157)

8:2 I saw: ἴδ. ABC., 7. 14. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22)

the: 26. omits τούς, Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22) stand: [In the RV] “stand” is right, not “stood.” (Bible Treasury 14:159) were given: ἐδόθη A. 30. 87. 93. 95. 96. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22)

8:3 at: The marginal “at” [in the RV], as in the text of the Authorised Version, seems more suitable than “over” the altar. (Bible Treasury 14:159)

the altar: τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου BC. (τοῦ -ριον), thirty-eight mss., Compl., And., Are., cat.; τὸ -ον A. and very many. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22) the altar: Tisch. ἐπὶ τοῦ θ., the others ἐπὶ τὸ θ. (Prospect 1:157)

a golden censer: λίβανον τὸ χρ. C. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22)

he should give: δώσει AC. and many others; δώσῃ B. and the mass (some δῶ). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22)

he should give: Ln. and Tisch. δώσει, others δώσῃ. “Add” or “put it to,” and “offer it with,” are natural renderings. (Prospect 1:157) give efficacy to: There can be no doubt that the Rhemish version (“of the Prayers”), which agrees with the common editions of the Vulgate, is in flagrant error. But it may be fairly questioned whether the Hieronymian text be chargeable with that mistake in verse 3. At least, the best MS. commonly known as the Amiatine or Laurentian, omits the preposition de, and translates here as in Rev. 11:3, with a dative following a verb. Such also is the text adopted by Lachmann. Possibly we may account for the insertion of de here from some transcribers assimilating the phrase with “de orationibus,” in the following verse, though even there it is a faulty rendering. But while the Authorized Version is quite exact in verse 4, and incomparably better than the Rhemish in verse 3, I may be permitted to suggest to Mr. Stuart that δίδωμι in the active voice, followed only by the indirect complement, seems to have a peculiar force. Two occurrences are found in the Revelation (chap. 8:3 and 11:3), in both of which I conceive it means to give power, or efficacy. This indeed is allowed in the Authorized Version as to the latter passage, but it is equally true of the former, the construction being the same and the sense thereby perfect in each. Translators have contended for a dative of concomitance, of circumstance, or of advantage, and thus have leaned to “with,” “to,” or “for.” But that which I believe to be the true one was published by a deeply taught servant of Christ more than twenty years ago. I adopted it in a version of Revelation which appeared in 1849, and I find it again in a very recent and exact German version of the New Testament (Elberfeld, 1855). Of course, the emendation, if well-founded, negatives the Romish idea of intrinsically meritorious prayers yet more than the ordinary renderings. (Christian Annotator 3:118) give efficacy to: both the Revised Version and Authorised Version, miss the force of δώσει here. The Authorised Version might have drawn it from their own rendering of chap. 11:3, though efficacy is perhaps better than power, especially here. (Bible Treasury 14:159) give efficacy to: Not a word have the Americans [correctors of the RV] to say of ch. 8:3, though they might have seen the technical force of δ. admitted in the Authorised Version of ch. 11:3, which the Revisers have now blotted out everywhere in the book — i.e. give power, or render effectual. All the previous versions differ, and all are as wrong, it appears to me. (Bible Treasury 15:192)

the saints: The supply of the ellipse by Lyra and Corn. a Lap. and by Beza is erroneous; and “it” or nothing is too vague. “The saints” is correct. (Bible Treasury 14:159-160)

8:4 incense Λ : “which came” should be dropt. (Bible Treasury 14:160)

8:5 took . . . the . . . [end of verse]: In εἰληθεν here as in 5:7 one may be slow to believe that the perfect does not involve a continuance which the aorist does not express; but it is hard to say more than “took” as the Authorised and Revised Versions. But “the” fire is right. The order of the words at the end is not certain. (Bible Treasury 14:160) the censer . . . it: τὸ λ. and αὐτό 7. 33. 34. Er. (not Rec.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22) cast: For ἔβ. ἔλαβον A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22)

thunders and lightnings and voices: βρ. κ. ἄστ. κ. φ. A. and many more, Cop., Syr.; βρ. κ. φ. κ. ἄ. B., very many mss., Vulg., Arm., Ar.^c, Prim.; φ. κ. β. κ. ἄ. many cursives, Ar.^p, And., Tich. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22) thunders and lightnings and voices: Modern edd. βρ. κ. ἄστ. κ. φ., and not φ. κ. βρ. κ. ἄστ., as in Rec. Gr. (Prospect 1:157)

8:6 that had: οἱ ἔχ. AB., most mss., Compl., And., Are., cat.; Rec. with many mss. omits. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.22-23) that had: Rec. omits οἱ before ἔχοντες, the others insert it. (Prospect 1:157) themselves: αὐτούς A., εἰντ. B. and the rest. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.23) themselves: Ln. reads αὐτοὺς, rather than εἰντοὺς, which most prefer. (Prospect 1:157)

8:7 first χ : ἀγγελος is added by many mss., Vulg., Cop., &c., And., Prim.; contrary to AB. and most others, Compl., Harl. Tol.*, Syr., Ar.^p, Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.23)

first χ : Rec. and Kn. (in brackets) ἀγγελος. (Prospect 1:157) first Λ . . . and the third of the earth was burnt up: “And the first” is better than “The first angel,” which was assimilated to 8, 10, and 12. “And the third part of the earth was burnt up,” should be added as in the Revised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:160) with: ἐν before αἰμ. (omitted by many mss., Rec., Demid., Cop., Syr., Tich.) is read by AB. and most cursives, Compl., Vulg. (Am. Fuld. Lipss.), And., Are., cat., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.23) with: Rec. omits ἐν, and καὶ τὸ τρίτον τῆς γῆς κατεκάη, which the rest add. (Prospect 1:157) and the third of the earth was burnt up: καὶ τὸ τρ. τῆς γ. κατεκάη AB., forty-five mss., Compl., Vulg., Syr., Arm., Æth., And., Are., cat. Rec. omits with many mss., Cop., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.23) and the third of the trees was burnt up: B.* and many others, Compl. Æth., omit κ. τὸ τρ. τ. δ. κατ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.23)

8:8 with fire: πυρί A., very many mss., Vulg., Cop., Syr., &c., And. B. and thirty-five mss., Compl., Are., cat., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.23)

with fire: Matthiae omits πυρί. (Prospect 1:157)

8:9 that: τῶν A. and most mss.; omitted by B., twenty-five mss., Compl., Er., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.23-24)

that: Matthiae omits τῶν after κτ. (Prospect 1:157) in the sea: 12. Er., Am. Harl., Arm., Slav., omit ἐν τῇ θαλ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.24) were destroyed: διεφθάρσαν A., nine mss., Compl.; -ρη B. and most, Are., cat.; -ρησεν Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.24) were destroyed: Rec. Gr. Sz. διεφθάρη, the rest διεφθάρσαν. (Prospect 1:157)

8:10 torch: it should be as a “torch.” (Bible Treasury 14:160) and upon the fountains of the waters: καὶ ἐπὶ τ. π. τῶν (B. with most mss., Compl., And., Are., cat.; contrary to many mss.) ὑδάτων omitted by A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.24) the waters: Rec. and Treg. omit τῶν before ὑδάτων. The others have it. (Prospect 1:157)

8:11 Λ Wormwood: ὁ before ἄψ. (ἄψ. 31. 87. 93. 97.) AB. with most, Compl., Are., cat.; contrary to many mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.24)

Λ Wormwood: Rec. omits ὁ before Ἄψινθος and τῶν before ἄνθ. (Prospect 1:157) became: ἐγένετο AB. and the mass, Compl., all Vv., And., Are., cat.: γίνεται is supported by few, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.24) became: Rec. Gr., Kn. and Sz. read γίνεται, Matthiae, Ln. Tisch. and Treg. ἐγένετο. (Prospect 1:157)

the: τῶν ἄνθ. AB., most mss., Compl., And., Are., cat.; contrary to a few mss., Rec., which omit τῶν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.24) of the waters: Er., Steph., (not Rec.) omit τῶν ὑδάτων; ἐπὶ τ. ὑδ. A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.24)

8:12 the day should not shine for the third thereof: ἡ ἡμ. μὴ φανῇ (18. 38. 87. οὐκ ἐφαίνεν; many mss. φαίνη, contrary to AB., most mss.) τὸ τρίτον (τετάρτον A.) αὐτῆς (two mss. omit τὸ τρ. αὐτ., and six mss. with Cop. read αὐτῶν) A. and many mss.; τὸ τρ. αὐτ. μὴ φανῇ ἡ ἡμ. κ. B. (with 98 omitting ἡ), about thirty-four mss., Vulg., Cop. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.24) the day should not shine for the third thereof: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. φαίνη, Ln. Tisch. and Treg. φάνη. (Prospect 1:157)

8:13 eagle: ἀετοῦ AB. with most cursives, Compl., Vulg., Æth., Syr. Arm. (marg.), &c.; ἀγγέλου many mss., Arr., &c.; ἀγγ. ὡς ἀετ. 13. Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.24)

eagle: Rec. has ἀγγέλου, the edd. ἀετοῦ. (Prospect 1:157) eagle: It was an eagle, I believe, which John saw here, an angel in Rev. 14:6, to which our verse may have been assimilated, if the two words were not confounded by mere carelessness. . . Mr. [Elliott] refers after Zullig to the “learned critic” Wolf’s preference of the common text. I doubt that he would have cited such an auxiliary, if he had been aware that the main object of the Curae Philol. seems to be the maintenance of the received readings against the best authorities, and especially in opposition to Bengel. Besides, he is far from positive in this, though greatly suspecting ἀετοῦ. “Quod si tamen aquilae mentio facta censeri debeat, malim omnino cum Seideliano codice et Primasio legere ἀγγέλου ὡς αἰετοῦ πετωμένου." — (C.P., vol v. p. 514) (Lect. on Rev., p.183) eagle: [In the RV] the important variant "eagle" on ample authority displaces "angel." (Bible Treasury 14:160) flying: πετομ. A., twenty-five mss., Compl., And., Are., cat.; -ωμ.

B. and very many mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.24) flying: [Rec. has] πετωμένου, where [the edd.] read πετομ.

(Prospect 1:157)

mid-heaven: μεσουρανίσματι Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.24) loud, . . . Woe: To μεγ. τρίς is added by 5. 7. 10. 28. 37. 49. 91.

96. Compl.; and οὐαί is omitted by Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.24) to those that dwell: τοῖς κατοικοῦσιν A. and most mss., Are., cat.; τοῖς κατοικοῦντας B. and more than thirty mss. (Rev. of John, 1860,

p.24)

three: τρεῶν Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.24)

9:1 I saw: ἴδ. AB. 7. 14. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.24) fallen . . . of the abyss: "fallen" is right, not "fall," as in Authorised Version, a fault of rendering rather than of reading, for πίπτοντα is given by not even one cursive. Pit "of the abyss" is also better; and so throughout. (Bible Treasury 14:160)

9:2 And he opened the pit of the abyss: κ. ἦν. τὸ φ. τ. ἀβ., omitted by
B. and twenty-eight mss., Am. Harl. Tol.*, Cop., Æth., Arm.(Ven.), Are., cat., is attested by A. and most mss., Vulg. (Fuld. Lips.), Syr.,
&c., And., Tich. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.24)

And he opened the pit of the abyss: Matthiae omits καὶ ἦν. τὸ φρ.
τῆς αβ. (Prospect 1:157) out of the pit as the smoke: 35. 41. 87. (Er.) omit ἐκ τ. φ. ὡς κ. (A. omitting ὡς). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.24) great: For μεγάλης, with A. and very many mss., Vulg., Cop., &c., Tich., καιομένης is read by B., thirty-five mss., Compl., Syr., Ar.^p, &c., Are., cat., Vic.; while five mss., Slav.^{3,4} have καιομ. μεγ.

(Rev. of John, 1860, p.24)

great: [Matthiae] reads καιμ. καιομένης instead of μεγ. The others agree with Rec. (Prospect 1:157) was darkened: ἐσκοτίσθη B. and most mss., And., Are., cat.; -τῶθη

A. 12. 14. 92. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.24) was darkened: Ln. and Tisch. ἐσκοτῶθη, others ἐσκοτίσθη. (Prospect 1:157)

9:4 it was said: ἐβλήθη A. and the great mass; -ίθη 28.; -ήθη B. 87. and some others (αὐτοῖς B. here as in verse 3, 7. 87.) (Rev. of John, 1860, said . . . which: [In the RV] "said" is right, and "such" represents οἷτινες better than the Authorised Version, as being character and not mere fact. (Bible Treasury 14:160)
p.24)

they should . . . hurt: ἀδικησοῦσιν A. 36. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.24)

they should . . . hurt: Ln. and Tisch. prefer ἀδικήσουσιν to the more usual form ἀδικήσωσι. (Prospect 1:157) men: μόνους is added by many cursives, Vulg., Arm.; contrary to AB. and more than thirty mss., Er., Cop., Syr., Arr. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.24)

men: Rec. ἀ. μόνους, the edd. reject the latter. (Prospect 1:157) not: Er. omits οὐκ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.24) of God: τοῦ θεοῦ is wanting in 12. 17. 28. 47. Er., Harl. Arm.*

(Rev. of John, 1860, p.24-25)

their: αὐτῶν is omitted by A. 12. 28. Er., Am. Harl. Tol.*; but given by B. and almost all mss. and Vv. (Fuld. Demid. Lipss.), &c.
(Rev. of John, 1860, p.25)

their: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. and Treg. (in brackets) read αὐτῶν.
(Prospect 1:157)

9:5 them: αὐτοῖς A. 12. Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.25) them: Ln. αὐτοῖς, where others αὐταῖς. (Prospect 1:157) should be tormented: βασανισθήσονται A. 12. 36. 38. (-σονται Er.) Am. Fuld. Lips.^{5,6} &c.; contrary to B. and most, Rec. (7. Compl., -σωσι), which have -θῶσι. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.25) should be tormented: The older edd. βασανισθῶσι, the more modern βασανισθήσονται. (Prospect 1:157)

strieth: πλήξη eighteen mss., Compl., And. (Rev. of John, 1860,
p.25)

9:6 [whole verse]: the force is given more [in the RV] (Bible Treasury 14:160)

shall . . . seek: ζητοῦσιν ten cursives, Compl., *Harl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.25)

shall . . . find: εὑρωσιν A. 12. 17. 28. 34. 35. 46. 49. 87. 92.
*Harl. for εὐρήσουσιν, with B., the mass, Rec. (six having -σωσιν).
(Rev. of John, 1860, p.25)

shall . . . find: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. εὐρήσουσιν, where Ln. Tisch. and Treg. have εὑρωσιν. (Prospect 1:157) in no wise: οὐ μή AB. and most mss., And., Are., cat.; οὐχ many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.25) in no wise: Rec. οὐχ, the edd. οὐ μή. (Prospect 1:157) death . . . from them: ὁ θ. (7. Ar.^p, omit) ἀπ' αὐτ. ὁ θ. B., twenty-nine mss., Compl., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.25) fleeth: φεύγει A. 12. 17. 36. 38. Er.; φεύζεται B., the mass, Rec., Vulg., Cop., Syr., &c., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.25) fleeth: Ln. Tisch. and Treg. have . . . φεύζεται where the others have φεύγει. (Prospect 1:157)

9:7 likenesses: ὁμοιώματα ἱππ. A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.25) likenesses: why not put "shapes" in the margin, if it must be given, and have "likenesses" in the text of 7? "Was" is right; and again in the end of 9. (Bible Treasury 14:160) prepared: ἡτοιμασμένα Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.25) crowns like gold: ὅμοιοι χρυσοῖ A., many mss. and Vv., Rec.; χρυσοῖ B., thirty-nine mss., Compl., Ar.^p, Slav.⁴, Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.25)

crowns like gold: Gr. Kn. and Sz. χρυσοῖ, Rec. &c. ὅμοιοι χρυσοῖ.
(Prospect 1:157)

crowns like gold: The Complutensian, Griesbach, and Scholz have χρυσοῖ (not without considerable authority), but the true text is "like gold" as in the Authorised and Revised Versions. (Bible Treasury 14:160)

9:8 they had: εἶχαν A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.25)

9:9 was: [See note to Rev. 9:6]

9:10 have . . . stings: "have," not "had"; also the true text as in the Complutensian is "and stings" &c., as in the Revised Version, according to the best authorities. (Bible Treasury 14:160)

like: ὁμοιοῖς A. 14. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.25) like: Rec. Gr. Kn. κέν. ἦν ἐν τ. οὐρ. αὐτ. κ. ἡ ἐξ. Sz. Ln. Tisch. and Treg. for ἦν read καί. (Prospect 1:157) stings; and . . . was: κέντρα καὶ AB. and near thirty-five mss., Syr., Cop., Ar.^p, Are., cat.; κέντρα ἦν many cursives, of which ἦν is omitted by 34. 36. 46. Am. Tol., And., Tich. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.25-26) in their tails: ἐν τ. οὐρ. αὐτ. AB. and very many mss., &c.; but very many add καί. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.26) their power: ἡ ἐξ. αὐτ. A. 17. 34. 35. 36. 46. Vulg., Syr., Cop., Ar.^p, Tich.; but B. and very many, Compl., Are., cat., give ἐξουσίαν ἐχουσιν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.26)

their power: Matthiae reads ἐξουσίαν ἐχουσιν. (Prospect 1:157) to hurt: For ἁδ. with A. and most, And., Are., cat., B., and many cursives, have τοῦ ἁδ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.26) to hurt: Sz. reads τοῦ ἁδ. (Prospect 1:157)

9:11 The have a king over them, the angel: "They have over them as king the angel" &c. is the correct rendering. (Bible Treasury 14:160)

They have: ἔχουσιν A., other mss., Rec., to which many prefix καὶ (others καὶ εἶχον); ἔχουσαι B., thirty-two mss. (32. adding καὶ), Compl., Are., cat., Tich. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.26)

They have: Rec καὶ ἔχ. Gr. Kn. Ln. and Treg. ἔχουσιν, Sz. and Tisch. ἔχουσαι. (Prospect 1:157)

a king over them: ἐ. αὐτ. β. A. and most, Rec.; β. ἐ. αὐτ. B. more than twenty-six mss., Compl., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.26)

a king over them: The older edd. ἐφ' αὐτ., later edd. ἐπ' αὐτ. (Prospect 1:157) the: τὸν before ἁγ. A. (ἄρχοντα τῆς ἁβ. τὸν ἁγ.) and very many mss.; omitted by B. and about twenty-six mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.26)

Abaddon: B. Ἀββααδδών, others variously. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.26) and in: ἐν δέ B. and about thirty-five mss., Compl., Vulg., Syr., And., Are., cat., Prim.; καὶ ἐν A. very many others, Rec., Æth., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.26) and in: For καὶ ἐν Matthiae has ἐν δὲ τῇ. (Prospect 1:157)

Apollyon: Ἀπολλύων is translated in the Lat. and Arm. Vv. (=destroyer), Compl. adds ὁ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.26)

9:12 The first: [In the RV] "the first" woe is right. (Bible Treasury 14:160) come: ἔρχεται A. and more than twenty-six mss., Compl. Cop.; -χονται B., probably most, Rec., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.26) come: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. ἔρχονται, Matthiae, Ln. Tisch. and Treg. ἔρχεται. (Prospect 1:157) more: ἐπὶ is omitted by 49. 97. Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.26)

after these things: B. and very many others put μετὰ τ. after καὶ of verse 13. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.26)

9:13 four: A. 28. want τεσσάρων, and so Am. Fuld. Harl. Tol. Lips.⁵ Cop., Syr., Æth., Arr.; contrary to B. and the mass, Vulg. (Demid. Lips.^{4,6}), And., Are., cat., Cyp., Prim., Tich. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.26) four: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. read and Ln. and Tisch. omit τεσσάρων. Treg. brackets the word. (Prospect 1:157) four: the omission of "four" is questionable (Bible Treasury 14:160) that is: τοῦ before ἐν is omitted by 28. Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.26)

9:14 saying: λέγοντος B., twenty-four mss., Are., cat.; λέγοντα A.; λέγων 40.; λέγουσαν very many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.26) saying: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. and Treg. λέγουσαν, Ln. and Tisch. λέγοντα, and Matthiae λέγοντος. (Prospect 1:157)

Λ saying . . . at: "one" saying seems uncalled for, even on the critical reading; but "at," not "in." (Bible Treasury 14:160)

sixth: A. omits ἕκτω. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.26) that had: ὁ ἔχων AB. and most others, Compl.; ὁ εἶχε many mss., Rec., Are., cat., some (as 87.) τῷ ἔχοντι. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.26) that had: Rec. δς εἶχε, the edd. ὁ ἔχων. (Prospect 1:157) angels . . . angels: The same friend who directed Mr. E.'s attention to Griesbach's citation of ἀνέμους and ἀνεμοὶ from 30 (Cod. Guelf. of the fourteenth century) for ἀγγ. in verses 14,15, recalls this variation to me. It is also supported by 98 (Cod. Bodl. Can. of the sixteenth century). But I agree with the editors in general that it is barely worth a notice. (Lect. on Rev., p.198)

Euphrates: B. Ἐφ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.26)

9:15 angels: [See note to Rev. 9:14] were loosed: A. ἐλυπήθησαν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.26)

the: [The RV has] "the" hour, &c. (Bible Treasury 14:160) for the hour and day and month and year: Mr. Faber says in a note to page 420 of his Sacred Calendar, ii., "The many erroneous versions of this passage have arisen entirely from improper punctuation. I read the original Greek, pointed as follows: Καὶ ἐλύθησαν οἱ τέσσαρες ἄγγελοι, οἱ ἡτοιμασμένοι εἰς τὴν ὥραν, καὶ ἡμέραν καὶ μῆνα καὶ ἐνιαυτὸν, ἵνα κ. τ. λ. The accusatives, ἡμέραν and μῆνα and ἐνιαυτὸν, I consider as denoting continuance of time, and as depending, not upon the preposition εἰς, but upon the verb ἐλύθησαν." Hence he would render, "And the four angels, who had been prepared unto the appointed season [which would require, rather καιρόν than ὥραν] were loosed during both a day, and a month, and a year, in order," &c. Another author of the same school prefers Matthiae's text, framed on the comparatively later, or Constantinopolitan, authorities, and would translate, "the angels prepared for that hour, and (for) that day, were loosed both a month and a year," evidently to fit in to the supposed period, so as to agree with the three hundred and ninety days of Ezekiel. However, it is the less needful to refute this fanciful analogy, as the author himself appears to have abandoned it, and in a more recent work returned to the ordinary text and the common rendering. But it will be observed that all this shews the extreme precariousness of the historical application, and of the effort to extract a chronological period for the Turkman woe, as we may see in the former case, where the school divides into the classes which see either one period of a hundred and fifty years, or two such periods in the same Saracenic woe.

The truth appears to be that in the vision the angels were loosed that were prepared against the hour, day, month, year fixed of God — that is, it is an epoch rather than a period; and this is secured by a single article, which brackets all together. As another remarks, had the article been repeated before each, the ideas of the appointed hour, day, month, and year would have been separated, not, as now, united; had there been no article, we might have understood that the four were to be added together to make up the time, though even thus the εἰς occurring once only would have made some difficulty; for the natural way of expressing such a meaning would be εἰς ὥραν, καὶ εἰς ἡμέραν, καὶ εἰς μῆνα, καὶ εἰς ἐνιαυτὸν. If this be so, we must conclude that this phrase in the second woe has no more bearing on the year-day question than the five months in the first. It may be added, that if an aggregated period had been meant, the natural order would have been the inverse of the actual one, for a year, and for a month, and for a day, and for an hour. (Bible Treasury 11:134)

Λ day: B. and many more, Are., cat., read εἰς τὴν before ἡμ.; four mss. τὴν; but A. and the mass, Rec., Vulg., Cop., Cyp., Prim., Tich., omit either addition. (Compl. omits καὶ ἡμ.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.26)

Λ day: Matthiae reads καὶ εἰς τὴν ἡμ. (Prospect 1:157)

Λ day: The true text is that attested by the Alexandrian and Porphyrion uncials, supported by many cursives, versions, and patristic quotations: καὶ ἡμέραν, * and the cursive Cod. Reuchl. omitting these words, as does the Complut. Pol., most probably by oversight. The Basilian uncial, however, and more than twenty cursives, before ἡμέραν intercalate εἰς τὴν, and six cursives (28,38,49,79,91,96) τὴν only. (Bible Treasury 11:134) that they might slay: Mr. Elliott seems singularly unfortunate in his remarks on the Greek text. Thus, in verse 15, he contends for the strangest possible version of ἐς as = after, or at the expiration of, the aggregated period in question; and he twice in i. p. 518,519, speaks of ἀποκτείναι a form and import different from ἵνα ἀποκτείνωσιν, the true phrase beyond all doubt, as he gives it in p. 521. It needs no reasoning to see that the action is not momentary but continuous, and that the preposition therefore has its ordinary sense, as Mr. Birks has properly remarked. (Lect. on Rev., p.189)

9:16 the: AB. with most mss., Compl., And., Are., cat., read τῶν before στ.; which some cursives omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.26)

the: Rec. omits τῶν before στρ. (Prospect 1:157) armies . . . ^Λ I: [In the RV] "armies" is correct, "and" to be omitted (Bible Treasury 14:160) cavalry: ἵππων is supported by thirty-three mss., Compl. (18. τοῦ ἱπ. αὐτῶν, and 3. 94. τῶν ἵππων); ἱππικοῦ AB,* perhaps the majority, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.26)

cavalry: For ἱππικοῦ Matthiae has ἵππων. (Prospect 1:157) two myriads: δισμ. (or δυσμ.) A. 11. 12. 36. Cyp., Tich.; δύο μ. many cursives, Rec., Are., cat.; μυρ. B., about forty-seven mss., Compl., Ar.^p, Slav.¹⁰ And. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.26) two myriads: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. δύο μ., Treg δυσμ., Tisch. δισμ., and Matthiae μυρ. (Prospect 1:157)

two myriads: Mr. [Elliott] is quite wrong (H.A., i. p. 480, note) in supposing that Griesbach prefers altogether to reject the δύο. Michaelis considers it "a very improbable reading" in the ill-considered and unsound last chapter of his Introduction. No such doubt is expressed, but, on the contrary, δύο is the reading preferred, both in Griesbach's first and second edition, and in the London reprint, 1810, 1818. This odd mistake is repeated in yet stronger terms in note 2 to p. 505, where it is said that Griesbach, on external evidence, prefers the more simple reading μ. μ. "which seems to me preferable on internal also." The common text, read by many cursives, turns out to be that of the Sinai MS., and its equivalent in sense appears in the Alexandrian and the Porphyrian uncials, and a few good later copies. B and very many others, supported by the Arabic of the Polyglots and a Slav. MS., but contrary to all other ancient versions, omit δύο. Matthaei follows them in that reading, which is the easier of the two. All other editors of note, like Griesbach, retain the δύο, δὺς, or δις. (Lect. on Rev., p.189)

^ΛI: AB. and most mss., Compl., Am. Fuld., &c., Cop., Syr., Arm., And., Cyp., Prim., omit καί; contrary to many cursives, Rec., Vulg., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.26)

^ΛI: Edd. omit καί which Rec. inserts before ἦκ. (Prospect 1:157)

9:17 I saw: ἰδ. ABC. 7. 14. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.27)

horses: B. 14. ἱππικούς. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.27) proceeded: In the latter part of 17 as of 19 the present is well. (Bible Treasury 14:160)

9:18 By: ἀπό ABC. (omits τῶν), most others, Compl., And., Are., cat.; ὑπό not many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.27)

By: Rec. has ὑπὸ, Ln. ἀπὸ. (Prospect 1:158) plagues: ABC. with most other mss., Compl., Vv., and Ff., read πληγῶν; which Rec. omits on slight authority. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.27) plagues: Rec. . . . omits πληγῶν, which the edd. add. (Prospect 1:158)

by: ἐκ, 1st, AC., most others; ἀπό B. and thirty-two mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.27)

by: Matthiae has ἀπὸ for ἐκ τ. π. (Prospect 1:158)

^Λthe smoke: ἐκ before τ. κ. is added by C. and many mss., Vulg., Syr.; contrary to AB. and about forty mss., Compl., Am. Fuld. Demid., &c., Cop., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.27)

^Λthe smoke: The edd. omit the second . . . ἐκ. (Prospect 1:158)

^Λthe brimstone: ἐκ is added before τ. θ. by some cursives and Vv.; but wanting in ABC. and the mass, Vulg., Cop., Are., cat., Cyp., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.27)

^Λthe brimstone: The edd. omit the . . . third ἐκ. (Prospect 1:158)

9:19 For the power of the horses is: ἡ γ. ἐξουσία τῶν ἱπ. (A. τοπῶν) . . . ἐστὶν ABC. and most mss., Vv., and Ff., Compl.; but Rec. with a few has αἱ γ. ἐξουσίαι αὐτῶν and εἰσιν. Also the latter, save 2., have and the former omits, καὶ ἐν ταῖς οὐραῖς αὐτῶν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.27)

For the power of the horses is: Rec. has αἱ γὰρ ἐξουσίαι αὐτῶν . . . εἰσιν, and omits ἐν τ. οὐρ. αὐτ. The edd. read ἡ γ. ἐξ. τῶν ἵππων . . . ἐστὶ, καὶ ἐν τ. οὐρ. αὐτ. (Prospect 1:158)

For the power of the horses is: In note 5 to p. 513 of the Horae Apoc., vol. i., Mr. [Elliott] omits, "Mill reads" in his last edition, and contents himself with the remark "αἱ ἐξουσίαι αὐτῶν, 'their authorities are in their tails,' is the notable reading in some MSS. The word is similarly used in the plural, Luke xii. 11; Rom. xiii. 1, &c." How strange is the effect of a system! The truth is that the plural here is due to Erasmus's which R. Stephens followed! And Mill's text is merely third edition with some errata corrected. It is clear from Mill's note that the evidence is entirely adverse. There is not a shadow of doubt that the singular is right; and probably αἱ γὰρ οὐραὶ led to αἱ γὰρ ἐξουσίαι. (Lect. on Rev., p.191) of the horses: "their" should be "of the horses" (Bible Treasury 14:160) like . . . have: C.* omits ὁμοίαι and has ἔχουσιν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.27) serpents: ὀφείσιν AC., most mss., Rec.; ὀφείων B. and twenty-seven mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.27) serpents: Matthiae ὀφείων. (Prospect 1:158)

do: [See note to Rev. 9:17]

9:20 [whole verse]: In 20 and 21 [of the RV] the force is given more literally. (Bible Treasury 14:160)

not: οὐ C. and more than thirty-five mss., Compl.; οὐτε A., very many, Rec., Vulg., Cop., Syr.; οὐδέ B. 14. and others. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.27)

not: Rec. and Ln. οὐτε μ., others οὐ. (Prospect 1:158)

they should . . . worship: προσκυνήσουσιν AC. 7.* 36. 42.; -σωσιν B. and most, Rec., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.27) they should . . . worship: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. προσκυνήσωσι, Ln. Tisch. &c., -σουσιν. (Prospect 1:158)

^Λidols: τά is read before εἶδ. by ABC. and about thirty mss., Compl., Er., And., Are., cat.; contrary to some mss. which omit. (Rec.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.27)

^Λidols: Rec. omits τὰ before εἶδωλα. (Prospect 1:158) and of brass: καὶ τὰ χ. is omitted by twenty-nine cursives, Æth., Arr., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.27) and of brass: Matthiae omits τὰ χαλκᾶ. (Prospect 1:158) can: δύνανται AB*C. 7. 28. 87. and many more, And.; -ναται B. and very many, Rec., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.27)

can: Ln. and Tisch. δύνανται. (Prospect 1:158)

9:21 [whole verse]: [See note to Rev. 9:21]

sorceries: φαρμαγιῶν AB. 7. and others, Compl.; -κων C. (but see 18:23), twenty-two mss., Are., cat.; -κειῶν most cursives, Rec. (See Gal. 5:20.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.27)

sorceries: Matthiae reads φαρμάκων. (Prospect 1:158) fornication: A. πονηρίας, C. πορνείας. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.27)

10:1 I saw: ἰδ. AB. 7. 14. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.27)

another: ἄλλον AC., very many mss., Rec., most Vv., Are., cat., Tich. (7. 16. putting it after ἀγ.); B., thirty-four, Compl., Slav.^{4.10} omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.27-28)

another: Matthiae omits ἄλλον. (Prospect 1:158)

the: ἡ ABC., most mss., Compl.; contrary to many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28)

the: Rec. omits ἡ before ἱρις. (Prospect 1:158)

the rainbow: The "rainbow" in 10:1 is right, but of no great weight (Bible Treasury 14:176) his: τὴν κ. (AC. 8. 9. 12.; τῆς κ. B., most mss., Rec., And., Are., cat.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28) his: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. τῆς κ., others τὴν κ. (Prospect 1:158) his: αὐτοῦ ABC., most mss., Compl., Vv., and Ff.; contrary to a few cursives. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28) his: Rec. omits . . . αὐτοῦ after κεφ. (Prospect 1:158) pillars: στυλός 36. Am. Fuld., &c., Tich. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28)

10:2 [whole verse]: [See note on 10:8.]

he had: ἔχων ABC., more than twenty-six mss., Slav. mss.; εἶχεν most cursives, Rec., Are., cat., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28)

he had: Rec. has εἶχεν, the edd ἔχων. (Prospect 1:158)

a little book: βιβλαρίδιον AC., very many mss., Rec.; βιβλιδάρι. C. and thirteen others, Compl.; βιβλίον B. and thirty mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28) open: ἡνεφγμ. C. 7. 31. 33. 35. 35. [sic.]; ἡν 87. Er.; ἄν. B., most mss., Rec.; but A., Cop., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28) right: C. omits τὸν δεξ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28)

the . . . the: τῆς θ. and τῆς γ. ABC. and most mss., Compl.; τὴν θ. and τὴν γ. many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28)

the . . . the: Rec. has . . . τὴν θ. and τὴν γ., where the edd. have τῆς θ. and τῆς γ. (Prospect 1:158) left: right, but of no great weight [is] . . . the omission of "foot" in 2, (Bible Treasury 14:176)

10:3 the: 4. 7. 18. Er., omit αἱ. So (verse 4) with 98.* (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28) the: right, but of no great weight [is] . . . "the" seven thunders in 3, (Bible Treasury 14:176) own: Why in 3 have the Revisers suppressed "own"? They might have left the reason or measure of emphasis to the expositor. (Bible Treasury 14:176)

10:4 spoke_A: τὰς φ. ἐαντῶν, which Rec. gives with few witnesses, is wanting in ABC., most mss., Compl., Vv., and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28) spoke_A: Rec. reads τὰς φ. ἐαντ. ἐμ (Prospect 1:158) spoke_A, . . . write them not: In the first clause of v. 4, the uncial MSS. A B C P, the majority of cursives, and almost all the ancient versions, besides Greek and Latin fathers, omit τὰς φωνὰς ἐαντῶν, and the rendering would then be, "And when the seven thunders had spoken," for English hardly admits of the absolute "had uttered." I suppose that the phrase was assimilated to the close of verse 3, whereas the true form is corroborated by the latter clauses of verse 4. The difference in sense would be that these thunders not only emitted their own proper sounds, but conveyed something intelligible to the prophet. At the end of verse 4, μὴ αὐτὰ γράψῃς is supported by the overwhelming preponderance of manuscripts. The common text has ταῦτα with a few cursives, most of which, with the old Cappadocian commentator Andreas, read μετὰ for μὴ. This last, I presume, was the mere blunder of a scribe, who probably confounded a contraction of the former with the latter, and this might be the more readily, inasmuch as μετὰ ταῦτα ("after these things") is a frequent formula in Revelation. It is curious that this obvious mistake, yielding a sense totally different from, and nearly opposite to, the one intended, has been followed in more than one of the old foreign editions, beginning, if I mistake not, with the Complutensian, though the fact is not stated by Tregelles, &c. There are also discrepancies as to the form of the last word, but there is the less reason to record them, as that which some authorities give is not even sense. (Lect. on Rev., p.204) spoke_A: right, but of no great weight [is] . . . "their voices" in 4, (Bible Treasury 14:176)

I was about: ἤμ. ABC. and about twelve others; ἐμ. most mss., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28) saying_A: μοι, added by a few cursives, Rec., is omitted by ABC., most mss., Compl., Vv., and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28) saying_A: [Rec.] λέγ. μοι. (Prospect 1:158)

seven: C. omits ἐπτά 2nd. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28) write: γράφεις 10. 17. 36. 37. 49. 91. 96. Compl. (Er. γράφης.). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28) them not: αὐτὰ ABC., more than thirty mss., Vulg., &c.; ταῦτα many mss., Rec., (six mss. read μετὰ for μὴ.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28)

them not: [Rec.] ταῦτα γρ. (Prospect 1:158)

10:5 I saw: ἰδ. AB. 7. 14. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28)

right: τὴν δεξ., omitted by A. and many mss., Rec., is given in BC., forty-three mss., Compl., and the Vv. (except Vulg. and Slav.), And., Are., cat., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28) right: Rec. omits τὴν δεξιάν. (Prospect 1:158) right: [The RV is] right, but of no great weight . . . "right" hand in 5. (Bible Treasury 14:176)

10:6 by: ἐν 1st, omitted by B. and twenty-nine mss., Cop., is read by AC. and apparently the majority of mss., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28)

by: Matthiae omits ἐν before ζῶντι. (Prospect 1:158) and the earth and the things therein: A. 12. Er., Cop., Slav.⁴, omit καὶ τὴν γῆν καὶ τὰ ἐν αὐτῇ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28) and the sea and the things therein: A. 30. 31. 32. 38. 40. 49. 98. Arm., Slav.⁴, Prim., omit κ. τ. θ. κ. τ. ἐν αὐτῇ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28)

there should be no more space: οὐκέτι ἔσται ABC. and most mss., Compl.; οὐκ ἔσται ἐπὶ many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28)

there should be no more space: Rec. οὐκ ἔσται ἐπὶ. (Prospect 1:158)

there should be no more space: It is well known that the Authorized Version of the clause is untenable, suggesting an unfounded contrast of "time" with eternity, as if instantly to follow, whereas a whole millennium and more must intervene. Besides, χρόνος is not used in this abstract way, but for a long or short space, a lapse or interval, and hence delay; and this as pointedly is contrasted with καιρός in Daniel, which means not mere duration of time, but a set time, and hence "a year." It is in evident allusion to Revelation 6:11, where it was told the earlier martyr-band that they must rest ἐπὶ χρόνον [μικρόν], a little while, or space "longer;" whereas the oath now runs that χρόνος οὐκέτι ἔσται, "there should be no longer delay." It is strange that Dean Alford, who agreed in this correction, should nevertheless have given, even in the third edition of his Greek Testament (1866), the same erroneous version as the Authorized; but he sets it right in his small Testament, compared with the Greek (1870), "there shall be delay no longer." It has been objected, indeed, that this does not convey the full meaning of the oath, and for two reasons: first, that the narrative in the following chapter implies some measure of delay, even after this announcement; and secondly, that the analogy with the oath in Daniel is almost entirely destroyed. But the answer is, first, that the terminus a quo of no delay is the days of the voice of the seventh angel when he should sound the trumpet, as he was about to do, whereas the main part of the following chapter precedes the third woe, as any one can see by inspection; and thereon, when the second is past, follows quickly the seventh trumpet, which does introduce the closing scene forthwith; secondly, general scope and minute phraseology stand here in marked contrast, not analogy, with the oath in Daniel, as already noticed. A more correct and consistent version, therefore, cannot be looked for.

From these remarks we cannot but discard the strange rendering of "A TIME no longer," a version which is contrary to all scriptural usage, and satisfies not a single condition of the text.

The use of the word in Luke 1:57; Acts 1:7, 3:21, 7:17; Galatians 4:4; 1 Thessalonians 5:1, is too obviously different to require detailed argument. Nor can any words either sanction or disguise the confusion of it with καιρός, as if they could equally bear the same interpretation. Even the very few who contend for the interchange evidently feel the difficulty, which is in no way removed by their reasoning. For the contrast with the Apocalypse is evident in what follows: compare Daniel 12:9 with Revelation 22:10. And the comparatively narrow compass of the oath in the Old Testament prophet is as noticeable as the breadth and depth of that in the New. The strict correspondence of the two oaths is therefore fallacy, so transparent that perhaps overzeal in controversy can alone account for the assertion. Nor again is it true that χρόνος and καιρός are so nearly allied in their meaning that the difference vanishes in a correct version. It is only to deceive oneself if one reasons from the four places in the New Testament where our translators have loosely given season for χρόνος, as in every one it should be while, or time, or space; equally so to infer from the sixty places where they translate κ. by time, that the distinction between them is evanescent. No scholar who has weighed this usage would deny their distinctive propriety in every instance, as the Christian ought to believe it, because he is certain of God's wisdom in every word He has written. It is only a lax rendering therefore which seems to assimilate the two words.

But the absurdity of the effort will be made apparent if one were to give to Revelation 6:11 the sense sought to be imported into Revelation 10:6; and the instance ought to be the fairer test, inasmuch as the one may be justly reckoned to refer to the other. What would be thought, then, of imposing on the earlier text the meaning of resting longer for a year, be it of days or years, until both their fellow-bondmen and their brethren who were about to be killed as they, should be fulfilled? Every intelligent mind would scout such a sense of Revelation 6:11; yet there is as much, or as little, ground for so understanding Revelation 10:6. Not a single instance of χρόνος occurs in scripture approaching the desired meaning. The demonstration is complete, therefore, that χρόνος lends no help to the scheme which denies the future crisis of three and a half years, and makes of it an interval of many centuries. (Bible Treasury 11:136-7)

there should be no more space: it is surprising that the Revisers should perpetuate in their text so gross a misrendering as "time" in 6. The natural inference from that word is that eternity immediately succeeds to the sounding of the seventh trumpet: whereas it is certain from the book that a millennium and more must intervene after the seventh angel's blast before the great white throne and the new heavens and earth (i.e. the eternal state). The marginal correction "delay" should have been in the text, meaning in this connection not time but lapse of time or space as in 6:11. (Bible Treasury 14:176)

there should be no more space: [The American correctors to the RV] rightly prefer the marg. alternative "delay" to the textual "time," as in the Authorised and Revised Versions. "Time" in fact only misleads; as, according to the book itself, more than a thousand years elapse from the seventh angel's beginning to sound, before eternity is come; whereas every one would infer from these versions that eternity must at once follow the sounding of that trumpet. But χρόνος in the Apocalypse as elsewhere is regularly used for "a while or space," a "lapse of time that intervenes" i.e. a delay: see Rev. 2:21, 6:11, 20:3. (So far Vitringa is quite right (Anacrisis Apoc. 577): "non sunt accipienda absolute, acsi sensus eorum esset cum clangore Tubicinii Septimi omnia terminatum ira Secula, quae Deus Ecclesiae suae in his terris destinaverat, expectandam gloriosam ἐπιφάνειαν, quae finem impositura sit vereum sublunarium motibus et afflictionibus Ecclesiae; quomodo bene multi Interpretes haec verba explicarunt: sed restricte Moram nullam temporis esse intercessuram inter clangorem Septimae tubae et oraculorum prophetorum implementum," &c. Every scholar knows that this sense is classical as well as Hellenistic. It is the only one that suits the context and falls in with the truth in general.) So it is for example in Acts 14:3, 28, 15:23, 18:20, 23, 19:22, &c. There is really no excuse for the mistake of the Revisers. It is a mere perpetuation of traditional ignorance. Indeed it would be hard for any one to produce a single instance in the New Testament of the abstract force of "time," in contrast with "eternity," which is so arbitrarily conceived to occur here. Mr. E. B. Elliott's addition of "prolonged" or "extended" is quite uncalled for. (Bible Treasury 15:192)

there should be no more space . . . should be finished: The right readings here, I believe, are χρόνος οὐκέτι ἔσται . . . καὶ ἐτελέσθη. The former confirms the sense given in the text and evidently means that there shall be no longer space or delay, but in the days, &c. "The time shall not be yet" would require ὁ καιρός instead of χρόνος, and οὐπω rather than οὐκέτι, which, in constructions like the present, means "no more." Others take it as "a [mystical] time;" but this also in scripture is always καιρός. The meaning which results from the latter very accurately falls in with the sentiment, for ὅταν μέλλῃ σαλπίζειν avoids the indefiniteness of the more future, and intimates that, when the seventh angel should just sound, the mystery of God should also be finished, or literally "was finished," the Greek aorist being employed to express the summariness of its completion — its coincidence, as it were, with the seventh blast. Bp. Middleton (and before him, it seems, Piscator and Vitringa) suggested a Hebraism as the source of this peculiar use of the aorist; for the Hebrew preterite very frequently stands for the future when that tense goes before and is joined by the conjunction. Indeed, as Gesenius remarks (Rödiger's ed., § 124, 6), the Pret. with וְ conversive relates to futurity, also when it is not preceded by a future tense, but by some other indication of futurity, and even where none such appears. This solution, if it be true here, confirms καὶ ἐτελέσθη. Here, again, τελεσθήσεται would leave a vague future open, and another form is employed, which may appear harsh at first, but the propriety of which becomes apparent, the more the requirements of the passage are understood. Τελεσθῇ is good in sense, and fairly supported; but it is easier than ἐτελέσθη and may have been the correction of a copyist. The converse appears to me improbable. (Lect. on Rev., p.205)

10:7 but: ἀλλ' ABC. with most, Compl., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28)

the: C. omits τοῦ 1st. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28)

he is: μέλλει 7. 28. 31. 35. 36. 87. 98. Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28) the mystery: καὶ is omitted by 10. 17.* 37. 49. 91. 94. 96. Compl., Vulg., Arm., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28) should be finished: ἐτελέσθη AC., thirty-three mss., Cop.; τελεσθῇ (-ει B. 7.) B., most mss., Rec., (Are., cat., Prim., &c., τελεσθήσεται.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28) should be finished: Rec. τελεσθῇ . . . the edd. ἐτελέσθη. (Prospect 1:158) should be finished: [The RV has], however, well rendered the Hebraistic cast of 7, "then is finished" &c. where "would have been" is more according to usual phraseology; and so in fact the Greek stands in the Text. Rec. as reflecting the Basilican Vatican and some eight cursives, several ancient versions, &c., but surely rather the correction of a copyist than the original text. (Bible Treasury 14:176) [See note to Rev. 10:6] as: For $\omega\varsigma$ 10. 20. 28. 37. 49. 91. 96. Compl., give δ . (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28)

he announced the glad tidings: $\epsilon\upsilon\eta\gamma\gamma\epsilon\lambda\iota\sigma\alpha\tau\omicron$ 10. 12. 17. 19. 26. 28. 37. 49. 91. 96. Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28)

his servants the prophets: $\tau\omicron\upsilon\varsigma \epsilon\alpha\nu\tau.$ $\delta.$ $\tau.$ $\pi\rho.$ AC. 14. 17. 36. 38. 92.; $\tau\omicron\upsilon\varsigma \delta.$ $\alpha\upsilon\tau.$ $\tau.$ $\pi\rho.$ B. and thirty-four mss., Compl.; $\tau\omicron\upsilon\varsigma \epsilon\alpha\nu\tau.$ $\delta.$ $\tau.$ $\pi\rho.$ many cursives, Rec., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28)

his servants the prophets: Rec. . . . $\tau\omicron\upsilon\varsigma \epsilon.$ $\delta.$ $\tau.$ $\pi\rho.$, the edd . . . $\tau\omicron\upsilon\varsigma \epsilon.$ $\delta.$ $\tau.$ $\pi\rho.$ (Prospect 1:158)

10:8 was: The Revisers [of 1881] in 8 try to make regular another of the anomalous forms of the Apocalypse by inserting "I heard it." But why in some cases when it is clearly impossible in all? It seems better to translate freely in all these peculiar forms, which the received text, following the later scribes, has also essayed to present according to regular grammar; whereas it is clear that they were written intentionally in their ruggedness, the writer knowing well how to express himself in correct Greek. (Bible Treasury 14:176) speaking . . . said: $\lambda\alpha\lambda\omicron\upsilon\sigma\alpha\nu$ and $\lambda\acute{\epsilon}\gamma\omicron\upsilon\sigma\alpha\nu$ ABC. 7. 14. 36. . . . 92. Vulg., Prim.; $-\sigma\alpha$ and $-\sigma\alpha$ most cursives, Rec., Lips.⁵, Cop., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28) speaking . . . said: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. $\lambda\alpha\lambda\omicron\upsilon\sigma\alpha$. . . $\lambda\acute{\epsilon}\gamma\omicron\upsilon\sigma\alpha$, others $-\alpha\nu$. (Prospect 1:158) book: $\beta\iota\beta\lambda\iota\omicron\nu$ AC. 14. 92.; $\beta\iota\beta\lambda\iota\delta\acute{\alpha}\rho.$ B., thirty-six mss., Compl.; $\beta\iota\beta\lambda\alpha\rho\iota\delta.$ many mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28-29) book: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. . . . $\beta\iota\beta\lambda\alpha\rho\iota\delta\iota\omicron\nu$, where others read $\beta\iota\beta\lambda\iota\omicron\nu$. (Prospect 1:158) book: In Rev. 6:11. and 10:2,8,10, the readings of κ call for no further notice than its frequent support of other mss. against A. and C. This I may the more freely remark, because I have not always adopted them. Thus, $\beta\iota\beta\lambda\alpha\rho\iota\delta\iota\omicron\nu$ (Rev. 10:8) can no longer be regarded as a modern reading, whether or not we judge it to be the best. (Rev. of John, 1860, xviii) book: And why should the Revisers have departed from the "little" book of their predecessors? No doubt Griesbach, Lachmann, Alford, and Tregelles support them, following A C 6. 14; but κ P, a few cursives &c., agree with the Erasmusian and received reading, and the Compl. is only another form of the diminutive (as in 2) with B, the body of cursives, &c. This difference is not unimportant, but meant expressly in contradistinction from chap. 10:1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. The verses that follow (9,10) in chap. 10 support the diminutive. It must be remembered, too, that "book" is wrongly given for "little" book by B, and some 35 cursives in 2, and that κ and others read it in 9 and with still more support in 10, where all critics adhere to the dim. as the Authorised and Revised Versions do. (Bible Treasury 14:176) is open: $\eta\nu$. AC., and perhaps most, Rec.; $\alpha\nu$. B. and upwards of twenty-six mss., Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28) in the hand: $\epsilon\nu$ (some omit) $\tau\eta \chi\epsilon\iota\rho\iota$ omitted by C. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28)

the: $\tau\omicron\upsilon \acute{\alpha}\gamma\gamma.$ ABC., more than twenty-seven mss., Compl., And., Are., cat.; but many cursives, Rec., omit $\tau\omicron\upsilon$. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28-9)

the: Rec. omits $\tau\omicron\upsilon$ before $\acute{\alpha}\gamma\gamma\acute{\epsilon}\lambda\omicron\nu$. (Prospect 1:158)

10:9 went away: $\acute{\alpha}\pi\eta\lambda\theta\alpha$ A. 50. 97. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28) went away: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. and Treg. $\acute{\alpha}\pi\eta\lambda\theta\omicron\nu$. Ln. and Tisch. - $\theta\alpha$. (Prospect 1:158) that he should give: $\delta\omicron\upsilon\nu\alpha\iota$ AC., thirty mss., Vulg., Syr., &c.; $\delta\acute{\omicron}\varsigma$ many cursives, Rec., Cop., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28) that he should give: Rec. $\delta\acute{\omicron}\varsigma$, the edd. $\delta\omicron\upsilon\nu\alpha\iota$. (Prospect 1:158) that he should give: No doubt the infinitive is a better text than the imperative, as in the Text. Rec. of 9, as it is also the best attested. (Bible Treasury 14:176)

little book: $\beta\iota\beta\lambda\alpha\rho\iota\delta.$ A. ($\beta\iota\beta\lambda\acute{\alpha}\rho\iota\omicron\nu$ A.*), C., and very many mss.; $\beta\iota\beta\lambda\iota\delta\acute{\alpha}\rho.$ B. and most, Compl., Are., cat.; $\beta\iota\beta\lambda\iota\omicron\nu$ some mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.28-29) [See note to Rev. 10:8] little book: Matthiae $\beta\iota\beta\lambda\iota\delta\acute{\alpha}\rho\iota\omicron\nu$. (Prospect 1:158) belly: $\kappa\alpha\rho\delta\iota\alpha\nu$ A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.29)

10:10 [whole verse]: [See note on 10:8]

little book: $\beta\iota\beta\lambda\alpha\rho\iota\delta.$ AC., most mss., Rec.; $\beta\iota\beta\lambda\iota\omicron\nu$ B., twenty-two mss.; $\beta\iota\beta\lambda\iota\delta\acute{\alpha}\rho.$ twelve mss., Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.29) little book: Matthiae $\beta\iota\beta\lambda\iota\omicron\nu$. (Prospect 1:158)

as: $\omega\varsigma \mu.$ $\gamma\lambda.$ C., most mss., Rec., Vulg., Syr., And., Are., cat.; $\gamma\lambda.$ $\omega\varsigma \mu.$ AB. 36. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.29)

when: [In the RV] "when" displaces "as soon as" (Bible Treasury 14:176)

10:11 they say: $\lambda\acute{\epsilon}\gamma\omicron\upsilon\sigma\iota\nu$ AB., more than twenty-six cursives, Am. Harl., cat.; $\lambda\acute{\epsilon}\gamma\epsilon\iota$ most mss., Rec., Vv., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.29)

they say: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. $\lambda\acute{\epsilon}\gamma\epsilon\iota$, Matthiae, Ln. Tisch. &c. $\lambda\acute{\epsilon}\gamma\omicron\upsilon\sigma\iota$. (Prospect 1:158)

they say: "they say" is, according to both numerous and the most ancient copies, instead of $\lambda\acute{\epsilon}\gamma\epsilon\iota$ in the Text. Rec. wrongly translated he "said" with some of the Latins. (Bible Treasury 14:176) of: is not prophecy "over" a singular rendering? Granted that "before" as in the Authorised Version, and Tyndale's "among," and Wiclif's "to," are unusual with the dative. "As to" or "concerning" is more suitable. The Revisers say "of," not "over," in John 12:16, and quite rightly; they seem inconsistent and pedantic here. (Bible Treasury 14:176)

[of]: $\acute{\epsilon}\pi\iota$ 2nd, B., thirty-two mss., Compl., Syr., Are., cat. A. and many other mss. omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.29)

[of]: Matthiae $\acute{\epsilon}\pi\iota \xi\theta\nu$. Some here translate $\acute{\epsilon}\pi\iota$ "before," others "against." (Prospect 1:158)

11:1 λ saying: A. and nearly thirty-five mss., Er., Vulg., Cop., Æth., Arr., Slav., Are., cat., &c., omit $\kappa\alpha\iota \epsilon\iota\sigma\tau.$ $\acute{\omicron} \acute{\alpha}\gamma.$, as in B., ten cursives, Compl., Syr., Arm.; or $\kappa.$ $\acute{\omicron} \acute{\alpha}\gamma.$ $\epsilon\iota\sigma\tau.$, as in many others (Rec.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.29)

λ saying: Rec. $\kappa\alpha\iota \acute{\omicron} \acute{\epsilon}\gamma\gamma\epsilon\lambda\omicron\varsigma \epsilon\iota\sigma\tau\acute{\eta}\kappa\epsilon\iota \lambda.$ (Prospect 1:158)

λ saying: The received text gives $\kappa\alpha\iota \acute{\omicron} \acute{\epsilon}\gamma\gamma\epsilon\lambda\omicron\varsigma \epsilon\iota\sigma\tau\acute{\eta}\kappa\epsilon\iota$, the Complutensian, following several MSS., has the same words, thus — $\kappa\alpha\iota \epsilon\iota\sigma\tau.$ $\acute{\omicron} \acute{\alpha}\gamma\gamma.$ Erasmus and R. Stephens had more rightly left them out, as do the Alexandrian MS., more than thirty cursives, and all the ancient versions, save the Arm. and Syr., which in the Apocalypse are not seldom encumbered with glosses. The present addition was probably drawn from Zechariah 3:3 through the scholiast Andreas. The elliptical construction perplexed people, and disposed them to adopt some such interpolation. Beza was the first, after the Complutensian editors, who sanctioned the clause in the common printed copies; and this to avoid the absurdity of the reed's seeming to speak. But there is no necessity, as he himself admits, for such a meaning, if we do adhere to the best authorities. At the same time it is a mistake to say that the words are wanting in all the most ancient Greek MSS.; for κ A P omit and B has them, while C being deficient cannot therefore be cited. (Lect. on Rev., p.216)

λ saying: Mr. [Elliott] is far too reluctant in accepting the critical correction of the received text in verse 1; and the difficulty of construction is due to not seeing the Hebraism of the style. (Compare chaps. 4:1; 14:6,7; 19:7). The Sinaitic and Porphyrian uncials confirm the Alexandrian and upwards of thirty cursives, with most of the ancient versions, against the reading of the Basilian Vatican, and ten cursives, with the later Syriac and the Armenian; which is indeed an evident gloss to get rid of the seemingly harsh phrase in the original text. (Lect. on Rev., p. xxxv)

^ saying: the Revisers have rightly struck out the interpolation "the angel stood, saying." But here again they try to soften the singularity of the construction by their rendering of λέγων "and one said." The Bishop of Lincoln's comment allegorises the reed, speaking as Andreas in the Catena does in another way. (Bible Treasury 14:176) saying: The Sinaitic alone reads λέγει for λέγων but this is of no moment, especially in the Revelation, where slips of the kind are more than usually common. (Lect. on Rev., p. xxxv)

Rise: ἐγειρε AB. and very many more; -ραι most cursives, &c. (some -ρον). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.29)

Rise: The edd. read ἐγειραι, save Tisch. who prefers -ρε. (Prospect 1:158)

11:2 without: ἔσωθεν 12. (34. 35. ?) 80. 87. Er., Steph., Slav., Vic. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.29) cast out: Surely the margin is better than the weaker text [of the RV, "leave without".] (Bible Treasury 14:176) out: ἔξω B. and the great majority; ἔξωθεν A. 12. 14. 26. 28. 34. 36. 37. 87. 91. 92. 96. Er., Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.29)

out: Ln. and Tisch. read ἔκβ. ἔξωθεν. (Prospect 1:158) measure: μετρήσουσιν A., -σεις 7. Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.29)

[and]: καὶ δύο AB., eighteen mss., &c.; but most cursives, &c., omit καὶ (some μβ). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.29)

[and]: Ln. and Tisch. read . . . καὶ δ. (Prospect 1:158)

11:3 give efficacy: Probably here, as in Rev. 8:3, the word implies "efficacy" or "power," as our Authorized translators saw in one text if not in the other. (Rev. Exp., p.128) efficacy: compare the remark on 8:3 (Bible Treasury 14:176) clothed with: περιβεβλημένοι C. and the mass. Hipp., And., Are., cat.; -νους AB. 4. 7. 28. 32. 48. 96. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.29) clothed with: Ln. περιβεβλημένους. (Prospect 1:158)

11:4 [whole verse] . . . Lord: In the critical text of 4 we have another sort of irregularity, when in the same clause appears formal and rational concord; and the Revisers attempt no reflection of it. "Lord" of the earth is right according to ample and ancient witnesses. (Bible Treasury 14:176)

olive trees: αὐλαῖαι A., ἀλαῖαι C. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30) the: After καὶ, many mss., Rec., omit αἱ; contrary to ABC., more than thirty-two mss., Compl., Hipp., And., Are., cat. (some mss., as 7. 14. 31. 32. 87. 98. also omitting αἱ before ἐνώπιον). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30)

the: Rec. omits αἱ after καὶ. (Prospect 1:158) stand: ἐστῶτες ABC., twenty-eight others, &c.; ἐστῶσαι very many cursives, Rec., Hipp., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30) stand: Rec. . . . reads . . . ἐστῶσαι, but the edd. . . . agree in . . . ἐστῶτες. (Prospect 1:158)

the: AB. omit τοῦ, contrary to C. and all others. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30)

Lord: κυρίου ABC. and most cursives, Compl., Vulg., Cop., Syr., Arr., Hipp., Are., cat., Vic., Prim.; many mss., Rec., have τ. θεοῦ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30)

Lord: Rec. . . . reads τ. Θεοῦ . . . , but the edd. (Ln. omitting τοῦ) agree in κυρίου. (Prospect 1:158)

Lord: The received reading θεοῦ is not without the support of some cursives, Æth., Slav., &c. But all the uncials and most cursives, versions, and fathers read κυρίου. The former was probably due to the tempting antithesis τῷ θεῷ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, in verse 13. (Lect. on Rev., p.229)

11:5 [whole verse]: Rec. περιβεβλημένους. (Prospect 1:158) [Note: this word is found in 4:4 of Rec. and in 11:3 of many edd., not in 11:5 of Rec. Is this an error of W.K.?]] desire: θέλει 1st, ABC., thirty-one mss., Compl., And., Are., cat.; contrary to θέλη, as many mss., Rec., read. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30) desire: "desireth," or "willeth," is better than the ambiguous "will" of the Authorised Version; (Bible Treasury 14:176)

if: For εἰ 2nd, C. has ἡ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30) desire . . . them: θ. (A. θελήσῃ; 38. Hipp. (twice), θελήσει) αὐτοῦς ABC. and many others, Compl., Vulg., &c.; αὐτ. θ. the majority of mss., Rec. (Er. omits αὐτοῦς). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30) desire . . . them: "desireth," or "willeth," is better than the ambiguous "will" of the Authorised Version; but "shall" desire rests on slight evidence (N A 38). (Bible Treasury 14:176) hurt: For ὀδ., some (21. 36. 37. 43. &c.) have ἀποκτείνει. Bengel has attached his best mark, but it seems to be a mere gloss, derived from ἀποκτανθῆναι or from And., to avoid the repetition of ὀδ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30)

thus: A. omits οὕτως. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30)

11:6 authority to shut the heaven: τ. οὐρ. ἐξ. κλ. B. and twenty-five mss., Are., cat. (τήν AC.); ἐξ. κλ. τ. οὐρ. AC. and most others, Vulg., Cop., Syr., &c., Hipp. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30) authority to shut the heaven: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. omit τὴν before ἐξ. κ. (Gr. and Sz. τ. οὐρ. ἐξ. κλ.) (Prospect 1:158) rain fall: ὕ. βρ. ABC. and most mss., Compl., Hipp.; contrary to many, Rec., which give βρ. ὕ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30) rain fall: Rec. βρ. ὕ. ἐν ἡμ. . . . , but the the edd. prefer ὕ. βρ. τὰς ἡ. (Prospect 1:158) during the days: τὰς ἡμ. ABC. and most cursives, Compl., Hipp., &c.; ἐν (Er. ταῖς) ἡμ. many mss., Rec., Vulg. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30) [see note to Rev. 17:12] of their prophecy: τ. πρ. αὐτ. ABC. and the mass, Compl., Vulg., Cop., Arm., Hipp., And., Are., cat.; αὐτ. τ. πρ. many mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30) of their prophecy: Rec. . . . αὐτ. τ. πρ., but the the edd. prefer . . . τ. πρ. αὐτ. (Prospect 1:158) with: ἐν AC., most mss., Compl., Er., Hipp., And., Are., cat.; omitted by B. and many mss., Rec., Vulg., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30) with: the edd. . . . insert ἐν before π. πλ. which Ln. Tisch. and Treg. put before ὁ. ἐ. θ., Gr. Sz. &c., after. (Prospect 1:158)

as often as they will: ὅσ. ἐὰν (C. and several εἰν) θελήσωσιν (C - σουσιν, others θέλωσι or θέλουσι) at the end, AC. and most mss., Vv., and Ff.; after τὴν γ., B., twenty-two mss., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30)

they will: may or "shall" desire is right (Bible Treasury 14:176)

11:7 And when they shall have finished . . . that: κ. ὅτε τελέσουσι Er. (who also omits τό 2nd). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30)

^ that riseth up: A. adds τὸ τέταρτον after τὸ θ.; and has, with 7., ἀναβαίνων. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30) war with them: μ. αὐτ. π. ABC., most mss., Compl., Vv., and Ff., for π. μ. αὐτ. as many, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30) shall overcome: C. 7. νικήσῃ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30)

11:8 their dead body shall be on . . . their: why should it not be "their body, or carcase [shall be] on," &c.? Of course the Revisers rightly say "their" Lord. (Bible Treasury 14:176) dead body: τὸ πῶμα ABC., more than thirty mss., Cop., Slav., Are., cat.; τὰ πτ. very many mss., Rec., Vulg., Syr., &c., And., Vic., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30) dead body: Rec. τὰ πτ., the edd. τὸ πτ. (Prospect 1:158)

the: τῆς π. ABC., more than thirty-two mss., Compl., And., Are., cat.; contrary to many, Rec., which omit τῆς. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30) the: I did not object to the τῆς, for it is my own reading, as it is that of every critical editor of the Revelation, save Griesbach and Scholz. . . who seem to have neglected entirely their own evidence, as well as much since better known. Bishop Middleton is quite right in what he says that the article is required before πόλεως. Even the Complutensian edition is correct, and though Erasmus introduced the error into the first published edition and all those which followed, it is now known that it was his own error, not the bad reading of his manuscript; for Codex Reuchlini exhibits ἐν τῇ πλ. τῆς π. (Lect. on Rev., p. xviii) the great: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. omit, and Matthiae, Ln. Tisch. and Treg. insert τῆς before πόλεως. (It is evident that Jerusalem (literal or symbolical,) is the city referred to in the preceding verses, and determined to be the city in question by the words which follow. Now τῆς μεγ. may be taken, so far as grammar is concerned, either with τῆς πλ., or with τῆς πόλεως. But the internal evidence opposes the latter and ordinary view, because Babylon, not Jerusalem, is designated "the great city" in this book. That others have been dissatisfied, and that on other grounds, I presume, is plain from Boothroyd's suggestion, "in the broad city, the great one." But this leaves the difficulty untouched.) (Prospect 1:158) and . . . also: [WK's note applies to one of these two words but not both?] καὶ is omitted by 7. 12. 14. 34. 35. 36. 87. 92. Er., Lips.⁴, Cop., Slav.^{3,4} (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30) their: αὐτῶν ABC., most mss., Compl., Vv., and Ff.; ἡμῶν Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30)

their: Rec. κ. ἡμῶν, the edd. κ. αὐτῶν. (Prospect 1:158)

11:9 some of the peoples: 9 is not ill translated [in the RV] though wordily: "And from among the peoples do men," &c. "And some," or "men," or "they," as in the A.V. is more compact. (Bible Treasury 14:176)

Λ tribes: B. adds τῶν before φ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30) see: βλέπ. ABC. and more than thirty-seven mss., Compl., And., Are., cat., Tich.; βλέψ. many cursives, Rec., most Vv., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30)

see: Rec. βλέψ. . . ., the edd. βλέπ. (Prospect 1:158)

Λ dead body: τὸ πτ. ABC. and more than thirty mss., Cop., Are., cat., Tich.; τὰ πτ. very many mss., Rec., Vv., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30)

Λ dead body: τὰ πτ. . . ., the edd. . . . τὸ πτ (Prospect 1:158) and: B. and thirty-one mss., Compl., And., Are., cat., &c., omit καὶ before ἡμ.; contrary to AC., very many cursives, Vulg., &c., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30) and: Matthiae omits καὶ before ἡμ. (Prospect 1:158) do . . . suffer: ἀφιοῦσιν (or ἀφί-) AC. 12. 28. 36. Er., *Am. Fuld. Harl. Tol. Lips.*⁵, Tich.; ἀφήσουσι (or -ν) B., most mss., Rec., Vulg., Cop., Syr., Are., cat., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30) do suffer: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. ἀφήσουσι, others ἀφίουσι. (Prospect 1:158)

a sepulchre: μνήμα AB. (C. 36. -μείον), more than thirty-six mss., Compl., Cop., Æth., Syr., Arr., Slav., And., Are., cat., Tich.; μνήματα many mss., Rec., Vulg., and other Lat. authorities. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.30,31)

a sepulchre: μνήματα, the edd. . . . μνήμα. (Prospect 1:158)

11:10 rejoice: χαίρ. ABC., more than thirty-seven mss., Compl., Tich.; χαρ. (38. &c. χαρήσονται) many mss., Rec., Vv., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.31)

rejoice: Rec. χαρ., the edd. χαίρ. (Prospect 1:158)

Λ rejoice . . . make merry . . . shall send: "rejoice" without "shall" stands on full authority (save 38), and so the Complutensian edition, but not so "make merry," though in the best copies, still less "send," where even the Revisers give the future with A C, &c. (Bible Treasury 14:176) make merry: εὐφραίν. AC. 12. 28. 36. 95. Tich. (14. Er., εὐφρανούντ.) εὐφρανθήσ. B. 14. most mss., Rec., perhaps all the Vv., Are., cat., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.31) make merry: the more modern [edd.] εὐφραίνονται. (Prospect 1:158) shall send: πέμψ. AC., very many mss., Rec., Vv., and Ff.; δώσουσιν B. and twenty-eight mss., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.31) shall send: Matthiae edits δ. δώσουσι. (Prospect 1:158) to one another: C. 27. ἀλλήλους. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.31)

11:11 the: τὰς is omitted by 28. 36. 37. 38. 40. 49. 96. Compl., Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.31) the . . . the spirit of life . . . that beheld: it should be "the" three; but why "the" breath of life? (Bible Treasury 14:176)

a half: C. puts τὸ before ἡμ. (A. ἡμισυ). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.31)

[into] them: For ἐπ' αὐτούς, the received reading, supported by very many mss., A. 18. 26. 28. 95. have ἐν αὐτοῖς; C. 7. 13. 17. 38. read αὐτοῖς; and B. with upwards of twenty-five, εἰς αὐτούς. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.31)

[into] them: Rec. ἐπ' αὐτούς. Matthiae εἰς αὐτ. Gr. Kn. Sz. Ln. and Tisch. ἐν αὐτ. Treg. αὐτοῖς. (Prospect 1:158) fell: ἐπέπεσεν AC., fourteen mss., Compl.; ἔπεσεν B. and most, Rec., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.31) fell: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. ἔπεσεν, others ἐπέπεσεν. (Prospect 1:158) those that beheld: C. 17* τῶν θεωρ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.31)

"That beheld" or "beholding" is right. (Bible Treasury 14:176)

11:12 I heard: ἤκουσαν AC., very many mss., Rec., Vulg. and other Vv. (38. ἀκούσονται); ἤκουσα B., thirty-one cursives, Compl., Cop., Syr., Arm., Arr., And., Are., cat., Tich. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.31)

I heard: Matthiae ἤκουσα ("I," not they, "heard.") (Prospect 1:158)

I heard: ["They heard"]: The four best ancient uncials that are known as yet, & A C P, with very many cursives confirm the received reading, which is rather strengthened, it seems to me, by the fact that elsewhere the book has ἤκουσα. For assimilation, under such circumstances, whether by accident or design, is far more probable than the introduction of a difference. If this be so, the sense is that the witnesses had a public and glorious vindication in the sight and hearing of their enemies. (Lect. on Rev., p.230)

I heard: It is a fair question as to ἤκουσα or ἤκουσαν the latter having decidedly the best ancient evidence in its favor, as well as the more modern copies from which the received text was drawn; but the former has good authority, uncial and cursive, supported by most of the ancient versions, and the general analogy of the phrase in the book. (Lect. on Rev., p. xxxv)

I heard . . . the cloud: the Revisers adhere to "they" heard, as in the Authorised Version. But there is no inconsiderable testimony to "I heard." "The" cloud is the correction of simple mistranslation. (Bible Treasury 14:176)

a loud voice . . . saying: C. 10. 12. 17. 28. 36. 37. 91. 95. 96 φωνῆς μεγ.; and (except 37.) λεγούσης (B. λέγουσα). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.31) to them: A. 28. omit αὐτοῖς. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.31) to them: Ln. and Tisch. omit αὐτοῖς after λέγ. (Prospect 1:158)

Come up: ἀνάβατε AC. 26. 36. 42.; -βητε B. and the rest, Rec., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.31)

Come up: The older edd. ἀνάβητε. (Prospect 1:158)

11:13 And: καὶ is omitted by B. and twenty-four mss., Are., cat., Tich.; contrary to AC. and most mss. and Vv., And., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.31)

And: Matthiae omits καὶ. (Prospect 1:158)

in that hour: Surely "in that hour" is the right rendering of ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ὥρᾳ, rather than "at that same time." (Lect. on Rev., p. xxxv) hour: ὥρα AC., very many mss. and Vv., &c.; ἡμέρα B. and more than thirty-six mss., Compl., Ar.^p, &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.31) hour: Matthiae . . . reads ἡμέρα, not ὥρα as other edd. do. (Prospect 1:158) that: [In the RV] "that," not "the same" (Bible Treasury 14:176) and the: ὥστε τό C. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.31)

tenth: B. γ (=third). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.31) afraid: C. 14. ἐνφ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.31)

11:14 behold: AC., very many mss. and Vv., place ἰδοῦ before ἡ οὐ. ἡ τρ.; B. thirty mss., Compl., after ἐρχεται. 6. 33. 35. 46. &c., Er., with Fuld. and Æth., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.31)

behold: Matthiae omits ἰδοῦ. (Prospect 1:158)

11:15 the: A. 98. omit ὁ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32) saying: λέγοντες AB., sixteen mss.; λέγουσαι C. and most mss., Rec., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32) saying: Rec. λέγουσαι . . . , the edd. λέγοντες. (Prospect 1:158) the kingdom of the world: or "the world-kingdom," if our tongue admits of such a combination. (Rev. Exp., p.132-133) kingdom of the world: Notoriously the plural form as in the Text. Rec. and the Authorised Version is the mistake of a few cursives. (Bible Treasury 14:176) hath become: ἐγένετο ἡ β. ABC., most mss., and perhaps all Vv. and Ff., Gr. and Lat. (Compl.) The pl. form (Rec.) has few supporters. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32) hath become: Ἐγένοντο αἱ βασιλείαι, the edd. . . . Ἐγένετο ἡ β. (Prospect 1:158) hath become: it should be either "that" of our Lord, or "of our Lord &c. is come." (Bible Treasury 14:176)

Lord's and: Some Latins omit the pronoun, and give "Dei" or "Domini Dei." But Bengel is quite wrong in pronouncing τοῦ κυρίου καὶ "lectio firma." (App. Crit. Ed. II., p. 939; Gnomon in loc.) Comparing Ps. 135:5, and especially the LXX., we see that ὁ κ. ἡμ. = יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32) and his Christ's: For κ. τ. χ. αὐτ. a few mss., Tol., &c., give ὁ υἱος; but Are. and cat. τοῦ κυρίου ἡμ. before. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32)

11:16 the: A. omits οἱ 1st, against B. and all others. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32)

the: Rec. οἱ εἰκ. . . . Ln. omits οἱ before εἰκ. (Prospect 1:158) twenty-four: εἰκ. τ. eighteen mss., Compl., Er., And., Are., cat., Vulg., Cyp., Prim.; καὶ τ. most cursives, Rec.; κδ' B. and many others. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32)

twenty-four: Rec. οἱ εἰκ. καὶ τ. (Prospect 1:158) who . . . before: οἱ ἐνώ., omitted by AB. 12. 14. 46. 92. Er., Slav.; οἱ (οἱ) is read by C. and most, And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32) who . . . before: Ln. omits οἱ . . . before ἐνώπιον. (Many MSS., B. and twenty-nine others, add τοῦ θρόνου, i.e. "before the throne of God.") So also Matthiae. (Prospect 1:158) sit: B. and . . . [nearly 35 mss.] (save 4.7.) read οἱ κάθηνται; C. 2. Arm., support κάθηνται; while A. and very many, Rec., give καθήμενοι. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32) sit: Matthiae . . . with Treg. reads οἱ ἐν. τ. Θ. κάθηνται, instead of οἱ . . . καθήμενοι. (Prospect 1:158) sit: [In the RV] "sit," not "sat" (Bible Treasury 14:176)

God: B. and nearly thirty-five mss., Syr., Arr., prefix τοῦ θρόνου to τ. θεοῦ; contrary to AC., very many mss. and Vv., &c. (Cyp. omits both). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32) fell: ἔπεσαν AC., most mss.; -σον B. and many, Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32)

11:17 thee: B. σε. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32)

that . . . wast ἄ . . . reigned: "which," or "who," "wast" (without "and art to come"), stand on good authority. They [the RV] change "hast reigned" of the Authorised Version into "didst reign." (Bible Treasury 14:176) wast ἄ: ABC. (retaining καὶ), most mss., Compl., Am. Fuld. (et) Demid. Harl., Syr., &c., Are., cat., Cyp., Prim., have not καὶ ὁ ἐρχόμενος; which many cursives, Rec., Vulg., Cop., &c., add. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32) wast ἄ: Rec. καὶ ὁ ἐρχόμενος, the edd. reject the words. (Prospect 1:158) wast ἄ: I beg leave to omit the last clause, "and art to come" — not as a conjecture (for conjecture on scripture is presumption), but because of what the best witnesses for the word of God really maintain. The clause, "and art to come," was put in to make it square with other passages which contain a similar phrase. . . In chap. 11, there is the omission of the words, "and art to come," perhaps because the arrival of the world-kingdom of the Lord is here celebrated, so that there was no need to add anything. Before He came in His kingdom, it was appropriate; but it would be hardly suitable here. As I find that the best authorities reject the words, it is surely legitimate to try to shew how the better reading harmonizes with the truth of God in the passage itself. (Lect. on Rev., p.237-8) wast ἄ: καὶ ὁ ἐρχόμενος is rejected by the Sinaitic, the Porphyrian, the Basilian Vatican (B 2066), as well as A and C, and the mass of cursives; also by the Complut. and even by Erasmus' Cod. Reuchl., though he boldly inserted it (probably out of deference to the Vulgate, not knowing that its best copies, Amiat. Fuld. Demidov. and Harl., reject the clause). (Lect. on Rev., p. xxxv) thou hast taken: C. εἰληφες. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32)

11:18 wrath ἄ: 38. adds ἐπ' αὐτοῦς after ἡ ὁρ. σ., σου after ἀγίοις, and καὶ before τ. μικρ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32)

is come: "came" and several other minute changes are adopted [in the RV] (Bible Treasury 14:176) reward: C. κλήρος. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32) to the saints, and to them that fear thy name, the little and the great: τοὺς ἀγ. κ. τοὺς φ. Α., τοὺς μ. κ. τ. μ. AC. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32) to the saints, and to them that fear thy name, the little and the great: Ln. τοὺς ἀγ. κ. τοὺς φ.... τοὺς μ. κ. τοὺς μ. . . . others τοὺς, &c. (Prospect 1:159) and: A. omits last καὶ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32) and: Ln. . . . omits καὶ before διαφθ. (Prospect 1:159) destroy: διαφθεύσαντας C. 7. 47. 48. 49. 87. 96. and a few others, Vulg., Cyp., Prim. (Er. φθείρ., probably from And.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32)

11:19 [whole verse]: It is amazing that the true relation of this verse escaped the notice of so many able Christian men, owing perhaps to the mere fact of its being unfortunately tacked to the end of chap. 11, instead of opening the new division commencing with chap. 12. If Mr. Elliott had only observed it, he might have been spared much trouble; but then he would have lost the coincidence of the "great hail" with the storm in July, 1788!! and the "earthquake" of the French Revolution in 1789. But the hailstorm he had hitherto interpreted as an invasion from the cold north-east. Where is the consistency of this vaunted scheme? And what had the opening of the temple of God, or the sight of the ark of His covenant there, to do with the French democrats? (Lect. on Rev., p.252-253) [See also Rev. Exp., p.134 and Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist. and Rev., p.478]

[whole verse]: The Revisers are right of course in separating 19, as indeed it is the introduction to the vision that follows, rather than the conclusion of chapter 11. (Bible Treasury 14:176) was opened: ἡνοίγη AC., most mss., Rec., And.; ἡνοίχθη B. and twenty-two mss., Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32)

was opened: Matthiae ἡνοίχθη. (Prospect 1:159)

[that is]: AC. 14. 38. 87. 92. 95. Vic., &c., insert, and B. with the great majority of cursives, Are., cat., Prim., omit ὁ before ἐν τῷ οὐρ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32)

[that is]: Ln. ὁ ἐν τῷ οὐρ. Treg. brackets ἐν τ. οὐρ. as being omitted in A and three other MSS. (Prospect 1:159)

[that is]: The true reading is probably ὁ ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ (i.e. which is in heaven). At any rate, so the Alexandrian and the Paris rescript, the Leicester, a Vatican cursive (579), the Middlehill, the Montfort, and one of the Parham (17) manuscripts say, not to speak of the Cod. Coislin. of Andreas and Victorinus. Mr. [Elliott] is also quite wrong in saying that 'according to Tregelles this is a mistake.' It is true that in his first edition, he omits this various reading, though long before noted by Walton, Mill, Bengel, Wetstein probably (I now add certainly), and even adopted without question in the text, not of Wordsworth only, but of Lachmann and Tischendorf, as it appears to be by Tregelles, judging from the new edition of 1859 (which gave the English only, not the Greek). How it was that Mr. E. did not find it in the critical editions of Griesbach and of Scholz, it is not for me to say; but there it unquestionably may be found by any who examine them. In Hahn's manual one could not rightly expect such a thing . . . Now it must be evident to any candid mind that my fault with Mr. E. was not the question of adopting ὁ, for I myself bracketed it in my Greek text, and therefore doubted it more than the greatest of modern critics, and only used the word "probably" in the note before Mr. E. What I charged him with was the extraordinary tissue of errors, which he now, one is sorry to see, evades by an argument about the reading. He distinctly affirmed in his fourth edition that when W. read the disputed ὁ as if in A and C, this was a mistake according to Tregelles. I denied both the mistake and that T. says anything of the sort. Dr. T. knows the readings of the Revelation far too well to be guilty of an assertion so monstrous in the eyes of any one acquainted with such matters. He never said so. He omitted this various reading in his first edition — a rare fault with him; for the book was in most respects very well done and abounded in sound information. But T.'s omission (which the most careful may fall into sometimes) is no warrant for using his name to deny ὁ to be the reading of A and C, as it certainly is. And I corroborated this by referring to Tregelles's new edition (English) of 1859, in which he gives the clause, "And the temple of God * which is in heaven was opened." (In his explanation of marks used Dr. T. says, "An asterisk (*) is inserted whenever the ancient text differs from the modern.") This can leave no doubt how utterly mistaken Mr. E. was. Further, though not adopted in the text of Griesbach or Scholz, the reading is given with the authorities then ascertained. (Lect. on Rev., p. xix-xx)

[that is]: I do not say that it is "the true reading." In 1860 I bracketed the article before ἐν as doubtful; I should be disposed to do the same in 1871. (Lect. on Rev., p. xxxv)

[that is]: Probably "that is" (ὁ) is right, as later critics think on good authority, though the omission of the article in A B and most cursives, &c. must make it doubtful. (Bible Treasury 14:176)

was seen: C. ἐδόθη. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32)

his: αὐτοῦ 1st, AC. and very many others, Vulg., Syr.; τοῦ (B. 7. and others omit) κυρίου B. and upwards of thirty-four mss., Compl., Are., cat., Vic. (some mss. and Vv. τοῦ θεοῦ; and Cop., Ar.^s, &c., omit). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32) his: Rec. Ln. Tisch. and Treg. αὐτοῦ, Gr. and Sz. τοῦ κυρίου. (Prospect 1:159) covenant: "Testament" is all wrong, and everywhere save in Heb. 9:16,17, as already noticed. (Bible Treasury 14:176)

[and an earthquake]: καί (11. omits κ., and 12 adds ὁ) σεισμός (34. 87. σεισμοί) AC., most mss. and Vv., Prim., Tich.; but B., thirty mss., Compl., Arr., &c., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32)

[and an earthquake]: Tisch. rejects καὶ σεισμός which the other edd. receive. (Prospect 1:159)

12:1 [whole verse] . . . sign was seen . . . clothed: [In the RV] "sign" as in the old margin takes the place of "wonder" as in 3. The Authorised Version should have been consistent with its own rendering in 15:1. Tyndale ought not to have departed from Wiclif in this. The order of the Greek is also better kept in the Revised Version, as will appear from comparing 1 and 3; but there is no great reason for dropping "appeared" here after adopting it almost everywhere else in the New Testament. No doubt the Authorised Version had preceded them in giving "was seen," in 11:19, and so they might have given in 12:1 and 3, as both give in Acts 13:31, and 1 Tim. 3:16. Generally both give "appeared." Further, "arrayed" and "clothed" are interchanged as in the Authorised Version, though the Revisers use the former. (Bible Treasury 14:190) clothed with: A. περιβλεπομένη. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32)

the: Er. omits ἡ before σελ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32)

12:2 with: B. ἐγ γαστρί. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32)

she crieth: κράζει A. and many mss., Am. Demid., &c., Cop., Hipp.; ἐκραζεν C. (prefixing καί, as does Prim.), twenty-six mss., Compl., Vulg., Syr., Æth., And., Are., cat., Prim.; -ξεν B. and about twelve mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.32-33)

she crieth: Sz. ἐκραζεν, others κράζει. (Prospect 1:159) travailing: A. prefixes καὶ to ὦδ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.33) travailing: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. and Treg. omit καὶ, which Ln. and Tisch. (with A. C.) read before ὦδ. (Prospect 1:159) travailing: the Committee [of Revisers of 1881] adopt a view of the text, in the insertion of an additional copulative, on the authority of A C 95, apparently confirmed by some of the Latin copies, more extreme than most, including Tischendorf, till the Sinaitic carried him away. Lachmann, in his lesser edition, followed the Alexandrian in having the copulative before ὦδ. (Bible Treasury 14:190)

12:3 was seen: [See note to Rev. 12:1] red: πυρρός A. and most mss. and Ff.; πυρός BC. and nearly twenty-six mss. (before μ. BC. and most authorities, after μ. A. and many). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.33)

his: A. 87. αὐτῶν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.33)

his: Rec. Gr. Sz. μέγ. π. Ln. Tisch. and Treg. π. μ. (Prospect 1:159) seven diadems: ἐπ. δ. ABC. and most cursives, Compl., Am. Fuld., &c., Meth., And., &c.; δ. ἐπ. many cursives, Vulg. Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.33) seven diadems: Rec. διαδ. ἐπ., the edd. ἐπ. διαδ. (Prospect 1:159)

diadems: "diadems" is right, as in Wiclif and the Rhemish, not "crowns" as in the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:190)

12:4 draweth: "Drew" in 4 is an error, not of text but of translation in all the English versions from Wiclif down to the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:190) stars: ἄστρων C. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.33) stood: ἐστήκει C. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.33) stood: All the English versions, the Revised included, have "stood" for "standeth." (Bible Treasury 14:190) stood: there is no doubt that the Americans [correctors of the RV] are justified in giving a present force to the principal verb ("standeth"), and hence to the correction that follows. The truth is that here as in the Old Testament prophecy the Seer was expressly inspired to intermingle the past with the present and future. All was thus felt the more vividly to be before God who made His word known. This has led to a little swerving from a literal rendering. (Bible Treasury 15:192) to bring forth: τίκειν 37. 49. 96. Compl., Hipp. (ἐκτεκεῖν Meth.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.33)

when she brought forth: It was Tyndale who misled the early translators in giving "as soon as it was born," instead of Wiclif's more correct "when she had borne a child" or "been delivered" as in the Revised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:190)

12:5 a male son . . . is to rule . . . the nations . . . to: all the previous translations avoid the simple "a son, a man child," as in the Revision; as all give "was to" or "should" rule, and omit "the" nations. The better text would give the last "to" in Roman letters, not italics as in the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:190-191) male: ἄρσεν AC.; ἄρρενα (B. ἄρε.) B. and most mss., Hipp., Meth. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.33) to rule: ποιμαίνει Compl.; -ενεῖν 94. 95. 98. Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.33) with: 12. Er. omit ἐν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.33) was caught up: ἡρπάχθη B.; -ην 10. 29. 31. 37. 47. 49. . . . 91. 94. 95. 96. Compl., Hipp., Meth. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.33) to: πρὸς τ. θρ. AB., thirty-four mss., Compl., almost all the Vv. and Ff., contrary to many cursives which omit πρὸς. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.33) to: Rec. omits πρὸς after καί. (Prospect 1:159)

12:6 into: It is true that εἰς may be translated unto or towards, no less than into: to decide which is meant, we must carefully examine the nature of the case, and the context. But Luke 11:56,57, in no wise proves that the woman was fleeing merely towards the wilderness; because we have various occurrences related immediately after the evangelist says that they proceeded unto another village — occurrences expressly said to be while they were on their way. So with Acts 8:25; 18:18, &c. The two wings of the great eagle convey the very reverse of a gradual movement thither. Nor does the parenthetic account of the war in heaven confirm the notion of progressive stages. (Lect. on Rev., p.259) hath \wedge : ἐκεῖ after ἐχ. AB. and most mss., Compl., &c. (47. Slav. mss., Hipp., transpose); but C. and very many mss., &c., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.33) hath \wedge : Rec. omits ἐκεῖ (Treg. brackets it) before τόπον. (Prospect 1:159) hath \wedge : the replaced ἐκεῖ of the old Manuscripts makes a scarce sensible difference save perhaps in emphasis Hebraistically. (Bible Treasury 14:191) of: ἀπό AC. and very many mss., Hipp.; ὑπό B. and thirty-two mss., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.33) of: Matthiae has ὑπὸ τοῦ Θ. (others ἀπὸ). (Prospect 1:159) they should nourish: ἐκτρέφ. B., twenty-nine mss., Compl.; τρέφ. AC. (-οῦσιν) and very many others, Hipp., Meth., And. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.33)

they should nourish: Matthiae has . . . ἐκτρέφ. (Prospect 1:159)

12:7 \wedge Michael: δ τε M., A., and apparently Syr. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.33)

\wedge Michael: Ln. δ τε Μιχαήλ. (Prospect 1:159) to war: τοῦ πολεμῆσαι AB. and many more, Compl.; also B. with more than thirty mss. omitting τοῦ, Æth., Syr., Arr., instead of ἐπολέμησαν, which Rec. gives with many mss., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.33) to war: Rec. ἐπολέμησαν . . . the Edd. τοῦ πολεμῆσαι. (Prospect 1:159) to war: the anomalous construction τοῦ π. μετὰ "went to war," or "going forth to war with," is unquestionably genuine. The received reading ἐπολέμησαν is that of no known copy, and probably a mere guess of Erasmus from Arethas or the context. Cod. Reuchlini and the Complutensians give τοῦ π. (Bible Treasury 14:191) with: μετὰ ABC., most mss., Vv., and Ff. (Compl.); κατὰ a few cursives and Ambrosiaster. (Rec.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.33) with: Rec. . . . κατὰ τ. δ. the Edd. . . . μετὰ τ. δ., Matthiae omitting τοῦ before π. (Prospect 1:159)

12:8 he prevailed: ἵσχυσαν (B. 14. -ον) BC. and very many mss., Vulg., Syr., &c., Are., cat., Prim., Hier.; -σεν A., thirty-one mss., Compl., Cop., Æth., Ar.^e, Vic., Cass. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.33-34)

he prevailed: Rec. and Treg. ἵσχυσαν, others -εν. (Prospect 1:159) neither: οὐδέ ABC., thirty mss., Compl., And., Are., cat.; οὔτε many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34)

neither: Rec. οὔτε, the edd. οὐδέ. (Prospect 1:159) their: αὐτῶν ABC., very many mss., Vv., and Ff.; αὐτῷ twenty-seven cursives, Cop., Arr., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34) their: Kn. and Ln. αὐτῷ for αὐτῶν, as others have it. (Prospect 1:159)

12:9 [whole verse]: 9 is now accurately rendered by the Revisers in the main; and so yet more plainly 10. (Bible Treasury 14:191)

the: Er. omits ὁ before ὅφ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34)

\wedge Satan: ὁ is read before Σ. by AC. and very many more, and omitted by B. and thirty-five mss., Compl., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34)

\wedge Satan: Matthiae omits ὁ before Σατανᾶς. (Prospect 1:159)

with him: Er. omits μετ' αὐτοῦ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34)

12:10 [whole verse]: [See note to Rev. 12:10]

in the heaven, saying: λέγ. after ἐν τ. οὐρ. ABC., thirty mss., Compl., Vv., and Ff.; before ἐν τ. οὐρ. very many mss. (two mss., Töl., omitting ἐν τ. οὐρ.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34) in the heaven, saying: Rec. λέγ. ἐν τ. οὐρ., the edd. ἐν τ. οὐρ. λέγ. (Prospect 1:159)

Christ: κυρίου C. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34)

the accuser of our brethren: Er. omits the clause ὁ κατ. τ. ὁδ. ἡμ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34) is cast out: ἐβλήθη ABC., thirty-four mss., &c.; κατεβλ. many mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34) is cast out: Rec. Gr. and Sz. κατεβλ., others ἐβλήθη. (Prospect 1:159) accused: κατήγωρ A.; κατήγορος BC. and all others, And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34) accused: Rec. κατήγορος, others κατήγωρ. (Prospect 1:159) them: αὐτοὺς A. 28. 36. Er.; αὐτῶν BC., most mss., Rec. (98. -όν, 32. omits). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34) them: Ln. and Tisch. ὁ κ. αὐτοὺς, others αὐτῶν. (Prospect 1:159) our: ἡμῶν after θεοῦ, omitted by 14. 28....90. 92. 98. Er., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34)

12:11 because of . . . because of . . . their life unto: it cannot be as in the Authorised Version “by,” but “because of,” διὰ τό, nor their “lives unto the” death. (Bible Treasury 14:191)

the word of their testimony: For τ. λ. τῆς μ. C. has τὴν μαρτυρίαν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34) not: οὐχ A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34)

not: Ln. οὐχ ἡγ. (Prospect 1:159)

12:12 ^Λ heavens: οἱ οὐρ. A. and most mss.; but BC., twenty-five cursives, &c., omit οἱ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34)

^Λ heavens: Matthiae and Treg. omit οἱ before οὐρ. (Prospect 1:159)

^Λ heavens: Erasmus’ manuscript of Reuchlin had the article like A C P and many cursives. It seems the more strange that he omitted it like ^Λ B, and most without comment. (Bible Treasury 14:191) to ^Λ the: C. κατασκηνοῦντες, 26. 29. 30. 31. 98. κατοικ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34) to ^Λ the: it is “woe to the earth and to the sea,” not to “the inhabitants of,” as in the Text. Rec. from Erasmus’ Codex Reuchlini or 1. The Complutensian editors are right so far. But the Revisers follow the older form as in ^Λ A C P and a few cursives, and hence say, “woe for,” &c. (Bible Treasury 14:191)

the earth and to the sea: τὴν γῆν (A. ἀγαπήν) κ. τὴν θ. AC., Vv.; τῇ γῇ κ. τῇ θ. B. and most mss., Compl., and Ff.; τοῖς κατοικ. τ. γ. κ. τ. θ. most cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34)

the earth and to the sea: Rec. ὁνα τοῖς κ. τὴν γ. κ. τ. θ., the others οὐ. τῇ γῇ, except Treg. οὐ. τὴν γ. (Prospect 1:159)

^Λ having: ὁ ἔχ. Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34)

a short time: At the end of the verse it is not mere lapse of time, which would be χρόνος, but καιρός or season. (Bible Treasury 14:191)

12:13 saw: ἰδ. B. 7. Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34)

male: ἀρσεναν A.; -α C. 14....92. 95.; ἄρρενα (B. ἄρενα) B. and most mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34)

12:14 [the]: AC. 7. 12. 27.* 28. 36. 95. &c., add αἱ before δ.; but it is omitted by B. and the mass, &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34)

[the]: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. omit αἱ. (Prospect 1:159)

she should fly: πέταται 28. 38. Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34) where she is nourished: ὅπως τρέφεται (-εται 14. 30.) B. (so Mai, but Tisch. says that B. omits αὐτ. ὅπ. τρ. ἐκ. κ. κ.), thirty-two mss., Compl., Arr., And., Are., cat.; ὅπου τρέφεται (26. 27. 32. -ηται) AC. and very many more, Vulg., Cop., &c., Hipp., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34)

where she is nourished: Matthiae reads ὅπως τρέφεται (“that she might be nourished,”) instead of ὅπου τρέφεται. (Prospect 1:159) and half a time: C. omits κ. ἡμ. καιρ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34)

12:15 cast: ἔλαβεν A.* (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34)

out of his mouth after the woman: ἐκ τ. στ. αὐτ. before ὅπ. τ. γ. ABC., most mss., Compl., Vv., and Ff.; and after, some mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34) might make her as carried away by a river: C. π. αὐτ. ποτ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34) her: αὐτήν ABC., thirty-seven mss., Compl., Vv., Ff.: ταύτην many mss., Rec. Er. omits. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34)1 her: Rec. ταύτην. (Prospect 1:159)

by a river: the Revisers have not improved on the Authorised Version. They might easily have done so by closing the verse with “by a river,” instead of “the stream.” (Bible Treasury 14:191)

12:16 the earth: 34. 35. 36. 40. 41. 42. 87. and more, want ἡ γῇ 2nd. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34) the river: τὸ ὕδωρ ὁ A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34) cast: ἐνέβαλ. B., ἀνέβαλ. 14. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34)

12:17 was wroth: ὀργίσθη B. 7. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34)

at: C. wants ἐπί. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34) of Jesus: ^Λ AB*C., most mss., Vv., and Ff.; τοῦ ^Λ B. 7. 8. 11. 14. 19.; τοῦ ^Λ χυ many cursives, Vulg., Rec., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34) [See also note to Mat. 1:18.]

of Jesus: Rec. τοῦ Ἰ. Χριστοῦ. (Prospect 1:159) of Jesus: [The RV is] right in giving “of Jesus” in 17, omitting “Christ,” which has only inferior Latin support. The oldest and even the most numerous juniors do not give “Christ.” The Sinaitic and the Canonici 34 in the Bodleian (98) strangely read θεοῦ. (Bible Treasury 14:191)

12:18; 13:1 I stood: ἐστάθην B., almost all others, Rec., Cop., Ar.^c, &c., And., Are., cat.; -η AC. 87. 92. Vulg., Syr., Æth., Arm., Ar.^p, Vic., Tisch. (Prim. omits the verse). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.34,35)

I stood: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. and Tisch. prefer ἐστάθην, Ln. and Treg. (following A and C, &c., and some versions) ἐστάθη, i.e. “he stood.” (Prospect 1:159)

I stood: In Rev. 12:18, we have ἐστάθην [in ^Λ], with B. and perhaps all others save AC. 87. 92., a reading which, I am disposed to think, is fortified, if not demanded, by internal evidence. (Rev. of John, 1860, p. xviii)

I stood: The reader should know that this is one of the most contested readings in the book. The difference in Greek is but a letter more or less; but in the one case John is meant, in the other the dragon. The Alexandrian, Paris, and Porphyrian uncials, with the Middlehill and Montfort MSS., are confirmed by most of the ancient versions and two old Latin commentators in the latter sense; and all other known MSS., including the Sinai and Vatican uncials, with the Coptic, &c., and the Greek commentators give the former. Modern editors and commentators are not less divided. The comparison of our text with Rev. 10:5-10 will perhaps suffice to shew that there is no internal incongruity in assigning such a position to John. Dan. 10:4,5, 12:5, ought to be borne in mind. On the other hand, if it be “he stood,” I do not see that it attributes providential power to Satan, which would be very objectionable. (Lect. on Rev., p.274-5)

I stood: The true reading is uncertain, as it turns on a letter easily added or dropped. The three best uncials, two cursives, and most of the ancient versions support the third person; B P, the mass of cursives, the Memph., etc., the first person. Here Tisch. even in his last edition yields to the weight of the internal grounds in deciding for the latter. (Rev. Exp., p.149)

I stood: It is a pretty bold step of the Revisers to decide the question of what follows, and put what commonly stands at the beginning of chapter 13 in the close of chapter 12, adopting “he,” (not “I”) stood, without a marginal note. No doubt there is good and ancient authority for this departure from the Text. Rec. and Authorised Version; but excellent judges decide for the common text, and in such circumstances change without a word of caution seems hazardous. (Bible Treasury 14:191)

I stood: the Americans [correctors of the RV] rightly contend for at least a marg. addition to “he stood” thus: — “Some ancient authorities read I stood etc., connecting the clause with what follows.” Why, it is the reading of B P, all the known cursives save two, more than one ancient version and the Greek commentators Andreas and Arethas. Tischendorf retains it, ^Λ notwithstanding, in his eighth or last edition. Was this beneath a marginal notice? (Bible Treasury 15:192)

13:1 I saw: ἰδ. ABC., 7. 14. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.35)

ten horns and seven heads: κέρ. δ. κ. κεφ. ἐπ. ABC., thirty-four mss., Compl., most Vv., and nearly all Ff., Gr. and Lat.; κεφ. ἐπ. κ. κ. δ. few mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.35) ten horns and seven heads: Rec. κεφ. ἐπ. κ. κέρ. δ., others κ. δ. κ. κ. ἐπ. (Prospect 1:159)

ten horns and seven heads: the Revisers follow authority in "horns" and heads as against the Vulgate and Arm. Erasmus probably had no other ground for the erroneous order of the Text. Rec. than, besides these, the fact of Codex Reuchlini; having omitted by inadvertence κέρατα δέκα καί. (Bible Treasury 14:191) on . . . upon: [The RV tries] to represent ἐπὶ τῶν κ. by "on," and ἐπὶ τὰς κ. by "upon." (Bible Treasury 14:191) names: ὀνόματα AB. and most mss., Compl., Vulg. (Am. &c.), Syr., Ar.^p, Slav., Are., cat.; ὄνομα C., many mss., Rec., *Fuld. Demid. Tol. Lips.*⁴, Cop., &c., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.35) names: Rec. ὄνομα. (Prospect 1:159) names: The received reading, answering to "name" in the Authorised Version, is not without good support (C P several cursives, ancient versions, &c.); but the plural form has yet more, and was the first printed reading in the Complutensian edition. (Bible Treasury 14:191)

13:2 [whole verse] . . . throne: There are critical questions in 2, but they do not claim attention here as the Revisers raise none in text or translation, save in their change from "seat" to "throne." (Bible Treasury 14:191)

I saw: ἴδ. ABC. 14. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.35)

like _Λ: 12. 46. omit ἦν, which 28. 87. &c., place after ὁμ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.35)

a bear's: ἄρκου ABC., more than twenty-four mss., Compl.; ἄρκτου very many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.35) authority _Λ: A. adds at the end ἔδωκεν αὐτῷ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.35)

13:3 I saw: Many mss., Rec., after καί, read εἶδον, contrary to ABC., Compl., most mss., Vv., and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.35)

I saw: The edd. omit εἶδον. (Prospect 1:159)

I saw: [The RV] rightly print[s] I saw in italics, in accordance with the Complutensian edition; whereas the Reuchlin copy gave no authority to Erasmus, who ventured to insert εἶδον, probably following Latin copies (and not the best). I am unaware of any cursive save the valuable Parham 17(95) which reads the word; but it was only brought from Mount Athos in 1837. (Bible Treasury 14:191) of: ἐκ ABC., most mss., Compl., Vv., and Ff.; contrary to B.,* many others, Rec., which omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.35) of: The edd. . . . add ἐκ. (Prospect 1:159)

as: ὡς AC. and very many others, &c.; ὡσεὶ B., twenty-six mss., Compl., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.35)

as: Matthiae ὡσεὶ. (Prospect 1:159) slain unto death . . . deadly wound: ἐσφ. is not "wounded," as in the Authorised Version, nor yet "smitten," as in the Revised Version, but "slain," as in both margins; but "death-stroke" well renders πλ. τοῦ θ. (Bible Treasury 14:191) wondered: ἐθαύμασεν B. and almost all mss., Are., cat.: ἐθαυμάσθη (C. -στώθη) AC. 12. 28. 36. Er.; which last (not AC.) have ἐν ὅλῃ τῇ γῇ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.35) wondered: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. ἐθαύμασεν, others -άσθη. (Prospect 1:159)

13:4 the: τῷ δρ. ABC. and most mss., Compl., And., Are., cat.; τὸν δρ. many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.35-36)

the: Rec. τὸν δρ. . . . , the edd. τῷ δρ. (Prospect 1:159)

the: the true reading is τῷ δ. ὅτι ἐδ., certainly not the Erasmusian conjecture τὸν δ. ὅς ἐδ. as the Reuchlin MS. fails here. B and many cursives, however, had τῷ δεδ. Probably the Rotterdam scholar translated the Vulgate here, and so forgot the article before ἐξουσίαν following. (Bible Treasury 14:191) because he gave: ὅτι ἐδ. AC. 12. 34. 35. 36. 87. 95. Am. *Fuld. Demid. Lips.*⁵, Syr., Ar.^e, And., &c. (28. 46. ὅτε ἐδ.); ὅς ἐδ. many cursives (Rec.); τῷ δεδωκότι B., thirty-five mss., Compl., Are., cat. (14. τῷ δόντι.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36)

because he gave: Rec. . . . ὅς ἐδ. ἐξ., the edd. . . . ὅτι ἐδ. τὴν ἐξ., and Matthiae τῷ δεδωκότι. (Prospect 1:159)

the: τὴν is omitted by many cursives, Rec., against ABC. and most other mss., Compl., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36)

the: Rec. . . . ὅς ἐδ. ἐξ., the edd. . . . ὅτι ἐδ. τὴν ἐξ. (Prospect 1:159) the beast: τῷ θ. 2nd, BC. and most mss., Compl.; τὸ θ. A. and many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36) the beast: Rec. τὸ θ. (others τῷ θ.) and omits καί. (Prospect 1:159) and: καί before τίς 2nd, is read by ABC., seventeen mss., Compl., Vv., And., Ir.^m, Prim.; but most mss., And., cat., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36) and: There is an omission in the Text. Rec. followed by the Authorised Version of καὶ before the second τίς, which the Revisers of course supply as amply justified. (Bible Treasury 14:191) is able: δύναται AC., most mss., Rec., Vv., and Ff.; δυνατός B. and thirty four mss., Compl., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36)

is able: Matthiae . . . δυνατός. (Prospect 1:159)

13:5 blasphemy: βλασφημίαν B. and near thirty-five mss., Compl., Vulg. mss., &c.; -ίας C. and very many mss., Vv., Rec.; βλάσφημα A. 12. 28. 34. 47. 87. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36)

blasphemy: Rec. &c. βλασφημίας, Tisch. and Matthiae βλασφημίαν, Ln. and Treg. βλάσφημα. (Prospect 1:159) blasphemy: there is considerable discrepancy as to βλ., but the ordinary text has the most ancient and best witnesses, though Lachmann adopted one shade of difference, and Tischendorf in his seventh edition another. (Bible Treasury 14:191) work _Λ: πόλεμον is added before ποιῆσαι by B., most mss., Rec., some Vv. (some mss., after; others have πολεμήσαι); AC. 12. 18. 28. 36. (probably many others) 95. Steph., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36) work _Λ: Rec. ἐξ. πόλεμον ποιῆσαι, Gr. πόλ. ποι., Kn. Sz. Ln. and Treg. ἐξ. ποι., and Tisch. ἐξ., omitting both πόλ. and ποι. (Prospect 1:159) work _Λ: Grammatically speaking the authorized version is good here. Compare Acts 15:33; 18:23; 20:3. The Hebraistic absolute sense is according to the analogy of Dan. 8:12,24, and 11 passim. Bengel, Griesbach, and others, doubted as to the word in any sense, and considered it probably an interpolation from verse 7. I believe, on the contrary, that the peculiarity of the expression, to those that did not bear in mind the phraseology of Daniel, led some of the scribes to insert πόλεμον before or after ποιῆσαι as B, most MSS. (14 πολεμήσαι), and led other authorities, as the Armenian version, Irenaeus, &c., to omit ποιῆσαι. Dionysius Alex. (ap. Euseb.) has καὶ μήνες. On the whole I conceive that Erasmus and R. Stephens rightly read ποιῆσαι, and that the Complutensian editors and the Elzivers wrongly admitted πόλεμον. The true sense appears to be to practice, work, act, or do, rather than merely "continue." The ancient versions are singularly vague, but to my mind they indicate action more or less energetic or specific, and not bare continuance; and so, it seems to me, the great majority of the best modern translators. Dr. M'Causland (pp. 300, 361) prefers "to make forty-two months," i.e., to drive out the Jew into the wilderness for that period. This may be a "literal" version; but I cannot commend its "propriety." Is it not plain that the acting of the beast is in contradistinction to his speaking. He blasphemes God in every possible way, His name, His tabernacle, and those that dwell in heaven; and more than this, license is given him to carry all out practically for forty-two months. (Lect. on Rev., p.281-2) work _Λ: surely ποιῆσαι here is more than "continue," and means (as Dan. 8:24; 11:28, 30, 32 may illustrate) to do, act, work, practise, or pursue his course for 42 months. πόλεμον is a mere gloss from 7, though in B and most (as the Sinaitic has δ θέλει), and followed in the Complutensian and Elzevir editions, not in Erasmus, R. Stephens, &c. The Armenian version, &c., cut the knot by dropping the infinitive altogether. (Bible Treasury 14:191)

forty-Λ-two: B. 28. and others, μβ; A. 16. 95. Fuld., Syr., Ir.^{im}, adding καὶ before δ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36)

13:6 blasphemies: βλασφημίας AC. 18. 34. 35. . . . 87. 95. Vulg.; -ίαν B. and most mss. and Vv., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36)

blasphemies: the plural has higher authority than the singular βλ. (Bible Treasury 14:191) and his tabernacle: C., Tol.,* Slav.³, omit κ. τ. σκ. αὐτ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36)

[and]: καὶ last is omitted by AC., twenty-eight mss., Syr., Slav.¹⁰, contrary to B., very many mss., Rec., Vv., and Ff., Gr. and Lat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36)

[and]: Matthiae, Ln. and Treg. omit, and the others insert, καὶ before τοῦς. (Prospect 1:159)

[and]: It is not correct to say, with the author of the Horae Apocalypticae, that the conjunction is wanting in all the critical editions, for Griesbach, Knapp, Scholz, Tischendorf, &c., retain it with the Vatican, Porphyrian, and uncials, a good many MSS., and almost all the ancient versions, save the Syriac. Still there is grave authority (A C, twenty-eight cursives, &c.) against καὶ, which is therefore dropped by some excellent editors, as Matthaei, Lachmann, &c. I have, accordingly, thought it right to bracket the words, though my opinion is in favor of receiving it. (Lect. on Rev., p.283)

[and]: the chief change [in the RV] is the discarding on good ground of "and" before the last clause; especially if with Alford we take it as in apposition with God's name and dwelling-place. The Revisers, it seems, regard it as exegetic of the dwelling-place only. (Bible Treasury 14:191)

13:7 And it was given him to make war with the saints and to overcome them: AC. 12. 14....92. omit from καὶ ἐδ. to νικ. αὐτ. (doubtless from simil. of beginning) contrary to almost all other authorities. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36)

And it was given him to make war with the saints and to overcome them: Ln. omits καὶ ἐδ. . . . νικ αὐτοῦς, with A.C. and other MSS. (Prospect 1:159) to make war: ποι. πόλ. B. and more than twenty-six mss., Compl., Cop., Syr., Slav.^{3,4,10} Are., cat., Prim.; πόλ. ποι. many mss., Rec., Vulg., Amb. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36) to make war: Rec. Gr. κ. πόλ. ποι. Treg. ποι. πόλ. (Prospect 1:159) and people: καὶ λαόν (C. -ούς) ABC., most mss. and Vv., &c.; but many authorities omit. (Rec.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36) and people: Rec. omits and the edd. add καὶ λαόν. (Prospect 1:159) and people: In 7 must be added "and people." (Bible Treasury 14:191)

13:8 him: αὐτόν ABC., twenty-seven mss.; αὐτῷ many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36)

him: Rec. αὐτῷ, the edd. αὐτόν. (Prospect 1:159) of whom: οὗ οὐ C., Ir.^{im}, οὐα A. (both add αὐτοῦ); ὧν οὐ or οὗτε B. and the mass of mss., Rec. (omitting αὐτοῦ), Vv., and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36) of whom: Ln. and Tisch. οὗ, . . . αὐτοῦ, others ὧν. (Prospect 1:159) name: ὄνομα ABC. and most mss., Compl., Cop., Syr., Arr., &c.; ὀνόματα many mss., Rec., Vulg., &c., Are., cat., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36) name: it is certainly "name," emphatically singular, and indeed needing some means of expressing this, like "everyone" in the Revised Version, or "whose name soever," as Mr. T. S. Green proposes. (Bible Treasury 14:191) name in the book: Rec. τὰ ὄν. ἐν τῇ β., the edd. τὸ ὄν. ἐν τῷ β. (Prospect 1:159)

in: B. has ἐπὶ for ἐν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36) the book: τῷ (C. omits) βιβλίῳ ABC., twenty-five or more mss., Compl., And., Are., cat.; τῇ (36 omits) βιβλῷ very many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36) that: Many mss., Rec., omit τοῦ before ἐσφ., contrary to ABC. and the mass, Compl., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36) that: Rec. wants and the edd. supply τοῦ before ἐσφ. (Prospect 1:159) slain: ἐσφαγισμένου Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36)

from the world's foundation: [The punctuation of this passage, and a parallel one in chap. 17:8, where the words "of the Lamb slain" are not introduced, leads me to suppose that the concluding part, "from the foundation of the world," refers to "the names written in the book of life." . . . 'Εσφαγμένον implies something done; and, though he was really slain to the eye of John in Patmos, as he tells us in chap. 5:6, yet, to the minds of patriarchs and prophets, he could not be said to be so, but rather "to be slain." . . . M.S.M.]

M.S.M. is correct in thinking that the true link is between the names written (not the Lamb slain) from the foundation of the world. Christ was foreordained as a lamb before the foundation of the world, but not slain till the due time. (Christian Annotator 2:20) from the world's foundation: Whether Dean Alford's reasoning influenced the Revisers is best known to themselves; but it is impossible to admit the soundness of bringing forward 1 Pet. 1:19, 20 as the same thing with our passage, for it expressly speaks of Christ foreknown before the world was founded but manifested before the end of the times. Here there is no question of Christ purposed, but of the name having been written from the world's foundation in the book of the Lamb that has been slain. To say that Rev. 17:8 is cited irrelevantly here is surely idle. Christ's death is nowhere said to have taken place in divine counsels; it was foreknown, but took place in time. The Lord does the things known from of old, but they are nowhere said to have been done then. Is then the Authorised or Revised Version happy? It seems to be equivocal, if not misleading. A comma before "from" would have guarded the truth. The marginal note gives the right view; from which it would appear that the majority of the Committee preferred the wrong. (Bible Treasury 14:191) from the world's foundation: In my opinion they [the American correctors of the RV] are no less right in suggesting that marg.⁵ and the text, ver.8 should exchange places. (Comp. 17:8) (Bible Treasury 15:192)

13:10 [whole verse]: The MSS. are in strange confusion as to 10. The common reading seems to give the sense; and the margin of the Revised Version expresses it better perhaps than the text. (Bible Treasury 14:191-192)

If any one is for captivity, into captivity he goeth: εἰ (C. ἡ thrice) τις εἰς αἰχ., εἰς αἰχ. ὑπάγει A., Am. Fuld., &c., Slav.³, and so, omitting the second εἰς αἰχ., BC. 28. 38. 95.; and also, omitting εἰς after αἰχ.,

32. 47. (7. 18. 36. varying still): εἰ τις ἔχει αἰχ. ὑπ. twenty-five cursives, Compl.: εἰ τις αἰχ. συνάγει (αἰχ or εἰς αἰχ. ἀπάγει 33. 35. Vulg., Syr., &c.), εἰς αἰχ. ὑπ. many mss., Are., cat. (There are other slight variations.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36)

If any one is for captivity, into captivity he goeth: Rec. Gr. and Sz. (and Treg. omitting συνάγει with A.) εἰ τις εἰς αἰχ. σ., εἰς αἰχ. ὑπ. (so B.) Matthiae εἰ τις αἰχ., ὑπάγει. (so C.) (Prospect 1:159)

If any one is for captivity, into captivity he goeth: In Rev. 13:10, it is obvious that Codex Sinaiticus, with BC. 28. 38. 95., differs from my text, which follows A. &c., by the non-repetition of εἰς αἰχμαλωσίαν. But these words might have been as readily omitted as added. If the allusive contrast is with Jer. 15:2, ὅσοι εἰς μάχαιραν, εἰς μάχ. . . . καὶ ὅσοι εἰς αἰχμαλωσίαν, εἰς αἰχ., it tends to confirm the repeated form. The sense is the same either way, whether expressed or implied. The cursives fluctuate greatly. (Rev. of John, 1860, p. xviii) will kill: ἀποκτενεῖ (B. 26. -κτενεῖ) BC., most other mss., Rec., Vv.; but some mss. -κτεννεῖ or κτείνει; while nineteen mss. omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36) will kill: Most read . . . ἀποκτενεῖ, Ln. and Tisch. ρῆ, the former ἀποκταίνει, the latter ἀποκτεννεῖ. (Prospect 1:159) sword . . . sword: μαχαίρη AC. twice. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36) sword . . . sword: Most read μαχαίρα ἀποκτενεῖ, Ln. and Tisch. ρῆ. (Prospect 1:159) with sword: ἐν μ. 2nd, is omitted by more than twenty mss., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36) with sword: Matthiae omitting the second ἐν μαχ. (Prospect 1:159) must . . . be killed: A. gives ἀποκτανθῆναι, but omits δέ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36)

13:11 I saw: ἴδ. AB. 7. 14. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36)

rising up: C. ἀνάβαινον. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36)

two: δύο is wanting in twenty-one mss., Are., cat., Vic. (12. δεκαδύο, 38. puts it before ἀρ.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.36-37)

two: Matthiae omits δύο. (Prospect 1:159) like: For δμ. C. has ὄνομα. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.37)

lamb: Codex Reuchlini misled Erasmus to edit in all his editions δμ. ἀρνίου (instead of ἀρνίω) followed in R. Stephen's first and second editions, but corrected in his third. It was right in the Complutensian edition. (Bible Treasury 14:192)

13:12 causeth: B. and twenty-eight mss., Compl., Syr., Are., &c., give ποιεῖ before τ. γ.; but AC. and very many mss. ποιῇ, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.37) that dwell therein: κ. ἐν αὐτ. C. and many mss., Rec.; ἐν αὐτ. κατ. AB., most mss., Compl., Hipp., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.37) that dwell therein: The edd., contrary to Rec., read τ. ἐν αὐτῇ κ. (Prospect 1:159)

those that dwell: Matthiae edited the gloss τοὺς ἐμούς "my people" that dwell (Bible Treasury 14:192) to worship: προσκυνήσουσιν AC. 7.* 14. 30.* 36....98.; -σωσιν B. and the great majority, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.37) to worship: Rec. &c. προσκυνήσωσι, Ln. &c. -ουσι. (Prospect 1:159) deadly: A. omits τοῦ θανάτου; 14. and others, Vulg., Prim., omit αὐτοῦ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.37)

13:13 so that even fire: ἵνα κ. π. AC., very many mss., Vv., and Ff., Rec.; κ. π. ἵνα B., thirty-one mss., Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.37)

so that even fire: Most edd. ἵνα καὶ πῦρ ἐκ τ. ο. κ., (Rec. κ. ἐ. τ. ὁ,) but Gr. and Sz. καὶ π. ἵνα ἐκ τ. ὁ. κ. (Prospect 1:159) come down out of the heaven: ποιῇ ἐκ τ. οὐρ. κ. (C. καταβαίνον) AC. 28. 34. 35. 38. Vulg., And., Ir.^{im}; π. κ. ἐκ. τ. οὐρ. many cursives, Hipp., &c.; ἐκ τ. οὐρ. καταβαίνῃ B. (-ει), about thirty mss., Cop., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.37) unto the earth: ἐπὶ B. and more than twenty-five cursives, &c. (Prim. omits ἐ. τ. γ.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.37) unto the earth: Matthiae for ἐπὶ τὴν γ. has εἰς τὴν γ. (Prospect 1:159)

13:14 ^Λ those: Twenty-six mss., Compl., add τοὺς ἐμούς before τοὺς. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.37)

^Λ those: Matthiae reads τοὺς ἐμούς τ. κ. (Prospect 1:159) because of: "by the means of," in the Authorised Version as in other English versions, should be "by reason of" (Bible Treasury 14:192) saying: B.* λέγοντος, B. 14....94. 95. -ον. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.37)

image: A. εἰκοναν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.37) who: ὃς ABC. 28. 34. 35. (36.?)....87. 92.; ὁ most cursives and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.37) who: Ln. and Tisch. read ὃς ἔ. for the common reading ὁ ἔ. (Prospect 1:159) who hath: [In the RV] "who hath" is right. (Bible Treasury 14:192) hath: B. and more than thirty-six mss., Compl., Syr., &c., read εἶχεν where AC. and very many mss., Vv., Hipp., Prim., give ἔχει. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.37)

the: B. 8. 13. 29. 30. 31. 32. 40. 42. 43. &c., 50. 90. 93. 94. 97. 98. omit τὴν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.37)

the wound of the sword and lived: τ. μ. (AC. &c., -ρης) κ. ἔξ. AC., most mss., Rec., Vv., and Ff.; κ. ἔξ. ἀπὸ τ. μ. B., more than twenty-four cursives, Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.37)

the wound of the sword and lived: Matthiae reads . . . ἔξ. ἀπὸ τῆς μ. (Prospect 1:159)

13:15 him: αὐτῇ AC., contrary to all others. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.37)

him: Ln. αὐτῇ. (Prospect 1:159) him: truly eccentric is the preference [of the RV] with Lachmann of αὐτῇ (A C P) to αὐτῷ (B and almost all other copies). (Bible Treasury 14:192) to give breath: δ. (C. omits) πν. AC., most mss., Rec., Vv.; πν. δ. B., twenty-five mss., Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.37) that the image of the beast should both speak: C. 28. omit from ἵνα καὶ τ. εἰκ. τ. θηρ. (14. 16. omit to the first τ. θ., Cop., Syr., Ar.^p) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.37) cause: It is possible that the meaning may be, "that the image of the beast should both speak and act (or practice); in order that as many," &c. If so, the statement attributes to the beast's image the same things which characterize the beast in verse 5. (Lect. on Rev., p.308)

[that]: ἵνα is added before ὅσοι by A. 7. 11. 26. 36. 95. Vulg., Syr.; but is wanting in B. and twenty-five more, Am. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.37)

[that]: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. omit ἵνα before ὅσοι ἔαν (which they read ἄν), and insert it before ἀποκτ. Matthiae omits the last ἵνα. (Prospect 1:159)

as ^Λ: ἔαν AB., twenty mss., Hipp., &c.; ἄν very many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.37) the image: τῇ εἰκ. B. and about forty mss., Compl., &c.; τὴν εἰκ. A. and many mss., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.37) the image: Gr. Kn. and Sz. τῇ εἰκόνι. (Prospect 1:159)

^Λ should: ἵνα before ἀπ. is inserted by very many cursives, Rec., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.37)

13:16 they should give: δώσω ABC., thirteen cursives, Compl.; δώσωσιν twenty cursives, Are., cat.; -σουσιν a few mss.; δώση (&c.) many mss., Rec., Hipp. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.37)

Revelation Notes

they should give: The edd. δώσω for δώση the reading of Rec. (Prospect 1:160) they should give: Literally, "that they should give them," i.e., that a mark should be given them. Compare Rev. 10:11, "they say to me," i.e., it is said. (See Luke 6:38; 12:20; 16:9, for a similar usage, the first and especially the last of which are often misunderstood.) (Lect. on Rev., p.308)

a mark: χάραγμα AC. and very many mss., Rec., Vv., and Gr. and Lat. Ff.; -ματα B. and thirty mss., Compl., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38) their: τὸ μ. A., thirty mss., Cop., Arm., Hipp., &c.; τοῦ μ. C., &c.; τῶν μ. B., very many mss., Rec., some Vv. and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38) their: The edd. . . ἐπὶ τὸ μ. rather than ἐπὶ τῶν μ. (Prospect 1:160)

13:17 and: καὶ is wanting in C. 6. 28. 32....96. Tol., Cop., Syr., &c., Hipp., Prim., &c. contrary to AB. and the majority, Rec. (Am. Fuld. Demid., &c.), Æth., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38) and: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. (and Treg. with brackets) καὶ ἱ. (Prospect 1:160) may be able: δύναται B., twelve mss., Er.; δύνηται AC. most mss., Rec., Hipp., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38)

Λ the name: Many mss., Rec., Vulg., Cop., &c., add ἡ before τὸ δν. contrary to ABC. and most mss., the best mss. of the Vulg., Syr., Ar.^p, and Hipp. (τοῦ δν. C., *Fuld. Tol. Lips.*⁴, &c.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38)

Λ the name: Rec. ἡ τὸ δν. the edd. drop ἡ, but Ln. and Tisch. τοῦ δν. (Prospect 1:160)

Λ the name: the Revisers rightly with others strike out the first "or" of the two in 17, τὰ δν. τ. θ. ἡ τὸν ἀρ. being in apposition with τὸ χ. (Bible Treasury 14:192)

the name of the beast, or the number of his name: B. puts ἡ τὸν ἀρ. τοῦ θηρ. before ἡ τ. ἀρ. τ. δν. αὐτ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38)

13:18 Λ understanding: τὸν disappears before ν. in ABC. and nearly thirty-six mss., Compl., Hipp., Are., cat.; but many mss., Rec., add. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38)

Λ understanding: The edd. rightly drop τὸν before νοῦν. (Prospect 1:160) and: καὶ is omitted by twenty-eight mss., Slav.^{3,4} Tich. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38) is: ἐστιν is added after αὐτοῦ by C. 10. 18. 28. 37. 38. 49. . . . 91. 95. 96. Compl., Am. Fuld., &c., Hipp., contrary to AB., the mass of mss., Rec., Vv., and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38)

666: χξς´ B., the majority, Rec.; εξακόσιοι ἐξήκοντα ἕξ A., Compl.; -αι ἕξ. ἕξ 7. 17. 16. 29. 47....95.; -αι δέκα ἕξ last, C. 11. Tich. (5. χις´; cf. Ir., V., 29. 30.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38)

666: Some Edd. write χξς, instead of εξακόσιοι ἐξήκοντα ἕξ. Irenaeus names, but rejects, the reading χις, that is 616. (Prospect 1:160)

14:1 I saw: ἰδ. ABC. 7. 14. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38)

the: τὸ ἁ. ABC., about thirty mss., Cop., Syr., Arr., Orig., Meth., Are., cat.; but very many mss., Rec., And., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38)

the: it should be "the" Lamb on preponderant authority, though the Porphyrian uncial and at least seven cursives, &c., are known to omit the article which the Complutensian edition as well as Erasmus followed. (Bible Treasury 14:192) standing: ἐστὸς AC., 12. &c., Er.; ἐστῶς B. 12. 18. 28. 34. 35. 36. 38. . . . 95. Er. 3. &c., Orig., Meth.; ἐστηκός (or -ῶς) the mass of mss., Rec., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38) standing: Ln. Tisch. and Matthiae ἐστὸς, Treg. ἐστῶς. (Prospect 1:160) the . . . Sion: C. omits τὸ and Σιών. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38)

Λ an hundred: ἀριθμός before ἐκ. B., about twenty-four mss., Syr., Ar.^p, Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38) an hundred: Er. omits ἑκατόν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38)

an hundred forty and four: ρμδ´ B. 14. 28. 87. &c. (so in verse 3). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38) his name and: τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ καὶ after ἔχ. ABC., upwards of forty cursives, Compl., nearly all Vv., with Gr. and Lat. Ff.; omitted by very few mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38) his name and: Rec. omits αὐτοῦ καὶ τὸ ὄνομα. (Prospect 1:160)

his name and: . . . the true text (represented by the uncials, ⲛ A B C, upwards of forty cursives, nearly all the ancient versions with the Greek and Latin fathers) expressly says "his [the Lamb's] name and his Father's name." Besides, the insertion of ὡς, "as it were," before "the new song," is by no means certain. It is omitted by ⲛ the Vatican and Porphyrian uncials, with nearly forty cursives, most versions, Origen, Methodius, Arethas, &c. (Lect. on Rev., p.331) his name and: the Complutensian had better guidance in reading αὐτοῦ καὶ τὸ ὄνομα, as the Revisers translate, omitted by ὁμοιστελετον no doubt in Codex Reuchlini as by Erasmus, Stephens, and Beza, so in the Authorised Version. His name and His Father's name is right. (Bible Treasury 14:192)

Λ written: A. adds τὸ before γεγ., for which Er. gives καίόμενον. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38)

Λ written: For "written" scriptum, (γεγ.) Erasmus had καίόμενον, the odd error of Cod. Reuchlini, in his editions 1, 2, and 3, reproduced in the editions of Aldus, Cephalaeus, &c. But if the idea of "burnt," inustum, had been meant, the form would have been κεκαυμένον, not καίόμενον which of course means burning. (Bible Treasury 14:192)

14:2 the voice . . . as of harpers: ἡ φωνὴ ἦν ἡκ. ὡς κ. ABC., more than forty cursives, Compl., most Vv., Orig., Meth., Are., cat., Prim., for φωνὴν ἡκ. κ., with a few mss. (28. adding ὡς), Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38)

the voice . . . as of harpers: Rec. κ. φωνὴν ἡκ. κιθ., the edd. κ. ἡ φ. ἦν ἡκ. ὡς. (Prospect 1:160)

the voice which . . . was as: In the last clause of 2 it should be ἡ φ. ἦν . . . ὡς, "the voice which" . . . "was as," &c., on the fullest authority, though the Text. Rec. is not without support. The Complutensian edition is right. (Bible Treasury 14:192) their: C. omits αὐτῶν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38)

14:3 sing: Ancient as well as modern versions, like the English, misled the Authorised Version here as elsewhere in "sung" for "sing," as of course it stands in the Revised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:192)

[as]: ὡς AC., very many cursives, Vulg., Slav.; but B. and nearly forty mss., Compl., most Vv., Orig., Meth., Are., cat., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38)

[as]: Rec. Ln. and Treg. ὡς φδ. others omit ὡς. (Prospect 1:160)

[as]: a very nice question is suggested by the conflict of the witnesses: should it be "a new song," as in chapter 5, or "as it were" &c. as in the Authorised and Revised Versions? ⲛ B P, most cursives and versions omit ὡς, whereas some good cursives, Vulgate, &c., insert it. As to editions Alford and Tregelles bracket the word, Erasmus, Stephens, Beza, Elzevir, down to Lachmann adopt it, while the Complutensian, Bengel, Griesbach, Heinrich, Tischendorf (finally as at first) reject it. (Bible Treasury 14:192) and the elders: C. omits καὶ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38)

no one: οὐδὲ εἰς B. (Mai.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38) could: ἐδ AC. and very many cursives, Compl., Orig., Are., cat.; ἡδ. B., most mss., Rec., Meth., And. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38) could: The ancient edd. ἡδ. the modern ἐδ. (Prospect 1:160)

four: C. omits τέσσαρες. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38) bought: "Purchased" is right here, and in the following verse, as in chapter 5:9. (Bible Treasury 14:192) [See note to 2 Peter 2:1]

14:4 These are: A., Vulg. ms., Æth., omit οὗτοί εἰσιν (38. omitting εἰσιν 1st and 2nd). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38)

[are]: AC. 28. Er., Vulg., Arm., Slav., Orig., omit εἰσιν before οἱ ἄκ., contrary to B., most mss., Rec., Cop., Syr., Meth., Are., cat., Cyp., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38)

[are]: Ln. and Tisch. omit εἰσιν before οἱ ἄκ. (Treg. brackets it.) (Prospect 1:160)

[are]: The third "are" in 4, expressed in the received text, is probably to be understood only as in A C P, &c.; but this makes no difference in sense. (Bible Treasury 14:192)

Λ he: ἄν AC., very many, Rec. (γὰρ ἄν Compl.), Meth., And.; ἔάν B. 7. 8. 13. 14. 29. 30. 31. 32. 40. 47. 48. 50. and many mss., Orig., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38)

he goeth: ὑπάγει AC. 7. 16. 28....87.; γῆ B., the majority, Rec., Gr. Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38)

Λ were: ὑπὸ ἱν before ἡγ. B., thirty-seven cursives, Compl., Syr., Ar.^p, Are., cat., contrary to AC. 12. 21. 33. 36. s7[sic]. 95. many other mss., Rec., Vv., and Gr. Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38)

Λ were: Matthiae has ὑπὸ Ἰησοῦ ἡγορ. (Prospect 1:160) bought: [See notes to Rev. 14:3 and 2 Peter 2:1]

from among men: C. omits ἀπὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38)

first-fruits: ἀπ' ἀρχῆς 16. 39. &c., Æth., Arm., Ar.^p. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38)

14:5 in their mouth was found: καὶ οὐχ εὖρ. ἐν B., twenty-four mss., Are., cat., contrary to the order of AC., most mss., Rec., Meth. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38) falsehood: ψ. ABC., about forty-five mss., Compl., most Vv., Orig., Meth., Are., cat., Hier., Tich.; δόλος many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.38-39) falsehood: Rec. δόλος, the edd. ψεῦδος. (Prospect 1:160) falsehood . . . [for]: not "guile" but "lie" is the word. The MSS. (save A C P, 12) confirm "for." (Bible Treasury 14:192)

[for]: γὰρ B., most mss., Rec., Vulg. (*Am.  Demid. Tol. Lips*⁶) and other Vv., Gr. Ff.; AC. 12. Am. Fuld. Lips^{4,5} Harl., omit (26. omits ἄμ. γ. εἰς; 17. Aug., have δι τῆς εἰς; many mss. ἀμώμητοι). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.39) blameless Λ : ABC., about forty-five cursives, Compl., Am. Fuld. Harl. Tol., most Vv. and Ff., omit ἐνώπιον τοῦ θρόνου τοῦ Θεοῦ, contrary to many mss., Vulg., Slav.; for which at least three mss. (33. 35. 48.), Are., cat., substitute οὗτοί εἰσιν οἱ ἀκολουθοῦντες τῷ ἀνρίψ (evidently from verse 4). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.39) blameless Λ : Rec. has at the end ἐνώπιον τοῦ θρόνου τοῦ Θεοῦ, omitted by the edd. (Prospect 1:160) blameless Λ : It is added in our common Bible, "before the throne of God" (verse 5); but these last words ought not to be there. The best authorities leave them out: and a slight consideration will shew how wrongly inserted they seem to be. (It is curious that Mr. Elliott (H. A., iii. part iv. chapter x.), though he rightly rejects or doubts the clause ἐνώπιον τοῦ θρόνου τοῦ Θεοῦ, nevertheless repeatedly, both in Greek and English, inserts another clause which has absolutely no warrant, as far as I know. He says in the text of p. 311 (and also in p. 323), "they were without fault before God," and then in the foot-note gives αἰωμοι ἐνώπιον του θεου. He adds, "Compare my observation on the words ἐνώπιον του θηριου, said in Apoc. xiii. of the lambskin-covered beast's responsibility to the beast antichrist as his supervisor, p. 206-208 supra."

The words within brackets are implied if not expressed." Now, while I do not question that politically the second beast subverts the first, I demur to the proof drawn from this phrase. Thus, Rev. 1:4 — the first occurrence of ἐνώπιον in the book — is adverse. Subordination is not the idea. As little does the next occurrence, Rev. 4:14, bear him out: indeed it refutes the inference. Balaam taught Balak to cast a stumbling-block before the children of Israel — certainly not under their cognizance and judgment. Compare also Rev. 3:8,9; 4:6; 12:4, 10. Nay, in chapter 13, the verse which follows the one on which Mr. E. dwells is in my judgment a sufficient answer. For while verse 12, if justly so interpreted, would suit the papal supremacy, how square it with verse 13? For there we have the signs or miracles wrought ἐνώπιον τῶν ἀνθρώπων, before men. If Mr. E.'s theory of what is "presignified by this little word" in verse 12 be applied to verse 13, it would teach the Protestant principle of private judgment, quite as much as the other justifies "Coram Petro." The truth is that the view has no foundation.)

. . . As this verse stands now in the common text, with the words "before the throne of God" added to it, we could only understand it as being true in Christ; but here the sense requires, if I mistake not, that it be practical conduct. (Lect. on Rev., p.321-323)

blameless Λ : the words "before the throne of God" seem to have not one known Greek witness. (Bible Treasury 14:192)

14:6 I saw: ἴδ. AB. 7. 14. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.39)

[another]: ἄλλον AC. and probably most mss., Rec., Vv. (33. after ἀγγ.); but omitted by B., more than thirty cursives, Ar.^p, Slav.^{4,10}. Orig., Are., cat. Matthiae inserts it in his text on the authority of o. (=49. "corruptissimus"), contrary to his x. t. k. l. p. r. (=30. 32. 47. 48. 50. 90.) What becomes of his own canon, "k. et o. contra r. l. p. non sunt audiendi"? (Rev. of John, 1860, p.39)

[another]: Matthiae and Tisch. omit ἄλλον. (Prospect 1:160) flying: πετόμ. AC. 2. 9. 13. 14. 16. 29. 30. 31. 33. 35. 47. 48. 50. and many more, Compl., Orig., And., Are., cat.; πετώμ. B. apparently most mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.39) flying: The edd. read πετόμ. (Prospect 1:160) in mid-heaven . . . sit: "in mid-heaven" is right. But "set" or "settled" seems better than "dwelt" for καθημένους. (Bible Treasury 14:192)

mid-heaven: μεσουρανίσματι Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.39)

everlasting: Is it a happy rendering to say "an eternal gospel"? Would not "everlasting gospel" or glad tidings be better? Neither here, nor in Rom. 1:1, nor anywhere else is the phrase anarthrous because it had become technical, but because the object was to present it characteristically, in distinction from the good news, at a special time, of God's grace or of Christ's glory. This, true from the garden of Eden, is to be enforced by the solemn warning of judgment at the doors. The Revisers go back to Tyndale and the Geneva version. Did any of these appreciate its exact force? (Bible Treasury 14:192) everlasting: [The American correctors of the RV] would for "an eternal gospel" read "eternal good tidings." Would not "everlasting" be more correct? There is a shade of difference in our tongue. I do not find that the Americans contend for "good" or "glad tidings" elsewhere: why here only? (Bible Treasury 15:192) to announce: εὐαγγελίσασθαι 10. 28. 34. 35. 36. 49....91. 96. Compl., Orig. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.39) unto: ἐπὶ 1st, AC. and others; B., most mss., Rec., Gr. Ff., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.39) unto: Rec. Gr., Kn. and Sz. omit ἐπὶ before τ. κ. (Prospect 1:160) sit: καθῆμ. BC., more than thirty-five mss., Compl. (38. 97. τοῖς καθ.), Orig., Are., cat.; τοὺς κατοικοῦντας A., many mss. Rec. Vv.; τοὺς καθημένους τοὺς κατοικοῦντας 36. Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.39) sit: Rec. and Ln. κατοικοῦντας for καθημένους. (Prospect 1:160) unto: ἐπί before πῶν ABC. and the mass, Compl., most Vv., Gr. and Lat. Ff.; but many cursives, Rec., and some Vv. omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.39) unto: Rec. omits ἐπί before π. ζ. (Prospect 1:160)

14:7 saying: λέγων ABC. and the great majority, Compl., Vulg. (Fuld., &c.), Cop., Slav.^{3,4} And., Are., cat., Lat. Ff.; λέγοντα many mss., Rec., Am., Syr. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.39) saying: Rec. λέγοντα, the edd. λέγων. (Prospect 1:160) saying: The anomalous λέγων, for λέγοντα, at the beginning of 7, the Revisers try to express by "And he saith." (Bible Treasury 14:192) with: A. omits ἐν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.39)

God: θεόν AC., very many mss., Rec., Am., &c., Vv., Orig., And., Cyp.; κυρίον B., about thirty-four mss., Vulg., Ar.^p, Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.39)

God: Matthiae reads for θ. κύριον. (Prospect 1:160) him that made: τῷ π. AC., most mss., Rec.; αὐτὸν (Orig. omits) τὸν (B.* omits) π. B., twenty-six mss., Orig., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.39) him that made: Matthiae reads . . . αὐτὸν τὸν π. (Prospect 1:160)

[the]: τὴν θ. B., about thirty-five mss., Compl., Orig., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.39)

[the]: Rec. Ln. and Treg. omit τὴν before θ. (Prospect 1:160)

[the]: The omission of τὴν, "the," before θ. sea is very doubtful, though three uncials and at least as many cursives favour it. (Bible Treasury 14:192)

14:8 a second: δεύτερος after ἄλλος AB., nearly thirty mss., Syr., Are., cat., Prim.; after ἄγγ. C. (δεύτερον) 7. 9. 28. 37. 40. 46. 49. &c., 96. Compl., Cop., Arm. (36. omits ἄλλος, 95. omits ἄγγ.) Many mss., Rec., omit δ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40)

a second: Rec. Gr. Sz. and Treg. omit δεύτερος, which A. B. and more than twenty other MSS contain, and Kn. puts δ. after ἄγγ, following C. and ten other MSS. (Prospect 1:160)

[fallen]: ἔπεσεν BC., more than thirty mss., Cop., Æth., Ar.^p; ἔπ. A. and seemingly most mss., Rec., Ital., Vulg., Syr., Ar.^s, Slav., Are., cat., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40)

[fallen]: Matthiae, Treg. &c., do not repeat ἔπεσεν. (Prospect 1:160) who: ἡ AC. 26. 33. 34. 35. 38. 50. &c., 95. Vulg., Syr., Æth.; ὅτι 36. &c., Rec.; but B., nearly thirty mss., Compl., Cop., Arm., Ar.^p, Slav.^{3,4} Prim., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40) great _Λ: ABC. and the great majority of mss., Compl., Vv., and Ff., omit ἡ πόλις, which many mss., Rec., Æth., Slav., insert before ἡ μεγ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40) great _Λ: Rec. adds ἡ πόλις. (Prospect 1:160)

great _Λ, who: The Revisers rightly omit "city," in 8, and give "which," rather than "because," on good authority, though others not to be despised omit both, and make a new sentence begin here. (Bible Treasury 14:192) who: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. for ἡ have ὅτι. (Prospect 1:160) hath given . . . to drink: πέπωκεν 12. Cop. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40) the nations: τὰ ABC., more than twenty-five mss., Compl., And., Are., cat.; but very many mss., Rec., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40) the nations: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. . . . omit τὰ. (Prospect 1:160) the: The omission of the article as in Text. Rec. is unfounded, and due to Erasmus' carelessness, for the Reuchlin copy before him had no such barbarism. (Bible Treasury 14:192) the fury: 96. Vulg. ms., Er., Cop., omit τοῦ θυμοῦ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40) her: ταύτης B., about seventeen mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40) fornication: πορνείας BC. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40)

14:9 [whole verse]: There is little to note in 9 [of the RV], save departure from order (Bible Treasury 14:192) another, a third: ἄλλ. ἄγγ. τρίτ. ABC., most cursives, Compl., Fuld. Tol., &c., Cop., Syr., Arm., Ar.^p, And.; but same mss., Rec., τρ. ἄγγ. (ἄλλ. ἄγγ. 14., ἄγγ. 12) Vulg. Am. Lips.^{4,5} Are., cat., Cyp., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40)

another, a third: Rec. omits ἄλλος, and has the order slightly different. (Prospect 1:160)

If any one: ὅτι for εἰ τις 30. 98. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40)

one _Λ: αὐτῷ A., Slav., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40)

one _Λ: Ln. αὐτῷ. (Prospect 1:160)

worshippeth the beast: πρ. τὸ θ. (τὸ θυσιαστήριον A., τῷ θηρίῳ C. 95.) ABC., most mss., Compl., Vv., and Ff.; τὸ θ. πρ. a few cursives, Er., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40) worshippeth the beast: Rec. τὸ θ. π., the edd. πρ. τὸ θ. (Prospect 1:160)

his image: C. εἰκ. αὐτῶν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40)

and: C. 14. omit καὶ before λ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40)

14:10 mixed undiluted: In Rev. 14:10, we have the expression τοῦ κεκρασμένου ἀκράτου, more fully describing "the wine of the wrath of God." Lowth and others consider it to convey an antithesis which does not appear in our version — "the mingled unmingled;" that is, the figure is taken from wine unmixed with water to weaken, but mixed with drugs to increase, its strength. . . . The reader may compare an illustration in the Septuagint version of Ps. 75:8, οἶνον ἀκράτου πλήρες κεράσματος. Here, as in Revelation, the word is an adjective, and so understood in the best translations. Since, however, it is beyond doubt used substantively, like the Latin merum, in classic authors, it seems well to notice a word, which is included in most Teetotal lists of New Testament terms. (Pamphlets, p.284-285)

in the cup: ἐκ τοῦ ποτηρίου A. 7. 16. 39. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40) in the cup: Ln. ἐκ τοῦ π. (Prospect 1:160) of his wrath: A. τὴν ὀργήν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40)

he shall be tormented: βασανισθήσονται A. 8. 14. 36. . . . 92. Cop. contrary to BC., Rec., the mass of mss., Vv., and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40)

he shall be tormented: Ln. and Tisch. βασανισθήσονται, others, ησεται. (Prospect 1:160) the holy angels: τῶν ἄγγ. A. 26. Vulg. mss., Cop., Æth.; τῶν ἁγίων ἄγγ. B., most mss., Rec., Vulg. mss., And., Are., cat.; ἄγγ. ἄγγ. C. (14. ἐν ἄγγ. ἄγγ.) 38. 95. Vulg., Syr., &c.; ἄγγ. τ. ἄγγ. Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40)

the holy angels: Tisch. omits ἁγίων, and Ln. and Treg. τῶν in connection with ἐν . . . ἄγγ. (Prospect 1:160)

the holy angels: the article [is] wrongly inserted [in the RV], which may have led to ἄγγ. ἄγγ., instead of ἄγγ. ἄγγ. or the omission of the epithet altogether, as in A. 26. &c. (Bible Treasury 14:192)

14:11 riseth up unto the ages of the ages: ἀναβαίνει after αἰώνων ABC., about thirty-five mss., Compl., *Am. Fuld. Tol. Lips.*⁵, &c., Vv. and Ff.; but very many cursives, Rec., Vv., and Lat. Ff., before εἰς. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40) riseth up unto the ages of the ages: Rec. ἀναβ. before, others after εἰς ἁ. ἁ. (Prospect 1:160) the ages of the ages: C. 18. 28. αἰῶνα (Er.) αἰῶνος (-ων 7. 14. 48. Are., cat.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40)

14:12 the: ἡ ὑπ. ABC., more than twenty-six mss., And. contrary to the majority, Rec., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40)

the: Rec. omits ἡ before ὑπομ. (as do Gr. Kn. and Sz.) (Prospect 1:160)

^Λ that: Many cursives, Rec., Ar.^p, insert ὡδε before οἱ, contrary to ABC., about thirty-five mss., Vulg., Cop., Syr., Æth., Ar.^f, Slav., Are., cat., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40)

^Λ that: Rec. . . . inserts ὡδε before οἱ τ. (Prospect 1:160)

^Λ that: 12 shows us ὡδε, inserted before the latter clause, to get rid of an anomaly. (Bible Treasury 14:192) of God: Er. omits τοῦ θεοῦ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40) of Jesus: 37. 49. 96. Compl., read τοῦ Ἰησοῦ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40)

14:13 saying ^Λ: μοι after λέγ. very many cursives, Rec., Vulg., Demid., &c., contrary to ABC., about thirty-five mss., Am. Fuld. Lips.^{5,6} Cop., Syr., Æth., Arr., Are., cat., Lat. Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40) saying ^Λ: Rec. λ. μοι. (Prospect 1:160) saying ^Λ: “to me” should vanish, though not without the countenance of cursives, versions, and commentators. Both Erasmus and the Complutensian endorsed it. (Bible Treasury 14:192) die: ἀναπαύ. AC.; -σονται ABC. 7. 16. 28. 30. 32. 36. 50. &c., 98. Er., Are.; -σονται most cursives, Rec., And., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.41) die: Rec. &c. ἀναπαύσονται. (Prospect 1:160) die ^Λ: C. ἐν ᾧ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40) henceforth. Yea, saith: ἀπ’ ἄρτι λέγει καὶ B., about twenty-five mss., Compl., Ar.^p; ἀπ’ ἄρτι λέγει καὶ thirteen mss.; ἀπ’ ἄρτι καὶ, λ. AC., very many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.40-41) henceforth. Yea, saith: The Revisers in the margin give the unmeaning division which some of the ancients espoused and Wiclif expresses, and the Rhemish. Tyndale, followed by Cranmer and the Geneva version, gave “which hereafter dye in the lorde,” i.e. die in the Lord. But this is singularly far from the scope. On the contrary there was to be, when this epoch arrives, no more dying in the Lord: hence their blessedness is come, rest and reward assured. The Son of Man reaps the earth, and the vintage of unmingled wrath follows. It is the public award at the Lord’s appearing, for those who had laboured and suffered for Him, and with especial view to the comfort of the saints dying in the Apocalyptic crisis. There was to be no more dying in the Lord, but rather the blessedness of such thenceforward. (Bible Treasury 14:192) for: δέ B. and the great majority, And., Are., cat.; γάρ AC. 26. 38. 95. Vulg., Syr., &c. (Cop., Arm., Arr., all differ). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.41) for: Rec. &c. . . . τὰ δέ, others τὰ γάρ. (Prospect 1:160) for: “For,” not “and,” their works. &c. (Bible Treasury 14:192) their: Er. omits αὐτῶν before ἀκ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.41)

14:14 I saw: ἰδ. ABC. 7. 14. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.41)

upon: ought not the Revisers, in accordance with their practice elsewhere, as in 4:2,4 (compared with 9,10, and 13:1,16, 14:9,11), to have said “upon,” not “on,” the cloud? Cf. 15, 16 (Bible Treasury 14:192) sitting like: καθήμενον ὁμοιον ABC., about thirty-five mss., Vulg., Cop., Slav.³, Are., cat., Prim., Tich.; -ισε -ος very many mss. and some Vv. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.41) sitting like: Rec. and Ln. καθήμενος ὁμ., others -ον. (Prospect 1:160)

Son: υἱόν AB., seventeen mss.; υἱὸ C. and the majority, Rec., And., Are., cat.; υἱοῦ 26.; υἱῶν 28.; υἱός Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.41)

Son: Ln. υἱόν. (Prospect 1:160)

having: C. ἔχον. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.41)

^Λ his: τὴν κ. A., about twelve mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.41)

^Λ his: Rec. Gr. &c. τῆς κ., others τὴν κ. (Prospect 1:160)

14:15 out of the temple, crying: A. κράζ. ἐκ. τ. ν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.41) temple: For ναοῦ, 7. 12. 16. 28. 38. 46. 47. 49. &c., with some Vv., give οὐρανοῦ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.41)

a loud voice: φ. μ. ABC., more than thirty mss., Compl., And., Are., cat.; μ. φ. very many cursives; μ. τῇ φ. Er., Prim. omits. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.41)

a loud voice: Rec. μεγ. φ., the edd. φ. μ. (Prospect 1:160) to reap: θερ. ABC., upwards of twenty mss., Er., And., Are., cat.; τοῦ θ. very many cursives, Compl., Rec.; θερισμοῦ 38. 41. &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.41) come ^Λ: σοι after ἦλθεν many cursives, Rec.; σου 12. 17. 36. &c., contrary to ABC., most mss., Vv., and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.41) come ^Λ: Neither σοι nor σου is to be read (Bible Treasury 14:192) dried up: ἐξηράνθη in 15 does not mean “ripe” but perhaps “over-ripe” or simply and literally “dried up.” Why should this be departed from? (Bible Treasury 15:192)

14:16 the cloud: τὴν ν. C. and the great majority, Are., cat.; τῆς ν. A. 16.* 36. 47. 97.; τῇ ν. B. 7. 8. 13. 14. 50. 90. 93. 94. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.41)

the cloud: Some read τὴν ν. (Prospect 1:160) upon the cloud: no doubt the genitive is right, not the accusative nor the dative (Bible Treasury 14:192) his: τὸν δρέπ. Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.41)

14:17 came: ἦλθεν A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.41)

in the heaven: ἐν οὐρ. C. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.41)

he: Er. has ἄγγ. before ἔχ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.41)

14:18 came: A., Am. Fuld., omit ἐξηλθεν, contrary to BC. and almost all other authorities. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.41) came: Ln. and Tisch. omit ἐξηλθεν. (Prospect 1:160)

^Λ having: ὁ ἔχ. AC.; ἔχ. B. and almost all the cursives, And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.41)

^Λ having: the Revisers boldly adopt ὁ with A C, “he that,” &c. (Bible Treasury 14:192) voice: κραυγῇ C., almost all the cursives (twenty-four of which, Are., cat., prefix ἐν), some Vv., And., Are., cat.; φωνῇ AB. 31. 38. 95. Vulg. Æth., Arm., Ar., Er., Steph., omit τῆς ἀμπέλου. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.41) voice: Rec. &c. κραυγῇ, Matthiae ἐν κ., Ln. Tisch. and Treg. φωνῇ. (Prospect 1:160) of the vine: whence did our authorised translators get τῆς ἀμπέλου “of the vine”? Not from Erasmus or Stephens, but from Beza who refers to Arethas and the Complutensian edition, as well as two of his own copies and the Vulgate — O si sic omnia. (Bible Treasury 14:192) her grapes are fully ripe: ἡκμασεν ἡ στ. τῆς γῆς near thirty mss., Æth., Are., cat.; -σαν (A. ἡχ.) αἱ στ. αὐτῆς AC., very many cursives, Rec., Vulg., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.41) her grapes are fully ripe: Matthiae ἡκμασεν ἡ στ. (Prospect 1:160)

14:19 put: ἐβαλεν ABC. and very many cursives; ἐξέβ. about twenty-four mss., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.41-42)

put: Matthiae καὶ ἐξέβαλεν. (Prospect 1:160)

the great winepress: τὴν ληνόν (C. ἄλῳνα) . . . τὸν μέγαν ABC., near thirty mss., Compl., Are., cat., Prim., Ansb.; τ. λ. . . τὴν μεγάλην very many cursives, Rec., And. (Some mss., as 30. 94. 97. 98., have τὸν λ.; and others, as 12. 34. Æth., Vic., omit τ. μεγ.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42)

the great winepress: Rec. τὴν μ., the edd. τὸν μ. (Prospect 1:160)

the great winepress: [Q. Rev. 14:19; 17:4; 19:1; 21:12. Is not the grammar set aside in following the ancient copies? How are these anomalous constructions to be explained? W.L.]

A. The anacolutha I cannot but accept on the authority of the best MSS. as the genuine phrases of the writer, which are no doubt in every instance intentional, though we may not in every instance see why. Later scribes changed these and many other such irregularities of form into expressions conformed to common syntax. Nobody would have introduced them unless they had been the readings of the text originally. The tendency of corrections is to smooth down what seems harsh. It is clear, that even apart from inspiration, John did not so write for want of knowing the more usual rules; for he employs them himself regularly, unless where he introduces these singular phrases for special reasons. The same principle is true of Luke 2:13; 19:37; Acts 5:16; 21:36; Philippians 2:1 (in critical texts, ἐπις σπλάγχνα). But it is far more frequently applied and carried out more boldly in the Revelation than in any other part of the New Testament. Hebrew forms predominate.

As to the change from τὴν λ. to τὸν μ. which I accept as the true reading, it must be borne in mind that in the LXX. the substantive occurs sometimes in the masculine. Here the use of the two genders together is no doubt peculiar, and seems owing to the intervening phrases, τοῦ θομοῦ, τοῦ Θεοῦ, after which the Spirit gives more energy by availing Himself of the masculine form.

Again γέμον βδελυγμάτων καὶ τά is a mixture of the ordinary genitival construction with the accusative, as the corresponding Hebrew word does. Emphasis is secured thereby.

Revelation 19:1 ὄχλου . . . λεγόντων is the constructio ad sensum, common enough even in classic Greek and Latin, a singlar collective with a plural following. See chapter 7:9; John 12:12. In Revelation 21:12 ἔχουσα for ἔχουσιν is not the only instance of variatio structurae in verses 10-12. See Revelation 3:12; 4:1; 6:9; 8:9; 9:14; 11:1,4,15; 14:7,12; 16:3; 17:14; 18:12; 19:12. In many of these cases various readings appear from the effort to remove the strange shape of the phrase to common concords. In such cases the well-known canon applies. (Bible Treasury 8:224)

14:20 without: ἔξωθεν ABC., most mss., Compl.; ἔξω many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42)

without: Rec. ἔξω, the edd. ἔξωθεν. (Prospect 1:160)

a thousand six hundred: αχ´ or αχ B. 8. 14. 28. 48. 49. 50. . . . 90.97., but C. 11. omit ἐξακοσίων. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42)

off: "As far as" fairly represents ἀπό in 20 [in the RV]. (Bible Treasury 14:192)

15:1 I saw: ἴδ. (and in verse 2 and 5) ABC. 7. 14. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42)

the seven last plagues . . . finished: the Revisers give rightly "seven plagues, the last" (i.e., such as are the last), not "the seven last plagues" as in the Authorised Version. The reason is annexed why they were not the last — because in them was finished the wrath of God. It is scarce necessary to add that "finished" is the true rendering of ἐτελέσθη, not "filled up," which would answer rather to ἐπληρώθη, the reading of no copy whatever. (Bible Treasury 14:207) them: αὐτοῖς Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42)

15:2 [whole verse]: Matthiae's order differs a little. (Prospect 1:160)

[whole verse]: (Bible Treasury 15:2 seems to be in the Revised Version as strongly rendered as the Greek can fairly bear. (Bible Treasury 15:192) glass: ὕαλινον many mss. (twice), Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42) glass: In 2 occurs again the error of "glassy" in the Revised Version, whereas the Authorised Version "of glass" is correct, as pointed out in the remarks on 4:6. It is the symbolic material in contrast with the sea of water in the temple: no longer the means of cleansing, but the sign of fixed purity. The misrendering destroys the doctrine, as far as it goes, and insinuates either mere sentiment or a false thought in lieu of the truth intended. (Bible Treasury 14:207) mingled with fire: π. μ. Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42) those that won the victory over: "Them that come victorious from" [in the RV] is certainly more literal and pregnant like the Greek than "them that had gotten the victory over." It is the usual form of designating a class apart from time. (Bible Treasury 14:207) over the beast, [and over his image,]: ἐκ τ. ἐκ. κ. ἐκ. τ. θ. αὐτ. B. and about twenty-four mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42) over the beast, [and over his image,]: [The words "[and over his image,]" are supplied from WK's version in Prospect 1:161, having been omitted here by oversight, no doubt.]

and λ : ἐκ τοῦ χαράγματος αὐτοῦ added after καὶ by many cursives, Rec., And., Are., cat., contrary to ABC., most mss., Compl., Vv., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42) and λ : Rec. adds ἐκ τοῦ χαράγματος αὐτοῦ. (Prospect 1:160) and λ : "Over his mark" in the Authorised Version is the Erasmusian misreading, with a few cursives, an addition opposed to all the best authorities. The Complutensian editors were right. (Bible Treasury 14:208) and λ : Now the truth is that the little word "or" inserted there before the clause "the name of the beast" ought to disappear. The difference in the sense is that "the mark" might be either the name of the beast or the number of his name; not some third thing distinct from these two, as the ordinary text might suggest. . . . Even in the English Bible the word "and over the number" is printed in italics, and only adds to the confusion with the words "over his mark." I refer to it to shew that wherever there is even such a little word as "or" introduced by man into the scripture, the sense is impaired. In the language which the Spirit uses, it is but a letter that makes the difference; but you cannot even put a letter into the word of God without so far injuring its beauty and perfectness. Through the mercy of God, His children may get little harm through such blemishes; but it is in part because they do not think enough about it. If they were to work a system out of them, they might fall into some serious mistake in not a few cases. But happily (this is the way God mercifully shields them) they do not really receive the false doctrine; they do not know what it means, and therefore leave it. But evidently God is little honored where persons merely escape error because they do not understand it. It is the mercy of God thus to preserve His people from evil; but it is His overruling hand rather than the intelligent guidance of the Spirit. The book of Revelation has suffered more than any other from the carelessness of man; and as we are looking into its contents, and it seems desirable for God's children to have clear thoughts about His word, I thought it better to notice it, however small a matter it may appear. I remember having myself been perplexed to make out the difference between the mark of the beast and its name and its number. But having examined the question more closely, I found that there was really nothing to decide about. A little fox had slipped in and spoiled the vine. In short, the mark was not something different from the name or number, but was the general term for both — the name expressing probably a more intimate and entire subjection to the beast than the number of his name. (Lect. on Rev., p.338-339) upon: But surely the marginal "upon" or the Authorised Version "on" the glass sea is right, not the mere "by" of the Revised Version. "On the shore" of the sea is a perversion, if the sea refer to the temple; and it would be hard to bring in the Red Sea among the allusions of chapter 4. And if the Red Sea be excluded there, the beauty of the same image here, with the characteristic difference of mingled with fire, would be lost by including the Red Sea in it. To my mind the intention was to show these later overcomers as distinct, not only from the twenty-four elders, but also from the earlier martyrs of chap. 6:9-11. If so, there is no reason from the imagery of chap. 4 in favour of "by," or "at," as against "on," any more than from Exodus 15. (Bible Treasury 14:207)

Λ harps: τὰς κ. B. (Mai) 2. 7. 8. 16. 29. 32. 35. 39. 42. 43. 48. 50. &c., 87. 90. 94. 97. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42)

Λ harps: "The" harps of gold seems to have been the blunder of all the English versions from Wiclif to the Authorised Version. Certainly neither Erasmus nor the Complutensians, neither Stephens nor yet Beza, receive the article, though given in B 2, 7, 8, 16, 29, 32, 35, 38, 39, 43, 47, 48, 50, 87, 94, 97, not to speak of Andreas and Arethas. But there appears to be no doubt that it is an error, probably from repeating the last syllable of the preceding word. (Bible Treasury 14:208)

15:3 And they sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and: C. drops καὶ ᾄδ. . . . τ. θεοῦ, as 8. omits τὴν ᾠδ. . . . to καὶ 2nd inclusive (both through ὁμοιωτέλετον). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42) of Moses: μωϋσ. AB. and the mass, Compl.; μωσ. many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42) of Moses: Rec. Μωσέως δ. later edd. Μωϋσέως τοῦ δ. (Prospect 1:160) the servant: τοῦ δ. A. 2. 12. 14. 16. 28. 32. 33. 37. 38. 42. 47. 49. &c., 96. Compl., And.; δ. B. and the majority, Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42)

Λ thy: Er. omits τὰ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42)

Lord: Er. reads κύριος. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42) nations: ἐθνῶν AB., forty-five mss., Compl., Cop., Æth., Ar.^p, Slav.^{3,4,10} And., Are., cat., Cyp., &c.; αἰώνων C. 18. 95. Syr., Ar.^c, Arm.; ἀγίων a few cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42) nations: Rec. ἀγίων, the edd. read ἐθνῶν. after A. B. &c. (C reads αἰώνων, i.e. "of ages.") (Prospect 1:160) nations: Mr. Elliott hesitatingly inclines to "King of ages" in his text (H.A., iii. p. 473) up to the last edition; but in his note, supported by A C and a Paris cursive, Coislin 202, with the Vulgate and other versions, he ventured the opinion that the (undoubtedly false) vulgar reading ἀγίων seems "best of all to suit the context." To me this reluctance to bow to the best reading ἐθνῶν (supported by the Alex., Porph. and Vat. uncials, forty-five cursives, the Æthiopic, Arabic of the Polyglots, Coptic, not to speak of the corrections in the Sinai MS., Slav. MSS., Greek and some Latin fathers) is not happy. I am glad however to see that he omits this, and seems content with the better authorities in his fifth edition. Page 461 by a misprint gives C as well as A for ἐθνῶν: it should be B. (Lect. on Rev., p.341) nations: It means "king of nations," not of "saints"; and a very important error it is to be expunged. There is no doubt of it. There is not a scholar who knows anything at all about these matters who would not agree with me. But anyone — I do not care who he is — whether he is Roman Catholic, or Tractarian, or anything else — would agree with me in this, and he would not require to be told it because every scholar knows it. The notion of "king of saints" is very unscriptural; and it is a very important mistake because the proper notion of the relation of a king to his people is one of distance and of graduated ranks in the kingdom. The word "king" implies graduated ranks, all having their place and their measure of nearness or of distance, and, consequently, there are all kinds of relative distance among themselves.

That is not the case in the church of God, because the least Christian is as much a member of Christ's body as the greatest. You see the fact of the membership of the body puts aside all these questions of relative or different distances. In the kingdom there will be these differences. (Bible Treasury N10:147) nations: There is beyond doubt no such thought or phrase in scripture as "King of saints." It is one of the worst readings of the rather vicious Text. Rec. of the Revelation. Not only is it against the best witnesses, but it conveys an unfounded notion of mischievous consequence. (Rev. Exp., p.182) nations: It is hard to conceive why the Revisers preferred αἰώνων "ages," to ἐθνῶν "nations," in the face of Jer. 10:7. No doubt the authorities are conflicting; but the Old Testament allusion is evident, and the context confirms it in the verse that follows. Probably the absurdly false reading which Erasmus (not the Complutensians) gave against his own MS. 1, and without any known Greek copy was due to confounding some abbreviation of seculorum for sanctorum, as Tischendorf conjectures; as it is likely that the Reviser's reading is due to 1 Tim. 1:17. No wonder then that Bengel, Griesbach, Heinrich, Scholz, Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles, T. S. Green, Alford, Wordsworth, hold to ἐθνῶν, if Westcott and Hort alone, or nearly so, prefer αἰώνων. But should such a reading have found its way into the text of the Revised New Testament? Surely what has been discredited by so many and various critics of the highest eminence, on ample authority, ought not to be brought by Cambridge influence into a work which seeks universal acceptance. (Bible Treasury 14:208)

15:4 fear Λ : σε after φ. most cursives, Rec., some Vv., Are., cat., contrary to ABC. 12. 14. 36. 47....92. Er., Am. Fuld. Demid. Tol., Æth., Arm., Cyp., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42) fear Λ : the pronoun is not found in the best witnesses, though in most of the cursives &c., & 95 shifting its place. (Bible Treasury 14:208) glorify: δοξάσει ABC., seventeen cursives, Are., cat.; -ση most mss., Rec., And. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42) glorify: Matthiae and Ln. δοξάσει. (Prospect 1:160) holy: ὁσιος AC., many cursives, Rec., Vv., Are., cat.; ἅγιος B., the great majority, (Demid. apparently, and Syr. = both). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42) holy: The edd. ὁσιος, but B. and many MSS. ἅγιος. (Prospect 1:160) holy: The Greek for "holy" differs in the MSS., the best reading that which implies mercy in God (or piety in men), and not what means separation to God. (Bible Treasury 14:208) for: εἰ is inserted after or before by 10. 36. 37. 47. 49. . . . 95. 96. Compl., Vulg., Syr., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42) all the nations: π. τ. ἔθ. AC., most mss. (95. omitting τὰ ἔθ.), Vv., &c.; πάντες B., upwards of thirty cursives, Ar.^p (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42)

all the nations: Matthiae μ. ὅσ. ὅτι πάντες. (Prospect 1:160)

the: the Revisers rightly say "the" nations; for they shall all come yet and pay homage before God, but this as the fruit of the manifestation of His righteousness or righteous acts, not of the gospel as now preached (Bible Treasury 14:208) thee Λ : κύριε A. after ἐν σου. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42)

15:5 these things: C. μετ' αὐτά. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42)

I saw: It is hardly "I looked" as in the Authorised Version of 5, but "I saw," (Bible Treasury 14:208)

Λ there: ἰδοὺ before ἦν. many mss., Vv., &c., contrary to ABC., most cursives, Compl., and Vv., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42)

Λ there: Rec. adds ἰδοὺ. (Prospect 1:160)

Λ there: "behold" should vanish; for not even Erasmus' Codex Reuchlini has it and, of course, not the Complutensian edition. (Bible Treasury 14:208) temple: It is extraordinary that the author of the Horae Apoc. should say that ναός or temple is sometimes used more largely of the whole, including the altarcourt; stranger still that he should cite Rev. 11:1,2 in proof, seeing that the altar and the outer court are so expressly distinguished there (as I believe always). There is another word to comprehend all, namely ιερόν, which is never used in the Apocalypse, though it occurs repeatedly in other parts of the New Testament. So also the door of the tabernacle and the hanging at the court-gate are not confounded in scripture. (Lect. on Rev., p.344)

15:6 Λ that: οἱ before ἐχ. AC., most mss., Compl., Are., cat., contrary to B. and many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42) came: ἐξῆλθον C., -εν A.*, -ον A. and perhaps all others. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42)

[out of the temple]: ἐκ τοῦ ναοῦ after πλ. AC., very many mss., Vv., Ff.; ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ 10. 49. . . . 96. Compl. (transposed in Arm., Slav.), omitted by B., about twenty-eight mss., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42)

[out of the temple]: Matthiae and Tisch. omit ἐκ τοῦ ναοῦ (Treg. in brackets). (Prospect 1:160)

Λ clad: οἱ ἦσαν before ἐνδ. B., about thirty-five cursives, Compl. omitted by AC., many mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42)

Λ clad: Matthiae reads οἱ ἦσαν ἐνδ. (Prospect 1:160)

Λ bright: καὶ λ. very many cursives, Compl., Rec., Vulg., &c.; omitted by ABC., about thirty mss., Er., *Am. Fuld. Tol. Demid. Lips.*⁵, most Vv., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42-43) linen: λίθον AC. 38. 48. 49. (Codd. Ap., And., Bed., &c.), Am. Fuld. Demid. Lips.^{4,5,6}; λίνον (B. 14. 18. 36. 92. 97.) B., nearly all the cursives, Vv., And., Are., cat., Prim; ληρόν 7. Æth., Ar.², omit, Compl. adds καί. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.42) linen: Ln. λίθον. (Prospect 1:160)

linen: . . . in chapter 15 A C, three cursives not to speak of some MSS. mentioned by Andreas, Bede, &c., support λίθον, stone! for λίνον. the Harleian cursive of the eleventh century (5537) exhibits the still stranger ληρόν. (Lect. on Rev., p.352) linen: in 6 [of the RV] we have the portentous reading λίθον "a stone!" (A C 38, 39, 48, 90, 4) favoured by Lachmann and Tregelles, as lately by the Cambridge professors, against all the other authorities, though some support the plural form of linen. Ezek. 28 seems a poor ground in the gorgeous description of Tyre's prince for the holy executors of God's last plagues. No doubt, in chap. 19:14 the word used is β. not λ. But this is as it should be; for angels are quite distinct from saints, however much superstitious ignorance, never Scripture, tends to merge them together. Here again, what were the Committee about to let the redoubtable twain with their satellites persuade competent and independent minds into such a vagary, or at least so questionable a word? In the editions of L., Tr., and of W. & H., it is not so singular. A public work should have been better safe-guarded. (Bible Treasury 14:208) round about: 12. 31. Er., omit περί, for which 28 has ἐπὶ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.43)

15:7 one of: Several mss. omit ἐν, and some, Er., ἐκ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.43)

bowls: It is "bowls" in 7 [in the RV] rather than "vials"; and so throughout chap. 16, &c. (Bible Treasury 14:208)

15:8 with smoke: καπνοῦ AC., very many cursives, Rec., &c.; ἐκ τοῦ κ. B., near thirty mss., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.43)

with smoke: Matthiae ἐκ τοῦ κ. (Prospect 1:160) was able: ἐδ. AC. 2. 6. 7. 8. 29. 30. 31. 32. 48. 50..90. 93. 94. 97. 98.; ἦδ. B. and the majority. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.43) was able: The modern edd. ἐδύν. rather than ἦδ. (Prospect 1:160) into the: Er. ἐν τῷ ν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.43) till: ἄχρις οὗ C. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.43)

seven: ἐπτά last is omitted by 10. 12. 17. 18. 28. 38. 49. 96. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.43) finished: [In the RV] it is "finished" as in 1. (Bible Treasury 14:208)

16:1 a loud voice: μ . ϕ . ABC. 8. 13. 14. 31. 41. 42. 43. 48. 50...94. 95. 97. Are., cat.; ϕ . μ . most cursives, Rec., And., Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.43)

a loud voice: Rec. and Gr., ϕ . μ ., the edd. μ . ϕ . (Prospect 1:160)

[out of the temple]: ἐκ τοῦ ναοῦ AC., very many mss., Vv., And., Prim.; ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ 13. *Demid. Tol. Lips.*⁶, Cop., Ar.²; but B. and near thirty mss., Syr. (not in Pol.), Ar.², Slav.^{3,4,10} Are., cat., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.43)

[out of the temple]: Matthiae and Tisch. omit ἐκ τοῦ ναοῦ, which Treg. brackets. (Prospect 1:160) and: 7. 12. 16. 28. 36. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 49...96. Er., Compl., *Lips.*⁴, Cop., Arm., omit καί after ὕπ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.43) pour out: ἐκχέετε AC. 12. 14. Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.43) pour out: Ln. Tisch. and Treg. ἐκχέετε, others -ατε. (Prospect 1:160) seven: τ . ἐπτά ϕ . ABC., more than thirty mss., Vv., though many cursives, Rec., Cop., Æth., Slav., omit ἐπτά. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.43) unto: the Revisers give it literally "into," not "upon," and so in 2, 3, 4. The difference is maintained in the Greek, for it is strictly "upon" in the latter part of 2, 8, 10, 12, (of 4), 17. (Bible Treasury 14:208)

16:2 first Λ : [See note to Rev. 16:10]

the: Er. omits ὁ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.43)

first Λ : ἄγγελος 12. 28. 33. 35. 36...87. Vulg., Æth., Arm., Arr., Slav. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.43) unto: εἰς τ. γ . ABC., about thirty-five mss., Vulg., Syr., Ar.², Prim.; ἐπὶ many cursives, Rec., Cop. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.43) unto: Rec. Gr. and Kn. ἐπὶ τὴν γ. the others εἰς. (Prospect 1:161) unto . . . upon: In the Text. Rec. of 2 it is wrongly εἰς in the latter part, but ἐπὶ is unquestionable. (Bible Treasury 14:208) [See note to Rev. 16:1] evil and: A. omits κακόν, Cop., Arm., &c., κακ. καί. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.43) upon: ἐπὶ τ. ἀνθ. ABC., about thirty-five mss., Syr., Arm., Arr., &c.; εἰς τ. ἀνθ. many cursives, Rec., Vulg., Cop. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.43) upon: Rec. Gr. and Kn. εἰς τ. α ., others ἐπὶ. (Prospect 1:161) that worshipped his image: προσκ. τῇ εἰκ. αὐτ. ABC., thirty-two mss., Compl.; τῇ εἰκ αὐτ. πρ. many cursives, Rec.; τὴν εἰκ. πρ. αὐτ. Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.43-44) that worshipped his image: Rec. differs from the edd. as to the order of the last words. (Prospect 1:161)

16:3 second Λ : ἄγγελος B. and the great mass of mss., most Vv., And., Are., cat., omitted by AC. 18. 95. Am. Fuld. Demid. Tol. Lips., Æth., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.44) second Λ : Ln. Tisch. and Treg. omit ἄγγελος here and in verses 4, 8, 10, 12, and 17, Kn. bracketing the word in each case; Gr. and Sz. insert it in verse 3. (Prospect 1:161) into: [See note to Rev. 16:1] living: ζωῆς AC. 95. Syr.; ζῶσα B., very many mss., Rec.; about thirty mss., Slav.^{3,4}, Prim., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.44) living: Rec. ζῶσα, the edd. ζωῆς, save Sz. who omits either. (Prospect 1:161) soul: A. ψυχῆς. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.44)

those: τά is added before ἐν by AC., with some Syr. and Slav. mss.; τῶν 95., but B. and most others, Rec., And., Are., cat., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.44)

those: Ln Tisch. and Treg. read τὰ before ἐν τῇ θ. (Prospect 1:161) those: τά seems omitted [in the RV], as indeed κ B P and most cursives support the commonly received text. But A C, &c., give τά which might easily be dropt. The sense is substantially the same. (Bible Treasury 14:208)

16:4 third α: ἄγγελος most cursives, Rec., Syr., Cop., And., contrary to ABC., thirty others, Vulg. (Am. Fuld. Demid. &c.), ἄθ., Are., cat., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.44)

third α: See verse 3. (Prospect 1:161)

angel . . . into: [See notes to Rev. 16:1, 10]

[into]: εἰς 2nd is omitted by AC. 10. 43. 49. 91. 95. 96. Compl., Cop., Prim., Ansb., contrary to B. and the rest. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.44)

[into]: Ln. Tisch. and Treg. drop εἰς before τ. π. (Prospect 1:161) they became: ἐγένοντο A. 36. 95. Harl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.44) they became: Ln. Tisch. . . prefer ἐγένοντο to ἐγένετο. (Prospect 1:161)

they: [The RV says] "it" became blood. (Bible Treasury 14:208)

16:5 of the waters: Er., Arm., omit τῶν ὑδάτων. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.44)

α art: κύριε after Δίκ. is inserted by many mss., Rec., Vulg., ἄθ., Arm., contrary to ABC., most mss., Am. Fuld. Demid. Tol. Lips., Cop., Syr., Ar.^p, And., Are., cat., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.44)

α art: Rec. adds κύριε. (Prospect 1:161)

α art . . . α holy: The change in 5 [in the RV] is greater, and on excellent authority. "O Lord" is omitted, and "thou Holy One" appears instead of "and shalt be." (Bible Treasury 14:208) that wast: ὅς (δ 28. 87.) ἦν B. 2. 8. 14. 29. 30. 40. 41. 42. 43. 48....93. 98. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.44)

α holy: καί after ἦν is inserted by many mss., Rec., contrary to ABC., more than forty cursives, Compl., Vulg., Arm., And., Are., cat. ὁ before δοῖος is read by many mss., but rejected in ABC. and thirty cursives. (Compl. gives ὁ but not καί, Beza καὶ ὁ ἐσόμενος.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.44)

α holy: Rec. adds . . . καὶ ὁ δοῖος, Gr. Kn. and Sz. ὁ δοῖος, but the uncial and many other MSS. and versions omit καὶ and ὁ. Beza and the Elzevir edition have ἐσόμενος, which the authorised version follows. (Prospect 1:161)

16:6 thou gavest: δέδωκας AC. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.44)

to drink: πῖν C., πῶν A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.44)

α they: γάρ is added after ἀξιοῖ by many cursives, Rec., Vulg., Are., cat., contrary to ABC., the majority of mss., Compl., Fuld. Tol. Lips.^{5,6}. And. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.44)

α they: Rec. γάρ. (Prospect 1:161)

α they: "for" is dropt rightly [in the RV] (Bible Treasury 14:208)

16:7 I heard α the altar say: it should be "I heard the altar say" on first-rate authority; as no doubt "another out of" is an interpolation due to the desire of softening so bold a figure. (Bible Treasury 14:208) heard α: ἄλλου ἐκ before τ. θ., given by some cursives, Rec., disappears in AB. (Compl. has ἐκ), C., most cursives, Fuld. Tol., Cop., Syr., Ar.^p, &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.44) heard α: Rec. ἄλλου ἐκ. (Prospect 1:161)

16:8 the: For ὁ Er. gives ὅτε. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.44) fourth α: ἄγγελος is read by apparently most mss., Vulg., Cop., And., Prim., contrary to ABC., about twenty mss., Am. Fuld. Tol. Lips., Syr., ἄθ., Ar.^p, Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.44) fourth α: See verse 3. (Prospect 1:161) fourth α: [See note to Rev. 16:10]

upon: [See note to Rev. 16:1]

him: "it" is probably right, rather than "him," as in the Authorised Version, which is put in the margin [of the RV]. (Bible Treasury 14:208) men with fire: ἐν π. τ. ἀνθ. B., twenty mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.44)

16:9 the men . . . α God: why not "the" men? On the other hand they [the RV] say "the" God, &c. (Bible Treasury 14:208)

the men . . . α God: 16:9 does not stand happily in the Revised Version though expressing the Greek article in English — at least so it seems to the Americans [correctors of the RV] and to me. It is another case with 11, as all agree. (Bible Treasury 15:192)

blasphemed α: οἱ ἄνθρωποι is added after ἐβλ. by B., thirty-six others, Compl., Syr., Ar.^p, Slav.⁴, Are., cat., but AC., many cursives, Rec., Vulg., Cop., &c., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.44)

blasphemed α: Sz. ἐβ. οἱ ἄνθρωποι, following B. and many other MSS. and versions. (Prospect 1:161) the name: A. has ἐνώπιον for τὸ ὄν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.44)

α authority: τῇν before ἐξ. A. 10. 12. 36. 37. 49. 81. 96. Compl., contrary to BC. and the rest, Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.44)

α authority: Ln. Tisch. and Treg. τῇν ἐξ. (Prospect 1:161) not: οὐχί C. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.44)

16:10 fifth α: ἄγγελος is supported by many cursives, Rec., Vulg., Cop., And., Are., cat., Prim., contrary to ABC., thirty mss., Am. Fuld. Tol. Lips., Syr., ἄθ., &c., Tich. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.44)

fifth α: See verse 3. (Prospect 1:161)

fifth α: In 10 as in 2, 4, 8, 10, 12, and 17 "angel" is excluded on very good grounds. (Bible Treasury 14:208)

upon: [See note to Rev. 16:1]

throne: Of course "throne" should displace "seat." (Bible Treasury 14:208) darkened: ἐσκοτισμένη B. 28. 28. [sic.] (Rev. of John, 1860, p.44) gnawed: ἐμασῶντο AC. 7. 8. 9. 13. 14. 37. 50. . . . 93. 94. 95. 96. 98.; ἐμασσ. B., most cursives, And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.44)

gnawed: The older MSS. read ἐμασῶντο, (not ἐμασσ.) and are followed by Ln. and Tisch. (Prospect 1:161)

16:11 [whole verse]: [See note to 16:9]

16:12 sixth α: ἄγγελος with many cursives, Rec., Vulg., Cop., &c., And., Are., cat., Prim., Tich., contrary to ABC., about thirty others, Am. Fuld. Tol. Lips., Syr., ἄθ., Ar.^p (Rev. of John, 1860, p.44-45)

sixth α: See verse 3. (Prospect 1:161) sixth α: [See note to Rev. 16:10]

upon: [See note to Rev. 16:1]

the: τόν before Εὐφ. AC. with most mss., Rec., And., but omitted by B. ('Εφ.), more than twenty-five mss., Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.45) the: Gr. Kn. and Sz. omit τόν before Εὐφρ. (Prospect 1:161) east: ἀνατολῆς BC., about thirty-five mss., Are., cat.; -ὦν A., very many mss., Rec., And. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.45)

east: Matthiae and Treg. ἀνατολῆς. (Prospect 1:161) east: Or "sun-rising," as in chaps. 7:2; 21:13. (Lect. on Rev., p. Iv) the east: it is "from the sun-rising," not "of the east." The article in the Greek is probably right. (Bible Treasury 14:208)

16:13 I saw: ἰδ. AB. 7. 14. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.45)

of the dragon, and out of the mouth: C. 9. 27. 36. omit from στ. 1st to στ. 2nd. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.45)

three unclean: ἀκ. τρ. B. and at least twenty-five cursives, Are., cat.; πρ. ἀκ. AC., very many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.45)

as frogs: ὡς βάτραχοι AB., most cursives, Compl., and Vv. (Are., cat. 18. 36. 38. 49.  97. ὡς βατράχους); ὁμοία βατράχοις many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.45)

as frogs: Rec. ὁμοία β., the edd. ὡς β. (Prospect 1:161)

16:14 of demons: δαιμονίων A., more than thirty cursives, Are., cat.; δαιμόνων B., many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.45) of demons: The edd. δαιμονίων. (Prospect 1:161) signs, who: ἃ ἐκπορεύεται A., with most cursives, Are., cat., Rec.; ἃ ἐκπορεύονται B. 7. 16. 36. 39. (28. ἃ καί), Vulg., Arm., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.45) go forth: ἐκπορεύεσθαι 18. 95. Er., Steph. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.45) kings λ: τῆς γῆς καί before τῆς οἰκ. given by many mss., Rec., is rejected in AB., most mss., Compl., (Vulg., Cop.,) Syr., Æth., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.45) kings λ: Rec. adds τῆς γῆς καί. (Prospect 1:161) the: τόν before πάλ. AB., upwards of thirty mss., Compl., Are., cat., though omitted by many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.45)

the: Rec. . . . omits τόν. (Prospect 1:161)

[that] great day: ἐκείνης B. and almost all others, Syr., And., Are., cat., Prim., omitted by A. (τ. μεγάλης ἡμ. A. 95. Cop.) 14. 38. 92. 95. Vulg., Cop., Æth., Arm., Ar.^c, Tich. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.45)

[that] great day: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. add ἐκείνης, Ln. and Tisch. τ. μ. ἡ., Treg. τ. ἡ. [ἐ.] τ. μ. (Prospect 1:161)

the Almighty: παντοκράτωρ 7. 28. Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.45)

16:16 they: The more common rendering is "he." But compare verse 14. (Prospect 1:161)

they: Or "he." (Lect. on Rev., p. lvi) they: In the language that the Holy Ghost employed, the word is capable of meaning either he or they gathered. There are certain cases where, in that language, it is doubtful whether "they" or "he" be meant; and this is one. The word "demons" is of such a nature, that the verb which has it for its subject might be either singular or plural. Here the subject is not expressed, so that it is quite optional as far as this is concerned: all depends upon the sense of the context. If it be "He gathered," the reference of course is to God Almighty, who might be said to do it through the intervention of these unclean spirits. If it be "they gathered," it would simply mean that the spirits of demons had accomplished the purpose for which they were sent forth. (Lect. on Rev., p.351) they: the Revisers, like many, render "they," not "he." Grammatically, it might be either. If "they," it is the evil spirits as instruments; if "he," it is the One who employed them. (Bible Treasury 14:208) place: ποταμόν A. for τόπον. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.46) that: Compl. omits τόν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.46)

Harmagedon: αρμαγεδών (ἄ. or ὰ) A., very many mss., Er., Compl. (-δδών Rec.); ερμ. Am. Lips.^{4.6} Cop., Are., cat., Tich.; μαγεδών or -δδών B., more than twenty-five mss., Syr., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.46)

Harmagedon: Most read Ἀρμαγεδών, save Ln. and Tisch. Ἀρ., and Matthiae Μαγεδών. (Prospect 1:161)

Harmagedon: The margin [of the American correctors of the RV] might have been added in 16. (Bible Treasury 15:192)

16:17 seventh: ἑβδόμη with most mss., Rec., Vv., And., Are., cat., Prim., contrary to AB., very many cursives, Am. Fuld. Tol. Lips.⁵, Syr. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.46)

seventh: See verse 3. (Prospect 1:161)

seventh λ: [See note to Rev. 16:10]

upon: [See note to Rev. 16:1]

upon: ἐπὶ AB., about thirty-five cursives, Are., cat.; εἰς very many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.46)

upon: Rec. εἰς. (Prospect 1:161) loud: μεγάλη after φ. B., almost all the cursives, Vulg., Syr., Cop., Æth., And., Are., cat., omitted by A. 12. 46. Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.46) loud: Ln. and Tisch. drop μ. γ. and τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, which Kn. and Treg. bracket. (Prospect 1:161) from the temple: ἐκ. τ. ν. A. 12. 18. 36. 38. 46. 95. Er.; ἀπό B. and the mass, Rec., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.46) from the temple: Ln. Tisch. and Treg. ἐκ rather than ἀπό. (Prospect 1:161)

[of the heaven]: τοῦ οὐρανοῦ after τ. ν. B., most cursives, Rec., some Vv., And., Are., cat., contrary to A. 10. 14. . 92. 95. Vulg., Cop., Syr., Ar.^c, Slav.³, &c. (ἐκ τ. οὐρ. ἀπὸ τ. θρ. Er.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.46)

[of the heaven]: Ln. and Tisch. drop . . . τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, which Kn. and Treg. bracket. (Prospect 1:161)

[of the heaven]: "Of heaven" in 17 is very doubtful, though read by the later B and most cursives. (Bible Treasury 14:208)

16:18 lightnings and voices and thunders: ἄ. κ. φ. κ. βρ. A. (B. omits κ. βρ.) 2. 6. 11. 13. 26. 36. 40. . 92. 95. Vulg., Prim.; ἄ. κ. βρ. κ. φ. near thirty mss., Compl.; φ. κ. βρ. κ. ἄ. very many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.46)

lightnings and voices and thunders: The order in Rec. differs slightly. (Prospect 1:161)

there was: ἐγένετο after σεισμός is omitted by B., more than twenty-five mss., Fuld., &c., Are., cat., but inserted by A. and probably most others, Compl., Vv. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.46)

a man was: ἄνθρωπος ἐγέν. A. 38. Cop., Arm.; οἱ (B. and five mss. omit) ἄνθ. (26. οὐρανοῦ) ἐγένοντο B. and most cursives, Rec., Vv., And., Are., cat., Tich. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.46)

a man was: Ln. Tisch. and Treg. ἄνθ. ἐγένετο, others οἱ ἄνθ. ἐγ. (Prospect 1:161)

a man was: "A man" has ancient and excellent authority in both MSS. and Versions, "men" rather more in Greek copies; and the Revised Version gives better the anarthrous form, as the Authorised Version would rather express the Received Text οἱ ἄνθ. with the mass of cursives. (Bible Treasury 14:208) was: Er. has καί before ἐπὶ τ. γ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.46)

16:19 fell: ἔπεσαν AB. 7. 8. 16. 27. 28. 42. 49. 96.  97.; -σον the mass of cursives, And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.46) fell: Ln. Tisch. and Treg. ἔπεσαν. (Prospect 1:161)

16:20 And . . . no . . . were found: Er. omits καί 1st, and reads οὐκ εὑρ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.46)

no . . . were found: In 20 the Greek means, not "the mountains were not" as in the Authorised and Revised Versions, but "no mountains were," &c. It is the old feebleness, or worse, in respect of the article. (Bible Treasury 14:208)

16:21 thereof: αὐτῇ 7. 14. 28. 31. 33. 35. 38. 39. 50. . . 90. 94. 97. Slav.^{4.10} ("Simplex sigma pro duplici dedere librarii," Bengelius); αὐτοῦ 12. 29. B. omits. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.46)

17:1 came: ἐξῆλθεν A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.46) saying: μοι is added after λέγ. by many cursives, Æth., Slav., Tich., Rec., contrary to AB., most mss., Compl., Vv., and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.46) saying: Rec. λέγ. μοι. (Prospect 1:161) saying Λ : $\mu\omicron\iota$ "to me" rests on the witness of a few cursives, &c. The omission is assuredly right, and has all the higher authorities, and the mass too. (Bible Treasury 14:223)

[the]: $\tau\omega\nu$ $\dot{\upsilon}\delta$. $\tau\omega\nu$ π . B. and the great mss., Rec., Are., cat.; $\dot{\upsilon}\delta$. πολλ. A. 12. 28. 34. 35. 36. . . 87. 95. Er., Hipp., And. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.46)

[the]: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. $\acute{\epsilon}\pi\iota$ $\tau\omega\nu$ $\dot{\upsilon}\delta$. $\tau\omega\nu$ π . Ln. and Tisch. omit the articles and Treg. brackets them. (Prospect 1:161)

[the]: The article (twice) is omitted by κ A P, seven cursives, Hippolytus and Andreas. I have therefore bracketed it as a mark of doubt, though disposed to lean towards its reception, spite of its absence in the Sept. Ver. of Jer. 51:13, &c. It is strange that any should imagine a reference in Dan. 7:2, or Rev. 13:1, any more than here, to the literal Mediterranean. In Hebrew (or Chaldee) "the great sea" when used of the Mediterranean is a totally distinct phrase. (Lect. on Rev., p.358)

[the]: there is conflict as to the articles in the last phrase; and Tischendorf would not have decided against κ A P, &c., which omit them, without very good reason. C is here defective. It seems doubtful. (Bible Treasury 14:223)

17:2 committed . . . were: the Revisers seem to give rightly a preterite or aoristic expression in 2 rather than a perfect. (Bible Treasury 14:223)

those that inhabit the earth were made drunk: $\omicron\iota$ $\kappa\alpha\tau$. τ . γ . after $\acute{\epsilon}\mu\epsilon\theta$. AB., upwards of thirty cursives, Compl., And., Are., cat.; after $\pi\omicron\rho$. $\alpha\upsilon\tau$. many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.46)

those that inhabit the earth were made drunk: The order varies slightly. (Prospect 1:161)

17:3 a: it is "a," not "the," wilderness. (Bible Treasury 14:223)

I saw: $\dot{\iota}\delta\alpha$ A., $\dot{\iota}\delta\omicron\nu$ 7., $\acute{\epsilon}\dot{\iota}\delta\omicron\nu$ B. and almost all cursives, &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.46)

I saw: Ln. and Tisch. $\acute{\epsilon}\dot{\iota}\delta\alpha$, others $\acute{\epsilon}\dot{\iota}\delta\omicron\nu$ as in verse 6. (Prospect 1:161) full of [the] names: $\gamma\acute{\epsilon}\mu\omicron\nu$ (- $\omega\nu$ 7. 30. 32.) $\tau\grave{\alpha}$ $\acute{\omicron}\nu$. A. 9. ($\gamma\acute{\epsilon}\mu\omicron\nu\tau\alpha$ $\acute{\omicron}\nu$. Lachmann) B. 2. 7. 8. 13. 14. 29. 30. 32. 33. 38. 40. 41. 47. 50. . . 90. 92. *93. 94. 95. 97. 98.; $\acute{\omicron}\nu\omicron\mu\acute{\alpha}\tau\omega\nu$ very many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.46)

full of [the] names: Rec. &c. $\gamma\acute{\epsilon}\mu\omicron\nu$ $\acute{\omicron}\nu\omicron\mu\acute{\alpha}\tau\omega\nu$, Ln. $\gamma\acute{\epsilon}\mu\omicron\nu\tau\alpha$ $\acute{\omicron}\nu\omicron\mu\acute{\alpha}\tau\alpha$, Tisch. $\gamma\acute{\epsilon}\mu\omicron\nu$ $\tau\grave{\alpha}$ $\acute{\omicron}\nu\omicron\mu\acute{\alpha}\tau\alpha$, Matthiae omitting the article. (Prospect 1:161) having: $\xi\acute{\epsilon}\omega\nu$ A. 7. 28. 30. 32. 87. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.46)

seven heads and: Er. omits $\kappa\epsilon\phi$. $\acute{\epsilon}\pi$. $\kappa\alpha\acute{\iota}$. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.46)

17:4 was: $\eta\nu$ AB., thirty mss., Compl., Vv., Gr. and Lat. Ff.: η $\eta\nu$ 29. and perhaps A.; η very many cursives, Rec., Cop. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.46-47) was: Rec. η $\pi\epsilon\rho\iota\beta$. . . , the edd. $\eta\nu$. (Prospect 1:161)

purple and scarlet: $\pi\omicron\rho\phi\upsilon\rho\omicron\upsilon\nu$ (- $\rho\alpha\nu$ more than twelve cursives, Compl., And., Are., cat.) κ . $\kappa\acute{\omicron}\kappa\kappa\iota\nu\omicron\nu$ AB., more than thirty-five mss., Hipp., &c.; - $\rho\alpha$ κ . - $\nu\phi$ many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.47)

purple and scarlet: Rec. . . . $\pi\omicron\rho\phi\acute{\upsilon}\rho\alpha$ κ . $\kappa\omicron\kappa\kappa\acute{\iota}\nu\phi$. . . , the edd. . . . $\pi\omicron\rho\phi\upsilon\rho\omicron\upsilon\nu$ κ . $\kappa\acute{\omicron}\kappa\kappa\iota\nu\omicron\nu$. (Prospect 1:161) and: $\kappa\alpha\acute{\iota}$ before $\kappa\epsilon\chi$. A., very many mss., Rec., Vv., &c., omitted by B., thirty mss., Compl., Hipp. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.47) and: Matthiae omits $\kappa\alpha\acute{\iota}$ before $\kappa\epsilon\chi\rho$. (Prospect 1:161) with gold: $\chi\rho\upsilon\sigma\acute{\iota}\phi$ AB., twenty-six mss., Are., cat.; - $\sigma\phi$ most mss., Rec., Hipp. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.47) with gold: Rec. . . . $\chi\rho\upsilon\sigma\acute{\omega}$. . . , the edd. . . . $\chi\rho\upsilon\sigma\acute{\iota}\phi$. . . (Prospect 1:161)

a golden cup: π . $\chi\rho$. AB., about thirty mss., Hipp., Are., cat.; $\chi\rho$. π . very many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.47)

a golden cup: Rec. . . . $\chi\rho$. $\pi\omicron\tau$. . . , the edd. . . . $\pi\omicron\tau$. $\chi\rho$. (Prospect 1:161)

the unclean things: $\tau\grave{\alpha}$ $\acute{\alpha}\kappa\acute{\alpha}\theta\alpha\rho\tau\alpha$ $\tau\eta\varsigma$ AB., about forty-five mss., Compl., Hipp., And.; $\acute{\alpha}\kappa\alpha\theta\acute{\alpha}\rho\tau\eta\tau\omicron\varsigma$ many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.47)

the unclean things: Rec. . . . $\kappa\alpha\acute{\iota}$ $\acute{\alpha}\kappa\alpha\theta\acute{\alpha}\rho\tau\eta\tau\omicron\varsigma$, . . . the edd. . . . κ . $\tau\grave{\alpha}$ $\acute{\alpha}\kappa\acute{\alpha}\theta\alpha\rho\tau\alpha$. (Prospect 1:161)

the unclean things: why in the Revision, "even the unclean things of her fornication"? No doubt the Authorised Version renders loosely "and filthiness," &c., or rather follows the Received Text, which was probably only Erasmus' guess, as Codex Reuchlini reads $\tau\grave{\alpha}$ $\acute{\alpha}\kappa\acute{\alpha}\theta\alpha\rho\tau\alpha$ with almost all witnesses, and so the Complutensian editors and all the critics. (Bible Treasury 14:223)

her fornication: $\alpha\upsilon\tau\eta\varsigma$ A., very many mss., Rec.; $\tau\eta\varsigma$ $\gamma\eta\varsigma$ B.; more than twenty-five mss., Cop., Syr., Ar.^s, Slav.⁴, Hipp., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.47)

her fornication: B. and more than twenty other MSS., besides several versions, have $\tau\eta\varsigma$ $\gamma\eta\varsigma$ instead of $\alpha\upsilon\tau\eta\varsigma$. (Prospect 1:161) her fornication: Most copies, it would seem, read $\tau\eta\varsigma$ $\gamma\eta\varsigma$, "of the earth;" the Alex. and others give $\alpha\upsilon\tau\eta\varsigma$, "of her." The Sinai MS. has both. (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist. and Rev., p.526) [See also Rev. Exp., p. 192] fornication: $\pi\omicron\rho\acute{\epsilon}\iota\alpha\varsigma$ B. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.47) fornication: Rec. . . . $\pi\omicron\rho\acute{\nu}\epsilon\iota\alpha\varsigma$, the edd. . . . $\tau\eta\varsigma$. π . $\alpha\upsilon\tau$. (Prospect 1:161)

17:5 HARLOTS: $\pi\acute{\omicron}\rho\nu\nu\omega\nu$ 2. 7. 12. 29. 49. 50. 90. 93. 96. 98. Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.47)

HARLOTS: "The" harlots, &c., say the Revisers rightly; and "of the" abominations also. This was a case, not of reading, but of mistranslation in all the older English versions, save that of Rheims. Besides, they had from Latin influence the "whoredom" or fornications of the Authorised Version margin as their text. (Bible Treasury 14:223)

17:6 I saw: $\dot{\iota}\delta\alpha$ A., $\dot{\iota}\delta\omicron\nu$ (- $\omega\nu$ 7.) 14. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.47)

I saw: See verse 3. (Prospect 1:161) with: $\acute{\epsilon}\kappa$ 1st, A., most cursives, Rec., Hipp., omitted by B. and about twenty mss., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.47) with: Matthiae omits the first $\acute{\epsilon}\kappa$. (Prospect 1:161) and: B., about twenty-five mss., Are., cat., omit $\kappa\alpha\acute{\iota}$ 2nd. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.47) and: Matthiae omits . . . the second $\kappa\alpha\acute{\iota}$. (Prospect 1:161) witnesses: $\mu\alpha\rho\tau\upsilon\rho\iota\omega\nu$ A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.47) witnesses . . . Λ great: why do the Revisers here perpetuate the "martyrs" of the Authorised Version? They give "witness" in Acts 22:20, and in Rev. 2:13, and of course everywhere, I believe, as indeed elsewhere "martyr" would be a ridiculous blunder; but why here? An oversight is presumed. "A" great wonder seems strange English. (Bible Treasury 14:223)

Λ great: "A" great wonder seems strange English. (Bible Treasury 14:223)

17:7 wonder . . . the: "wonder" is no doubt better retained than "marvel." The Authorised Version erred in omitting "the" ten horns. (Bible Treasury 14:223) will tell thee: $\acute{\epsilon}\rho\omega$ $\sigma\omicron\iota$ AB., twenty-five mss., Hipp., Are., cat.; $\sigma\omicron\iota$ $\acute{\epsilon}\rho\omega$ probably most cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.47-48)

Λ that: Er. $\kappa\alpha\iota$ τ . $\acute{\epsilon}\chi$. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48)

17:8 The: $\tau\omicron$ θ . AB., most cursives, Compl., Hipp., And., Are., cat.; θ . many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48)

The: Rec. omits $\tau\omicron$ before $\theta\eta\rho\acute{\iota}\omicron\nu$. (Prospect 1:161)

The: Erasmus too had no reason to leave out the article at the beginning of 8, for his copy had it all right; and so the Complutensian edition of course. But the translators rendered as if it were there. (Bible Treasury 14:223) thou sawest: ἴδ. AB. 7. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48) was: ἦ A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48) go: ὑπάγει A. 12. Er., Are., cat., Ir.^{im}, Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48) go: Ln. and Tisch. ὑπάγει. (Prospect 1:161) shall wonder: θαυμάσθησονται A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48) shall wonder: Ln. and Tisch. . . . θαυμάσθησονται. (Prospect 1:161) on the earth: ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς A., most cursives, Rec., Vv., And., Are., cat.; τῇ γῇ B., twenty-six mss., Vulg., Hipp., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48)

on the earth: Matthiae τῇ γ. (Prospect 1:161) the name: τὸ ὄν. AB., more than twenty-five mss., Vv., Hipp.; τὰ ὄν. the majority of cursives, Rec., Vulg., &c., And., Are., cat., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48) the name: Rec. and Gr. τὰ ὀνόμ. (Prospect 1:161)

the name: The "name" or "names" is a fair question, as the witnesses are divided. (Bible Treasury 14:223) is not written: οὐκ ἐγγράφεται A., -το 8. 9. . . . Hipp. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48) is not written: Ln. οὐκ ἐγγράφτο. (Prospect 1:161) is not written: It was a strange freak of Lachmann to edit ἐγγράφτο on the slip of A (ἐγγράφεται), which clearly should have been γέγραπται with all other authorities, save perhaps a cursive or two. (Bible Treasury 14:223)

the book: τὸ β. A., most mss., Rec., Are., cat.; τοῦ β. B., more than twenty-five mss., Hipp. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48) the book: Matthiae τοῦ β. (Prospect 1:161) behold: βλέπόντων AB., near forty mss.; -τες many cursives, Rec., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48) behold: Rec. βλέποντες. (Prospect 1:161)

the beast that he was: τὸ θ. before ὅτι ἦν A., very many, if not most, mss., Rec.; after ὅτι ἦν B., thirty cursives, Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48) and shall be present: καὶ πάρεσται AB., about forty mss., Compl., and most Vv., Hipp., Are., cat., Prim.; καὶ πάρεστιν 11. 12. 16. 36. 43. 47.; καίπερ ἐστὶν not many mss., Rec.; καίπερ ἔσται 33. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48) and shall be present: Rec. καίπερ ἐστὶν. The edd. read καὶ πάρεσται. (Prospect 1:161) and shall be present: As it stands in the common text, the phrase looks a sort of riddle; for what is the meaning of the proposition that the beast was, is not, and yet is? From the correct text the darkness vanishes at once. Can one hesitate which should be regarded as the voice of the Holy Spirit? Internal evidence there is as conclusively in favour of the critical change, as is external testimony. (Bible Treasury N10:335) and shall be present: "Yet is" is an unfortunate expression, but it is the fault of the bad Greek text of Erasmus, Stephens, etc. It should be, "and shall be present." (Even the Complutensian editors gave the right text here; and it would seem that Erasmus failed to use his MS. aright. For according to unquestionable testimony the Reuchlinian copy has καὶ πάρεστι like some half-dozen cursives, which was probably a mistake for πάρεσται. But καίπερ ἐστὶν was unmitigated error.) (Rev. Exp., p.201) [See also Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist. and Rev., p.534] and shall be present: there is no doubt about the important correction at the end of the verse, πάρεσται "shall come" or be present, * A B P, more than 40 cursives, &c., as in the Complutensian edition. Even Erasmus' copy had καὶ πάρεστι as in * C W, and at least half a dozen cursives besides; his καίπερ ἐστὶν which crept into the Received Text, and led to the Authorised Version, "and yet is" is simply baseless and absurd. The Vulgate, like the Æthiopic, gives nothing here: so of course Wiclif and the Rhemish, and also, strange to say, Tyndale and Cranmer. The Geneva followed the Stephanic text. Only some of the copies joined πάρεσται with ὧδε in 9, which last B omits and joins π. with ὁ νοῦς, and so perhaps the Vulgate and the English Versions that followed it. (Bible Treasury 14:223)

17:10 are seven mountains: ἐπ. ὅρ. εἰσὶν AB. and most authorities, Compl.; ὅρ. εἰσιν ἐπ. very many cursives, Rec. (14 omitting ἐπ.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48) are seven mountains: The order of the words differs. (Prospect 1:161)

they . . . ἅ five . . . ἅ one: the Revisers are justified, I think, in giving "they" for "there"; but are they right in "the" five, "the" one? They well drop the copulative after "five are fallen." (Bible Treasury 14:223) are seven: ἐπ. εἰσιν A., most mss., Rec., Hipp.; εἰς. ἐπ. B., more than twenty cursives, Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48) are fallen: ἔπεσαν AB., most others, Rec., Hipp.; -σον about fifteen mss., Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48)

one: καὶ before ὁ εἷς is omitted by AB., about forty mss., Compl., Vulg. (Fuld. Demid., &c.), Syr., And., Are., cat., added by many mss., Rec., Lips.⁴; ὁ δὲ εἷς 96. Hipp., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48) [See also Prospect 1:161]

he must: δεῖ after αὐτ. A., most mss., Rec., Hipp.; before it, B., eighteen cursives, Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48) space: [. . . Now, let the full period at the end of verse 10 be placed at the end of the words . . . from verse 11, and we shall have . . .

The seven heads are seven mountains on which the woman sitteth, and they are seven kings: five (kings) are fallen, one is, the other is not yet come: and when he is come, he must continue a short space, and the beast that was, and is not.

Query. Whether against this punctuation there be any valid objection? . . . H. Girdlestone] (Christian Annotator 3:20)

I think that the suggested punctuation must be rejected. For —

(1.) The next clause positively contradicts the express aim of Mr. G. For he wishes to make out that (not the beast that was and is not, but) ὁ ἄλλος is meant by καὶ αὐτός. Whereas we know from verse 10 that "the other" is the seventh king, and from verse 11 that the personage there intended is an extraordinary one, the eighth, while he is of the seven and goeth into perdition in a special way.

(2.) I am not aware what points of coincidence are supposed to exist between this passage and verses 12 and 16. The truth is that the seven kings may be identified with the seven heads, but they are quite distinct from the ten horns. But this evidently leaves the question open as to the beast, whether, or not, he is the eighth.

(3.) Does not Mr. G. exceed the measure of symbolical congruity? Scripture does not in its types or prophetic emblems present us anywhere with pictorial consistency. Various images are combined which convey a perfect meaning, but it is to the mind, not to the eye. And what simpler than that "the strange eighth king should absorb all the power of the ten kings, his vassals, and thus become, to all intents and purposes, the beast," all receiving authority for one and the same time?

(4.) According to the usual punctuation the contrast is striking and beautiful. The Lamb is King of kings, and the beast is king in an unprecedented fashion; the ten horns are the subordinates of the beast, the called, and chosen, and faithful, the companions of the Lamb. They shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them. I am of opinion, therefore, that the very reasons alleged for the change tell fatally against it. (Christian Annotator 3:67-8)

17:11 even he is an eighth: 11 is given rather better [in the RV], "even he is an eighth," &c. (Bible Treasury 14:223)

he . . . an eighth: οὐτος for αὐτός B. and near twenty-five mss., Syr. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48)

he . . . an eighth: Matthiae reads οὐτος ὁ γδ. (Prospect 1:161)

17:12 [whole verse]: So is 12 less equivocal in the Revised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:223) thou sawest: ἰδ. B. 7. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48) not yet: οὐκ for οὐπω (which 96. omits) A., Fuld., Ar.^c, Slav.^{3,4}. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48) not yet: Ln. and Tisch. οὐκ, others οὐπω. (Prospect 1:161)

but: ἀλλὰ A. 14. 95. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48)

kings: "At" or "for one hour." (Prospect 1:161)

one hour: Quite agreeing with Mr. [Elliott] that the notion of horal brevity is untenable, I must utterly reject his statement (H.A., iii. pp. 81, 82, and often elsewhere) that "at one and the same time" is either the most natural or the true rendering. It is almost past comprehension how a scholar could have committed himself to what he says in his notes: "There is no doubt that accusative of time may (!) signify duration; but seldom, I believe, except after verbs signifying action such as may imply time; not often after verbs, like λαμβανω, of action instantly completed." The truth is, as every person of learning must know, that as a rule the temporal accusative distinctively denotes duration, while the dative is just as notoriously used for a point of time, and the genitive when time is conceived as the necessary condition of the action, and therefore antecedent to it. Nor is this confined to certain words only. "All verbs imply a notion of time (says Jelf, vol. ii. p. 377) over which the action extends coincident and co-extensive with it; whence all verbs may have an accusative case of this coincident notion of time, if it be required definitely to express it." That I may not appear to have drawn the distinction of the Greek cases for controversial purposes, I must cite further from Jelf, § 606, obs. 2. "The genitive, accusative, and dative therefore, are all used to express relations of time, and they differ as follows: the time is represented by the genitive as the antecedent condition of the action; by the dative as the space wherein the action took place; while the accusative expresses the duration of the action. So compare ταύτης τῆς ἡμέρας οἱ Ἕλληνες ἐμαχέσαντο, this day giving them the occasion, with ταυτῇ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ, on this day, and ταύτην τὴν ἡμέραν, throughout this day." These general principles find the fullest illustration in the Hellenistic of the LXX. and the New Testament, as well as in classical Greek. See, for the time at which (the dative), Gen. 2:2,3,17; 3:5; 5:1,2; 6:4; 7:11,13; 8:4,5,13,14; 14:4,5; 15:16,18; 17:26; 19:33,34,35; 21:4,8; 22:3, &c. But why thus run through the occurrences? It were to cite from every book of the Bible, wherein epochs are spoken of. I will only therefore refer to the Apocalypse, as it may be alleged that the Greek is peculiar there: Rev. 1:10; 2:13; 9:6; 10:7; 11:13; 18:8,10,16,19. On the contrary, when duration is intended, the accusative is employed with equal regularity: Gen. 3:14,17; 5:3,4,6,7,9,10,12,13,15,16, &c., passim; 7:4,12,17,24; 8:10,12,22; 9:28; 11:11-26 — in every verse, &c. So in Rev. 2:10 (in the text of B, thirty-two cursives, and apparently the ancient versions, Arethus, and the Catena, while A C many cursives, Andreas, &c., have ἡμερῶν); 6:11; 8:1; 9:5,10; 11:2,3,6 (so in A B C P, most cursives, Hippolytus, Andreas — save in one manuscript — Arethas and the Catena), 9; 12:6,14; 13:5; 17:10 (not to speak of 12); 20:2,4,6. It is certain, therefore, that the most natural rendering of μίαν ὥραν is (not at, but) for one hour. (Compare Daniel 4:19; Matt. 20:12; 26:40.) As to action expressed by the verb, the objection is futile. If the angel bound Satan for a thousand years, the ten horns may assuredly receive kingly authority for one and the same time with the beast. It is not the mere act of binding or receiving, but the effect which spreads over the given time. Is it denied then that the point of time is ever found in the accusative? Not at all; "but this only (says Jelf, § 571, obs. 1.) in general notions of time, such as seasonably, lastly, where the accusative stands for the cognate substantive." Nobody can pretend that such is the case in the disputed clause. And in my opinion it is more than questionable in the three exceptions which are produced (as if they were the ordinary construction!) from the New Testament: John 4:52; Acts 10:3, and Rev. 3:3. As to Acts 10:3, we know that the best manuscripts, the Alexandrian, the Vatican, the Sinaitic, the Palimpsest of Paris, the Laudian of Oxford, not to speak of some twenty-five juniors and other good authorities, insert περί as all do in verse 9. As to John 4:52, may it not be accounted for by a reference to the question of the nobleman? He enquired the hour, τὴν ὥραν, ἐν ᾗ. The servants answer, Yesterday ἐβδόμην ὥραν. Then he knew that it was ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ὥρᾳ in which Jesus had spoken the word of healing power. So again, I think Rev. 3:3 is probably due to a sort of mixed construction dependent on γνῶς. It may not be known generally that this is one of the instances alleged by unfriendly criticism in evidence that the Apocalypse employs the accusative of time contrary to good usage. But this, says Professor Stuart, is the only instance of the kind in the whole book. He explains it thus: "The time which is at the ultimate extent of his coming is here the prominent idea, and therefore the accusative is allowable." (Comment. Apoc. p. 204.) Matt. 24:41,42,43,44,50; Luke 12:39,46, shew plainly enough the usage undisturbed by special causes. The difficulty is merely technical in the exceptional cases, which entirely differ from the text in question. As to it I see no ground for a doubt, nor have I any theory to uphold by it; for the true rendering implies the same starting point, but it also determines the equal duration of the beast and the ten horns. The Æthiopic and Arabic understood the phrase as expressive of duration, the Syriac, and Latin as a point of time. But why attach such moment to the Vulgate on a nicety like this, when the words which conclude the verse contain the gross blunder of rendering μετὰ τοῦ θ. as if it were μ. τὸ θ.? Some copies add "et" also — "[et] post bestiam." Cyril and Theodoret do not touch the question. Can Mr. E. produce a single instance from any correct writer where μίαν ὥραν or ἡμέραν, as here without a mixed construction, is used save for during one hour or day? (Lect. on Rev., p.365-7)

17:13 have . . . mind: ἔχ. γν. B., more than twenty-five mss., Are., cat.; γν. ἔχ. A. and most mss., Rec., Hipp. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48)

have . . . mind: Some μ. ἔ. γν. others μ. γν. ἔ. (Prospect 1:161) give: διδοῶσιν AB., near forty mss., Compl., most Vv. and Ff.; διαδιδώσουσιν many cursives, Vulg., Cop., Tich., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48) give: The edd. in general διδοῶσιν instead of διαδιδώσουσιν, as in Rec. (Prospect 1:161) their: αὐτῶν AB., thirty-cursives, Compl., And., Are., cat.; ἐαυτῶν very many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48) their: Matthiae, Ln. and Tisch. . . . read αὐτῶν. (Prospect 1:161) authority: τὴν before ἐξ. added by very many mss., Rec., is not in AB., twenty-two cursives, Hipp. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48) authority: Matthiae, Ln. and Tisch. omit τὴν, Treg brackets it. (Prospect 1:161) authority: the Authorised Version gave erroneously "strength" as the equivalent of ἐξουσία. It should be "authority." (Bible Treasury 14:223)

17:14 him ᾧ: The ellipse in 14 is filled up cumbrously by the Revisers; I doubt that any supply is needed in English, and the briefer the better, if intelligible. (Bible Treasury 14:223)

17:15 saith to me: εἶπεν A., Vulg., &c., Æth. omits λέγ. μοι. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48) saith to me: Ln. and Tisch. omit μου. (Prospect 1:161) thou sawest: ἴδ. B., οἰδ. 7. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48)

17:16 thou sawest: ἴδ. B. 7. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48) and: καὶ τὸ θ. AB., forty cursives, Compl., Am. Fuld. Demid. Tol. Lips, Syr., Æth., Ar.^p, Hipp., And., Prim.; ἐπὶ τὸ θ. many mss., Rec., Vulg., Cop.? Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48) and: Rec. ἐπὶ, the edd. καί. (Prospect 1:161) and: Here is another flagrant proof of Mr. [Elliott]'s proneness to prefer a manifestly spurious reading which his hypothesis requires to the reading which has the support of the best authorities, and the suffrages of perhaps every critic of weight. But he now omits his words in the fifth edition, "I think with Daubus, that this reading (καὶ) is most unlikely. He writes thus: 'This (καὶ) is the reading of the Complutensian edition; but the rest have ἐπὶ τὸ θηριον instead of καὶ τὸ θηριον. This last is not consistent with the description, or distinction, of the ten horns and the beast; and therefore I have received the other in my translation. For the beast, as such, can never (!) be said to hate the whore; but the horns upon the beast may' (p.795). Vitringa too adopts the reading ἐπὶ 'decem cornu quae vidisti in Bestiâ.' Bellarmine urges the reading καὶ in defence of the Papacy against Protestants. 'For how can Bishops of Rome be antichrist,' he argues, 'when antichrist is to join with the ten kings and destroy Rome?' But the infallible Vulgate, we saw, as well as his brother Romanists, Ribera a Lapide, Malvenda, &c., are here against him. The prophetic sword's edge cannot be so averted from Rome. Bellarmine admits the beast to be antichrist, and the woman of the seven hills to be Rome. And what their pictured relation to each other in the vision but that of the closest intimacy and alliance? If καὶ be read, what is said of the beast's hating the woman, &c., can be understood only of the city of Rome, not the church of Rome. For the apostate church's false prophet continues with the beast to the end. So Apoc. 19:19. Compare what is said of treading the winepress without the city, p. 15 supra." (H. A., vol. iv. p. 30, note 1.) He now adds, "But see my note 3 on p. 74 of vol. iii. in support of the reading ἐπὶ. I there cite Tertullian and Hippolytus, two Fathers of earlier date than any extant Greek MSS. of the Apocalypse in support of ἐπὶ. It is the reading too of most copies of the Vulgate: Decem cornu[a] quae vidisti in Bestiâ, and adopted by the Romanists, Ribera a Lapide, Malvenda, &c., as well as by our Protestant interpreters, Vitringa, Daubus," &c. I have examined these citations, and am satisfied that neither Tertullian nor Hippolytus touch the question of ἐπὶ. Neither quotes the verse, nor says a word but what one who received καί might say. Their codices too are far inferior in antiquity to the great uncials of the Apocalypse. the best copies of the Vulgate (Amiat. Fuld. Tolet. Demidov. &c.) read "et;" so that no critic could hesitate that Jerome, "that most critical of all the Fathers," rejected the reading which has crept into the inferior Greek and Latin manuscripts, clean contrary to Mr. E.'s statement in vol. iii. p. 74, note 3. The healing of the wounded head is quite consistent with the destruction of the whore. As to the Romanist and Protestant commentators, not one of those cited was conversant with questions of text. So Desmarets, in his treatise on Antichrist, is imprudent enough to say, "Emendatissimi codices plerique omnes, Stephanorum, nominatim, habent ἐπὶ." Can one wonder that Professor Delitzsch says, One untruth is the mother of the rest? Even Erasmus went against his authority; for Cod. Reuchl. is now known to read καί, not ἐπὶ. It is not even correct to speak of Tichonius; for he and Bede omit the phrase. On the whole, Bengel (a wild commentator on the book, but a true critic everywhere) was justified in saying of the common reading, "Fecit Erasmus, quem hic quoque sequuntur, qui solent, editores, quanquam lectionem hanc Latinis deterioribus fictam vel solus Andreas Cæsariensis redarguit." "Inanis esset tot codicum collatio, si talium quoque locorum germana lectio aut postponeretur sine fine, aut saltem in ancipiti relinqueretur." Even the prejudiced Wolff, who differed from

Bengel wherever it was possible, here truly remarks, "Vel omnium vel plerumque codicum Graecorum consensus non parvi fieri debet."

That Daubuz (1720) should have laboured under a mistake as to the comparative claims of the two readings one can conceive; that Vitringa, spite of his historical lore and general ability in expounding, should have ignored the best witnesses then known, is not perhaps very wonderful. But it is passing strange that in the face of the unanimity of critical editors, presenting every shade of religious prejudice and prepossession, such as Bengel, Griesbach, Lachmann, Matthaei, Scholz, Tischendorf, Tregelles, Vater, &c., who had no preconceived notions to blind their judgment, Mr. Elliott should persist in an opinion so unfounded. It is not a small matter to slight the evidence of the three uncials, forty cursives (some of the highest character), of the Æthiopic, Arabic of the Polyglotts, Syriac, &c. If Wilkins is to be depended on, the Coptic, it seems, should be added. As to the Vulgate, Mr. E. is misinformed. The common printed text, no doubt, has "in bestiâ;" but the very ancient and best copies (including the Amiatine in the Laurentian Library of Florence, and others already named) read "et bestiam." Whatever may be the inconsistency of Popish apologists, I cannot admire Protestant special pleading which contends for a reading that is utterly indefensible. (Lect. on Rev., p.370-2) and: Here I am obliged to say that our authorized version, and not merely it, but our common Greek Testaments, are altogether wrong. This is known so well, and on such decided grounds, that it would be unbecoming to withhold the fact. There is no uncertainty whatever in the case. It is certain that we ought to read (not "upon" but) "and the beast." This is of great importance. (It now appears that the Cod. Reuchlin. Capnionis, which was used by Erasmus, and lately discovered after a long obscurity by Dr. Delitzsch, reads καὶ (not ἐπὶ) τὸ θ. as the Complut. Polyglot, and all editions of the least critical value. Scholz's note ("rec. cum edd. pl.") is a myth. I am not aware of any MS. in its favour, though some versions represent it.) (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist. and Rev., p.541. See also Three Prophetic Gems, p.76, Bible Treasury N10:361 and Rev. Exp., p. 209) and: not "upon" but "and" the beast is the true reading and sense, as in all known MSS., uncial and cursive, and in the ancient versions &c., save a few Latin copies, and Arethas, some omitting it altogether. The truth conveyed is of high moment; for thus it appears that the ten horns, instead of supplanting the beast, as in the past, are in the future to join him (cf. ver. 12) in destroying the harlot: a death-blow to the mere historicalist theory. (Bible Treasury 14:223) shall make her: B. 2. 3. 31. 33. 36. 40. 43. &c., omit τὴν γ., but B.^{man} 2. 7. 1. 13. 14. and twenty more, Compl. &c., add ποιήσουσιν αὐτήν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48) and naked: Matthiae omits καὶ γυμνήν. (Prospect 1:161) shall burn: καύσουσιν 12. 38. Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48)

17:17 and to accomplish one mind: κ. π. μ. γν. omitted by A., Vulg. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48) and to accomplish one mind: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. add καὶ ποιῆσαι γνώμην μίαν (μ. γ. Rec.) Ln. and Tisch. omit the words. (Prospect 1:162) one mind: γν. μ. B., very many mss., Compl., Are., cat.; μ. γν. most mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48) their: αὐτῶ A., αὐτοῦ B. 14. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48) the words: οἱ λόγ. AB., most mss., Compl., Hipp., And., Are., cat.; τὰ ῥήματα many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.49) the words: Rec. τὰ ῥήματα, the edd. οἱ λόγοι. (Prospect 1:162)

the words . . . shall be finished: the reading of the Received Text is found in no known manuscript τὰ ῥη. τελεσθῇ and is probably due to Erasmus, even Andreas and Arethas refusing support. The true is οἱ λ.

τελεσθήσονται, but the version is unaffected substantially. (Bible Treasury 14:224) shall be finished: τελεσθήσονται A., eleven mss., Compl., Hipp.; -θώσιν B., about thirty-five cursives, Are., cat.; -θῆ not many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.48-9) shall be finished: Rec. τελεσθῆ, Matthiae τελεσθῶσιν, with B. &c., others τελεσθήσονται, with A. &c. (Prospect 1:162)

17:18 [whole verse]: I think that the peculiar sway of Rome is marked peculiarly in the Greek of 18, and not justly reflected in the Authorised and Revised versions any more than in the other older Protestant translations. Wiclif and the Rhemish cleaving to the Vulgate are more literal, but as usual crude enough. (Bible Treasury 14:224)

thou sawest: ἰδ. AB. 7. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.49) of: B. ^{mag.} and eighteen cursives put ἐπί, others (16. 39.) τῶν ἐπί, before τῆς γῆς. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.49)

18:1 ^ΛAfter: Καί before μ. is wanting in AB., thirty cursives, Cop., Rec., Syr., Slav.⁴, Hipp., Are., cat., Tisch., Cass., but inserted by many mss., Vulg. and other Vv., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.49)

^ΛAfter: Matthiae, Ln. and Tisch. omit καὶ at the beginning. Treg. brackets it. (Prospect 1:162)

^Λ After: the copulative which introduces the chapter in the Received Text and the Authorised Version is supported by some cursives and ancient versions, and stands in the Complutensian edition as well as in those of Erasmus; but the best authorities discard it. (Bible Treasury 14:224)

I saw: ἰδ. B. 7. 14. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.49)

another: ἄλλον before ἄγγ. A B., thirty-two cursives, Er., Compl., Vv., Hipp., And., Lat., Ff. (after ἄγγ. 31. 32. 48. 49. . . &c., Lips.⁶, Are., cat.), omitted by a few mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.49)

another: Rec. omits ἄλλον. (Prospect 1:162)

another: ἄλλον, "another," omitted in Codex Reuchlini and two or three more is read by all the uncials, the cursives generally, the ancient versions, and the Greek and Latin commentators, as it rightly appears not in the Received Text but in the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:224)

18:2 [whole verse]: There are various insertions and omissions in the copies which call for no special notice here. (Bible Treasury 14:224)

he cried: ἐκέκραξεν A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.49)

^Λwith a strong voice: ἐν (B. 2. 7. 8. 13. 14. 32. 33. 34. 35. 39. 41. 43. 48. 50. . . 87. 92. 94. 95. 97. Are., cat. omit) ἰσχ. φ. A., about twenty mss., Compl., Am. Fuld. Lipss. Demid., Vv.; ἐν ἰσχ. φ. μεγάλη 12. Hipp.; ἐν ἰσχ. φ. κ. μ. 36. Prim. ἰσχυρὰν φωνήν 16. 22. 30. 39. 40. 47. . . 93. 98.; ἐν ἰσχυῖ φωνῇ μ. a few cursives, Rec. (Vulg., Tisch. = ἐν ἰσχυῖ). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.49)

^Λwith a strong voice: Rec. ἐν ἰσχυῖ, φ. μ., the edd. ἐν ἰσχυρῇ φ. (Prospect 1:162)

^Λ with a strong voice: it should be "cried with a strong voice," not ἰσχυῖ φ. μ. as in the Received Text without known authority, but ἰσχυρῇ φ. with the best and most. (Bible Treasury 14:224)

[fallen]: ἔπ. twice, A. and, it would seem, the majority of mss., Vulg., Syr. Slav., Hipp., Tisch.; once, B., about thirty mss., Cop., Æth., Arr., Slav.^{3,4,10}, Are., cat., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.49)

[fallen]: Matthiae omits ἔπεσε, Treg. hesitates. (Prospect 1:162)

[fallen]: A and many cursives and versions have ἔπεσεν "is fallen" twice, P has it thrice; but B, very many cursives and old versions and writers, read it but once. (Bible Treasury 14:224)

Babylon the: ἡ Βαβ. B. 14. &c., 92. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.49) of demons: δαιμονίων A B. 95.; -όνων almost all cursives, Hipp., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.49) of demons: Ln. Tisch. and edd. δαιμονίων. (Prospect 1:162) haunt . . . unclean . . . haunt . . . unclean: "Hold" = φ. the prison where they are forcibly kept. "Foul" and "unclean" in the Authorised Version represent ἀκαθάρτων. (Bible Treasury 14:224)

^Λspirit: καὶ μεμνημένου after 1st ἀκαθ. A. 16. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.49)

^Λspirit: Ln. πν. ἄ. καὶ μεμνημένου. (Prospect 1:162)

a haunt of every unclean and hated bird: Some, as 32. &c., omit κ. φ. π. πν. ἄκ., others, as 7. 12. 14. 31. 48., κ. φ. π. ὄρ. ἄκ. [κ. μ.] (Rev. of John, 1860, p.49)

bird: θηρίου A. for ὀρνέου. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.49)

18:3 [whole verse] . . . luxury: Here again are sundry variations in the copies, omitting or inserting strangely. "Luxury" or "wanton pride" seems better than "delicacies." (Bible Treasury 14:224)

the wine: τοῦ οἶνου B. and almost all cursives (36. 37. 47. 49. 87. 96. Compl., Cop., Arm., Slav.³, after τ. θ.), Vulg. (Demid., &c.), Syr., &c., Hipp., And., Are., cat., Prim., Tisch., omitted by A C., Am. Fuld. Tol. Lips.^{5,6} &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.49-50) the wine: Ln. omits and Treg. doubts τοῦ οἶν. (Prospect 1:162)

the fury of her fornication: τ. π. τ. θ. C., but 33. Syr., omit τ. π. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50) the fury of her fornication: "Poison" has been suggested by pious and learned men. But it is better rendered homogeneously with what is said elsewhere. We cannot apply "poison" to God's wrath, but we may with many scriptures employ "fury" to mark His extreme indignation, and Babylon's excessive deception and unbridled iniquity. (Rev. Exp., p.212) drank: πεπω- ABC., very many cursives, Cop., Æth.; πεπω- probably most cursives, Vv., and Ff. (-καν AC.; -κασιν B., about thirty-five mss.; -κε (or -κεν) many cursives, Rec.) μεμότικε 18. 36. 37. Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50) drank: Matthiae πεπόκασιν. (Prospect 1:162) drank: In 3 occurs a singular discrepancy among the copies. Should it be πέπωκαν or πέπω(ο)καν (or -ασιν)? "Drunk" or "fallen by"? Alford hesitated, Lachmann gave the last in his lesser and the first in his larger edition, Tischendorf and Wordsworth the first, Tregelles, Westcott and Hort the last, Bengel, Griesbach, and Scholz adhering to the same sense in πέπωκε of the Received Text. (Bible Treasury 14:224) of the earth: αὐτῆς Er., for the last τῆς γῆς. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50) luxury: στήνον C. 47. 94. Er., Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50)

18:4 [whole verse]: [In the RV there] are changes of order from that of the Received Text, but we may leave this. (Bible Treasury 14:224)

another voice: ἄλλης φωνῆς C. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50)

Come: ἐξέλθατε A.; -λθετε very many cursives, Rec., Vv.; -λθε BC., more than twenty-five cursives, Are., cat., Cyp. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50)

Come: Ln. and Tisch. ἐξέλθατε, Matthiae and Treg. ἐξελθε. (Prospect 1:162) out of her: 12. Er., omit ἐξ αὐτ., C. 38. insert after ὁλ. μ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50) ye have . . . fellowship: συνκ. AC. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50) and: καὶ before ἐκ. omitted by 12. Er., Arm. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50) that ye receive not of her plagues: ἐκ. τ. πλ. αὐτ. ἵνα ABC., most mss., Compl., many Vv., Hipp., And., Are., cat., Tisch.; ἵνα μὴ λ. ἐκ τ. πλ. αὐτ. many cursives, Rec., Cop. &c., Cyp., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50) that ye receive not of her plagues: The edd. differ from the order of Rec. as to the last words. (Prospect 1:162)

18:5 have reached: ἐκολλ. ABC., most mss., Compl., Vv., and Ff.; ἡκολούθησαν not many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50) have reached: Rec. ἡκολούθησαν, the edd. ἐκολλήθησαν., lit. "have been glued," or "built together." (Prospect 1:162) have reached: [The] Received Text (with 33, 34, if we trust Alter) is ἡκολούθησαν "followed," instead of the unquestionable ἐκολλήθησαν "were joined, heaped up, clave." The Authorised and Revised Versions both give "have reached" rather singularly. (Bible Treasury 14:224)

God hath remembered her iniquities: ἐμν. αὐτῆς ὁ θεός τὰ ἀδ. αὐτῆς ἀπ. 2. 8. 29. 30. 37. 40. 41. 43. 49. 50. . . . 87. 90. 93. 98. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50)

God hath remembered her iniquities: Matthiae after ἐμν. reads αὐτῆς. (Prospect 1:162)

18:6 rendered_Λ: ὑμῖν after ἀπέδ. is wanting in ABC., about thirty-five cursives, Am Tol. Cop., Syr., Æth., Arr., Slav.^{4.10} Hipp., Tich., but inserted by many cursives, Rec., Vulg. (Lipss., &c.), Are., cat. (Arm. = ἡμῖν). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50) rendered_Λ: Rec. adds ὑμῖν. (Prospect 1:162) rendered_Λ . . . double_Λ: "you" disappears for ample reason, as does "unto her" though the Received Text has here better support. (Bible Treasury 14:224) double_Λ: αὐτῇ is wanting after κ. διπλ. in ABC., most cursives, but appears in very many mss., Rec., Vv., and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50)

double_Λ: Ln. and Tisch. omit αὐτῇ. (Prospect 1:162)

[the]: τὰ δ. C., near twenty cursives, Hipp., but omitted in AB., most cursives, And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50)

[the]: Matthiae adds τὰ δ. (Prospect 1:162)

[the]: "The" double is doubtful, even Lachmann omitting it with A B P and many cursives. (Bible Treasury 14:224)

_Λaccording: B. and very many cursives, Slav.^{4.10} add ὡς καὶ αὐτῇ καὶ before κατὰ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50)

_Λaccording: Matthiae adds . . . ὡς καὶ αὐτῇ καὶ κ. (Prospect 1:162)

_Λcup: B., very many cursives, Cop., Slav.⁴, give ποτ. αὐτῆς φ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50)

_Λcup: Matthiae adds . . . π. αὐτῆς. (Prospect 1:162)

18:7 herself: αὐτῇ ABC., at least sixteen mss., for the received reading ἐαυτῇ, with the majority, Hipp., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50) herself: Ln. and Tisch. αὐτῇ, Treg. αὐτῇ. (Prospect 1:162) so much . . . give: For τοσ. δότε Er. has κεραστε (probably for -σατε) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50) and mourning: 10. 12. 37. 49. 91. 96. Compl., omit καὶ πένθος (1st). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50)

_Λ I sit: ὅτι κάθημαι (B. 14. 92. καθιῶ; 29. καθῶ; καθῶς about a dozen mss.; 94. Prim., Cyp., εἰμι καθῶς; 34. 87. ἐγὼ κάθημαι.) ABC., most mss., Are., cat., &c., but many cursives, Rec., Vulg., Hipp., Tich., omit ὅτι. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50)

_Λ I sit: Ln. and Tisch. . . . read ὅτι before κάθημαι. (Prospect 1:162)

_Λ I sit: The ὅτι omitted before κ. in the Received Text of 7 makes no substantial difference in the version. (Bible Treasury 14:224)

a queen: βασιλεύουσα C. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50)

18:8 day: 14. Æth., Cyp., &c., ὥρα for ἡμ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50) and: καὶ before πένθ. is wanting in B. (θανάτου π. κ. λιμοῦ), very many cursives. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50) and: Matthiae omits καὶ before π. (Prospect 1:162) the Lord God: A. 95. Vulg., Æth., omit κύριος, as 6. 31. 38. 40. 48. . . . 98. Are., cat., Prim., omit ὁ θεός. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50) the Lord God: Ln. and Tisch. drop κύριος, Treg. doubtful. (Prospect 1:162) judged: κρίνας ABC., upwards of thirty cursives, Compl., Vv., Hipp.; κρίων (-ῶν Er.) many mss., Rec., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50) judged: The edd. κρίνας. (Prospect 1:162) judged: the best authorities (8^{pm}. A B C P, about 35 cursives cursives, good ancient versions, and ecclesiastical writers) concur in "judged," rather than "judgeth," as in the Received Text, with several cursives, &c. (Bible Treasury 14:224)

18:9 shall weep: κλαύσουσιν BC., most cursives, Compl., Are., cat.; κλαύσονται A., many mss., Rec., Hipp. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50) shall weep_Λ: Rec. (adding αὐτῇ.) Gr. and Ln. κλαύσονται, others κλαύσουσι. (Prospect 1:162) weep_Λ . . . on account of her: "her" vanishes [in the RV] after "bewail" or "weep," though not without authority; and ἐπ' αὐτῇ "over her" displaces ἐπ' αὐτῇ "for her," and again in 11. (Bible Treasury 14:224)

weep_Λ: αὐτῇ a few cursives, Rec., contrary to ABC., the mass of cursives, Compl., Vv., and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50) on account of her: ἐπ' αὐτῇ BC., about thirty-five cursives, Compl., Hipp., Are., cat.; ἐπ' αὐτῇ A., very many cursives, Rec. (14. Prim., omit). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50) on account of her: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. and Ln. ἐπ' αὐτῇ, Matthiae, Tisch. and Treg. ἐπ' αὐτῇ. (Prospect 1:162)

18:10 the: Er. omits τὸν before φ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50)

in one hour came: ἐν is wanting before μ. ὥρ. in BC., most cursives, Compl., Hipp., &c., but is inserted by many cursives, Rec., Are., cat. (A. 95. have μίαν ὥραν, and the former omits ἡλθεν). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.50-1) in one hour came: Rec. ἐν. (Prospect 1:162)

18:11 weep . . . mourn: κλαίουσιν κ. πενθοῦσιν AC., very many cursives, Rec.; κλαυσ. κ. πενθήσ. B., about thirty-five mss., Vv., and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.51)

weep . . . mourn: Matthiae κλαύσουσι καὶ πενθοῦσιν. (Prospect 1:162) on account of her: ἐπ' αὐτῇ (-ους B. 12.) C. 16. 18. 32. 39.; ἐπ' αὐτῇ (-ῆς 87. 92.) most mss., Rec.; ἐν αὐτῇ A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.51) on account of her: Tisch. and Treg. ἐπ' αὐτῇ. (Prospect 1:162)

on account of her: [See note to Rev. 18:9]

18:12 _Λ lading . . . stone: the Revisers rightly leave out "the" merchandise (lit. lading or cargo); they also say "stone," and correct like small blemishes in this verse and the following 13 (Bible Treasury 14:224)

lading: γόμος Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.51) of gold: C. χρυσὸν κ. -ν κ. -ς. κ. -τας (-ταῖς A.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.51) of pearl: οὐτεμαρ. Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.51) of pearl: Ln. μαργαρίταις. (Prospect 1:162) of fine linen: βυσσίνου ABC., most cursives, Are., cat.; βύσσου many mss., Hipp. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.51) of fine linen: Rec. βύσσου, the edd. βυσσίνου. (Prospect 1:162) of purple: πορφύρας C., very many mss., Hipp.; -ροῦ B., more than thirty mss., Er., Compl., Are., cat.; A. omits. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.51) of purple: Rec. and Matthiae πορφυροῦ, the edd. πορφύρας. (Prospect 1:162) of silk: Er. omits καὶ σπρικοῦ. [Query: is this W.K.'s typo for σιδήρου?] (Rev. of John, 1860, p.51)

wood: A. σκεῦος for ξύλον. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.51) of: C. 18. omit ἐκ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.51) wood: ξύλου BC., all cursives, most Vv. and Ff.; λίθου A. Vulg., Æth. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.51) of brass: C.* κάλκον. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.51) of marble: Er. omits καὶ μαρμάρου. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.51)

18:13 [whole verse]: [See note to Rev. 18:12]

cinnamon: κιννάμ. AB. (B. with more than twenty cursives, Hipp., -μου) C., many cursives; κινάμ. most mss., Rec., Hipp., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.51) cinnamon: Rec. κινά, others κιννά, and Matthiae -ου. (Prospect 1:162) and amomum: καὶ ἄμωμον AC. 6. 11. 12. 17. 19. 31. 34. 35. 36. . . . 87. Am. Fuld. Tol. Lipss., Syr., Æth., Slav.^{4.10} Hipp., but B., most cursives, Rec., Cop., &c., Are., cat., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.51) and amomum: [from 13 there] fell out of many copies and the Received Text καὶ ἄμωμον "and amomum," or spice, after cinnamon, no doubt from similarity of ending. (Bible Treasury 14:224) incense: B. 32. θυμιάματος (-των 94., -μα 95. Er.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.51) and unguent: C. omits κ. μύρ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.51) wine: B. and about twenty-four omit οἶν. (14. 31. 32. 33. 48. insert after ἐλ.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.51) cattle and sheep: B. and many mss., &c., πρ. κ. κτή. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.51) of chariots: ῥεδῶν ABC., very many mss., Rec.; ῥαιδῶν near thirty cursives, Compl., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.51)

18:14 the: C. omits ἡ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.51)

Λ desire . . . thy: ὁπ. σου AC. 35. 87. 95. Am. Fuld. Tol., Prim.; after ψυχῆς B., most mss., Vv., and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.51)

Λ desire . . . thy: Rec. &c. put σοῦ after ψυχῆς, others after ὁπώρα. (Prospect 1:162)

the: C. omits τὰ 2nd. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.51)

the bright . . . have perished: "the splendid" instead of "goodly" are "perished" rather than "departed," which is an inferior reading. (Bible Treasury 14:224) have perished: ἀπώλετο (-λοντο 7. 8. 16. 35. 37. 39. 49. . . . 87. 96. Compl.) ABC., most mss., Vv., and Ff.; ἀπῆλθεν 2nd, many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.51) have perished: Rec. ἀπῆλθεν, the edd. ἀπώλετο. (Prospect 1:162) never . . . them: αὐτὰ before οὐ μή BC. 2. 7. 8. 13. 14. 29. 30. 39. 40. 41. 43. 47. 50. . . . 90. 92. 93. 94. 97.; after οὐ μή A. 38. . . . 95. Hipp.; after εὖρ. most cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.51) shall they find: εὕρης B., about thirty cursives, Hipp., Are., cat.; εὕρησος very many mss., Rec. (-σεις 37. 49. Er., Compl.); εὕρησουσιν AC. 34. 35. 36. . . . 87. 90. (some joining it with οἱ ἔμποροι). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.51) shall they find: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. εὕρησος αὐτὰ, Matthiae εὕρης, Ln. Tisch. and Treg. εὕρησουσιν. (Prospect 1:162)

18:15 Λweeping: B. 2. 7. 8. 9. 13. 14. 16. 29. 30. 31. 39. 40. 42. 50. . . . 92. 93. 94. 97. 98. add καὶ before κλ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52)

18:16 Λsaying: καὶ λ. most mss. and perhaps Vv., Hipp., And., Are., cat., contrary to A. (B. 26. λέγουσιν) C., more than twenty mss., some Vv. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52)

Λsaying: Rec. and Gr. add καὶ. (Prospect 1:162)

Λ saying: "And" should not begin 16. (Bible Treasury 14:224) woe: B. and very many cursives omit the 2nd οὐαὶ (87. giving it thrice). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52)

woe: Matthiae omits οὐαὶ once. (Prospect 1:162) that: A. omits ἡ 3rd. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52) fine linen: βύσσινον AC., most mss., Hipp., Are., cat.; βύσσον B., about twenty-four mss. (κοκ. κ. π. κ. β. A.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52) decked: Elz. 1624, and others, κεχρυσόμενοι. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52) with: ἐν C. and, it appears, many more, but AB. and more than thirty mss. omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52) with: Matthiae, Ln. (and Treg. doubtfully,) omit ἐν. (Prospect 1:162) gold: χρυσίω ABC. and the majority of cursives, Hipp., Are., cat.; χρυσῶ many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52)

gold: The edd. χρυσίω. (Prospect 1:162) precious: B. omits τιμίω. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52) pearls: μαργαρίτη AC. 5. Prim.; -ταις B. and all other authorities. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52) pearls: Ln. and Tisch. μαργαρίτη (with A. and C.) (Prospect 1:162)

18:17 pilot: is not κυβ. a "helmsman," or "pilot," rather than "shipmaster," as in the Authorised and Revised Versions? Ναύκληρος was rather the skipper or shipmaster. (Bible Treasury 14:224) voyager: ὁ ἐπὶ τόπον πλ. A. (B. τὸν τ.) C., thirty mss., Am. Fuld. Lips. ⁶ Demid., Syr., Arm., Slav.^{4.10} Prim., &c., thirteen others, Compl., Are., cat., ἐπὶ τῶν πλοίων πλ. to which many mss., Rec., Hipp., add ὁ ὁμιλος. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52) voyager: Rec. ἐπὶ τῶν πλοίων ὁ ὁμιλος, the edd. ὁ ἐπὶ τόπον πλέων. (Prospect 1:162) voyager: ἐπὶ τῶν πλοίων ὁ ὁμιλος "the company in ships" (Received Text from Codex Reuchlini) is a wild departure from ὁ ἐπὶ τόπον πλέων "that saileth to a place," meaning every passenger for a place, rather than, with M. Stuart, a coaster (i.e., one who does not go out to sea), as the last clause embraces as many as ply the sea. (Bible Treasury 14:224)

18:18 cried: ἔκραζον B. and the great mass of mss. (9. 13. 27. ἐκραύγαζον), Rec., And., Are., cat.; ἐκραξαν AC. 35. 36. . . . 87. 95. Hipp. (probably Vulg., Tich.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52) cried: Rec. ἔκραζον here and in verse following. The edd. ἐκραξαν. (Prospect 1:162) seeing: βλέποντες ABC., most cursives, Compl., Hipp., And., Are., cat.; ὁρῶντες many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52) seeing: The edd. . . . βλέποντες rather than ὁρῶντες. (Prospect 1:162) smoke: τόπον for καπνόν A. 10. Vulg. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52) smoke: Ln. and Tisch. τὸν τόπον, others τὸν καπνόν. (Prospect 1:162)

what: C. omits τίς. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52)

Λgreat: C., Vulg., Arm., &c., add ταύτη to πόλει. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52)

Λ great: it is of course "the," not "this," great city. (Bible Treasury 14:224)

18:19 they cast: ἔβαλαν C.; ἐπέβαλον A., Syr.; ἔβαλλον 13. 29.; ἐπέβαλλον 95.; ἔβαλον B. and the mass, Hipp., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52)

they cast: Ln. ἔβαλαν. (Prospect 1:162) cried: ἔκραξον AC. 35. Hipp. (Vulg.); -ζον B. and, perhaps, all the rest, And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52) cried: Compare verse 18. (Prospect 1:162) weeping and mourning: A. omits κλαί. κ. πενθ. (27. putting after λεγ.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52)

Λ saying: B. and about thirty cursives, Compl., Am. Lips.^{5,6} Syr., Æth., Are., cat., add καί before λέγ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52)

Λ saying: Matthiae καὶ λέγ. (Prospect 1:162)

Λ ships: τὰ before πλ. ABC., about thirty cursives, Compl., Hipp., but omitted by very many mss., Rec., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52)

Λ ships: Rec. and Gr. omit τὰ before πλοία. (Prospect 1:162)

Λ ships: [The RV has] "their" ships in the sea. The article is omitted in the Received Text on slender ground. (Bible Treasury 14:224) her costliness: C. τιμωτητος ααυτης. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52)

18:20 over her: ἐπ' αὐτῇ BC., most cursives, Compl., Hipp., Are., cat.; ἐπ' αὐτῇ (so Mai reports B.) many mss., Rec.; ἐν αὐτῇ A. 98. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52)

over her: Rec. and Kn. ἐπ' αὐτῇ, Gr. Sz. and Treg. ἐπ' αὐτῇ (with C. &c.) Ln. and Tisch. ἐν αὐτῇ with A. (Prospect 1:162)

Λ heaven . . . ye saints, and ye . . . ye . . . hath judged: it should be "ye saints and" on excellent and abundant authority, also "ye" apostles, and "ye" prophets, but certainly not "thou" heaven, which is less correct than the Authorised "thou." But how came the Revisers to render ἔκρινεν "hath" judged, like the Authorised Version? (Bible Treasury 14:224) and ye: καὶ οἱ after ἄγιοι AB., most mss., Compl., Am. Fuld. Lips.⁵, Cop., Syr., Gr. and Lat. Ff., but C., many cursives, Rec., Vulg., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52) and ye: Rec. omits καὶ οἱ before ἄπ. (Prospect 1:162)

18:21 strong: A., Syr., Tich., omit ισχ. (40. -ρόν). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52)

millstone: μύλινον A.; -κον C. (Vulg., Syr., Cop.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52)

millstone: Ln. Tisch. and Treg. μύλινον not μύλον as is usually edited. C. has μύλικον, as in verse 22 it has φωνή μύθου. (Prospect 1:162) violence: ὄρ. = with a rush, or even "violence" as in the Authorised Version answers better to the usage of the Septuagint (Ex. 32:21, Deut. 28:49, Hos. 5:10, Amos 1:11, Hab. 1:11, not to speak of the apocryphal 1 Macc. 4:8, 30, 6:33, 47), than the "mighty fall" of the Revisers. In the classical writers it is used for "passionate feeling," or "indignation," never that I know for a great fall. (Bible Treasury 14:224)

more Λ : B. 14. . . . 82. add, at the end, ἐν αὐτῇ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52)

18:22 musicians: μ. is well given as "minstrels" or "singers," for it must mean something more distinctive than "musicians." (Bible Treasury 14:224) of any craft: A., Cop., Arr., Slav.⁴, omit πάσης τέχνης (90. Tol., prefix καί, 36. καὶ π. τ ἐπίνοια). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52) of millstone: C. μύθου for μύλον. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52) [see note to Rev. 18:21] shall be heard: B. εὐρεθῇ, 31. 48. φανῇ, for ἀκουσθῇ. (29. 30. 38. 40. 87. 90. 93. 98. omit the last clause). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52)

18:23 and no light of lamp shall shine any more in thee: καὶ φ. . . . φ. ἐν σ. ἐπ. omitted in A. 26. 87.* Er. (C., Am. Fuld. Lipss. Demid., Prim., omit ἐν, 97. ἐν σοί). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52) and no light of lamp shall shine any more in thee: Ln. omits ἐν after φανῇ. (Prospect 1:162)

Λ of bride: C. repeats φωνή before νύμφης. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52) for: ὅτι is wanting in nineteen mss. (47. has καί). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52)

Λ merchants: A. 95. drop οἱ before ἔμπ. (B. ἐνπ.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52)

Λ merchants: Ln. omits . . . οἱ before ἔμποροι. (Prospect 1:162) sorcery: φαρμακία AC. 7. &c., 87.; -εία B. and the mass. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.52)

18:24 blood: αἷματα B., more than thirty-five mss., Compl., Arr., Slav.⁴, &c.; αἷμα AC., very many mss., Rec., Vulg., Cop., Syr., Hipp., Lat. Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.53) blood: Rec. Ln. and Treg. αἷμα, others αἷματα. (Prospect 1:162) blood: If the Hebraistic αἷματα be right, rather than the singular form, it is against the concurrence of the most ancient MSS., & A C P, with some cursive support, &c. In chap. 16:6 & 36. 39. support αἷματα, but A B C P and almost all the juniors read αἷμα. (Bible Treasury 14:224) were slain: that "have been" slain or slaughtered. (Bible Treasury 14:224)

19:1 Λ After: καί, prefixed by many mss., Rec., Æth., Slav.³, &c., is omitted by ABC., most cursives, Vulg., Cop., Syr., Slav.⁴, Are., cat., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.53)

Λ After: Rec. καί, the edd. omit. (Prospect 1:162)

Λ After: "And" should disappear from the beginning according to the best and fullest authority (& A B C P, thirty-five cursives, Vulgate, Memph., Syr. &c., as against several cursives, Arm., Æth., &c., followed by Erasmus, Complutensian, Stephens, Beza and Elzevir. (Bible Treasury 14:239)

as: ὡς ABC., the great majority of cursives, Rec., V., and Ff., omitted by 7. 12. 16. 18. 47. 91. Er., Syr., Arm., Slav., Prim., Tich. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.53)

as: there is as good authority for inserting ὡς "as it were" after "I heard"; and here the Complutensian and Elzevir differ from Erasmus, and Stephens whom the Authorised Version followed. (Bible Treasury 14:239) loud . . . great multitude: μ (40. Er., Vulg., omit) ὄχ. π. ABC., at least thirty mss., Vv., and Ff.; ὄχ. π. μ. very many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.53) loud . . . great multitude: The order in Rec. differs slightly. (Prospect 1:162) saying: λεγόντων ABC., most others, Compl., Syr., And., Are., cat.; -ος many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.53) saying: Rec. λέγοντος, the edd. λεγόντων. (Prospect 1:162) saying: The ancient order too has been departed from, and the grammatical form with perhaps not one copy by Erasmus, and so Stephens, Beza, Elzevir, but not the Complutensian editors who adhered to the constr. ad sens. of λεγόντων. (Bible Treasury 14:239)

the: Er. adds τό. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.53)

Λ the glory: κ. ἡδόξα (κ. ἡ. δό. AC., but κ. ἡ. δό. κ. ἡ. δόξα B., more than thirty-five cursives, Compl.) ABC., the majority of cursives, Vulg., Syr., &c. Many mss., Rec., Cop., Are., cat., add καὶ ἡ τιμή. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.53)

Λ the glory: Rec. καὶ ἡ τιμή (which Kn. brackets) (Prospect 1:162)

Λ the glory: καὶ ἡ τιμή "and honour" is an addition from preceding ascription of praise, and not without some small support of inferior authorities here. The Complutensian edition rightly left it out, but Erasmus followed his Codex Reuchlini in its insertion. (Bible Treasury 14:239) of our God: τοῦ θεοῦ ABC., most cursives, Compl.; τῷ θεῷ 36. 37. Vulg., Syr., Æth., Arm., Arr., &c., Are., cat., &c.; κυρίῳ τ. θ. many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.53) of our God: Rec. . . . τῷ Θ. where the edd. read τοῦ Θ. (Prospect 1:162) of our God: τοῦ θ. ἡμ. "of our God" with the best, and so the Complutensian, not "to" τῷ as some copies and ancient versions, &c., still less κυρίῳ τ. θ. ἡμ. as in Codex Reuchlini, Erasmus, Stephens, Beza, and Elzevir. (Bible Treasury 14:239)

19:2 [whole verse]: there is little to note [in the RV], though copies differ a good deal. (Bible Treasury 14:239) judgments: A. omits αἱ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.53) corrupted: ἐφθέρην (ἐκρίνεν A.) C., very many cursives, Rec.; διέφθ. B., thirty-seven cursives, Compl., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.53) corrupted: Tisch διέφθειρε, others ἐφθ. (Prospect 1:162) her: τῆς is read before χ. by very [many] mss., Rec., contrary to ABC., twenty-seven or more cursives, Compl., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.53) her: Rec. adds τῆς, which the edd. drop. (Prospect 1:162) her: The Complutensian editors omit the article before χ. as is done in the best copies, but the Codex Reuchlini with others reads it and misled the other early editors. (Bible Treasury 14:239)

19:3 [whole verse]: there is yet less to say [about the RV], though the copies differ somewhat in form. (Bible Treasury 14:239)

they said: εἶρηκαν A., the majority of mss., Rec.; εἶρηκεν B., twenty-five cursives, Compl., Cop., Arr., Are., cat.; -κασιν 14. . . . 92. 94. 95.; εἶπεν C. 38. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.53-4)

they said: Matthiae reads εἶρηκεν. (Prospect 1:162) her: αὐτῆς omitted by 47. Er., Æth., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54)

19:4 [whole verse]: The order of words in 4 also differs even in the better copies, as of forms also. (Bible Treasury 14:239)

the twenty-four elders: οἱ εἰκ. τ. πρ. A., many cursives; οἱ πρ. οἱ κδ' B., many others, Er. (some omitting οἱ 2nd); οἱ πρ. οἱ εἰκοσιτ. C., the majority of mss., Compl., Vv., and Ff., but very many mss., Rec., add καί. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54)

the twenty-four elders: Rec. καὶ τ. (Prospect 1:162) fell down: ἐπεσαν ABC., many cursives, Er.; -ον B.*, most mss., Rec., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54) on the throne: τῷ θρ. ABC., at least twenty-five cursives, Are., cat.; τοῦ θρ. perhaps the majority of mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54) on the throne: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. ἐπὶ τοῦ θ. others ἐπὶ τῷ θ. (Prospect 1:162) on the throne: τῷ θρ., I doubt not, is here more correct than τοῦ θρ. as in the Received Text. The Complutensian here is no better than Erasmus. The Porphyrion uncial has τῶν θρ. — probably a mere lapse for τῷ θρ. The other uncials give the dative, not the genitive. With the saints they have the accusative, as in chap. 4 and 20; with God or Christ, the accusative the first time as in 4:2 and 20:11 (as in 14:14, and 19:11 also) the genitive or the dative afterwards, and not without a distinction. (Bible Treasury 14:239)

19:5 a voice: The Sinaitic is very wrong in reading the plural in 5 "voices" for "a voice;" (Bible Treasury 14:239) out of: ἀπό ABC., twenty-five cursives, &c.; ἐκ perhaps most cursives, Rec., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54) out of: Rec. Gr. Sz. ἐκ τ. θ. others ἀπό. (Prospect 1:162) out of . . . throne: the common text ἐκ is superior to ἀπό in A B C, five and twenty cursives, &c., some of which add the further error of changing θρ. into οὐρανοῦ. (Bible Treasury 14:239) throne: οὐρανοῦ for θρ. B. 14. 92. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54) the throne: τῷ θρ. ABC., 9. 12. 14. 27. 36. 41. 42. . . . 92.; τὸν θ. most cursives, Rec., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54)

the throne: Rec. τὸν θ. (Prospect 1:162)

the throne: τῷ θ. is supported by the best copies against τὸν θ. as in many cursives followed by Erasmus, the Complutensian, &c. (Bible Treasury 14:239) and: C. omits καὶ 2nd. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54) and: καὶ before οἱ φ. wants the excellent authority of A C P, but it has the very large support of A B, perhaps of all the cursives and ancient versions. (Bible Treasury 14:239)

the little: Very many cursives, Rec., prefix καὶ to οἱ μικροί, contrary to ABC., near thirty-five mss., Compl., most Vv. and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54)

the little: Rec. . . . καὶ οἱ μ. (Prospect 1:162)

the little: "Both" should vanish before "small," as in the Complutensian against Erasmus and those that went in his wake with Codex. Reuchlini, &c. Compare chap. 11:18, which confirms the copulative in the first case, not in the last. (Bible Treasury 14:239)

19:6 as: ὡς 1st is omitted by 6. 8. 12. 31. 35. 87. Er., Arm., Prim. (36. after φ.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54)

as: the Complutensian edition has ὡς "as it were," after ἡκ. not Erasmus, though his own copy has it corrected in red above. A Vienna cursive (36) has it after φ. The best copies give it, and of course before φ.; and so the Complutensians, Stephens, Beza, Elzevir. (Bible Treasury 14:239)

as [2nd]: ὡς 2nd is omitted by A. 12. 94. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54)

as [2nd]: Ln. omits the second ὡς. (Prospect 1:162)

as [2nd]: Singular to say, Lachmann omitted the second "as" with A and a few cursives, contrary to all other authority. (Bible Treasury 14:239) saying: λέγοντες B., more than twenty cursives; -των A., very many cursives, Rec., Vulg., Prim., &c.; -τας 12. 16. 30. 33. 47. 49. . . . 96. Er., Steph., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54) saying: Rec. Ln. and Treg. λεγόντων, others λέγοντες. (Prospect 1:162) saying: λεγ. is only a question of form -οντας, -οντες, -οντων, as in the Complutensian, which last has the best authority, the others arising from desired smoothness. (Bible Treasury 14:239)

Lord: κύριος is omitted by 8. 12. 36. Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54)

[our]: ἡμῶν is omitted by A., many cursives, Rec., Cop., &c., contrary to B. and the majority of witnesses, Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54)

[our]: Gr. Kn. Sz. and Treg. (in brackets) ἡμῶν. (Prospect 1:162)

[our]: "Our" is lacking in the last clause of the Received Text, and hence in the Authorised Version, through Erasmus and the Codex Reuchlini, though not alone, for even A and others omit it. But there is ample proof for it. (Bible Treasury 14:239) hath reigned: It is the aorist in Greek, which in such a case as this it is difficult correctly to represent in English; for neither "reigned" nor "hath reigned" could convey that God had entered on His kingdom, but rather that it was past. (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist. and Rev., p.548) [See also Rev. Exp., p.220] hath reigned: The Revisers [of 1881] are here obliged to content themselves like the Authorised Version, with "reigneth" for ἐβασίλευσεν. In 11:17 they have "didst reign" for "hast reigned" of the Authorised Version. It is not easy to convey in English its aoristic force; and such a case may have misled our old translators into a longer view of its meaning than is just. To represent it always in English as a simple preterite is a delusion. (Bible Treasury 14:239)

19:7 [whole verse]: there is little but difference of form to note [in the RV]. (Bible Treasury 14:239)

rejoice: ἀγαλλιώμεν A. 12. 18. 35. 36. 87. 95.; -ώμεθα B. and the mass of copies, Rec., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54) rejoice: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. and Treg. ἀγαλλιώμεθα. (Prospect 1:162) give: δώσωμεν A. 11. (-σωμεν) 36. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54) give: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. and Treg. . . . δώμεν. (Prospect 1:162) his: 7. 12. 16. 39. Er., omit αὐτοῦ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54)

19:8 [whole verse]: there is little but . . . change of order [to note in the RV] (Bible Treasury 14:239)

she should be clothed: περιβάλλ. many cursives. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54) bright [and] pure: λ. καὶ καθ. B., near thirty cursives, Compl., Vulg., &c.; καθ. καὶ λ. very many mss., Rec., but A. 7. . . . 91. 92. 95. *Am. Demid. Lips.*⁴, Vv., and Ff., omit καί. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54) bright [and] pure: Rec. καθ. κ. λ. others λ. κ. καθ.; Treg. brackets καί. (Prospect 1:162) is . . . of the saints: τῶν ἁγ. ἐστίν AB., more than thirty mss., Compl., And., Are., cat.; ἐστ. τ. ἁγ. very many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54)

19:9 [whole verse]: In 9 copies strangely insert and omit, and shuffle; but such minute points are not my present object. (Bible Treasury 14:239) are called: As to the latter of these texts, both versions [of Tregelles] agree in an untrue translation of οἱ κεκλημένοι. The real force is that which the English Bible exhibits "they which are called," and not "those who have been," and false consequences have been built by others upon this false rendering. (Prospect 1:87)

the: τὸν for τό B. 16. . . . 87. 96. 98. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54) true: οἱ ὅλ. A. 4. 48. . . . but B. and almost all others, And., Are., cat. omit οἱ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54) true: Ln. and Tisch. οἱ ὅλ. (Prospect 1:163) are . . . of God: τ. θ. before εἰσίν AB., twenty-four mss., Vv., and Ff.; after εἰσίν most mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54) are . . . of God: Later edd. differ from the older in the order. (Prospect 1:163)

19:10 I fell: ἔπεσα A., fourteen cursives, Er.; -σον B. (ἐνώπιον) the majority of mss., Rec., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54)

I fell: Ln. Tisch. and Treg ἔπεσα. (Prospect 1:163)

his: αὐτόν B. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54)

of . . . of: it seems an assumption that it is a testimony to Him; for this would be either the dative in Greek (as in English), or the genitive after περί as a regular rule. It is the testimony Jesus is rendering in the book, whoever may receive or repeat it. Compare chap. 1:2, 12:17. (Bible Treasury 14:240)

Jesus . . . Jesus: τοῦ before 'I. 1st, very many cursives, Rec., contrary to AB., about thirty mss., Compl., And., Are., cat.; Jesus: τοῦ before 'I. 2nd, most cursives, Rec., contrary to AB. 12. 14. 16. 36. . . . 91. 92. 95. Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54)

Jesus . . . Jesus: Ln. Tisch. and Treg . . . omit τοῦ twice before 'Ἰησοῦ. (Prospect 1:163)

Jesus . . . Jesus: In 10 there is little textual to remark. The chief matter is that the best copies omit τοῦ before the first 'I. where Erasmus is right, not Stephens, Beza, or Elzevir; and so before the second where the Complutensian joins them, with undoubtedly much cursive support, but not the best authority. (Bible Treasury 14:239-240)

19:11 I saw: ἶδ. AB. J. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54)

opened: ἦν. A. 42*; ἄν. B., almost all the rest, Rec., Orig., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54) opened: Ln. Tisch. and Treg. ἦν. others ἄν. (Prospect 1:163) called: καλούμενος is omitted by A. 4. 6. 12. 17.* 31. 32. 48. Er., Arm., Slav., Hipp., Are., cat., contrary to B. and the mass, Rec., most Vv. and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.54) called: Tischendorf says that Lachmann omits καλούμενος (11), but it is only so in his earlier small edition (not in his later) with A &c. Indeed some of the best Latin copies add "vocatur" to "vocabatur," as Tregelles edits the Vulgate; and so it stands in Buttmann's contribution to the larger work. (Bible Treasury 14:240)

19:12 [as]: ὡς before φλόξ A., many cursives, Rec., most Vv., Orig., Are., cat., &c., contrary to B., upwards of thirty mss., Compl., Arm., Hipp. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.55)

[as]: Matthiae omits ὡς . . . following B. and many other MSS. (Prospect 1:163)

[as]: Lachmann agrees with the Received Text and Authorised Version in reading ὡς "as" with A, many cursives, and versions. The Revisers rightly discard this on ample grounds; and give "diadems" rather than "crowns." (Bible Treasury 14:240)

[names written and]: ὀνόματα γεγρ. καὶ ὄνομα γεγρ. B., more than twenty-five cursives, Compl., Syr. (about ten mss. ὀνόματα γεγρ. & or καί), but A., very many mss., most Vv. and Ff., ὄνομα γεγρ. Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.55)

[names written and]: Matthiae . . . reads ἔχ. ὀνόματα γεγραμμένα καὶ ὄν. following B. and many other MSS. (Prospect 1:163)

[names written and]: Tischendorf in his latest edition rejected his own previous yielding to B, five and twenty cursives, Septuagint, &c., in the addition of ὀνόματα γεγραμμένα καὶ as in the Complutensian also. The Sinaitic is too careless here to weigh much; the Alexandrian and Porphyrian preserve the true text; C here fails. (Bible Treasury 14:240)

19:13 dyed: ἐβραντισμένον 32. 35. 36. . . . 87. 95. Orig., Hipp., for βεβ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.55)

dyed: The MSS. fluctuate painfully. ⁸^m has περιεβραντισμένον which Origen and the Latins confirm; P 36 βεραντισμένον. The majority with A B support, in the Received Text, βεβαμ. So reads the Complutensian (Bible Treasury 14:240) is called: κέκληται AB., about thirty mss., Demid., &c., Æth., Syr., Hipp.; καλεῖται very many mss., Rec., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.55) is called: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. καλεῖται, Matthiae, Ln. Tisch. and Treg. κέκληται. (Prospect 1:163) is called: the Complutensian [reads] . . . καλεῖται like Erasmus; but the best have κέκληται (⁸^m κέκλητο being a slip). (Bible Treasury 14:240)

19:14 that are: τά before ἐν A., most mss., Compl., Rec., Orig. (elsewhere, with 32., αὐτοῦ), Are., cat., omitted by B., eleven cursives, Er., Steph. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.55) that are: And observe, that the words, "which were," though they are printed in italics, are rightly inserted. The sense would be substantially the same whether you read it with those words or not: and therefore the English translators, seeing that it ought to be understood, but not knowing that it was really a part of the text, inserted the phrase in italics; but it ought to be adopted. (Lect. on Rev., p.401)

that are: the article repeated before ἐν is omitted by ⁸ B and many cursives, to which the last syllable preceding probably contributed, as in Erasmus, Stephens, and Beza; but it appears in A P and many cursives as in the Complutensian and Elzevir, which the Revisers [of 1881] rightly prefer. (Bible Treasury 14:240) followed: ἡκολούθουν 38., -ην 90. Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.55) upon: ἐπί B., nineteen or more mss., Rec., Orig., &c.; ἐφ' A. and probably most cursives. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.55) pure: καί is added before καθ. by many mss., Rec., Vulg., Orig., Hier., contrary to A. (λ. β. καθ.) B., the majority of cursives, Compl., *Am. Fuld. Tol. Lips.*⁴ Demid., Vv., and most Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.55)

pure: Rec. καὶ καθ. (Prospect 1:163)

19:15 [two-edged]: δίστομος is added before ὁξ. by B., forty-two cursives, Compl., many Vv. and Ff., contrary to A. 12. 36. 38. &c., Rec., Am. Fuld. Demid., Cop., &c., Orig., Ir.^{im} (Rev. of John, 1860, p.55)

[two edged]: Sz. (after B. and thirty-five other MSS.) δίστομος. (Prospect 1:163)

he should smite: πατάξῃ AB., most cursives, Compl., Orig., And., Are., cat.; -σση many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.55)

he should smite: Rec. πατάσση, others -ξη. (Prospect 1:163) indignation_κ: καὶ before τ. ὁρ. many cursives, Rec., Ar.^p, but not AB., the majority of cursives, Compl., Vv., and Ff. (Syr. omits τ. ὁρ., Cyp., Prim., τ. θ.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.55) indignation_λ: the only notable change [in the RV] is the exclusion of καὶ "and" before "wrath" which the Received Text had with most from Erasmus' Codex Reuchlini, and a few others, Andr. in some copies, contrary to all the rest and the Complutensian edition. (Bible Treasury 14:240)

the: 29. Er., omit τοῦ last. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.55)

the: there is no good reason why those who said "God, the Almighty" (or some equivalent) in 1:8, 4:8, 11:17, 15:3, 16:7, 14, 19:6, should say, "Almighty God" without the English def. article in this verse. (Bible Treasury 15:192)

19:16 upon the garment and: A., Æth., Cass., omit ἐπὶ τὸ ἱμ. καί. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.55)

a: ὄνομα AB., most cursives, Compl., Orig., Are., cat., but many cursives, Rec., prefix τό. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.55)

a: Rec. Sz. τὸ ὄν. (Prospect 1:163)

a: the article is wrongly in T.R. from Erasmus downwards before "name"; but all English have rightly "a" name, perhaps from the Complutensian. (Bible Treasury 14:240)

19:17 I saw: ἴδ. AB. 7. 14. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56)

an: ἕνα (ἕνα ἄλλον 36. Cop., Arm., &c.) A., very many mss., Rec., Vv., Are., cat., Prim., omitted by B., more than twenty-five cursives, Syr., Tich. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56) an: Matthiae omits ἕνα. (Prospect 1:163)

the: Er. omits τῷ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56)

he cried: ἔκραζεν B. . . . 95. Tol. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56) with: ἐν φ. B. 2. 7. 13. 14. 29. 30. 42. 50. 55. . . . 87. 90. 92. 94. 97. 98. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56) with: Matthiae . . . adds ἐν τὸ φ. μ. (Prospect 1:163) fowls . . . mid-heaven: the Revisers have rightly "birds" rather than "fowl," and "mid-heaven," for "the midst of heaven." (Bible Treasury 14:240) fly: πετομ. AB., very many others, Compl., And., Are., cat.; πετωμ. perhaps most cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56) fly: Later edd. πετομ. (Prospect 1:163) mid-heaven: μεσουρανίσματι Er., -ίματι 7. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56) gather yourselves: συνάχθητε AB., the great mass, Compl., Am. Fuld. Lips.^{4,5} Tol. Demid., most Vv. and Ff.; καὶ συνάγεσθε some mss., Rec., Vulg., *Lips.*⁶, Ar.^p (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56) the great supper: τὸ δ. τὸ μ. (τοῦ δ. τὸν μ. 8. 16. 31. 32. 38. 39. 48. 55. . . . 87. 90. 94. 75. 98. (μέγα); τὸ δ. τὸν μέγαν 4.35. 41. 42. . . . ; τὸν δ. τὸ μ. 8. 37. 95.) τοῦ AB., most mss., Compl., Vv., and Ff., but many cursives, Rec., &c., give τὸ δ. τοῦ μεγάλου. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56)

the great supper: Rec. . . . δ. τοῦ μ. where Matthiae has τὸν δ. τὸν μ. but most edd. τὸ μ. τοῦ Θ. following A. and thirty other MSS. (Prospect 1:163)

the great supper: the change of moment is "the great supper of God" [in the RV], on the authority of κ A B P, more than 35 cursives, and most ancient versions, &c., instead of "the supper of the Great God" as in the Received Text from Erasmus (not the Complutensian) following Codex Reuchlini and a few others. (Bible Treasury 14:240)

19:18 the flesh: Er. omits σάρκας 2nd. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56)

on them: ἐπ' αὐτοῦς A. 14. 92.; ἐπ' αὐτῶν B. and the rest, Rec., And., Are., cat. (ἐπ' αὐτῷ Er.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56)

on them: Ln. and Tisch. ἐπ' αὐτοῦς. (Prospect 1:163) on them: the Uncials exhibit all three possible forms after ἐπί, genitive B P and most, dative κ , accusative A and a few followed by Lachmann. (Bible Treasury 14:240) both: τε after ἐλ. AB. (contrary to Mai), about thirty-five cursives, Compl., omitted by very many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56)

both: Rec. omits τε after ἐλ. (Prospect 1:163)

both: Our Authorised Version prints "both" in italics, following the Received Text, which was due to Erasmus. But the Complutensian had τε rightly with the best and most which warrant "both." (Bible Treasury 14:240) and both: καὶ is omitted by B. 9. 14. 30. 36. 47. 92. 98.; τε is added after μ. by twenty-four mss., contrary to A. and all other witnesses. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56)

and both: Sz. adds [τε] after μ. (Prospect 1:163) and both: But the τε after μικρῶν "small" is not read by the more ancient, though in B and more than thirty juniors which the Complutensian edition follows, not Erasmus or the Received Text. (Bible Treasury 14:240)

19:19 I saw: ἴδ. AB. 7. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56)

their: αὐτοῦ A. 6. 11. 29.; αὐτῶν B. and all other mss., Vv., and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56)

their: Ln. αὐτοῦ. (Prospect 1:163) their: Lachmann with A and a few cursives has the strange "his" for "their" armies. It may be a mere slip from the end of the verse. (Bible Treasury 14:240) war: τὸν before πόλ. AB., about twenty mss., Are., cat., contrary to most cursives, Rec., And. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56) war: Rec. and Gr. omit τὸν before πόλ. (Prospect 1:163) war: The article should be heeded before π. "war," the or their war, though the Received Text after Erasmus and the Complutensians is not without support. (Bible Treasury 14:240)

19:20 with him the: ὁ μ. αὐτ. B., most cursives, Hipp., Are., cat.; μ. αὐτ. ὁ 14. 37. 38. 49. 96. Compl.; μ. τούτου ὁ many cursives, Rec.; οἱ μ. αὐτ. ὁ A. 41. (Cop. = καὶ before ὁ). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56) with him the: Rec. μ. τούτου ὁ ψ. Ln. reads αὐτοῦ, but gives ὁ before ψ. (Prospect 1:163) with him the: the reading of Erasmus and so of the Received Text is μετὰ τ. which is not so good Greek as μετ' αὐτ. but makes no sensible difference in English. It rests on 1. 49. &c., against all of value. Tischendorf in his eighth edition abandons ὁ μετ' αὐτ. for μετ' αὐτ. ὁ as in κ P, &c. The reading in A 41 Cop. is a blunder οἱ μετ' αὐτ. ο. and still more in 34. οἱ μετ' αὐτ. ψευδοπροφήται, "the false prophets with him." (Bible Treasury 14:240)

the signs: The article should be expressed before "miracles" or rather "signs"; (Bible Treasury 14:240) had: Is it correct to say with the Revisers as well as the Authorised Version that "had" received &c.? His deceiving was not after, but before, they received the mark of the beast. (Bible Treasury 14:240)

image: τὸ χάραγμα B. for τῇ εἰκ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56) were cast: βληθήσονται for ἐβλ. 36. 38. Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56) lake of fire that burneth: B and most correct the solecism of ἅ A P, &c. τῇ λ. τοῦ π. τῆς κ. which Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles, and Alford adopt. (Bible Treasury 14:240) that burneth: τῆς καιομένης A., Vulg. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56) that burneth: Ln. τῆς κ. (Prospect 1:163) ἁbrimstone: τῷ is added before θ. by very many cursives, Rec., contrary to AB., about thirty mss., Compl., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56)

ἁbrimstone: the article . . . as in the Received Text should disappear before θ. at the close, though Codex Reuchlini was not alone in misleading Erasmus. (Bible Treasury 14:240)

19:21 of him: how strange too that Erasmus in his first and second editions should not have τοῦ (right in his MS.) before καθημένον. In his fifth edition it is corrected. (Bible Treasury 14:240) came forth: ἐξελεύσεται AB., most cursives, Compl., And., Are., cat., ἐκπορευομένη many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56) came forth: Rec. ἐκπορ-, others ἐξελθ. (Prospect 1:163) came forth: The true reading is ἐξελθ. (ἅ A B P and almost if not all known authorities; ἐκπορ. "goeth" or "proceedeth" was Erasmus' guess, perhaps founded on the Vulgate, but contrary to his MS., Codex Reuchlini. The Complutensian is right, not Steph. or Beza. (Bible Treasury 14:240) the: τὰ is omitted by 12. Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56) fowls: θηρία? A. * for ὄρνεα. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56)

20:1 I saw: ἴδ. AB. 7. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56)

coming . . . abyss: The Revisers in 1 have rightly "coming," not "come," as in the Authorised Version, and "abyss" as before for "bottomless pit," here and in verse 3. (Bible Treasury 14:255)

key: κλεῖν AB., most cursives, Compl.; κλείδα many mss., Rec., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56)

key: [the] edd. prefer κλεῖν. (Prospect 1:163) upon: English idiom perhaps requires "in" his hand, rather than "upon" literally. The angel was seen in vision with the chain hanging on his hand. (Bible Treasury 14:255)

20:2 the ancient serpent: ὁ ὄφις ὁ ἀρχαῖος A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56)

the ancient serpent: Ln. and Tisch. ὁ ὄφ. ὁ ἀρ. (Prospect 1:163) the ancient . . . which . . . ἁ: "the" old serpent is more correct than the demonstrative "that," a not infrequent fault in the Authorised Version. But should not "who" be better than "which" following? "For" completes the sense before "a thousand years." (Bible Treasury 14:255) ἁSatan: ὁ before σατ. AB., about twenty cursives, Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56) ἁSatan: Rec. Gr. Kn. and Sz. omit ὁ before Σ., which Matthiae drops also. (Prospect 1:163)

Satan: B., about thirty-five mss., Compl., Syr., Ar.^p, Slav.^{4.10} add ὁ πλανῶν τὴν οἰκουμένην ὅλην (cf. ch. 12:9), contrary to A., very many cursives, Rec., Vv., Lat. Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56)

Satan: Matthiae . . . adds ὁ πλανῶν τὴν οἰκουμένην ὅλην. (Prospect 1:163)

20:3 abyss: [See note to Rev. 20:1] shut: For ἐκλ. 3. 9. 12. Er., give ἔδησεν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56) shut ἁ: After ἐκλ. many mss., Rec., add αὐτόν, contrary to AB., most cursives, Compl., Vv., and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56) shut ἁ: Rec. ἐκ. αὐτόν. (Prospect 1:163) shut ἁ: αὐτόν "him" has such slender authority after ἐκλ. that all critics feel bound to expunge the word, and translators rightly supply "it" as after "sealed." (Bible Treasury 14:255)

ἁover him: ἐμμενῶς αὐτόν A. for ἐπ. αὐτοῦ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56) ἁover him: Compare the absurd reading of the excellent Alex. MS. in Rev. 10:3. (Exp. of Heb., p.129) [see also Bible Treasury N7:352]

he might deceive: πλανᾷ B., thirty-eight cursives, Compl., Are., cat.; πλανήση A., many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56)

he might deceive: The edd. πλανᾷ. (Prospect 1:163) the nations . . . more: ἐτι τ. ἔθ. AB., most mss., Compl.; τ. ἔθ. ἐτι many cursives, Rec. (14. 40. &c., omit ἐτι). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56) the: τὰ wanting in 12. Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56)

after these: μ. τ. which should be distinguished from the singular form, as the Revisers do in 7:1,9 (the only true case in the book); elsewhere it is plural, but even so the Revisers might have held to uniformity with advantage save in that case. (Bible Treasury 14:255) must he be loosed: λ. αὐτ. AB., very many cursives, Are., cat.; αὐτ. λ. perhaps most cursives, Rec., And., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.57) loosed: καὶ is inserted before μ. τ., by very many cursives, Rec., Vulg., Cop., &c., And., Are., cat. (but δέ before ταῦτα 29. 30. . . 98. Syr.), contrary to AB., at least fifteen cursives, Am. Fuld. Tol. Lips.^{4.5} Lat. Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.56-7) loosed: Matthiae and later edd. omit καὶ before μ. Kn. brackets it. (Prospect 1:163)

20:4 [whole verse]: Mr. [Tregelles] says: "The parallel to this sentence in Greek construction is found in Rev. 1:7. In each case, there is a general statement, followed by καὶ οἵτινες; not as some class added to the general statement, but as expressing some who, while included in the general term, are brought into an especial prominence." Now, all that could be legitimately gathered from Rev. 1:7 is, that καὶ οἵτινες does not necessarily exclude the persons spoken of from a previous general statement. The grammar of the sentence shows no more than this; so that, in order to determine whether they are or are not included, we are forced to look elsewhere. The idea I do not combat, that first we have the account of the blessed portion of saints in the millennial reign, but, besides, the prophet sees a particular class of saints, answering to those described in Rev. 6:9, and another answering to those whom he had seen on the sea of glass, in chap. 15:2. First, then, there is, if you will, the general statement: "I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them." This, if there be a parallelism in Rev. 1:7, answers to "every eye shall see him;" — both being general descriptions, the one of blessedness, and the other of judgment, at the Lord's coming in glory. But here the parallelism drops; for in Rev. 1:7, we have but one class of persons following the general statement, whereas in Rev. 20:4 we have two. And here I have to complain of a palpable error on Mr. [Tregelles] part; he leaves entirely out the really general statement of Rev. 20:4, and commences with the first of the two clauses that follow, viz. "The souls of those that were beheaded" . . . Could any thing more pervert the passage? Let the reader turn to his Bible, and he will see that this is not the general term, but one of the two classes subsequently noticed: (1) "I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, &c.; (2) and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God; and (3) which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image," &c. . . "and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." Now, while it is easy to see the point at which the editor aims, and it is vain for him to say in the face of this note, and more than this note, that he "has avoided any thing which might relate to the interpretation of the Revelation," is it not striking that the misconception tends only to make plainer the true scope of the passage? Still, I quite allow that in the fourth verse of chap. 20 Mr. [Tregelles] has improved upon the ordinary version. From the latter, it might be supposed that the clause, "and which had not worshipped the beast," &c., was a mere added description of "those that were beheaded," &c., but both versions of Mr. [Tregelles] are preferable. In 1844, it was, "and such as had not worshipped;" and in 1848, it is "and those who had not worshipped;" but from either the reader gathers that, though the portion of all the glorified saints is stated in the persons sitting upon thrones and judging, the next two clauses contemplate two classes, each in especial prominence, as having passed through especial trials. Not that these two classes embrace all who share in the thousand years' reign, any more than the one especial class, "those who pierced him," in Rev. 1:7, embraces all who are to see the Lord; so that the parallelism referred to, if properly stated, entirely defeats the object which is behind this note. (Prospect 1:88)

I saw: ἴδ. AB. 7. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.57)

thrones: even here Wiclif, Tyndale, Cranmer, as well as the versions of Geneva and Rheims, give "seats," instead of "thrones," most incongruously. (Bible Treasury 14:255) them; : The colon is all right after "unto them" in the earliest part of the verse; because these were already changed and had followed the Lord in glorified bodies out of heaven, as seen in chap. 19:14, and consequently were described as seated upon thrones. (Bible Treasury 14:255) beheaded: πεπολεμημένων A., πεπλε. Et. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.57) of God: τὸ θ. AB., twenty-five cursives, &c.; τῷ θ. probably most mss., Rec., And., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.57) of God: Rec. &c. τῷ θ. . . . Matthiae and others τὸ θ. (Prospect 1:163)

God; : Would not a semicolon have been preferable to a comma after "the word of God"? For the Seer has before him two classes of sufferers in the disembodied state, and there the dividing line is marked by a change of construction. (Bible Treasury 14:255) nor: οὐδέ AB., twenty cursives, Are., cat.; οὔτε most mss., Rec., And. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.57) nor: Rec. &c. . . . οὔτε . . . Matthiae and others . . . οὐδέ. (Prospect 1:163) his image: τὴν εἰκόνα AB., at least twenty-four cursives, Er., Steph.; τῇ εἰκ. probably most mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.57) his image: Rec. &c. . . . τῇ εἰκ. Matthiae and others . . . τὴν εἰκ. (Prospect 1:163) their: ἀντῶν after μ. many cursives, Rec., Tol., Lips.⁴, Cop., contrary to AB., most other mss., Vulg., Am. Fuld. Demid., Syr., Gr. and Lat. Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.57) their: The edd. omit ἀντῶν after μ. (Prospect 1:163) forehead: μετώπων 7. 39. . . . 94. Vulg. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.57)

Christ: 32. &c., Er., Steph., omit τοῦ before χρ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.57)

[the]: τὰ before χ. is omitted by A. 21. 32. 34. 49. . . . 91. 96. Er., And., contrary to B. and the great majority, Rec., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.57)

[the]: the more recent [edd. omit] τὰ before χ. (Prospect 1:163)

20:5 [And] the rest of the dead lived not till the thousand years were finished: The verse is deficient to χ. ἔτη in upwards of twenty cursives, Syr. (clearly through ὁμοιοτέλετον.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.57)

[And] the rest of the dead lived not till the thousand years were finished: Matthiae omits οἱ - ἔτη. (Prospect 1:163)

[And] the rest of the dead lived not till the thousand years were finished: [Q. T.C.J. (N.Y.) sends Zion's Watch Tower, Vol. iv. No. 12, and asks whether the following paragraph (p.2, col.2) is true. "It is an important scripture; and a line on the subject would be appreciated by many of us."

"Rev. 20:5, first clause, which reads, 'But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished' is the subject of dispute. We showed conclusively that the above text has no support from any authority older than 'the middle of the fifth century.' It is not found in any of the older MSS. — it is not in the Syriac — and the confessedly oldest, most complete, and best of all Greek MSS. of the New Testament, the Sinaitic — does not contain those words. It is wanting too in several of the more recent MSS., among which is the Vatican, No. 1160, a MS. of special clearness and harmony with the most ancient ones."]

The criticism, there need be no hesitation in saying, is unfounded; of which there can scarce be conceived a better proof than the fact that out of more than 500 editions of the Greek New Testament not one known to me exhibits the text desired. All present the clause which these manuscripts and the Syriac V. omit. Every editor of the most ordinary information knew of the various reading in question; yet not a single man of judgment has ever doubted that the omission is an error owing to one of the most fertile sources of variants, homœoteleuton, as it is technically called. The clause before (end of ver. 4) closed with the words χίλια ἔτη; and so does the first clause of ver. 5. This naturally misled the eyes of weary scribes. So the critical editors in all lands and times have judged.

But it "has no support from any authority older than 'the middle of the fifth century'!" Can the Ed. of Z.W.T. have weighed his own words? There is but one MS. of the Revelation older, the Sinaitic; which is often and notoriously faulty, and nowhere more so than in this Book. Thus in Rev. 20 only, ἐκ τοῦ οὐρ. in ver. 1 is omitted; the precisely same sort of error as in 5 occurs in its form of ver. 2, 3 from αὐτόν to αὐτόν being omitted. In ver. 6 it adds καί in error. In ver. 8 it omits wrongly τῆς γῆς τόν; and it wrongly adds πάντα, and καί after M. In 9 there is the corrected insertion in error of ἀπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ, and in 10 δπου is falsely repeated. In 11 there is the mistake of ἐπαρω for ἐπ', as the article is wrongly dropt from 12, with ἐπὶ for ἐνώπιον, with the absurd correction of both inserted later. In 13 is the misreading against all authorities of κατεκρίθησαν. In 14 καί is added wrongly and ὁ as wrongly left out. In 15 the future supplants the aorist. Now large as this list is, all the blemishes of the Sinaitic text of this one chapter are not here registered, but enough surely to prove how little the real character of that document is known, and how precarious it would be to demand support from authority older than the middle of the fifth century.

Next, though the Peschitto Syriac was made in very early days, we have no MS. of any great antiquity; and even if we had, 2 Peter, 2 and 3 John, with Jude, are supplied from a later version, and the Revelation from a copy in the Leyden library, whose age is so uncertain, and character of text so doubtful, that it ranges very low indeed in a critical point of view.

The Alexandrian Uncial (A) is a capital authority as to the Rev.; and so is the Ephr. Rescr. of Paris (C), but here we do not hear its voice after 19:5. But the Alex. is, like it, of the fifth century and is supported by the Basilian Vat. 2066, a MS. of far greater weight than the cursive 40 (=Vat. 1160), by an adequate number of cursives of which more than twenty have the same defect here as A. All the ancient versions, save de Dieu's Syriac, confirm the clause, as well as the early commentators, Greek and Latin.

Further, the clause is so entirely in keeping with the context that, if we had not these words at the opening of ver. 5, the same truth is conveyed, or supposed, by the first resurrection of the righteous who reign with Christ for a thousand years (ver. 4-6), followed by the little while of Satan's last deceit and war of the external nations, and the standing before the great white throne for eternal judgment of the dead, who had had no part in the resurrection of life and glory. (Bible Treasury 16:96)

[And]: καὶ before οἱ B. 10. 12. 13. 16. 31. 32. 37. 38. 48. 49. . . . 95. 96. Compl., *Demid. Lips.*⁴, Cop., And., Are., cat.; δέ after οἱ probably most cursives, Rec., Æth., Ar.^p; οἱ without either, A., Vulg., Am. Fuld. Tol. Lips.^{5,6} (Rev. of John, 1860, p.57)

[And]: Οἱ δέ is the ordinary reading; καὶ οἱ is that of B. and other MSS., while recent critics incline to οἱ with A. (Prospect 1:163)

[And]: The Revisers like others have rightly omitted "But" at the beginning. (Bible Treasury 14:256) dead: ἀνθρώπων after ν. B. 32. 34. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.57) lived: ξζ. AB., more than eighteen cursives, Compl., Vulg., Cop., Slav.³, Are., cat., ἀνέξ. very many mss., Rec., Æth., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.57) lived: The edd. ξησαν. (Prospect 1:163) till: ἄχρι AB., near eighteen cursives, Compl., And., Are., cat.; ἕως very many mss., Rec. (Er. adding ἄχρι.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.57)

till: The edd. . . . ἄχρι. (Prospect 1:163)

20:6 these: τοῦτω 14. 92.; -ον 29. Cop., Hipp. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58) the second death: ὁ δ. θ. AB., about thirty-five cursives, Compl., Hipp., And., Are., cat.; ὁ θ. ὁ δ. many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58) the second death: The edd. ὁ δ. θ. (Prospect 1:163) shall reign: βασιλεύουσιν A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58) shall reign: Almost all the witnesses read "reign" in the future. The Alexandrian alone here commits the blunder of the present tense, though it is really more inexcusable in ch. 5:10, where it had too many companions, which misled the Revisers. Here they rightly join the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:256) him: μ. ταῦτα seventeen cursives. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58) him: Matthiae, for μετ' αὐτοῦ, reads μετὰ ταῦτα. (Prospect 1:163)

a: τὰ before χ. B. 14. 18. 47. . . . 92. 94. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58)

20:7 when . . . shall have been finished: μετὰ for ὅταν τελ. B., twenty-three mss., Arm., Slav.⁴, Are., cat.; ὅτε (12.) ἐτέλεσθησαν Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58)

when . . . shall have been finished: Matthiae adopts μετὰ for ὅταν τελ. (Prospect 1:163)

20:8 the . . . Ἰαμαγὸς ταῖς is omitted by 12. 37. Er., and τὸν before Μα. by Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58)

the . . . Ἰαμαγὸς Ln. and Tisch. drop τὸν before Μαγ. (Prospect 1:163) the: τὸν before π. AB., about thirty cursives, Compl., Are., cat., contrary to very many mss., Rec., And. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58) the: the edd. in general, save Gr. and Kn., insert [τὸν] before πόλ. (Prospect 1:163)

the war: the Revisers say "to the war," rather than "to battle," the reading of αὐτῶν, omitted in the Received Text, not affecting the version. (Bible Treasury 14:256) of whom: αὐτῶν after ἀρ. AB., near thirty mss., contrary to very many cursives, Rec., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58) of whom: the reading of αὐτῶν, omitted in the Received Text, not affecting the version. (Bible Treasury 14:256)

20:9 upon . . . encompassed . . . [from God]: "over" is more correct than "on." There is no need to add "about" after "compass," or surround. "From God" is questionable, and probably imported from elsewhere, though many authorities insert the words as in the Received Text. (Bible Treasury 14:256) encompassed: ἐκύκλευσαν AB., about twenty cursives, Compl.; -ωσαν very many mss., Rec., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58) encompassed: Matthiae, and most modern edd., read ἐκύκλευσαν. (Prospect 1:163) saints: After ἀγ. B. 97. add καὶ τὴν πόλιν τῶν ἁγίων. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58) out of the heaven [from God]: A. 12. 18. *Lips.*⁴, Ar.^p, Slav.⁴, &c., omit ἀπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ, put after ἐκ τ. οὐ. by B., near thirty cursives, Compl., but prefixed by very many cursives, Rec., Vulg., Syr., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58)

out of the heaven [from God]: The order in Rec. differs from that which is approved. (Prospect 1:163)

20:10 the: Er. omits ὁ before δ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58)

also: καὶ after ὅπου AB., thirty-five cursives, Compl., Vulg., Am. Lipss., Syr., Are., cat., contrary to many mss., Rec., Demid. Tol., Cop., and some Lat. Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58)

also: Rec. omits καὶ after ὅπου. (Prospect 1:163)

also: "both" the beast, &c., should be there, though the Sinaitic omits. (Bible Treasury 14:256)

20:11 [whole verse] . . . it . . . ἄ face: the order in the Received Text is not the best, but the Authorised Version has not suffered; nor in the reading αὐτοῦ for the better αὐτόν, the difference of which has been already before us. The insertion of τοῦ is right, but so are all versions. (Bible Treasury 14:256)

I saw: ἴδ. AB. 7. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58)

great white: μ. λ. AB., twenty-six mss., Compl., Vulg., Cop., Æth., Syr., Arr., Slav., Are., cat.; λ. μ. perhaps most cursives, Rec., And., Ir.^{im} (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58)

it: αὐτόν B., about thirty-five cursives, Compl., Are., cat.; - αὐτῷ 33. 35.; αὐτου A., some cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58)

it: Matthiae, Gr. Sz. and Tisch. αὐτοῦ. (Prospect 1:163)

ἄ face: τοῦ before πρ. A. 95. (the last adding αὐτοῦ). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58) the earth and the heaven: ὁ οὐ. κ. ἡ γῆ 10. 37. 49. 91. 96. Tol., Æth., Ar.^p, Slav.⁴, some Gr. and Lat. Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58)

20:12 I saw: ἴδ. AB. 7. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58)

the great and the little, standing: τοὺς με. κ. τ. μ. A., fifteen cursives, Compl., Vulg., Syr., Æth., Arm., Ar.^p, Slav.^{3,4}, And., Ir.^{im}; μ. κ. με. (τοὺς μικ. τ. μ. B.) very many mss., Rec. (31. 32. 48. putting ἐστῶτας before). 2. 8. 29. 30. 49. 42. 50. . . . 90. 94. 97. 98. omit the words, as 2. 14. 30. . . . 92. 98. omit ἐστῶτας. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58) the great and the little, standing: Rec. &c. μικ. καὶ μεγ. Matthiae, Ln. Tisch. and Treg. τοὺς μεγ. καὶ τ. μικ. (Prospect 1:163) the great and the little, standing: it should be "the great and the small," as in the Complutensian edition and the Revised Version, though some good copies favour "the small and the great." It is curious that all the other early Greek editions are wrong, all the early English versions right before the Authorised Version, save in omitting the article. But the omission of the articles in the phrase as in the Received Text has no support from any known manuscript. More than a dozen cursives omit the entire phrase, among them Erasmus' copy, Codex Reuchlini. (Bible Treasury 14:256)

the throne: θρόνου AB., thirty-six cursives, Compl., almost all Vv. and Ff.; θεοῦ some cursives, Rec., Slav. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58) the throne: The edd. after A. B. and many MSS. read θρόνου. (Prospect 1:163) the throne: Before “the throne” should supplant “God,” which has trifling authority. Forms and order slightly vary from the Received Text, but do not affect the sense. (Bible Treasury 14:256) were opened: ἡνοίχθησαν AB., 7. 11. 14. 29. 31. 32. 33. 35. 48. . . . 87. 92. Er.; ἡνεῶχ. (ἀνεῶχ. 37. 38. 49. . . . 96. Compl.) many cursives, Rec.; ἡνοιξαν (-εν 9. 13. 16. 39. &c.) 2. 8. 29. 30. 40. 41. 42. 50. 54. 90. 94. 97. 98. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58) were opened: most [edd.] read ἡνοίχθησαν, instead of ἡνεῶχθ. with Rec. &c. (and again in the sing.) Matthiae ἡνοιξαν. (Prospect 1:163) another book: ἄ. β. AB., about thirty cursives, Compl., And., Are., cat.; β. ἄ. many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58) was opened: ἡνοίχθη A. 3. 7. 11. 29. 35. 40. . . . 87. Er.; ἀνεῶ. 38. 38. 49. . . . 96. 97. Compl.; ἡνεῶ. B., most mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58)

20:13 [whole verse]: The critics from good copies improve the order twice in 13, but there is nothing to show in the rendering. (Bible Treasury 14:256)

the dead that were in it: νε. τοὺς ἐν αὐτῇ AB., nearly thirty mss., Vv., and most Ff.; τοὺς ἐν αὐ. νε. very many cursives, Rec.; νε. τ. ἐν αὐτοῖς 38. Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58)

the dead that were in it: The edd. ν. τοὺς ἐν αὐτῇ. (Prospect 1:163) gave up: ἔδωκεν A. 2. 7. 48. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58)

the dead that were in them: τ. νε. τ. (τοῖς B., 98. omits) ἐν αὐ. AB., upwards of twenty-five mss., Vv., and Ff.; τ. ἐν αὐ. νε. very many mss., Rec.; τ. ἐαυτῶν νε. 37. Compl. (τ. ἐαυτοῦ νε. 7. Mill, contrary to Wetstein and Jackson, who give τ. νε. τ. ἐν αὐ.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58)

the dead that were in them: The edd. . . . ν. τ. ἐ. αὐτοῖς. (Prospect 1:163) their: αὐτοῦ B. 2. 7. 8. 14. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 35. 47. 51. . . . 92. 97. 98. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.58)

their: Matthiae editis ἔργα αὐτοῦ. (Prospect 1:163)

20:14 This is the second death: ὁ θ. ὁ δ. ἐστιν AB., most cursives, Am. Fuld. Tol., most Vv. and Ff.; ἐστιν ὁ θ. ὁ δ. 9. 10. 37. 49. . . . 96. Compl., Vulg., &c.; ἐστιν ὁ δ. θ. many cursives, Rec. (29. 30. &c., omit θ., 31. . . . 94. 97. omit the clause). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.59)

This is the second death: The edd. ὁ θ. ὁ δ. (Prospect 1:163) the lake of fire: Many cursives, Rec., Vulg., Arm., Ar. omit ἡ λ. τ. π. (18. 41. 42. Cop., &c., omit οὐ. . . . πύρος), contrary to AB., most cursives, Compl. (Am. Fuld. Tol. Lips.^{4,5} apparently, but curtly and with variations), many Vv., Hipp., And., Are., cat., Ir.^{im}, &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.59)

the lake of fire: The edd. . . . add ἡ λίμνη τοῦ πυρός. (Prospect 1:163)

the lake of fire: The only remarkable change [in the RV] . . . is the addition at the end of “the lake of fire” on ancient and ample evidence. (Bible Treasury 14:256)

20:15 [whole verse]: there is no change of reading to note, but the Revised Version is simpler than the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:256)

the book: τῇ βίβλῳ A. and perhaps most cursives, Rec.; τῷ βιβλίῳ B., at least twenty-four mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.59)

21:1 I saw: ἴδ. AB. 7. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.59)

had passed away: ἀπῆλθον A.; -θον B., upwards of twenty cursives, Are., cat.; -θε 2. 4. 11. 31. 35. 47. . . . 87. 98.; παρῆλθε very many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.59) had passed away: Rec. Kn. παρῆλθε, Gr. Sz. Treg. ἀπῆλθον (some MSS. -θε), Ln. and Tisch. ἀπῆλθαν. Compare verse 4. (Prospect 1:163) had passed away: ἀπῆλθον (or -αν) is right, not παρῆλθε as in the Compl. edition as well as the Received Text following Codex Reuchlini and a few other cursives. The true reading is more energetic. (Bible Treasury 14:271)

the sea is no more: τὴν θάλασσαν οὐκ ἴδον A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.59)

the sea is no more: The last clause is singularly tampered with in the Alexandrian uncial, “I saw the sea no more,” which is quite short of the truth conveyed. So Dusterdieck is all wrong in talking about a new sea, for the text clearly distinguishes “the sea” from what is said of the first heaven and the first earth. (Bible Treasury 14:271)

21:2 ^Λ the . . . I saw: εἶδον (ἴδ. AB. 7.) after καινὴν AB., most cursives, Compl., most Vv. and Ff., Gr. and Lat., but before τὴν π. many mss., Rec., Vulg., Cop., Arm. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.59)

^Λ the . . . I saw: The edd. . . . read τ. π. τ. ἄ. ¹I. κ. εἶ. and follow their order rather than that of Rec. in the next words. (Prospect 1:163)

^Λ the . . . I saw: Erasmus appears to be responsible . . . for putting καινὴν at the end, not the beginning, of the phrase, which would perhaps admit of the marginal rendering of the Revised Version, though the text seems to me correct as in the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:271)

^Λsaw: ἐγὼ Ἰωάννης after καί many cursives, Rec., Vulg., Arm.^{mag} &c., contrary to AB., near forty cursives, Compl., Am. Tol. Demid., Cop., Syr., Æth., Arm., Arr., And., Are., cat., Ir.^{im} (Rev. of John, 1860, p.59)

^Λsaw: The edd., with A. B. and upwards of thirty other MSS. omit ἐγὼ Ἰωάννης. (Prospect 1:163)

^Λ saw: In 2 is one of those unseemly additions for which Erasmus appears to be responsible, following no known Greek copy but the Clementine edition and inferior manuscripts of the Vulgate. For the more ancient Latin copies (Am. Demid. Fuld. Tol. &c.) reject “I John” with ^ΛA B P, more than forty cursives, and all or nearly all the ancient versions. (Bible Treasury 14:271) out of the heaven from God: ἐκ τ. οὐ. ἄ. τ. θ. AB., twenty-four cursives, most Vv. and Ff.; ἄ. τ. θ. ἐκ τ. οὐ. very many cursives, Rec., Slav. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.59) out of the heaven from God: “Out of the heaven from God” is the true order, though P 1. 49. 79. and other cursives support the Received Text and the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:271)

21:3 throne: θρόνον A. 18. Vulg., Arm.^{mag} Ir.^{im} Aug., Amb.; οὐρανοῦ B. and almost all cursives, Rec., And., Are., cat., Tich., Prim., Cop. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.59) throne: Ln. Tisch. ἐκ τ. θρόνον (with A. &c.) others οὐρανοῦ. (Prospect 1:163) throne: the “heaven” (or “throne”). It is hard to decide, and ought not to be closed up, as in the Revised Version, without even a marginal note, that some ancient authorities support the former, B P, almost all the cursives, and the ancient versions (save the Vulgate and margin of the Armenian as) against ^ΛA 18. and the exceptions just stated. (Bible Treasury 14:271) people: λαός B., thirty-five cursives, Compl., Vv., and Ff.; λαοί A., many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.59) people: Rec. Ln. λαοί, others λαός. (Prospect 1:163) people: “Peoples” is the reading of ^ΛA 1. 79. 92. and perhaps others; but the mass, with B P and the old versions, supports, as in the Complutensian edition, the singular, which Tischendorf thinks more probably an emendation. It appears to me that αὐτοῖς might rather influence a scribe in favour of the plural and thus bring in the various reading. (Bible Treasury 14:272) shall be with them: ἔστ. after μετ' αὐτ. AB., at least twenty cursives, Vulg., Syr., Are., cat., Ir.^{im} Amb.; before, most mss., Cop., &c., And., Aug., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.59) shall be with them: The order differs slightly. (Prospect 1:163) their God: αὐτῶν θεός A., Vulg., Syr., Ir.^{im} Amb.; θ. αὐτῶν (12. adding ὧν) very many mss., Rec., some Vv., but wanting in B., near thirty mss., Compl., Cop., Ar.^c, Slav.⁴, Are., cat., Lat. Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.59-60) their God: More than twenty MSS want αὐ. Θ. or Θ. αὐ. (Prospect 1:163) their God: Tischendorf also omits with κ B, more than thirty cursives and several ancient versions, &c., θεὸς αὐτῶν or αὐτ. θ. and so the Complutensian edition, Tregelles, Westcott and Hort. (Bible Treasury 14:272)

21:4 [God]: ὁ θεός before πάν A., very many cursives, Rec., Slav., Aug., Prim., omitted by B., thirty cursives, Compl., most Vv. and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.59)

[God]: Matthiae, Gr. Sz. and Tisch. omit ὁ θεός, Ln. (Kn. and Treg. in brackets) admits the words. (Prospect 1:163)

[God]: the Received Text, with A 1. &c., adds "God," but authority in general omits (Bible Treasury 14:272)

from their eyes: ἀπ' (ἐξ 98.) αὐτῶν B. sixteen cursives (40. 41. omitting ἀ. τ. ὁφ.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.59) from their eyes: authority in general omits . . . ἀπ' αὐτῶν in B and some fifteen cursives. (Bible Treasury 14:272)

from: ἐκ for ἀπό A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.59)

from: Ln. for ἀπὸ has ἐκ. (Prospect 1:163) death: Before θάν. κ and a few cursives &c. read no article, the effect of which would be to say "there shall be no death more," not "death shall be no more," as with the article in A B P and most. (Bible Treasury 14:272)

more: Er. omits ἔτι 1st. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.59)

for: ἔτι is omitted by A., Slav.^{3,4}. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.59) for: It is strange that ἔτι should be left out of the last clause, and that Tregelles should cite ἔτι as omitting it, for there it is, but not the previous ἔτι, by an obvious slip, with the strange blunder of πρόβατα for πρώτα. Even Alford and Tregelles bracket ἔτι, and Tischendorf accepts, as Lachmann, and Westcott and Hort reject it. But this is a narrow line for the Revised Version without a note to the reader that the mass of authority is opposed to A P, and some old Latin copies, though Am. and Fuld. may be doubted. (Bible Treasury 14:272) have passed away: ἀπῆλθαν A.; -θον most cursives, Rec.; -θεν B., eighteen mss., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.60)

21:5 the throne: τῷ θ. twenty-seven cursives (87. ἐν τ. θ.), Are., cat.; τοῦ θ. many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.60)

the throne: Rec. ἐπὶ τοῦ θ. (Prospect 1:163) the throne: ἐπὶ τῷ θ. is right and best supported against τοῦ θ. as in the Received Text. The dative best expresses proper and permanent relationship. (Bible Treasury 14:272)

Behold: A. καὶ ἰδοὺ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.60)

I make all things new: κ. ποι. π. A. 35. 37. 38. 49. . . . 87. 91. 96. Compl., Ir.^{im} Aug., Prim.; π. κ. ποι. B., twenty cursives, Syr., Are., cat.; κ. π. ποι. very many mss., Rec., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.60)

I make all things new: The order is a little different in some. (Prospect 1:163)

I make all things new: The variety is great as to κ. π. πάντα, as it should be. (Bible Treasury 14:272)

[to me]: μοι is added after λέγει by, perhaps, most mss., Vulg., Fuld., Cop., Æth., And., Are., cat., Tich., contrary to AB., sixteen cursives, Am. Tol., Syr., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.60)

[to me]: Matthiae, Ln. Tisch. and Treg. omit μοι. (Prospect 1:163)

[to me]: "To me" is questionable; though κ P, most cursives and versions sustain it. (Bible Treasury 14:272)

are κ faithful and true: π. κ. ἀλ. AB., twenty-four cursives, most Vv. and Ff.; ἀλ. κ. π. seemingly most mss., Rec., some Vv., And. (B. and twenty-four mss., Syr., Are., cat., adding τοῦ θεοῦ before or after εἶον). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.60) are κ faithful and true: B. and twenty other MSS. add τοῦ θ. (Prospect 1:163) faithful and true: "Faithful and true" is best supported. (Bible Treasury 14:272)

21:6 They are done. I am the: Γέγοναν (-νασι 38.) ἐγὼ εἰμι τό A. 38. Ir.^{1st} (facta sunt); -να ἐγὼ τό B. 7. 11. 12. 13. 26. 31. 32. 33. 35. 47. 48. . . . 87.; -να τό twenty cursives, Compl.; -νε. ἐγὼ εἰμι τό very many cursives, Rec., Vulg., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.60)

They are done. I am the: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. γέγονε, Ln. Tisch. and Treg. γέγοναν. Matthiae, with some MSS., reads γέγονα and connects it, omitting εἰμι, with the following clause. (Prospect 1:164)

They are done. I am the: "It is" (as in the Received Text), or "they are" (A &c.), "done"; or "I am become," as in κ B P, &c. Yet the best supported reading which the Complutensian edition adopted is intrinsically the worst. The first seems to be only formed by Erasmus according to the Vulgate. The second appears to be right. (Bible Treasury 14:272)

Alpha: ἄλφα AB. 8. 13. 31. 34. 35. . . . 87. 94. 96. 98. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.60)

Omega, the . . . the: καὶ is inserted after ὦ by 2. 7. 8. 29. 30. 40. 41. 42. 50. . . . 94. 97. 98., and ἡ, τό are wanting in 31. 32. 37. 46. 47. 49. . . . 96. Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.60) give_A: αὐτῷ is given after δώσω by B. and near twenty mss., Are., cat., contrary to A., most cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.60) give_A: Sz. Tisch. (Treg. in brackets) insert αὐτῷ, with B. and twenty-four other MSS. (Prospect 1:164) give κ: insertion of αὐτῷ is scarce felt in translation (Bible Treasury 14:272)

the fountain of the . . . of life: A., Slav.³, omit τῆς πηγῆς, Er. τοῦ, and 2. 16. 35. 39. . . . 94. 96. τῆς ζωῆς. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.60)

21:7 shall inherit: κληρονομήσει A., very many cursives, Rec., almost all Vv., and Lat. Ff.; δώσω αὐτῷ B., near thirty mss., Slav.^{4,10}. (Slav.³ uniting both forms), Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.60) shall inherit: Matthiae, with B. and twenty-four Mss., for κλ. has δώσω αὐτῷ. (Prospect 1:164)

these things: ταῦτα AB., most mss., Compl., Vv., and Ff., Gr. and Lat.; πάντα a few cursives, Rec. (Arm = τ. π.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.60)

these things: For πάντα, the edd. read ταῦτα. (Prospect 1:164)

these things: "these" (not "all") things hardly can be questioned: so good is the authority. (Bible Treasury 14:272) to him . . . he: A. has αὐτῶν, and omits αὐτός. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.60)

a: ὁ is prefixed to υἱός by very many cursives, Rec., contrary to AB., about twenty-five cursives, Compl., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.60)

a: Rec. Gr. Sz. (Treg. in brackets) ὁ υἱ. others rightly, I think, omit the article with A. and sixteen other MSS. (Prospect 1:164)

21:8 the: τοῖς δὲ δ. AB., thirty-six cursives, Compl., And., Are., cat.; δ. δέ many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.60)

the: The edd. τοῖς δὲ δ. (Prospect 1:164)

the: the Received Text fails to give the article, though in Codex Reuchlini Erasmus ought to have seen it written above in red. (Bible Treasury 14:272) faithless λ : καὶ ἀμαρτωλοῖς after ἀπ. B., thirty-eight cursives, Compl., Syr., Ar.^p, Slav.¹⁰ (also Slav.⁴, omitting καί), Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.60) faithless λ : Sz., following B. and more than thirty other MSS., after ἀπ adds καὶ ἀμαρτωλοῖς. (Prospect 1:164)

faithless λ : The better authorities (N A P, some cursives, and old versions, &c.) support Erasmus and the Received Text (as against the Complutensian edition, Griesbach, Scholz, with B, very many cursives, and other ancient versions, &c.) in omitting καὶ ἀμαρτωλοῖς, “and sinners.” (Bible Treasury 14:272) sorcerers: φαρμακοῖς AB., most cursives, Er., Compl., And., Are., cat.; -κεῖν many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.60)

sorcerers: The edd. φαρμακοῖς. (Prospect 1:164) liars: ψεύσταις A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.60) the second death: ὁ θ. ὁ δ. AB., most cursives, Compl., Vv. (also a few omit ὁ 1st., Are., cat.), instead of δ. θ., with many mss., Rec., Cop., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.60) the second death: The edd. . . . ὁ θ. ὁ δ. (Prospect 1:164)

the second death: The emphatic form is right in the last clause, where Codex Reuchlini misled Erasmus, &c., and P has only “death.” No; it is exactly not death merely because of sin as in Eden at the beginning, nor destructive judgments on the earth as in the past or the future; but now at the end “the second death,” because of grace and truth fully come yet rejected, despised, or corrupted. God is not mocked. (Bible Treasury 14:272)

21:9 [paragraph]: It is well that in the Revised Version the first eight verses form a separate section. Nowhere in the book is such a division more imperatively called for, though probably even the Revisers themselves do not all appreciate the importance of their own arrangement, which tends to guard the reader from confounding the eternal state with the millennial to the loss of their marked distinctiveness. (Bible Treasury 14:271) came λ : πρὸς (εἰς 9.) με added after ἡλθεν by many cursives, Rec., Arm., Arr., &c., contrary to AB., at least thirty-five mss., Compl., Vulg., Am. Fuld., Cop., Syr., Æth., And., Are., cat., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.60) came λ : The edd. omit πρὸς με. on good authority. (Prospect 1:164) came λ : The words “unto me” in 9 are rightly struck out as having no known authority in Greek MSS. Erasmus’ Codex Reuchlini opposes the learned editor himself who ventured to father them. The Complutensian editors (save in 1 John 5:7,8) adhered to their witnesses, such as they were; and of course here the words do not appear. The Armenian Version has the words, and also Lips.⁴ as the first of the three Latin versions of the Apocalypse in the Univ. Library of Leipzig is designated. “Quibus ergo (says C. F. Matthaei, x. 303, ed. Rigae, 1785) Codicibus nititur πρὸς με; Responsio apud Wetstenium in promptu est. Scilicet Codd. 1. 3. 5. 6. 13. 14. 15. Et qui semper Erasmo interroganti respondet: 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 28. Ergo omnino XIII. Cujus ergo hi recensionis sunt? Roterodamensis credo, aut Basileensis.” It may be bitterly ironical but is too true. Did Erasmus know of Armenian or Lips.⁴? If not, the same root of imagination bore the same wild fruit. (Bible Treasury 14:287)

one: 12. omits εἰς, 35. 38. . 87. give ὁ πρῶτος. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.60) of: ἐκ before τῶν AB., near thirty-five cursives, Compl., Vv., Are., cat., Prim., but omitted by many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.60) of: Rec. Gr. omit ἐκ. (Prospect 1:164) of: In the Complutensian edition ἐκ τ. ἀγ. is rightly given, omitted not without the support of a few cursives by Erasmus, &c., down to the Received Text, but not affecting our versions. (Bible Treasury 14:287) full: γεμ. B., about twenty cursives, Compl., Are., cat.; τὰς γ. very many cursives, Rec. (ἐχούσας 35. 87.); τῶν γεμόντων A. 12. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.60-61) full: Rec. Gr. Matthiae Kn. Treg. Sz. τὰς γ.; Ln. and Tisch. τῶν γ. (Prospect 1:164) full: One cannot be surprised that copyists softened the solecism of τῶν γόμοντων in N^p.m. A P. 12. 19. &c. into τῶν γεμουσῶν as in N^{com}. and as this was unsatisfactory into τὰς γεμούσας (as in 1. 7. &c.) or γεμ. without τὰς, as in B, and at least twenty-two cursives, &c., and so the Complutensian. (Bible Treasury 14:287)

the: τῶν before ἐπτά A., very many cursives, Rec., but wanting in B., at least eighteen mss., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.61) the: B. and many omit τῶν before ἐπτά. (Bible Treasury 14:287) the bride, the Lamb's wife: τ. ἀρ. after τ. ν. τ. γ. A. 33. 35. 38. . . . 87. after τ. γ. (καὶ 13. 32.) τ. ν. B., about thirty mss., Compl., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.61) the bride, the Lamb's wife: The order differs a little. (Prospect 1:164)

the bride, the Lamb's wife: The copies vary greatly in the order of the last words. But “the bride the wife of the Lamb” has the best authority, and the substantial sense is the same. (Bible Treasury 14:287)

21:10 to: ἐπί A. 87. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.61) to: Later edd. ἐπὶ ὁρ. (Prospect 1:164)

the: Compl. omits τὴν before ἀγ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.61) the λ holy: τὴν μεγάλην after τ. π. very many mss., Rec., Slav. mss., omitted by AB., near thirty cursives, Vv., Gr. and Lat. Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.61) the λ holy: Rec. τὴν μεγάλην, but the edd. reject, with A. B. and more than twenty other MSS. and many versions. (Prospect 1:164) the λ holy: All the critical editors omit τὴν μεγάλην on the authority of the best MSS. and the most ancient versions. According to the right text, it would be, “shewed me that holy city Jerusalem.” (The Prospect 1:91)

the λ holy: The common text of Rev. 21:10 is faulty. (Lect. on Rev., p.361)

the λ : “the great” should disappear, though Codex Reuchlini misled Erasmus, Complutensian editors, &c., not without six or more other cursives, and all the copies of Andreas’ Comm. (Bible Treasury 14:287) out of the heaven: ἀπὸ τ. οὐ. 11. 31. 32. 33. 35. . . . 90. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.61) from God: ἐκ τ. θ. B., about twenty-four cursives, Are., cat.; ἀπὸ τ. θ. A. and, perhaps, most mss. (93. &c., omit). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.61)

from God: Matthiae has ἐκ τ. Θ. (Prospect 1:164) from God: The manuscripts differ slightly as to the last words, but all the edd. are right, and so the versions, unless one except Wiclif, who has “from heume of God.” (Bible Treasury 14:287)

having the glory of God: A. 98. omit ἐχ. τ. δ. θ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.61)

21:11 λ Its: καί, prefixed to ὁ φ. by very many mss., Rec., Vulg., Æth., &c., is omitted by A., more than thirty cursives, Compl., Am. Fuld. Tol., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.61)

λ Its: there is no copulative before ὁ φ. save in a few cursives and versions, which misled Erasmus &c., and the Authorised Version. The best authorities have it not. (Bible Treasury 14:287)

as . . . stone: ὡς λίθω omitted by 7. 12. 17.* 18. 38. 49. &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.61)

as . . . stone: Erasmus does give ὡς λίθω though wanting in Codex Reuchlini and other cursives, &c. (Bible Treasury 14:287)

21:12 had (1st): ἐχουσα 1st, AB., near twenty-four cursives (Er., And., in some mss., adding τε); -σαν τε very many mss., Rec. (87. Compl., omitting τε), Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.61) had (2nd): ἐχουσα 2nd, AB., about thirty cursives, Er.; -σαν very many mss., Rec., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.61) had (2nd): one cannot be surprised that Erasmus did not follow Codex Reuchlini, in ἐχουσα τε. But critics generally adhere to the solecism without τε as read in the best copies, and largely. Codex Sinaitic has the strange ἐχοντι in the first place, and ἐχοντας (corr. ἐχουσα) in the second, where the best also give that correction as their text, and Erasmus again gave ἐχουσαν. (Bible Treasury 14:287-288) had . . . had: Rec. ἐχουσαν τε τ. and ἐχουσαν π. the edd. -α omitting the enclitic. (Prospect 1:164) and at the gates twelve angels: καὶ ἐπὶ τ. πν. ἀγγ. δώ. omitted δι ὁμοιστέλεον by A., Fuld., Syr. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.61) and at the gates twelve angels: Lachmann alone of editors was bold enough to leave out "and at the gates twelve angels," a mere omission through similar ending in the Alexandrian, a few Latin copies, and the later Syriac. Some of the Latin commentators, through a slip of copyists, were actually led to imagine "angles" for "angels." (Bible Treasury 14:288)

twelve: δεκαδύο 7. 8., B. and others ι β, for δω. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.61) names: ὀνόματα 2nd, B., at least eighteen cursives, Are., cat., Vv. (A. and about ten cursives prefixing τά), omitted by many mss., Rec., Æth (which does not express ἃ ἐστίν). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.61) names: Ln. Tisch. Treg. add τὰ ὀνόματα, (Matthiae ὄν). (Prospect 1:164) names . . . the: many and ancient copies support the addition of ὀνόματα (with or without τά) in the last clause, which misled Lachmann, Matthaei, Tregelles (bracketed in his ed. N. T.), Alford (bracketed), and Tischendorf till his last or eighth edition. The latest criticism returns to the reading of Erasmus and the Complutensians, the common text in short, as represented in κ P 1. 37. 39. 47. 49. 51. 79. 91. 96. &c. (Bible Treasury 14:288)

the: τῶν (τοῦ 32. . . 93) inserted before υἱῶν (omitted by 12. 27. 47.*) by very many mss., Rec., contrary to AB., about twenty-four cursives, Are. cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.61) the: Ln. Tisch. Treg. . . omit τῶν before υἱῶν. (Prospect 1:164)

the: τῶν should vanish before υἱῶν on good and full authority as against 1. 7. &c., a few giving τοῦ, and others omitting. (Bible Treasury 14:288)

21:13 on: ἀπό AB., the great mass of cursives, Compl., And., Are., cat.; ἀπ' many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.61)

east: ἀνατολῶν B., upwards of thirty cursives, Compl., Are., cat.; -λῆς A., very many cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.61) east: Ln. Tisch. &c. ἀνατολῆς, Gr. Kn. Sz. ἀπὸ ἀνατολῶν. (Prospect 1:164) and . . . and . . . and: καὶ thrice, AB., most cursives, Compl., Am., &c., Vv., and some Gr. and Lat. Ff., contrary to many mss., Rec., *Fuld. Tol. Demid. Lips.*⁴, Prim. Tich. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.61) and . . . and . . . and: Codex Reuchlini and Latin copies led Erasmus, &c., to omit καὶ three times, but the Complutensian is right. (Bible Treasury 14:288) south: For νότον Er. has μεσημβρίας. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.61) south three gates, and on the west three gates: δυ. πν. τ. κ. ἀπὸ νό. A. Arm. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.61)

21:14 the: Er. omits τό before τεῖχος. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.61)

had: ἐχων AB. 7. 32. 97. 98., contrary to the mass, Rec.; εἶχε 38. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.61-62) had: Erasmus departed from ἐχων in 1, which is also read in A B P and several cursives, for ἐχων as in most with κ^{corr.} (κ^{p.m.} omitting like the Aeth.). (Bible Treasury 14:288) on them: ἐπ' αὐτῶν AB., most mss., Vv., and Ff.; ἐν αὐτοῖς many cursives, Vulg. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62)

on them: The edd. ἐπ' αὐτῶν. (Prospect 1:164) on them: it is doubtful if any MS. authorises ἐν αὐτοῖς as in Erasmus, Stephens, Beza, (1. like 7. omitting καὶ ἐν αὐτοῖς probably due to the Vulgate, but the margin of 1. adding in red καὶ ἐπ' αὐτῶν). (Bible Treasury 14:288) twelve: δώδεκα before ὄν. AB., at least thirty cursives (18. 19. δεκαδύο; B., &c., ι β), Compl., many Vv., And., Are., cat., omitted by many mss., Rec., *Lips.*⁶, Æth., Cop., Slav.³, Prim., Tich. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62)

twelve: The edd. . . δώδεκα ὄν. (Prospect 1:164) twelve: The Received Text from Erasmus also omits δώδεκα, "twelve," before "names," though it stands in the margin of 1. The Complutensian is correct. (Bible Treasury 14:288)

21:15 measuring: μέτρον before κάλ. (-άμου 31.) AB., most cursives, Compl., Vv., and Ff., omitted by many mss., Rec., Cop., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62) measuring: Rec. omits μέτρον, which A. and many other MSS. add. (Prospect 1:164) measuring: Erasmus followed 1. (which has other support) in dropping μέτρον in 15, though there can be no doubt of its genuineness; and so all critics. (Bible Treasury 14:288) to measure: μετρήσει B. 7. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62) and the wall of it: B. and at least twenty-four mss., Compl., omit καὶ τὸ τ. αὐτῆς. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62) and the wall of it: Matthiae omits καὶ τὸ τ. αὐτ. (Prospect 1:164)

21:16 is as much as: Many cursives, Rec., Vulg., Prim., put τοσοῦτόν ἐστιν before ὅσον (ὁσοῦτον Er.), contrary to AB., most cursives, Compl., many Vv. and Gr. Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62) is as much as: Rec. τοσοῦτόν ἐστιν, contrary to A. B. and thirty-four more MSS. &c. (Prospect 1:164) is as much as: Codex Reuchlini is defective, for it has not καὶ τὸ μῆκος αὐτῆς ὅσον τὸ πλάτος. Hence Erasmus seems to have translated from the Vulgate κ. τ. μ. ἃ τοσοῦτόν ἐστιν ὅσον καὶ τ. πλ. κ displaces the first words. (Bible Treasury 14:288)

as λ: καὶ after ὅσον A., very many cursives, Rec., Vulg., Cop., Syr., Hier., Prim., omitted by B., upwards of thirty cursives, Compl., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62)

as λ: Kn. omits καὶ after ὅσον. (Prospect 1:164) with: ἐν before καλ. 11. 12. 31. 32. Er., And. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62) twelve: δεκαδύο upwards of twenty cursives; ι β B., &c.; δω. A. and very many mss., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62)

twelve: Matthiae δεκαδύο χ. (Prospect 1:164) twelve thousand: χ. δώδεκα or ι β B. (which prefixes καὶ), twenty-five cursives, Compl., Syr. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62) twelve thousand: Matthiae . . . χ., δώδεκα. (Prospect 1:164) stadia: σταδίων 35. Er., Steph. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62) stadia: The Complutensian edition has σταδίων, and so A B and most, with Elzevir. But Erasmus &c., gave σταδίων, and so κ P 1, &c. (Bible Treasury 14:288)

21:17 he measured: ἐμέτρησεν A., most cursives, Rec., and all Vv., &c., contrary to B., twenty-five cursives. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62)

he measured: Matthiae omits ἐμέτρησεν. (Prospect 1:164) an hundred forty: δ καὶ ἐκ. τεσσε. A., ρμδ' B. 7. 8. 32. 50. . . 90. 96. 97. 98. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62)

21:18 building: ἐνδώμοις A. 97. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62) was: A., Syr., Æth., Tich., omit ἦν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62) was: Ln. Tisch. drop ἦν. (Prospect 1:164) was: ἦν of the Received Text has large support, but is left out by the best, though Codex Sinaitic^{pm} omits ἦ and reads the substantive verb. (Bible Treasury 14:288) like: ὅμοιον AB., twenty-nine cursives, Compl., Vulg., Slav.^{3,4} And., Are., cat.; ὁμοία very many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62) like: Rec. Gr. Sz. ὁμοία, others ὅμοιον. (Prospect 1:164) like: ὅμοιον (Compl.) displaces ὁμοία as in 1. &c., as it has by far the best and most witnesses. (Bible Treasury 14:288) glass: ὑέλω 13. 41. 42. . . . 94. 96. 98. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62)

21:19 The: καὶ before οἱ θ. very many cursives, Rec., Vulg., Syr., Cop., &c. (Prim. = δέ), contrary to AB., at least twenty-two cursives, Am. Fuld. Lips.⁶ Demid., Slav.⁴, Gr. and Lat. Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62)

The: Matthiae, Ln. Tisch. Treg. omit καὶ. (Prospect 1:164)

The: At the beginning of 19 καὶ stands in 1. 7. and many more, and so in the Received Text, as well as the Complutensian, but not in the best MSS., or even the oldest Latin. (Bible Treasury 14:288)

sapphire: σάπφειρος B. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62)

chalcedony: χαλκιδών B. 29. 98. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62)

21:20 sardonyx: σαρδιόνυξ A., -ώνυξ 29. 31. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62) sardonyx: Ln. Tisch. σαρδιόνυξ, others σαρδόνυξ. (Prospect 1:164) sardius: σάρδιον AB., upwards of twenty cursives, Are., cat.; -ος very many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62)

sardius: A B P and about 25 cursives have σάρδιον for -ος as in Erasmus, the Complutensian, &c., with many cursives. (Bible Treasury 14:288) beryl: βηριλλος A. 29.; βηρυλλιος B. (Mai) 7.31. Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62) ninth: ἕνατος AB., very many cursives. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62) chrysoprasus: χρυσόπρασον A.; -πασος 2. 29. 30.* 50. . . . 97. 98. (others vary). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62) chrysoprasus: Ln. Tisch. . . . χρυσόπρασον, where others -ος. (Prospect 1:164)

jacinth: ὑακίνθινος Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62)

amethyst: ἀμέθυσος very many cursives, And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62)

21:21 severally: ἑνα A. (for ἀνά). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62)

of A.: ὡς before ἐξ B., after it, Slav. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62) pearl: Some readers will be astonished to hear that a man of Michaelis' reputation should adduce this an instance of "false translation." (Int. N.T., vol. iv. p. 507.) It is not uninteresting to mark the process of mind it betrays — the very same which leads many to reject the Bible, and this writer himself to asperse the Apocalypse. "A pearl, whether we consider the rotundity of the figure, or the softness of its mass, is very ill-qualified to become the gate of a city, even if that city exists only in poetical description." But what if it be morally didactic in a symbolic prophecy. "The word used in the Greek is μαργαριτης, and that ought to be rendered precious stone! for this is the meaning ascribed to the word in Chaldee . . . M. is used perhaps in the same sense, Matt. xiii. 45,46." To refute this seems to me quite needless. Every one can see how definite is the Seer's description of the various precious stones, and the spiritual man will feel the blank created by the absence of the "pearl." (Lect. on Rev., p.475) transparent: διανγής AB., most cursives, Compl., And., Are., cat.; διαφανής many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62) transparent: The edd. διανγής, not as Rec. διαφανής. (Prospect 1:164) transparent: how came Erasmus to give us διαφανής instead of the true reading διανγής in 1. and forty more cursives, &c., as well as the uncials A B P? (Bible Treasury 14:288) glass: ὑέλος many mss. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62)

21:22 I saw: ἰδ. AB. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62)

the: ὁ before ναός A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62)

the: Ln. Tisch. with A. insert the article (wrongly as it appears to me) before ναός. (Prospect 1:164) the: Was it not odd of a scholar like Lachmann to edit after A ὁ before ναός αὐτῆς in 22? The last clause proves that it could not be correct Greek; and apart from this to make it not a predicate but reciprocal has no just sense. (Bible Treasury 14:288)

21:23 on: ἐν after φ. very many cursives, Rec., contrary to AB., nearly thirty cursives, Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62) on: Rec. Kn. ἐν αὐτ., the others omit the preposition. (Prospect 1:164) on: ἐν is not in 1. and many other juniors, beside A^{pm}. A B P, &c. Erasmus probably followed the Vulgate. But the Complutensian has it, and several cursives, as well as A^{corr}. (Bible Treasury 14:288)

it: for the: αὐτῇ ἡ γὰρ A., probably most cursives, Vv., and Ff.; αὐτὴ γὰρ ἡ B., very many cursives. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62)

it: for the: Matthiae φαίνωσιν. αὐτὴ γὰρ. (Prospect 1:164)

it: αὐτῇ after ἐφώ. Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62)

21:24 the nations shall walk by its light: τὰ ἔθνη τῶν σωζομένων ἐν τῷ φωτὶ αὐτ. περιπα. a few mss. (probably from the comment of Andreas), contrary to AB., most mss., Vv., and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.62-63)

the nations shall walk by its light: The edd. κ. π. τ. ἔθ. δ. τ. φ. αὐτ. not as Rec. τῶν σ. ἐν τ. φ. αὐτ. (Prospect 1:164)

the nations shall walk by its light: there is the serious error in the Received Text of τῶν σωζομένων in accordance with the Codex Reuchlini. Probably it is due to some Greek comment as in Cramer's (Cat. P. Gr. vi. 577, Oxon. 1840) though τὰ μὲν οὖν σωζόμενα ἔθνη does not justify the confusion of the received text. And such I see is the opinion of Matthaei (x. 198) who cites a scholium of Andreas, which Tischendorf borrows. ἐν (1. omits) τῷ φ., as in the Received Text, should be διὰ τ. φ. on the amplest evidence (Bible Treasury 14:288)

the nations: After "the nations" in verse 24 omit the words "of them which are saved." You must with the best authorities leave out this addition, if you would have the true force of the verse. It is a wholly unwarranted interpolation. "The nations shall walk in the light of it." Any one of spiritual judgment can see that it should not be "nations of them which are saved." What would be the meaning, if so read? We can understand a remnant saved out of one or more nations; but who ever heard of "nations of them which are saved"? It is altogether unfeasible, and it shows how carelessly we read the Bible that people are not stopped by such an expression. The fact is, in the very best authorities it does not exist at all. The "saved" is a term which, so far from belonging to the nations, is expressly applied to the Jewish remnant when it is a technical term. But "nations of them which are saved," is a most anomalous expression, and betrays man as the author of it. (Lect. Intro. to Acts, Cath. Epist. and Rev., p.574-5, see also Rev. Exp., p. 255) nations λ : Not a word is said [in the RV] about the salvation of these nations ($\tau\omega\upsilon\varsigma$ σωζ. in 24 being notoriously spurious and even absurd) (Bible Treasury 14:304) [See note to Acts 2:47] bring their: ϕ . $\alpha\upsilon\tau\omega\varsigma$ δ . B., very many cursives. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.63) bring their: Matthiae $\phi\epsilon\rho$. $\alpha\upsilon\tau\omega\varsigma$ $\delta\acute{o}\xi$. κ . (Prospect 1:164) their: $\alpha\upsilon\tau\omega\upsilon\varsigma$ A., most mss., Vv., and Ff.; $\tau\omega\upsilon\varsigma$ $\epsilon\theta\nu\omega\upsilon\varsigma$ B., twenty-eight cursives, Syr., Slav.⁴ (Rev. of John, 1860, p.63) their: Matthiae τ . $\epsilon\theta\nu\omega\upsilon\varsigma$ $\epsilon\iota\varsigma$ $\alpha\upsilon\tau$. (Prospect 1:164) glory λ : $\kappa\alpha\iota$ $\tau\eta\upsilon$ (B., very many cursives, Are., cat., omit) $\tau\iota\mu\acute{\eta}\nu$ B., most mss., Vulg., Syr., &c., add, contrary to A. 10. 11. 17. 18. 38. 47. Er., Cop., Æth., Ar.⁶, Gr. and Lat. Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.63) glory λ : Ln. Tisch. Treg. omit $\kappa\alpha\iota$ $\tau\eta\upsilon$ $\tau\iota\mu\acute{\eta}\nu$ Matthiae κ . $\tau\iota\mu\acute{\eta}\nu$. (Prospect 1:164) glory λ : $\kappa\alpha\iota$ $\tau\eta\upsilon$ $\tau\iota\mu\acute{\eta}\nu$, though edited by the Complutensians as well as Erasmus, and not without more support than they knew, should disappear on better testimony. No doubt the words were imported from verse 26 (Bible Treasury 14:288)

glory λ : $\kappa\alpha\iota$ $\tau\eta\upsilon$ $\tau\iota\mu\acute{\eta}\nu$, though edited by the Complutensians as well as Erasmus, and not without more support than they knew, should disappear on better testimony. No doubt the words were imported from verse 26 (Bible Treasury 14:288)

unto: Not into, but unto, for which Greek there is but one word. (Lect. on Rev., p.481) unto: not into, but unto. That is, it is an expression of the homage that they pay. The word means either as the context may require. (Rev. Exp., p.256)

21:25 the: Er. omits $\omega\iota$. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.63)

21:26 [whole verse]: verse 26 . . . furnishes itself no other occasion for remark, save that Codex Reuchlini leaves it out altogether. (Bible Treasury 14:288)

it λ : $\iota\upsilon\alpha$ $\epsilon\iota\sigma\epsilon\lambda\theta\omega\varsigma\iota\upsilon$ after $\alpha\upsilon\tau\eta\eta\upsilon$ B., very many cursives, Slav.⁴, Are., cat. (Er. omits the verse). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.63)

it λ : Matthiae adds $\iota\upsilon\alpha$ $\epsilon\iota\sigma\epsilon\lambda\theta\omega\varsigma\iota\upsilon$. (Prospect 1:164)

21:27 common: $\kappa\omicron\iota\nu\acute{o}\nu$ AB., most mss., Vv., and Ff.; $\kappa\omicron\iota\nu\acute{o}\nu$ some cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.63)

common: Rec. $\kappa\omicron\iota\nu\acute{o}\nu$, edd. $\kappa\omicron\iota\nu\acute{o}\nu$. (Prospect 1:164) common: Erasmus found $\kappa\omicron\iota\nu\omega\upsilon\varsigma$ in his copy, which he changed into $\kappa\omicron\iota\nu\acute{o}\nu$ without authority, and so it went on to the Received Text. The Complutensian had the true reading $\kappa\omicron\iota\nu\acute{o}\nu$ as in \aleph A B P, and the mass of cursives, &c. (Bible Treasury 14:288)

one practising: \acute{o} $\kappa\omicron\iota\omega\upsilon\varsigma$ twenty cursives, Cop., Arr. (also, omitting \acute{o} , A. 13. 18. 41. 68. Vulg., Syr.); $\kappa\omicron\iota\omega\upsilon\varsigma$ B., most mss., Rec., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.63) one practising: Ln. Tisch. Treg. $\kappa\omicron\iota\omega\upsilon\varsigma$, Matthiae \acute{o} π . (Prospect 1:164)

one practising: $\kappa\omicron\iota\omega\upsilon\varsigma$ is in 1. &c., but $\acute{\omega}\nu$ is fully justified. (Bible Treasury 14:288)

22:1 λ river: $\kappa\alpha\theta\alpha\rho\acute{o}\nu$ before $\kappa\omicron\iota\alpha\mu\acute{o}\nu$ very many cursives, Rec., after π . 7. 26. 31. 32. 34. 38. 46. 48. 49. . . . 91. 96. Compl., Slav.^{3,4}, And., Are., cat., contrary to AB., twenty-eight cursives, Vulg., Cop., Syr., Æth., Ar.⁶, Slav.¹⁰ Hil., Prim., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.63)

λ river: Rec. $\kappa\alpha\theta\alpha\rho\acute{o}\nu$ π ., the edd. omit. (Prospect 1:164)

λ river: "pure" is rightly expunged as an expletive added by several cursives and other authorities, and, as adopted by Erasmus from the Reuchlin copy, current in the received text, but not in the great uncials, \aleph A B P (C being here as often defective) as well as in some thirty juniors and most of the old versions. (Bible Treasury 14:303)

Lamb. : The first clause of 2 is connected singularly by the Revisers with verse 1: "out of the throne of God and of the Lamb, in the midst of the street thereof." Of course it is possible grammatically; and, if allowed, it would strengthen De Wette's severance of $\tau\omega\upsilon$ $\kappa\omicron\iota\alpha\mu\acute{o}\nu$ from $\epsilon\upsilon\upsilon$ μ . and connection of it only with $\epsilon\upsilon\upsilon$ τ . $\kappa\alpha\iota$ $\epsilon\upsilon\upsilon$ τ . But it seems a strange and poor conclusion to the grand picture of the river of life proceeding out of the throne. That no version is known to us generally as favourable to such a construction is serious, when one considers the responsibility of a Revision intended for ordinary use, and not merely what an individual or two might suggest to students. Is it not going beyond the limits of what is fair, especially if it were the impression of a few men confident in their own judgment and ready in overthrowing the pleas of others?

Let me suggest the spiritual propriety as in my opinion confirming here the rendering hitherto and everywhere approved. The beautiful truth is laid down in the opening verse . . . (Bible Treasury 14:303)

22:2 In the midst: $\epsilon\mu\mu\epsilon\sigma\omega$ A. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.63)

In the midst: Matthiae, Ln. Tisch. and Treg. $\epsilon\upsilon\upsilon$ τ . κ . $\epsilon\kappa\epsilon\iota\theta\epsilon\nu$, after A. B. and twenty other MSS. (Prospect 1:164) on that side: ϵ . κ . $\epsilon\kappa\epsilon\iota\theta\epsilon\nu$ for ϵ . κ . $\epsilon\upsilon\upsilon\tau\epsilon\upsilon\theta\epsilon\nu$ AB., twenty-eight cursives, Cop., Syr., Arm., Are., cat.; $\epsilon\upsilon\upsilon$ τ . κ . $\epsilon\upsilon\upsilon$ τ . very many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.63) producing: $\kappa\omicron\iota\omega\upsilon\varsigma$ A. 18.; $\acute{\omega}\nu$ B. and almost all other witnesses ($\acute{\omega}\nu\tau\alpha$ 29.). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.63) producing: Rec. adds $\epsilon\upsilon\alpha$, Kn. brackets it. (Prospect 1:164)

every . . . yielding: $\acute{\alpha}\pi$. $\epsilon\kappa\alpha\sigma\tau$. ($\acute{\omega}\nu$ A., most mss., And., Are., cat.; $\acute{\omega}$ B. 39. 40. Slav.⁴; $\acute{\omega}\varsigma$ fifteen cursives) B., very many mss.; $\epsilon\kappa$. $\acute{\alpha}\pi$. A. and perhaps the majority, Rec., And., Are., cat. $\acute{\omega}\nu$ is wanting in 29. 30. 40. 98. Er. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.63-64) month λ : μ . ($\mu\eta\eta\nu\alpha\nu$ A.) without $\epsilon\upsilon\alpha$ AB., upwards of thirty cursives, Compl., Slav., contrary to many mss., Rec., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.63) yielding: $\acute{\alpha}\pi\omicron\delta\iota\delta\omicron\nu$ A., very many cursives, Rec., And. ($\acute{\alpha}\pi\omicron\delta\iota\delta\omicron\nu\tau\alpha$ 29. Er., &c.); $\acute{\alpha}\pi\omicron\delta\iota\delta\omicron\upsilon\varsigma$ B., at least twenty-five cursives, Compl., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.63) yielding: Matthiae $\acute{\alpha}\pi\omicron\delta\iota\delta\omicron\upsilon\varsigma$, others $\acute{\omega}\nu$. (Prospect 1:164)

22:3 more: $\epsilon\kappa\epsilon\iota$ for $\epsilon\tau\iota$ sixteen cursives, Compl., Ar.^p, And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.64)

more . . . and: Singular to say, Erasmus in 3 rightly deserted the Codex Reuchlini, where it, 7. 30., and some fifteen more, &c., read $\epsilon\kappa\epsilon\iota$ "there," for which the Rotterdam scholar conjectured, it is to be presumed in accordance with the Vulgate, $\epsilon\tau\iota$ "more," or "longer": a dangerous device, though here in fact the great mass of the best authorities, unknown to him, were found afterwards to justify the word. The Complutensian edition gives the erroneous reading $\epsilon\kappa\epsilon\iota$. (Bible Treasury 14:304) curse: $\kappa\alpha\tau\acute{\alpha}\theta\epsilon\mu\alpha$ AB., most cursives, Compl., And., Are., cat.; $\kappa\alpha\tau\alpha\nu\acute{\alpha}\theta\epsilon\mu\alpha$ many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.64) curse: The edd. $\kappa\alpha\tau\acute{\alpha}\theta\epsilon\mu\alpha$. (Prospect 1:164) and: There was no reason for the Authorised Version to say "but," which the Revisers have replaced with "and." (Bible Treasury 14:304) serve: [In the American corrections to the RV there] is a needless departure from the almost invariable rendering of the Revised Version no less than of the Authorised Version in "do service" for the simple "serve". The only approach to it elsewhere is in their version of Heb. 12:28 where they have "offer service"; but they might plead $\epsilon\upsilon\alpha\rho\epsilon\sigma\tau\omega\varsigma$ as modifying the sentence and inducing them to prefer "offer service well-pleasing to God," instead of the dignified simplicity of our old "serve God acceptably." However this be, in the Apocalypse it is hard to imagine why they should depart from their own well-nigh uniform practice, to give us a more cumbersome form in accordance with none of their predecessors. (Bible Treasury 15:192)

22:4 on: the Revisers rightly say “on,” (not “in”) their foreheads. (Bible Treasury 14:304)

22:5 [there]: ἐτι after ἔσται A. 2. 19. 68. Vulg., Syr.; ἐκεῖ most cursives, Rec., some Vv., And., Are., cat., but B., eighteen cursives, Cop., Promiss., omit. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.64)

[there]: Rec. Kn. for ἐτι, (bracketed by Treg.) have ἐκεῖ. (Prospect 1:164)

[there]: [The RV] as properly explode[s] the vulgar “there” (ἐκεῖ) which Erasmus introduced from his copy, perhaps assimilated to 21:25, though not unsupported; and they follow the true ἐτι “more,” as in κ A P, &c. There is yet another variety without either in the Basilian Vatican (2066) with considerable assent of other witnesses. (Bible Treasury 14:304)

no need: οὐ χρεία B., upwards of twenty cursives, Syr.? Slav.¹⁰ &c., Prim., Promiss.; οὐχ ἔξουσιν χρείαν A., Vulg., Cop., Arr., many Lat. Ff.; χρ. οὐκ ἔχουσι perhaps most mss., some Vv., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.64) no need: Rec., Kn. χρ. οὐκ ἔχ., Gr. Sz. οὐ χρεία λ., others οὐχ ἔξ. (Prospect 1:164)

ⲕ lamp ⲕ : φωτὸς before λ. (after λ. 38) A. 18. 47. many Vv. and Lat. Ff., contrary to B. and almost all other authorities. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.64)

ⲕ lamp ⲕ : Tisch. φωτὸς, Treg. brackets the word, Ln. φῶς, Matthiae οὐ χρ. λ. κ. φ. ὅτι. (Prospect 1:164) sunlight: φ. (φῶς A. 11. 12. 32. 35. 48.) ἡλίου A., most mss., Rec., Vv., Gr. and Lat. Ff., but B., nineteen cursives, Ar.^p, Slav.^{4,10} omit ἡλ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.64) will illumine: φωτιεῖ B., twenty-nine cursives, Compl. (-ίσει A. 12. 42.). Vv., and Ff.; -ίξει very many mss., Rec., Am., Syr. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.64) will illumine: Rec. φωτίξει, Gr. Kn. Sz. φωτιεῖ, others φωτίσει. (Prospect 1:164) will illumine ⲕ : The copies vary also in other particulars of no great moment, as “shall” give them light, in the best copies and even the Codex Reuchlini instead of the present as in Erasmus, and the Received Text, and the Authorised Version; and “upon” them, as in κ A &c. (Bible Treasury 14:304)

ⲕ them: ἐπ’ before αὐτοὺς A., Lat. Ff., omitted by B., perhaps all cursives, Rec., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.64)

22:6 he said: εἶπεν A. and, it seems, most cursives, Rec., Vv., and Ff.; λέγει B., near thirty cursives, Compl. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.64)

the: ὁ before κύριος A. 92. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.64)

the: the first ὁ is doubtful, though given in κ A 35. 92. The usual formula is κ. ὁ θ. as in B P and the cursives generally, as well as the Greek commentators. Chap. 21:22 may be judged favourable to the repeated article. (Bible Treasury 14:319)

the spirits of the ⲕ : πνευμάτων τῶν AB., most cursives, Compl., Vv., and Ff.; ἀγίων many mss., Rec., Slav.^{3,5} And. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.64)

the spirits of the ⲕ : The edd. τῶν πνευμάτων τῶν πρ., Rec. τ. ἀγίων πρ. (Prospect 1:164)

the spirits of the ⲕ : But there need be no hesitation in adopting πνευμάτων τῶν “spirits of the” (instead of the vulgar “holy,” ἀγίων 1. 79. &c.) with the Complutensian on the most ancient and ample authority, all the uncials, &c. (Bible Treasury 14:319) sent ⲕ : The Sinaitic is not quite alone in the addition of με after “sent.” (Bible Treasury 14:319) to shew his servants: δείξαι τοῖς δούλοις αὐτοῦ omitted in eleven cursives (97. giving γνωρίσαι σοι). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.64)

22:7 And: καί before ἰδοὺ AB., very many cursives, Compl., Am. Fuld. Lipss., &c., most Vv., contrary to most mss., Rec., Cop., Prim., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.64)

And: Rec. Kn. omit the first καί. (Prospect 1:164)

And: 7 begins rightly with the copulative, as in the Complutensian, though Erasmus’ Codex Reuchlini is sustained by many MSS., Versions, &c. (Bible Treasury 14:319)

22:8 And I: καὶ γὰρ AB., more than twelve cursives, Compl., Dion.; καὶ ἐγὼ most mss., Rec., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.64) heard and saw: ἀκ. κ. βλ. τ. AB., more than twenty-five cursives, Compl., Vulg., Syr. (βλ. κ. ἀκ. τ. 32. 33. 38. Slav.^{3,4} Dion., Are., cat.); βλ. τ. κ. ἀκ. a few cursives, Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.64) heard and saw: The edd. ὁ ἀκ. κ. βλ. τ. (Prospect 1:164) heard and saw: The Revisers in 8 correctly say “am he that heard and saw,” not saw and heard. It is a characteristic fact apart from time. The best authorities also read τ. at the end of the clause. (Bible Treasury 14:319)

[when I] saw: ὅτε εἶδον (τδ. B. 7. 92.) B., about twenty cursives (also 7. 8. 16. 35. 38. 94. 97. 98., omitting ὅτε); ἐβλεπον A.; ἐβλεψα most cursives, Rec., And., Are., cat., Vulg., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.64)

[when I] saw: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. Ln. κ-β. ἡκ. κ. ἐβ., Matthiae and Tisch. κ. δ. ἡκ. κ. δ. εἶδον., Treg. κ. δ. ἡκ. κ. ἐβλεπον. (Prospect 1:164)

I fell down: ἔπεσα A. 16. 30. 35. 31. 68. &c., Er., Steph.; -σον B., most cursives, Rec., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.64)

I fell down: Ln. Tisch. ἔπεσα. (Prospect 1:164) before: πρό A. (for ἐμπρ. τῶν). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.64) shewed: διγγύοντος A.; δεικνύντος many cursives, Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.64)

22:9 ⲕ I: γάρ before εἰμί a few mss., Rec., contrary to AB., most cursives, Compl., Am. Fuld. Demid. Lips.^{5,6} Vv., and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.64)

ⲕ I: Rec. γάρ. (Prospect 1:164)

ⲕ I: In 9 the γάρ “for” has no known authority in a Greek MS., and is probably due to Latin influence. It is not in the Codex Reuchlini. Of course the Complutensian edition is right. (Bible Treasury 14:319)

the: Er. omits τῶν before πρ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.64) and: καί before τῶν. τ. AB., most cursives, Rec., Athan., omitted by more than twelve cursives, Compl., Are., cat., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.64) and: Tischendorf mentions the omission of καί by the Codex Reuchlini before “thy crown,” but not again before “of them which keep.” Erasmus supplied them rightly, though not from his copy. (Bible Treasury 14:319)

22:10 [for]: ὁ κ. γάρ A., upwards of twenty cursives (ὁ γὰρ κ. 2. 18. 40.), Vulg., Cop., Syr., &c.; ὅτι ὁ κ. very many mss., Æth., &c., Are., cat. (Er. omits ὁ). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.64)

[for]: Rec. ὅτι, Matthiae, Ln. Treg. ὁ καιρὸς γάρ. (Prospect 1:164)

[for]: In 10 however the Complutensian agrees with Erasmus on the authority of a few copies (1. 49. 91. &c.) in reading ὅτι ὁ κ. instead of ὁ κ. γάρ with the best. Some manuscripts as 4. 16. 27. 39. 48. 68. omit γάρ or ὅτι. (Bible Treasury 14:319)

22:11 and he that is filthy, let him be filthy still: καὶ ὁ β. ρ. ἐτι omitted by A. 21. 34. 35. 68. . . 97., contrary to B. and the mass, Compl., Are., cat. (βυπῶν βυπασάτω many mss., Rec.); β. βυπανθ. 18.* 32. Orig. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.64-65) and he that is filthy, let him be filthy still: The edd. ῥυπαρὸς ῥυπαρευθήτω, Treg. adding brackets to this clause. (Prospect 1:164) and he that is filthy, let him be filthy still: ῥυπῶν of the commonly received text is Erasmus' conjecture, his copy being defective from ὁ ῥ. to δικ. ἔτι. The word should be ῥυπαρὸς as in all the well known Greek copies; but ῥυπωσάτω is likewise a similar guess, though the manuscripts divide between ῥυπανθήτω as in κ 18. 32. and ῥυπαρωθήτω as in B and more than 30 cursives. The Alexandrian omits the clause, Cod. Eph. Resc. is defective. (Bible Treasury 14:319) righteous, let him practice: δικαιουσ. ποιησ. AB., most cursives, Compl., *Am. Fuld. Tbl. Demid. Lips.*⁴, most Vv. and Ff.; δικαιωθήτω not many cursives, Rec., Vulg., Ar.⁵, Eus., Aug. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.65) righteous, let him practice: The edd. δικαιοσύνην ποιησάτω. (Prospect 1:164) righteous, let him practise: There need be no doubt that δικαιωθήτω as in the Received Text from Erasmus, &c., must give place to the Complutensian reading δικαιοσύνην ποιησάτω, which of course the Revisers follow, with the sense "do" or "practise" righteousness, not be justified or "be righteous" as in the Authorised Version. (Bible Treasury 14:320)

22:12 Λ Behold: καί before ἰδοὺ many cursives, Rec., Æth., Slav.³, contrary to AB., and the rest, Compl., Vv., and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.65)

Λ Behold: the copulative has no real place, though Erasmus found it in his copy and did not conjecture it; but it is excluded by the mass of MSS., Versions, and cursives. (Bible Treasury 14:320) his . . . is: ἐστὶν αὐτοῦ A. 12. 38. Syr.; ἔσται αὐτ. B. (Mai), nineteen mss., Compl.; αὐτ. ἔσται most mss., Rec., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.65) his . . . is: Ln. Tisch. &c. ἐστὶν αὐτοῦ. The common reading is αὐτοῦ ἔσται. (Prospect 1:164) his . . . is: In verse 12 the true reading I believe to be ἐστὶν "is" as in κ, A, and two cursives in the Vatican. Still, as the Rescript of Paris and the Porphyrian uncial are here deficient and the Basilian Vatican with the other cursives opposed, I would say no more than that an exact commentator ought to have noticed a good reading, which is far more energetic than the common one, even if he adhered to the received text, ἔσται, "shall be." (Lect. on Rev., p. xxxiv) his . . . is: the true reading is represented by "is," not "shall be," though B and more than 20 cursives favour the future form. (Bible Treasury 14:320)

22:13 am: εἰμί after ἐγώ is wanting in AB., near thirty cursives, Compl., Am. Fuld.,  &c., Athan., And., Are., cat., Prim., contrary to very many cursives, Vulg., Orig., some Lat. Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.65) am: Rec. εἰμι. (Prospect 1:164) am: "Am" in 13 is all right in sense, but implied rather than expressed in the best copies. (Bible Treasury 14:320)

Alpha: ἄλφα A., at least ten cursives, Are., cat.; 'A or α B., most mss., Orig., Athan. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.65) the first and the last, the beginning and the end: ἀρ. κ. τ., ὁ πρ. κ. ὁ (96. Er., omit) ἔσχ. probably most mss., Rec., a few Vv., Are., cat.; πρ. κ. ἔσχ., ἡ ἀρ. κ. τὸ τ. A. 3. 7. 8. 9. [21. 22. Wetstein]; ὁ πρ. κ. ὁ ἔσχ., ἡ ἀρ. κ. τὸ τ. B., nineteen cursives &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.65)

the first and the last, the beginning and the end: Rec. ἀ. κ. τ., ὁ π. κ. ὁ ἔσχ., Gr. Sz. ἡ α. κ. τὸ τ., ὁ π. κ. ὁ ἔ., Ln. Tisch. π. κ. ἔ., ἡ ἀ. κ. τὸ τ., Treg. ὁ π. κ. ὁ ἔ., ἀ. κ. τ. (Prospect 1:164)

the . . . the . . . the . . . the: Without dwelling on lesser points, the chief difference [in the RV] is the presence or absence of the article before πρ. first and ἔσχ last, as well as before ἀρ. "beginning," and τ. "end," which by the best authorities close the sentence. (Bible Treasury 14:320)

22:14 wash their robes: πλύνοντες (-ναντες 7., -νοῦντες 38.) τ. στ. αὐτ. A. 7. 38. Vulg., Æth., Arm.^{mar} Athan., Fulg., Prim. (Vulg., &c., add in sanguine agni); ποιοῦντες τὰς ἐντολὰς αὐτοῦ B., the great majority of cursives, Rec., Cop., Syr., Ar., Slav., And., Are., cat., Cyp., Tert., Tich. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.65)

wash their robes: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. ποιοῦντες τὰς ἐντολὰς αὐτοῦ, Ln. Tisch. Treg. πλύνοντες τὰς στολὰς αὐτῶν. (favored by A. and ten other MSS.) (Prospect 1:165) wash their robes: [κ] ranges with A. 7. 38., the Vulgate, Æthiopic, Arm.^{mar}, Athanasius, Fulgentius, Primasius, against B., the majority of copies, most versions, Andreas, Arethus, the Catena, Cyprian, Tertullian, and Tychonius. I cannot regard this reading as thoroughly established, though I have followed it in the text. Bengel suspected that it was drawn from Rev. 7:14, to save doctrinal appearances. (Rev. of John, 1860, p. xviii) wash their robes: [I agree in] adopting πλύνοντες τ. στολὰς αὐτῶν on the authority of κ, A, 7, 38 against all other known manuscripts. (Lect. on Rev., p. xxxiv) wash their robes: The most extraordinary variant is in 14 where "that wash their robes," οἱ πλύνοντες τὰς στολὰς αὐτῶν (κ A 7. 38. Vulg. Æth., &c.) seems to be the true text. But it got changed into οἱ ποιοῦντες τὰς ἐντολὰς αὐτοῦ "that do his commandments" in the common texts Erasmus and the Complutensian, Stephens, Beza, and Elzevir. One could understand, as in Rom. 2, the unchanging character of God as reflected in His children, if the common reading were assuredly right; as it is, the critical text gives prominence to the washing by grace which supposes not more the shedding of Christ's blood than the guilt that demanded it if expiation were to be righteously. (Yet the Vulgate was not warranted in adding "in sanguine Agni" which the oldest Latin copies omit. But Beza was quite wrong in supposing that the rest of the Vulgate text was unfaithful to the best Greek copies.) (Bible Treasury 14:320)

22:15 Λ Without: δέ after ἔξω many cursives, Rec., *Lips.*⁵, Cop., &c., contrary to AB., most mss., Compl., Vulg., Sy. [sic.], Hipp., Athan., And., Are., cat., &c. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.65)

Λ Without: There is no ascertained authority in any Greek copy for δέ, even the Codex Reuchlini giving no warrant to Erasmus, who transmitted it to our ordinary text. (Bible Treasury 14:320)

the: Er. omits οἱ before πόρ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.65) that: ὁ after πᾶς is inserted by, perhaps, most cursives, Rec., And., Are., cat., contrary to AB., at least twenty cursives, Compl., Hipp., Athan. (11. 31. 32. 33. 35. 48. Gr. Ff., giving π. κ. φ.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.65) that: Rec. Gr. Kn. Sz. ο φ. (Prospect 1:165) that: The article is rightly excluded from the last phrase. (Bible Treasury 14:320) loveth and practiceth: Tischendorf inverts the making and loving with κ and half-a-dozen cursives, and a few ancient citations. (Bible Treasury 14:320)

22:16 in: ἐν before τ. ἐκκλ. A. 18. 21. 38. Vulg., Cop., Slav., Athan.; ἐπί B., most cursives Rec., Syr., &c.; τ. ἐκκλ. 4. 11. 12. 31. 47. 48. Arm., Slav.³, Are., cat. (Prim. adds septem). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.65) in: Most read ἐπὶ τ. ἐ., Ln. Treg. ἐν, Tisch. τ. ἐ. (Prospect 1:165) in: In 16 is the variety of reading ἐπὶ, ἐν, and neither before τ. ἐκκ. respectively, in κ B, most cursives, Syr., in A 18. 21. 38. 79. Vulgate, and in 1. 4. 11. 12. 31. 47. 48. Arm., &c. "in" or "for" the churches. (Bible Treasury 14:320)

the . . . the: Er. omits ἡ before β. and ὁ before λ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.66)

Δ David: τοῦ before Δ. many cursives, Rec., contrary to AB., near thirty cursives, &c., Athan., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.65-66)

Δ David: Rec. τοῦ Δαβὶδ, the edd. Δαυὶδ. (Prospect 1:165)

David, Δ . . . [and]: καὶ before ὁ ἄσ. 7. 35. 49. &c., after λ. A., Vulg. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.66) morning: ὁ πρωῒνος (A., &c., προῖνος) AB., most cursives, Compl., Vv. (before ὁ λ. 4. 8. 31. 32. 33. 40. 48. Slav.^{3.11} Are., cat.); ὁρθρινός a few cursives? Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.66) morning: Rec. ὁρθρινός, the edd. πρωῒνος. (Tisch. omitting καὶ, and Treg. putting it in brackets.) (Prospect 1:165) morning: The reading καὶ ὁρθρινός is doubtless Erasmus' coinage from the Vulgate, for ὁ πρ. "the morning." (Bible Treasury 14:320) star. Δ: [Beza was daring in] his notable proposal, founded on wholly unfounded premisses, to dislocate verses 12 and 13 from their place and foist them in, the latter before the former, between that which is printed as verse 16 and verse 17, to the utter destruction of the context, and particularly of the vital tie which binds 17 to 16, one of the loveliest touches in a book abounding with beauty in this kind. (Bible Treasury 14:320)

22:17 the . . . the: Why in 17 the Sinaitic omits the articles so requisite before πν. and ν. it is hard to say, but so it is. Erasmus knew better without a copy; for the Codex Reuchlini is defective from "David" in 16. (Bible Treasury 14:320)

Come . . . Come . . . let him . . . come: ἔρχου, twice, and ἐρχέσθω AB., most cursives, Compl., Gr. Ff.; ἐλθέ. twice, and ἐλθέτω a few cursives? Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.66)

Come . . . Come . . . let him . . . come: Rec. has ἐλθέ twice for ἔρχου. . . . The edd. prefer the other forms. (Prospect 1:165)

Come . . . Come . . . let him . . . come: [Erasmus] wrongly introduced ἐλθέ and ἐλθέτω where the Holy Spirit has ἔρχου and ἐρχέσθω. (Bible Treasury 14:320)

Δ let: καὶ before ὁ θ., inserted by many mss. and Vv., is not in AB., the majority of cursives, Compl., Am. Töl. Lips.^{5.6} Cop., Æth., Slav.^{3.4} Gr. and Lat. Ff., save Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.66)

Δ let: Rec. has . . . ἐλθέτω for ἐρχέσθω . . . The edd. prefer the other forms. (Prospect 1:165)

Δ let: Nor should the copulative precede ὁ θ. though at least two cursives and many ancient versions &c. favour it. (Bible Treasury 14:320) let him . . . take: λαβέτω AB., most mss., Compl., Gr. Ff.; λαμβανέτω a few cursives? Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.66) let him . . . take: Rec. has . . . καὶ ὁ θ. λαμβανέτω. The edd. prefer the other forms. (Prospect 1:165)

let him . . . take: For λαμβ. τὸ ὑδ. the copies give λαβ. ὑδ. (Bible Treasury 14:320)

22:18 I testify: μαρτυρῶ (μαρτύρομαι 11. 31. 48. Are., cat.) ἐγώ AB., at least thirty-four cursives, Compl.; συμμαρτυροῦμαι (μαρτύρομαι 34. 35.) γάρ not many mss. (some Vv. have no equivalent for ἐγώ nor γάρ). (Rev. of John, 1860, p.66)

I testify: The edd. μαρτυρῶ γ. π. (Prospect 1:165)

I testify: There is a threefold error in the common text at the beginning of 18: συμμαρτυροῦμαι for μαρτυρῶ, and γάρ, which answers to nothing as well as the suppression of ἐγώ, the guess-work of Erasmus from following the Latin copies. (Bible Treasury 14:320) that: τῷ after π. AB., at least twenty-five cursives, contrary to very many mss., Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.66) that: The edd. . . . τῷ. ἄκ (Prospect 1:165)

that . . . the . . . this Δ . . . add to them, God shall add to him: So also the omission of τῷ (though some copies omit it), τῆς, τοῦ, and the form ἐπιτιθῇ instead of ἐπιθῇ, and for ἐπ' αὐτά, πρὸς ταῦτα, and ὁ θ. before instead of after ἐπ' αὐτόν. (Bible Treasury 14:320)

[last half of verse]: So also the omission of τῷ (though some copies omit it), τῆς, τοῦ, and the form ἐπιτιθῇ instead of ἐπιθῇ, and for ἐπ' αὐτά, πρὸς ταῦτα, and ὁ θ. before instead of after ἐπ' αὐτόν. The omission of τῷ before β. is due to the same Latinizing source. Aldus, in his reprint of Erasmus' New Testament for his Greek Bible of 1518, did venture on the supply of τοῦ, but not, strange to say, of τῆς, nor of τῷ (bis), though of course the principle is the same. (Bible Treasury 14:320)

the . . . Δ book. If: Er. omits τῆς and τοῦ, and for ἔαν has εἰ. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.66) add to them: ἐπιθῇ ἐπ' αὐτά AB., most cursives, Compl., Are., cat.; ἐπιτιθῇ πρὸς ταῦτα some cursives? Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.66)

add to them: The edd. . . . ἐπιθῇ ἐπ' αὐτά. (Prospect 1:165) shall add: ἐπιθήσεται eighteen cursives, Compl.; -σαι 47.; -σεται 35. 38.; -θει 7. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.66) to him: ἐπ' αὐτόν (-ῶ A.  11.) before ὁ θ. 32. 33. 37. 48. 49. . . . 96. (wanting in A. *) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.66)

Δ plagues: τὰ ἐπτά πλ. B. 31. 32. 33. 37. 48. 49. . . . 96. Compl., Arm., Slav.³, And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.66)

Δ this: τῷ before β. AB., the great majority of cursives, Compl., And., Are., cat., contrary to a few mss.? Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.66)

Δ this: The edd. . . . ἐν τῷ β. (Prospect 1:165)

22:19 if: Er. gives εἰ for ἔαν. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.66) shall take away: ἀφέλῃ (-λείται B.) A., most cursives, Compl., And., Are., cat.; ἀφαιρῇ a few mss.? Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.66) shall take away: The edd. ἀφέλῃ. (Prospect 1:165) shall take away: ἀφαιρῇ is an evidently faulty effort to express the guilt of taking from the words of this inspired book, for which every manuscript has ἀφέλῃ 14:320) shall take away: ἀφαιρησεῖ is not the right expression but ἀφέλει (Bible Treasury 14:320) the: τοῦ before βιβλίου AB., the mass of cursives, Compl., And., Are., cat.; βιβλου a few cursives? Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.66)

the: The edd. . . . τοῦ β. (Prospect 1:165) shall take away: ἀφέλει AB., at least twelve cursives, Are., cat.; -λοι sixteen cursives, Compl.; -λῃ 26. 29. 31.* . . . 98.; -λαι 9. 16. 41. 82. 97.; ἀφαιρήσει a few cursives? Rec. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.66) shall take away: The edd. . . . ἀφέλει. (Prospect 1:165) the tree: τοῦ ξύλου AB., most mss., Compl., *Am. Demid. Lips.*⁶, Vv., Are., cat., Tich.; βιβλου some cursives, Rec., Vulg., Fuld. Lips.^{4.5} Arr., Amb., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.66)

the tree: The edd. . . . τοῦ ξύλου. (Prospect 1:165)

the tree: The next error goes beyond the form; for, as the Revisers agree with all critics, it is a question of "the tree," not of the "book" of life here, an error due to Latin influence, though even then the form would be incorrect as before. (Bible Treasury 14:320)

Δ life . . . the: Er. omits τῆς (three last.) (Rev. of John, 1860, p.66) out of: ἐκ is wanting in A. 10. 38. Er., (Rev. of John, 1860, p.66) city Δ: καὶ is inserted before τῶν γ. by some mss., Rec., Vulg., contrary to AB., most cursives, Compl., Vv., and Ff. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.66) city Δ: The edd. . . . omit καὶ before τῶν γ. (Prospect 1:165) city Δ . . . Δ this: Erasmus mistakenly added καὶ before τ. γ. τῷ in the last clause. All these points are of course rectified in the Revision [of 1881]. (Bible Treasury 14:320)

Δ this: τῷ before β. is omitted by a few mss.? Rec., contrary to AB., most cursives, Compl., And., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.66)

22:20 Come, ^Λ : ναί is inserted after ἔρχου by very many cursives, Rec., Slav.¹⁰, but not in AB., 2. 12. 20. 29. 31. 32. 33. 48. &c., most Vv., Are., cat. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.67)

Come, ^Λ : Most edd. connect Ἀμήν with ἔρχου. I prefer to read it as the seal of the words of Jesus. They omit the second ναί. (Prospect 1:165)

Come, ^Λ : Erasmus, the Complutensian, as well as Stephens with many cursives, read ναί after Ἀμήν, for which Beza substituted καί "pro οὖν." (Bible Treasury 14:320)

Jesus ^Λ : Χριστέ after ἰ. 13. 31. 32. 38. 48. 55. &c., Cop., Arm., Ar.^c, Slav.^{3,4}. Are., cat., contrary to AB., the great majority of cursives, Rec., Vulg., Syr., Prim. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.67)

22:21 the: ἡμῶν after κ. very many cursives, Rec., most Vv., but not AB., near thirty cursives, Compl., Æth., Ar.^p, Slav.^{4,10} (Rev. of John, 1860, p.67)

the: The edd. omit ἡμῶν, with A. B. and twenty other MSS. (Prospect 1:165)

the: It is not to be supposed that he [i.e., Erasmus] knew of ἡμῶν (30. &c.) for "our" Lord in the earlier part of the verse, but there too was misled by the Vulgate, &c. (Bible Treasury 14:320)

[Christ]: Χριστοῦ is omitted by A. 26. 47. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.67)

[Christ]: ✠ A 26. omit χριστοῦ, a rather slender ground for excluding "Christ." (Bible Treasury 14:320)

[the saints: τῶν ἁγίων B., thirty-nine cursives, Compl., Cop., Syr., Arm., Slav.^{3,4,5,10} And., Are., cat.; ὑμῶν many cursives, Rec., Vulg., &c. A. omits. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.67)

[the saints: Rec. ὑμῶν, the edd. τῶν ἁγίων with B. and thirty-five other MSS. A. wants either. (Prospect 1:165)

[the saints: Still less [ground] (A and the Amiatine Latin) has Tischendorf for ending with μ. π. Even the Sinaitic says "with the saints," as B and the mass of cursives and versions say "with all the saints." With "you" all is a guess of Erasmus, as far as Greek copies are concerned, though here again he was influenced by some copies of the Latins. (Bible Treasury 14:320)

Amen.]: ἀμήν, omitted by A., Fuld., Are. (Prim. omitting the whole verse), is given by B. and almost all other authorities. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.67)

Amen.]: A. wants . . . the final ἀμήν. (Prospect 1:165)

Amen.]: It is curious how the earliest, as well as the great multitude of copies and versions &c., add ἀμήν, which nevertheless the critics generally drop. (Bible Treasury 14:320)

Subscription: in B. and most mss., none; in A. Ἀποκαλύψεις Ἰωάννου. Some cursives have τέλος ἀποκαλύψεως, others an amplified form. (Rev. of John, 1860, p.67)

Sources of the Two Versions

The New Translation by JND that is reproduced here was published by G. Morrish in 1890. Obvious typographical errors in several places were corrected by comparison with the Stow-Hill edition of 1961. Thus, the several editorial adjustments made by Stow Hill Bible and Tract Depot after the death of JND are not to be found here. The text is as originally published in the 19th century.

The translation by WK was compiled from his expository works as shown here:

- Mat. 5:3-12 Bible Treasury N4:8
 5:13-16 Bible Treasury N3:372, N5:86, 116
 5:17-20 Bible Treasury N4:229 (see also Bible Treasury N4:70)
 5:21-22 Bible Treasury N4:244
 5:23-26 Bible Treasury N4:261
 5:27-30 Bible Treasury N4:276
 5:33-37 Bible Treasury N4:308
 5:38-48 Bible Treasury N4:37 (also N4:325, 340, 355, 371)
 6:1-8, 14-18 Bible Treasury N4:89 (also N5:22, 40, 55, 100, 70)
 6:19-21 Bible Treasury N4:53 (also N5:132)
 6:22-23 Bible Treasury N4:102 (also N5:148)
 6:25-32 Bible Treasury N4:121 (also N5:165, 181, 198)
 6:33-34 Bible Treasury N4:135 (also N5:214)
 7:1-6 Bible Treasury N4:149
 7:7-12 Bible Treasury N4:164
 7:13-14 Bible Treasury N4:180 (also N3:358)
 7:15-20 Bible Treasury N4:196
 7:21-23 Bible Treasury N4:213
 7:24-27 Bible Treasury N3:344
 7:28-29 Bible Treasury N5:228
 9:32-34 Bible Treasury N2:326
 12:9-14 Bible Treasury N2:341
 12:22-30 Bible Treasury N2:357
 13:44 Bible Treasury N1:7
 13:45-46 Bible Treasury N1:23
 13:47-50 Bible Treasury N1:37
 14:17-21 Bible Treasury N2:372
 14:23-33 Bible Treasury N3:4
 15:21-28 Bible Treasury N3:20
 15:32-39 Bible Treasury N3:37
 17:24-27 Bible Treasury N3:86

18:23-35 Bible Treasury N1:54

19:3-11 Bible Treasury N4:294

20:1-16 Bible Treasury N1:72

21:28-32 Bible Treasury N1:88

21:33-44 Bible Treasury N1:104

22:2-14 Bible Treasury N1:117

23:2,3,38-39 Three Prophetic Gems p. 4

24:1-51 Three Prophetic Gems p. 5-38 (also Bible Treasury N4:151, 152, 168, 182, N1:133, 149)

25:1-46 Three Prophetic Gems p. 44-66 (also Bible Treasury N1:166, 180, 215, N4:202)

26:58 Bible Treasury 15:36

26:69-75 Bible Treasury 15:36

Mark 4:26-29 Bible Treasury N1:197

7:32-37 Bible Treasury N3:100

8:22-26 Bible Treasury N3:117

9:17-27 Bible Treasury N3:69

10:46-52 Bible Treasury N3:267

11:1-14, 17-18 Exp. of Mark p. 161 ff.

14:54, 66-72 Bible Treasury 15:36

Luke 3:23-24 Bible Treasury 14:335-336

4:33-36 Bible Treasury N3:149

7:11-17 Bible Treasury N3:134

7:41-48 Bible Treasury N1:215-216

7:50 Bible Treasury N1:216

10:30-37 Bible Treasury N1:230

11:5-13 Bible Treasury N1:247-248

11:21-26 Bible Treasury N1:263-264

12:13-21 Bible Treasury N1:276

12:35-38 Bible Treasury N1:292

12:37, 41-44 Bible Treasury N1:308-9

12:45-48 Bible Treasury N1:324

13:6-9 Bible Treasury N1:340

13:10-17 Bible Treasury N3:167

13:18-21 Bible Treasury N1:357

13:25-30 Bible Treasury N1:371

14:1-6 Bible Treasury N3:187

14:8-11 Bible Treasury N2:7

14:12-14 Bible Treasury N2:22

Sources of the Two Versions

14:16-24 Bible Treasury N2:37

15:3-7 Bible Treasury N2:53

15:8-10 Bible Treasury N2:68

15:11-24, 29-32 Bible Treasury N2:85

16:1-13 Bible Treasury N2:102

16:19-31 Bible Treasury N2:117

17:7-10 Bible Treasury N2:133

18:1-8 Bible Treasury N2:149

18:9-14 Bible Treasury N2:164

19:12-27 Bible Treasury N2:180

22:54-62 Bible Treasury 15:36

John: Exp. of John

Acts: Exp. of Acts

10:3 Exp. of Acts, p. 150

Romans: Notes on Romans

1 Corinthians: Notes on First Corinthians

6:11-13 Notes on First Corinthians, p. 104-106

2 Corinthians: Notes on Second Corinthians

Galatians: Lect. on Gal.

Ephesians: Lect. on Eph.

Philippians: Lect. on Phil. and Col.

Colossians: Lect. on Phil and Col.

1 Thessalonians: Epistles to the Thess.

2 Thessalonians: Epistles to the Thess.

1 Timothy: Exp. of Epistles to Timothy

2 Timothy: Exp. of Epistles to Timothy

Titus: Exp. of Titus and Philemon

Philemon: Exp. of Titus and Philemon

Hebrews: Exp. of Hebrews

James: serially in Bible Treasury N1:12-N2:373

1 Peter: Epistles of Peter

4:15-16 Bible Treasury N5:16

2 Peter: Epistles of Peter

3:11-18 God's Inspiration of the Scriptures p. 553-4

1 John: Exp. of Epistles of John

2 John: Exp. of Epistles of John

3 John: Exp. of Epistles of John

Jude: Lect. on Jude

Revelation: Lect. on Rev. (Compare Rev. Exp., Rev. of John, 1860, Prospect 1:153-165)

Partial Bibliography of WK

Introductory Lectures

Lectures Introductory to the Study of the Pentateuch, Oak Park, Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, 1970, 1st ed. 1870.

Lectures Introductory to the Study of the Earlier Historical Books of the Old Testament, Oak Park, Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, n.d., 1st ed. 1874.

Lectures Introductory to the Study of the Minor Prophets, 5th ed., Oak Park, Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, n. d., 1st ed. 1874.

Lectures Introductory to the Study of the Gospels, Oak Park, Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, 1970, 1st ed. 1866, 2nd ed. 1873.

Lectures Introductory to the Study of the Acts, the Catholic Epistles, and Revelation, Oak Park, Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, 1970, 1st ed. 1869.

Lectures Introductory to the Study of the Epistles of Paul the Apostle, Oak Park, Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, 1970, 1st ed. 1869.

Introductory Lectures: The Epistle to the Hebrews and the Epistle to Philemon, Oak Park, Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, n.d.

Expositions of Books of the Bible

In the Beginning and the Adamic Earth, New ed., revised 1894, reprinted 1970.

Lectures on the Book of Judges, London: C. A. Hammond, 1945.

Lectures on the Books of Chronicles, Orange, Calif.: R. E. Welch Foundation, 1963.

Two Lectures on Ezra and Nehemiah, London: C. A. Hammond, 1947, 1st ed. 1921.

Eleven Lectures on the Book of Job, Oak Park, Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, n. d., 1st ed. 1919.

The Psalms: a New Version with Short Notes, London: T. Weston, 1904.

The Proverbs with a New Translation, Oak Park, Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, 1971.

An Exposition of the Book of Isaiah, 4th ed., London: C. A. Hammond, 1947, 2nd ed. 1896.

Jeremiah: The Tender-Hearted Prophet of the Nations, Oak Park, Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, n. d., 1st ed. 1937.

Lectures on Daniel, 3rd ed., Oak Park, Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, n.d.

Lectures on the Gospel of Matthew, N.Y.: Loizeaux Brothers, Inc., 1911, 1st ed. 1868. Bible Truth Publishers ed. of 1971 has a preface dated 1868, and says it is a corrected ed. of 1896.

An Exposition of the Gospel of Mark, London: F. E. Race, "Special Cheap Edition," n.d. "with additions by E. E. W."

An Exposition of the Gospel of Luke, Oak Park, Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, 1971.

An Exposition of the Gospel of John, London: C. A. Hammond Trust Bible Depot, 1966.

An Exposition of the Acts of the Apostles with a New Version of a Corrected Text, London: F. E. Race, 1914, 2nd ed. revised, 1st ed. 1890.

Notes on the Epistle of Paul, the Apostle, to the Romans, with a New Translation, London: G. Morrish, 1873.

Notes on the First Epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Corinthians with a New Translation, Oak Park, Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, n. d.

Notes on the Second Epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Corinthians with a New Translation, London: G. Morrish, 1882.

Lectures on the Epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Galatians with a New Translation, Oak Park, Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, 1973.

Lectures on the Epistle of Paul, the Apostle, to the Ephesians, with a New Translation, Oak Park, Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, 1972.

Lectures on Philippians and Colossians, Orange, Calif.: R. E. Welch Foundation, n. d.

The Epistles of Paul the Apostle to the Thessalonians Translated from a Correct Text, and Expounded, Oak Park, Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, 3rd ed. 1974, 1st ed. 1893.

An Exposition of the Two Epistles to Timothy with a Translation of an Amended Text, Oak Park Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, 1974, 1st ed. 1889, 2nd ed. 1913, 3rd ed. 1948.

Bibliography of WK

An Exposition of the Epistle of Paul to Titus and of that to Philemon with a Translation of an Amended Text, Oak Park, Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, 1968.

An Exposition of the Epistle to the Hebrews with a New Version, London: T. Weston, 1905.

The Epistles of Peter, London: C. A. Hammond, 1st ed. 1904, (forward dated 1923).

An Exposition of the Epistles of John the Apostle with a New Version, Oak Park, Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, 1970, 1st ed. 1905.

Lectures on the Epistle of Jude (Translated from a Correct Text), New edition revised by W. J. Hocking, London: C. A. Hammond, 1939.

ΑΠΟΚΑΛΥΨΙΣ ΙΩΑΝΝΟΥ. The Revelation of John, Edited in Greek, with a New English Version, and a Statement of the Chief Authorities and Various Readings, London: Williams and Norgate, 1860.

Lectures on the Book of Revelation, London: G. Morrish, n.d., 1st ed. 1861, new ed. 1869.

The Revelation Expounded, Oak Park, Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, 1970, preface dated 1901.

Books

God's Inspiration of the Scriptures, Oak Park, Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, 1966, 1st ed. 1903.

Lectures on the Church of God, Oak Park, Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, n. d.

Lectures on the New Testament Doctrine of the Holy Spirit, Oak Park, Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, n. d.

Lectures on the Second Coming and Kingdom of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, London: W. H. Broom, 1865.

Pamphlets, Oak Park, Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, 1971.

The Preaching to the Spirits in Prison: 1 Peter III. 18-20, Oak Park, Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, 1970.

The Second Advent Premillennial: A Reply to the Rev. D. Brown, D. D., Glasgow: R. L. Allan, 1868.

The Second Advent Premillennial: A Reply to the Rev. Prof. J. Agar Beet, the Rev. Principal T. C. Edwards, D. D., and the Rev. Principal Brown, D. D., London: W. Walters, 1888.

Three Prophetic Gems, Sunbury, Penn.: Believer's Bookshelf, 1970.

Pamphlets

Brief Hints on the Epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Romans, London: T. Weston, 1901.

Notes on the Parables of Matthew XIII, Oak Park, Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, n. d.

The Action of the Holy Spirit in the Assembly, 3rd ed. London: T. Weston, 1905.

The "Brethren" with an Appendix Containing Some Notice of the Mention Made of Them in Mr. Winslow's Silver Trumpet, London: I. K. Campbell, n. d.

The Creation, Oak Park, Ill.: Bible Truth Publishers, n. d.

Serial Publications

The Prospect, Guernsey: S. Barbet, vol. 1 (1848-49), vol. 2 (1849-50), a second slightly revised edition appeared in 1850.

The Bible Treasury: A Monthly Magazine of Papers on Scriptural Subjects, vol. 2 (1857) - vol. N6 (1906). A second edition of volumes 1-4 was issued by WK in 1868 with numerous deletions and corrections. The 3rd ed. of 1969 is a copy of the 1st ed.

WK was a frequent contributor to The Christian Annotator: or, Notes and Queries on Scriptural Subjects, vol. 1-4, London: Nisbet and Co., 1854-57.

Some short pieces by WK were published in The Bible Witness and Review, 2nd ed., W. Reid, ed., London: 25 Paternoster Square, 1877.